SILEX, flint, quartz. (L.) Merely Lat. silis, flint (stems silic-). Root uncertain. Der. silic-a, silic-ious, coined from the stem.

SILHOUETTE, a shadow-outline or profile filled in with a dark colour. (F.) This cheap and meagre form of portrait, orig. made by tracing the outline of a shadow thrown on to a sheet of paper, was named, in derision, after Etienne de Silhouette, minister of finance in 1759, who introduced several reforms which were considered unduly parsimonious. See Trench, Eng. Past and Present; Sismondi, Histoire des Français, tom. xix. pp. 94, 95; Taylor, Words and Places.

SILK, the delicate, soft thread produced by certain caterpillars, and the stuff woven from it. (L., = Gk., = Chinese?) M. E. silk, Chaucer, C. T. 10927. — A. S. weole (put for silk, just as weole = milk), silk. * Bombux, weole-wyrre; Sericum, weole; Wright's Vocab. i. 40, col. 1. Cf. Icel. silki, Swed. silke, Dan. silbe; all of which, like A. S. weole, are mere adaptations of Lat. sericum, silk, by the common change of r into l. β . Lat. sericum is the seat of Serica, of or belonging to the Seres. — Gk. Σῆρα, pl., the name of the people from whom the ancients first obtained silk; gen. supposed to be the Chinese. Professor Douglas writes: 'The Lat. Serica and Sericum are probably derived from the Chinese word for silk, which is variously pronounced as (English s), sei, sei, sei, si, &c.; see Williams, Chin. Dict. p. 835.' Cf. Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 182. Der. sil-mercer, sil-wool; sil-wool, A. S. weole-wyrre, as above; sil-wool, A. S. weole, Wright's Vocab. i. 40, l. 3; sil-ly, sil-ly-ness. Also sil-ly, q. v.

SILL, the timber or stone at the foot of a door or window. (E.) The true sense seems to be 'base' or 'basis'; sometimes 'floor.' M. E. silla, sylla. * Sylla of an house, Silla, solium; Prompt. Parv. Spelt silla, Chaucer, C. T. 3820. — A. S. sil, a base, support. * Basis, si; Wright's Vocab. l. 86, col. 1; a later copy of the same vocabulary has: 'Basis, silis'; id. 95, col. 2, + Icel. syll, swill, a sill, door-sill. + Swed. syll: Swed. dial. swill (Rietz). + Dan. syd, the base of a frame-work building. + G. schwelle, O. H. G. swelli, a sill, threshold, beam. + Goth. swilla, the sole of a shoe, properly a foundation, whence gawiljan, to found, lay a foundation for, Matt. vii. 25; Luke, vi. 48. β . The base is SUL, put for an older SWAL, as shewn by the Icel. swill, G. schwelle; so that the derivation is from the Teut. base SWAL, to swell (Fick, iii. 327, 363); from the 'swell' or 'rise' in the doorway caused by the bar or beam used as a sill or threshold; see Swail. Similarly, a rising of the sea is called a swell; cf. G. schwelen, to raise, einem Bach schwelen, to cause a brook to rise by means of a wooden dam across it. γ . The connection with Lat. silis, the sole of the foot, is doubtful, as it is not easy to connect this with the Teut. base. δ . Not to be confused with A. S. sil, a pillar, column, in Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 1. § 4; this is quite a different word, with a different sense, though possibly connected; it answers to G. säule, a pillar. Der. ground-sill, q. v.

SILLABUB, SYLLABUB, a mixture of wine with milk and sugar. (E. and Scand.) Spelt sillobub in Minshew, ed. 1617, who derives it from swilling bubbles. But the form is corrupt, a better form being sillobub. * Sillobubs or sillobub, Laict sigre; Sherwood, index to Cotgrave. Cotgrave gives: 'Laict sigre, whay; also, a sillobub or merryboub.' Halliwell gives 'sillobub', a sillabub, as a Lincolnshire word. It is obvious that a corruption from boub to bob is easy, whereas a change from boub to boub is phonetically impossible. We may therefore assume sillobub as the older form, at the same time noting that another name for it is merryboub. Cf. 'merryboub', a cold posset, Derbyshire; Halliwell. β . The prov. E. boub is a well-known word for 'belly'; Mr. Peacock notes boub as the Lincolnshire form; so that merry-boub = 'merry belly,' presumably from the exhilarating effects of the wine in the mixture, in contradistinction to small beer or belly-waggon, as it is commonly termed (Halliwell). Boub is from Icel. búdr, the belly; see Bulk (s). γ . The meaning of sillobub is not certainly known; but, as the word is Northern, we might suppose sillobub to be a parallel form to merry-boub, assigning to sillobub the sense of 'less, meagre,' as in Jamieson, or weakly, infirm, as in Brockett. It might then denote the unsubstantial nature of the drink, as regards its sustaining powers. δ . A derivation from swill-boub or swill-boub is more probable; the loss of the w can be justified by supposing a Scand. origin, as in the curious Icel. siggr, a drink, a beverage, allied to Icel. silja, to swill; see Swill. The O. Du. weil-buyck, 'a drie or a windie droppe,' Hexham, is worth notice; from O. Du. weillen, to swell, and buyck, a 'boub' or belly.

SILLY, simple, harmless, foolish. (E.) The word has much changed its meaning. It meant 'timely'; then lucky, happy, blessed, innocent, simple, foolish. M. E. siy, Chaucer, C. T. 3601, 4088, 8952, 13442; Havelok, 477; P. Plowman's Crede, 442; and see siy, siye, in Glom. to Spec. of English, ed. Skeat. = A. S. sielig, more usually gudlig (the prefix ga- making no difference), happy, prosperous, fortunate; see Sweet, A. S. Reader. Formed with the common adj. suffix -ig (E. -y) from A. S. siel, a time, season, occasion, happiness (very common); Green, ii. 395. † Du. sielig, blessed. † Icel. sieli, blest, happy; siela, bliss. † Swed. siell, blest, happy. † G. sielig, O. H. G. sielik, good, excellent, blest, happy. † Goth. siis, good, kind. † β. All from a Teut. base SALA, SALYA, good, happy, fortunate; Fick, iii. 320. Allied to O. Lat. salus, favourable, complete, whence salutarium, salutatum, that which is very lucky, a favourable omen; also to Lat. salus, whole, safe; see Safe. Another allied word is probably Salmo, q. v. All from ✓SAR, to preserve; see Serve. Der. siel-ig, -ness.

SILT, sediment, mud left by water that has overflowed. (Scand.) M. E. siite, badly spelt siite. 'Cille, scoode (sand), Glarus; Prompt. Parv. p. 77. Formed with the pp. suffix -it from the verb sile, to drain, filter, strain. 'And siithene siite it thowre a hats clathe'—and then strass it through a hot cloth; MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, fol. 281; Halliwell—Swed. sila, to strain, filter, sil, a filter. Here the i is an addition, as we also find Icel. sila, to filter, Dan. se, to filter (Dan. si, a filter); words cognate with A. S. sihan, to filter. β. For some account of A. S. sihan, see Leo and Ettmüller; the h is dropped in the compounds siwand, straining out, Matt. xxiii. 24 (Rushworth MS.) and siwanda, coxing out, Alfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 7. Thus we see that Swed. sile stands for sih-ia, with a lost guttural; so that prov. E. sile, to filter, has a long i. γ. Further, the A. S. sihan, cognate with O. H. G. sihan, G. sihan, is a mere variant of A. S. sihan, Icel. siha, to let drop, let fall, sink; this is a strong verb, from the Teut. base SIG, to let drop, equivalent to Aryan ✓SIK, to let drop, as in Skt. sik, to sprinkle, discharge, let drop, Gk. siqda, moisture.

SILVAN, BYLVAN, pertaining to woods. (L.) 'All sihan offsprings round'; Chapman, tr. of Homer, Od. xix. 599. [The spelling with y is false, and due to the habit of spelling Lat. siwa with y, in order to derive it from Gk. siqa, a wood, with which it is (at most) only cognate.] = Lat. silvanus, belonging to a wood, chiefly used of the wood-god Silvanus.—Lat. siwa, a wood. † Gk. siqa, a wood. The relationship of the Lat. and Gk. words is doubted by some, and the root is uncertain; see Curtius, i. 466. Der. (from Lat. silva) siw-ig, q. v.

SILVER, a well-known white metal. (E.) M. E. siilver, Chaucer, C. T. 16707. = A. S. siilver (for siilfor, like siwile for siwile, siwile for siil); Matt. xxvii. 6. † Du. siilver. † Icel. siilfr. † Dan. siilv. † Swed. siilwer. † G. siilber. † Goth. siilber. † Russ. siilwro. † Lithuan. siilwros. β. Perhaps named from its whiteness; cf. Lithuan. siilwros, bright, Lat. siilva, a star. Der. siilwer, verb; siilwer-ig; siilwer-ig, a small piece of silver, with double dimin. -ig (as in dusk-ig), Isaiah, vii. 23, also in Tyndale's version of Acts, xix. 19, and Coverdale's of Judges, ix. 4, xvi. 3, the A. S. form being siilwring, Gen. xlv. 22; siilwer-smith; siilwer-y. Also siilwer-a, adj., in some MSS. of Wyclif, Acts, xix. 24. A. S. siilwring, Gen. xlv. 22.

SIMILAR, like. (F., = L.) In Mintheu, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave. = F. similaire, 'similar'; Cot. As if from Lat. simularis, extended from simul-ia, like, by the suffix -aris. Allied to simul, together, Gk. siwa, together, and E. siwne; from the Aryan base SAMA, the same; see Same. Der. similar-ly, similar-ity; also simile, q. v., similitude, q. v. And see simul-est, simul-to-no-est, siwblance, siwamble, siw-omble.

SIMILE, a comparison. (L.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 45.—Lat. simile, a like thing; seat. of similis, like; see Similar.

SIMILITUDE, a comparison, parable. (F., = L.) M. E. siwilitude, Chaucer, C. T. 10894; Wyclif, Luke, vii. 4.—F. siwilitude, 'a similitude'; Cot.—Lat. siwilitudina, acc. of siwilitudo, likeness.—Lat. siwilitis, like; see Similar.

SIMIOUS, monkey-like. (L.) Coined from Lat. simia, an ape. Cf. L. simia, Gk. siwida, flat-nosed.

SIMMER, to boil gently. (E.) Formerly also siwmer (see Richardson) and siwmp. Halliwell cites: 'Siwmp, to siwmer, East; also 'the cream of siwmping milke, Florio, p. 189,' which is wrong as regards the edit. of 1608, and prob. refers to a later edition. 'I siwmp, as lycour dothe on the fyre byfore it begynneth to boyle'; Palgrave. A frequentative form, with the usual suffix -er, and with extraneous p or b in some authors, from a base SIM, probably imitative of the slight sound of gentle boiling. Cf. Dan. siwms, G. siwms, Swed. dial. siwms, to hum, to buzz; Swed. siwms, siwms, to buzz, to whistle, parl.

SIMNEL, a kind of rich cake. (F., = L.) See Simnel in Halliwell. M. E. siwnel, Prompt. Parv.; siwnel, Havelok, 779. = O. F. siwnel, bread or cake of fine wheat flour; Roquefort.—Low Lat. siwiniellus, bread of fine flour; also called siwille; Ducange. β. Here siwiniellus stands for siwiniellus, as being easier to pronounce; both siwiniellus and siwiniellus being derived from Lat. siwina, wheat flour of the finest quality. Perhaps allied to siwms, seed. And cf. G. siwms, wheat-bread.

SIMONY, the crime of trafficking in ecclesiastical preferment. (F., = L., = Gk., = Heb.) In early use; spelt siwmonye, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 69, l. 7. = F. siwmonie, 'simony, the buying or selling of spiritual functions or preferments'; Cot.—Low Lat. siwmonis; Ducange. Named from Siwmon Magnus (Gk. Siwmon), because he wished to purchase the gift of the Holy Ghost with money; Acts, viii. 18.—Heb. Siwim'du, Simeon, Simon, lit. hearing, obedience; one who hears.—Heb. root siwama, he heard. Der. siwmoni-er, siwmoni-er-ol.

SIMOON, a hot, poisonous wind. (Arab.) See Southey, Thalaba, b. ii, last stanza, and the note. = Arab. siwmsim, a sultry pestilential wind, which destroys travellers; Rich. Dict. p. 850. So called from its poisonous nature.—Arab. root siwms, he poisoned; siwms, poisoning; id. p. 847.

SIMPER, to smile sillily or affectedly, to smirk. (Scand.) 'Yond siwmping dame'; K. Lear, iv. 6. 130. 'With a made countenance about her mouth, between siwmping and smiling'; Sidney, Arcadia, b. i (R.). Cotgrave explains F. siwmp by 'a begger woman, also a cokeney, siwmpdeochet, nice thing.' We find traces of it in Norweg. siwmp, fine, smart (Aasen); Dan. dial. siwmp, siwmp, 'affected, coy, prudish, esp. of one who requires preparing to eat: as, she is as siwmp as a bride'; Wedgwood. Also O. Swed. siwmp, one who affectedly refrains from eating. β. All these are formed with a suffix -er which appears to be the same as the E. suffix -er of the agent from a base SIMP, which is a nasalized form of SIP. Without the nasal, we find O. Swed. siw (also siwip), a woman who affectedly refuses to eat (Ihre); Swed. siw, adj., fainal, prim; Dan. siwpe, a woman who is affectedly coy (Molbeck). And note particularly Low G. siwpe, explained in the Bremen Wörterbuch as a word expressing the gesture of a compressed mouth, and affected pronunciation; a woman who acts thus affectedly is called Junfer siwpe, Miss Sipp, and they say of her, 'She cannot say siwpe.' Also Low G. den Mund siwpe siwpe, to make a small mouth; De Bruut sit siwpe, the bride sits so prim. γ. This appears to be only a particular use derived from the verb to siwpe, meaning to take a little drink at a time, hence, to be affected over food, to be prim and coy. See Sip. δ. We find also prov. G. siwmpere, to be affectedly coy, siwpe, prudish, coy (Flügel); but these are most likely borrowed from Low German, as the true High G. siwmpere answers to E. siwmp. Der. siwmp-er.

SIMPLE, single, elementary, clear, guileless, silly. (F., = L.) In early use. M. E. siwple, The Bestiary, l. 790; in O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris.—F. siwple, 'simple'; Cot.—Lat. siwplex, acc. of siwplex (stem siwplis), simple; lit. 'one-fold,' as opposed to duplex, two-fold, double.—Lat. siw-, from the base siwms, the same, which appears also in Lat. siw-guli, one by one, siw-par, always alike, siw-ol, once, siw-ul, together; and siw-, from siw-are, to fold. See Same and Fly. Der. siwple-ness, siwpl-y. Also siwplex, E. pl. simple herbs; whence siwpl-er, siwpl-ist, both in Mintheu, ed. 1627. Also siwplis-i-ty, Mids. Nt. Dr. l. i. 172, from F. siwplisite, from Lat. acc. siwplisitate; siwplis-ty, in Barrow's Sermons, vol. ii. ser. 24 (Todd), a coined word, answering to late F. siwplisite (Littre), where the suffix -ite = Lat. -itum, from siwre, to make; see Fact. Hence siwplisite-ism. Also siwple-ness, q. v.

SIMPLETON, a foolish fellow. (F., = L.) 'A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox; the siwplex went hunting up and down'; L'Estrange (Todd's Johnson). Formed with the F. suffix -on (= Lat. acc. -onem) from F. siwplet, masc., siwplets, fem., a simple person (Littre). Cotgrave only gives the fem. siwplets, 'a little, simple wench, one that is apt to believe, and thereby soon deceived.' These are formed from siwple, simple, with the dimin. suffix -et or -elle. Thus siwplet-on exhibits a double suffix -on, which is very rare; yet there is at least one more example in the old word siwms-ol-on, a kind of market, F. siwms-ol-on.

SIMULATUM, to pretend, feign. (L.) Shak. has siwmlatum, Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 151. Siwmlate first occurs with the force of a pp.; 'because they had vowed a siwmlate chasty'; Bale, Eng. Votaries, pt. ii (R.). = Lat. siwmlatum, pp. of siwmlare, to feign, pretend, make like.—Lat. siwml, adv., together with; siwmlis (= siwmlis), like. See Similar. Der. siwmlat-on, from F. siwmlation, 'simulation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. siwmlationem, a feigning; siwmlat-er. Also siwmlation. And see siwmlance, siw-omble, siw-omble. Also siwmlationem.

SIMULTANEOUS, happening at the same moment. (L.) 'Whether previous or simultaneous'; Hammond's Works, vol. iv. ser. 2 (R.); p. 570 (Todd). Enghlished directly from Lat. siwmltaneus, by change of -us to -ous, as in arbit-ous, straw-ous, &c. This is hardly a true Lat. word, and is not even in Ducange; but is formed from Low Lat. siwmlt-in, at the same time, by analogy with Lat. moment-ous; and cf. E. instantaneous. β. The Low

Lat. simulatio is extended from Lat. simul, together, with adv. suffra-
-tum, as in simulatio-nis. See Simulatio, Similar. Der. simul- simulatio-nis.

SIN, wickedness, crime, iniquity. (E.) M. E. synne, synne; pl. synnes, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 2, 5, 6.—A. S. syn, syna, synas; gen., dat., and acc. synne; Grein, ii. 518. + Du. zinde. + Icel. syn, older form syn. + Dan. and Swed. synd. + G. sünde, O. H. G. synja, synja.
β. Thus the E. sin stands for sind, and the A. S. word has lost a final d. All from Teut. base SUNDYA, a fern. form; Fick, iii. 326. It is the abstract sb. answering to Lat. sinus (stem sent-), sinful, guilty; and Curtius refers this (along with Icel. sinur, true, very, Goth. synja, the truth, sooth) to the *√*AS, to be; remarking that 'the connection of sin(is) and sinus with this root has been recognized by Clemm, and established (Studien, iii. 328), while Bogge (iv. 205) confirms it by Northern analogies. Language regards the guilty man as the man who is sin.' Gk. Etym. i. 470. This is a very likely view; cf. Skt. satya (for sent-ya), true, from sent (for se-ent), being; and even in English, the A. S. sinodan, synodan, they are, comes near to sent, synod, of which sin or syn is an abbreviated form. See Booth. Der. sin, verb, M. E. synnen, but also synen, synnen, synnen (see P. Plowman, A. ix. 17, B. vii. 22, C. xi. 53), from A. S. synian, synianian, Grein, ii. 519, which forms probably stand for synian, synianian, being derived from synod, orig. form of A. S. syn. Also sin-ful, A. S. syn-full (Grein); sin-ful-ly, sin-ful-ness; sin-less, A. S. syn-les; sin-less-ly, sin-less-ness; sin-er, sin-offering.

SINCE, after that, from the time that, past, ago. (E.) Sinice is written for sinis, to keep the final s sharp (voicelless); just as we write ponis for ponis, nois for nois, nois for nois, and the like. Again, sinis is an abbreviation of M. E. sinis, also spelt sinis in later English, with the same intention of shewing that the final s was voiceless. Sinice is in Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 47; All's Well, I. 3. 124; sinice in Spenser, F. Q. I. 4. 51.

β. Next, the word sinice arose from the addition of -s or -is (common as an adverbial ending, as in nois-s, nois-is, stri-s) to the older form sinis, which was sometimes contracted to sin. We find sin, Havelok, 399; sinis, Wyclif, Luke, xii. 7; sin, Chaucer, C. T. 5234, and see numerous examples in Struttman, a. v. sin.

γ. Lastly, sinis or sinis is for sinis, the oldest M. E. form, whence were made sinis, sinis, sinis-s, sinis-s, as well as (by loss of -s or -is) sinis, sinis, sinis, and (by contraction) sin or sin.—A. S. sin, sin, sin, sin, sin, sin, sin, sin, after that, sin (very common), Grein, ii. 446. This sin is a contraction from sin sin, put for sin sin, after that; where sin, that, is the dat. case masc. of the demonstrative pronoun used as a relative, for which see THAN, THAT. The A. S. sin, after, used as a prep., was orig. an adv. with the force of a comparative. We find sin, after, later, both as adj. and adv., Grein, ii. 444. [Not the same word as A. S. sin, journey, time (Grein, ii. 443), which is cognate with Goth. sin, discussed under SEND.] This A. S. sin is cognate with Goth. sin, late, whence the adv. sin, late, Matt. xxv. 57, John, vi. 16; also with G. sin, O. H. G. sin, after. The G. sin, since, is exactly the A. S. sin; in Gothic we find a somewhat similar compound in the expression sin sin, no longer, Mark, ix. 8. Other allied words are Icel. sin, slow, late, Lat. sin, late; see Fick, iii. 312.

SINCERE, true, pure, honest, frank. (F.,—L.) 'Of a very sincere life;' Frith's Works, p. 117, last line.—O. F. sinere, sinere, 'sincere;' Cot. Mod. F. sinere.—Lat. sinere, pure, sincere. β. The origin of Lat. sinere is doubtful; perhaps it means 'wholly separated,' and we may take sin to be the same as in sin-ful, one by one, sin-ple, single-folded, sin-ol, once, sin-ol, together, for which see SIMPLE, same; whilst sin may be from sin-are, to separate, for which see DISCORN. Some connect it with sin, wax; putting sinere = sin sin, which is unlikely. Der. sinere-ly; sinere-ly, from F. sinere, 'sincerity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. sineritatem.

SINCEPUT, the fore-part of the head, from the forehead to the top. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Used as distinct from occiput, the back part of the head. The lit. sense is 'half-head.'—Lat. sinceput, half a head; contracted from sin-, half; and caput, the head, cognate with E. head. See SEMI- and HEAD. And compare Magrim.

SINDER, the correct spelling of Cinder, q. v. 'Thus all in flames I sinder-like consume;' Gascoigne, Dan Bartholomew; Works, I. 117.

SINE, a straight line drawn from one extremity of an arc or sector perpendicular to the radius at the other extremity. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Englished from Lat. sinus, a bosom, properly a curve, fold, coil, curl, esp. the hanging fold of the upper part of a toga. The use of the word in the math. sense is fanciful, and would better apply to the arc itself. Probably the sin was regarded as subtending the half-arc or 'curve' cut off by a chord; it being very necessary to distinguish between the half-arc and whole arc, and between the sin and the chord. Root uncertain. Doublet, sinus, q. v.

SINECURE, an ecclesiastical benefice without the cure of souls, salary without work. (L.) 'One of them is in danger to be made a sin sin;' Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act ii. sc. 2. Englished from Lat. sin sin, without cure of souls.—Lat. sin, prep. without, lit. 'if not,' compounded of si, if, and no, not; and cura, abl. case of cura, cure; see CURE. Der. siner-ist, one who holds a sinecure.

SINIEW, a tendon, that which joins a muscle to a bone. (E.) M. E. sinis; spelt synis, Prompt. Parv.—A. S. sin, sinis, sinis, a sinew; Grein, ii. 439. + Du. sinew. + Dan. sin. + Swed. sin. + G. sin; O. H. G. sinis, sinis, sinis. And cf. Icel. sin, a sinew, pl. sinir.

β. The Teut. base is SINWA, a sinew; Fick, iii. 321. The lit. sense is 'a band,' or that which binds; from a root SIN, to bind, appearing (according to Fick) in Lettish sin, I bind, and in Skt. si, to bind, a verb of the fifth class, making i pers. pres. sinami, I bind.

γ. Fick suggests that Skt. sinu, a tendon, sinew, is the same word, and stands for sin-dus, the short i being dropped; if so, the A. S. form explains the Sanskrit. But the Skt. sinu may be related to E. sinew, sinew. Der. sinis, verb, 3 Hen. VI. ii. 6. 91; sinew, L. L. L. iv. 3. 308.

SING, to resound, to utter melodious sounds, relate musically or in verse. (E.) The orig. sense is simply to ring or resound. 'We hear this fearful tempest sing;' Rich. II. ii. 1. 263. M. E. singan, pt. t. sang, sang, pl. sungen, pp. sungen, sungen; Chaucer, C. T. 268, 1511, 3332.—A. S. singan, pt. t. sang, pl. sungen, pp. sungen; Grein, ii. 453. + Du. singan, pt. t. sang, pp. sungen. + Icel. synja, pt. t. sang, sang, pp. sungen. + Dan. synge. + Swed. synge. + Goth. siŕgan (written for siŕgon). + G. siŕgan.

β. All from a base SANGW or SANG; Fick, iii. 316. Prob. an imitative word, like ring, used orig. of the clash of weapons, resonance of metals, and the rush of a missile through the air. Fick connects it with SAG, to say, which may also be right, without interfering with its imitative origin. See Bay. Der. singer, in place of the A. S. singer (which would have given a mod. E. singer); see Songstress. Also sing-ing, sing-ing-master, sing-song; sung. And see Song.

SINGE, to scorch, burn on the surface. (E.) For singe. M. E. singen; spelt synge, Prompt. Parv.; singa, Chaucer, C. T. 5931. The curious pp. sinid occurs, as a contraction for sinid; Chaucer, C. T. 14851.—A. S. singen, to singe, burn; occurring in the comp. bragan, Alfred, tr. of Orosius, ii. 8. § 4; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 184, l. 18. In Matt. xiii. 6, the Lindisfarne MS. has bragan (for bragan), scorched, burnt or dried up. The A. S. singen stands for sing-ian, causal of singan (pt. t. sang), to sing. Thus the lit. sense is 'to make to sing,' with reference to the singing or hissing noise made by singed hair, and the sound given out by a burning log; see SING. + Du. singen, to singe, scorch; causal of singen, to sing. + G. singen, to singe, scorch, parch, burn; causal of singen, to sing. Cf. Icel. singr, singed, burnt.

SINGLE, sole, separate, alone. (L.) 'So that our eye be single;' Tyndale's Works, p. 75, col. 1. He refers to Matt. vi. 22, where the Vulgate has implem, and Wyclif has simple.—Lat. single, single, separate, in late Latin; in classical Latin we have only the pl. single, one by one.

β. Singuli stands for sin-uli or sin-uli, with double suffix as in hominum-sin-uli. The base sin- is the same as in sin-ple, and is allied to E. sin; see SIMPLE, same. Der. single, verb, L. L. L. v. 1. 85; single-ly; single-ness, Acts, ii. 46; single-heart-ed, single-mind-ed; also single-act, prob. so called because welded by one hand only, as distinguished from the old quarter-staff, which was held in both hands. And see single-er.

SINGULAR, single, alone, uncommon, strange. (F.,—L.) M. E. single; Gower, C. A. iii. 184, l. 11. 'A single persone'—an individual, Chaucer, Tale of Melibee, Group B, l. 2626.—F. single, 'angular, excellent;' Cot.—Lat. single, single, single, separate. Formed with suffix -aris from single, one by one; see SINGLE. Der. single-ly; single-ly, from F. single, 'singularity, excellence.' Cot., from Lat. acc. singularitatem.

SINISTER, on the left hand, inauspicious, evil. (L.) Not from F., but from Lat., like dexter. Common as an heraldic term. 'Some secret sinister information;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1447 b.—Lat. sinister, left, on the left hand, inauspicious or ill-omened, as omens on the left hand were supposed to be. ¶ But it must be noted that this is a Greek notion, due to the Greeks turning to the North, and having the West (unlucky quarter) on their left; the true Roman notion was, originally, that sinister meant lucky, because their agurs, turning to the South, had on their left the East. Root uncertain. Der. sinist-er, sinist-er.

SINK, to fall down, descend, be overwhelmed; also, to depress. (E.) We have merged the transitive and intransitive forms in one; properly, we ought to use sin intransitively, and the trans. form should be sun or sun; cf. drink, drunch. I. M. E. sin, intran-super-ede; also siege, ho-siege, siue, siz (1), siz (2), siz-ar. Also (from Gk. $\Sigma\gamma\alpha\mu\alpha$) siue-hadron, siue-hadron, poly-hadron, anti-hadron; chair, siue. Also (from Teut. SAT) set, settle (1); settle (2), in some senses; also set, set-out, set-out; and see saddle.

SITE, a locality, situation, place where a thing is set down or fixed. (F., = L.) 'After the siz, north or south;' Chaucer, On the Astro-labe, pt. ii. c. 17. l. 94. = F. siz, siz. 'Set, a site, or seat;' Cot. = Lat. situs, acc. of situs, a site. = Lat. situs, pp. of sistere, to let, suffer, permit, of which an older meaning seems to have been to put, place. Root uncertain; the form of the root should be SI or SA. The Lat. ponere (= po-sicare) is certainly a derivative of sistere. Der. siz-ate, siz-ation (see below); also the derivatives of ponere, for which see POSITION. ¶ We frequently find the odd spelling sizis.

SITH, since. (E.) In Esch. xxv. 6. See SINCE.
SITUATE, placed. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 2. 142. = Low Lat. situatus, pp. of situare, to locate, place; a barbarous word, found A. D. 1317 (Ducange). = Lat. situs, stem of situs, a site; see SITE. Der. situ-ate, s Hen. IV. i. 2. 51, from F. situation, 'a situation,' Cot.

SIX, five and one. (E.) M. E. six, sixs, P. Plowman, B. v. 431. = A. S. six, six, six; Grein, li. 454. + Du. six. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. six. + G. six; O. H. G. six; Goth. sixis. + Rmn. sixte. + W. sixth. + Gael. and Irish six. + Lat. six. + Gk. $\xi\varsigma$ (for $\epsilon\iota\varsigma$). + Lithuan. sixsi. + Pers. sixt; Palmer's Dict. col. 382. + Skt. siksha. Origin unknown. Der. six-fold, six-pence. Also six-teen, A. S. six-tien, six-tyne (see TEN); six-teen; six-ty. A. S. six-ty (see FORTY); six-ty; six-ty, A. S. six-ty, whence M. E. sixte, sixte, Gower, C. A. li. 121, l. 8. P. Plowman, B. xiv. 300, now altered to sixty by analogy with four-ty, seven-ty, eight-ty, nine-ty, ten-ty, just as five-ty is altered from A. S. fifta. Also (from Lat. six) six-agonian, six-agonum, six-agonal, six-ant, six-uple.

SIZAR, a scholar of a college in Cambridge, who pays lower fees than a pauper or ordinary student. (F., = L.) Spelt sizar in Todd's Johnson. There was formerly a considerable difference in the social rank of a sizar, who once had to perform certain menial offices. At Oxford the corresponding term was servitor, defined by Phillips as 'a poor university scholar that attends others for his maintenance.' Probably one of his duties was to attend to the sizings of others. 'Size is a farthings worth of bread or drink, which scholars in Cambridge have at the battery, noted with the letter S, as in Oxford with the letter Q, for half a farthing, and Qs. [Quadrans] for a farthing. And whereas they say in Oxford, to battel in the battery-book, i. e. to set down on their names what they take in bread, drink, butter, cheese, &c., in Cambridge they call it a sizing;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The word siz is also in Minshew, and is a mere abbreviation of assize, i. e. quantity or ration of bread, &c. 'Assize of bread, i. e. setting down the price and quantity of bread;' Minshew, ed. 1627. See ASSIZE, and SISE (1).

SISE (1), an allowance or ration of food; hence, generally, magnitude. (F., = L.) 'To scant my siz,' K. Lear, ii. 4. 178; see SIZAR. Sise is merely short for assize, M. E. assise, the usual old word for an allowance, or settled portion of bread, &c. doled out for a particular price or given to a dependent. We even find it used, at a very early period, almost as a general word for provisions. 'When ther comes marchaundise. With corn, wyn, and steil, othir [or] other assise;' K. Alisaunder, 7074. Hence sise came to mean dimension, magnitude, &c., as at present; also bulk, as in Merry Wives, iii. 2. 12. For the etymology, see ASSIZE. Der. siz-ar, q. v.

SIXE (2), weak glue, a stuffing gluey substance. (Ital., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Hence blent-sixe, rendered sticky with gore; Two Noble Kinsmen, l. 1. 99; 'o'er-sixed with coagulate gore,' Hamlet, ii. 2. 484. Cotgrave has: 'assiste d'arore, size to gild with, gold size.' It is not a F. word, but borrowed, like some other painters' terms, from Italian. = Ital. sisa, 'a kind of gou or glue that painters use;' Florio, ed. 1598. And Ital. sisa is an abbreviation of assise, 'size that painters use; also, an assise or manner; also, a liscia, a guise or fashion, an assise or session;' id. He also gives assise, 'to size, to scum, to assize, to sute well' and assise, 'seated, situated.' Assise is the verbal sb. from assizare, which in its turn is from assise, pp. of assidere, to situate. The sense is 'that which makes the colours lie flat,' so that, in Florio's phrase, they 'sute well.' The Ital. assidere is from Lat. assidere, to sit at or near. = Lat. ad, near; and assidere, to sit, cognate with E. sit. We speak of 'making a thing sit,' which is just the idea here required. ¶ Thus siz (2), siz (1), and siz are all, really, the same word. See SISE (1), and ASSISE.

SKAIN, SKENE, SKEIN, a dagger, knife. (Irish.) 'Skain, a crooked sword, or scimeter, used formerly by the Irish;' Halliwell. He cites the expression 'Irishmen, armed . . . with daries and skynes' from Hall, Hen. V. fol. 28. 'Carrying his head-peace, his skynes, or pistoll;' Spenser, State of Ireland; Globe ed., p. 631, col. 2. = Irish (and Gael.) sgian, a knife. + W. sgiam, a slicer, scimeter; cf. sgyl, a cutting off, a parer. ¶ Apparently from a base SKI; cf. Lat. scindere (base SKID), to cut. Der. (possibly) skains-mate, a companion in arms, comrade, Romeo, ii. 4. 162; but see SKAIN.

SKATE (1), a large flat fish of the ray family. (Scand., = L.) Spelt scate in Levia, ed. 1570. M. E. scate, Prompt. Parv. = Icel. skata, a skate; Norweg. skata (Aasen). = Lat. scutate, also scutate, a kind of shark, skate. Cf. Irish and Gael. sgat, a skate. ¶ The A. S. scodde is perhaps a sked, not a skate.

SKATE (2), SCATE, a frame of wood (or iron) with a steel ridge beneath it, for sliding on ice. (Du.) Properly, the word should be skates, with a pl. skates; the final s has been mistaken for the pl. suffix, and so has dropped off, just as in other words; see FEA, SHERRY, CHERRY. Spelt skates in Evelyn's Diary, Dec. 1, 1662; skates in Pepys's Diary, same date. 'Scate, a sort of pattern, to slide upon ice;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Cotgrave explains O. F. scabasses by 'stilts, or scates to go on;' here scates is merely another form of skates; 'the point in which stilts and skates agree is that they are both contrivances for increasing the length of stride,' Wedgwood. = Du. skates, 'skates,' Sewel; where -en is the pl. suffix, so that the word itself is skates; as in 'schuutylder, a skates-slides;' Sewel [misprinted schuutylder by an obvious error]. O. Du. skatsten, 'skates [with] which they slide upon the ice in Holland;' Hexham, ed. 1628. (Hence also is derived F. skates, O. F. skates, a stilt).

¶ The etymology of Du. skatsten is obscure; but as we not unfrequently meet with a substitution of t for k, it is probably from the Low G. skake, a shank, leg, the same word as E. skank, which inserts the nasal sound n; see SHANK. Note the Low G. phrase de skakes voort steu, to go swiftly, lit. 'to pull one's shanks out;' and A. S. scawan, scawan, to shake, to go swiftly, to flee; see SHAKA, from which E. skank is derived. ¶ If this be right, we have, from the Teut. base SKAK, to shake, go swiftly, the Low G. skake, a 'swift-goer,' leg, or shank; whence O. Du. skatsten (for skatsten) might have been formed with suffix -en (=-en) and vowel-change. And as to the sense, the words scabasses and skates merely mean 'shanks,' i. e. contrivances for lengthening the leg. The Low Lat. scatia, scatia, both meaning a stilt, show the interchange of e and t, and are borrowed from the Low German. ¶ The Dan. skatis, a skate, is prob. borrowed; the Swed. word is skridsko or skid (see SKID).

SKELIN, SKALIN, a knot of thread or silk. (C.) Generally defined as 'a knot of thread or silk,' where probably 'knot' means a quantity collected together; a skain is a quantity of yarn, folded and doubled together. 'Layde downe a skynes of threde. And some a skynes of yarne;' Skelton, Elinor Rummung, 310. M. E. skynes, Prompt. Parv. A household word of Celtic origin = Irish sgainne, a flaw, crack, fissure; a skein or clue of thread. Cf. Gael. sgainne, flax or hemp, thread, small twine. ¶ I think we may explain skain as meaning in the first instance 'a break' or 'flaw;' whence the meaning might easily be extended to so much yarn as is contained in such pieces, from break to break. = Irish sgainne, I split, cleave, burst; Gael. sgainne, to burst asunder, rend apart. = G. SKAN, longer form of G. SKA, to cut; cf. Skt. skan, to dig, to pierce. ¶ The O. F. scaigne, 'a skain,' Cot., is of Celtic origin. Der. (perhaps) skains-mate, companions in winding thread, companions, Romeo, ii. 4. 162; but see SKAIN. This solution is advocated in Todd's Johnson, which see; and cf. the phrase 'as thick [intimate] as skain-wavers,' i. e. weavers of tape.

SKELTON, the bony framework of an animal. (Gk.) See TRENCH, Select Glossary. Spelt skelton, skelton in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Gk. skelton, a dried body, a mummy; neut. of skeltonis, dried up, parched. = Gk. skelton (for skelton), to dry, dry up, parch. Der. skelton-ey.

SKEETCH, a rough draught of an object, outline. (Du., = Ital., = L., = Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'To make a sketch;' Dryden, Parallel between Painting and Poetry (R.) Not used much earlier. = Du. sketch, 'a draught, scheme, model, sketch;' Sewel. [The E. sketch is a mere corruption of the Du. word, and stands for skets.] The same word as G. sketch, a sketch; which was prob. borrowed from the Dutch, who, as being fond of painting, introduced the term from the Italian. At any rate, both Du. sketch and G. sketch are from Ital. schizzo, 'an ingrossment or first rough draught of anything;' Florio. = Lat. schizum, an extemporaneous poem, anything hastily made. = Lat. schizum, adj., made hastily. = Gk. sketch, sudden, off-hand, on the spur of the moment; also near, close to. Cf. Gk. sketch, near, hard by, lit. 'holding to.' These words, like sketch, habit, state, sketch, retentive, are from the Gk. base sketch, to hold, appearing in Gk. sketch (= sketch), a aorist infia. of sketch, to hold, and in E. sketch. See SCHEMA.

¶ Thus sketch and sketch, the meanings of which are by no means remote, are from the same root, but by very different paths. Der. sketch, verb; sketch-y, sketch-y. SKEW, oblique, wry. (O. Low G.) 'To look skew, or a-skew, to squint or leer; Phillips, ed. 1706. It seems first to have been used chiefly as a verb. 'To skew, or well skewing, to waddle, to go wading along;' Phillips. 'To skew, linis oculis spectare;' Levinus, ed. 1570. 'Our service Neglected and look'd lamely on, and skew'd at;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Loyal Subject, A. ii. sc. 1 (Putlake). 'This skew'd-eyed currier;' id., Wild-goose Chase, iv. 1 (Mirabel). M. E. skewen, to turn aside, slip away, escape; Morris Arthurs, ed. Brock, 1563. Of O. Low G. origin; cf. O. Du. skewnen, 'to avoid or to skunna,' also spelt skewnen, Hexham; Low G. skewen, skewen, to avoid. † O. H. G. skien, M. H. G. skiden, to avoid, get out of the way, G. skiden, to shun, avoid; derived from the adj. appearing as M. H. G. skiesch, skisch, G. skien, shy, timid. β. Thus skew is really the verb corresponding to the adj. shy; to skew or skun is to shy as a horse, to start aside from, hence, to move obliquely. The allied Icel. phrase d skid suggested the E. skew as an adverb; see Askew; and hence skew came to be used (in place of the pp. skew'd) as an adjective.

γ. Other closely related forms are seen in Icel. d skid, adv., askew, skidr, askew, skifr, askew, oblique; Dan. skive, oblique, whence skive, to slope, deviate, swerve; Swed. skjef, oblique, whence skjefa, to skew, skjefa med ögonen, to skew with the eyes, to look askew; Du. skief, oblique, G. skief. δ. From the base SKIU, which from SKU, to move, fly, swerve; cf. Skt. skya (for original skya, Benfey), to move, depart, fly, swerve; Goth. skreyan, to go along, Mark, ii. 23. The orig. sense has reference to motion sideways; see further under Shy, Teachew. Der. skew, q. v. Also skew-bald.

SKEWBALD, piccad. (Hybrid; O. Low G. and C.) In Halliwell. It means marked or spotted in a skew or irregular manner. From Skew and Bald, q. v. And cf. pe-bald.

SKEWER, a pun of wood or iron for holding meat together. (Scand.) In Dryden, tr. of Homer, b. i. l. 631. Skewer is a by-form of prov. E. skiver, a skewer (Wool); cf. skiver-wood, dogwood, of which skewers are made; Halliwell. And skiver is really an older and better form of skiver, a splinter of wood, dimin. of Icel. skifa, Swed. skiva, a slice, a shive; see Skiver (s). The form skiver exactly corresponds to Dan. and Swed. skifer, a slate; O. Du. skewer-steen, 'a slate or a slate-stone,' Hexham; similarly named from its being sliced into thin flakes. Doublet, skiver (s). Der. skewer, skiver.

SKID, a contrivance for locking the wheel of a carriage. (Scand.) Halliwell gives: 'skid-pan, the shoe with which the wheel of a carriage is locked.' Ray has: 'To skid a wheel, rotam sufflaminare, with an iron hook fastened to the axis to keep it from turning round upon the descent of a steep hill; Skid.' The latter sense is merely secondary, and refers to a later contrivance; the orig. skid was a kind of shoe placed under the wheel, and in the first instance made of wood. [The word skid is merely the Scand. form of M. E. skide, a thin piece of wood; see Shide]—Icel. skid, a billet of wood; also, a kind of snow-shoe; Swed. skid, 'a kind of scate or wooden shoe on which they slide on the ice,' Widegren. † A. S. scida, a billet of wood; whence scid-well, a wall of railings, Wright's Vocab. i. 37. col. 2; note 3. † G. schit, a log, billet of wood. † Lithuan. skida, a splint, splinter; derived from skadu, I cleave.—SKID, to separate; see Sheath, Shed (s). Closely allied to skush. A skid forms a skid for the lower part of the wheel.

SKIFF, a small light boat. (F.—M. H. G.) 'Olaus fled in a litle skiff;' Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 14. And in Munshu.—F. esquif, 'a sluice, or little boat,' Cot.—M. H. G. schif, schif, G. schiff, a ship; cognate with E. Ship, q. v. Der. schif, verb, to cross in a skiff, Two Noble Kinsmen, l. 3. 37. Doublet, schif.

SKILL, discernment, discrimination, tact. (Scand.) M. E. skil, gen. in the sense of 'reason,' Ancren Kiwla, p. 204, l. 22; skile, id. p. 206, l. 17.—Icel. skil, a distinction, discernment; cf. skilja, to part, separate, divide, distinguish. † Dan. skil, a separation, boundary, limit; cf. skille, to separate. † Swed. skil, reason; cf. skilja, to separate. β. From SKAL, to separate, divide, orig. to cleave, as appears by Lithuan. skali, to cleave. This is from SKAR, to shear; see Shear. And see Shell, Scale, Shilling. Der. skilful, M. E. skilfulle, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 213, l. 17; skilful-ly, skilful-ness; skil-less, Ormulum, 3715; skil-od, i. e. endowed with skill, Rich. III, iv. 4. 216. Also skill, verb, in the phr. it skills not—it makes no difference, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 134; from Icel. skilja, to separate, which is frequently used impersonally, with the sense 'it differs.'

SKILLET, a small pot. (F.—L.) In Othello, i. 3. 273. Spelt skillet, Skelton, Elinour Rummig, 250. Halliwell explains it as a small iron or brass pot, with a long handle.—O. F. scoulette, 'a little dish;' Cot. Dimin. of O. F. scuelle, a dish.—Lat. scutella, a salver; dimin. of scuta, scuta, a tray, dish, platter; prob. allied to scutum, a shield. Doublet, scutella (1). † The Suffolk word skillet, meaning a thin brass perforated implement used for skimming milk (Moor, Nall), perhaps acquired its peculiar sense from confusion with the Icel. skilja, to separate; but the sense of 'dish' will suffice, as the orig. skimmer must have been a simple dish. The odd fancy in Phillips, that a skillet is derived from Low Lat. skillets, a little bell [from Du. schel, a bell], on the ground that skillets are made of bell-metal, is to be rejected. Othello's helmet can hardly have been made of bell-metal, and a skillet is usually of brass or iron.

SKIM, to clear of scum, to pass lightly over a surface. (Scand.) 'Skim milk;' Mids. Nt. Dr. u. 1. 36. A variant of skum; the change of vowel from u to i (y) is precisely what we should expect; but we only find a change of this character in the cognate G. skidmen, to skim, from skium, skum.—Dan. skimme, to skim; from skum, skum; Swed. skumma spjåk, to skim milk, from skum, skum. Note also Irish sgum-ean, I skim; from sgum, foam, scum. See Scum. † We find a similar vowel-change in skim, M. E. skim; in skil, derived from skil; in skil, verb, from skil, skil; in skim, verb, from A. S. skum; &c. Der. skimmer; skim-milk, i. e. skimmed milk.

SKIN, the natural covering of the body, hide, bark, rind. (Scand.) M. E. skin, Chaucer, C. T. 3809; skyn-skin or hows skin, a bear-skin, id. 3144. Not an early word; the A. S. scinn is very rare, and borrowed from Norse.—Icel. skinn, a skin; Swed. skinn; Dan. skind. β. Referred by Fick to Teut. type SKENDA, a skin (iii. 331). The Icel. skinn may stand for skind, by the assimilation common in that language; so also the Swed. skinn. The d is preserved in G. schinden, to skin, flay, O. H. G. scintan, scindan, sometimes a strong verb, with pt. t. scham, pp. geschunden, shewing that the base takes the form SKAND, which is prob. an extension from SKA, to cut. Cf. Skt. skha, to cut. Perhaps allied to skim, q. v. Cf. also W. scin, skin, peel, scales; ygwn, dandruff. Der. skin, verb, Hamlet, iii. 4. 147; skin-deep; skinn-or; skin-fist, a miser who would even skin a flint, if possible; skinn-y, Macb. i. 3. 55; skinn-i-ross.

SKINK, to draw or serve out wine. (E.) Obsolete. Shak. has under-skinker, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 36. Dryden has skinker, tr. of Homer, h. i. l. 803. The verb is fully explained under Bunchion, q. v.

SKIP, to leap lightly, pass over quickly. (C.) M. E. skippas, Chaucer, C. T. 3259; King Alisunder, 768; pt. t. skipe, P. Plowman, B. xi. 103. Of Celtic origin.—Irish spik, to snatch, found in the pp. spiktha, snatched away, also used in the sense of 'active'; cf. spik, sb., a snatch; also spikim, I pluck, pull, whip, bite; Gael. spik, to start or move suddenly; to snatch or pull at anything, spik, to snatch, pluck, bite, twitch; W. spik, to snatch away, spik, a quick snatch, spik, to snatch, whisk away, sp, a quick pull. [It may be added that the E. word skipper, a master of a ship, is spelt spikour in Irish; shewing the likeness in sound between E. skip and Irish spik.] Thus the orig. sense is to snatch, jerk, twitch.

β. The above words bear a remarkable likeness to Skt. skhap [standing for shp], to throw, move quickly, impel, whence skhapra, adj. quick. Cf. also Icel. skoppa, to spin like a top, whence skoppur-bringla, a top, North E. scopperi spinner, a teetotum (Whitby Glossary), named from its skipping about.—SKAP, to throw; cf. Skt. skhap, to throw; Fick, i. 234. Der. shp, sb., shipping-rope.

SKIPPER, the master of a merchant-ship. (Du.) 'In ages past' as the skipper told me, they grew a fair forrest in that channel where the Tweed makes sow her bed;' Howel, Famil. Letters, vol. i. let. 5, dated from Amsterdam, April 1, 1617. Thus Howel picked up the word in Holland.—Du. schipper, 'a mariner, a skipper, a saylour, a navigator;' Hexham. Formed, with suffix -er (= E. -er) of the agent, from Du. schip, cognate with E. Ship, q. v. So also Dan. skipper, from skib; Swed. skippers, from skopp.

SKIRMISH, an irregular fight, contest. (F.—O. H. G.) Also spelt scirmage; and even scarmouch is but the Ital. form of the same word. M. E. scarmische, a slight battle, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 934. v. 1507; whence the verb to scarmish, Romance of Parthenay, 2079. Spelt scarmoge, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 34.—O. F. scarmouche, 'a skirmish, bickering;' Cot. β. The change of vowel, from scarmish to skirmish, was due to the fact that we already had in our language the related M. E. skirmen, to fence or skirmish; the pt. t. skirmen occurs very early, in Layamon, 8406. This M. E. skirmen is from O. F. esbermir (Burguy), later scirmen, 'to fence, or play at fence, also, to lay hard about him;' Cot.—O. H. G. scirmen, M. H. G. skirmen, to defend, fight; especially, to defend oneself with a shield.—O. H. G. scirm, schirm, G. schirm, a shield, screen, shelter, guard, defence.

γ. The etymology of the G. schirm does not seem to be known. It thus appears that the orig. sense of skirmish is 'to fight behind cover,' hence to take advantage of cover or slight shelter in advancing to fight. δ. Dies and Scheler shew clearly that the F. scarmouche, Ital. scarmoucia, are due to O. H. G. schirmen, which is a mere variant of skirmen. The ending of Ital. scarmoucia is a mere suffix; we find also Ital. schirm-ogia, a skirmish, schirm-ista, fencing, schirmista, schirmario, to fence, schirma, a defence, arms; also O. F. scarm-er, answering to Ital. schirm-ista. The attempt to explain Ital. scarumaria from O. H. G. scara, a troop (G. schwar), and O. F. summar, to hide, is quite wrong. Der. skirt, verb, as above; skirted-er. Doublets, skirtage, skirtmuck.

SKIRT, the part of a garment below the waist, edge, border, margin. (Scand.) This is a doublet of skirt, but restricted to the sense of the lower part of the shirt or garment. Spelt skort, Hall's Sature, b. iv. sat. l. 128. M. E. skirt. 'Skirt of a garment, Trames;' Prompt. Parv. = Icel. skirta, a shirt, a kind of kirtle; Swed. skjorta, Dan. skjorte, a shirt. β. The cognate G. schurz has the sense of 'apron'; and special attention was called to the lower part of the shirt by the etymological sense, which signifies 'a skirt garment'; see SHIRT. And see remarks on KIRTLE. The general sense of 'edge' comes from that of 'lower edge,' or place where the garment is cut short. Der. skirt, verb, Milton, P. L. v. 282.

SHOOTISH, frisking, full of frolic, maid of a horse or unsteady person, fickle. (Scand.) 'Unstead and shootish in all motions else,' Tw. Nt. II. 4. 18. 'Some of the very shyish condycions;' Fabryna's Chronicle, an. 1555-6, ed. Ellis, p. 339. Formed from the verb shut, a Lowland Sc. word, meaning 'to flounce, caper like a shutish horse,' Jamieson. Of Scand. orig. We find nearly related words in Swed. shutta, to leap, Swed. dial. shutta, shütte, to leap, Swed. dial. shyts, to go a-hunting, to be idle, shyts, to run to and fro; all of which (as Ructz says) are mere derivatives from Swed. shyts, to shoot. To shy is a secondary verb, of Scand. orig., from the verb to shut; and means to be full of shootings or quick darts, to jerk or jump about; hence the adj. shyish, full of frolic or capers. See further under SHOOT.

β. We may also note Swed. shyt, Icel. shyti, shyge, shyts, Dan. shyts, an archer, marksman (lit. 'a shooter'), whence the verb to shy also means 'to aim at' or reflect upon a person. 'Shy, verb, to reflect on,' E. D. S. Glom. B. 1; a. 2. 1751. This explains the sb. shy, 'an oblique taunt,' Jamieson. Vigfusson notices E. shy with reference to Icel. shyts, shyts, shytsing, a scold, taunt; perhaps these also may be referred to the same prolific Teut. base shut. ¶ The surname Shyts, M. E. shyt, swift, in King Alaxander, 5637, Icel. shyts, swift, fleet, is likewise from Icel. shyts, to shoot; and is closely related.

SKITTLE, a game in which wooden pins are knocked down by a ball. (Scand.) Formerly hale or hoyles or hails; see KALLA. Also hittle-pins or shittle-pins. Todd cites: 'When shall our hittle-pins return again into the Grecian shytals?' Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, 1649, p. 43. Halliwell gives hittle-pins, skittles. 'The Grecian shytals' is an invention, evidently suggested by Gk. σκιττάλη, a stick, staff, from which Sadler probably imagined that shittles was 'derived,' in the old-fashioned way of 'deriving' all English words from Latin and Greek. As hittle-pins never came from Greek, there is no reason why it should be expected to 'return' to it. β. From comparison of shittles with hittle-pins, we may infer that the old name was shittle-pins, i. e. pins to be knocked down by a shittle or projectile. Shittle is, in fact, a doublet of shuttle, signifying, originally, anything that could be shot or thrown; thus the M. E. shutal meant the bolt of a door. Cf. M. E. shytle, a child's game, Lat. sagittula, Prompt. Parv.; though there is a doubt whether this refers to shittles or to shuttle-cock. γ. Shuttle is the English, but shittle the Scand. form. = Dan. shyttel, a shuttle, Swed. dial. shyttel, shyttel, a shuttle; Norweg. shyttel, (1) a harpoon, (2) a shuttle; Icel. shyttel, an implement shot forth, a harpoon, a bolt or bar of a door. = Icel. shyt, base of pl. of pt. t. of the strong verb shyts, to shoot, cognate with E. SHOOT, q. v. And see SHUTTLE. Also see SKITTISH.

SKULK, the same as Skulk, q. v.

SKULL, SCULL, the bony casing of the brain, the head, cranium. (Scand.) M. E. skulle, sculle, Chaucer, C. T. 3933; spelt skulle, Ancrén Riwle, p. 296, l. 4; sculle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 16, l. 17. Named from its bowl-like shape; the same word as Lowland Sc. skull, skall, a bowl to hold liquor, goblet (Jamieson). = Icel. skel, a bowl; Swed. skål, a basin, bowl; Dan. skål, a bowl, cup. See further under SOALS (1). Der. skull (2), q. v.; also skull-cap.

SKUNK, a N. American quadruped. (N. American Indian.) Modera; imported from N. American. 'Contracted from the Abenaki skunk;' Webster. Abenaki is a dialect of the Algonquin race of N. American Indians, spoken in Lower Canada and Maine.

SKY, the clouds, the heavens. (Scand.) M. E. skis, skye, in the sense of 'cloud'; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, l. 512. Used in the mod. general sense, King Alisaunder, 318. = Icel. ský, a cloud; Dan. and Swed. sky, a cloud. Cf. A. S. scia, sciana, a shade, Grein, ii. 412; Icel. skuggi, shade, shadow. All from the $\sqrt{\text{SKU}}$, to cover; whence also skew, skewer, hide, and skewer; Fick, iii. 337. Cf. Skt. skya, to cover; Lat. obscuro. Der. sky-blue, sky-light, sky-rocket. - ant; skyward, toward the sky. Also sky-ey, adj., Meas. for Meas. l. i. 9.

SLAB (1), a thin slip or flat piece of stone or wood. (Scand.) Now gen. used of stone; but formerly also of timber. 'Slab, the outside plank of a piece of timber, when sawn into boards;' Ray, North-Country Words, ed. 1691. Also used of pieces of tin; Ray, Account of Preparing Tin. 'Sawne slab of thy timber for stable and ste;' Tassie, Husbandry, sect. 27, st. 35. (E. D. S.) M. E. slak, rare; but we find the expression 'a slab of iron,' i. e. a piece of iron, in Popular Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, p. 135, l. 141. Cf. also Prov. E. slapp, a piece, part, or portion, given as a slap word in Ray's South-Country Words. The word is rather Scand. than E., and means 'a smooth piece;' being connected with North E. slaps, smooth, which is borrowed from Icel. slápr, slippery. The word slab itself stands for slap or slaps, from the Icel. strong verb slappa (pt. t. slapp), to slip; see SLIP. We use the very same idiom when we speak of a slip or thin slip, meaning a slice. This is confirmed by the Norweg. slap, adj., slippery, smooth; whence slápr, sb., a smooth piece of timber for dragging anything over, chiefly used of a row of pieces of timber laid down as the foundation of a road (Anzen). β. This Norweg. word explains not only slab, but slapper, well-known as a name for a block of wood on which the rails of a railway rest. So named, not from being always slappy, but from forming a slaps or smooth foundation. So also the Norfolk slaps, slapper, the stump of a tree cut off short, M. E. slápr, slippery (Halliwell). The Swed. släpa means a sledge; from its slipping along. γ. We may also note that the O. Du. slapp means 'to tear, or cut in pieces, to slit,' as well as 'to slip;' Hexham. Hence slab = that which is cut smooth, a smooth slip. ¶ Maha refers us to W. llab, a slip, stripe, stroke, strip, evidently allied to W. llabia, to slap; which does not much help us, and prob. belongs to slap rather than to slip. A slab is an outside plank, because it only need be smooth on one side.

SLAB (2), viscous, slimy. (C.) 'Make the gruel thick and slab;' Mach. iv. 1. 32. 'Slabby, sloppy, dirty;' Halliwell. = Irish slab, slach, Gael. slach, mire, mud left on the strand of a river; Gael. slachair, miry. Cf. Icel. slappa, slimy. See SLAP.

SLABBER, to slaver, to let the saliva fall from the mouth, to make wet and dirty. (O. Low G.) The forms slabber, slabber, slabber, are mixed up. Slabber (q. v.) is the Scand. form. Again, we have also the form slaver; this appears to be a modified and, as it were, a more 'genteel' form of slabber. It is best to treat these four forms all together. Shak. has slabbery, wet and foul; Hen. V, iii. 5. 13; also slabber, to sully, Oth. i. 3. 227; slabber, to do carelessly and negligently, Merch. Ven. ii. 8. 39. 'Her milke-pan and cream-pot so slabbered and soot' [dirted]; Tuzer's Husbandry, April, sect. 48, st. 20. (E. D. S.) M. E. slabber. 'Then come sleathe al slabbered' = then came sloth, all be-slubbered; P. Plowman, B. v. 392; where another MS. has slabbered. [Also slabber; 'His mouthe slabber,' Pricks of Conscience, 784; see SLAVER.] Not found in A. S. A frequentative form, with the usual suffix -er, from an infn. slabben. = O. Du. slabben, slabben, to slaver; om slabbe, or slab-doch, a child's bib, or slaving clout (where doch = G. sch, cloth); Hexham. Hexham also gives slabben, 'to lappe as dogges doe in drinking, to sup, or to lick;' with the frequentative slabberer, 'to sup up hot breath.' Low G. slabben, to lap, lick; whence slabber, slabberer, to let fall drops in drinking, to slaver; also slabber, to lap, sip. + G. schlabbern, schlabben, to lap, to slaver, slabber; schlabberig, slabby, slobbery; cf. schlabbe, the mouth of animals, in vulgar language, as being used for lapping up. Probably allied to Gael. and Irish slach, mud, mire, Irish slachair, a dirty person; see SLAB (2), SLAP. β. The form of the base appears to be SLAB, or SLAP; probably a related form to Aryan LAB, LAP, to lick; see LAP. Cf. prov. E. slap, to eat quickly, lick up food. γ. Or it is quite possible that slabber, like slab (1), is related to slip and slap (1). We have distinct traces of two Teut. roots, SLAP, to lick, and SLAP, to slip, which were probably orig. identical. Doublets, slaver, which is a Scand. form; so also is slabber.

SLACK, lax, loose. (E.) M. E. slak. 'With slak pass' = with slow pace; Chaucer, C. T. 2903 (Group A, 2901). = A. S. slac, slack, slow, Grein, ii. 455. 'Lentus, vel piger, slac;' Wright's Vocab. l. 49, col. 2; 74, col. 1. + Icel. slak, slack; whence slakna, to slacken, become slack. + Swed. and Dan. slak. + Provincial G. schlack, slack (Flugel); M. H. G. slak, O. H. G. slak. β. All from a Teut. base SLAKA, slack; Fick, iii. 358. This answers to an Aryan base SLAG, SARG, which appears to be represented by Skt. ari, to let flow, let loose, connected with ari, to flow, from $\sqrt{\text{SAR}}$, to flow; see further under SLAG. It seems probable that the Aryan base LAG, loom, is the same as SLAG with the loss of the initial s; if so, we may consider lag, languish, lan as related words. Der. slack-ly, slackness. Also slack, verb, Oth. iv. 3. 28, spelt slack in Palgrave; of which slak is a doublet; see SLAKA. Also slack-on, properly 'to become slack,' though often used in the trans. sense; the M. E. form is slakken (Stratmann). Also slag, q. v., slag, q. v., slach, q. v.

they have. . . in which they melt the slags, or refuse of the litharge; Ray, On the Smelting of Silver (1674); in reprint of Ray's Glossaries, Gloss. B. 15, p. 10. (E. D. S.) It also occurs in Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil (1582), Æn. iii. 376; ed. Arber, p. 89, l. 4. The word is Swedish.—Swed. slagg, dross, dross of metal, slag; järnslagg, dross of iron; slaggrupp, a heap of dross and cinders (Widergren). So called from its flowing over when the metal is fused; cf. Icel. slagna, to flow over, be spilt, slag, slagi, wet, dampness, water penetrating walls. β . Slag is a weakened form of slack, loose, orig. fluid; see BLACK. This is clearly shown by G. schlack, 'dross, slacks, sediment,' Flügel; schlackenofen, furnace to melt scoria; schlackstein, stone coming from scoria (i. e. slag); schlackern, to trickle, rain heavily, to become slack; schlack, slack, drossy, sloppy. So also Low G. slacke, scoria; Bremen Wörterbuch. Even in the Prompt. Parv., we find M. E. slag synonymous with slak, in the sense of muddy. γ . This helps out the derivation of slack, as it shows that the orig. sense of slack was 'fluid'; cf. Skt. srij, to let loose, let flow, effuse, shed. See BLACK. Der. slaggy.

SLAKE, to slacken, quench, mix with water. (E.) To slake or slak lime is to put water to it, and so disintegrate or loosen it. 'Quick-lime, taken as it leaves the kiln, and thrown into a proper quantity of water, splits with noise, puffs out, produces a large disengagement of vapour, and falls into a thick paste;' Weale, Dict. of Terms in Architecture, &c. Slake is an older spelling than slack, of which it is a doublet. M. E. slaken, to render slack, to slake. 'His wrappe for to slake;' Will. of Palerne, 728; spelt slaken, Layamon, 23345, later text.—A. S. slæccian, to grow slack or remiss; found in the comp. slæccian, Ælfric's Homilies, l. 610, l. 16, ii. 98, l. 15.—A. S. slæc, slack; see BLACK. β . There is also a M. E. slakhen, to quench, extinguish, Prompt. Parv. This is from A. S. slæcan, Grein, ii. 455, which is nothing but a doublet of slæccian, with vowel-change consequent on the loss of i. \dagger Icel. slakna, to slake; which, however, was orig. a strong verb, with pp. slakinn; still it is from the same Teut. base SLAK. \dagger Swed. släcka, to quench, put out, allay, slack; from slak, slack.

SLAM, to shut with violence and noise. (Scand.) Orig. a Northern word. 'To slam one, to beat or cuff one strenuously, to push violently; he slams it to the door; Norik;' Grose's Provincial Glossary, ed. 1790.—Norweg. slamba, to smack, bang, bang or slam a door quickly; also spelt slamma, slamra; Swed. dial. slamma, to slam, strike or push hastily, to slam a door (Aasen, Riets); Icel. slaura, slamra, to slam. Cf. Swed. slamra, to prate, chatter, jingle; slammer, a clank, noise. To slam is to strike smartly, and is closely related to slap; see SLAP. Note prov. E. slam-bang, slap-bang, violently; Halliwell.

SLANDER, scandal, calumny, false report, defamation. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) A doublet of scandal, as will appear. M. E. slandra, Chaucer, C. T. 8598; slandra, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 41; K. Alisaunder, 757.—O. F. scandire, 'a slander'; Cot. The oldest F. form was scandale, whence proceeded the forms scandale, scandale, scandru (Burguy); and lastly, by insertion of l, the form scandru.—Lat. scandalum; see SCANDAL. Der. slander, verb, M. E. slandra, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 41; slander-er; slander-ous, from O. F. scandru (Cot.); slander-ous-ly. Doublet, scandal.

SLANG, low, vulgar language, a colloquial and familiar mode of expression. (Scand.) Not in early use. In the Slang Dict., the earliest known instance is given as follows. 'Let proper nurses be assigned, to take care of these babes of grace [young thieves] . . . The master who teaches them should be a man well versed in the cant language commonly called the slang patter, in which they should by all means excel;' Jonathan Wild's Advice to his Successor; London, J. Scott, 1758. The same book gives: 'Slang, to cheat, abuse in local language; Slang-wanger, a long-winded speaker; also, out on the slang, to travel with a hawker's licence; slang, a watch-chain, a travelling-show.' The word is derived from slang, pt. t. of the verb to slang, i. e. to throw, cast. This is shown by Wedgwood, following Aasen; E. Müller thinks it unsatisfactory, but actual reference to Aasen's Norwegian Dict. ought to settle the matter; I cite the most material statements. β . We find, for example, Norweg. slang, a slinging, also an invention, device, stratagem; also, a little addition, or burthen of a song, in verse and melody; slang (lit. after-slang), a burthen at the end of a verse of a ballad; slanga, to dangle (which shews why slang sometimes means a watch-chain); slanga, to sling, cast, slanga høsten (lit. to sling the jaw), to use abusive language, to slang; slangmann, a nickname (lit. a slang-name), also, a name that has no just reason; slangjard (lit. a slang-word), an insulting word or allusion, a new word that has no just reason, or, as Aasen puts it, fornavnligge Ord eller Hentydninger, nye Ord som ikke have nogen rigtig Grund. It is difficult to see how a more exact and happy definition of a slang word could be given. The use of slang in the sense 'to cheat' reminds us of Icel. slangr, slangia, verbed in a thing, cunning. And that all the above Norweg. and Icel. words are derivatives from slang is quite clear; see SLING. I see no objection to this explanation; which is far preferable to the wholly improbable and unauthorized connection of slang with E. lingo and F. langue, without an attempt to explain the initial s, which has been put forward by some, but only as a guess. \dagger Taylor, in his Words and Places, gives, without any proof or reference, the following explanation. 'A slang is a narrow strip of waste land by the road-side, such as those which are chosen by the gipsies for their encampments. [This is amplified from Halliwell, who merely says: 'Slang, a narrow piece of land, sometimes called slanhet.'] To be out on the slang, in the lingo used by thieves and gipsies, means to travel about the country as a hawker, encamping by night on the roadside slanga. [Amplified from the Slang Dict., which says not a word about these night-encampments.] A travelling-show was also called a slang. It is easy to see how the term slang was transferred to the language spoken by hawkers and itinerant showmen.' To this I take exception; it is not 'easy to see'; surely no one would dream of calling thieves' language a travelling-show, or a camping-place. On the other hand, it is likely that a slang (from the verb slang, to cast) may have meant 'a cast' or 'a pitch'; for both cast and pitch are used to mean a camping-place, or a place where a travelling-show is exhibited; and, indeed, Halliwell notes that 'a narrow slip of ground' is also called a slinger. But I leave this to the reader, merely protesting against the conclusion which Mr. Taylor so hastily draws, and remarking that it only takes us back to the same original.

SLANT, to slope. (Scand.) We also have slant, adj. sloping; the verb should rather take the form to slant. Lowland Sc. slant, sklant, sklant, to give a slanting direction, to dart askance (in relation to the eyes), to pass obliquely, to render sloping (Jamieson). M. E. slanten, to slope, to glide; 'it slanted down to the erthe,' Morris Arthur, ii. 281, as cited in Halliwell, p. 755. 'A sote ynto the erthe hyt slante;' MS. Camb. Fl. ii. 38, fol. 113; cited in Halliwell, p. 711. [The insertion of s, as in slanten, occurs again in M. E. slantur for mod. E. slender.]—Swed. dial. slanta, slanta, lit. 'to cause to slide'; causal form of the strong verb slinta (pt. t. slant, pp. slantit), to slide, slip with the foot (Riets). Cf. O. Swed. slinta, to slip with the foot (Ihre); Swed. slinta, to slip, miss one's step, to glance (as a chisel on a stone), to slip or glance (as a knife); Widergren. Also Swed. slatta (= slanta), to slant, slope. β . The form SLINT is a nasalised derivative from the Teut. base SLID, to slide; see SLIDE. It is also a parallel formation to slant; see SLINK. The E. adj. slant, sloping, answers to the Swed. dial. slant, adj. slippery, esp. used of a path; the connection between sloping and slippery, in this case, is obvious. Cf. Low G. slindern, to slide on the ice; nasalised form from Teut. base SLID, as above. Also O. Du. slindern, slidderen, 'to drage or to traine;' Hexham. The Cornish slintya, to slide, to glide along, is worth notice; perhaps it was borrowed from English; we find also W. sligant, a slide. Der. slant-wise, slant-wise; also s-slant, q. v.

SLAP, to smack, to strike with the flat open hand (E.?) Rare in literature; but we find M. E. slappe, sb., a smart blow; Palladius on Husbandry, b. iv. l. 763. Perhaps we may call it an E. word; it occurs both in Low and High German. \dagger Low G. slapp, the sound of a blow, a sounding box on the ear. 'Slapp! slapp! slapp! slapp! slapp! I hit him on the snout, slapp!' Bremen Wörterbuch. \dagger G. schlapp, interj., slap! schlapp, sb., a slap; schlappen, verb, to slap. [Quite a different word from Swed. slapp, lax, loose, Dan. slap, slack, &c.] β . Perhaps an imitative word, to express the sound of a blow; it is certainly closely allied to slam; cf. prov. E. slam-bang, slap-bang, violently (Halliwell). At the same time, the particular form of the word may have been influenced by the common Teut. base SLAH, to strike; see SLAY. Der. slap, sb., M. E. slappe, as above; slap, adv., slap-bang, violently.

SLASH, to cut with a violent sweep, cut at random or violently. (F.,—O. H. G.?) M. E. slanen, very rare. In Wyclif, III Kings, v. 18, the Lat. delinorunt is translated by hem enwawerchede in the earlier text, with the various reading hem slawide; the later text has honden. 'Hewing and slashing;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. c. 15. 'Here's nip, and nip, and cut, and slash, and slash;' Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 90. 'But presently slash off his traitorous head;' Green, Alpbocous; ed. Dyce, vol. ii. p. 53. 'Slash, a cut or gash, Yorik;' Halliwell. Slashed sleeves are sleeves with gashes in them, as is well known. Slash and slak are both variants of slas.—O. F. aslacher, aslachier, the same as aslischer, to dismember, sever, dismitte; aslache, a portion or part, a severing, dismemberment (Roquefort). 'Eslecke, Eslecke, a dismembering, or separation; also, a part or piece dismembered;' Cot. 'Esleché, dismembered, rent, or torn from;' id. He also gives esliché, dismembered; and eslicher is the same as eslicher, whence E. slas; see SLICE. The vowel a appears in the related word slate; see SLATE. All from O. H. G. slāzan, to slit, split, read, destroy; cognate with E. slit; see SLIT. If this be right, slate, slat, slack, slate are all from the Teut. base SLIT.

¶ This is a new explanation. The only other suggested etymologies are quite out of the question; viz. (1) from Icel. sláa, to strike (Johnson); (2) from Swed. slaska, to paddle in water (Wedgwood). In the first place, the Icel. sláa really means 'to have an accident,' and is allied to slýs, 'a mishap, mischance, accident;' which has nothing to do with the sense of slate. And secondly, the Swed. slaska accounts only for prov. E. slashy, wet and dirty, and Lowland Sc. slash, to work in wet, slatch, to dabble in mire, slatch, to bedaub; which are words wholly unrelated to the present one, but allied to prov. E. slash and slash. Der. slash, sb. ¶ Slash, to whip, is a mere corruption of lash, q. v.

SLATE, a well-known stone that is easily split, a piece of such stone. (F.,—O. H. G.) M. E. slat, usually selat, Wyclif, Luke, v. 19. So called from its fissile nature.—O. F. selat, 'a shiver, splinter, or little piece of wood broken off with violence; also a small thin lath or shingle,' Cot. [A shingle is a sort of wooden tile.]—O. F. selator; whence selator, 'to split, burst, shiver into splinters;' Cot.—O. H. G. selizan, selizan (mod. G. schleissen), to slit, split, cognate with E. slit, q. v. β. Dies remarks that this derivation is sufficiently regular; the prefixed s is due to the difficulty, in French, of sounding the initial combination sl, and the vowel e answers to O. H. G. ei in selizan, an occasional spelling of selizan. Cf. G. schleissen, a splinter, answering exactly to F. selat. The O. F. selat = mod. F. selat; hence selat is the same word. Der. slate-pewee, slat-er, slating, slat-y. Doublet, slat.

SLATTER, a sluttish, untidy woman. (Scand.) It is used both by Butler and Dryden; Todd's Johnson (no reference). The final -er is difficult to account for; it is either a mere addition, as in bitter-er, or slattern is short for slatterns = slattering. Ray, in his North-Country Words, has: 'Dawgoe, or Dawkin, a dirty slattering woman.' The word is formed from the verb to slatter, to waste, use wastefully, be untidy. 'Slatter, to waste; or rather, perhaps, not to make a proper and due use of anything; thus they say, take care, or you'll slatter it all away; also, to be untidy or slovenly;' Halliwell. 'Slatter, to wash in a careless way, throwing the water about;' Forby. Slatter is the frequentative (with the usual suffix -er) of slat, to dash or throw about. 'Slat, to strike, slap, throw or cast down violently or carelessly;' Halliwell. M. E. slatter; in the Ancrum Riwle, p. 212, l. 6, we have: 'heo slatterð [various readings, slatten, slatteth] adun bo two hore earen' = they negligently cast down both their two ears, i. e. they refuse to hear. Cf. King Alisunder, 2165.—Icel. slatta, to slap, dab, squirt out liquids, dash them about; cf. the sb. slatta, a dab, a spot, blot (of ink). Cf. Norweg. slatta, to fling, cast, jerk off one (Aasen). β. The Norweg. slatta, verb, also has an allied sb. slat, a blow, answering to A. S. gulaht, a smiting. A. S. Chron. an. 937, formed (with suffix -er) from slagan (= slahan), pp. of slaha, to smite, slay; see SLAY. Thus a slattern is one who knocks or flings things about, with especial reference to dashing water about and splashing things; hence, wasteful, careless, and untidy. See SLAET. Der. slattern-ly. ¶ It is usual to connect slattern with slat; I suppose them to be from different sources, viz. slattern from the weak verb slata, to fling, and slat from the strong verb slatta, to dangle.

SLAUGHTER, a slaying, carnage, butchery. (Scand.) M. E. slaghter, Pricks of Conscience, 3367; also slantir, spelt slawys in Prompt Parv. The word is strictly Scand., from Icel. slátr, a slaughtering, butcher's meat, whence slatra, verb, to slaughter cattle. If the E. word had been uninfluenced by the Icel. word, it would have taken the form slaght or slaght; in fact, the commonest forms in M. E. are slayt, Rob. of Glouc. p. 56, l. 9; slaght, Gower, C. A. i. 248, l. 16; directly from A. S. slacat, Grein, ii. 455. β. The A. S. slacat is cognate with Du. and Dan. slagt, G. schlachten, from a Teut. base SLAH-TA, a slaying (Fick, iii. 358); whilst the Icel. slátr is a neut. sb., closely related to it, with the same sense. γ. All from the base SLAH, whence E. slay; see SLAY. Der. slaughter, verb, K. John, iii. 1. 302; slaughter-man, -house; slaughter-oven, Mach. v. 3. 14; slaughter-er.

SLAVE, a serf, one in bondage. (F.,—G.,—Slavonic.) Not in early use. In A. Dennis of a Maske for the right honourable Viscount Mountacute. Gascogne introduces the words slaw and slawerin; see Works, ed. Haslitt, i. 82, ll. 15, 20; i. 81, l. 13.—F. esclave, 'a slave;' Cot.—G. slaw, M. H. G. slawa, a slave; G. Slawa, a Slavonian, one of Slavonic race captured and made a bondman by the Germans. 'From the Enzine to the Adriatic, in the state of captives or subjects . . . they [the Slavonians] overspread the land; and the national appellation of the Slawa has been degraded by chance or malice from the signification of glory to that of servitude;' Gibbon, Decline of the Roman Empire, c. 55. β. The name Slave meant, in Slavonic, 'glorious,' as Gibbon intends us to understand; from Russ. slawa, glory, fame, a word which is cognate with E. glory; see GLORY. Der. slaw, verb, K. Lear, iv. 1. 71; slaw-er, slaw-er-y, slaw-ish, -ly, -ness; slaw-trade; also sw-slave.

SLAY (1), to kill. (E.) Orig. to strike, smite. M. E. slaw, slaw, Chaucer, C. T. 663; pt. t. slawch, slaw (slaw in Tyrwhitt), id. 989; pp. slaw, id. 994.—A. S. slada (contracted form of slahan), to smite, slay; pt. t. slah, slég, pl. slégon; pp. slagan; Grein, ii. 453, 456. β. Du. slaan, pt. t. slag, pp. geslagen. β. Icel. slá. β. Dan. slaa. β. Swed. slá. β. Goth. slahan. β. G. schlagen; O. H. G. slahan. β. All from Teut. base SLAH, to smite; Fick, iii. 358. The words slay, slap, slam, slang, slat, all express violent action, and may be ultimately related. Der. slay-er, M. E. slaw-er, Chaucer, C. T. 2007; also slawht-er, q. v.; slawht-er-a, q. v.; slay (2), q. v.; sludge-hammer, q. v.; slact, q. v., slay, q. v.

SLAY (2), SLAY, a weaver's reed. (E.) 'Slay, an instrument belonging to a weaver's loom that has teeth like a comb;' Phillips. 'Slay, a weaver's tool;' Palgrave.—A. S. slá; 'P[er]c[us]sio, slá;' Wright's Vocab. l. 283; also (in the 8th century) 'Pectica, slahan,' id. ii. 117. So called from its striking or pressing the web tightly together.—A. S. slada, to strike, smite; see SLAY (1). 'Porruus forruus insecti pectine dentes;' Ovid, Metam. v. 58. Cf. Icel. slá, a bar, bolt.

SLEAVE, SLEAVE-SILK, soft floss silk. (Scand.) 'Ravelled sleeve,' i. e. tangled loose silk, Mach. ii. 3. 37. See Nares and Halliwell.—Dan. slåse, a bow-knot, i. e. loose knot; Swed. slöj, a knot of ribbon. β. G. schleife, a loop, knot, spring, noose; lit. a slip-knot, from schleifen, to glide, slip. β. Low G. slöpe, slöpe, a noose, slip-knot; from slöpen, to slip. See SLIP. Thus the orig. notion is that of slipping about, or loosening; cf. G. schlaff, Low G. slapp, loose, slack. ¶ I suspect the word to be rather Flemish than Scand., but cannot find the right form. Some dictionaries cite Icel. sléfa, a thin thread; there is nothing like it in Egilsson or Cleasby and Vigfússon, except slafast, to slacken, become slovenly, which helps to explain sleaves.

SLID, SLEDGE, SLEIGH, a carriage made for sliding over snow or ice. (Scand.) M. E. slode, Prompt Parv. Pl. slodis, Wyclif, Chron. xx. 3; spelt sloddis in the later text.—Icel. slödi; Dan. slæde; Swed. slæde, a sledge. β. Du. slæde, a sledge. β. O. H. G. slida, slid; G. schlitten. All from Teut. base SLID, to slide; see SLIDE. So also Irish and Gael. slaid, a sledge, from slaid, to slide. β. The different spellings may be thus explained. 1. The right form is slod. 2. The form slodge (perhaps from the pl. slodis) appears to be due to confusion with the commoner word slodge in the sense of 'hammer;' see SLUDGE-HAMMER. 3. The form sleigh is due to contraction by the loss of d. Thus the Norwegian has both slode and slaw; so also Du. slodwaen, a sleigh-coach, stands for slodwaests.

SLEDGE-HAMMER, a mallet or heavy hammer. (E.) Properly slodge; slodge-hammer means 'hammer-hammer,' and shews reduplication. Slodge is a weakened form of M. E. slodge, Romans of Partney, 3000.—A. S. slodga, a heavy hammer, in a gloss (Bosworth). Lit. 'a smiter;' regularly formed from slagan, pp. of slaha, to smite, slay; see SLAY (1). β. Du. slodde, slat, a mallet. β. Swed. slodde, a sledge. β. Icel. slodde. Cf. also G. schlägel, Du. slagel, a mallet; from the same verb. We even find G. schlag-hammer, with hammer suffixed, as in English.

SLEEK, SLICK, smooth, glossy, soft. (Scand.) 'I sleek, I make paper smother with a sleek-stone, Je fais glissant;' Palgrave. 'And if the catter skyn be slay and gay;' Chaucer, C. T. Group D, 351, Ellesmere MS.; other readings slay, slay. Tyrwhitt prints slake, l. 5933. Spelt slids, adv., smoothly, Havelok, 1157.—Icel. slítr, sleek, smooth; whence slítr-stann, a fine whetstone (for polishing). Cf. O. Du. slayt, 'plaine, or even;' Hezham. β. The Du. slítr, Low G. slítr, G. schlich, grease, slime, mud, are closely related words; so also is the strong verb which appears in Low G. slíten (pt. t. slíten), G. schlichten (pt. t. slích, pp. geschlichen). O. H. G. slíten, to slink, crawl, sneak, move slowly (as if through mire); see SLINK. γ. The verbs slí-ak, slí-da, slí-p, are all obviously related; from slí, to flow, glide. The orig. sense of slí is 'greasy,' like soft mud. In exactly the same way, from the verb to slip, we have Icel. slípa, slippery (North E. slípa), and slípa, to make smooth, to whet, Du. slíppen, to polish, G. schleifen, to glide, to whet, polish; connected with G. schleifen, to crawl, just as the words above are with G. schleichen, to crawl.

SLEEP, to slumber, repose. (E.) M. E. slépen, Chaucer, C. T. 10. Properly a strong verb, with pt. t. slépe, which is still in use provincially, and occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 98. = A. S. slæpan, slæpan, pt. t. slæp; Grein, ii. 455. + Du. slapan. + Goth. slapan, pt. t. slæp (with reduplication). + G. schlafen; O. H. G. slafan. β . In connection with these is the sb. which appears as E. slap, A. S. slæp, Du. slap, Goth. slaps, G. schlaf, O. H. G. slaf; of which the orig. sense is drowsiness, numbness, lethargy; as shewn more clearly by the related adjective in Low G. slapp, G. schlapp, lax, loose, unbent, remiss, flabby, answering in form to Icel. slæpp, slippery, as well as to Russ. slabui, weak, feeble, faint, sick, loose; Fick, iii. 359. γ . Again, the Icel. slæpp is derived from the strong verb slæppa, pt. t. slæpp, to slip, cognate with E. slip, q. v. Thus all the above words can be referred back to the verb to slip; and it is easy to see how the sense of 'slippery' led to that of 'remiss' or 'lax'; whence slap, the period of remissness or inattention to outward circumstances. This sense still survives in our common use of slap for inactive. Der. slæpp, q. v.; slæpp-or, slæpp-les, slæpp-les-ly, slæpp-les-ness; slæpp-walk-or, slæpp-walk-ing; slæppy, slæpp-ily, -ness.

SLEEPER, a block of wood on which rails rest. (Scand.) From Norway slæp; explained under slab, q. v.

SLEET, run mingled with snow or hail. (Scand.) M. E. slæst, Chaucer, C. T. 11562. Of Scand. origin; and closely related to Norway. slæta, sleet (Aasen). So named because it slæts or splashes the face. = Norway. slæta, to fling; Icel. slæta, to slap, dab, esp. with liquids; answering to North E. slat, to strike, slap, cast down violently, itself a derivative of slæta, to smite, as shewn under slatter. Hence the frequentative verb slatter, to waste, throw about, be slovenly, particularly used of throwing about liquids, as shewn in Yorksh. slat, a spot, stain (Icel. slæta, a spot, blot), slætery, wet, dirty; slæter, to wash in a careless way, throwing the water about (Forby); and see Halliwell. And see slatter. γ The Dan. slæst, sleet, can hardly be related; it answers to Icel. slædda, sleet, cold rain, wet, allied to Icel. slædda, a clot of spittle or mucus. The A. S. slæht means 'slaughter'; the sense of 'sleet' rests only on the authority of Sommer; if right, it takes us back to the same root SLAH, to smite. Der. slæst-y, slæst-i-ness.

SLEEVE, part of a garment, covering the arm. (E.) M. E. slæwe, slæwe (with e = u); Chaucer, C. T. 193. = A. S. slæf, or slæf, a sleeve, also spelt slæfe or slæf. 'On his twain slæftum' = in his two sleeves; Ælfric's Homilies, l. 376. Slæf-les, sleeveless; Wright's Vocab. l. 40, col. 1. 'Manica, slæf;' id. l. 81, col. 2; pl. slæfe, id. l. 93, col. 2. We also find the verb slæfan, to put on, to clothe; Life of St. Guthlac, c. 16. The long e (f) results from a long a, pointing back to a base slæf. + O. Du. slæwe, 'a vaile, or a skin; the turning up of anything;' whence slæwens, 'to turn up ones sleeves, to cover ones head'; Hexham. Also O. Du. slæwe, 'a sleeve;' id. + G. schlaube, a husk, shell (Flügel). Allied to M. H. G. slæwen, to let slip, cover, clothe, a causal form allied to M. H. G. slæfen, O. H. G. slæfan, to slip, glide, cognate with A. S. slæpan, to slip. β . From the verb to slip, as shewn by the G. form; cf. Goth. slæpan (pt. t. slæp, pp. slæpan), to slip, creep into. We talk of slipping into clothes, of slipping clothes on and off, and of slippers for the feet. A slæwe is the part of a garment into which one's arms are slipped, a loose covering put on by pushing the arms through. γ . There is a difficulty in the change from p to f; but we may note that the Dan. form of slip was slæbe, whence the M. E. slæwe in the sense of 'slip.' Thus Palgrave has: 'I slæwe downe, I fall downe sodaynly, Te cond;' see slæwe in Halliwell. Wedgwood further cites: 'I'll slæwe on my gown and gang wi' thee,' Craven Glossary; also a quotation from Clare, where slæwe occurs in the sense of slips. The p is preserved in slæp (2), q. v. The double form for slip in A. S., viz. slæpan, slæpan, allows of great variation in the vowel-sounds. Der. slæwe-les, A. S. slæf-les, as above. Horns Tooke explains slæweles errand (Trot. v. 4. 9) as meaning 'without a cover or pretence,' which is hardly intelligible; I suspect it to refer to the herald's tabard, which had no slæwe; in which case, a slæweles errand would be such an one as is sent by a herald, which frequently led to no useful result.

SLEIGHT, cunning, dexterity. (Scand.) M. E. slæghte, Chaucer, C. T. 606; slæyte, slæithe, P. Plowman, C. xii. 98; slæyte, Will. of Palerne, 2151; slæite, Layamon, 17213 (later text, where the first text has læte, the E. word). = Icel. slægt (put for slægt), sliness, cunning. Formed, with suffix -g (Aryan -n), from slægr (put for slægr), sly; see slay. + Swed. slægt, mechanical art, dexterity (which is one sense of E. slæght); from slægr, handy, dexterous, expert; Widegren. β . Thus slæght (formerly slæghte) is equivalent to slæ-gr, i. e. slægr-ness. Der. slæght-of-hand.

SLENDER, thin, narrow, slight, feeble. (O. Low G.) M. E. slænder, Chaucer, C. T. 589; Richard Cœur de Lion, 3130. Slænder stands, by vowel-change, for an older form slænder. Not found in A. S. = O. Du. slænder, 'slender, or thinn'; Hexham. The same word is also used as a sb., meaning 'a water-snake;' whilst slænderen or slænderen means 'to drage or to traine.' Allied to G. schlender, the train of a gown, an easy lounging walk; schlenderen, to saunter, loiter; also to Low G. slænder, a long, easy, trailing gown, slænderen, to slide on the ice, as children do in sport. β . All these are nasalized derivatives from the Teut. base SLID, to slide, trail along, Schmidt, Vocalismus, l. 58; thus slænder is 'trailing,' dragging, or long drawn out, whence the sense of thin; slænder is a long make, from its trailing; and the other senses are obviously connected. See Slide. Der. slænder-ly, -ness.

SLICE, a thin, broad piece. (F., = O. H. G.) The sb. slæce is older than the verb. M. E. slæce, slæce, a thin piece, shiver, splinter, 'They braken speres to slæces;' King Alisaunder, 3833. = O. F. oualtes, a shiver, splinter, broken piece of wood; from the verb schlæcen, to slit, to split, break (Bargny). = O. H. G. slæza, to slit; cognate with E. slit, q. v. Closely allied words are slæts, slæts. Der. slæce, verb; 'slæced into pieces,' Chapman, tr. of Homer's Iliad, b. xxii. l. 298; slæce-or.

SLIDE, to glide, slip along, fall. (E.) M. E. slæden, slæden, Chaucer, C. T. 7958; pt. t. slæde, Wyclif, Lament iii. 53, later text; pp. slæden, spelt slæden, ibid., earlier text. = A. S. slædan, pt. t. slæde, pp. slæden; only found in compounds. The pt. t. slæde is in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 512, l. 10; the pp. slæden in the same, l. 493, l. 11. From the Teut. base SLID, to slide (Fick, iii. 359); whence also A. S. slæder, slippery, Icel. slæði, a sledge, slæðar, fem. pl., a scabbard (into which a sword slides); G. schlitten, a sledge, schlittschuh, a skate (lit. slide-shoe); O. Du. slæder, a water-snake, slænderen, slænderen, 'to drage or to traine,' Hexham; &c. See slænder. β . Further related to Irish and Gael. slæid, to slide, Lithuan. slædas, slippery, slæiti, to slide, Russ. slæds, a foot-track. Slæp and slæde are both extensions from a base SLI, answering to Aryan $\sqrt{\text{SAR}}$, to flow; cf. Skt. ari, to flow, ariti, gliding, sliding. See slip. Der. slæde, sb., slæde-or; also slæd, slædge, or slæigh (under slæd); also slænder, q. v.

SLIGHT, trifling, small, weak, slender. (O. Low G.) M. E. slæht, slæht. 'So smole, so smal, so seme slæht;' and of a fair young girl; Allit. Poema, A. 190. The orig. sense is even, flat, as a thing beaten flat. = O. Du. slæcht, 'even, or plaine;' slæcht, 'slight, simple, single, vile, or of little account;' slæcht ende recht, 'simple and right, without deceit or guile;' Hexham. Thus the successive senses are flat or even, smooth, simple, guileless, vile; by a depreciation similar to that which changed the sense of slily from that of 'guileless' to that of 'half-witted.' The verb to slæht was actually once used in the sense of 'to make smooth;' thus Hexham explains O. Du. slæchtem by 'to slight, to make even or plaine.' + O. Fren. slæcht; as 'seu slæchter end' = a slight oath. + O. Low G. slæht, even, smooth, simple, sly, poor, bad. + Icel. slættir, flat, smooth, slight, trivial, common. + Dan. slæ, flat, level, bad. + Swed. slæ, smooth, level, plain, wretched, worthless, slight. + Goth. slæhta, smooth; Late, iii. 3. + G. schlicht, smooth, sleek, plain, homely. β . All from Teut. type SLEH-TA, smooth, beaten flat; formed with the participial suffix -TA from Teut. base SLAH, to smite; see slay (1). Fick, iii. 358. Der. slæht-by, slæht-ness; slæht, verb, to consider as worthless.

SLIM, weak, slender, thin, slight. (Du.) Not in early use. Noticed in Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671, as being in common use in Lincolnshire. Halliwell has: 'slim, distorted or worthless, sly, cunning, crafty, slender, thin, slight;' also slam, tall and lean, the slope of a hill. The orig. sense was 'lax' or 'bending,' hence 'oblique,' or 'transverse;' then sly, crafty, slight, slender (in the metaphorical sense of unsubstantial); and hence slender or slight in the common sense of those words. This transference, from a metaphorical to a common sense, is unusual, but borne out by the history of the word; see Todd's Johnson. Thus Barrow, On the Pope's Supremacy, says: 'that was a slim [slight, weak] excuse;' Todd. Perhaps the earliest instance in which it approaches the modern sense is: 'A thin slim-guttled fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a henroost;' L'Estrange (in Todd). It is clear that the use of the word has been influenced by confusion with the (unrelated) word slender, which sounds somewhat like it. 'slim, naughty, crafty, slim, also, slender;' Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. = O. Du. slim, 'swry, or byts-wise; craftie;' Hexham. + Dan. and Swed. slam, bad, vile, worthless. + Icel. slæmr, vile, bad. + G. schlimm, bad, evil, sad, unwell, arch, cunning. β . The form slim, i. e. bending, stands for slæmp, nasalized form of Low G. slæpp, lax; cf. G. schlappen, to dangle; schlappen, to hang down; see slæpp. Der. slim-ness.

SLIME, any glutinous substance, viscous mire, mucus. (E.) M. E. slæme, slæme, or slæm (with long i); Gower, C. A. iii. 96, l. 2; spelt slæm, Ancru. Riwe, p. 276, l. 18. = A. S. slæm; as a various reading in Pa. lxxvii. 2 (Spelman). + Du. slæm, phlegm, slime. + Icel. slæm. + Swed. slæm. + Dan. slæm, mucus. + G. schlamm. + Rem. slæm, saliva, drivel; cf. slæze, slime, mucus. β . Not to be connected with Lat. limax, mud (of which the sense is somewhat different), but with Lat. saliva, Gk. saliva, spittle, Lithuan. salis, spittle, slaver; Curtius, l. 463. Der. slim-y, slim-i-nas. Doublet, saliva.

SLING, to fling, cast with a jerk, let swing. (E.) M. E. slingam; pt. t. slang, Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright, p. 132, l. 2; pp. slongam, Sur Percival, 672, in the Thornton Romances, ed. Halliwell. — A. S. slingam, pt. t. slang, pp. slungon, very rare (Bosworth). — Du. slingon, to toss, sling; a weak frequentative form. — Icel. slungva, slingva, pt. t. slang, slangva, pp. slunginn, to sling, fling, throw. — Dan. slunge, weak verb. — Swed. slunga, weak verb. — G. schlingen, pt. t. schlang, pp. geschlungen, to wind, twist, entwine, sling. — All from the Teut. base SLANG, to twist, wind round; Fick, iii. 359. Fick compares Rum. slahiti, bent, bowed, crooked; Lithuan. slinkti, to creep; perhaps the latter (at least) is allied rather to G. schleichen, to creep, and to E. slak, slunk. The words slang, slak, slip, slink, seem to be all extensions from the Aryan $\sqrt{\text{SAR}}$, to flow, whence the sense of winding (as a river) would easily arise. Der. slang, sb., King Alisander, 1191; slang-er. Also slang, q. v.

SLINK, to sneak, crawl away. (E.) 'That som of jew shall be rist feyn to slink away and hyde;' Tale of Berys, 3334. — A. S. slincan, Gen. vi. 7. A nasalized form of an A. S. slincan, to creep, not found, but cognate with the strong Low G. verb slinon (pt. t. slach, pp. slachon) and the G. schlänken (pt. t. schlich, pp. geschlichen), to slink, crawl, sneak, move slowly; see Block. — Lithuan. slinkti, to creep; and cf. Rum. slahiti, bent, bowed, crooked. — All from the A. S. slincan was prob. a strong verb; we still use slunk as the past tense; see Titus Andron. iv. 1. 63.

SLIP, to creep or glide along, to slink, move out of place, escape; also, to cause to slide, omit, let loose. (E.) We have confused the strong (intransitive) and weak (transitive) forms; or rather, we have preserved only the weak verb, with pt. t. slipped, pp. slipped or slipt. The strong verb would have become slipe, pt. t. slupe, pp. slippun, long disused; but Gower has him slupeth (used reflexively), rhyming with upeth, C. A. ii. 347. Gower also has he slipes (wrongly used intransitively), from the weak verb slippon; C. A. ii. 79; the pp. slipped (correctly used) is in Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, 244. — A. S. slippun, not found; transitive weak verb, derived from A. S. slipan (pt. t. slap, pp. slipan), to slip, glide, pass away. 'Sona nos festinys is-slipes' = soon the cohesiveness will pass away; A. S. Leechdoms, i. 164, l. 20. The A. S. adj. slipra, slippery, is from the stem of the pp.; it occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 92, l. 16. It must further be remarked that there is yet a third form of the verb, occurring as A. S. slōpan or slōpan (pt. t. slōp, pp. slōpan); Grein, ii. 457. — Du. slippen (weak), to slip, escape. — Icel. slippa (weak), to let slip; causal of slappa (strong, pt. t. slapp, pp. slappinn), to slip, slide, escape, fail, miss. — Dan. slippe (pt. t. slap), to let go, also to escape. — Swed. slippa (weak), to get rid of, also to escape. — M. H. G. sliffen, G. schleifen, to glide away; weak verb, from O. H. G. slifan, G. schleifen, to slide, glance, also to grind, whet, polish (i. e. make slippery or smooth). In the last sense, to polish, we find also Du. slippen, Swed. slipa, Dan. slibe, Icel. slipa; the forms require careful arrangement. — All these are from a Teut. base SLAP, SLIP, to slip, glide. There is also a base SLUP; whence Goth. slūpan (pt. t. slump, pp. slūpan), to slip or creep into, a Tim. iii. 6; A. S. slūpan, slūpan, as above; Du. slūpan, to sneak, G. schlūpen, to slip, glide. — All from Aryan $\sqrt{\text{SAR}}$, to creep; whence E. Serpentine, q. v. But see Schmidt, Vocalismus, l. 163. Der. slip, sb.; slip-boot, slip-shod; also slipp-er, a loose shoe easily slipped on, K. Joha, iv. 2. 197, called in A. S. slipp-weds (slipp-wed?), a slip-shoe; see Wright, Vocab. l. 289, l. 7. Also slipp-er, adj., formed by adding -er (= A. S. -ig) to M. E. sliper (A. S. sliper), slippery, which occurs, spelt slipper, as late as in Shak. Oth. ii. 2. 246, and Spenser, Shep. Kal., Nov. 153; slipper-i-ness. Also slips, q. v., slows, q. v., slaps, q. v. And perhaps slip (1), slab (1), slapper.

SLIT, to split, tear, rend, cut into strips. (E.) Just as we make slip do duty for two forms slip and slipe (see SLIP), so we use slit in place of both slit and slite. M. E. slitten, weak verb, Chaucer, C. T. 14403; from slitan, strong verb, whence the pp. slitun (with short i), Prompt. Parv. The latter is derived from A. S. slitan, pt. t. slit, pp. slitan (short i); Grein, ii. 456. — Icel. slita, pt. t. slit, pp. slitun, to slit, rend. — Dan. slide. — Swed. slita, to tear, pull, wear. — Du. slitun, to wear out, consume. — O. H. G. slizan, G. schleimen, to slit, split; whence the weak verb schlitzun, to slit, slash, cleave. — All from Teut. base SLIT, to slit, Fick, iii. 359. Perhaps cognate with Lat. lidere (= lidere in compounds) and Skt. ślith, to injure. Der. slit, sb., A. S. slita, Matt. ix. 16. Also slate, q. v., slac, q. v., slash, q. v., slat, q. v. (But not slat.)

SLIVER, a splinter, twig, small branch broken off, slice. (E.) In Hamlet, iv. 7. 174. M. E. sliver, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1015. Sliver is the dimin. of slive, just as shiver is of shive, and splinter of splint. Prov. E. slive, a slice, chip, from the verb slive, to cut or slice off; Halliwell. The verb slive is M. E. sliven, to cleave, spelt sliven in Prompt. Parv. — A. S. slifan (pt. t. slif, pp. slifon), to cleave, in a gloss (Bosworth). This verb appears to be exactly parallel to A. S. slitan (pt. t. slit, pp. slitan), and a mere variant of it; see SLIT.

SLON, a small sour wild plum. (E.) M. E. slon, pl. slon (with long o), King Alisander, 4983. — A. S. slōn, pl. slōn. 'Moros, slōn;' Wright's Voc. l. 285, col. 1. — Du. slon, formerly slom, + Dan. slonem. — Swed. slōn. — G. schlehe, pl. schlehen; O. H. G. slōh. — Lithuan. slona, a plum. — Russ. sliva, a plum. — Slon is 'the small astringent wild plum, so named from what we call setting the teeth on edge, which in other languages is conceived as blunting them; see Adelung;' Wedgwood. This is quite right; see Fick, iii. 358. Cf. O. Du. slonun, 'sharp or tart;' slon or slonun, 'tender, slender, thinne or blunt;' de slonwighedyt der tanden, 'the edginess or soreness of the teeth;' Hexham. The Du. slonun is the same word as E. slon; see BLOW. The slon is the slow (i. e. tart) fruit.

SLONGAN, a Highland war-cry. (Gaelic.) Englished from Gael. slongh-gairm, 'the signal for battle among the Highland chieftains' — Gael. slongh, a host, army; and gairm, a call, outcry, from gairm, to call, cry out, crow as a cock, which is from $\sqrt{\text{GAR}}$, to cry out; see OROW. The sense is 'cry of the host.'

SLOOP, a one-masted ship. (Du.) 'Sloop, a small sea-vessel;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Mentioned in Dampier, Voyages, an. 1680 (R.); and in Hexham. — Du. sloop; O. Du. sloope, 'a sloop, or a boat;' Hexham, ed. 1658. — The etymology is doubtful, because it would appear that O. Du. sloope is a contraction of F. chaloop, whence E. shallop; see SHALLOP. — If sloope were a real Du. word, it might be derived (like O. Du. sloope, a cava, sloope, to filch) from the verb which appears in E. as slip, q. v. In this case, a sloop might mean a vessel that slips or steals along; which is the etymology usually given; see Diez, a. v. chaloop. Shallop is older than sloop, as far as English is concerned; further light is desired. Doublet, shallop (?).

SLOP (1), a puddle, water or liquid carelessly spilt. (E.) M. E. slopp, a pool, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3923. — A. S. sloppa, slyppe, the sloppy droppings of a cow; occurring in cu-sloppa, a cow-slop (now cow-slop), Wright's Voc. i. 31, col. 2, and ænan-slyppe, an ox-slop (now ox-slop). We also find A. S. slypa, a viscid substance, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 18, l. 27, spelt slipa in the next line. The etymology is from A. S. slopp, stem of pp. of slōpan, to dissolve, closely allied to slipan, to slip. 'Pá wearð heora heorte is-slōpan' = then was their heart dissolved, made faint; Joshua, v. 8. This is made more probable by the fact that slop (2) is from the same verb. Perhaps slop, a pool, merely meant 'a slippery place,' a place slippery with wet and mire. Cf. Icel. slip, slimy offal of fish, slappa, slime; Gael. and Irish slak, mire, mud. The words slak (2), slakker, slower are probably related. Der. slop, verb, to spill water, esp. dirty water; slopp-y, slopp-i-ness. Also cow-slop, q. v., ox-slop, q. v.

SLOP (2), a loose garment. (Scand.) Usually in the pl. slops, large loose trousers, a Hen. IV, l. 2. 34. M. E. slopps, Chaucer, C. T. 16101. We find 'in stolum eel on ofer-sloppun' = in stoles or over-slops, as a gloss to in stolis in the Northumbrian version of Luke, xx. 46. The word is Scand. rather than E., the A. S. word being ofer-slopp (dative case), Ælfric's Homilies, i. 456, l. 19. — Icel. sloppa, a slop, gown, loose trailing garment; whence sloppun, an outer gown or over-slop. — Icel. slipp, stem of pt. t. pl. of slippa, to slip, a strong verb; so called from its trailing on the ground. — So also A. S. slype (or slype), a slop, from A. S. slippan, to glide; Dan. slak, a train, from slak, to trail; G. schleppen, a train, from schleppen, to trail. And cf. O. Du. slopp, later sloep, a slipper; Hexham, Sewel. — Similarly Du. sladder-brak, slops, slop-breeches, is connected with O. Du. sladde, slippers, and with the E. verb to slide. And see Sleeve.

SLOPE, an incline. (E.) 'Slope, or oblique;' Minshew. M. E. slope. 'For many times I have it seen That many have begiled been For trust that they have set in hope Which fell hem afterward a-slope;' Rom. of the Rose, 4464. Here a-slope, lit. on the slope, means 'contrary to expectation,' or 'in a disappointing way.' It is the same idiom as when we talk of 'giving one the slip.' It is a derivative of the verb to slip; formed, probably, from the pt. t. slōp of the A. S. slipan, to slip, by the usual change of d to s (as in slōn = stone), rather than from the pp. slopan of the form slōpan; see SLIP. Thus a-slope is 'ready to slip,' or likely to disappoint; hence, in a disappointing way. Cf. prov. E. slope, slippery, which is from the Icel. slipr, slippery. Der. slope, verb, Macb. iv. 1. 87; a-slope.

SLOT (1), a broad, flat wooden bar which holds together larger pieces, bolt of a door. (O. Low G.) 'Still in use in the North, and applied to a bolt of almost any kind;' Halliwell. 'Slotte of a dore, loquet;' Palgrave. Spelt slot, slaw; Prompt. Parv. — Du. slot, a lock ('ewel'); de sloten van kisten, 'the locks of chests;' de sloten van hoyum, 'the closures of houses'; Hexham. The Du. slot also means a castle. Derived from the verb sluuten, to shut (pt. t. sluot, pp. gesloten). So also O. Fries. slot, from sluta, to shut; Low G. slut, from slutten. β. From the Teut. base SLUT, to shut, appearing in Du. sluuten; O. Fries. sluta; Low G. sluten; Swed. sluta (pt. t. slöt, pp. slöta); G. schliessen, M. H. G. sluzen, O. H. G. sluzan. γ. Cognate with Gk. sluizein, to shut, Lat. claudere, to shut. 'We may give SKLU as the root; the Lat. and Teut. verb shew us a d suffixed;' Curtius, i. 184. See CLOSE (1).

SLOT (2), the track of a deer. (Scand.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Also spelt slouch, as in the derivative Lowland Sc. slouch-bound (Jassieson). M. E. slouch, a track, Barbour's Bruce, vii. 21; whence slouch-bound, slouch-bound, slouch-bound, a bound for tracking deer, id. vi. 26, 484, 669. Also slouch, Cursor Mundi, 1244; Ormulum, 1194. — Icel. slóð, a track or trail in snow or the like; cf. slóða, to trail, slóður, a gown that trails on the ground. Allied to sléð, a sledge; from Teut. base SLID, to slide; see SLIDE. Frck. iii. 359.

SLOTCH, laziness, sluggishness. (E.) Lit. 'slowness.' M. E. slowth, Chaucer, C. T. 15736; slowthe, P. Plowman, B. v. 395. — A. S. slōth, slōth; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xviii. § 3; hb. ii. pro. 7. Formed with suffix -th (= Aryan -tu) from A. S. slōw, slow; see SLOW. Dor. slōth, sb., an animal; slōth-ful, 2 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 7; slōth-ful-ly; slōth-ful-ness.

SLOUCH, to have a clownish look or gait. (Scand.) Now a verb; but formerly a sb. 'Slouch, a great, vawildie, ill-fashioned man;' Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Slouch, a great lubberly fellow, a meer country-bumpkin;' Phillips. Hence to slouch is to act as a lout. Slouch is a weakened form of slouch or slouch; cf. prov. E. slouch, loose, Slouch; Halliwell. — Icel. slóðr, a slouching fellow; allied to slátr, slack. Cf. Swed. slóða, to droop; slóðra, having drooping ears; slóðig, hanging, slouching; Dan. slødtret, slødtret, crest-fallen, lit. having drooping ears. Thus slouch is a derivative of SLACK, q. v. And see SLUG.

SLOUGH (1), a hollow place filled with mud, a mire. (C.) M. E. slough, slough, Chaucer, C. T. 7147, 14804. — A. S. slōh (stem slōg); Kemble's A. S. Charters, 50, 123, 254, 534 (Lao). Not an A. S. word, but borrowed from Celtic, which explains it. — Irish slōe, a pit, hollow, pitfall, allied to slōgholl, a whirl-pool; so named from swallowing one up; from slōgan, I swallow, devour, gorge. — Gael. slōe, a pit, den, grave, pool, gutter, allied to slōghaid, a slough or deep miry place, slōgan, a whirl-pool, gulf; from slōig, to swallow, absorb, devour. Cf. W. slōwg, a gulp, from slōwco, to gulp, gorge. The Irish slōg, to swallow, is cognate with Swed. slōka, Low G. slōken, to swallow, and G. schlucken, to swallow, hicough (O. H. G. sluzen, cited by Curtius); and with Gk. slōzein (for slōzēin), to hicough, sob; Curtius, i. 461. The form of the root is SLUG.

SLOUGH (2), the cast off skin of a snake; the dead part which separates from a nose. (Scand.) Pronounced slōf. Spelt slough, Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 473; ed. Arber, p. 58. M. E. slouch, slouch, Pricke of Conscience, 530 (footnote), where it is used in the sense of caul or integument. Spelt slough, slouch, slouch, in the sense of skin of a snake; Cursor Mundi, 745. From its occurrence in these Northern poems we may presume that the word is Scandinavian. The corresponding word occurs in Swed. dialects as slug (Jutland), with a similar form slous or slou (see slou in Riets), with the sense of 'covering.' The Norweg. form is slō (Assen). β. [With the latter form slōwe we may compare Low G. slu, slute, a husk, covering, the pod of a bean or pea, husk of a nut; answering to the Cleveland word slough, the skin of a gooseberry (Atkinson); O. Du. slouwe, 'a vase or a skinn'; Hexham; cf. slouwen, 'to cover ones head'; id.; G. schlunde (provincial), 'a shell, husk, slough.' The etymology of the latter set of forms is from the verb to slip, and they seem to be much the same word as BLEAVE, q. v. The sense is 'that out of which a snake slips,' or 'a loose covering.' The O. Du. sloup, a pillow-case, covering for a pillow (Sewel), shews an older form, and may be immediately compared with Du. sloup, pt. t. of sluypen, to slip away (Sewel). See SLIP.] γ. But the E. slough and Jutland slug are allied to G. schlunde, a skin, bag, also the gullet; and these words appear to be connected with G. schlucken, Swed. sluka, to swallow. Cf. Dan. slug, the gullet, sluge, to swallow; and see SLOUGH (1). Thus there would appear to be a real connection between slough (1) and slough (2), and a total absence of connection between slough (2) and G. schlunde, &c.

SLOVENY, a careless, lazy fellow. (Du.) Spelt slouven, slouven, in Palgrave. 'Some sluggish slouven, that sleep day and night;' Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 191. Not in early use, and apparently borrowed from Dutch. I cannot account for the suffix -en except by supposing it to be the E. ad. suffix, formerly commoner than it is now; we still have gold-en, ash-en, wood-en; it may have been added at first to give the word an adjectival force, which would soon be lost. — O. Du. slōf, slōf, 'a careless man, a sloven, or a nasty fellow,' Hexham; whence slōfachtigich, 'negligent, or slovenly,' id. We also find the verb slouven, 'to play the sloven;' id. Sewel gives Du. slōf, careless; slōf, sb., an old slipper, slōf, sb., neglect, slōfen, to dabble with slippers. — Low G. slōf, slovenly; slōfen, slōffen, to be careless; slōfen, to go about in slippers, slōffen, slippers; obviously connected with slōpen, to slip. Cf. also G. schlappen, a slut, slattern, schlappen, to drabble; allied to schluffen, to slip. β. For a similar substitution of v for g in derivatives of slip, see BLEAVE, BLEAVE. The base is obviously the Low G. slup, as seen in Goth. slup-ans, pp. of slupjan, to slip; see SLIP. Note also Irish and Gael. slōpach, slovenly, slōpag, a slut. ¶ Not allied to slow. Der. slouven-ly, slouven-ness.

SLOW, tardy, late, not ready. (E.) M. E. slow, Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 26; slow, Prompt. Parv. (where it has the sense of blunt, or dull of edge). — A. S. slōw, Matt. xxv. 26. — Du. slōw. — Icel. slōgr. — Dan. slōw, blunt, dull. — Swed. slō, blunt, dull, dead, weak. — M. H. G. slō, O. H. G. slōs, blunt, dull, lukewarm. β. All from the Teut. base SLAIWA, blunt, weak, slow; Fick, iii. 358. Root unknown. Some suppose it to be connected with E. slack, but this is very doubtful; it may, however, be allied to slōp, slō-dō, slō-ak. Der. slōw-ly, slōw-ness. Also slō-ith (for slōw-ith), q. v. Also slōw, q. v.

SLOW-WORM, a kind of snake. (E.) The allied words shew that it cannot mean 'slow worm,' but the sense is rather 'slayer' or 'striker,' from its (supposed) deadly sting. Indeed, the Swedish word is equivalent to an E. form worm-slow, i. e. 'worm-striker' or stinging serpent, shewing clearly that the word is compounded of two substantives. It was (and still is) supposed to be very poisonous. I remember an old rime: 'If the adder could hear, and the blind-worm see, Neither man nor beast would ever go free.' But it is quite harmless. β. So persistent is the belief in the etymology from slow, that even Dr. Stratmann suggests that the spelling slō-worm in Wright's Vocab. i. 91, col. 7, ought to be altered to slō-worm, and the A. S. Dictionaries alter the spelling of the old glosses with the same view, viz. to make the evidence fit in with a preconceived popular etymology! — A. S. slō-worm. We find: 'Stellus, slō-worm;' Wright's Vocab. i. 24, col. 1; and again, id. i. 78, col. 2. Here slō is (I suppose) contracted from slōw = smite, from slōkan, usually slōan, to smite; the parallel form slōga occurs in Exod. xxiii. 2; see SLAY. — Swed. slō, usually ormslō, a blindworm (where orm = E. worm); from slō, to strike (Riets, p. 618, where the dialectal form slō is given). — Norweg. slō, a blindworm; also called ormslō (Assen); from slōn, to strike. ¶ Quite distinct from Swed. slō, blunt, dull, the cognate form with slow.

SLUBBER, to do carelessly, to sully. (Scand.) 'I slubber, I fyle [defile] a thyng;' Palgrave. And see Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 8. 39; Oth. i. 2. 217. — Dan. slubber, to slubber; Swed. dial. slubber, to be disorderly, to slubber, slobber with the lips, a frequentative verb with suffix -ra (for -ra) from slōba, to mix up liquids in a slovenly way, to be careless (Riets). — Dan. slubber, 'to slap, to sup up.' Sewel. — Low G. slubbern, to lap, sup. From the base SLUP, equivalent to SLAP, to lick up; see SLABBER.

SLUG, to be inactive. (Scand.) 'To slug in slouth;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 23. M. E. slugge, Prompt. Parv.; where we also find slugge, adj., slothful; sluggy, adj., the same; slugghness, slugness, sloth. 'I slugge, I waxe slowe, or draw behind;' Palgrave. The verb is now obsolete. — Dan. slug, weakened form of slōk, appearing in slugret, slubret, with drooping ears; allied to Norweg. slōka, to go heavily, to slouch, Swed. slōka, to hang down, droop. Cf. Icel. slōkr, a slouching fellow; and see SLOUCH, SLACK. [The Du. slōk, a slug, a snail, is derived at once from the base SLAK.] Note also Low G. slubbern, slubbern, to be loose, slōbb, melancholy, downcast; from slōbb, slack, loose. Der. slugg-ish, Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 10; slugg-ish-ly, slugg-ish-ness. Also slugg-ard, Rich. III. v. 2. 215, with the F. suffix -ard (= O. H. G. -hart, cognate with E. hard); slugg-ard-ly, M. E. slugardis, Chaucer, C. T. 1044. Also slug, sb., a snail.

SLUICE, a sliding gate in a frame for shutting off, or letting out, water; a floodgate. (F., = L.) In Shak. Venus, 956; Lucrece, 1076. — O. F. sluice, 'a sluice, floodgate;' Cot. Cf. Span. sluice, a sluice, floodgate. — Low Lat. sluicium, a floodgate; lit. 'that off (water).'; — Lat. sluicium, fern. of sluicium, pp. of sluicere, to shut out; see EXCLUDE.

SLUMBER, to sleep lightly, repose. (E.) The ð (after m) is excrement. M. E. slumberen, Reliq. Antiquæ, i. 221 (Stratmann); slumberen, slumberen, P. Plowman, A. prol. 10, B. prol. 10. Frequentative form of M. E. slumen, to slumber, Layamon, 17995, 18408, 32058. And this verb is from the sb. slumen, slumber, spelt sloumen in Allit. Poems, C. 186. — A. S. sluma, sb., slumber; Grein, ii. 457. This is formed, with the substantival suffix -ma, from a base SLU, the meaning of which does not appear. — Du. slummen. — Dan. slumre, frequentative of slumen, to slumber. — Swed. slumra, verb; slummar, sb. — G. schlummern, verb; schlummer, sb. β. Probably connected with Lithuan. sumti (base sumd), to slumber, sumdis, a slumberer; Russ. no-videts, a slumberer, dreamer, no-vidimie, a dream. Der. slumber, sb., slumber-er, slumber-ous.

SLUR, to soil, contaminate, reproach, pass over lightly with slight notice. (Scand.) 'With periods, points, and tropes he slurs his crimes;' Dryden (in Todd). 'They impudently slur the gospel;' Cadworth, Sermons, p. 73 (Todd). 'Without some fingering track or slur;' Butler, Misc. Thoughts; Works, ed. Bell, iii. 176. M. E. slour, slour, mud, clay, Prompt. Parv.; whence sloury, muddly, id. Prov. E. slur, thin washy mud; Halliwell, Forby. The orig. sense is 'to trail,' or draggle; hence, to pass over in a sliding or slight way, also, to trail in dirt, to contaminate. = Icel. slóra, to trail, contracted form of slótra, to drag or trail oneself along; cf. slótra (for slóta), to trail, slótra, a gown that trails the ground, slótr, a track, trail (whence E. slot, a deer's track); see SLID (2). All derivatives from the Teut. base SLID, to slide, glide; see SLIDE. Cf. Fick, iii. 359. [Thus the key to this word is that a st or d has been dropped; it stands for slouter or sloder; cf. prov. E. slither, to slide, slodder, slush, wet mud.] So also Swed. dial. slóra, to be careless or negligent; Norweg. slóra, to sully, to be negligent, slóda, slór, a train, trail, slóda, sló, to trail, draggle. + Low G. slurra, contracted form of sludern, to hang loosely, to be lazy; slurrig, sluddrig, lazy. + O. Du. slouren, slouren, to drag, trail, slourigh, 'filthie or sluttish'; slodder, a sloven, slodde, a slut; Hexham. Der. slur, sb.

SLUT, a slovenly woman, slattern. (Scand.) M. E. slutte, Coventry Plays, 218 (Stratmann); and in Palgrave. 'Slutte, Cenona, Cenosa;' Prompt. Parv. Slutte occurs also in Occleve, Letter of Cupide, st. 34. Hence sluttish, Chaucer, C. T. 16104. = Icel. slútr, a heavy, loglike fellow; Swed. dial. slúta, an idle woman, slut, slútr, an idler; Norweg. slútt, an idler; Dan. slutte, a slut. = Icel. slota, to droop, Swed. dial. slota, to be lazy, Norweg. sluta, to droop; allied to Dan. slat, loose, flabby, also spelt slatten, slattis.

β. The Dan. forms slatta, slattis have a pp. suffix, such as can only come from a strong verb. This verb appears in Norweg. slatta (pt. t. slatt, pp. slatta), to dangle, hang loose like clothes, to drift, to idle about, be lazy (Aasen).

γ. A nasalised form of this verb appears again in Swed. dial. slánte (pp. slánt, pp. slántis), to slide, glide, slip aside, with its derivatives slanta, to be idle, and slant, 'a lubber, lazy sturdy fellow,' Widegren. These words are related to E. slant, sloping, which is a nasalised form from Teut. base SLID, to slide, as noted under SLANT, q. v. β. The notion of slipperiness or sliding about leads to that of clumsiness and sluttishness; of which there are numerous examples, as in E. slip-slod, &c. The corresponding Du. word keeps the d of the verb to slide; the word is slodde, 'a slut, or a careless woman,' allied to slodder, 'a careless man,' slodder-boom, 'large and wide hosen,' slodde, 'slippers;' Hexham. So also Icel. slófi, (1) a trail, (2) a sloven. And there is a most remarkable parallel in Irish and Gael. slodaire, a lazy person, sluggish, from the verb slod, to slide; as well as in Irish and Gael. slopair, slopair, a sloven, allied to Gael. slapach, trailing, drawing, slovenly, and to E. slip. ¶ Not allied to slatters, q. v. Der. sluttish, slutty, slut.

SLY, cunning, wily. (Scand.) M. E. slie, slie, slie, Chaucer, C. T. 3301; slay, Havelok, 1084; slak, Ormsleyn, 13498. = Icel. slagr (for slagr), sly, cunning. + Swed. slig. + Dan. slig, slu. + Low G. slou. + G. slou.

β. Cf. also Swed. slig, cunning, dexterous; also Icel. slagr, kicking, said of a horse who is ready to sing out or strike with his heels. The word is certainly from the Teut. base SLAH (SLAG), to strike; see SLAY. 'From the use of a hammer being taken as the type of a handicraft;' Wedgwood; and see Fick, iii. 358, who adduces G. verochlagen, cunning, crafty, subtle, sly, from the same root. Der. slily, sliness. Also slight (i. e. slie-sl), q. v.

SMACK (1), taste, flavour, savour. (E.) M. E. smab, a taste; Prompt. Parv. = A. S. smas, taste; Grein, ii. 457; whence the verb smegan, smecan, to taste. 'Gusto, is gasmega;' Wright's Vocab. l. 17, col. 2. + O. Du. smasch, 'tast, smack, or savour;' whence smasche, 'to savour,' Hexham; Du. smasch, to taste. + Dan. smag, taste; smaga, to taste. + Swed. smas, taste; smas, to taste. + G. gasmach, taste; schmarcken, to taste. β. All from a base SMAK, signifying 'taste'; remoter origin unknown. We may note the remarkable A. S. smas, taste, Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 550, l. 11; which seems to be a parallel form.

γ. Wedgwood says of smack that it is 'a syllable directly representing the sound made by the sudden collision or separation of two soft surfaces, as a blow with the flat hand, the sudden separation of the lips in kissing, or of the tongue and palate in tasting.' The cognate languages, however, keep the words for smack, a taste, and smash, a blow, remarkably distinct; as shown under SMACK (2). I conclude that the above illustration is not borne out by the forms actually found.

SMACK (2), a sounding blow. (E. 7) We find smack, sb., a loud kiss, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 180. But the word does not seem to be at all old, and its supposed connection with SMACK (1) is disproved by the forms found. It has been confused with it, but is quite distinct. It seems to be of imitative origin, and may be an E. word, unless borrowed from Scandinavian.

β. The related words are Swed. smaska, to smack (distinct from smaka, to taste); Swed. dial. smakka, to throw down noisily, smakka, a light quick blow with the flat hand, smakka, to hit smartly; Dan. smakke, to slam, bang (distinct from smage, to taste), smak, a smack, rap (distinct from smag, taste). Also Low G. smakken, to smack the lips (distinct from smakken, to taste); O. Du. smaschen, Du. smakken, to cast on the ground, fling, throw (distinct from Du. smaken, to taste); Du. smak, a loud noise. Also G. schmatzen, to smack, to fell (a tree), as distinct from schmucken, to taste. And see SMASH.

γ. We are certainly not justified in connecting the two senses of smack, when we observe what pains are taken in other languages to keep the forms separate. Cf. smack, crack. Der. smack, verb; smack-er, q. v., smak, q. v.

SMACK (3), a fishing-boat. (Du.) In Sewel's Du. Dict. Doubtless borrowed from Dutch, like boy, shipper, boom, yacht, &c. = O. Du. smacke, 'a kind of a long ship or boate,' Hexham; smak, 'a boy, smack,' Sewel, ed. 1754. + Dan. smakke, a smack. β. Generally supposed to be a corruption for smak, allied to smake; cf. A. S. smas, a smack, small vessel, A. S. Chron. an. 1066, in the Land MS., ed. Thorpe, p. 337; Icel. smakke, a kind of sailing-ship, so called from its smakke-like movement in the water. The Dan. smakke means (1) a small, (2) a vessel or smack; from the verb represented in E. by smak; see SMACK, SMACK. ¶ For the interchange of sm- and sn-, see SMATTER.

SMALL, little, unimportant. (E.) M. E. smal; pl. smale, Chaucer, C. T. 9. = A. S. smal, small, thin; Grein, ii. 457. + Du., Dan., and Swed. smal, narrow, thin. + Goth. smala, small. + G. schmal, narrow, thin, slim. β. All from Teut. base SMALA, small, Fick, iii. 357; closely related to which is the base SMÅHA, small (id. 356), appearing in Icel. smadr, Dan. smas, Swed. smal, O. H. G. smas, small. γ. Perhaps further related to Gk. σμῆλη, small, Lat. maser, lean, thin, for which a base SMAK, small, has been assumed. Der. small-ness; small-pan (see POX); small-eye, q. v.

SMALLAGE, celery. (Hybrid; E. and F. = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Smallage, a former name of the celery, meaning the small arke or parsley, as compared with the great parsley, olus atrum. See Turner's Nomenclator, A. D. 1548; and Gerard's Herbal; Prior, Popular Names of British Plants. M. E. smalege, Wright's Vocab. l. 225, note 6. = A. S. smal, small (see above); and F. ache, parsley, from Lat. apium, parsley.

SMALT, glass tined of a deep blue, used as a pigment. (Ital. = O. H. G.) 'Smalt, a kind of blew powder-colour, us'd in painting; blue enamel;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in Bouquet's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Ital. smalto, 'smelt (enamel) for goldsmiths;' Florio. = O. H. G. smaltzan, M. H. G. smaltzen, to smelt; cognate with E. SMALT, q. v. ¶ The Du. smalt (in the present sense) is borrowed from Italian.

SMARAGDUS, a precious stone, emerald. (L. = Gk.) Also smaragd; M. E. smaragde, An O. E. Miscellany, p. 98, l. 174. = Lat. smaragdus. = Gk. σμάργδον, an emerald. See EMERALD, Doublet, emerald.

SMART, to feel a pain, to be punished. (E.) M. E. smerten, Havelok, 2647; spelt smerten, Ancren Riwe, p. 238, last line. Once a strong verb; the pt. t. smert occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 27, l. 27. = A. S. smertan (Somner); this word is unauthorised, but is clearly the correct form; the old strong pt. t. shows that the word is almost certainly A. S. The A. S. pt. t. would be *smert, and the pp. *smerten + Du. smerten, to give pain; smart, pain. + Dan. smerte, vb. and sb. + Swed. smärtis, vb. and sb. + O. H. G. smertan, sometimes used as a strong verb (pt. t. smartz), G. schmerzen, to smart; O. H. G. smertan, G. schmerz, smart, pain. + Lat. martens (with lost initial s), to bite, pain, sting. + Skt. mr̥id (for smard), to rub, grind, crush. β. All from SMARD, to pain; see Fick, i. 836. But Fick (l. 175) excepts the Lat. and Skt. forms, which he refers to MARD, extension of MAR, to grind, pound. In any case, the form of the root of the present word is SMARD, as above; the Latin word seems more closely connected in sense than is the Skt. one. See MORDACITY. Der. smart, sb., M. E. smerte, Chaucer, C. T. 3811; also smart, adj., M. E. smerte, i. e. painful, Havelok, 2055. The use of the adjective has been extended to mean pungent, brisk, acute, lively, witty. Hence smart-ly, smart-ness.

SMASH, to crush, break in pieces. (Scand.) A late word, added by Todd to Johnson. According to Webster, it is used by Burke. It is well known in the North (see Brockett and Jamieson), and is clearly a dialectal word adopted into more polite speech. Like many Northern words, it is of Scand. origin. = Swed. dial. smashe, which Riets explains by smälthysa, meaning to kiss with a sounding smack; smas, a slight explosion, crack, report. Closely allied to smish, to slap, occurring in the very sense of 'to smash glass' or to smash a window-pane, which is the commonest use of the word in ordinary E. conversation. We also find Swed. dial smäts, to throw down smack, i. e. with a sounding blow, smäts, to slap, strike quickly and lightly, smäts, to slap down anything soft so as to make a noise. Also Low G. smätsen, smätsen, to smack with the lips, to kiss with a sounding smack.

β. It is thus clear that smäts stands for smäts (by the common interchange of sh and ts, as in as = ash); and smäts is formed, by the addition of s (with transitive sense, as in clous-er, to make clean), from the base SMAK, meaning a smack or slight report; hence smäts (= smäts-s) is to make a smack, cause a report, produce the sound of breaking, as in 'to smack a window.'

γ. This solution, considered doubtful by E. Müller, is quite satisfactory. Other solutions have no value, nor even any plausibility. The best of them is the supposition that smäts is produced (by some mysterious prefixing of s, which is explaining as having an intensive force) from smäts; but smäts means to mix up, and no one has ever yet heard of 'mixing a window!' On the other hand, the saying that a ball was thrown 'smäts (or smäts) through a window' is sufficiently common. And cf. G. schmetzen, to fell a tree; from schmetz, a smack.

SMATTERING, a superficial knowledge. (Scand.) From the old verb to smatter, to have a slight knowledge of; or the orig. sense was, perhaps, 'to prate.' 'I smatter of a thyng, I have lytell knowlege in it;' Palsgrave. 'For I abhorre to smatter Of one so deavilysh a matter;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 711. M. E. smatteren, to make a noise; Songs and Carols, ed. Wright, no. lxviii (Stratmann). — Swed. smattra, to clatter, to crackle. A mere variant of Swed. smattra, to chatter, cognate with Dan. smadde, to jabber, chatter, G. schmettern, to cackle, chatter, prattle.

β. Again, the Swed. smattra (for smäts) is a weakened frequentative form of smäts, to chat, prate; cognate with which are Dan. smäts, to chat, prate, and G. schmetzen, to prate; note further the substantives, viz. Swed. smäts, chat, talk, Dan. smäts, twaddle, G. schmetz, chit-chat. And further, cf. Swed. smäts, to smack (make a noise), to croak; Dan. smäts, smäts, to gnash, or smack with the lips in eating. γ. Hence smatter (or smatter) is a frequentative verb from a base SMAK, SNAK, denoting a smacking noise with the lips, hence, a gabbling, prating. See SMACK (2). ¶ For the interchange of sm- and sm-, see SMACK (3).

SMEAR, to daub with something greasy or sticky. (E.) M. E. smearen, smearen, Ormulum, 994; also smearen; also smearien, Ancren Riwle, p. 372, l. 6. — A. S. smearan, Pk. xlv. 9; smearian, Mark, xvi. 1. A weak verb, from the sb. smeara, fat, Levit. viii. 25, whence M. E. smear, fat, fitness, Genesis and Exodus, 1573. † Du. smearen, to grease; from smear, fat, † Icel. smeyra, to anoint; from smjör, smjör, grease. † Dan. smøre; from smör, sb. † Swed. smörja; from smör, sb. † G. schmieren; from schmier, sb. β. The general Teut. form of the sb. is SMERWA, fat, grease; Fick, iii. 356; allied to which are Goth. smairth, fatness, smalra, dung. All from a base SMAR; cf. Lithan. smearas, fat, smala, tar; Gk. psipos, an unguent, psipos, emery for polishing.

γ. The base seems to be SMA, to rub, as seen in Gk. σπάω, σμπύω, to smear, rub, wipe. Der. smear, sb., at present signifying the result of smearing, and a derivative of the verb; not in the old sense of 'grease.' And see SMIR-CH, SMELT (1).

SMELLY, an odour. (E.) M. E. smel, Chaucer, C. T. 2429; Ancren Riwle, p. 104, l. 16; also smul, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 99, l. 1. Not found in A. S., but prob. a true Eng. word. Allied to Du. smullen, 'to smoke hiddenly,' i. e. to smoulder; Low G. smelen, to smoulder. β. The idea is evidently taken from the suffocating vapour given off by smouldering wood; the l, as usual, stands for an older r, and we find a more original word is A. S. smoran or smorion, to suffocate, whence the pt. pl. smoradum, Matt. xiii. 9 (Rushworth MS.). See further under SMOULDER and SMOTHER. Der. smell, verb, M. E. smellen, Chaucer, C. T. 3691; smellen, O. Eng. Hom. ii. 35, l. 2.

SMELT (1), to fuse ore. (Scand.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; but not noticed by Skinner, ed. 1671. I have little doubt that the word is really Swedish, as Sweden was the chief place for smelting iron ore, and a great deal of iron is still found there; (cf. SLAG). — Dan. smelte, to fuse, smelt; Swed. smälta, to smelt, run, liquefy; smältna smältna, to smelt ore; Widegren. † O. Du. smiltten, smiltten, 'to melt, mollify, make liquid, or to found;' Hexham. Note here the use of found where we should now say smelt. † G. schmelzen, O. H. G. smeltzan, to smelt.

β. All these are secondary or weak verbs, connected with an older strong verb appearing in the Swed. smälta, to melt, i. e. to become liquid, for which Rietz gives the pt. t. smälte and supine smältit, and cites O. Swed. smälte (pt. t. smält, pp. smältin). It also appears in G. schmelzen (pt. t. schmolz), to melt, dissolve, become liquid.

γ. The orig. sense of this base SMALT was 'to become oily' or 'become soft, like butter or fat, as shown by O. Du. smelt, 'grease or melted butter;' smälts, smältsch, 'liquid, soft, or fatt' (Hexham); O. H. G. smaltz, fat, grease (G. schmalz). Further, this O. H. G. smaltz may be compared with Lithuan. smarzas, fat, Goth. smairth, fat, and other words discussed under SMARZ, of which the orig. sense was 'to anoint with fat,' or rub over with grease.

β. Thus SMALT is for SMART (Aryan SMARD), formed as an extension from SMAR, grease; for which see SMARZ; Fick, iii. 836. α. We may also compare Gk. μάζωρα, to become liquid. But the connection with smelt is by no means so certain as might appear. It is common to call smelt a 'strengthened' form of smel, made by prefixing s, though there is no reason why s should be prefixed; if the connection is real, it may well be because smelt was the older form, and s was dropped. In that case the q/MAR, to pound (whence E. smelt), is to be referred to q/SMA, to rub (whence E. smelt), as the more original form. Der. smelt, q. v.; smoked, q. v. And see SMELT (2).

SMELT (2), a kind of fish. (E.) M. E. smelt, Prompt. Parv. = A. S. smelt, 'Sardina, smelt,' in a list of fish; Wright's Voc. i. 281, col. 2. † Dan. smelt. † Norweg. smelta (1), a mass, lump; (2) the name of various kinds of small fish, as Gadus minutus, also a small whiting.

β. The name prob. means 'smooth;' cf. A. S. smelt, smilt, serene, smooth (of the sea), orig. liquid; from the verb to smelt; see SMELT (1). ¶ Webster says: 'from the peculiar smelt;' with this cf. the scientific name Osmorus (Gk. ὀσμορος, fragrant). This I believe to be simply impossible, though this imaginary 'etymology' may have originated the 'scientific' name. We have yet to find the verb to smelt in A. S.; and we must explain the t.

SMILE, to laugh slightly, express joy by the countenance. (Scand.) M. E. smilen, Chaucer, C. T. 4044; Will. of Palerne, 991. Not a very old word in E. — Swed. smile, to smirk, smile, fawn, simper; Dan. smile. † M. H. G. smelen, smieren, smieren, to smile. † Lat. smere, to wonder at; smere, wonderful.

β. All from the base SMIR, an extension from q/SMI, to smile; cf. Skt. smi, to smile; Fick, iii. 836, 837. See MIRACLE, ADMIRE, SMIRK. Der. smil-or, Chaucer, C. T. 2001; smile, sb., St. Brandan, 4 (Stratmann); see SMIR-CH.

SMIRCH, to besmear, dirty. (E.) 'And with a kind of amber smirch my face;' As You Like It, i. 3, 114. Allied to the old word smere. 'I smere ones face with any grease or soote [soot], or such lyke, Is barbotills;' Palsgrave. And since smere is another form of smear, it is clear that smirch (weakened form of smar-č) is an extension from M. E. smere, to smear; see SMEAR.

SMIRK, to smile affectedly, smile, simper. M. E. smirken; St. Katharine, 256. — A. S. smearian, Ælfred, v. of Boethius, cap. xxv. § 12 (lib. iii. pr. 11). Cf. M. H. G. smieren, smieren, to smile; shewing that A. S. smearian is from the base SMIR-K, extended from SMIR, whence E. smile. See SMILE, sb.; also obsolete adj. smirk, trim, neat, Spenser, Shep. Kal., Feb. l. 72.

SMITE, to strike, beat, kill. (E.) M. E. smiten, pt. t. smot, smot, pp. smiten. The pt. t. is spelt smot, Wyclif, Luke, xiii. 50; with pl. smytan (= smitten), id. xxiii. 48. — A. S. smitan, pt. t. smiðt, pp. smiten; Grein, ii. 458. † Du. smieten. † Swed. smida, to forge. † Dan. smide, to fling. † G. schmerzen, to smite, fling, cast; O. H. G. smizen, to throw, to stroke, to smear. Cf. Goth. bismitan, to anoint, besmear, John, ix. 11.

β. The orig. sense would appear to be 'to rub' or smear over, a sense which actually appears in the O. H. G. and Gothic; and even in A. S. this sense is not unknown; note also O. Swed. smita, to smite, smitta, to smear (Ihre), smel smita, to steam from being fat or oiled; and see further under SMELT. The connection between 'to rub' and 'to smite' is curious, but the latter sense is a satirical use of the former; we had the phrase 'to rub down with an oaken smel,' i. e. to cudgel; and, in the Romance of Partenay, l. 5653, a certain king is said to have been 'so well smoynted' that he had not a whole pece of clothing left upon him; the orig. French text says that he was bien eingt. γ. Curtius connects the O. H. G. smiltan with Skt. smida, fat, from mid, to beunctuous, from a q/SMID; l. 420. Cf. E. smear, q. v. Der. smite-or.

β. All from the Teut. base SMITHA, a smith; Fick, iii. 357. It is usual to explain this (after the method of Horne Tooke, which is known to be wrong) as he that smites, from 'the sturdy blows that he smites upon the anvil;' Trench, Study of Words. But there is no support for this notion to be had from comparative philology; we might as well connect brith with brin, as far as phonetic laws are concerned. γ. The most that can be said is that smu-č and smu-č may be from a common base, with the notion of rubbing smooth. But the word with which smith has a real and close connection is the word smoat; see SMOOTH. Der. smið-γ, M. E. smiðe, Ancren Riwle, p. 264, l. 24, A. S. smiðe, Wright's Vocab. l. 24, col. 2; Icel. smiðja. Also gold-smið, silver-smið; &c.

SMOCK, a shirt for a woman. (E.) M. E. smok, Chaucer, C. T. 3238. — A. S. smoc. 'Colobium, smoc vel gyr' [sark]; Wright's Voc. l. 25, col. 2. Put for smag or smog; and so called because 'crept into'; from smagan, pp. of the strong verb smagan, smagan, occurring in Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xiv. § 1 (lib. iii. pr. 2). Cf. Shetland smak, 'to draw on, as a glove or a stocking'; Edmondston. † Icel. smakr, a smock; from smagan, pp. of smaga, 'to creep through a hole, to put on a garment which has only a round hole to put the head through.' Cf. O. Swed. smog, a round hole for the head; Ithra. Also Icel. smugga, to slip off one's neck, causal of smaga. See further under Smug and Smuggle.

SMOKE, vapour from a burning body, esp. wood or coal. (E.) M. E. smoke, Chaucer, C. T. 5860. — A. S. smoec (rare). 'Pons wlacon smoecan wices flaces' — the warm smoke of weak flax; Be Domes Daye, ed. Lamb, l. 51. — A. S. smoo-, stem of smocon, pp. of strong verb smocon (pt. t. smode), to smoke, reek, Matt. xii. 30. Hence also the various forms of the sb., such as smode, smofe; the latter occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 302, l. 4 from bottom. The secondary verb smoegan (derived from the sb. smoec) occurs on the same page, l. 24. † Du. smak, sb. † Dan. smage, weak verb, to smoke. † G. schmuck, smoke. † All from a Teut. base SMUK. If the Gk. σμύξω, to burn slowly in a smouldering fire, be a related word, the common Aryan root would take the form SMU (see Smother); cf. Irish smuid, vapour, smoke, smuch, smoke, W. smog, smoke, and perhaps Lithuan. smuigi, to choke. Der. smoke, vb., A. S. smoegan, as above; smok-er, smok-y, smok-i-ness.

SMOOTH, having an even surface. (E.) M. E. smoote, Rom. of the Rose, 542; also common in the form smete (due to vowel-change from o to e (= o)). Rob. of Glouc. p. 424, l. 20, Pricke of Conscience, 6249. — A. S. smiða, Lake, iii. 5, where the Northumb. versions have smoðe; cf. 'Aspera, smoðe,' Wright's Voc. ii. 7, col. 1. The preservation of the (older) vowel o in mod. E. is remarkable. † Related to O. Du. smidga, smidga, 'handicraft, or soft' (Hexham), Du. smidig, malleable, G. geschmiedig, malleable, ductile, smooth; and hence clearly connected with E. smith. Cf. Low G. smide, a smithy, smid, a smith, smiden, to forge; Dan. smid, a smith, smide, to forge, smidig, pliable, supple. † The connection between the o of smoote and the i of smith is difficult to follow; but may be accounted for by the supposition that there was once a lost strong verb which in Gothic would have taken the form smiðan°, to forge, with pt. t. smið°, and pp. smiðan°, corresponding to which would have been an A. S. smiðan°, to forge (pt. t. smið°, pp. smiðan°). We could then deduce smoote from the A. S. pt. t. smið, and smith from the pp. smiðan.

8. Now this lost verb is actually still found in Swedish dialects; Riets gives the normal form as smide, with pt. t. smid, pp. smiden; and another trace of it occurs in Icel. smið, smith's work, as noted in the Icel. Dict. Thus the orig. sense of smoote is forged, or flattened with the hammer. Der. smooth, verb, answering to A. S. smiðan, Wright's Voc. l. 22, col. 2; smooth-ly; smooth-ness, A. S. smiðra, Wright's Voc. l. 53, col. 2.

SMOTHER, a suffocating smoke, thick stifling dust. (E.) Smother stands for smother, having lost an r, which was retained even in the 14th century. M. E. smother; spelt smoþre, smoþur, P. Plowman, C. xx. 303, 305 (some MSS. have smolder, id. B. xvii. 321). Smother is 'that which stifles'; formed, with the suffix -thor (Aryan -tar) of the agent, from A. S. smorian, to choke, stifle, Matt. xiii. 7 (Rushworth MS.), preserved in Lowland Sc. smoor, to stifle; see Burns, Brigs of Ayr, l. 33. † Cognate with A. S. smorian are Du. smoeren, to suffocate, stifle, stew, and G. schmoren, to stew. Cf. O. Du. smoor, 'smoother, vapour, or fume' (Hexham); which is the sb. from which Du. smoeren is derived. Similarly the A. S. weak verb smorian must be referred to a sb. smor°, vapour; cf. Dan. smud, dust. † Smother is certainly related to smolder and smell; we may conjecture an Aryan root SMU, with the sense perhaps of 'stifle'; this would also account for smo-ly; see Smoke. Der. smother, verb, M. E. smotheren, O. Eng. Homilies, l. 251, l. 7. And see smolder.

SMOLDER, to burn with a stifling smoke. (E.) 'I smolder, as wete wood doth; I smolder we, or I stoppe his brethe with smoke;' Palgrave. M. E. smolderen, Allit. Poems, B. 95; from the sb. smolder, a stifling smoke. 'Smoke and smolder,' P. Plowman, B. xvii. 321; where the later text has 'smoke and smorþer' (= E. smother), id. C. xx. 303; and see Palladius on Husbandry, l. 929. † The M. E. smolder and smother are, in fact, merely two spellings of the same word, and could therefore be used convertibly. The change of r into l is very common, and the further change of smother into smolder followed at the same time, to make the word pronounceable. † [The Dan. smuldr, to crumble, smolder, from sm-ol, dust, may be ultimately related, but is not the original of the E. word, being too remote in sense.] The E. smolder is closely connected with Low G. smiden, smiden, to smoulder, as in dat holt smelet weg = the wood smoulders away (Bremen Wörterbuch);

Du. smelden, 'to smok hiddenly,' Sewel. See Smell. 8. The interchange of r and l may be curiously illustrated from Dutch. Thus, where Hexham gives smool, with the senses (1) sultry, (2) drunk, Sewel gives smoorheat, excessively hot, and smoordrank, excessively drunk; this links smool with smoor, and both of them with Du. smoeren, to stifle.

SMUG, neat, trim, spruce. (Scand.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 40; &c. 'I could have brought a noble regiment Of smug-skinned Nunnas into my countrey soyle;' Gascoigne, Voyage into Holland, A. D. 1572; Works, l. 393. Spelt smoog, Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 474; ed. Arber, p. 59. A weakened form of smuk. — Dan. smuk, pretty, fine, fair, as in det smukke hæn = the fair sex; O. Swed. smuck, elegant, fine, fair, also spelt smuck (Ihre). Hence Swed. smucka, to adorn (by vowel-change from u to y). † Low G. smuk, neat, trim. † G. schmuck, trim, spruce; cf. schmuck, sb., ornament, schmucken, to adorn. † The M. H. G. smuchen or smuchen meant not only to clothe, adorn, but also to withdraw oneself into a place of security, and is said to be a derivative from the older strong verb smiegen, to creep into (G. schmiegen, to wind, bend, ply, cling to); see Wackernagel. This M. H. G. smiegen is cognate with A. S. smigan, smigan, to creep. † This links smug with smok, which shews the opposite change from g to k, as shewn under that word. A smuck, orig. so named from the hole for the neck into which one smuck, became a general term for dress, clothes, or attire, as in the case of G. schmuck, attire, dress, ornament, adornment, &c.; and smug is merely the corresponding adjective, meaning 'dressed,' hence spruce, neat, &c. See further under Smock and Smuggler.

SMUGGLE, to import or export secretly, without paying legal duty. (Scand.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives the phrase 'to smuggle goods.' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, has: 'Smugglers, stealers of customs, well known upon the Thames.' Sewel's Du. Dict., ed. 1749, gives: 'Smug, to smuckle; smucker, a smuckler.' The word is not Dutch, the Du. smokkelen, to smuggle, being modern, and unnoticed by Sewel and Hexham. It is, however, plainly a sailor's word, and of Scand. origin. — Dan. smugle, to smuggle; a frequentative form (with usual suffix -le) from the old strong verb found in Norweg. smugga (pt. t. smugg), to creep; whence also Dan. i smug, adv., secretly, privately, and smughandel, contraband trade. Closely allied to Dan. smuga, a narrow (secret) passage, Swed. smuga, a lurking-hole, Icel. smuga, a hole to creep through, smuggill, penetrating, smuggillir, penetrating. † All from the strong verb found in Icel. smugga (pt. t. smugg, pl. smuggu, pp. smuggun), to creep, creep through a hole, put on a garment which has only a round hole to put the head through; cf. Swed. smugga, to sneak, to smuggle. Cognate with A. S. smoegan, smigan, to creep (pt. t. smoeg, pl. smoegu, pp. smoegu); M. H. G. smiegen, strong verb, to press into (Fick, iii. 357); all from Teut. base SMUG, to creep. Cf. Lithuan. smukti, to glide, i-smukti, to creep into. Der. smuggler; see smock, smug.

SMUT, a spot of dirt, esp. of soot. (Scand.) Not a very old word; formerly smutch (really a corruption of smutte), which is therefore more correct. 'Smutche on ones face, barboylment;' Palgrave. 'Haat smutched thy nose;' Winter's Tale, l. 2. 121. — Swed. smut, smut, dirt, filth, soil; whence smutta, verb, to dirt, to sully. † Dan. smuds, filth; whence smuds, to soil, dirty, sully. The Dan. form accounts for E. smudge, to smear, to soil (Halliwell), and for M. E. smoge, with the same sense (id.) † G. schmutz, smut; whence schmutzen, to smudge. † The Swed. smut-s is formed with suffix -s (= Aryan -as, Schleicher, Compend. § 230) from the base which appears in E. as the verb to smite. From the same source are Swed. smet, grease, filth, smeta, to bedaub, smetta, contagion, smitta, to infect; Dan. smitte, contagion; Icel. smetta, fat steam, as if from cooking, smita, to steam from being fat or oiled. Also Du. smuttig, smutty, smutson, to smudge. † We have the same idea in M. E. smotterlich, which I explain as 'wanton,' like prov. E. smutty, Chaucer, C. T. 5961; and in M. E. besmotted, i. e. smutted, dirtied, id. 76. Also in A. S. smittian, to spot, Wright's Voc. ii. 121, besmittian, to pollute, defile, Mark, vii. 15, derivatives of smitan, to smite, hence, to infect; cf. Shakespeare's use of strike, Cor. iv. 1. 13. See Smite. Der. smut, verb; smut-y, smut-i-ly, smut-i-ness.

SNAFFLE, a bridle with a piece confining the nose, and with a slender mouth-piece. (Du.) 'A bitte or a snaffle;' Baret (1580). Short for snaffle-piece = nose-piece. 'With a snaffle and a bridle;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1366 (R.). And in Shak. Antony, ii. 3. 63. 'A snaffle, Camus; to snaffle, rudere;' Levens. — Du. snaffel, a horse's muzzle; O. Du. snafel, snaffel, 'the nose or snout of a beast or a fish;' Hexham. Dimin. of O. Du. snabbe, snabbe, 'the bill or beak of a bird;' id. The lit. sense of snabbe is 'snapper;' it is a weakened form of snapp-s (with suffix -s of the agent), from O. Du. snappen, 'to map up, or to intercept; id. See SNAP. † G. schabel, bill, snout; dimin. of schappe, a vulgar term for mouth; from schoppen, vb.

SNAG, an abrupt projection, as on a tree where a branch has been cut off, a short branch, knot, projecting tooth. (C.) 'Which with a staffe, all full of little snags;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 11. 33; cf. iv. 7. 7. [The word snag, which has much the same sense, is of Celtic origin; see KNAG.] Snag is a sb. from the prov. E. verb snag, to trim, to cut off the twigs and small branches from a tree; the tool used (a kind of bill-hook) is called a snagger; hence also the Kentish snaggle, to nibble (Halliwell). = Gael. snagair, to carve or whittle away wood with a knife, snagha, to hew, cut down, reduce wood into shape, trim; Irish snagha, a hewing, cutting. Cf. also Gael. snag, a little audible knock; Irish snag, a wood-pecker. Thus the lit. sense of the verb to snag is to chip or cut away gradually, to trim, to prune. Hence also Icel. snagi, a clothes-peg.

SNAIL, a slimy creeping insect. (E.) M. E. snayle, Prompt. Parv. The i (y) is due to an earlier g, precisely as in snail (1), snail. = A. S. snagol, snagol; Wright's Voc. i. 24. l. 4; l. 78, col. 2. Snagol (= snag-ol) is a weakened dative form, with g for s, from A. S. snara, a snake, a creeping thing; see SNAKA. The lit. sense is 'a small creeping thing,' or little reptile. Cf. M. E. snogge (prov. E. snag), a snail, Aye-bite of Lwynt, p. 31; and G. schnecke, a snail, Swed. snicka. † Icel. snigill, a snail. † Dan. snegl.

SNAKE, a kind of serpent. (E.) The lit. sense is 'a creeping thing,' which is also the sense of serpens and of reptilis. M. E. snake, Wyclif, Rom. iii. 13. = A. S. snaca, to translate Lat. scorpio, Luke, x. 19. The sense is 'creeper,' but the corresponding A. S. verb is only found in the form snacan, with a supposed pt. t. *snac, pp. *snacen; see SNACK, which is the mod. E. form. Perhaps the former s of the A. S. word was orig. long, as in Icelandic. † Icel. snakr; also snakr. † Dan. snag. † Swed. snak. And cf. Skt. śaga, a serpent; Schmidt, Vocalismus, ii. 472. Der. snak.

SNAP, to bite suddenly, snatch up. (Du.) In Shak. Much Ado, v. 1. 116. 'A snapper-up of unconsidered trifles;' Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 26. 'I snapps at a thing to catche it with my tethe;' Palgrave. Not an old word. = Du. snappen, to snap, snatch; 'to snap up, or to intercept;' Hexham. † Dan. snappa; Swed. snappa, to snatch away. † G. schnappen, M. H. G. snaben, to snap, snatch. β. All from Teut. base SNAP, to snatch, parallel to SNAK; see SNATCH.

Der. snapp-ich, i. e. ready to bite or snap; snapp-ich-ly, ness. Also snapp-dragon, a plant, so called because the lips of the corolla, when parted, snap together like a dragon's mouth; also a game in which raisins are snapped out of a flame, as if from a fiery dragon. Also snapp-hance, a fire-lock (Nares), from Du. snaphaan, a fire-lock, O. Du. snaphaan, 'a robber that snaps upon one in the highway, or a snaphance' (Hexham); from Du. snappen, to snap, and haas, a cock, also a cock of a gun, allied to E. hon, q. v. Also snapp-le, q. v. And see snip.

It may be added that there may have been an old strong verb snip, pt. t. snip; Riets, indeed, gives such a verb as still found in Swed. dialects, viz. inf. snippa, pt. t. snipp, old pp. snippet, with the sense to snap, to snatch. This at once accounts for E. snip; also for snub (weakened form of snip); also for snuff (2), to snap or snip off the end of the wick of a candle. Parallel to this is the base SNAK, to gasp, hence to snatch; here also we find O. Du. snack or snack, a gasp (Hexham), and Low G. snakken, to sob. Yet again, we not only have E. snuff, but also E. snuff (1), besides Swed. snuffa, to snuffle. We thus recognise (1) the base SNAP, to bite at quickly (variants snip, snip); (2) the base SNAK, to gasp, snatch at (variants snik, snub); and (3) the base SNAP, to inhale breath (variants snif, snuff). All perhaps from the same orig. root.

SNARE, a noose, trap. (E.) Properly a noose, a trap formed with a looped string. 'Hanged himself with a snare;' Wyclif, Matt. xxvii. 5. = A. S. snara, a cord, string; Grein, ii. 459. † Du. snare, a string. † Icel. snara, a snare, halter. † Dan. snare. † Swed. snara. † O. H. G. snaraha, a noose; cited by Fick, iii. 350, Curtius, i. 392.

β. From the Teut. type SNARHA (the a being preserved in O. H. G.); and this is from the Teut. strong verb SNARH, appearing in M. H. G. snarhen, to bind tightly, cited by Fick, and in Icel. snara, to turn quickly, twist, wring (though this is a weak verb). We may also note G. schnar, a lace, string, line, cord, which is prob. an allied word; so also Icel. snari, a twisted rope. γ. The Teut. SNARH answers to Aryan SNARK, to draw together, contract, whence Gk. σπασμα, cramp, numbness; see NARCOSUS. δ. The Aryan SNARK is an extension from SNAR, to twist, wind; whence Lithuan. nar-iti, to thread a needle, draw into a chain, Lat. nar-ua, a sinew, nerve; see NERVE. ε. And we may further note the O. Irish snáthe, thread, cited in Curtius, i. 393; this suggests that the SNAR, to twist, wind, is related to SNA, to wind, spin, whence Lat. na-ere, to spin. Cf. Skt. snāda, snāya, snāva, a tendon, snew. Der. snare, verb, Temp. ii. s. 174. M. E. snarm, Prompt. Parv.; snar-er, sn-snare. Also (obsolete) snar-d, a noose, Trevisa, ii. 385.

SNARL, to growl as a surly dog. (E.?) In Shak. K. John, iv. 3. 150. The -l is a frequentative suffix; the sense is 'to keep on snarling.' 'I snarre, as a dogge doth under a door when he sheweth his tethe;' Palgrave; spelt snar, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 12. 27. Of O. Low G. origin; perhaps E., though not found in A. S. = O. Du. snarvan, 'to brawl, to scold, or to snarl;' Hexham. † G. schnarren, to rattle the letter R, to snarl, speak in the throat. Cf. also Icel. snargla, to rattle in the throat; snargl (pronounced snarl), a rattling sound in the throat. Evidently related to SNAR, SNORE, SNORT, which see. ¶ Evidently also a parallel form to GNARL.

SNATCH, to seize quickly, snap up. (E.) M. E. snachen, All-vauder, ed. Stevenson, 6559 (Stratmann); spelt snachen, Ancrum Riwe, p. 324, l. 27. Snachen is a weakened form of snakhen, and may be considered as an E. word, though not found in A. S. The h is preserved in the sb. snatch, a portion, lit. a snatch or thing snatched up; Lowland Scotch snab, a snatch made by a dog at a hart, a snap of the jaws, Douglas, tr. of Virgil, xii. 754 (Lat. text). 'Snab, a share; as, to go snab with one;' Phillips, ed. 1706. † Du. snakken, to gasp, desire, long, aspire; 'de Visk snakt na het water, the fish gasps for water;' Hexham. The Low G. snakken, prov. G. schnakken, to chatter, is the same word in a different application; cf. also G. schmatern, to cackle, chatter. β. All from a Teut. base SNAK, to catch at with the mouth, move the jaws, parallel to SNAP (as in E. snag) and to SNAT (as in G. schmatern, to chatter). These bases are all imitative, with the notion of a movement of the jaws. Der. snatch, sb.; body-snatcher. Also snab, sb., as above. Also prov. E. snab, the 'snap' or latch of a door. ¶ See remarks on SNAP.

SNEAK, to creep or steal away sily, to behave meanly. (E.) In Shak. Troil. i. 2. 246. M. E. sniken. 'Snabst in ant ut neddran' = adds creep in and out; O. Eng. Homilies, l. 251. The mod. E. word has kept the orig. sound of the A. S. l = A. S. snican, to creep; Grein, ii. 459. Supposed to be a strong verb (pt. t. *snic, pp. *snicen); the Icel. pp. snakinn occurs, from an obsolete verb, with the sense of covetous, hankering after. We also find Icel. snika (weak verb), to hanker after, to beg for food silently, as a dog does; Dan. snige sig, to sneak, slink. Also Swed. dual sniga, to creep, strong verb (pt. t. snig); snika, to hanker after, strong verb (pt. t. snik). β. All from a Teut. base SNIK, to creep; cf. Irish and Gael. snigh, snig, to creep, crawl, sneak. Der. snak, q. v., snail, q. v.

SNEER, to express contempt. (Scand.) 'Snear, to laugh foolishly or scornfully;' Phillips, ed. 1706; prov. E. snearing-match, a grinning match (Forby). Rare. M. E. snearn, to deride. 'Jai snarad me with snearing swa, Bot gnastid over me with thaire tethe tha' = they derided me so with sneering, also they gnashed upon me with their teeth; Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson (Sarthe Soc.), Ps. xxiv. 16; and see Ps. ii. 4. = Dan. snearre, to grin like a dog; Handen snearrede ad ham, the dog showed its teeth at him (Molbech). This is closely allied to the obsolete E. snar; for which see SNARL.

SNEEZE, to eject air rapidly and audibly through the nose. (E.) 'Looking against the sunne doth induce sneezing;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 687. M. E. snasen, Trevisa, v. 389 (Stratmann). In Chaucer, Group H, l. 62 (l. 17011, ed. Tyrwhitt), the right reading is snaseth, not snaseth. But snasen is doubtless either a modification of snasen, or a parallel form to it; the initial s is perhaps due to Dan. snuse, to sniff, for which see SNOUT.

β. We find also snayaga, violent blowing, Wyclif, Job, xli. 18. = A. S. snayagan, to sneeze; whence snayagan, stermutatio, printed snayagan (by error) in Wright's Vocab. i. 46, col. 1. Allied to A. S. snand, a puff, blast, Grein, l. 307; Icel. snasa, to sneeze, snort. † Du. snayzen, to sneeze. † Swed. snayes, Dan. snayes, to snort. γ. We thus arrive at a base FNUS, evidently a mere variant of HNUS, to sneeze, Fick, iii. 82; for which see NEESE. Der. snasa, sb. And see snare.

SNIFF, to scent, draw in air sharply through the nose. (Scand.) Not common in old books. Johnson defines sniff, sb., as 'resentment expressed by sniffing.' M. E. snasen or snasen (with a-u), O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 37, l. 25; ii. 307, l. 16; this would give a later E. *snasie, whence was formed snasie, to snivel, given in Minshew. = Icel. *sniffa, a lost verb of which the pp. sniffir, sharp-scented, occurs (Acta, xvii. 21); Dan. snise, to sniff, sniff; and of Swed. sniffa, to sob. And cf. Icel. snippa, to sniff with the nose, snappa, to sniff. Allied to Snuff (1), q. v. Der. sniff, sb.; snivel, q. v.

SNIP, to cut off, esp. with shears or scissors. (Du.) Shak. has snip, sb., L. L. L. iii. 22; also snipe, pp., All's Well, iv. 5. 2. He connects it with snep, id. v. 1. 63. = Du. snippen, to snip, clip. A weakened form of Du. snappen, 'to snap up, or to intercept;' Hexham; see SNAP. † G. schnippen, to snap; weakened form of schnappen, to snap, to catch. ¶ It has probably been influenced in use by the similar word snip, which comes however from the Teut. base KNIB; see Nip. Der. snip, sb.; snipp-st, a small piece, dimic. of snip, sb. Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 824. Also snip-snap, Pops. Duncad, li. 242.

SNIFE, a bird with a long bill, frequenting marshy places. (Scand.) M. E. snype. 'Snype, or snyte, byrde, Ibez;' Prompt. Parv. 'Hic ibas, or hic ibez, a snype;' Wright's Voc. i. 220. 'Snipe, or snite;' Baret (1580). [Snipe and snite are parallel names for the same bird; it is possible that the vowel of snipe has been affected by that of snite, which is the older word, found as A. S. snite, Wright's Voc. i. 29, col. 2, and l. 63, col. 1. The A. S. snite prob. has reference to the bird's long bill, and is allied to snout; see SNOUT.] β . Similarly, snipe (otherwise snaps, which in prov. E. means a woodcock, see Halliwell) is from Icel. snipa, a snipe, found in the comp. snip-snipe, a moor-snipe; Dan. snippe, a snipe. Swed. snappa, a sandpiper. γ . The word means 'a snipper' or 'a snapper'; the standard form appears in Swed. snippa, formed by the addition of a suffix -a (for ya or ta) and vowel-change, from the Teut. base SNAP, to snap up; see SNAP. Cf. O. Du. snabbe, snabbe, 'the bill of a bird,' Hexham, which is the same word, with the same sense of 'snapper.' See SNABBLE.

SNITE (1), to wipe the nose. (Scand.) See SNOUT.

SNIVEL, to snuff continually, to have a running at the nose, to whimper. (Scand.) Formerly snivell; spelt snuyell, Skelton, Colin Clout, 1223. M. E. snivelen (with n=uv), P. Plowman, B. v. 135, footnote; other MSS. have snuyelinge, snuyelinge. Snivel is merely the frequentative, with the usual suffix -el, of sniff; and similarly M. E. snivelen is the frequentative of M. E. sniven, to snuff; see SNIFF. Cf. Dan. snivle, to snuffle, which is a parallel form; see SNUFFLE. So also Icel. snifill, a slight scent; allied to snippa, to snuff. γ . The A. S. snoff, mucus, is unauthorized. Der. snivell-er; snivell, sb.

SNOB, a vulgar person. (Scand.) Prov. E. snob, a vulgar ignorant person; also a journeyman-shoemaker (Suffolk); see Halliwell. 'Snop, a lad or servant, now mostly used indifferently;' Thoresby's letter to Ray, 1703 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 17); 'Snops, a pert youth, North,' Halliwell. Lowland Sc. snob, a shoemaker's or cobbler's boy (Jamieson). Of Scand. origin.—Icel. snipr, a dolt, idiot, with the notion of impostor or charlatan, a boaster, used as a by-word; Swed. dial. snopp, a boy, anything stumpy. The same Icel. word means the pointed end of a pencil; both senses may be explained from Swed. dial. snoppa, to cut off, snipe stumpy, hence to snub. Cf. Swed. snopas, out of countenance, ashamed. See SNUB, SNUBNOD.

SNOOD, a fillet, ribbon. (E.) 'Her satin snood;' Sir W. Scott, Lady of the Lake, c. l. st. 19; and see note 2 D. M. E. snood (12th century); Wright's Voc. i. 89, col. 1.—A. S. snod. 'Vitta, snod;' kl. i. 74, col. 2. The orig. sense is 'a twist;' from the Teut. base SNU, SNIW, to turn, twist, appearing in Icel. snúa, to turn, twist, Dan. snue, to twist, entwine, Swed. snå, to twist, twine; also in Swed. snå, sb., a twist, twine, string, answering in sense to E. snood, and Icel. snúdr, a twist, twirl, answering in form to A. S. snod. β . The Teut. SNU, SNIW, further appears in Goth. snarwan, to go, A. S. snarwan, to hasten, whence the sense of 'turn about' or 'turn' seems to have been evolved; see Fick, iii. 351. Cf. Gk. snéw, to swim, Skt. snu, to flow. The sense of 'flow' seems the oldest; hence to proceed, go, turn about, turn, twine.

SNORL, to breathe hoarsely in sleep. (E.) M. E. snorn, Chaucer, C. T. 3210. The only trace of it in A. S. is the sb. snora, a snoring, in a gloss (Bosworth). γ . O. Du. snorren, 'to grumble, mutter,' Hexham; snorren, 'to brawle, scold, snarl,' id. δ . G. scharrren, to rattle, snarl. β . All from Teut. base SNAR, to make a growling or rattling noise in the throat, hence, to snore. It is used in the sense of 'snore' in some Teut. tongues only in the extended form SNARK; as, e. g. in G. scharrchen, to snore, mort, Du. snorben, Low G. snorben, snorben, Dan. snørbe, Swed. snørbe, to threaten (orig. to snort with rage), Icel. snørþa, snørþa, to make a sputtering noise, like a light with a damp wick. See SNARL, SNAR. Der. snore, sb., snorer. Also snor-t, q. v.

SNORT, to force air violently through the nose, as a horse. (Scand.) M. E. snornen, to snore, Chaucer, C. T. 4161. Pat for snornen, by the occasional change of h to t at the end of a syllable, as in bat (animal) from M. E. batte, &c.—Dan. snørbe, to snort; Swed. snørbe, to threaten (orig. to snort, fume, be angry). γ . Du. snorben, to snore, snort. δ . G. scharrchen, to snore, mort, bluster. β . All from Teut. base SNARK, to snort, an extension from SNAR, to snore, growl; see SNORA. Der. snort-er; snort, sb.

SNOUT, mucus from the nose. (O. Low G.) M. E. snouts, snoths, Prompt. Parv. The A. S. forms are unauthorized.—O. Fries. snouts; Du. snut; Low G. snouts. γ . Dan. snod. Supposed to be from the pp. snofen of a lost strong verb, which would appear as A. S. snofian; in any case, it is closely related to snout and to prov. E. snite, to wipe the nose; see further under SNOUT.

SNOUT, the nose of an animal. (Scand.) M. E. snoute, Chaucer, C. T. 15011; snute, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1082. Not found in A. S.—Swed. snut, a snout, muzzle; Dan. snude. γ . Low G. snute. δ . Du. snuit. β . From a Teut. type SNUTA; whence Icel. sníta, to wipe the nose, Swed. snuta, Dan. snude, the same; whence E. snite, to blow the nose (Halliwell). So also G. schneuzen, schneuzen, to blow the nose, snuff a candle. γ . The form SNUTA is probably due to a lost strong verb, given in Ettmüller as A. S. snutan (pt. t. snute, pp. snutan), perhaps 'to snuff;' at any rate, the E. snut, mucus, is closely related. Another allied word is snus, a snipe, mentioned under SNIFE. δ . We find shorter forms in Dan. snut, to snuff, snuff, mort, Low G. snut, prov. G. schnut, a snout, beak; all from a base SNU. And it is clear that Swed. dial. snut, a snout, prov. G. schnutz, a snout, E. snuff, sniff, Dan. snust, to snuff or sniff, go back to the same base, which seems to have indicated a sudden inspiration of the breath through the nose.

SNOW, a form of frozen rain. (E.) M. E. snow; hence snow-blow, Chaucer, C. T. 8264.—A. S. snaw; Grein, ii. 458. γ . Du. snouwe. δ . Icel. snar, snár, snár. β . Dan. snø. α . Goth. snawis. γ . G. schnee. δ . Lithuan. snigra. β . Russ. snig. α . Lat. nis (gen. niuis). γ . Gk. acc. snigra; whence snigra, a snow-flake. β . Irish and Gael. snached. γ . W. snif. β . The Teut. base is SNIW, for SNIG; from γ SNIGH, to snow, whence Lat. snigis, it snows (with inserted n), Lithuan. snigti, snigti, to snow, Gk. snigra, it snows, Zend snizh, to snow; Fick, i. 828. The orig. sense of γ SNIGH was prob. to wet, moisten; cf. Skt. snikha (= snik-ha), oil, moisture; snih, vb., whence pp. snigdha, oily, wet, dense, cooling; note also Gael. snadh, to ooze through in drops, Irish snidhe, a drop of rain. The Skt. snj, to cleanse, Gk. snigra, to wash, are from a γ SNIG, which may be related; see Curtius, i. 395. Der. snow, verb; snow-blind, snif, snop, snough, snos, snip; also snow-y, snow-i-mus.

SNUB, to check, scold, reprimand. (Scand.) 'To snub one, to take one up sharply;' Phillips, ed. 1706; spelt snubbe in Levins, ed. 1570. The older form is snub or snib; spelt snubbe, Spenser, Shep. Kal. Feb. l. 125; snib, id. Mother Hubbard's Tale, 372. M. E. snubben, Chaucer, C. T. 523.—Dan. snubbe, 'to set down, blow up,' i. e. a reprimand (whence E. snub); Swed. snubbe, to snub, to check (whence E. snub); Icel. snubba, to snub, chide. The orig. sense was to nip off the end of a thing; cf. Icel. snubba, snubbed, nipped, the pointed end being cut off; moreover the final b is weakened from β , cf. Icel. snypa, to snub, chide. β . Another form of snub appears in snopp, to check, pinch, nip, L. L. l. i. 1. 100; Wint. Tale, l. 2. 13. This is from Icel. snoppa, orig. to castrate, then used as a law-term, to outrage, dishonour, and in mod. usage to chide or snub a child; whence snoppa, sb., a disgrace. This is a related word, and cognate with Swed. snappa, to castrate, Swed. dial. snoppa, to cut off, to snuff a candle, snubba, to clip, cut off. γ . The root appears in Teut. SNAP, to snap, to snip; see remarks upon SNAP; and see SNUFF (2). Der. snub, sb.; also snub-nosed, q. v. Doublet, snuff (2).

SNUBNOSED, having a short nose. (Scand. and E.) Added by Todd to Johnson. It means, literally, with a short or stumpy nose, as if cut off short. Cf. snubbe, a pl. the short stumpy projections on a staff that has been roughly cut and trimmed, Spenser, F. Q. i. 2. 7. Snub is from the Swed. dial. snubba, to clip, snip; whence Swed. dial. snubba, a cow without horns or with cut horns, Icel. snubba, snipped, clipped, with the end cut off. See SNUB above. And see NOSE.

SNUFF (1), to snuff, draw in air violently through the nose, to smell. (Du.) 'As if you snuffed up love by smelling love;' L. L. l. iii. 16. Spelt snuff in Levins, ed. 1570. It is a mere variant of snuff, M. E. snuffen, a word of Scand. origin; see SNIFF. β . The change of spelling from snuffen or snuff may have been due to confusion with snuff (2) below. But it was rather borrowed directly from O. Du. snuffen, snuffen (Du. snuffen), 'to snuffe out the sixth out of one's nose' (Hexham); cf. Du. snuff, smelling, scent, snuffien, to smell out. Cf. Swed. snuffa, a cold, catarrh; snuffen, a sniff or scent of a thing; Swed. dial. snuffa, snuffa, snuffa, to snuff (which is the frequent. form); Dan. snuffe, to snuff. We also find Swed. snuffa, to snuff, speak through the nose; G. schneuzen, a catarrh, schneuzen, to take snuff; prov. G. schneuzeln, schneuzeln, to snuff, to smell (Flügel). γ . These forms all go back to a base SNUFF or SNAP, of which an older form was SNUP or SNAP, as appears from the related Icel. snappa, to snuff, snoppa, a snout, snoppa, to snuff. The orig. sense of the Teut. base SNAP was probably 'to gasp,' or draw in breath quickly, and there is no reason why it may not be ultimately identical with snap, to catch up quickly. See remarks on SNAP. Der. snuff, sb., powdered tobacco; snuff-ban, snuff-y.

snuffen, to snuff out a candle, Wyclif, Exod. xiv. 38, note 9 (later version); the earlier version has: 'where the snuffis ben quenched'—where the candle-snuffs are extinguished. This form snuffen is a variant, or corruption of *snuffon, not found, yet more correct; it agrees with prov. E. snop, to eat off, as cattle do young shoots (Halliwell). = Swed. dial. snoppa, to snip or cut off, esp. to snuff a candle (Rietz); cf. Dan. snubbe, to sip off, the same word as E. snub; see snub. Der. snuff (of a candle), sb., M. E. snuffe, as above; snuff-dike, Exod. xiv. 38; snuff-ara, Exod. xxxvii. 23. Doublet, snub.

SNUG, comfortable, lying close and warm. (Scand.) 'Where you lay snug;' Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Past. iii. 24. Shak. has 'Snug the joiner;' Mida Nt. Dr. i. 5. 66. Cf. prov. E. snug, tight, handsome, Lancashire (Halliwell); snug, tidy, trimmed, in perfect order (Cleveland Glossary). = Icel. snugg, smooth, said of wool or hair; O. Swed. snugg, short-haired, smooth, trimmed, neat, Swed. snugg, cleanly, neat, genteel; Norweg. snugg, short, quick; Dan. snig (also snig, snig), neat, smart, tidy (Molbeck). β. The orig. sense was 'trimmed' or 'cropped'; from a verb of which the only surviving trace in Scand. is in Norwegian and Swed. dial. snikka, to cut, do joiner's work; whence also North E. snick, to notch, to cut, South E. snig, to cut or chop off, whence Devon. snig, close and private (l. q. snug); see Halliwell. Der. snug-ty, snugness.

SO, thus, in such a manner or degree. (E.) M. E. so, Chaucer, C. T. 11; Northern so, Barbour's Bruce (passim); also soo, Chaucer, C. T. 4028, where the Northern dialect is imitated. = A. S. sō, so; Grein, ii. 497. + Du. soe. + Icel. sō, later sō, so, + Dan. soe. + Swed. so. + G. so. + Goth. sō, so; soo, just as; soo-soo, just as. β. All from Teut. base SWA, adv., so; this is from an oblique case of the Teut. SWA, one's own, Arya SWA, one's own, oneself, a reflexive pronominal base; whence Skt. swa, one's own self, own, Lat. suus, one's own. Thus so = in one's own way, in that very way. See Curtius, i. 491; Fick, iii. 360.

SOAK, to steep in a fluid. (E.) It also means to suck up, imbibe. 'A sponge, that soaks up the king's countenance;' Hamlet, iv. 1. 16. This is the orig. sense; the word is a mere doublet of suck. M. E. soken, (1) to suck, (2) to soak; 'Soakers, or he that sokythe, Sogars;' Prompt. Parv. 'Solyu yu lycure; as thyng to be made soft;' id. = A. S. sōcan (also sogian), to suck; also to soak. 'Gif byt man on þam wreters grygg þe beo on bið' = if one soaks it in the water in which the wort is; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 134. Cf. A. S. deinan, deigan, to suck dry, whence the pp. deinome, deigome; Grein, i. 43. β. We should have expected to find an A. S. *sōcan, to make to soak, as a casual form, made from the pp. sōcan of sōcan, to suck; and indeed, such a form appears in Bosworth's Dict., but is absolutely unauthorized. There is, however, the sb. soe, or suor, a sucking, Gen. xii. 7, 8. We may also compare W. soeg, soaked, soeg, to suck, but only by way of illustration; for the word is E., not Celtic. See Suck. Der. soak-er.

SOAP, a compound of oil or fat with soda or potash, used for washing. (E. ?) M. E. sopa, Rob. of Glouc. p. 6, l. 19. (The long o is due to A. S. o, as in stone from A. S. sōdan, Mc.) = A. S. sōpa, soap; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 472, l. 6; Wright's Voc. i. 86, l. 13. + Du. soep. + Icel. sōpa. + Dan. sōpe. + Swed. sōpa. + G. sōp, M. H. G. sōp, O. H. G. sōp. β. By some supposed to be a Teutonic word, connected with Low G. sōpa, to trickle; and perhaps connected with Sap. The difficulty lies chiefly in the relationship of the Lat. sōpa, soap; we have to discover whether the Teut. word was borrowed from the Lat. sōpa, or whether, on the other hand, the Lat. sōpa (appearing in Pliny) was not rather borrowed from the Teutonic. (From the Lat. acc. sōpam came F. sōpon, Ital. sōpono, Span. sōpon, &c.) The truly genuine Lat. word would appear to be sōpum, tallow, grease. The W. sōbon, Gael. sōpam, sōpam, Irish sōpam, seems to be borrowed from the Lat. acc. sōpam. See Curtius, ii. 63. Der. soap, verb; soapy.

SOAK, to fly aloft. (F., = L.) M. E. soam. 'As doth an eagle, whan him list to sove;' Chaucer, C. T. 10437. A term of hawking, and accordingly of F. origin. = F. soaver, 'to expose unto, or lay out in, the weather; also, to mount or soar up;' Cot. Cf. Ital. soavere, 'to soar in the air;' Florio. = Low Lat. *soavere (not found), to expose to the air; regularly formed from so, out; and sova, a breeze, the air. β. The Lat. sova was either borrowed from, or is cognate with Gk. sōpa, a breeze; it is formed with the suffix -va from so or so, to blow, from so AW, to blow. And the so AW is another form of so WA, to blow, whence E. wind; see Wind, Air.

SOB, to sigh convulsively, with tears. (E.) M. E. sobben. 'Swowed and sobbed and syked' [sighed]; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 326. It answers to A. S. sōþan, sōþan, to lament; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxvii. § 1, lib. iv. pr. 1; from a base SUP, variant of Teut. base SUP, to sup, sip, suck in. The word represents the convulsive socking in of air. β. This is clearly shown by the allied G. soffen, to sigh, M. H. G. soffen, soffen, O. H. G. soffen, to sigh, formed from the O. H. G. sb. sōft, a sigh, sob; this sb. being again formed from O. H. G. sōftan, to sup, sip, cognate with E. sup; see Sup. So also Icel. soffir, a sobbing. Der. sob, sb.

SOBER, temperate, sedate, grave. (F., = L.) M. E. sōbre, Chaucer, C. T. 9407. = F. sōbre, 'sober;' Cot. = Lat. sōbrus, acc. of sōbrus, sober. Compounded of so-, prefix; and sōbrus, drunken. The prefix so-, as in so-vere, signifies apart from, or without; and sōbrus, not drunken, is thus opposed to sōbrus. So- is another form of so-, which before a vowel appears as so-, as in so-vere, lit. 'a going apart.' See So-, prefix, and Ebriety. Der. sobriety, sobriety; also sobriety, from F. sōbrus, 'sobriety;' Cot., from Lat. acc. sōbrus.

SOBRIQUET, a nickname, assumed name. (F., = L. and C.) Sometimes spelt sobriquet, but sobriquet is the mod. F. form. Modern, not in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed from F. sobriquet, 'a surname, nickname, . . . a jest broken on a man;' Cot. Another form is sobriquet, also in Cotgrave. β. Etym. disputed and uncertain. If sobriquet be right, and not (as is probable) an intentional misspelling for the sake of suggesting an etymology, it may be compounded of F. so-, a sot, foolish person, and briquet, borrowed from Ital. brichetto, a little ass, dimin. of Ital. bruce, an ass. For the F. so-, see Sot. The Ital. bruce is prob. allied to brivone, a rogue, knave, supposed by Dies to be derived from G. bruchen, to break, cognate with E. break, as if the orig. sense were house-breaker or law-breaker, and so the word became a term of reproach. In that case, the orig. sense is 'foolish young ass,' or 'silly knave,' hence a nickname, and finally an assumed name. γ. Cotgrave also spells the word sobriquet, and Littré and Scheler note the occurrence of sobriquet in a text of the 14th century with the sense of 'a chuck under the chin.' Here sobriquet (mod. F. sobriquet) answers to Lat. sob, and briquet is the same as E. brichet; see Sub- and Bricket. Wedgwood's account of the word is as follows. 'Norm. bruchet, the bone of the throat, breast-bone in birds. Fester me l'bruchet, to seize by the throat. Hence sobriquet, sobriquet, properly a chuck under the chin, and then "a quip or cut given, a mock or flout, a jest broken on a man," [finally] "a nickname;" Cotgrave. "Percutit super mentonem faciendo dictum le sobriquet;" Act a. d. 1335 in Archives du Nord de la France, iii. 35. "Doona deux petits coups appelés sobriquets des dois de la main sous le menton;" Act a. d. 1335, ibid. in Hericher, Gloss. Norm. In the same way sobriquet, "the part between the chin and the throat, also a check, twich, jerk given to a horse with his bridle, autour une sobriquet, to indure an affront;" Cot. β. Wedgwood's account seems the right one. If so, the sense is 'chuck under the chin,' hence, an affront, nickname. At the same time, Cotgrave's sobriquet must be due to a popular etymology.

SOCIABLE, companionable. (F., = L.) In Shak. K. John, i. 188. = F. sociable, 'sociable;' Cot. = Lat. sociabilis, sociable; formed with suffix -abilis from socio-va, to accompany. = Lat. socius, a companion, lit. 'a follower.' = Lat. base soc-, allied to so- or so-, appearing in soci (= so-), to follow; all from so SAK, to follow; see Sequeno. Der. sociably, sociable-ness, sociability. From Lat. socius is also formed the adj. socialis, whence E. social, with the adv. social-ly, also social-ity, social-ize, social-ist, social-ism. Also socio-ty, L. L. so., iv. 2, 166, from F. société, 'society;' Cot., which from Lat. acc. societatem. Also dis-sociate, so-socius.

SOCK, a sort of half stocking, buskin. (L.) M. E. sokke, Prompt. Parv.; see Way's note. = A. S. soc; Wright's Vocab., i. 26, col. 1, has: 'Callicula [= caligula], soe,' a mere misprint for soe, as Sommer correctly prints it in his edition of Ælfric's Gloss, p. 67, l. 11. = Lat. soccus, a light shoe, slipper, sock, worn by comic actors, and so taken as the symbol of comedy, as in Milton, L'Allegro, 132. β. Perhaps allied to Gk. sōkros (= so-), to load, furnish, equip. Der. sock-er.

SOCKET, a hollow into which something is inserted. (F., = L.) M. E. soket, King Alisaunder, 4415. = O. F. soket, given by Roquefort only as (1) a dimin. of F. so, a plough-share, and (2) a dimin. of F. socche, a stump or stock of a tree. β. [Of these, the F. so is of Celtic origin; cf. W. soch, a snout, a ploughshare, and with this word we have here nothing to do.] But soket must be a variant of an older form *soe, as shewn by the dimin. soket, and by the Ital. socca, a stump or stock of a tree. Again, the Ital. socca appears to be the same as Span. soca, only used in the sense of wooden shoe or clog, Port. soca, a sock, wooden shoe, clog. The interchange of s and z is not uncommon (initially) in Italian; thus Florio gives sozo, 'a wooden patten,' as a variant of socca, with the same sense. Cf. mod. F. socque, a clog. γ. Dies supposes all these words last mentioned to be alike derived from Lat. soccus, a sock, shoe. The accident that shoes were frequently made of wood caused the extenson of meaning to wooden shoe, clog, block of wood, log, stump, &c. We may particularly notice F. sole, a plinth, pedestal, used as an architectural term, and coming very near to the idea of E. socket, whilst the corresponding Ital. soletto means both a plinth and a wooden shoe.

§. We may conclude that soak is a dimin. of soak, notwithstanding the great change in sense. A 'small wooden shoe' gives no bad idea of a socket in which to erect a pole, &c. One sense of E. shoe is 'a notched piece in which something rests' (Webster); used as a term in speaking of machinery. See SOCK.

SOD, turf, a surface of earth covered with growing grass. (E.) 'A sod, turfe, compus;' Lavina, ed. 1570. So called from the sodden or soaking condition of soft turf in rainy weather or in marshy places. That the connection with the verb to soak is real is apparent from the cognate terms. † Du. sode, sod, green turf; O. Du. sode, 'seething or boiling,' also 'a sodde or a turfe'; Hexham. Also contracted to soo in both senses; 'suo, a sod; het water is an de soo, the water begins to seeth;' Sewel. Note also O. Du. sod, a well (Hexham); so named from the bubbling up of the water, and cognate with A. S. sodf, a well, a pit, from the same verb (soeth). † O. Fries. sode, soda, sod, turf; allied to sod, sod, a well. † Low G. sode, sod; allied to sod, a well. † G. sods, sod, turf, allied to G. sod, broth, also, a bubbling up as of boiling water. See Soetha, Suda.

SOD, BODDEN; see under Soetha.

BODA, oxide of sodium. (Ital., = L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. = Ital. soda, soda; O. Ital. soda, 'a kind of farsee ashes wherof they make glasses;' Florio. Fem. of Ital. soda, 'solide, tough, fast, hard, stiffe;' Florio. This is a contracted form of Ital. solida, solid; see Solid. So called, apparently, from the firmness or hardness of the products obtained from glass-wort; at any rate, there can be no doubt as to the etymology, since the O. F. soldade, 'saltwort, glasswort,' can only be derived from the Lat. soldus (fem. of solatus), which Scheler supposes must have been the Lat. name of glass-wort. There is no need of Littré's remark, that the etymology is 'very doubtful.'

§. Note that the Span. name for soda is sosa, which also means glass-wort; but here the etymology is quite different, the name being given to the plant from its abounding in alkaline salt. Sosa is the fem. of Span. soso, insipid, orig. 'salt;' from Lat. salsus, salt; see SALUS. Der. sod-ism, a coined word.

SODER, the same as Solder, q. v.

SODOMY, an unnatural crime. (F., = L., = Gk., = Heb.) In Cot. = F. sodomus, 'sodomy;' Cot. So called because it was imputed to the inhabitants of Sodom; Gen. xix. 5. = F. Sodomus, Sodom. = Lat. Sodomus. = Gk. Σόδομος. = Heb. Sodóm (with initial so); explained to mean 'burning' in Stanley's Suavi and Palestine, cap. vii; but this is quite uncertain.

SOFA, a long seat with stuffed bottom, back, and arms. (Arab.) 'He leaped off from the sofa in which he sat;' Guardian, no. 167 [not 198], Sept. 22, 1713. The story here given is said to be translated from an Arabian MS.; this may be a pretence, but the word is Arabic. = Arab. sofa, suffah, 'a sofa, a couch, a place for reclining upon before the doors of Eastern houses, made of wood or stone;' Kich. Dict., p. 936. = Arab. root sofa, to draw up in line, put a seat to a saddle; ibid.

SOFT, easily yielding to pressure, gentle, easy, smooth. (E.) M. E. softe, Wyclif, Matt. xi. 8, 9; Chaucer, C. T. 12035. = A. S. softa, gen. used as an adv., Grein, ii. 464. The adj. form is commonly softe (id. 423), where the s is further modified to d. † O. Sax. softa, softly; only in the compar. softer; Heliand, 3302. † G. sanft, soft; O. H. G. sanfta, adv., softly, lightly, gently. §. Root uncertain; but perhaps allied to Icel. sofa, O. Icel. sofa, to soothe, soften, one of the numerous derivatives from the sw SWAP, to sleep; see Soporific.

¶ The G. socht, Du. socht, soft, can hardly be from the same root, or in any way allied. Der. soft-ly, M. E. softely (three syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 4209; soft-ness, Layamon, 25549. Also soft-en, in which the final -en is added by analogy with length-en, &c.; the M. E. soften would only have given a later E. verb to soft; cf. soften in Ancren Riwle, p. 244, l. 27. The right use of soften is intransitive, as in Shak. Wint. Tale, ii. 2. 40.

SOIL (1), ground, mould, country. (F., = L.) M. E. soile; spelt soyle, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1039. = O. F. soil, soil, later soil, 'the threshold of a door;' Cot. = Lat. solus, a covering for the foot, a sole, sandal, sole of the foot, timber on which wattled walls are built. The Late Lat. solus also means 'soil, or ground,' by confusion with Lat. solus, ground, whence F. sol, 'the soil, ground;' Cot.

§. We cannot derive E. soil from F. sol, on account of the diphthong; but it makes little difference, since Lat. solus, sole of the foot, and solus, ground, are obviously closely connected words, and O. F. soil and soil are confused.

¶ The root of Lat. solus, sol-um is uncertain; perhaps l stands for d, as in Lat. lustrum for lustrum, and the root may be sw SAD, to sit; cf. Lat. solus, a seat, throne. The soil may be that whereon a thing rests; cf. F. sol, 'soil, foundation;' Cot. See Sole (1), Sole (2). The word soil is connected. Doublets, soil (1), soil (2).

SOIL (2), to defile, contaminate. (F., = L.) M. E. soilen, Ancren Riwle, p. 24, l. 23; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 2. [Quite a distinct word from M. E. soilen, and mod. E. silly.] The sense is to cover with mire; to take soil, lit. to betake oneself to muddy water, was a term of the chase; see Halliwell. = O. F. soillier (13th cent., Littré), F. soillier, 'to soil;' Cot.; whence 'so soillier (of a swine), to take soil, or wallow in the mire;' id. = O. F. soil, soil; 'soil, or soil de sanglier, the soil of a wilde boare, the slough or mire wherein he hath wallowed;' Cot. [Cotgrave also gives the same meaning to O. F. soil, but this is really due to confusion; the last word properly means 'a threshold of a door,' and is treated of above, under Soil (1).] Cf. O. Ital. soigliare, 'to sully, defile, or pollute,' Florio; also soigliardo (mod. Ital. soigliardo), 'slovenly, sluttish, or hoggish;' id. Dies also cites Prov. soila, mire, soilar, to soil; and soila, a sow, which last is (as he says) plainly derived from Lat. sovia, a young sow, drain. of sova, a sow. See Sow.

¶ Similarly, he explains the F. soil from the Lat. adj. soillus, belonging to swine, derived from the same sb. We may further compare Port. sojar, to soil, sojo, nasty, dirty; and note the curious confirmation of the above etymology obtained by comparing Span. sojar, to soil, with Span. sojar, used in precisely the same sense, and obviously derived from Lat. porcus, a pig.

¶ There is therefore (as Dies remarks) neither need nor reason for connecting soil with E. silly and its various Teutonic cognates. §. It will be observed that the difference in sense between soil (1) = ground, and soil (2), sb. = mire, is so slight that the words have doubtless frequently been confused, though really from quite different sources. There is yet a third word with the same spelling; see Soil (3). Der. soil, sb., a spot, stain, a new coinage from the verb; the old sb. soil, a wallowing-place (really the original of the verb), is obsolete. ¶ The A. S. soila, mire, is not the orig. of E. soil, but of prov. E. soil, soila, a dirty pool, Kent; E. D. S. Gloss, C. 3.

SOIL (3), to feed cattle with green grass, to fatten with feeding. (F., = L.) See Halliwell; the expression 'soiled horse,' i. e. a horse high fed upon green food, is in King Lear, iv. 6. 124. [Quite distinct from the words above.] Better spelt soil; Halliwell gives 'soil, to be satisfied with food.' = O. F. soiler (Burguy), later soiler, 'to glut, cloy, fill, satiate;' Cot. Mod. F. soiler. = O. F. soil, adj. (Burguy), later soil, 'full, cloyed, satiated;' Cot. Mod. F. soil. = Lat. soillus, filled with food; a dimin. form from sover, full, satiated, akin to sovia, enough. See Sate, Satiated, Satisfy.

SOIRÉE, an evening party. (F., = L.) Borrowed from French. 'A friendly soirée;' Pickwick Papers, c. 36; spelt soires in the heading to the chapter. = F. soirée, 'the evening-tide;' Cot.; hence a party given in the evening. Cf. Ital. soirata, evening-tide. Formed as a fem. pp. from a (supposed) Low Lat. verb sover, to become late; from Lat. sover, late in the day, whence Ital. sova, F. soir, evening. The orig. of Lat. sover is doubtful.

SOJOURN, to dwell, stay, reside. (F., = L.) M. E. sojourn, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 3, last line; sojournen, Chaucer, C. T. 4568. (Here i=j). = O. F. sojourn, sojourn, to sojourn; also spelt sojourn, sojourn (Burguy). Mod. F. sojourn; cf. Ital. sojournare. This verb answers to a Low Lat. type sojournare, composed of Lat. sub, under, and diurnus, to stay, last long, derived from the adj. diurnus, daily; see Sub- and Diurnal or Journal. Der. sojourn-er; sojourn, sb., K. Lear, i. 1. 43, M. E. sojourn, sojourn, Barbour's Bruce, ix. 369, vii. 385.

SOKE, SOC, a franchise, land held by socage. (E.) 'Soe, signifies power, authority, or liberty to minister justice and execute laws; also the shire, circuit, or territory, wherein such power is exercised by him that is endued with such a privilege or liberty;' Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. [Blount rightly notes the word as 'Saxon,' but under socke gives a wrong derivation from F. soe, a plough-share.] 'Soe and Soc; soe was the power and privilege of hearing and determining causes and disputes, levying of forfeitures and fines, executing laws, and administering justice within a certain precinct; see Ellis, Introduction to Domesday Book, l. 273. Soe or Soc was strictly the right of investigating or seeking, or, as Spelman defines it, Cognitio quam dominus habet in curia sua, de causis litibusque inter vassallos suos exorientibus. It was also the territory or precinct in which the soe and other privileges were exercised;' Gloss. to Thorpe's Diplomatarium, at p. 394 of which we find: 'ic Am heom berofor soea and soema = I grant them thereover the privileges of soe and soem. See further in Schmid, Die Genesis der Angelsachsen, ed. 1852, p. 653.

¶ Etymologically, soe (A. S. soe) is the same word as E. soke; the orig. sense is 'contention,' hence a law-suit, from A. S. soean, to contend; see Sake. Soke (A. S. soe) is 'the exercise of judicial power,' and soke (A. S. soe, soem) is 'an enquiry; both these words are closely connected with mod. E. seek, to investigate, and are derived from A. S. sēc, pt. t. of the same verb sacan; see Seek. Hence Portulaca (ward) in London, which Stow explains by 'franchise at the gate.' Der. see-eye, a barbarous law term, made by adding the F. suffix -age (Lat. -agium) to A. S. sēc. (The e is long.)

SOLACE, a comfort, relief. (F., -L.) M. E. solax, King Alisaunder, l. 14; Chaucer, C. T. 13712. - O. F. solax, solace; Burguy. (Here s = a.) - Lat. solatium, a comfort. - Lat. solatus, pp. of solari, to console, comfort. (But some spell the sb. solatium, as if from an adj. solus; this, however, would still be allied to the verb solari.) β. Allied to salvare, salvare, to keep, preserve. - S. SAR, to preserve; see Save. Der. solax, verb, M. E. solaxen, P. Plowman, B. six. 22, from O. F. solacier, solaxer, to solace (Burguy). And see con-sol.

SOLAN-GOOSE, the name of a bird. (Scand. and E.) The E. goose is an addition; the Lowland-Scotch form is soland, which occurs, according to Jameson, in Holland's poem of the Hoolate (Owlet), about A. D. 1450. [Here the d is excrescent, as is so common after s; cf. swand from F. sol.] - Icel. solá, a gannet, solá goose; Norweg. solá, solánia, the same (Aasen). The Norweg. Ans (Icel. haf) means 'sea.' β. As the Icel. solá is feminine, the definite form is solán - the gannet; which accounts for the final s in the E. word. Similarly, Dan. sol = sun, but solens = the sun; whence the Shetland word solens, the sun (Edmonston).

SOLAR, belonging to the sun. (L.) 'The solar and lunar year;' Raleigh, Hist. of the World, b. ii. c. 3 (R.) - Lat. solarius, solar. - Lat. sol, the sun. + Icel. sol. + Goth. sol. + Lithuan. solis. + Russ. solnets. + W. sol (for sol). + Irish. sol. β. The allied Gk. word is solēns, the dog-star, Sirius; cf. solēns, hot, scorching; Curtius, ii. 171. The allied Skt. words are surá, solá, the sun, star, the sun, splendour, heaven. All from S. SWAR, to glow; whence Skt. sur, to shine, A. S. sunian, to glow, prov. E. sunial, to burn, and E. solary; see Sultry. And see Barana. Der. sol-atus, q. v.

SOLDER, a cement made of fusible metal, used to unite two metallic substances. (F., -L.) Sometimes spelt soder, and usually pronounced sodder (sod'ur). Rich. spells it solder. 'To solder such gold, there is a proper glue and solder;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 5. 'I solder a metall with solder, is solder;' Palgrave. - O. F. soldure (14th cent., Littré), later also soldure, 'a soldering, and particularly the knot of solder which sustains the lead [lead] of a glass window;' Cot. Mod. F. soldure, solder; Hamilton. - O. F. solder, solder (orig. solder), 'to solder, consolidate, close or fasten together;' Cot. (Hence also M. E. solden, conden, to strengthen; 'anon he leggis and feet were solden togidere;' Wyclif, Acta. iu. 7) - Lat. soldare, to make firm. - Lat. solidus, solid, firm; see Solid. And see Soldier. Der. solder, verb, formerly soder, as above. β. It is usual to derive, conversely, the sb. solder from the verb; this is futile, as it leaves the second syllable entirely unaccounted for. The O. F. verb solder yielded the M. E. verb solden, as shewn above, which could only have produced a modern E. verb sod or sod. In no case can the E. suffix -er be due to the ending -er of the F. infinitive. The French for what we call solder (sb.) is soudure, and in this we find the obvious origin of the word. The pronunciation of final -ore as -er occurs in the common word figure, pronounced [fí'gur], which is likewise from the F. sb. figure, not from a verb.

SOLDIER, one who engages in military service for pay. (F., -L.) The common pronunciation of the word as soldjer [sól'jér] is probably old, and might be defended, the i being frequently dropped in this word in old books. [Compare soder as the usual pronunciation of solder; see the word above.] M. E. soldiour, Will. of Palerne, 3954; souder, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 109, l. 14; schawalidour, soldiour, soldiour, Barbour's Bruce, v. 205, and various readings. So called from their receiving soldis (i. e. pay). 'He wolde paye them their soldis or wages . . . [he] hadde gotten many a soldiour;' Keyward the Fox (Caxton's translation), ed. Arber, p. 39. - O. F. soldier (Burguy), also soldiour, soldiour; Cot. has soldiour, 'a soldier, one that fights or serves for pay.' Cf. O. F. soldis, 'pay or lendings for soldiers;' id. Also F. soldat, a soldier. β. Of these words, O. F. soldier answers to Low Lat. soldarius, a soldier; the O. F. soldis - Low Lat. soldum, pay; and F. soldis - soldatus, pp. of Low Lat. soldare, to pay. All from Low Lat. solidus, a piece of money, whence is derived (by loss of the latter part of the word) the O. F. sol, 'the French shilling;' Cot., and the mod. F. sol. We still use L. s d to signify libra, solidi, and denarii, or pounds, shillings, and pence. The orig. sense was 'solid' money - Lat. solidus, solid; see Solid. Der. soldier-lica, soldier-ship, soldier-y.

SOLE (1), the under side of the foot, bottom of a boot or shoe. (L.) M. E. sole. 'Sole of a foot, Planta; Sole of a shoe, Solus;' Prompt. Parv. - A. S. sol, pl. solan (for solan). 'Solus, solens;' Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 1. - Lat. solus, the sole of the foot or of a shoe. See Boil (1). Doublet, soil (1), which is the F. form. Der. sol, verb.

SOLE (2), a kind of flat fish. (F., -L.) M. E. sole. 'Sole, synche, solis;' Prompt. Parv. - F. sole, 'the sole-fish;' Cot. - Lat. solus, the sole of the foot, the fish called the sole. The sole of the foot is taken as the type of flatness. See Sole (1).

SOLE (3), alone, only, solitary, single. (F., -L.) M. E. sole, Gower, C. A. i. 350, l. 14. - O. F. sol, mod. F. sol, sol. - Lat. solus, alone. Prob. the same word as O. Lat. solitus, entire, complete in itself (hence alone). See Solemn. Der. solely, sole-ness. From Lat. solus are also de-sol-ate, sol-lapary, sol-lap-ty, sol-lap-ty, sol-lap-ty.

SOLECIISM, impropriety in speaking or writing. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Minshew and Cotgrave. - O. F. solécisme, 'a solecism, or incongruity;' Cot. - Lat. solécismus, acc. of solécismus. - Gk. solécismos, sb. - Gk. solécizō, to speak incorrectly. - Gk. adj. solécizōs, speaking incorrectly, like an inhabitant of Solos in Cilicia, a place colonised by Athenian emigrants, who soon corrupted the Attic dialect which they at first spoke correctly. Others say it was colonised by Argives and Lydians from Rhodes, who spoke a corrupt dialect of Greek. See Diogenes Laertius, i. 51; and Smith, Class. Dict. Der. solécist, solécist-ic.

SOLENN, attended with religious ceremony, devout, devotional, serious. (F., -L.) M. E. solennus. 'In the solennus dai of peak;' Wyclif, Luke, ii. 41. Hence solennus, adv., Chaucer, C. T. 176. - O. F. solennus (Roquefort); the mod. F. has only the derivative solennel. - Lat. solennis, acc. of solennis, older forms solennis, solennis, yearly, annual, occurring annually like a religious rite, religious, festive, solemn. - Lat. sol-ens, entire, complete; and solennis, a year, which becomes solennis in composition, as in E. bi-annual, tri-annual. Hence the orig. sense of solennis is 'recurring at the end of a completed year.' β. For Lat. solennis, see Annual. The O. Lat. solennis is cognate with Gk. solos (Ion. solos), whole; Skt. solas, all, whole. The proposed connection with S. SAR, to protect, is doubtful. See Curtius, ii. 171. Der. solenn-ly, solenn-ness; solenn-ic, spelt solenn-ic in Palgrave; solenn-ic-ty, solenn-ic-ty; also solenn-ic-ty, M. E. solenn-ic-ty, Chaucer, C. T. 1704.

SOLFAGE, to sing the notes of the gamut. (L.) M. E. sol-fage, sol-fage; P. Plowman, B. v. 423; Relsiquus Antiqua, l. 392. 'They . . . sol-fage so alamyre' - they sol-fa so a-la-mi-re; Skelton, Coln Clout, 107. To sol-fage is to practise singing the scale of notes in the gamut, which contained the notes named re, mi, sol, fa, la, si. These names are of Latin origin; see Gamut. Der. sol-feggio, from Ital. sol-feggio, sb., the singing of the sol-fa or gamut. Also sol-fa-ge-ty, a word coined from the names of the notes sol and fa.

SOLICIT, to petition, seek to obtain. (F., -L.) M. E. solicitor; spelt solycitor in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 70, l. 24. - F. soliciter, 'to solicit;' Cot. - Lat. solicitor, to agitate, arouse, excite, incite, urge, solicit. - Lat. solicitor, lit. wholly agitated, aroused, anxious, solicitous. - Lat. solici, for solici, crude form of O. Lat. solico, whole, entire; and solico, pp. of solico, to shake, excite, cite; see Solemn and Cite. Der. solicitation, Oth. iv. 2. 202, from F. solicitation, 'a solicitation,' Cot. Also solicitor (solicitor in Minshew), substituted for F. solicitor, 'a solicitor, or follower of a cause for another,' Cot; from Lat. acc. solicitationem. And see Solicitous.

SOLICITOUS, very desirous, anxious, eager. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 418. Englished from Lat. solicitus, better spelt solicitatus, by change of -us to -ous, as in ardens-ous, struens-ous, &c. See Solicit. Der. solicitous-ly, solicit-ous, q. v.

SOLICITUDE, anxious care, trouble. (F., -L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 1566 b. - F. solicitude, 'solicitude, care;' Cot. - Lat. solicitudinem, acc. of solicitude (better solicitudo), anxiety. - Lat. solicitus, solicitous; see Solicitous.

SOLID, firm, hard, compact, substantial, strong. (F., -L.) M. E. solide, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. l. 17, l. 15. - F. solide, 'solid;' Cot. - Lat. solidus, acc. of solidus, firm, solid. Allied to Gk. solos, whole, entire, and Skt. solas, all, whole; see Solemn. Der. solid-ly, solid-ness. Also solid-ic-ty, 'a word which we owe to the F. Commentators, and which signifies a fellowship in gain and loss, in honour and dishonour, . . . a being, so to speak, all in the same bottom,' French, Eng. Past and Present; Cotgrave has the adj. solidaire, 'solid, whole, in for [or] liable to the whole.' Also solid-ic-ty, from mod. F. solidifier, to render solid; solid-ic-ty, from F. solidité, which from Lat. acc. soliditatem. From Lat. solidus are also con-solid-ate, con-sol-id-er (or sol-er), sol-id-er, sol-id-er. And cf. solécisme (from Gk. solos), solécist.

SOLILOQUY, a speaking to oneself. (L.) Spelt soliloquie in Minshew, ed. 1637. Englished from Lat. soliloquium, a talking to oneself, a word formed by St. Augustine; see Aug. Soliloq. ii. 7, near the end. - Lat. sol-, for solus, crude form of solus, alone; and loqui, to speak; see Sole (3) and Loquacious. Der. soliloqu-ic, a coined word.

SOLIPED, an animal with an uncloven hoof. (L.) Solipeds* or firm-hoofed animals; Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 6. § 9. A contraction for solipedes, which would be a more correct form. = Lat. soliped-, stem of solipedes, solid-hoofed, whole-hoofed; Pliny, x. 65; z. 73. = Lat. solid-, for solido, crude form of solidus, solid; and pes, a foot, cognate with E. foot; see SOLID and FOOT.

SOLITARY, lonely, alone, single. (F., = L.) M. E. solitarie, F. solitaire, C. xviii. 7. = O. F. solitarie°, not found, but the correct form; usually solitaire, as in mod. F. = Lat. solitarius, acc. of solitarius, solitary. β. Formed as if contracted from solitarius°, from solit-, stem of solitas, loneliness; a sb. formed with suffix -us from sol- = sol-, crude form of solus, alone; see SOLE (3). Cf. hereditary, military from the stems heredit-, milit-; also proprietary, similarly formed from the sb. proprietas. Der. solitari-ly, -ness. Also solitaire, from F. solitaire. And see solitude, sol-.

SOLITUDE, loneliness. (F., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. solitude, 'solitude'; Cot. = Lat. solitudo, loneliness. = Lat. sol- = sol-, crude form of solus, sole; with suffix -itudo. See SOLE (3).

SOLO, a musical piece performed by one person. (Ital., = L.) 'Solo and sonatas'; Tatler, no. 292; Sept. 9, 1710. = Ital. solo, alone. = Lat. solus, acc. of solus, sole; see SOLE (3).

SOLMISATION, a singing of sol-mi; see SOL-FA.

SOLSTICE, one of the two points in the ecliptic at which the sun is at his greatest distance from the equator; the time when the sun reaches that point. (F., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. solstitia, 'the solstices, sun-stead, or stay of the sun'; Cot. = Lat. solstitium, the solstice; lit. a point (in the ecliptic) at which the sun seems to stand still. = Lat. sol, the sun; and stitium, put for statum, supine of stare, to make to stand still, a reduplicated form from stare, to stand, cognate with E. stand; see SOLAR and STAND. Der. solstiti-ally, adj., from F. solstitial or solstitial. (Cot.)

SOLUBLE, capable of being dissolved. (F., = L.) Spelt soluble and solubil in Levins, ed. 1570. = F. soluble (13th cent., Littré). = Lat. solubilis, acc. of solubilis, dissolvable. Formed, with suffix -ibilis, from sol-, found in solutus, pp. of solvere, to solve, dissolve; see SOLVE. Der. solubilit-ty, a coined word.

SOLUTION, a dissolving, resolving, explanation, discharge. (F., = L.) M. E. solucion, Gower, C. A. ii. 86, l. 5; it was a common term in alchemy. = F. solution, 'a discharge, resolution, dissolution'; Cot. = Lat. solutio, acc. of solutio, lit. a loosing. = Lat. solut-, pp. of solvere, to loose, resolve, dissolve; see SOLVE.

SOLVE, to explain, resolve, remove. (L.) Not an early word. In Milton, P. L. viii. 55. = Lat. solvere, to loosen, relax, solve; pp. solutus. A compound verb, compounded of sol-, put for sol-, or sol-, apart; and luere, to loosen. For the prefix, see SOBER. Luere is from the base LU, to set free, appearing also in Gk. lu-, to set free, release; see LOOSE. Der. solvable, from F. solvable, orig. 'payable'. Cot. Also solvent, having power to dissolve or pay, from Lat. solvent-, stem of pres. part. of solvere; and hence solvent-er-ly. Also solvent; solvent-er, solvent-erly, solvent-erly; solvent-erly, solvent-erly; solvent-erly, solvent-erly. And see soluble, solution.

BOMBRE, gloomy, dusky. (F., = L.) A late word; in Todd's Johnson. = F. sombre, 'close, dark, cloudy, muddy, shady, dusky, gloomy'; Cot. It answers to Span. adj. sombrio, adj., shady, gloomy, from the sb. sombra, shade, dark part of a picture, also a ghost. So also Port. sombrio, adj., from sombra, shade, protection, ghost. And cf. Span. sombro, to frighten, terrify. β. Dies refers these words to a Lat. form sombro°, to shadow or shade; a conjecture which is supported by the occurrence of Prov. sombro, to shade (Scheler). There is also an O. F. sombro, a dark place (Burguy), which is probably due to a Lat. form sombro°, and this suggests the same form as the original of the present word, a solution which is adopted by Littré.

γ. Scheler argues that the suggestion of Dies is the better one; and instances the (doubtful) derivation of F. sombre, to sound the depth of water, from Lat. sombro°, as well as the curious use of F. sombro as a nautical term, 'to founder,' to go under the waves. δ. We may conclude that sombre is founded upon the Lat. sombra, a shadow, with a prefix due either to Lat. so- or to Lat. sub-, probably the former. See UMBRA. Der. sombro-ness.

SOME, a certain number or quantity, moderate in degree. (E.) M. E. some, sum; pl. summe, summe, summe. 'Summe seedis' = some seeds; Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 4. 'Som in his bed, som in the depe see' = one man in his bed, another in the deep sea; Chaucer, C. T. 3033. = A. S. sum, some one, a certain one, one; pl. summe, some; Grein, ii. 493. + Icel. sumr, + Dan. summe, pl. + Swed. sumliga, pl. (= some-like). + Goth. summa, some one. + O. H. G. sum. β. All from a Teut. type SOMA, some one, a certain one, Fick, iii. 311; allied to E. some; see SAME. The like change from s to o (e) occurs in the suffix -some, which see. Der. some-body, Merry Wives, iv. s. 121; some-how; some-thing = A. S. sum ting; some-time, M. E. sumtime, Chaucer, C. T. 1245; some-times, formed from sumtime by the addition of the adverbial suffix -a, the sign of the gen. sing., not of the nom. pl. (cf. used-a, whil-a, twi-ca, &c.); some-what, M. E. somwhat, Ancren Riwle, p. 44, l. 9 = A. S. sum what; some-where, M. E. somwhere, Ormulum, 6929; some-whether, Titus Andronic. iv. 1. 11.

SOME, suffix. (E.) A. S. -sum, as in wyn-sum (lit. love-some), E. win-some. The same suffix appears in Icel. frid-sumr, peaceful, G. lang-sum, slow. Thus the orig. form is -SAMA, which is identical with Teut. SAMA, the same; and win-some = win-soma, G. lang-sum = long-same, and so on. See WINSOME and SAME.

SOMERSAULT, BOMERSAULT, a leap in which a man turns heels over head. (F., = Ital., = L.) Commonly pronounced summersault, where -saut is a corruption of -sault or -saut. Spelt summersault in Drayton's Polyolbion, song 6 (R.); somersault in Harington's Aristotle, xxxv. 68 (Nares); see further in Rich. and Nares. = F. somersault, 'a somersault or summersault, as active trick in tumbling'; Cot. = Ital. sopra salto; where sopra = 'above, over, aloft, on high, and salto = 'a leap, a skip, a lunge, a bound, a sault'; Florio. = Lat. sopra, above; and salto, acc. of salto, a leap, bound, formed from salto, pp. of salire, to leap. See SUPRA and SALIENT.

SOMNAMBULIST, one who walks in his sleep. (L.; with Gk. nyct-) A coined word; an early example is given in Todd's Johnson, from Bp. Porteus' Sermons, A. N. 1789. The suffix -ist = F. -iste, from Lat. -ista = Gk. -istes; as in doct-ist. = Lat. somnus, sleep; and ambul-are, to walk. See SOMNIFEROUS and AMBULATION. Der. somnambul-ism.

SOMNIFEROUS, causing sleep. (L.) Somniferous* potions; Barton, Anat. of Melancholy, pt. i. sect. 2, memb. 1, subsect. 3. Coined by adding suffix -ferus (properly = F. -ferus, from Lat. -ferus) to Lat. somnus, sleep-bringing. = Lat. somni-, for somno-, crude form of somnus, sleep; and -fer, bringing, from ferre, to bring, cognate with E. bear, verb. β. The Lat. somnus represents an older form sopnus°, cognate with Skt. sopnas, sleep, and allied to swap-, sleep; from √ SWAP, to sleep; see further under Soporific.

SOMNOLENCE, sleepiness. (F., = L.) M. E. somnolence, spelt sompolence, Gower, C. A. ii. 92, l. 13. = F. somnolence (Littré); doubtless in early use, though not so recorded. = Lat. somnolentia, better somnolentia, sleepiness. = Lat. somnolentus, sleepy; formed with suffix -lentus (as in temulentus, drunken) from somno-, sleep, allied to sop-, sleep; see SOMNIFEROUS, Soporific. Der. somnolent, adj., from F. somnolent, Lat. somnolentus.

SON, a male child or descendant. (E.) M. E. son (properly a dissyllable); Chaucer, C. T. 79; older form some, Ancren Riwle, p. 26, l. 1. = A. S. sunu, a son; Grein, ii. 496. + Du. soon. + Icel. sonr, son. + Dan. sun. + Swed. son. + G. sohn. + O. H. G. sunu. + Goth. sunus. + Lithuan. sunas. + Russ. syn. + Gk. uio (for uiois). + Skt. sunu, a son. β. All from the Aryan form SUNU, a son; Fick, l. 230. = √ SU, to beget; as seen in Skt. su, sat, to beget, bear, bring forth. Thus son = one who is begotten, a child. Der. son-in-law; sonship; a coined word.

SONATA, a kind of musical composition. (Ital., = L.) 'An Italian sonata'; Addison, in Todd (no reference). = Ital. sonata, 'a sounding, or fit of mirth'; Florio. Hence used in the technical sense. = Lat. sonata, fem. of sonatus, pp. of sonare, to sound; see SOUND (3), and BONNET.

SONG, that which is sung, a short poem or ballad. (E.) M. E. song, Chaucer, C. T. 95. = A. S. song, later form song; Grein, ii. 390. = A. S. sing, pt. t. of singan, to sing; see SING. + Du. zang. + Icel. singr. + Swed. sang. + Dan. and G. sang. + Goth. saggus (= sangus). Der. sang-ster, used by Howell, L'Estrange, and Dryden (Todd, no references); from A. S. sangstere (better sangstere), given in Wright's Vocab. l. 72, as a gloss to Lat. canaris; formed with double suffix -stere from sang, a song; as to the force of the suffix, see SPINSTER. Hence sangstere, Thomson's Summer, 746; a coined word, made by needlessly affixing the F. suffix -stere (Lat. -stere, from Gk. -stere) to the E. sangstere, which was orig. used (as shewn above) as a feminine sb. Also sang-song, Fuller's Worthies, Barkshire (R.); a reduplicated form.

BONNET, a rimed poem, of fourteen lines. (F., = Ital., = L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iii. s. 69. See 'Songs and Sonettes' by the Earl of Surrey, in Tottell's Miscellany. = F. sonnet, 'a sonnet, or canzonet, a song (most commonly) of 14 verses'; Cot. = Ital. sonetto, 'a sonnet, canzonet'; Florio. Dimin. of sonno, 'a sound, a tune'; Florio. = Lat. sonum, acc. of sonus, a sound; see SOUND (3). Der. sonnet-er, from Ital. sonettiere, 'a composer of sonnets'; Florio; the suffix -er (Ital. -iere) is due to Lat. suffix -arius.

SONOROUS, loud-sounding. (L.) Properly sonorus; it will probably, sooner or later, become sonorous. 'Sonorous metal'; Milton, P. L. l. 540; and in Cotgrave. Doubtless taken directly from the Lat. sonorus, loud-sounding, by the change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, stravagan, and numerous other words. [The F. sonoreux, 'sonorous, loud,' is in Cotgrave; this would probably have produced an E. form sōroren, the length of the Latin penultimate being lost sight of.] — Lat. sonor (gen. sonor-is), sound, noise; allied to sonus, sound; see SOUND (3). Der. sonorous-ly, -ness.

SOON, immediately, quickly, readily. (E.) M. E. soone (disyllabic); Chaucer, C. T. 13442. — A. S. soona, soon; Grein, ii. 465. + O. Fries. soen, soen. + O. Sax. soin. + O. H. G. soin. β. We find also Goth. soin (or soin), soon, at once, immediately. Matt. viii. 3. I believe the connection to be with E. so, A. S. soð, from the pronominal base SWA, rather than with A. S. so, from the pronominal base SA. See SO.

SOOT, the black deposit due to smoke. (E.) M. E. soot (with long o); King Alsaunders, 6636. — A. S. soot; 'Fulgine, soot,' Wright's Voc. ii. 36, col. 1; we also find sootig, adj. sooty, and sootian, verb, to make dirty (Leo). + Icel. soð. + Swed. soot. + Dan. soot (for soot). + Lithuan. soðis, soot; usually in the pl. form soðis; whence the adj. soðis, sooty, and the verb soðinti, to blacken with soot, besmear. β. We find also Irish soth, Gael. soith, W. soets; but these may be words not originally Celtic; the Lithuan. form is valuable as shewing that the form soot is truly Teutonic. Root unknown. Der. soot-y, soot-i-ness.

SOOTH, adj., true; sb., truth. (E.) The adjectival sense is the older one. M. E. sooth (with long o), adj., true; Pricks of Conscience, 7687. Commoner as a sb., meaning 'the true thing,' hence 'the truth'; Chaucer, C. T. 847. — A. S. soð, adj., true (very common); Grein, ii. 466. Hence soð, neuter sb., a true thing, truth; id. 462. The form soð stands for soðs, the s being lost before the aspirate, as in soð, a tooth, which stands for soðs; the loss of s causes the o to be long. + Icel. soð (for soðs). + Swed. soot. + Dan. soot. β. All from Teut. base SANTHA, true; Fick, iii. 118. And again, SANTHA is certainly an abbreviation for ASANTHA, orig. signifying 'being,' or 'that which is,' hence that which is real, truth; a present participial form from the √ AS, to be. The same loss of initial s occurs in the Lat. soos as found in pro-soos (stem pro-soot-), preserved in E. pro-soot; and again in the Skt. soya, true (put for so-soya); so also we have G. soot = Lat. soot = Skt. sooti, they are, all answering to Aryan so-ant. In the Gk. sothos, true, not only this initial s but also the following h has been lost, so that sothos (for so-ho-sothos) represents only the portion -soth of the E. word. Hence Curtius says of sothos that 'the root is so, to be [Aryan so]. The meaning "true," "real," appears already in the Skt. participle soot, the shorter form for soot = (so-ant) (Lat. pro-soot).' γ. Hence we conclude that the very interesting word sooth meant orig. no more than 'being,' and was at first the present participle of AS, to be. See ARE, EMANATE, and ELN. Der. for-sooth, = for a truth, A. S. for-soð, as in 'wite þu for-soð' = know thou for a truth, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. ii. pr. 2, cap. vii. § 3. Also sooth-fast, true (obsolete), from A. S. soð-fast, Grein, ii. 463, where the suffix is the same as in stead-fast and shame-fast (now corrupted to shame-faced). And see sooth-ey, and sooths.

SOOTHE, to please with gentle words or flattery, to flatter, appease. (E.) The orig. sense is 'to assent to as being true,' hence to say yes to, to humour by assenting, and generally to humour. 'Sooth, to flatter immoderately, or hold vp one in his talk, and affirm it to be true, which he speaketh;' Baret (1580). 'Is't good to sooth him in these contraries?' Com. of Errors, iv. 4. 82. 'Soothing the humour of fantastic wits;' Venus and Adonis, 850. Cf. the expression 'words of sooth,' Rich. II. iii. 3. 136. M. E. sothien, to confirm, verify; whence sothet, confirmed, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 361, l. 8. — A. S. soð-bian (where the prefix soð makes no difference), to prove to be true, confirm; Dooms of Edward and Guthrum, sect. 6, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, l. 170. Cf. A. S. soð, a parasite, flatterer, in a gloss (Boosworth). — A. S. soð, true; see SOOTH. Cognate verbs occur in the Icel. sooda, Dan. soode, to verify, confirm.

SOOTHSAY, to foretell, tell the truth beforehand. (E.) In Shak. Antony, i. 2. 59. Compounded of sooth and say; see SOOTH and SAY. We find the sb. soothsayer, spelt soþ-ysger (in the Kentish dialect) in the Aenbite of Iwary, p. 256, l. 3 from bottom; spelt soothsayer, Gower, C. A. iii. 164, l. 24. We also find the A. S. sb. soðsaga, a true saying, in Ælfred's Homilies, ii. 350, l. 21; and the adj. soðsagod, truth-speaking, Wright's Vocab. l. 76, l. 18. Der. sooth-ey-er; sooth-ey-ing, Acts, xvi. 16.

SOP, anything soaked or dipped in liquid to be eaten. (E.) M. E. soppe; 'a sop in wyne,' Chaucer, C. T. 336; spelt soppe, P. Plowman, B. xv. 175. — A. S. soppa, soppa, not found; but we find the derived verb soppian, to sop, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 228, last line, and the compound sb. sop-cuppe (written sop-cuppe), a sop-cup, in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, pp. 553, 554; so that the word is certainly English. — A. S. sopum, not found, but the regularly formed pp. of the strong verb sipian, to sip; see SUP. + Icel. soppa, a sop; soppa af vini = a sop in wine; from soppan, pp. of sipa, to sip; cf. also sipi, a sup, sip, mouthful. These Icel. forms make (the A. S. forms certain + O. Du. soppe, 'a sop'; Hexham. ¶ Sopp is a F. form of the same word, and has been borrowed back again into some Teutonic tongues, as e.g. in the case of G. suppe, soup, broth. Der. sop, verb, spelt soppe in Levisa, from A. S. soppigan, to sop, mentioned above. Also sopp-y, soaking, wet. Also soth-sop = one who sops milk; see MILKSOP. Doublet, sopp, q. v.

SOPHIST, a captious reasoner (F., — L., — Gk.). Not in early use; Todd cites an example from Temple. It is remarkable that the form in use in old authors was not sophist, but sophister. Frith has sophisme, sophistry, and sophister all in one sentence; Works, p. 44, col. 8. Shak. has sophister, 2 Hen. VI, v. 1. 191. The final -er is needlessly added, just as in philosoph-er, and was probably due (in a similar way) to an O. F. form sophistore, substituted for the true form sophiste = F. sophiste, 'a sophister'; Cot. — Low Lat. sophista. — Gk. sophistēs, a cunning or skilful man; also, a Sophist, a teacher of arts and sciences for money; see Liddell and Scott. — Gk. sophisai, to instruct, lit. to make wise. — Gk. sophos, wise; allied to so-phos, orig. 'tasty,' hence of a keen, decided taste, and so clear, evident, sure. Further allied to Lat. sapere, to taste, whence sapient, wise; see SAPIENT. Curtius, ii. 64. Der. sophist-er-y, M. E. sophistrie, Chaucer, Leg. of Good Women, 137, from F. sophistrie, 'sophistry,' Cot. Also sophist-er, from Lat. sophisticus, which from Gk. sophisticus; sophist-er-ly, sophist-er-ly; sophist-er-ate, used in the pp. sophisticated by Skelton, Garland of Laurell, 110, from Low Lat. sophisticatus, pp. of sophisticare, to corrupt, adulterate. Also sophism, (used by Frith as above), from F. sophisme, 'a sophism, fallacy, trick of philosophy,' Cot., which from Lat. sophisma = Gk. sophisma, a device, captious argument. Also philosophy, q. v.

SOPORIFEROUS, causing or inducing sleep. (L.) 'Soporiferous medicament;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 978. Coined by adding the suffix -ous (properly = F. -ous, from Lat. -osus) to Lat. soporifer, sleep-inducing = Lat. sopor, crude form of sopor, sleep; and fer, bringing, from ferre, cognate with E. BEAR, verb. β. Lat. sopor stands for soop-er, from √ SWAP, to sleep, appearing in Skt. soop, to sleep, Gk. sovos, sleep, A. S. soofas, a dream; see Curtius, l. 360. See soporifera and somniferous.

SOPORIFIC, inducing sleep. (L.) 'Soporifera or anodyne virtues;' Locke, Human Understanding, b. ii. c. 23 (R.) A coined word, as if from Lat. soporiferus; from sopor, crude form of sopor, sleep; and ferre, causing, from ferre, to make. See SOPORIFEROUS and FACT. And see SOMNIFEROUS.

SOPRANO, the highest kind of female voice. (Ital., — L.) A musical term. — Ital. soprano, 'sovereign, supreme, also, the treble in music;' Florio. — Low Lat. sopranus, sovereign; see SOVERAIGN. Doublet, soverign.

SORCERY, casting of lots, divination by the assistance of evil spirits, magic. (F., — L.) M. E. soerrie, Chaucer, C. T. 5177; King Alsaunders, 478. — O. F. soerrie, casting of lots, magic. — O. F. soerier, a sorcerer. — Low Lat. soerarius, a teller of fortunes by the casting of lots, a sorcerer. — Low Lat. soeriani, to cast lots, used a. p. 1350 (Ducange); cf. Lat. soeriri, to obtain by lot. — Lat. soer, crude form of soer, a lot; see SORT. Der. soer-er, Shak. Temp. iii. 2. 49, where the final -er is needlessly repeated, just as in poet-er, scholar-er; the form soer would have sufficed to represent the O. F. soerier mentioned above. Also soer-er-er, coined as a fem. form of soer-er by the addition of -er (F. -esse, Lat. -issa, Gk. -issa) to the short form soer as appearing in soer-er-y; the M. E. soer-er-er occurs in Gower, C. A. iii. 49, l. 24.

SORDID, dirty, mean, vile. (F., — L.) In Spencer, F. Q. v. 5. 23. — F. sordide, 'sordid'; Cot. — Lat. sordidus, vile, mean, orig. dirty. — Lat. sordis, crude form of sordis, dirt, smuttiness, orig. blackness; allied to E. sooty and sootily; see SWARTHY. Der. sordid-ly, -ness.

SORE, wounded, tender or susceptible of pain, grieved, averted. (E.) M. E. soer (with long o), grievous, Ancren Riwle, p. 208, l. 2; much commoner as sove (disyllabic), adverb, Chaucer, C. T. 7961. — A. S. sor, painful; Grein, ii. 391; the change from s to long o being quite regular, as in sove, sove, from A. S. soan, soan. + Du. soer, sore; also as adv. sorely, very much. + Icel. sorr, sore, aching. + Swed. sör. + O. H. G. sör, wounded, painful; cf. O. H. G. sörre, mod. G. sör, sorely, extremely, very; G. sör-en, to wound, lit. to make sore. β. All from Teut. base SAIRA, sore; Fick, iii. 313. Der. sove, adv., M. E. sove, A. S. sore, Grein; sove-ly, sove-ness. Also soer, sb., orig. a neuter sb., and merely the neuter of the adjective, occurring as A. S. sör (Grein), cognate with Du. sör, Icel. sör, Swed. sör, O. H. G. sör, all used as sbs. Also sorr-y, q. v.

SORRELL (1), a plant allied to the dock. (F., — M. H. G.) 'Sorrell, an herbe;' Palgrave. — O. F. sorrel, 'the herb sorrel or sorrel-dock'; Cot. Mod. F. sorrelle (Litré). So named from its sour taste; formed with the suffix -el (Lat. -ellus) from F. soer, 'sore, sharp, eager, tart'; Cot. — M. H. G. sör, sour, cognate with E.

SOUR, q. v. Hence also we find A. S. sira, sorrel, Cockayne's & Leechdoms, Glom. to vol. ii; from A. S. sír, sour.

SORREL (s), of a reddish-brown colour. (F., = Teut.) 'Sorrell', colour of an horse, sorrel; Palgrave. He also gives: 'Sorrell', a young buck; 'this is properly a buck of the third year, spelt sorol, L. L. L. iv. s. 60, and doubtless named from its colour. A dimin. form from O. F. sor (Burguy), F. sour, adj. 'sorrell of colour, whence harve sour, a red herring,' Cot. Hence sour, sb. m., 'a sorrell colour, also, a sorrell horse;' id. Cf. Ital. sora, a sorrel horse, also spelt surre; see Dies. = Low G. sour, sour, dried, dried or withered up; Du. sour, 'dry, withered, or scare,' Hexham; cognate with E. Beard, adj., q. v. The reference is to the brown colour of withered leaves; cf. Shakespeare's 'the sore, the yellow leaf,' Macb. v. 3. 23. The F. harve sour, explained by Cotgrave as a red herring, meant originally a dried herring; indeed Cot. also gives F. sour, 'to dry in the smook,' formed directly from Low G. sour.

SORROW, grief, affliction. (E.) M. E. sorow, Chaucer, C. T. 1221; also sorow, Will. of Shoreham, p. 32, l. 7. = A. S. sorg, sorh, sorrow, anxiety; gen. dat. and acc. sorgs (whence M. E. sorow, sorow); Grein, ii. 495. + Du. sorg, care, anxiety. + Icel. sorg, care. + Dan. and Swed. sorg. + G. sorg. + Goth. sawga, sorrow, grief; whence sawgan, to grieve.

β. All from Teut. base SORGA, care, solicitude; Fick, iii. 329. Perhaps related to Lithuan. sargti (1 p. s. pr. sargu), to be ill, to suffer; whence sarginis, to take care of a sick person, like G. sorgen, to take care of. γ. It is quite clear that sorrow is entirely unconnected with sore, of which the orig. Teut. base was SAIRA, from a √ SI (probably 'to wound'); but the two words were so confused in English at an early period that the word sorry owes its present sense to that confusion; see SORRY. Der. sorrow-ful, answering to A. S. sorgful, Grein, ii. 466; sorrow-ful-ly, sorrow-ful-ness.

SORRY, sore in mind, afflicted, grieved. (E.) Now regarded as closely connected with sorrow, with which it has no etymological connection at all, though doubtless the confusion between the words is of old standing. The spelling sorry with two r's is etymologically wrong, and due to the shortening of the s; the s was orig. long; and the true form is sor-y, which is nothing but the sb. sore with the suffix -y (A. S. -ig), formed exactly like stow-y from stow, how-y from how, and gory from gore (which has not yet been turned into gurry). We find the spelling sor-y as late as in Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Jn. ii. 631, ed. Arber, p. 64, l. 12. The orig. sense was wounded, afflicted, and hence miserable, sad, pitiable, as in the expression 'a sorry plight.' Cf. 'a salt and sorry [painful] rheum;' Oth. iii. 4. 81. M. E. sory (with long o and one r), often with the mod. sense of sorrowful; 'Sori for her synnes,' P. Plowman, B. x. 73. Also spelt sory. Pricks of Conscience, 1468. = A. S. sorig, sad; 'sorig for his synnum' = sorry for his sins, Grein, ii. 392; sor-sig, sorrow, lit. soreness, Ælfric's Homilies, 3rd Ser. vi. 321. Cf. sor-sig, lit. sore-like, used with the same sense of 'sad.' Formed with suffix -ig (as in stow-ig = stow-y) from A. S. sir, a sore, nest. sb., due to the adj. sir, sore. See SORE. Cognate words appear in Du. sorig, full of sores, Swed. sorig, sore; words which preserve the orig. sense. Der. sorry-ly, sorry-ness.

SORT, a lot, class, kind, species, order, manner. (F., = L.) 'Sorte', a state, sorte; Palgrave. A fem. sb., corresponding to which is the masc. sb. sort, a lot, in Chaucer, C. T. 846. = F. sorte, sb. fem. 'sort, manner, form, fashion, kind, quality, calling;' Cot. Related to F. sort, sb. masc. 'a lot, fate, luck,' &c.; id. Cf. Ital. sorte, sort, kind, sorte, fate, destiny; Florio gives only sorte, 'chance, fate, fortune, also the state, quality, function, calling, kinde, vocation or condition of any man,' whence the notion of sort (= kind) easily follows. 'Sort was frequently used in the sense of a company, assemblage (as in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 9. 5), as lot is in vulgar language;' Wedgwood. All the forms are ultimately due to Lat. sortem, acc. of sort, lot, destiny, chance, condition, state. Probably allied to sortis, to connect, and to sortis, order; see SORTIS. Der. sort, verb, L. L. L. i. 1. 261; sort, q. v.; sort, q. v. Also sorter, sb.; sort-ness, s. Hen. IV. iv. 1. 11; sort-ry, q. v.

SOETIE, a sally of troops. (F., = L.) A modern military term, and mere French. = F. sortie, an issue, going forth; Cot. Fem. of sortir, 'issued, gone forth,' id.; which is the pp. of sortir, 'to issue, sally,' id. Cf. Span. sortida, a sally, sortie; from Span. sortir, 'to rise, rebound,' Minshen, obsolete in this sense. Also Ital. sortita, a sally; from sortire, to make a sally, go out. β. According to Dies and others, Ital. sortire, to sally, is quite a different word from sortire, to elect, the latter being plainly connected with Lat. sortiri, to obtain by lot; whereas Ital. sortire, to sally, O. Span. sortir, to rise, answer to a Lat. type sortire, to rouse or rise up, formed from sortire, supine of sortere, to rise; see SOURCE. We may further note Ital. sorte, used as the pp. of sortere, to rise; shewing that the contraction of sortire to sortire presents no difficulty; and see RESORT.

SOT, a stupid fellow, a drunkard. (F., = C. F.) M. E. sot, in early use; Layamon, 1142; Ancren Riwle, p. 66, l. 1; in the sense of 'foolish.' We even find sot-ship = sot-ship, i. e. folly, in the A. S. Chron. an. 1131; ed. Earle, p. 260, l. 8; but this is in the late Laud MS., and the word is rather to be considered as French, with the A. S. suffix -scipe. The entry 'Sotus, sot' is in an A. S. Glossary of the 11th century; in Wright's Vocab. i. 76, col. 1. = O. F. and F. sot (fem. sotte), 'sottish, dull, duncical, gross, absurd;' Cot. We also find O. Du. sot, 'a fool or a sot,' Hexham; and Span. and Port. sote, a stupid person, blockhead. The O. F. sot is an old word, occurring in the 12th century, and doubtless earlier. β. The origin is very doubtful; possibly Celtic; we find Bret. sot, sot, stupid, but it is not known whether this is a true Celtic word; also Irish sot, a dunce, sot, a dunce, a booby, unless these words be due to the E. sot. [As to the form, cf. Irish sot, sot, with E. sot.] We also find Irish sot, pride, sot, proud; Gael. sot, pride, vainglory, whence the notion of 'foolish' may have arisen. See Dies, s. v. sote, where is also noted a proposed derivation from a Rabbinic word sotah (or sotah), meaning 'a fool;' but this is very improbable. It is known that Theodulf, bishop of Orleans, punned upon the words Sotus and sotus (Sot and sot), in a letter to Charles the Great; see Ducange, s. v. sottus. Der. sot-ly, sot-ly-ness.

SOU, a French copper coin, five centimes. (F., = L.) Merely borrowed from F. sou; Cotgrave uses sou as an E. word. = O. F. sol, later sol, 'the sou, or French shilling, whereof ten makes one of ours;' Cot. The value varied. = Lat. solidus, adj. solid; also, as sb., the name of a coin, still preserved in the familiar symbols l. s. d. (= libra, solidi, denarii). See SOLID and SOLDIER. Der. solid, q. v.

SOUGH, a sighing sound, as of wind in trees. (Scand.) Stanyhurst has soughing, sb., tr. of Virgil, Jn. ii. 631, ed. Arber, p. 61. 'My heart, for fear, gas sough for sough;' Burns, Battle of Sheriffmuir, l. 7. = Icel. sog, a rushing sound; in the comp. orn-sog, the sound of an eagle's flight. β. We also find M. E. sough, Chaucer, C. T. 1281, 3619; better sough, as in Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 759, where it has the sense of 'swaying motion;' formed as a sb. from the A. S. verb sugan, to sound, resound, make a noise, as in sugod windu = the winds whistle; Grein, ii. 316. [The A. S. sb. is sog, with mutation of g to d.] Cf. O. Sax. sugan, to rattle (Heliod.). Probably (like sig) of imitative origin.

SOUL, the seat of life and intellect in man. (E.) M. E. soole, Chaucer, C. T. 9010; also soole, Layamon, 27634; gen. sing. sooles, Gower, C. A. i. 39, l. 8; pl. soules, Ancren Riwle, p. 30, l. 16. = A. S. soul, soulo, soulo; also soul, soulo; gen. sing. soules; Grein, ii. 392. + Du. ziel. + Icel. siela, later form siel. + Dan. soel. + Swed. siel. + G. seele. + Goth. sawala. β. All from Teut. type SAIWALA, the soul. Origin unknown; but the striking resemblance between Goth. sawala, soul, and saima, sea, suggests a connection between these words. Perhaps (as Curtius suggests) the word see may be connected with √ SU, to press out juice, which appears to be identical with √ SU, to generate, produce. The Skt. su has the senses to produce, generate, express juice (esp. the Soma juice); and su may thus signify 'life,' as produced by generation. See SEA. γ. Otherwise, from √ SU, to stir up, toss about; cf. Gk. swel, swel. Der. souled, souled-ness; souled-ness. Also souled-ness, A. S. souled-ness, Wright's Vocab. l. 28, col. 2.

SOUND (1), adj., whole, perfect, healthy, strong. (E.) M. E. sound, Chaucer, C. T. 3570. = A. S. mund, sound; Grein, ii. 494. + Du. gesund (with prefix ge-). + Swed. and Dan. sund. + G. gesund (with prefix ge-). Origin uncertain; possibly connected with Lat. sanus, used with just the same meanings; see SANO. Der. sounded-ly, sounded-ness.

SOUND (2), a strait of the sea, narrow passage of water. (E.) M. E. sund, King Horn, 628, in Ritson's Met. Romances, ii. 117; spelt sund, Cursor Mundi, 621. = A. S. mund, (1) a swimming, (2) power to swim, (3) a strait of the sea, so called because it could be swam across; Grein, ii. 494. Hence A. S. mund-hamst, a sound-horse, i. e. a ship. + Icel., Dan., Swed., and G. sund. β. From the Teut. type SUNDIA, orig. a swimming, and doubtless pat. (as Fick suggests) for SWOMDA, by the common change from sw to s and the inevitable change of n to d before the following d. Formed, with suffix -dia, from swon or swun, base of the pp. of A. S. swimman, to swim; see SWIM. Fick, iii. 362. Der. sounded, the swimming-bladder of a fish; spelt sounded, Prompt. Parv. p. 466; this is merely another sense of the same word; cf. Icel. sund-magi, lit. sound-maw, the swimming-bladder of a fish. ¶ We cannot admit a derivation of A. S. sund from sundor, separate; it is like deriving wind from window, and indeed worse, since in the latter case there really is some connection.

SOUND (3), a noise. (F., = L.) The final d (after n) is excessive, just as in the vulgar ground for goun, in the nautical use of later spada, id. 94, col. 2. Also spada, id. 16, col. 1. † Du. spade. † Icel. spá; † Dan. and Swed. spade. † G. spate, spaten. † Gk. σπάδιον, a broad blade, of wood or metal, a spatula, blade of an oar, blade of a sword, spathe or sheath of a flower (whence Lat. spatha was borrowed, which further gave rise to F. épée, O. F. espee, a sword). β. All from † SPA, to draw out, extend; the implement being named from its broad flat surface; see Span. Der. spade (at cards); spadilla, the same word as paddle (2), q. v.; spat-ula, q. v.; spat-ula, spelt spadilla in Pope, Rape of the Lock, iii. 49, the ace of spades at the game of quadrille. F. spahie, borrowed from Spaa. espadilla, a small sword, the ace of spades, dimin. of spada, a sword, from Lat. spatha = Gk. σπάδιον. And see spasie.

SPALPEEN, a mean fellow. (Irish.) Sometimes introduced into novels relating to Ireland = Irish spáipín, a mean fellow, rascal, scroller; from spáip, a bean, also pride, self-conceit. † Gael. spáipéan, a beau, top, mean fellow; from spáip, pride, self-conceit; cf. spáip, verb, to strut, walk affectingly.

SPAN, to measure, extend over, grasp, embrace. (E.) M. E. spannen, very rare. 'Thence the kinge spanne his spare' = then the king grasps his spear; Avowing of Arthur, st. xii. l. 1. = A. S. spannan (pt. t. span), to bend; gospannan, to band, connect; Grein, ii. 467, l. 456. † O. H. G. spannan, to extend, connect, a strong verb, pt. t. span; hence G. spannen, weak verb. Further related words appear in the Du. spannen, pt. t. spande (weak), but pp. gespannen (strong), to stretch, span, put horses to; Dan. spande (for spanne), to stretch, strain, span, backle; Swed. spänna, to stretch, strain, draw, extend; Icel. spanna (= spanna, a casual form), to span, clasp. β. All from the Teut. verb SPANNAN, to extend, orig. a reduplicating verb with pt. t. spannan; Fick, iii. 352. The base SPAN is extended from † SPA, to span, extend; whence Gk. σπάω, to draw, draw out, Lat. spatium, extension, spatio, Skt. spāty, to swell, enlarge, spāśita, spāśita, enlarged, &c.; Fick, i. 319. And see Spin, Space, Speed. Der. span, sb., a space of about 9 inches, the space from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger when the fingers are most extended, also, the stretch of an arch or a space of time, from A. S. span (better spanu); we find 'span, vel hand-bread' = span, or hand-breadth, in Wright's Voc. l. 43, col. 2; so also Du. span, Icel. spánn, Dan. spand (for spann), Swed. spann, G. spanne. Hence span-long, Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, Act II. sc. 2, l. 93 from end; span-ometer, a game, 2 Hen. VI. iv. 2. 166. ¶ For span-new, see that word, which is unconnected with the present one.

SPANGLE, a small plate of shining metal. (E.) M. E. spangol, of which the sense seems to have been a lozenge-shaped spangle used to ornament a bridle; see Prompt. Parv., p. 313, note 3, and p. 467, note 1. It is the dimin. of spang, a metal fastening; with suffix -ol (which is commonly French, but occasionally English, as in horo-ol from cora). 'Our plumes, our spange, and all our quaint array; Gaucocoigne, Steel Glas, 377; 'With glittering spange that did like starris appare', Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 45. = A. S. spange, a metal clasp or fastening, Grein, ii. 467; also gspang, id. l. 456. † O. Du. spange; 'an spange was mused, a thinne peece of mettle, or a spangle'; Herbarum; 'an spange-maker, a buckle-maker or a spangle-maker', id. † Icel. spang, explained by 'spangle', though it seems rather to mean a clasp. † G. spange, a brooch, clasp, buckle, ornament. β. Root uncertain; the sense of 'clasp' suggests that it was early regarded as connected with the verb to span, since the G. spannen has the sense of 'tie' or 'fasten'; but the E. spangle is always regarded as involving the sense of 'glittering,' cf. prov. E. spangled, variegated, spangy, abowry (Halliwell). The form of the root is rather spag or spang than span, and the sense of 'glitter' appears in Lithuan. spingti, to glitter (Schlescher), not noted by Neummann, who only gives the form spandeti, to shine, spandeti, sunshine. It is probable that the root is † SPAG, to shine, which Fick assumes to account for Gk. σπῆγος; see Fick, i. 311. The Lithuan. forms spangalas, brightness, spangis, shining, are of importance in this connection, and are cited by Fick and Vanock; but they do not appear in Neummann. And note Gael. spang, a spangle, anything shining or sparkling.

SPANIEL, a Spanish dog. (F. = Spaa. = L.) M. E. spaniel, Chaucer, C. T. 549; spelt spyniel in five MSS., Group D, 367; spaneyole, Wright's Voc. l. 187. = O. F. espagnuel, 'a spaniel'; Cot. = Spaa. spaniel, Spanish = Spaa. Espania, Spain = Lat. Hispania, Spain. The origin of the name of the country is unknown.

SPANK, to beat or slap. (E.) 'Spank, a hard slap; to move energetically; Spanker, a man or animal very large, or excessively active; Spanking, large, lusty, active,' &c.; Halliwell. An E. word, though not found in old authors. † Low G. spahnern, spahnern, to run and spring about quickly. β. Both from a Teut. base SPAK, significant of quick motion or violent action. Compare the roots SPAD and SPAR, both significant of quick motion; Fick, i. 311. Der. span-er, an after-sail in a barque.

SPAN-NEW, entirely new. (Scand.) M. E. spannewe, Havelok, 968; Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1671; span-newe, K. Alisaunder, 4055. (The term is Scand., not E.; otherwise it would have been span-new which is the corresponding E. form, as will appear). = Icel. spánnyr, also spánnyr, span-new; compounded of spánn, a chip, shaving, made by a plane, knife, or axe; and nyr, new, cognate with E. New, q. v. Another sense of Icel. spánn is a spoon; see Spoon. † M. H. G. spannewise (E. Muller), answering to mod. G. spannen (id.); from M. H. G. spán, G. span, a chip, splinter, and newe or nen, new. β. We also use the phrase spick and span new, which is also of Scand. origin; see the very numerous phrases of this character given by Kerts, who instances spick-and-spannewe ny, completely new, answering to Swed. all spikas och spika ny, with its varying forms spick-and-spannewe ny, spick-and-spannewe ny, spick-and-spannewe ny, lit. spick-and-splinter-new; spick-and-splinter-new. So also Du. spick-and-splinter-new, lit. spick-and-splinter-new. So also Swed. spickny, lit. spick-new. So also Dan. spickerny, lit. splinter-new. The Swed. and Du. spick are forms of spike; hence spick and span new = spike and chip new. All the terms signify fresh from the hands of the workman, fresh cut from the block, chip and splinter new; † Wedgwood.

SPAR(1), a beam, bar, rafter; a general term for yards, guffs, &c. (E.) M. E. sparre (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 992. The A. S. sb. is not found, but the word is doubtless E.; we find the derived verb sparran, to fasten with a bar, to bolt, as in 'gesparrade dure' = the door being fastened, Matt. vi. 6 (Lindisfarne MS.). † Du. sparr. † Icel. sparr, sparra. † Dan. and Swed. sparre. † O. H. G. sparro; M. H. G. sparre; G. sparra. Cf. also Gael. and Irish sparr, a spar, joist, beam, rafter. β. The orig. sense seems to have been stick or pole, perhaps used by way of weapon; it is almost certainly related to Spear, q. v. For the probable root, see Spar(3). Der. sparr, verb, to fasten a door, bar it, P. Plowman, B. xix. 162 (foot-note).

SPAR(2), a kind of mineral. (E.) An old prov. E. mining-term; spelt sparr in Manlove's Liberties and Customs of the Lead-mines, A. D. 1653, l. 265 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 8). = A. S. sparr, found in the compound sparr-ston (spar-stone); 'Creta argentea, spar-ston'; Wright's Voc. l. 37, col. 2, l. 2; 'Gypsum, sparrm', id. ii. 209 (8th cent.). Cf. G. sparrkalk, plaster. β. The true G. name is spat or spath; this is a different word, and prob. connected with G. spaten, a spade (cognate with E. Spade), from the flaky nature of spar. The sense of the A. S. sparr-ston may be 'bar-stone,' from its crystallisation; if so, sparr(2) is really the same word as sparr(1). See Spar(1). Der. sparr-y.

SPAR(3), to box with the hands, dispute, wrangle. (F., = Teut.) 'To sparre, as cocks do, ausf-gere,' Levinus (1570). It was thus a term in cock-fighting, and orig. used of striking with the spars, as cocks do. Many terms of the chase and sports are F., and this is one of them = O. F. esparrer, 'to fling or jerk out with the heels, as a horse in high manage'; Cot. Mod. F. esparr, little used (Littre); which Littre connects with Ital. sparrare, of which one sense is 'to kick'; but this must be a different word from Ital. sparrare (= Lat. sparrare), to unfurnish, to let off a gun. β. I suppose O. F. esparrer to be of Teut. origin; from Low G. sparre, sb., a struggling, striving, Bremen Wörterbuch, iv. 945. Cf. G. sich sparran, to struggle against, resist, oppose; which Fick refers to the widely spread † SPAR, to tremble, quaver, throb, vibrate, jerk, used of rapid jerking action. From this root are Skt. spāś, to throb, to struggle; Gk. σπῆγος (= σπῆγος), σπῆγος, to straggle convulsively, and prob. Lat. sparrare, to despise, as well as E. Spur, Spurn, Spear, Sprawl, and even (by loss of initial s) the words Palestra, Palpable, Palpitata, and perhaps Poplar. The cognate Lithuan. word is spirti, to stamp, kick, strike out with the feet, resist, which exactly brings out the sense; so also E. spurn. The Russ. sparris, to quarrel, wrangle, sparr, a dispute, bear a striking resemblance to the E. word. See Curtius, i. 358; Fick, i. 311. Der. sparr-er, sparr-ing. And see sparr(1), sparr(2), sparr, sparrs, sparr, sparr, sparr. ¶ Malin refers us to A. S. sparrin, but this means 'to track out,' Lowland Scotch sparr, and is related to sparr; the root is the same.

SPARE, frugal, scanty, lean. (E.) M. E. spare (rare); 'ypoon spare wyse' = in a sparing manner, temperately; Gawain and the Grene Knight, 901. = A. S. spær, spare, sparing; found in the compounds spær-bynde, sparing, spær-lic, frugal, spærnis, frugality, all in various glosses (Leo); the derived verb spærnan, to spare, is not uncommon; Grein, ii. 467. † Icel. sparr, sparing. † Dan. sparr = sparran, thrifty. † Swed. sparr = sparran. † G. sparr = sparrlich. † Gk. σπαρῶν, rare, lacking. And cf. Lat. parum, little, parvus, sparing, parvus, to spare; which have lost initial a. β. The orig. sense seems to have been scanty, or thinly scattered; from † SPAR, to scatter, whence Gk. σπῆρ, to scatter, to sow, G. sparr, chaff; and this is only a particular sense of the wide spread † SPAR, to quiver; see Spar(3). See Curtius, i. 358; Fick, iii. 354. Der. sparr, verb, M. E. sparrs, Chaucer, C. T. 6919, from A. S. sparrin (Grein), as above; cognate with Du. and G. sparm, Icel. and Swed. spara, Dan. spare, and allied to Lat. parvus. Also spare-ness, spare-rib; spare-ly, spare-ness.

SPARK (1), a small particle of fire. (E.) M. E. spark, Havelok, 91. = A. S. spærca, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. iii. c. 13; cap. xxv. § 5. (Here spærca stands for an older spærca.) + O. Du. spærche (Hexham). + Low G. spærche; Brem. Wört.

β. So called from the crackling of a fire-brand, which throws out sparks; Icel. spærka, Dan. spærge, to crackle. The Teut. base SPRAK corresponds to Aryan √ SPARG, to make a noise, crackle, burst with a noise, appearing in Lithuan. spærge, to crackle like burning fir-wood, Gk. spærgein, a cracking, crackling. Skt. spærj, to thunder. This √ SPARG is an extension of √ SPAR, to quiver; cf. Skt. spær, to quiver, with Skt. spærj, to thunder. See SPEAR, and SPARK (2). Der. sparkle, a little spark, with dimin. suffix -le for -el (cf. burn-el from burn), M. E. spærle, Chaucer, C. T. 13833; also sparkle, verb, M. E. sparklen, C. T. 2166.

SPARK (2), a gray young fellow. (Scand.) In Shak. II. 2. 25. The same word as Wiltsh. spark, lively. M. E. sparklich, adv., also spelt sparkliche; P. Plowman, C. xli. 10, and footnote. = Icel. spærkr, lively, sprightly, also spelt spærkr, by the shifting of the r so common in E. and Scand. Hence Icel. spærkrigr, which = M. E. sparkliche, adj. + Swed. dial. spærkr, spærkrig, cheerful, talkative (Riets); Norweg. spærkr, ardent, cheerful, lively (Aasen). β. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'talkative,' or 'noisy,' from Teut. base SPRAK, to make a noise, also to speak; see SPEAR, and SPARK (1). ¶ The prov. E. spark is pronounced sprag by Sir Hugh, Merry Wives, iv. 1. 84.

SPARROW, a small well-known bird. (E.) M. E. sparrow, Chaucer, C. T. 618; sparrowe, Wyclif, Matt. x. 29. = A. S. spærrow (for spærrow), Matt. x. 29. + Icel. spærrow (rare). + Dan. spærrow. + Swed. spærrow. + O. H. G. spærrow (gen. spærrowe), also spærrow; M. H. G. spærrow; whence G. spærrow, a sparrow, with double dimin. suffix -ling. + Goth. spærrow. β. All from Teut. type SPARWA, a sparrow; lit. 'a flutterer;' from √ SPAR, to quiver, hence, to flutter; see SPAR (3). This is shown by comparing Lithuan. spærwa, a gad-fly (from its fluttering); and Lithuan. spærwa, a bird's wing, a fish's fin, the leaf of a folding door (from the movement to and fro). Der. sparrow-hawk, M. E. spærrowhawk, P. Plowman, B. vi. 199. A. S. spærrowhafu, Wright's Voc. I. 62, col. 1, short for spærrowhafu, as shown by the cognate words, viz. Icel. spærrowhawk (where spærrow is the stem of spærrow), Swed. spærrowhawk (from spærrow), Dan. spærrowhawk (from spærrow), O. H. G. spærroweri (= sparrow-er), in mod. G. corrupted to spærrower.

SPARRE, thinly scattered. (L.) Modern; yet the verb spærre, to scatter, occurs as early as 1536 (see Todd); and Spenser has 'spærred aire,' F. Q. I. 1. 39. = Lat. spærre (for spærre); pp. of spærre, to scatter, sprinkle. = √ SPARK, to sprinkle; cf. Skt. spærj, to sprinkle; an extension of √ SPAR, to scatter (Gk. spærre). See SPARE, SPRINKLE. Der. spærre-ly, spærre-ness. Also spærre, di-spærre, inter-spærre.

SPASM, a convulsive movement. (F., = L., = Gk.) 'Those who have their necks drawn backward . . . with the spasms;' Holland's Pliny, b. xx. c. 5; ed. 1634, ii. 41 d = F. spasme, 'the cramp;' Cot. = Lat. spasmus, acc. of spasme. = Gk. spasme, a spasm, convulsion. = Gk. spærre, to draw, pluck. = √ SPA, to draw, extend; see SPAN, SPIN. Der. spasm-oid, formed with suffix -oid from Gk. adj. spærre-oid, convulsive; spasm-oid-ic, spasm-oid-ic-ly.

SPAT, the young of shell-fish. (E.) In Webster. Formed from spat, the pt. t. of spat; see SPATTER. And compare Spot.

SPATE, a river-flood. (C.) 'While crashing ice, borne on the roaring spate;' Burns, Brigs of Ayr. And see Jamieson. From the Gaelic, but not given in Macleod and Dewar; the corresponding Irish word is spaid, a great river-flood.

SPATTER, to besprinkle, spit or throw out upon. (E.) 1. 'Which th' offended taste With spattering noise rejected;' Milton, P. L. x. 267. Here Milton uses it for spatter, the frequentative of Spit (2), q. v. 2. The usual sense is to be spat, and it is a frequentative form, with suffix -er, formed from Spot, q. v. An equivalent word is M. E. spatlon (Stratmann), whence the sb. spatlonge, spitting. Ancræn Riwle, p. 188, l. 10. Cf. A. S. spætl, spittle, John, ix. 6, spelt spætl in Wyclif.

SPATULA, a broad-bladed knife for spreading plaster. (L., = Gk.) Spelt spærula in Holland's Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 7 (not 17), l. 24 from the end. This is F. spærula, as in Cot. = Lat. spærula, also spærula; dimin. of spærca, an instrument with a broad blade. = Gk. spærula, a broad blade, a spatula, a paddle; cognate with E. Spade, q. v.

SPAVIN, a swelling near the joints of horses, producing lameness. (F., = Teut.) In Shak. Hen. VIII, i. 3. 22. M. E. spærwin, 'horsey naledy;' Prompt. Parv. = O. F. spærwin, 'a spavin in the leg of a horse,' Cot. Cf. O. Ital. spærwin, 'a spavin,' Florio; Ital.

spærwin; Span. spærwin (1) spavin, (2) a sparrow-hawk; Part. spærwin, mod. F. spærwin. β. A comparison of the forms (of which O. Ital. spærwin is put for spærwin) shows that they answer to a Low Lat. type spærwinus or spærwinus, parallel to Low Lat. spærwinus, spærwinus, a sparrow-hawk (F. spærwin). And just as spærwinus is formed with suffix -winus from O. H. G. spærwin, a sparrow (or is loaned from O. H. G. spærwin, a sparrow-hawk, which comes to the same thing), so Low Lat. spærwinus is formed with suffix -winus from the same word. The lit. sense is, accordingly, 'sparrow-like,' from the hopping or bird-like motion of a horse afflicted with spavin. The O. H. G. spærwin is cognate with E. Sparrow, q. v. ¶ Menage, who is followed by Dies and Littré, gives much the same explanation, but says that the disease is named from the sparrow-hawk (not the sparrow) because the horse lifts up his legs after the manner of sparrow-hawks. It is obvious that the sparrow is at least ten times more likely than the sparrow-hawk to be the subject of a simile, and it is also clear, by philology, that the Span. spærwin only means a sparrow-hawk because it first meant 'of or belonging to sparrows,' and hence 'sparrow-hunting,' exactly as in the parallel word spærwinus, which is formed in a similar way from the same word. When this correction is applied, I think the etymology may be accepted. The O. Du. spær, G. spær, also means cramp, convulsion, spavin; but cannot well be a related word, unless it be a corruption.

SPAWN, the same as Spa, q. v.
SPAWN, the eggs of fish or frogs. (F., = L.) 'Your multiplying spawn;' Cor. ii. 9. 82. 'Spawns of a fynde;' Palgrave. The verb occurs in Prompt. Parv., p. 467: 'Spærwin, spærwin, as fynchys, Pincicno.' Etym. uncertain. If we may take M. E. spærwin, to spawn, as the oldest form, it is probable that (as Wedgwood suggests) the etymology may be from O. F. spærwin, 'to shed, spill, pour out, to spread, cast, or scatter abroad in great abundance;' Cot. So also Ital. spærwin, to spill, shed, scatter. The sense suits exactly, and the loss of the d may be accounted for by supposing that M. E. spærwin was rather taken from the equivalent O. F. spærwin, 'to blow, or spread as a blooming rose, or any other flower in the height of its flourishing' (= mod. F. spærwin); which, notwithstanding the difference of form and sense, is nothing but another form of the same word. The word spærwin, to express the full blooming of a rose, actually occurs in the Rom. of the Rose, 3633. β. If this be right, the etymology is from Lat. spærwin, to spread out, hence, to shed abroad; see EXPAND. ¶ The suggestion of Maha, that the word is related to A. S. spærwin, a teat, udder, is unsatisfactory. Der. spærwin-er.

SPEAR, to utter words, say, talk. (E.) This word has lost an r, and stands for spærre. We can date the loss of the r at about a. d. 1100. The MSS. of the A. S. Gospels have sometimes spærre and sometimes spærre, so that the letter was frequently dropped as early as the 11th century, but it appears occasionally in the latest of them; the name is true for the sb. spærre or spærre, mod. E. spærre (for spærre); see John, iv. 26, &c. M. E. spærre, pt. t. spærre, pp. spærre, spærre; Chaucer, C. T. 792, 914, 31. = A. S. spærre (later spærre), pt. t. spærre (later spærre), pp. spærre; Grein, ii. 472. + Du. spærre. + O. H. G. spærre; G. spærre, pt. t. spærre. β. All from Teut. base SPRAK, to speak, of which the orig. sense was merely to make a noise, crackle, cry out, as in Icel. spærre, Dan. spærre, to crackle, Dan. spærre, to crack, burst; see SPARK (1). = √ SPARG, to make a noise; as in Lithuan. spærre, to crackle, rattle, Gk. spærre, a cracking, crackling, Skt. spærj, to thunder. Cf. Lowland Sc. spærre, a talk. Der. spærre-er; spærre-ship; spærre, q. v.; spærre-ness, q. v.

SPECIAL, particular, distinctive. (F., = L.) M. E. spærce, spærce, Ancræn Riwle, p. 36, l. 22. = O. F. spærce, 'special;' Cot. Mod. F. spærce. = Lat. spærce, belonging to a special, particular. = Lat. spærce; see SPECIES. Der. spærce-ly, spærce-ness, spærce-ly. Doublet, spærce.

SPECIES, a group of individuals having common characteristics subordinate to a genus, a kind. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1617; the M. E. form was spærce (see SPICE). = Lat. spærce, a look, appearance, kind, sort. = Lat. spærce, to look, see; see SPY. Der. spærce-ly, q. v. Also spærce, money in gold or silver, a remarkable form, evolved as sing. sb. from the old word spærce = 'money paid by tale,' as in Phillips, ed. 1706; probably by confusion with the Lat. ablative spærce, as if paid in spærce = paid in visible coin. Also spærce, q. v.

speci-um, q. v., speci-ous, q. v. Also speci-al (doublet of special), fronti-species, q. v. Doublet, speci.

SPECIFY, to particularize. (F., = L.) M. E. specifien, Gower, C. A. l. 33, l. 3. = O. F. specifier, 'to specify, particularize'; Cot. = Lat. specificare, only found in the pp. specificatus, to specify. = Lat. adj. specificus, specific, particular. = Lat. speci-, for species, a kind; and -ficus, i. e. making, from Lat. facere, to make; see Species and Fact.

SPECIMEN, a pattern, model. (L.) 'Specimen, an example, proof, trial, or pattern;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. specimen, an example, something shown by way of sample. = Lat. speci-, for specere, to see; with suffix -men (= Aryan -ma-na, Schleicher, Compend. § 219). See Spy.

SPECIOUS, showy, plausible. (F., = L.) M. E. speciosus, sightly, beautiful; see Treach, Select Glossary. = O. F. speciosus, 'specious, goodly, fair'; Cot. = Lat. speciosus, fair to see. = Lat. speci-, for specere, to behold; with suffix -osus; see Spy. Der. speciosity, -ness.

SPECK, a small spot, blemish. (E.) Speck in Levi, ed. 1550. 'Speckle, clowte, Pictaciun,' i. e. a patch; Prompt. Parv. = A. S. specca, a spot, mark, pl. speccas; 'Notus, speccum,' Wright's Voc. ii. 60, col. 1. Cf. Low G. spaken, to spot with wet, spahig, spotted with wet; Brem. Wört. iv. 931; O. Du. speckelen, 'to speckle, or to spott,' Hexham.

¶ The O. Du. speckelen is obviously the frequentative of O. Du. speken, to spit, and Wedgwood's suggestion that 'the orig. lies in the figure of apostrophus with wet' is prob. correct. Cf. G. specken, to spit. Thus speck is 'that which spots,' a blot; from Teut. base SPAK, to spit, to which speck is related precisely as spot is to spit; so also speckle is to be compared with spatter. All evidently from the same ultimate root. See Spew. Der. speck, verb, Milton, P. L. l. 419. Also speck-ly, a little spot, dimin. form, Spenser, tr. of Virgil's Georg., 250; cf. Du. speckel, a speckle. Hence speckle, verb.

SPECTACLE, a sight, show. (F., = L.) M. E. spetaculo, Wyclif, 1 Cor. iv. 9. = F. spetacle, 'a spectacle,' Cot. = Lat. spetacularium, a show. Formed with suffixes -u-ly (= Aryan -ho-ru, Schleicher, Compend. § 231, 230), from Lat. spetare, to see. = Lat. spetare, spine of spetare, to see; see Spy. Der. spetacles, pl. glasses for assisting the sight, pl. of M. E. spetacle, a glass through which to view objects, Chaucer, C. T. 6783; hence spetacle-at, Cot. ii. 1. 222. And see spetator, spetare, spetare.

SPECTATOR, a beholder. (L.; or F., = L.) In Hamlet, li. 2. 46; spelt spetator, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 27. (Perhaps from F. spetateur, 'a spectator,' Cot.) = Lat. spetator, a beholder; formed with suffix -tor (Aryan -tar) from spetare, to behold. = Lat. spetare, spine of spetare, to see; see Spectacle, Spy.

SPECULAR, suitable for seeing, having a smooth reflecting surface. (L.) 'This specular mount,' Milton, P. R. iv. 236. = Lat. specularis, belonging to a mirror. = Lat. speculum, a mirror. = Lat. specere, to see; see Spy. ¶ Milton's use of the word is due to Lat. specula, fem. sb., a watch-tower, a closely allied word. Der. specul-ate, from Lat. speculatus, pp. of speculari, to behold, from specula, a watch-tower; hence specul-at-ion, Minshew, ed. 1627, from F. speculation, 'speculation,' Cot., which from Lat. acc. speculationem; specul-at-or = Lat. speculator; specul-at-ive, Minshew, from Lat. speculationum. We also use specul-ous = Lat. speculosus, a mirror.

SPEECH, talk, language. (E.) M. E. speche (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 8729, 13851. Put for speche, by loss of v. = A. S. speca, later form of speca, Grein, ii. 471. = A. S. speccan, to speak; see Speak. + Du. spreek; from spechen. + G. spechen; from spechen. Der. speech-less, speech-ly, -ness.

SPEED, success, velocity. (E.) The old sense is 'success' or 'help.' M. E. sped (with long e); 'isæl sped' = evil speed, ill success, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 310. = A. S. sped, haste, success; Grein, ii. 467. Here ð is due to d, by the usual change, (as in fast, A. S. fist, fast, A. S. fist.) and sped stands for spede. + O. Sax. sped, success (Heland). + Du. sped, speed. + O. H. G. spant, spat, success. ¶ All from Teut. type SPÖDI, speed, success (Fick, iii. 355). Here the -di is a suffix, answering to Aryan -ti (Schleicher, Compend. § 226), and the cognate Skt. word is spāti, increase, prosperity, put for spāti-ā, from spāti, to increase, enlarge; Benfey, p. 1067.

¶ The A. S. sped is, similarly, from the strong verb spētan, to succeed, Grein, ii. 471; and the O. H. G. spaw is allied to the verb spān, to succeed, an irregular weak verb. ¶ All from SPA, to draw out, extend, hence to have room, succeed; appearing in numerous derivatives, such as Skt. spāti, to increase, Lat. spatium, room, spas, hope, prosper, prosperous, Lithuan. spatas, leisure, opportunity, &c. See Spaz. Fick, i. 859. Der. spand, verb, A. S. spadan, weak verb, pt. t. spædde, Grein, ii. 468; spand-y, A. S. spahig; Icel. spæd-i-ly, spæd-i-ness.

SPEIR, to ask. (E.) See Spur.
SPELICANS, a game played with thin slips of wood. (Du.) Imported from Holland, which is famous for toys. Englished from O. Du. speliken, a small pin (Hexham); formed with the O. Du. dimin. suffix -ken (= G. -chen, E. -kin) from O. Du. spelle, a pin, splinter of wood, cognate with E. Spall (4), q. v.

SPELL (1), a form of magic words, incantation. (E.) M. E. spel, dat. spelle, Chaucer, C. T. 13821. = A. S. spel, spell, a saying, story, narrative; Grein, ii. 469. + Icel. spella, a saying. + O. H. G. spel, a narrative. + Goth. spil, a fable, tale, myth. ¶ All from Teut. type SPELLA, a tale, narrative, saying; Fick, iii. 355. Root unknown. Der. spell (2), q. v.; go-spel, q. v.

SPELL (2), to tell the names of the letters of a word. (E.) M. E. spellen; 'Spellen letters, Sillabeco; Spellyngs, Sillabacacio; Spellen [speller], Sillabacator,' Prompt. Parv. 'Lere hem hitum and hitum . . . Tyl þei counthe speke and spelle,' &c. = teach them by little and little till they could pronounce and spell; P. Plowman, B. xv. 399, 600. = A. S. spellan, to declare, relate, tell, speak, discourse; Grein, ii. 469; and see examples in Bosworth. = A. S. spel, spell, a discourse, story; see Spell (1). ¶ I. Cotgrave has O. F. speller, 'to spell, to speak, to join letters or syllables together;' but this is not the origin of the E. word, being itself derived from Teutonic; cf. Du. spellen, to spell, M. H. G. spelian, to relate, Goth. spellan, to narrate, all cognate with the E. word.

2. The orig. sense was 'to say' or 'tell' the letters; but it would seem that the word was sooner or later confused with the old and prov. E. spell, in the sense of a splinter of wood, as though to spell were to point out letters with a splinter of wood. Thus Palgrave has 'festus to spell with;' where festus is F. festu, 'a straw, rush, little stalk or stick' (Cot.), from Lat. festus; and Halliwell cites from a Dict. written about A. D. 1500 the entry 'To speldy, Syllabecare,' agreeing with the form 'spelder of woods' in Palgrave; indeed, speldron, to spell, occurs in the Ormsulum, 16347, 16440. So even in Hexham's O. Du. Dict. we have 'spelle, a pin, with a striking resemblance to 'spellan, to spell letters or words.' Nevertheless, this resemblance, brought about by long association, is due to the assimilation of the word for 'splinter' to the verb rather than the contrary; see Spell (4). See speltium in Stratzmann's O. Eng. Dict. Der. spell-er, spell-ing, spell-ing-book.

SPELL (3), a turn of work. (E.) 'To Do a Spell, in sea-language, signifies to do any work by turns, for a short time, and then leave it. A fresh spell, is when fresh men come to work, esp. when the rowers are relieved with another gang; to give a spell, is to be ready to work in such a one's room;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Not found in M. E., but it is almost certainly due to A. S. spellan, to supply another's room, to act or be proxy for (Bosworth). Whelock, in his edition of Ælfred's tr. of Bede, p. 251, quotes the following sentence from a homily: 'Se cyning is Cristes sylfes spelligend' = the king supplies the place of Christ himself. So also the following: 'Næs ðeah Isaac oðlegon, ac se ramm hine spokode' = Isaac, however, was not slain himself, but the ram supplied his place, or took his spell; Ælfric's Hom. ed. Thorpe, ii. 62. ¶ The A. S. spellan is doubtless the same word as Du. spelen, Icel. spila, Dan. spille, Swed. spela, G. spielen, to play, act a part; all of these being denominative verbs, formed from the sb. which appears as Swed. and Du. spel, Icel. and Dan. spil, G. spiel, O. H. G. spil, a game. All from a base SPILL; root unknown.

SPELL (4), SPILL, a thin slip of wood, splinter; a slip of paper for lighting candles. (E.) This word has been assimilated to the verb to spell, from the use of a slip of wood, in schools of the olden times, to point out letters in a book. See remarks on Spell (2). The true form is rather speld. M. E. speld, a splinter; pl. speldes, splinters of a broken spear, Will. of Palerne, 3393; hence the dimin. spelder, a splinter (Palgrave), spelt speldor, Avowynge of Arthur, xii. 6. = A. S. speld, a torch, spilt to light a candle with, in a gloss (Bosworth). + Du. speld, a pin; spil, the pin of a hobbin, spindle, axis. + Icel. spild, spildi, a square tablet, orig. a thin slice of board; spilde, a flake, a slice. + Goth. spilda, a writing-tablet. + M. H. G. spelle, a splinter. ¶ All from the Teut. type SPELLDA, a splinter, also, tablet; Fick, iii. 354; and this from the Teut. base SPALD, to cleave, split, appearing in Icel. spilla (for spilda, spildja), to destroy, G. spalten, to cleave. Cf. Shetland speld, to split (Edmondston). See Spill (1). Thus the orig. sense is 'that which is split off,' a flake, slice, &c. Der. speltians, q. v. Doublet, spell (1).

SPELT, a kind of corn. (E.) Called 'spelt corn' in Minshew, ed. 1627. Not found in M. E. — A. S. spelt. 'Faar [i. e. Lat. far]. spelt.' Wright's Voc. i. 287. col. 1. + Du. spelt. + G. spelt, spelt. β. Cf G. speltz, chaff, shell, beard of ear of corn. Levens, ed. 1570, has: 'To spelt come, tundere, egulumare, i. e. to thresh corn, remove the chaff; which suggests a connection with the verb to split. See Split, Spill (4). And cf. spelt, a splinter (Halliwell).

SPELTER, pewter, zinc. (E.?) 'Spelter, a kind of metall, not known to the antients, which the Germans call zinc;' Bionnt's Gloss., ed. 1674. I cannot find an early example of the word; whether it is E. or not is uncertain; but it is prob. Teutonic, in any case, and occurs again in Low G. spalter, pewter, Bremen Wörterbuch; Du. spalter. It is obviously the original of Ital. paltra, pewter, and an older form of pewter, so that it must be as old as the 14th century. Perhaps it is a variant of M. E. spidder, a splinter (Palsgrave), and refers to pieces of mixed metal. See Spall (4), Pewter.

SPENCER, a short over-jacket. (F., = L.) Much worn about A. D. 1815; see Notes and Queries, 4 S. x. 356. 'Two noble earls, whom, if I quote, Some folks might call me sinner, The one invented half a coat, The other half a dinner;' Epigram quoted in Taylor, Words and Places. The reference is to Earl Spencer and Earl Sandwich. It thus appears that the spencer was named after the celebrated Earl Spencer, viz. John Charles Spencer, third earl, born 1781, died 1845. See further under Spand.

SPEND, to lay out (money), consume, waste. (L.) M. E. spendan, Chaucer, C. T. 302. = A. S. spendan; occurring in the compounds dis-spendan and for-spendan; see examples in Sweet's A. S. Reader. Not an A. S. word, but merely borrowed from Low Lat. dispendere, to spend, waste, consume. Cf. Low Lat. dispendium, dispenda, expense, of which the shorter forms spendium, spensa are also found. We also find Low Lat. spendibilis moneta, spending money, i. e. money for current expenses, occurring as early as A. D. 922 (Ducange). So also Ital. spendere, to spend, spende, expense, where spende = Lat. dispendium. Observe also O. F. despendre, 'to dispend, spend, expend, disburse,' Cot.; despenser, 'to dispend, spend,' id.; despensier, 'a spender, also a cater [caterer], or clerk of a kitchen,' id. β. In exactly the same way, the O. F. despenser became M. E. spencers or spensers, explained by cellararius in the Prompt. Parv., and now preserved in the proper name Spencer or Spenser, formerly Despenser. Hence even the battery or cellar was called a spence, as being under the control of this officer; 'Spence, botery, or celere,' Prompt. Parv. γ. The Lat. dispendere is compounded of dis-, apart, and pendere, to weigh; see Dis- and Pendant. ¶ The etymology sometimes given, from Lat. spendere, is certainly wrong; the s represents dis-, not sp-; precisely the same loss occurs in spout for disport. Der. spend-er; spend-thrift, i. e. one who spends what has been accumulated by thrift, Temp. ii. 1. 24.

SPERM, animal seed, spawn, spermaceti. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. sperma, Chaucer, C. T. 14015. = F. sperma, 'sperm, seed;' Cot. = Lat. sperma. = Gk. σπέρμα, seed. = Gk. σπέρμα (= σπέρμα), to sow; orig. to scatter with a quick motion of the hand. = SPAR, to quiver; see Spar (3) and Sparse. Der. spermat-ic, Gk. σπέρματις, from σπέρμα, stem of σπέρμα; spermat-ic-al. Also spermo-ol, sperm-whale; spermaceti, spelt spermaceti in 1 Hen. IV. l. 3. 58, from Lat. sperma ceti, sperm of the whale, where ceti is the gen. case of cetus = Gk. σῆτος, a large fish; see Octocousa. And see sper-ad-ic, spera.

SPEW, SPUE, to vomit. (E.) M. E. spewen, P. Plowman, B. x. 40. = A. S. spewan, strong verb, pt. t. spew, pp. spewen; Grein, ii. 470 + Du. spewen (Sewel). + Icel. spjja. + Dan. spjje. + Swed. spj. + O. H. G. spewan; G. spewen. + Goth. spewan. + Lat. spuere. + Lithuan. spuont. + Gk. σπύω (for σπύω). β. All from √ SPU, to spit forth; Fick, i. 835. Expressive of the sound of spitting out; cf. Skt. spita, spita, to spit, similarly intended. Der. (from same root), spit (1), spit (1). And see spit.

SPHERE, a globe, orb, circuit of motion, province or duty. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. sphere, Chaucer, C. T. 11592, 11595. Later sphere, Spenser, F. Q. l. 10. 56. = O. F. sphere, a sphere (Littre); later sphere, 'a sphere;' Cot. = Lat. sphaera. = Gk. σφαῖρα, a ball, globe. β. Gk. σφαῖρα = σφαῖρα = σφαῖρα, 'that which is tossed or thrown about;' cf. σφαῖρα, to scatter seed, throw or toss about. See Sparse. Der. spher-ic, Gk. σφαιρικός, like a sphere; spher-ic-al, spher-ic-al-ly, spher-ic-ally; spher-oid, that which is like a sphere, from σφαῖρα, for σφαῖρα, round, and οἶδος, form, shape, appearance (from √ WID, to see). Hence spheroid-al.

SPHINK, a monster with a woman's head and the body of a lioness, who destroyed travellers that could not solve her riddles. (L., = Gk.) 'Subtle as Sphink;' L. L. L. iv. 3. 342. Spelt Spink by Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. i. = Lat. sphinx (gen. sphinxis). = Gk. σφίγξ (gen. σφίγγος), lit. 'the strangler,' because she strangled the travellers who could not solve her riddles. Though the name is Greek, the legend is Egyptian; Herodotus, ii. 175, iv. 79. = Gk. σφίγγω, to throttle, strangle, orig. to bind, compress, fix; cognate with Lat. fixare, to fix, according to Curtius, l. 29. According to Vanicek, it is allied to Lat. fascia, a band.

SPICE, an aromatic vegetable for seasoning food, a small quantity or sample. (F., = L.) A doublet of spicis. 'Spice, the earlier form in which we made the word our own, is now limited to certain aromatic drugs, which, as consisting of various kinds, have this name of spices. But spice was once employed as spicis is now;' Trench, Select Glossary, q. v. M. E. spice. 'Absteyne 300 fro al yuel spice,' Wyclif, 1 Thess. v. 22; where the Vulgate has 'ab omni spicis mala.' In early use. 'Hope is a swete spice;' Ancren Riwle, p. 78, last line. = O. F. 'spice, spice;' Cot. = Lat. specium, acc. of spicis, a kind, species; in late Latin, a spice, drug; see Specie. Der. spice, verb; spice-ol, Chaucer, C. T. 518; spice-er, an old word for spice-seller, answering to the mod. grocer, P. Plowman, B. ii. 225; spice-ry, from O. F. spicaria, 'a spicery, also spicica,' Cot.; spice-ry, spice-ry.

SPICK AND SPAN-NEW, quite new. (Scand.) In North's Plutarch, p. 213 (R.); Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. sect. 4. let. 3 (Jan. 30, 1624). Lit. 'spike and spoon new,' where spike means a point, and spoon a chip; new as a spike or nail just made and a chip just cut off. See further under Span-new. And see Spike and Spoon.

SPIDER, an insect that spins webs. (E.) M. E. spider, spelt spider, Aenbite of Inwyt, p. 164, l. 6 from bottom. Not found in A. S., but easily explained; the long i is due to loss of a before the following th, and spider (spider) is for spu-ther. This loss of s before a dental letter is a peculiarity of A. S., and occurs in A. S. toth for toth, a tooth, A. S. oðer for oðer = anðer, other. The suffix -ther (= Aryan -tar) denotes the agent; so that spider = spu-ther, the spinner; from the verb to spu; see Spin. Cf. prov. E. spinner, a spider. + Du. spun, a spider. + Dan. spinder (for spinner), a spider; from spende (for spinne), to spin. + Swed. spinnel, a spider; from spinna, to spin. + G. spinn, a spider, spinner.

SPIGOT, a pointed piece of wood for stopping a small hole in a cask. (L., = L.) M. E. spigot, Wyclif, Job, xxxii. 19. Of Celtic origin. = Irish and Gael. spigot, a spigot; dimin. of Irish spice, a spike, long nail. Cf. W. spigot, a prickle; from spig, a point, peak, pike, spike; spigot, a spigot, spig, a spike (though the latter are borrowed words, having the y prefixed on account of the difficulty of pronouncing initial sp in Welsh). All from Lat. spica; see Spika.

SPIKE, a sharp point, large nail, an ear of corn. (L.) M. E. spik, an ear of corn; P. Plowman, B. xii. 120. Somser gives an A. S. spicing, a large nail; but it is doubtful. In any case the word was borrowed (perhaps early) directly from Lat. spica, an ear of corn, also, a point, a pike. Evidently allied to spina, a thorn, and from the same root. With loss of initial s, we have Irish spice, Gael. spic, W. spig, a peak, pike, with numerous derivatives in English; see Pike. β. We also find Du. spijker, a nail, Icel. spik, Swed. spik, Dan. spiger, G. spiker; but all are due (as shewn by their close resemblance) to the same Lat. spica, a word easily spread from its use both in agriculture and military affairs. Der. spike-ward, q. v.; spike-ol, q. v.; spike-y; spike, verb; spike-ol.

SPIKENARD, an aromatic oil or balsam. (Hybrid; L. and F., = L., = Gk., = Pers., = Skt.) 'Precious oycement spikenard;' Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 3; where the Vulgate has 'alabastrum unguenti spicis pretiosi.' Thus spike-ward should rather be spiked ward; it signifies nard furnished with spikes, in allusion to the mode of growth. 'The head of Nardus spreads into certain spikes or earas, whereby it hath a twofold use, both of spike and also of leaf; in which regard it is so famous;' Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. xii. c. 13 (in Holland's translation). The word nard is French, from a Skt. original; see Nard. The Lat. spicatus, furnished with spikes, is derived from spica, a spike, ear of corn; see Spika.

SPILL (1), a splinter; thin slip of wood. (E.) 'Spills, thin slips of wood or paper, used for lighting candles;' Halliwell. M. E. spille. Stramann cites from the Life of Becket, ed. W. H. Black, 1848, l. 850: 'hit nis most worþ a spille' = it is not worth a splinter or chip. The same word as Spall (4), q. v. See also Spill (2).

SPILL (2), to destroy, mar, shed. (E.) Often explained by 'spoil,' with which it has no etymological connection. It stands for spild, the l having passed into ll by assimilation. M. E. spellan, commonly in the sense to destroy or mar; also, intransitively, to perish; see Chaucer, C. T. 6480, 5235, &c.; Hamlet, iv. 3. 20. In mod. E., only to shed, pour out, effuse. = A. S. spildan, and (by assimilation) spillan, to destroy; Grein, ii. 470. Hence the compound for-spildan, to destroy utterly; Grein. = A. S. spild, destruction; id. β. The orig. sense of spild was 'a splitting,' cleaving, or hewing in pieces; from the Teutonic base SPALD (G. spalten), to cleave, split. See Spell (4) and Split. Also Spill (1). Der. split-or; split-oh (= A. S. spild), Timon, ii. 2. 169.

SPIN, to draw out into threads, cause to whirl rapidly. (E.) The second sense comes from the rapid motion of the spinning-wheel. The former sense is original. M. E. spinnen, strong verb, pt. t. spin, pp. spunnen; P. Plowman, B. v. 216. = A. S. spinnan, pt. t. spinnan, pp. spunnen; Matt. vi. 28. + Du. spinnen. + Icel. and Swed. spinna. + Dan. spinde (for spinne). + G. spinnen. + Goth. spinnan (pt. t. spinn). β. All from Teut. base SPAN, to draw out; extended from SPA, to draw out, as in Gk. σπένδω. See Span, a closely related word. Fick, iii. 830. Der. spin-or; spin-ing; spin-d-le, q. v.; spin-ster, q. v.; spin-der, q. v.

SPINACH, SPINAGE, an esculent vegetable. (Ital. = L.) Spinage is a weakened form of spinach, as it was formerly written. Spelt spinachs in Levisa, ed. 1570. 'Synnaga, an herbe, spinars;' Falgrave. The spelling spinach is due to the sound of Ital. spinacia, where ci is pronounced as E. chini in chain. = Ital. spinacia, 'the herbe spinage;' Florio. He also gives the form spinachia. Cf. mod. F. épinard (with excrement d), O. F. épinars, épinars (Cotgrave); Span. espinaes; Port. espinafre; G. spinat. β. All from various derivatives of Lat. spina, a thorn, a prickle; because 'the fruit is a small round nut, which is sometimes very prickly;' Eng. Cyclopaedia. The Ital. and Span. forms are due to a Lat. adj. spinacivus, prickly, formed from spina, a thorn; the F. seems to answer to a Lat. adj. spinarius; the G. spinat = Lat. spinatus; and perhaps the Port. espinafre = Lat. spinifer, prickly. In any case, the Ital. spinacia is from Ital. spina, a thorn; F. épinard, from F. épine; Span. espinaes, from Span. espina; and Port. espinafre from Port. espina, spinha. See Spine.

SPINDLE, the pin or stick from which a thread is spun. (E.) The d is excrement, as is so common in English after n; cf. round, thund-er; and spindle stands for spin-le. 'Spinuel, a spindle;' North; Halliwell. In Walter de Biblesworth (in Wright's Vocab. i. 157. l. 6) we meet with M. E. spinal, where another MS. has spendole. = A. S. spnal; 'Fusca, spinal,' Wright's Voc. i. 87, col. 1; 281, col. 2. Formed, with suffix -l (= Aryan -ra) denoting the agent, from A. S. spinnan, to spin; see Spin. + Du. spil, O. Du. spille (Hexham); by assimilation for spule. + O. H. G. spinnala (E. Müller); whence G. spindel (with inserted d), as well as G. spille (by assimilation). ¶ Wedgwood derives spin from spindis, which is impossible; the shorter form must precede the longer. Besides, spin is a strong verb, and its base is SPAN. Der. spindle-shank, with shanks as thin as a spindle. Spindle-trees (Enonymus), because used for spindles or thin rods, named in German spindelnbaum for a like reason; from its use for making skewers it was formerly called prick-wood, i. e. skewer-wood, or prick- timber; see prick-wood and spindle trees in Phillips.

SPINE, a prickle, the backbone of an animal. (F., = L.) 'Roses, their sharp spines being gone;' Two Noble Kinsmen, first line. = O. F. espine, 'a thorn, prick, prickle;' Cot. = Lat. spina, a thorn, prickle; also, the spine, the backbone. Closely allied to Lat. spica, an ear of corn; see Spika. ¶ Observe that, in the sense of 'backbone,' the word is Latin, rather than French; from the use of Latin in medical treatises. Der. spin-ach or spin-age, q. v.; spin-ey; spin-y, spin-i-ous; spin-ous; spin-ous; also spin-ol, q. v.; spin-ol, q. v.

SPINET, a kind of musical instrument, like a harpsichord. (F., = Ital., = L.) Obsolete. It was so called because struck with a spine or pointed quill. In Phillips, ed. 1706. = O. F. spinette, 'a pair of virginals;' Cot. = Ital. spinetta, 'a pair of virginals; also, a little tap, spigot, or gimblet, a prick, a thorn;' Florio. Dimin. of Ital. spina, a thorn. = Lat. spina, a thorn; see Spine.

SPINK, a finch, small bird. (Scand.) Lowland Sc. and prov. E. spink, chiefly used of the gold-finch. M. E. spink. 'Hic rustellus, Anglice, spynke;' Wright's Voc., i. 189, col. 1. = Swed. dial. spink, a field-lark, sparrow; gul-spink, a goldfinch (Riets); Norway. spink (by assimilation for spink), a small bird, sparrow, finch. + Gk. σπινγος, a finch; cf. σπινγος, to pipe, chirp as a small bird. β. The Aryan form is SPINKA (Fick, i. 831), corresponding to the Teutonic types SPINKA (as above), and FINKA (E. finch), the latter form being due to loss of s and the usual sound-shifting from p to f. γ. The root is SPANG, to make a noise, hence, to chirp, pipe as a bird, as in Lithuan. spangti, to resound, make a noise, Gk. σπινγος, I utter a clear loud sound. Without the nasal, we have the √ SPAG, whence Gk. σπινγος, σπινγος (= σπινγος), a finch or spink, σπινγος, to chirp, pipe. β. Since the notions of giving a clear sound and of producing a bright light are closely associated, it is probable that Lithuan. spangti, to glitter, Gk. σπινγος, lustre, and E. spangle are all ultimately connected with spink.

SPINNEY, a kind of thicket. (F., = L.) 'Or shelter'd in Yorkshire spinneys;' Hood, Misc. Kilmarnock, Her. Accrard, st. 3. = O. F. espinoye, 'a thicket, grove, or ground full of thorns, a thorny plot;'

Cot. Mod. F. épinais (Littre). = Lat. spinatum, a thicket of thorns = Lat. spina, a thorn; see Spine.

SPINSTER, a woman who spins, as an unmarried female. (E.) Formerly in the sense of a woman who spins. 'She spak to spinsters to spynnen it oute;' P. Plowman, B. v. 216. Formed from the verb to spin (A. S. spinnan) by means of the suffix -ster (mod. E. -ster). ¶ This suffix (hitherto imperfectly explained) presents no real difficulty; it is the same as in Lat. alou-ster, Low Lat. fortis-ster (see Post), and is due to the conjunction of the Aryan suffixes -as- and -ar, discussed in Schleicher, Compend. §§ 230, 225. [The Lat. suffix -is-ter, appearing in min-is-ter, mag-is-ter, is not quite the same thing, being compounded of the Aryan comparative suffixes -yas- and -ter-; but the method of compounding such suffixes is well exhibited by these examples.] β. This A. S. suffix -ster was used to denote the agent, and was conventionally confined to the feminine gender only, a restriction which was gradually lost sight of, and remains only in the word spinster in mod. English. Traces of the restriction remain, however, in song-ster-ess or scamp-ster, and song-ster-ess or scamp-ster, where the F. fem. suffix -ess has been superadded to the E. fem. suffix -ster. The restriction was strictly observed in A. S., and is retained in Dutch; cf. Du. spin-ster, a spinster, zang-ster, a female singer (fem. of zanger), bedrieg-ster, a female impostor (fem. of bedrieger), woon-ster, a female inhabitant (fem. of wooner); &c. γ. Examples in A. S. are the following: 'Textrix, web-ster,' a webster, female weaver, fem. of 'Textor, webba,' answering to Chaucer's webbe (Prol. 364), and the name Webb. 'Citharista, harp-ster,' a female harper, fem. of 'Citharedus, harper,' a harper; see Wright's Vocab. i. 59, 60. So also: 'Fidicen, flout-ster;' Fidicena, flout-ster; Saltator, Mei-ster; Saltatrix, Mei-ster; id. p. 73. A striking example is afforded by A. S. wisg-ster, a prophetess, Lake, ii. 36, the word being almost always used in the masc. form wisga, a prophet. See further under Spin.

SPIRACLE, a breathing-hole, minute passage for air. (F., = L.) M. E. spyrable, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 408. = F. spiracle, 'a breathing-hole;' Cot. = Lat. spiraculum, an air-hole; formed with suffix -aculum (Aryan -ak-ur) from spira, to breathe; see Spirit.

SPIRE (1), a tapering body, sprout, point, steeple. (E.) M. E. spire, used of a blade of grass or young shoot just springing out of the ground. 'Thilke spire that in-to a tree shoulde waxe,' Test. of Love, bk. iii, in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 314, col. 1. 'Or as an oak comth of a litel spire;' Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1335; spelt spir, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 180. = A. S. spir (rare); 'hroedes spir,' a spike (or stalk) of a reed, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 266, l. 10. + Icel. spira, a spar, a stilt. + Dan. spire, a germ, sprout. + Swed. spira, a sceptre, a pistol. + G. spira, a spar. β. Perhaps allied to Spear and Spur; but I would rather connect it with Spike and Spina. Der. spire, verb, to germinate, spring up, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 52, spelt spyer in Falgrave; spir-y, spelt spirie in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 592. ¶ Not connected with spire (2).

SPIRE (2), a coil, wreath. (F., = L.) 'Amidst his circling spires;' Milton, P. L. ix. 502. [Perhaps directly from Lat. spira.] = F. spire, 'a rundle, round, or circle, a turning or winding compass;' Cot. = Lat. spira, a coil, twist, wreath. + Gk. σπινγος, a coil, wreath. = √ SPAR, to wind or twine round; whence also Gk. σπινγος, Lat. spira, a wove basket, Lithuan. sparsa, a band. Fick, i. 832. Der. spire, verb, to spring up, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 52; spiral, from F. spiral, 'circling;' Cot., Lat. spiralis; spiral-ly; spir-y, Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Georgic i. l. 334.

SPIRIT, breath; the soul, a ghost, enthusiasm, liveliness, a spirituous liquor. (F., = L.) The lit. sense is 'breath,' but the word is hardly to be found with this sense in English. M. E. spirit, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 203; pl. spirites, Chaucer, C. T. 1371. = O. F. espirit (Littre), later esprit, 'the spirit, soul,' Cot. = Lat. spiritum, acc. of spiritus, breath, spirit. = Lat. spirare, to breathe. Root uncertain. Der. spirit-ol, Hen. V. iii. 5. 21; spirit-ol-ly, ness; spirit-less, 2 Hen. IV. l. 1. 70; spirit-ouring, Oth. iii. 3. 353; spirit-ual, Gower, C. A. ii. 191, l. 15, from F. spirituel, 'spiritual,' Cot., from Lat. spiritus-alis, formed with suffix -alis from spiritus, crude form of spiritus; spirit-ual-ly, spirit-ual-ly, M. E. spiritualite, P. Plowman, B. v. 148; spirit-ual-iss, spirit-ual-ism, spirit-ual-ist; spirit-uous. Also (from Lat. spirare) o-spire, con-spire, con-spire (loc. con-spire), un-spire, par-spire, re-spire, re-spire, un-spire, tran-spire; also dis-spire; and see spir-acle, spiral-ly. Doublet, spite.

SPIT (1), a pointed piece of wood, skewer, iron prong on which meat is roasted. (E.) M. E. spite, spite. 'And spytid hym thorn-out myd an yrene spite;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 207, l. 3; where it rhymes with byte (bite), so that the i seems to have been orig. long. See also Octavian Imperator, l. 122, in Weber, Met. Romances, vol. iii. = A. S. spitu or spitu; 'Vera, spite;' Wright's Voc. i. 27, 221; later spite, id. l. 93. + Du. spit. + Dan. spid. + Swed. spett. + M. H. G. spiz.

β. We also find local spita, a spit, spit, a spear, lance, Dan. spjod, a spear, Swed. spjut, a spear, G. spina, O. H. G. spitas; these answer to a Teut. type SPEUTA, Fick, u. 355. Root uncertain; but it would seem reasonable to connect spit with spika, spina, and spira (1); all of these words contain the notion of 'sharp point'; cf. W. spid, a tapering point. Der. spit, verb, M. E. spitan, spytan, as in Robt. of Glouc., cited above. Hence also prov. E. spit, the depth a spade goes in digging, about a foot (Halliwell), with reference to the point, i. e. blade of the spade; cf. Du. spitten, to dig (lit. to spit); quite distinct from spits.

SPIT (1), to throw out from the mouth. (E.) Spelt spit in Baret (1580). M. E. spitten, P. Plowman, B. x. 40; pt. 1. spette, Wyclif, John. ix. 6. = A. S. spittan, Matt. xxvii. 30 (Rashworth MS.); akin to spel on, with the same sense, pt. 1. spette, Mark. xv. 19, John. ix. 6. + spil on. + Dan. spytte, to spit, to spatter. + Swed. spotta, + G. spützen; with which cf. G. spucken in the same sense. All from the Teut. base SPUT, extension of SPU; see Spew. Der. spit-ia, formerly spettis (Baret), also spettis, spelt spytill in Palgrave, spetti in Wyclif, John. ix. 6; A. S. spath, John. ix. 6; spat-on, not in Todd's Johnson, an ill-coined word. ¶ Note that spit is not the orig. past tense of spit, but is due to A. S. spettis above, used with the same sense as the true pt. t. spit (Moss. for Moss. ii. 1. 86).

SPITTE, vexation, grudge, ill-will. (F., = L.) M. E. spyt; 'but spyt more' = without further injury, Gawayn and Grene Knight, 1444. It is merely a contraction of M. E. despitt, mod. E. despite. This is best shown by the phrase as spyt of, formerly in despys of, as in Shak. Merry Wives, v. 5. 132. Much Ado, ii. 2. 398, iii. 2. 68, iii. 4. 89, &c. So also we have spyt for despirt, spyt for despand, M. E. spontor for desponer. And observe M. E. spitans, Rom. of the Rose, 979, as a form of despitans, Chaucer, C. T. 6143. See further under Despise. Der. spyt, verb, Much Ado, v. 2. 70; spite-ful, Much. iii. 5. 12, short for despite-ful, As You Like It, v. 2. 86; spite-ful-ly, ness.

SPITTLE (1), saliva. (E.) See Spit (1).
SPITTLE (2), a hospital. (F., = L.) 'A spittle, hospitall, or lazoushouse,' Baret, 1580. M. E. spitel, Spitell-ward = hospital evil, i. e. leprosy; Ancien Riwle, p. 148, l. 8. = O. F. ospital (Burguy), the same as O. F. hospital, a hospital; see Hospital. ¶ The loss of initial s must have been due to an E. accent on the i. Doublet, despitell.

SPLASH, to dash about water or mud, to bespatter. (Scand.) 'To splash, to dash any liquid upon; splashy, wet, watry;' Bailey's Dict., vol. 1. ed. 1731. Coined by prefixing s (O. F. s = Lat. as, used for emphasis, as in spuans (Richardson) for quans), to plash, in the same sense. 'Plashy waics, wet under foot; to plash in the dirt; all plash'd, made wet and dirty; to plash a traveller, to dash or strike up the dirt upon him;' MS. Lansd. 1033, by Bp. White Kennett, died A. D. 1738. Stanyhurst (1581) has plash for 'a splashing noise;' tr. of Virgil (Ea, l. 115), ed. Arber, p. 21, l. 17. = Swed. plaska, to splash; short for plaska, as shown under Plash (1), q. v. + Dan. plaska, to splash. Cf. Swed. dial. plaska, to strike gently, pat, tap with the fingers; extended from platta, to tap, pat (Kietz). From Teut. base PLAT, to strike; see Pat. Der. spilash, sb.; spilash-y; spilash-board, a board (in a vehicle) to keep off splashes.

SPLAY, to slope or slant (in architecture); to dislocate a shoulder bone. (F., = L.) A contraction of display; cf. spore for dispart, spit for despite, spend for despend, &c. The sense 'to dislocate' is due to the fact that display formerly meant to carve or cut up a crane or other bird, by disjuncting it and so displaying it upon the dish in several pieces. 'Displays that crane;' 'splye that brewe;' The Boke of Keryage, pr. in 1513, repr. in 1867; see The Babees Boke, ed. Furnivall, p. 265. In architecture, to display is to open out, hence to slope the side of a window, &c. 'And for to splye out hir leues in brede;' Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight, l. 33. See further under Display. Der. spilay-foot, sb., in Minshew, and in Ford, The Broken Heart, Act v. sc. 1 (R.), i. e. with the foot displayed or turned outward, as if dislocated at the knee-joint; shortened to spilay-foot, as in 'spilay-foot rhymes,' Butler, Hudibras, pt. 1. c. 3. l. 192; spilay-mouth, a mouth opened wide in scorn, a grimace, Dryden, tr. of Persius, sat. 1, l. 116.

SPLEEN, a spongy gland above the kidney, supposed by the ancients to be the seat of anger and ill-humoured melancholy. (L., = Gk.) M. E. spitan, Gower, C. A. iii. 99, l. 23; iii. 100, l. 9. = Lat. spilan. = Gk. σπλήν, the spleen. + Skt. plihān, plihān, the spleen (with loss of initial s). The true Lat. word is lien (with loss of initial s). The Russ. selizmba, spleen, is also related. The Aryan form is supposed to have been SPARGHAN, later SPLIGHAN, Fick, l. 335. Der. spil-an-ist, from Lat. spilanicium; spil-an-ist-ial, spil-an-ist-ial-ly; spil-an-ist, from Lat. spilanicus; spil-an-ist-ive, Hamlet, v. 1. 285; spil-an-ful, 2 Hen. VI. iii. 2. 128; spil-an-y, Hen. VIII. iii. 2. 69.

SPLENDOR, SPLENDOUR, magnificence, brilliance. (L.; = F., = L.) Spelt splendor in Minshew, ed. 1627. According to Richardson, it is spelt splendour in Ben Jonson, Elegy on Lady Jane Pawlet, in Underwoods, no. 108, l. 32. = F. splendeur, 'splendor, light'; Cot. = Lat. splendorem, acc. of splendor, brightness. [Or directly from Lat. nom. splendor.] = Lat. splendore, to shine + Lithuan. splendeti, to shine. Root unknown. Der. splend-ed, Milton, P. L. ii. 252, directly from Lat. splendidus, shining, bright; splend-ed-ly. Also splend-ed, spelt splendans in Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. viii. st. 84, l. 3, but from Lat. splendans, stem of pres. part. of splendore. And see re-splendens.

SPLINT, the same as Splint, q. v.
SPLEUCHAN, a tobacco-pouch. (Gael.) In Burns, Death and Dr. Hornbook, st. 14. = Gael. spluchan, a tobacco-pouch; Irish spluchan, a bladder, pouch, purse.

SPLICED, to join two rope-ends by interweaving the strands. (Du.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Like many sea-terms, borrowed from Dutch. = O. Du. splissan, 'to wreath or lace two ends together, as of a rope;' Hexham. So named from the splitting of the rope-ends into separate strands before the splicing is begun; from Du. splissen, to splice (which is really the older form). Formed by the addition of s to the base of Du. splissen, to split, O. Du. splisjan, splisjan, or splisjan (Hexham). See Split. + Dan. splides, splides, to splice (weak-nosed form of splisje); from splisje, to split. Cf. Swed. spilisa, to splice; G. spilissen, to splice, spilisa, a cleft, spilissen, to split. Der. spilise, sb., Phillips, ed. 1706.

SPLINT, SPLINT, a thin piece of split wood. (Scand.) Formerly usually spilant. 'A little spilant to scab a broken finger;' Baret (1580). 'Spilant for an horse, spilant;' Palgrave. It also meant a thin steel plate, for armour. 'Spilant, harness for the arme, guards de bras;' Palgrave. M. E. spilant, Moris Artibus, ed. Brock, 2061. = Swed. spilant, a kind of spike; esp. (in nautical language) a forelock, i. e. a flat piece of iron driven through the end of a bolt, to secure it. = Swed. spilanta, to splint, splinter, or split; analised form of Swed. dial. spilista, to separate, split (Kietz). So also Dan. spilint, a splinter; from spilista, to split. + Low G. spilante, a forelock; from spilaten, spilaten, to split. + G. spilant, a thin piece of iron or steel, a forelock, perhaps borrowed. See Split. Der. spilant-er, Beaumont and Fletcher, Maid in the Mill, Act I. sc. 3 (Lumina), to split into shivers, a frequentative form (with the usual frequentative suffix -er) from Swed. spilanta, to split, shiver; we actually find the frequentative form in Dan. spilanta, to splinter, Du. spilantum, to splinter. Hence spilant-er, sb., a shiver, small piece or chip, Cor. iv. 5. 115, with which cf. Du. spilant-er, a splinter, spilant-erig, full of splinters; spilant-er-y, adj.

SPLIT, to cleave lengthwise, to tear asunder, rend apart. (Scand.) Spelt spit in Minshew, ed. 1627. [Palgrave has: 'I spilante a fynde a-sonder, ye owners;' but this is rather M. E. spilante, to lay open, lay flat, as in Palladius on Husbandry, b. ii. l. 123.] = Dan. spiln, to split; Swed. dial. spilista, to disengage or separate yarn (Kietz). + Du. spilissen, to split. + G. spilissen. We also find Dan. spil, Du. spilant, a slit, split, rent, Swed. spil, discord (a sense not unknown to English), G. spilissen, a splinter, a shiver, O. Du. spilite, 'a split or a cleft' (Hexham). β. The O. Du. spilite, Du. spilant, shew that the orig. vowel was e (as remarked in Schmidt, Vocalismus, l. 57), so that the form of the base is SPALT, a mere variant of SPALD, to split, cleave, treated of under Spall (4) and Spill (1). Compare also prov. E. spit, to split, Swed. spilata, to split, and Teut. base SPRAK, to burst; see Spark (1). Der. spil, sb.; also spilant, q. v., spilant, q. v., spil, q. v.

SPLUTTER, to speak hastily and confusedly. (Scand.) Added by Todd to Johnson; and see Halliwell. By the common substitution of l for r, it stands for sputter; cf. prov. E. spurred, spurtled, sprinkled over, Leicester. (Halliwell, Evans). It is the frequentative, with the usual suffix -er, of spout, to talk fluently, orig. to squirt out, a word which has lost an r and stands for spout, as shown in its duo piece; see Spout. In the sense 'to talk,' the latter word occurs in Beaumont and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, Act iv. sc. 4: 'Pray, spout some French, son.' To sputter is to talk so fast as to be unintelligible. The old Leicester word spurtle, to sprinkle, used by Drayton (Evans) is merely another form of the same word, formed as the frequentative of spurt. Cf. Low G. spurtan, to spout, spurt, sprinkle. And see Sputter.

SPOIL, to plunder, pillage. (F., = L.) M. E. spoilon, Wyclif, Mark. iii. 27. [The sb. spoil occurs even earlier, in King Alaunder, 986.] = F. spolier, 'to spoil, despoil;' Cot. = Lat. spoliare, to strip of spoil, despoil. = Lat. spoliare, spoil, booty; the skin or hide of an animal stripped off, and hence the dress of a slain warrior stripped from him. Root uncertain; perhaps allied to Gk. σπῆλαιον, spoil; Curtius, l. 107, ll. 358. ¶ It is probable that spoil has been to some extent confused with its compound de-spoil, q. v. Cf. Dyspophos or Spoyfyn, Spolio; Prompt. Parv. Der. spil, sb., M. E. spilte, as above; spil-er; spil-er-ice, from F. spoliation, 'a spoiling.' Cot., from Lat. acc. spoliatiōnem; spil-er-ice (rare), from pp. spoliatus. ¶ The M. E. spilten, to dest. 07, being now retained only in the particular sense of 'to shed liquids,' the sense of 'destroy' or 'waste' has been transferred to spoil; see Spill (3).

SPOKE, one of the bars of a nave from the nave to the rim. (E.) M. E. spoke, Chaucer, C. T. 7830, 7840. = A. S. spoca, pl. spocas; 'Radii, spocae,' Wright's Vocab. l. 284, col. 2. [The change from s to l is perfectly regular; cf. stoa, a stone, stoa, a bone.] + Du. spook, a lever, roller; spook, a spoke. + G. spocke, O. H. G. spockh; prov. G. spock (Flugel). β. All from a type SPAIKA, a strengthened form of SPIK, the base of spike; see Spika. Accordingly, the word is formed rather on a Latin than on a Teutonic base.

SPOKESMAN, one who speaks in behalf of others. (E.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 1. 153; and in Exod. iv. 16. (A. V.) The form of the word is hardly explicable; we should rather have expected to meet with spoke-s-man, formed by analogy with hunt-s-man, or else with spoke-man. As it is, the pp. spoke (for spoken) has been substituted for the infn. spoke; see Speak and Man.

SPOILIATION, (F., = L.) See under Spoil.

SPONDER, in classical poetry, a foot containing two long syllables. (L., = Gk.) Called spendee in Puttenham, Art of Eng. Poesie, ed. 1589, pt. ii. c. 3. Ben Jonson has: 'The stadia spendee' to translate 'Spondæes stables' in his tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry, l. 256. Englished from Lat. spendee or spendee. = Gk. σπονδαίος, in metre, a spondee, so called because slow solemn melodies, chiefly in this metre, were used at σπονδαί. = Gk. σπονδαί, a solemn treaty or truce; pl. of σπονδή, a drink-offering, libation to the gods (such as were made at a treaty). = Gk. σπονδαίω, to pour out, make a libation. Root uncertain. Der. spend-s-ite, Lat. spenditio, Gk. σπονδαίωσις.

SPONGE, the porous framework of an animal, remarkable for sucking up water. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. sponge, Ancren Riwle, p. 262, l. 2. = O. F. espunge, 'a sponge,' Cot. Mod. F. éponge. = Lat. spongia. = Gk. σπγγή, a sponge; another form of σπγγή (Attic σπγγή), a sponge. + Lat. fungus, a fungus, from its spongy nature (unless this Lat. word is merely borrowed from Gk. σπγγή). Supposed to be allied to Gk. σπγγή, spongy, and to E. swamp; see Swamp. Cf. Goth. swammus, a sponge, G. schwamm, a sponge, fungus. ¶ Also A. S. sponga, Matt. xxvii. 48, directly from Latin.

SPONSOR, a surety, godfather or godmother. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. sponsor, a surety, one who promises for another. = Lat. sponsus, pp. of spondere, to promise. Probably allied to Gk. σπονδαί, a treaty, truce, and σπονδαίω, to pour a libation, as when making a solemn treaty; see Spondee. Der. sponsor-ial, sponsor-ship. And see sponso. Also (from Lat. spondere) de-spond, re-spond, over-spond.

SPONTANEOUS, voluntary, acting on one's own impulse. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished from Lat. spontaneus, willing; by change of -us into -ous, as in arbitrarius, stramonius, &c. Formed with suffix -onus from spono, appearing in the gen. spono and abl. spono of a lost sb. spono. Spono is used to mean 'of one's own accord;' and spono occurs in the phrase suo sponte suo, to be at one's own disposal, to be one's own master. Perhaps allied to Skt. śhband, to please; whence śhbanda, flattering, śhbanda, spontaneous. Der. spontaneous-ly; spontaneous-ity, a coined word.

SPOOL, a reel for winding yarn on. (O. Low G.) M. E. spole, Prompt. Parv. p. 470. Imported from the Netherlands, with the Flemish weavers. = O. Du. spole (Hezham); Du. spool, a spool, quill; Low G. spole (Bremen Wörterbuch). + Swed. spole, a spool, spoka. + Dan. spole. + G. spule, a spool, bobbin, quill; O. H. G. spulo, spuld. Root uncertain; perhaps allied to Icel. spól, a rail, a bar; and possibly to E. spur, a bar.

SPOON, to run before the wind. (L.) An old sea-term; see examples in Nares. Lit. 'to throw up foam' by running through the water. As Nares remarks, it means to sail steadily rather than swiftly. From spumo, foam; see Spuma.

SPOON, an instrument for sipping liquids. (E.) The orig sense was simply 'a chip,' then a thin slice of wood, lastly a spoon (at first wooden). M. E. spun (with long o), Chaucer, C. T. 10916. = A. S. spun, a chip, a splinter of wood; see examples in Bosworth. In Wright's Vocab. l. 39, col. 1, the Lat. fomes, a chip for firewood, is glossed by 'gewalded spoon, vel fynder,' i. e. a kindled chip, or tinder. + Du. spoon, a chip, splint. + Icel. spóna, spóna, a chip, shaving, spoon. + Dan. spoon, a chip. + Swed. spole, a chip, splint. + G. spun, O. H. G. spula, a very thin board, chip, splint, shaving. β. The Teut. type is SPANL, a chip, Fick, iii. 353. Root uncertain. Der. spoon-bill, a bird; spoon-ful, spelt spoon-full in Minshew, ed. 1627. spoon-ful in Sir T. More, Works, p. 617 (R.); spoon-meat, Com. of Errors, iv. 3. 61.

SPOOR, a trail. (Du.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Introduced from the Cape of Good Hope. = Du. spoor, a spur; also a trace, track, trail. Cognate with E. Spur, q. v. Doublet, spoor.

SPORADIC, scattered here and there. (Gk.) 'Sporadici Morbi, diseases that are rise in many places;' Phillips, ed. 1706. It thus arose as a medical term. The Late Lat. sporadicus is merely borrowed from Gk. σποραδικός, scattered. = Gk. σποραδ, stem of σπορά, scattered. = Gk. σποραδ, to sow, to scatter abroad. See Sperm.

SPORE, a minute grain which serves as a seed in ferns, &c. (Gk.) Modern and botanical. = Gk. σπορ, seed-time; also, a seed. = Gk. σπορα, to sow. See Sperm.

SPORRAN, a leathern pouch, worn with the kilt. (Gael.) In Scott's Rob Roy, c. xxiv. = Gael. sporran, a purse. + Irish sporran, a purse, a pouch.

SPORT, play, mirth, merriment, jest. (F., = L.) 'Sporis, myrthe;' Palgrave. Merely a contracted form of disport, desport, by loss of di- or de-; just as we have splay for display, spand for dispend. Struttmann cites sport as occurring in the Coventry Plays, ed. Halliwell, p. 185. Disport is in Chaucer C. T. 77; see further under Disport. Der. sport, verb, spelt sports (also disports) in Palgrave; sporting; sport-ful, Tw. Nt. v. 373; sport-ful-ly, sport-ful-ness; sport-ive, All's Well, iii. 1. 109, sport-ive-ly, sport-ive-ness; sport-ive-man (coined like hunt-s-man), sport-ive-man-ship.

SPOT, a blot, mark made by wet, a discoloured place, small space, stain. (E.) M. E. spot, Prompt. Parv.; pl. spottis, F. Plowman, B. xiii. 315. [I suspect that spot in Ancren Riwle, p. 104, note e, is a misprint for spot.] Lowland Sc. spot (Jamieson). From a base spat occurring in A. S. spatl, spittle, John, ix. 6, which Wyclif writes as spat; and see spat, spittle, in Palgrave, spittle in Halliwell. Cf. also A. S. spahan, to spit, pt. t. spat (= mod. E. spat), Matt. xxvi. 67. From the notion of spitting; a spot is lit. 'a thing spat out,' hence a wet blot, &c. 'To bespittle one all over, Chaucer; Baret (1580). See Spit. + Du. spot, a speck, spot; spatten, to spatter, to besdash (Sewel). + Swed. spat, spittle, slaver; spotta, to spit. + Dan. spotte, a spot, speckle. Cf. E. Spook, formed in a similar way, with the same orig. sense. ¶ The Icel. and Swed. spott, mockery, derision (G. spott, Dan. spot), is prob. the same word, in a metaphorical sense; but this is not quite certain. Der. spot, verb, chiefly in the pp. spott-ed, as in Spenser, F. O. i. 6. 26, Wyclif, Gen. xii. 35; spott-y, spott-i-ness; spot-less, Rich. II, l. 1. 178, spot-less-ly, spot-less-ness. And see spat-er.

SPOUSE, a husband or wife. (F., = L.) One of the oldest words in the language of F. origin. M. E. spouse, fem. sb., O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 13, l. 5; the comp. sb. spoushood, spousehood, also occurs in the 11th century, O. Eng. Hom. l. 143, l. 24, having already acquired an E. suffix. The form is rather fem. than masc. = O. F. epouse (Burguy), later epouse (spouse), 'a spouse, bridegroom;' Cot.; fem. form epouse (spouse), 'a spouse, a wife;' id. The former answers to Lat. sponsus, acc. of sponsus, a betrothed, a bridegroom; the latter to sponsa, fem., a betrothed woman. = Lat. sponsus, promised, pp. of spondere, to promise; see Sponsor. Der. sponsus, verb, q. v.; also spons-al, M. E. sponsualis, Gower, C. A. l. 181, l. 12, a doublet of sponsual, M. E. sponsualis, Gower, C. A. ii. 322, l. 9; see under sponsus.

SPOUT, to throw out a liquid violently, to rush out violently as a liquid from a pipe. (Scand.) This word has certainly lost an r, and stands for sprout, just as spout stands for sprout. The r appears in the related form sprout and in prov. E. spruttled, sprinkled over, Leicestersh. (Halliwell); and is represented by l in E. splutter; see Splutter. M. E. sprout, Chaucer, C. T. 4007. = Swed. sputa, noted by Widgren as an occasional form of spruta, which he explains by 'to squirt, to syringe, to spout.' There is also the sb. spruta, a squirt, a syringe, a pipe through which any liquor is squirted, a fire-engine. + Dan. sprude (also sprutte), to spout, squirt; sprude, to squirt. + Du. spuisen, to spout, syringe, squirt; also spuit, sb. a spout, squirt, syringe, fire-engine (here the r is dropped as in English, but the identity of these words with the Swedish ones is obvious from the peculiar senses in which they are used). + G. sprützen (also sprützen, E. Muller), sprudeln, to spout, squirt. We may also note that the Low G. has both forms, viz. sprutten, to spout (in which the r is retained), and the frequentative spruttern, with the same sense (in which the r is dropped).

β. From the Teut. base SPRUT, appearing in A. S. sprutan, pl. of the pt. t. of the strong verb sprutan, to spout, to germinate; see Sprout, Spurt. Thus spout (= sprout), to spout, is a secondary Scand. form of sprout in the sense to germinate, by a transference from the shooting out of a bud to the shooting out of water.

γ. We find also Irish and Gael. spuit, to spout, squirt; but these words are prob. borrowed from English. (If real Celtic words, they are prob. allied to Lat. sputare, to spit, rather than to E. spout.) There can be little doubt that the loss of r in the present word has been caused by the influence of the word spit, with which it has no real connection, as shewn by the difference of vowel; see Spit. Der. spout, sb., M. E. spoute, spelt spoute in Prompt. Parv., from Swed. spruta, as above. And see splutter, sputter.

SPRACK, SPRAG, quick, lively. (Scand.) See Spark (2). SPRAIN, to overstrain the muscles of a joint. (F., = L.) A late word. Phillips, ed. 1706, gives it as a sb. The older word with such the same sense is straw; and spruce is formed from O. F. sprandre just as straw is from O. F. estrandre. — O. F. sprandre, 'to press, wring, strain, squeeze out, thrust together;' Cot. Mod. F. sprandre. — Lat. sprandre, to press out; whence sprandre is formed (as if for sprandre) by change of m to n, with an excrescent d. — Lat. en, out; and promove, to press; see EX- and PRESS. And cf. Express. Der. sprain, sb., answering to O. F. spraine, 'a pressing, straining;' Cot., from the pp. spraint.

SPRAT, a small sea-fish. (Du.) M. E. sprat or spratte. 'Hec spratera, a spratt,' in a list of fishes; Wright's Voc. l. 222, col. 2. Borrowed from Du. — Du. sprat, 'a sprat, a fish;' Hexham. He also gives 'sprat, a sprout, or a sprig of a tree, or the young of every thing; which is the same word.' Sprat, a small fish, considered as the fry of the herring; Wedgwood. Cf. prov. E. sprate, small wood (Halliwell); lit. sprats. See Sprout.

SPRAWL, to toss about the limbs, stretch the body carelessly when lying. (Scand.) M. E. sprawlen, Gower, C. A. ii. 3, l. 11; Havok, 475. Sprawl stands for sprattle, by loss of t; the same word as North E. sprattle, to struggle (Halliwell). — Swed. spratta, to sprawl; of which the dialectal forms are spralla and sprala, by loss of t (Riets). + Dan. spratte, to sprawl, flounder, toss the legs about; whence the frequentative forms spralle, spralde, to sprawl, flounder, toss the body about. Cf. Icel. spratta, to sprawl. + Du. sprawlen, to flutter, leap, wrestle; whence sprattelen, to wag one's legs. The Du. sprattien also means to sparkle. β. All formed, with frequentative suffix -ia, from the Teut. base SPART, to toss the limbs about (Icel. sprata, to sprawl), a parallel form to SPARK, with the same sense, appearing in Dan. sparke, Swed. sparke, to kick (Icel. sprilla, sprilla, to sprawl). Both forms are extensions from SPAR, to quiver, well preserved in E. spar, to box. O. F. sparer, to kick; see Spar (3). Thus sprawl is, practically, the frequentative of spar, to kick, to box; and signifies 'to keep on sparring,' to be continually tossing the limbs about. We may also compare SPARK (1), SPARK (2), SPRACK, SPEAK, all from the same ultimate root. Der. sprawl.

SPRAY (1), foam tossed with the wind. (E.) 'Commonly written spry. Winds raise some of the salt with the spray;' Arbuthnot; Johnson's Dict. But no example of the spelling spry it gives, and it is not easy to find one. It is remarkable that the word does not appear in any early author; yet it would appear to be English. Perhaps (says E. Muller) from A. S. sprigan, to pour; which only occurs in the comp. gund-sprigan, to pour out. Life of S. Guthlac, cap. 7, l. 6. Perhaps allied to Icel. sprana, a jet or spring of water, sprana, to jet, spurt out; Norway. spran, a jet of water (Aasen). The base SPRAG is perhaps a weak form of SPARK, as appearing in M. E. spraitien, to sprinkle; see Sprinkle.

SPRAY (2), a sprig or small shoot of a tree. (Scand.) The same as prov. E. sprag, a sprig (Webster). M. E. sprag, Chaucer, C. T. 13700; Floris and Blanchefleur, ed. Lumby, 275. — Dan. sprag, a sprig, spray (Molbeck); Swed. dial. spragga, spragg, a spray (Riets). Hence sprag from sprag, by the usual change of g to y, as in may from A. S. mag-an, day from A. S. dag. β. Allied to Icel. sprat, a stick (whence and-sprat, small sticks, twigs, sprays); A. S. sprec, a spray (an unauthorized word cited by Somner). All from a Teut. base SPRAK appearing in Icel. sprata, Dan. sprags (for sprake), to crackle; the orig. sense being to crackle, split, burst, hence to bud, burgeon, produce shoots, as clearly shown by other cognate words from the Aryan SPARG, to crackle or burst with a noise. Cf., e. g., Lithuan. sprugti, to crackle, split, sprout or bud as a tree; whence spruga, a rift, a sprig or spray of a tree, sprugus, a knot or eye in a tree. Also Gk. dōndapryos, asparagus, of which the orig. sense was perhaps merely 'sprout' or shoot. Fick gives the Aryan form as SPARGA, l. 255, cf. ii. 281; from SPARG, to crackle, burst with a noise, whence also E. speak and spar; see Speak, Spar (1), Sprig. Doublet, spry (and perhaps asparagus).

SPREAD, to scatter abroad, stretch, extend, overlay, emit, diffuse. (E.) M. E. spreiden, pt. t. spreidde, spreidde, pp. sprad, sprad, P. Plowman, B. iii. 308; pt. t. spreidde, Gower, C. A. l. 182, l. 24. — A. S. spreidan, to spread out, extend, a rare word. It occurs as gospred, imper. sing. = extend thou, stretch out, in the Northumb. version of Matt. xii. 13; and the comp. for-spreidan, to spread over, in the (unprinted) Rule of St. Bennet (Bosworth). + Du. spreiden, to spread, scatter, strew + Low G. spreiden, spreide, spreiden. + G. spreiten. β. All from a Teut. base SPRAID, evidently an unoriginal, and probably a causal form, from the older base SPRID, to become extended, spread out, as in Swed. sprida, to spread; cf. Dan. spreide, to spread, scatter, disperse. We find also Swed. dial. sprida, to spread (Riets); from a parallel base SPRIT. Clearly allied to Icel. sprita, to sprawl, and from the same ultimate root as sprawl, viz. SPAR, to quiver. See Sprawl, Sprout, Sprit. Der. sprawl, sb.

SPREE, a merry frolic. (C.) Modern and colloquial. — Irish sprea, a spark, flash of fire, animation, spirit. Cf. Irish sprea, a spark, life, motion, sprea, strength, vigour, sprightliness, Gael. sprea, vigour, exertion.

SPRIG, a spray, twig, small shoot of a tree. (E.) M. E. sprigga, a rod for beating children, stick; P. Plowman, C. vi. 139 (footnote). — A. S. sprew, a spray, twig; an unauthorized word, given by Somner. + Icel. sprök, a stick. + Low G. sprök, a sprig, twig, esp. a small dry twig or stick. Allied to Dan. sprag, a spray (Molbeck); see further under Spray (2).

SPRIGHTLY, SPRITELY, lively. (F., — L.; with E. sprightly.) The common spelling sprightly is wholly wrong; gä is a purely E. combination, whereas the present word is French. The mistake was due to the very common false spelling spright, put for spruce, a spruce; see Spruce. The suffix -ly is from A. S. -lic, like; see Like. Der. sprightli-ness.

SPRING, to bound, leap, jump up, start up or forth, issue. (E.) M. E. springen, strong verb, pt. t. sprung, pp. sprungun, sprungun; Chaucer, C. T. 13690. — A. S. springan, sprungan; pt. t. sprung, sprung, pp. sprungun. The spelling sprungun is the usual one, Matt. ix. 26. But we find sprincen = sprungun, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xiv (lib. iii. met. 2). And in Matt. ix. 26, where the A. S. version has 'þu blim sprung ofer call þæt land' — this rancour spread abroad over all the land, the Northumbrian version has sprunc. + Du. sprungun, pt. t. sprung, pp. sprungun. + Icel. sprunga, to burst, split. + Swed. sprung. + Dan. sprunge. + G. sprung. And cf. Lithuan. sprugti, to spring away, escape; allied to Lithuan. sprugti, to crack, split; also Russ. sprung, to spring, jump, skip. β. All from the Teut. base SPRANG, a weakened form of SPRANK, as shown by the A. S. form. And this is the nasalized form of Teut. SPRAK = Aryan SPARG, to crack, split, crackle; see Spar (1), Speak. The word to sprung is frequently applied in M. E. poetry to the leaping forth of a sprung from a blazing log of wood. 'He sprung als ay spruce one [read of] glode' — he leapt forward like a spark out of a live coal, Sir Isambard, ed. Halliwell, p. 107; and see my note to Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 2094. We still say of a cricket-bat that is cracked or split, that it is sprung; and cf. prov. E. (Eastern) sprunge, a crack or flaw (Halliwell), where we even find the original E. final g; also Essex sprund, to crack, split, from the base of the A. S. pp. sprungun. Besides, the sense 'to split, burst' is that of Icel. sprunge. Der. sprung, sb., a leap, also the time when young shoots spring or rise out of the ground, also a source of water that wells up, a crack in a mast, &c.; sprung-y; sprung-bait (in horses), Hen. VIII. l. 2, 13; sprung-time, As You Like It, v. 2, 30; sprung-flood, M. E. sprung-fad, Chaucer, C. T. 11382; sprung-ode; day-sprung, of-sprung, well-sprung. Also sprung, a snare that is provided with a flexible rod, called a sprung in M. E., as in P. Plowman, B. v. 41. And see sprinkle.

† To sprung a mine is to cause it to burst; cf. Swed. sprungun, to cause to burst, causal of sprungun, to burst.

SPRINKLE, to scatter in small drops. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12, 13. A better form is sprinkle, written sprinkyl by Palgrave, and sprinkelys in the Prompt. Parv. Sprinkle is the frequentative form of M. E. sprungun, to scatter, cast abroad, sprinkle. 'Sprungun ou mid hali water' = sprinkle yourselves with holy water, Ancran Riwle, p. 16, l. 9. — A. S. sprungun, sprungun, to sprinkle, scatter abroad, Matt. xv. 24, Exod. xxiv. 8; A. S. Læchdoma, ed. Cockayne, l. 264, l. 15. The lit. sense is 'to make to sprig or leap abroad'; it is the causal of A. S. sprungun, to sprig, leap abroad, regularly formed by the change of a (m in the pt. t. sprung) to n, as if for sprungun. See Sprung. Cf. also Icel. sprinkle, to make to burst, causal of sprungun, to burst (spring); Swed. sprungun, to sprig a mine, causal of sprungun, to sprig, burst; Dan. sprunge, causal of sprungun; G. sprungun, causal of sprungun. + Du. sprinkelen, to sprinkle, frequentative of sprungun, the causal of sprungun. + G. sprinkeln, to speckle, spot, be-spot, frequent. of sprungun. Under the word sprink, I have referred to sprinkle, and regarded sprinkle as if nasalized from a form sprinkle, which I refer to a SPARK, to sprinkle, appearing in Lat. sprigere (for sparcere) and Skt. spra, to touch, to sprinkle. The history of the word shows this to be wrong as regards sprinkle, which belongs rather to SPARG, to burst. Still, it is probable that the roots SPARK and SPARG were orig. but one; the notion of 'bursting' leads to that of 'scattering,' as in the bursting of a seed-pod. Der. sprinkle, sb., a holy-water sprinkler, see Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12, 13; sprinkle-or.

SPRIT, a spar set diagonally to extend a fore-and-aft sail. (E.) The older sense is merely a pole or long rod, and an older spelling is found in M. E. spret. 'A spret or an oer' = a sprit or an oar; Will. of Palerne, 2754; spelt spret, King Alhaunander, B38 — A. S. spret, a pole. 'Contus, spret;' Wright's Vocab. l. 33, col. 2. 'Trodes, spretus,' in a list of things belonging to a ship; id. 48, col. 1. The orig. sense is 'a sprout,' or shoot, hence a branch, pole, &c. Formed from the A. S. strong verb sprianan, to sprout, cognate with G. *spri-

-eum*; see further under SPROUT. † Du. sprius, a spirit. † Dan. *spri-
-ed*. Der. spri-anti, low-spri. Doublet, spri.

SPRITE, SPRIGHT, a spirit. (F., = L.) The false spelling *spri-
-ght* is common, and is still in use in the derived ad. spri-ghtly. Spelt spri in Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 40, 43; but spri-ght, id. i. 2. 3. ' Legions of spri-ghts.' id. i. 1. 38. M. E. spri, spri-ght, *spri-
-ght*; 'the holy spri-ght,' Rich. Coer de Lion. 304. = F. spri-ght, 'the spirit,' Cot. =
Lat. spiritum, acc. of spiritus. It is, of course, a doublet of SPRIT, q. v. Der. spri-ght-ly or spri-ght-ly; spri-ght-ed, haunted, Cymb. ii. 3.
144; spri-ght-ful or spri-ght-ful, K. John. iv. 2. 177; spri-ght-ful-ty, Rich.
II. i. 3. 3; spri-ght-ing, Temp. i. 2. 298. Doublet, spri-ght.

SPROUT, to shoot out germs, burgeo, bud. (O. Low G.) Spelt spri in Fisherbert Husbandry, § 13. l. 38. (E. D. S.) M. E. *spri-
-um*, Cursor Mundi, 11216; O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 217, l. 24. [Not from A. S. spri-htan, as A. S. spri-ht does not pass into Mod. E. spri-ht (as in out). Nor from A. S. spri-htan, as A. S. long y passes into E. long
i. The word is, in fact, Frisian.] = O. Fris. spri-htan, strong verb, pp. spri-hten, to sprout (Richtofen); Low G. spri-hten, spri-hten, to sprout † Du. spri-hten. † G. spri-hten, to sprout, pt. t. spri-hten, pp. spri-hten. And cf. the A. S. strong verb sprianan, occurring in the comp. spri-htan (Grein), pt. t. spri-hten, pp. spri-hten. The cognate Swed.
spri-htan is only used in the sense to sprout or squirt out water, and is the word whence E. spri-ht is derived, by loss of r; see SPOUT.

SPURT (1). β. All from a Teut. type SPREUTAN, Fick, iii. 256, from a base SPURT. And doubtless allied to the strong verb appearing in Icel. spri-htan, to spurt or squirt out water, to start or spring, to sprout or grow, pt. t. spri-htan, pl. spri-htan, pp. spri-htan. The base of this verb is SPRANT, since the pt. t. spri-htan stands for spri-htan, and spri-htan is for spri-htan; cf. M. H. G. spri-hten, to spurt; see Fick, as

to burst, appearing in prov. G. spri-hten, to crack, crackle, said of things that burst with heat (Flügel); and the formation of SPRANT from SPRAK is just parallel to that of SPRANG, to spring, orig. to burst, from SPRAK, to crack, crackle, burst with a noise. It is obvious that the Teut. bases SPRAK and SPRAK, with the same sense, are mere variants, and the form with the guttural is the older.
The ultimate root is Aryan spri-htan, to crack, split; see SPARK (1), Speak, Spring. β. We may also notice that E. spri-ht as a sb. is related to Du. spri-ht, Icel. spri-ht, G. spri-ht, a sprout; and that
E. spri-ht, q. v., is a doublet of the same word. So also spri-ht (1) and spri-ht, with just the same sense as spri-ht, are due to the allied base SPRAK above mentioned. Der. spri-ht, sb. And see spri-ht, spri-ht, spri-ht, spri-ht, spri-ht. Doublet, spri-ht, q. v.

SPRUCE, fine, smart, gaily dressed. (F., = G.) In Shak. L. L. L.
v. 1. 14; and in Minshew, ed. 1627. 'It was the custom of our ancestors, on special occasions, to dress after the manner of particular countries. The gentlemen who adopted that of Prussia or Spruce stem, from the description of it, to have been arrayed in a style, to which the epithet spri-ht, according to our modern usage, might have been applied with perfect propriety. Prussian leather (arivium Prusianum) is called in Baret by the familiar name of spri-ht;
Richardson; see Baret, art. 781. He then quotes from Hall's Chron.
Hen. VIII. an. 1, as follows: 'And after them came syr Edward Hayward, than Admirall, and with hym Syr Thomas Parre, in doublettes of crimson velvet, voyded lowe on the backe, and before to the cancell-bone, lased on the breastes with chaynes of silver, and ouer that shorte cokes of crimson satyne, and on their heades hattes after dancers fashion, with fessanettes fethers in them:
They were appareyled after the fashion of Prussia or Spruce.' There may have been special reference to the leather worn; the name of spri-ht was certainly given to the leather because it came from Prussia.
Lewin has: 'Corium puniceatum, spri-ht;' col. 181, l. 24. 'Spri-ht leather, corruptly so called for Prusian leather;' Phillips, ed. 1706.
'Spri-ht leather, grassw leer, Pruyssch leer, i. e. gray leather, or Prussian leather;' Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict., 1749. [E. Muller objects that it is difficult to see why Prussia should always be called Spri-ht, not Pruse, in this particular instance; but the name, once associated with the leather, would easily remain the same, especially as the etymology may not have been very obvious to all. It is a greater difficulty to know why the s should ever have been prefixed, but it may be attributed to the English fondness for initial s; thus we often say spri-ht for pruss, spri-ht for pruss (the older word), and so on.] It is sufficient to make sure that Spri-ht really did mean Prussia, and really was used instead of Pruse. Of this we have positive proof as early as the 14th century. 'And yf ich sente ouer see my seruaut to blugges, Ofer in-to prus my prentys'—and if I sent my servant over the sea to Bruges, or sent my apprentice to Prussia; P. Plowman, C.
vii. 179; where two MSS. read spri-ht for prus, and one MS. has prus-land = Prussian land, the land of Prussia. In the corresponding passage of P. Plowman, B. xiii. 393, three MSS. have prus-land.

prus-land, and prus-land respectively; but a fourth has spri-ht-land.
Pruse is the form in Chaucer, C. T. 53 (a well-known passage).
β. We conclude that to dress spri-htly was to dress after the Prussian manner; that Spri-ht was early used in place of Pruse, particularly with reference to Prussian leather; and consequently that spri-ht is derived from O. F. Pruse, mod. F. Prusse, Prussia. = G. Prussia, Prussia (or from an older form of the same). Der. spri-ht-ly, *spri-ht-
-ness*. And see below.

SPRUCE-BEER, a kind of beer. (G.; confused with F. and E.)
'Spri-ht-beer, a kind of physical drink, good for inward bruises;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Essence of spri-ht is obtained from the young shoots of the black spruce fir. . . . Spri-ht beer is brewed from this essence. . . . The black beer of Dantzic is similarly made from the young shoots of another variety of fir;' Eng. Cycl. Supp. to Arts and Sciences. 'A decoction of the young shoots of spri-ht and silver fir was much in use on the shores of the Baltic as a remedy in scorbutic, gouty, and rheumatic complaints. The sprouts from which it was made were called spri-ht in German and jopon in Dutch, and the decoction itself spri-ht-bier [in German] or jopon-bier [in Dutch]. From the first of these is spri-ht-beer. See Beke in N. and Q. Aug. 3, 1860.
And doubtless the spri-ht-fr, G. spri-ht-schichte, takes its name as the fir of which the sprouts are chiefly used for the foregoing purpose, and not from being brought from Prussia, as commonly supposed;' Wedgwood. β. The above explanation may be admitted; but with the addition that the reason why the G. word spri-ht-bier was turned into spri-ht-beer in English is precisely because it was commonly known that it came from Prussia; and since spri-ht-bier had no sense in English and was not translated into spri-ht-beer, it was natural to call it Spri-ht-beer, i. e. Prussian beer. The facts, that Spri-ht meant Prussia as early as the 14th century, and that spri-ht or spri-ht-leather was already in use to signify Prussian leather, have been proved in the article above; see SPRUCE. Thus spri-ht-beer for spri-ht-bier was no mere corruption, but a deliberate substitution. Accordingly, we find in Evelyn's Sylva, ch. 23, the remark: 'For masts, &c., those [firs] of Prussia which we call Spri-ht.' γ. With this understanding, we may now admit that spri-ht-beer is one of the very few words in English which are derived immediately from German. = G. spri-ht-bier, spruce-beer, lit.
'sprouts-beer'; G. spri-ht-schichte, spruce-fr; spri-ht-schichte, spruce-wine. = G. spri-ht, pl. of spri-ht, a sprout, cognate with E. spri-ht; and bier, cognate with E. beer; see SPROUT and BEER. Note also Du. jopon-bier, 'spruce-beer' Sewel's Du. Dict. ed. 1754. The word spri-ht = Prussia, is French, from G. Prussia, as shown above.

SPRY, active, nimble, lively. (Scand.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Given by Halliwell as a Somersetshire word, but more general.
= Swed. dial. spri-ht, very lively, skittish (as a horse), Riets; allied to Swed. dial. spri-ht, spri-ht, or spri-ht, spirited, mettlesome. In fact, spri-ht is a weakened form of prov. E. spri-ht (Halliwell), which again is a weakened form of spri-ht, active, a Wiltshire word. See SPARK, SPARK (2). Doublet, spri-ht.

SPUE, the same as Spew, q. v.

SPUME, foam. (L.) Not common. M. E. spume, Gower, C. A.
ii. 265, l. 12. = Lat. spuma, foam. β. It would seem simplest to derive this from Lat. spuere, to spit forth; see Spew. But Fick gives the Aryan form as SPAINA or SPAIMA, whence also Skt. spuma, foam, Russ. spuma, foam, A. S. spum; see FOAM. And he thinks the root is of SPA, to swell, as if the sense were 'surge'; cf.
Skt. spady, to swell, to which verb Benfey refers Skt. spuma; see SPAN.
Der. spuere, verb, q. v.; spu-ice, q. v.; spu-ice (2), q. v. Doublet, spum.

SPUNK, tinder; hence, a match, spark, spirit, mettle. (C., = L., = Gk.) Also spunk; see examples in Jamieson and Halliwell. 'In spunk or tinder;' Stanyhurst, tr. of Virg. Æn. i. 175; ed. Arber, p.
23. The orig. sense is tinder or touchwood. = Irish and Gael. spun, sponge, tinder, touchwood; applied to touchwood from its spongy nature. = Lat. spongia, a sponge; hence pumice-stone, or other porous material. = Gk. σπυγγη, σπυγγη, a sponge; see SPONGE.

SPUR, an instrument on a horseman's heels, for goading on a horse, a small goad. (E.) M. E. spurs, spore, Chaucer, C. T. 475; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 12. = A. S. spura, spora. 'Calcar, spura;' *Wright's
Voc.* i. 84, l. 3. Cf. hand-spura, a hand-spur, Beowulf, 986 (Grein). † Du. spore, a spur; also a track; see SPUR. † Icel. spori.
† Dan. spore. † Swed. sporre. † O. H. G. spore; M. H. G. spur; G. spore.

β. All from a Teut. type SPORA, a spur. From the of SPAR, to quiver, to jerk, which appears in G. sich sporen, to struggle against; one sense of this root is to kick, jerk out the feet, as in Lithuan. spirti, to resist, to kick out as a horse; cf. Skt. spahar, spahar, to throb, to struggle. Hence the sense of spur is 'kicker.'
γ. A closely allied word occurs in A. S. spor, a foot-track, Du. spoor, Icel. spor, G. spur (see SPUR); whence was formed the verb appearing as A. S. sprianan, Icel. spri-htan, G. spri-htan, to trace a foot-track, to investigate, enquire into, represented by Lowland Sc. spier, of apple, a stain, spot. Der. squally, -ness. Also squat or (rare), from squat-ere.

SQUALL, to cry out violently. (Scand.) 'The raven croaks, the carrion-crow doth squall'; Drayton, Noah's Flood (R.) = Icel. skvalla, to squeal, bawl out; skvalla, a squalling. + Swed. squalla, to stream, gush out violently; squall, an impetuous running of water; squall-regn, a violent shower of rain (whence E. squall, sb., a burst of rain). + Dan. squallere, to clamour, bluster; squallere, clamour, noisy talk. Cf. Swed. dial. skvalla, skvalla, to gush out with a violent noise, to prattle, chatter; Gael. sgaf, a loud cry, sound of high wind, sgaf, to howl. β. From a base SKWAL, expressive of the outburst of water; allied to Trent. base SKAL, to resound, as in G. schallen, Icel. skella (pt. t. skell); Fick, iii. 334. Cf. SKWAP, the base of Squabble, q. v. Der. squall, sb., as above; squally, Doublet, squall.

SQUANDER, to dissipate, waste. (Scand.) Now used only of profuse expenditure, but the orig. sense was to scatter or disperse simply, as still used in prov. E. 'His family are all grown up, and squandered (dispersed) about the country,' Warwicksh. (Halliwell). 'Squandered (scattered) abroad'; Merch. of Ven. i. 3. 22. 'Spaine . . . hath many colonies to supply, which lye squandered up and down.' Howell, Foreign Travel, sect. ix. ed. Arber, p. 45. 'All along the sea they drive and squander the huge Belgian fleet'; Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 67. Mr. Wedgwood's solution of this curious word is plainly the right one, viz. that it is a nasalized form (as if for squander?) of Lowland Sc. squatter, to splash water about, to scatter, dissipate, or squander, to act with profusion (Jassonson). This is the same as prov. E. swatter, to throw water about, as geese do in drinking, also, to scatter, waste (Halliwell); also as prov. E. swattle, to drink as ducks do water, to waste away (id.). These are frequentatives from Dan. squatte, to splash, spurt; figuratively, to dissipate, squander; cf. squatt, sb., a splash. So also Swed. squattare, to squander, lavish one's money (Widegren); frequentative of squatta, to squirt (id.); Swed. dial. skvätta, a strong verb (pt. t. skvatt, supine skvattit), to squirt. Note also Icel. skvatta, to squirt out water, properly of the sound of water thrown out of a jug, skvatta, a gush of water poured out. The d appears in O. Du. swadideren, 'to dabble in the water as a goose or duck,' Hexham; and in Swed. dial. skvadra, verb, used of the noise of water gushing violently out of a hole (Rietz). The word is now used metaphorically, but the orig. sense was merely to splash water about somewhat noisily; and the base is a form SKWAT, expressive of the noise of splashing water about; cf. prov. E. swat, to throw down forcibly (North); swash, a torrent of water. See Squabble and Squall, words of similar formation. The particular form SKWAT of the base may have been suggested by SKAT, the base of Scatter, q. v. Der. squander or. And see Squirt.

SQUARE, having four equal sides and angles. (F., = L.) M. E. square (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1078. = O. F. esquarr, 'square, or squared,' Cot.; esquarrs, sb., a square, or squareness. The sb. is the same as Ital. quadrato, 'a squadron, also a square, square, or carpenter's ruler'; cf. Ital. quadrato, 'to square,' id. All formed from a Low Lat. verb quadrare?, not found, but a mere intensive of Lat. quadrare, to square, make four-cornered, by prefixing the prep. an. The verb quadrare is from quadrum, four-cornered, put for quater or quater, from quater, four, cognate with E. four. See Ex., Quarry, Quadrant, and Four. Der. square, sb., squars, verb, squarsely, -ness. Also squars (s), q. v., squard, squard-on.

SQUASH, to crush, to squeeze flat. (F., = L.) No doubt commonly regarded as an intensive form of quash; the prefix s- answering to O. F. es- = Lat. ex-. But it was originally quite an independent word, and even now there is a difference in sense; to quash never means to squeeze flat. M. F. eschachen, Barlaam and Josaphat, l. 663, pt. in Altenglische Legenden, ed. Horstmann, p. 224. - O. F. eschacher, to crush (Roquefort, who gives a quotation); also spelt eschacher, 'to squash, beat, batter, or crush flat'; Cot. Mod. F. eschacher. This answers to Span. eschacher, eschacher, only used reflexively, in the sense to squat, to cower (Diez). Also the F. eschacher answers to Sardinian cattare, to press flat (id.). Dies further shows that this F. eschacher (Sard. cattare) answers to Lat. coactare, to constrain, force, hence to press. The prefix es- = Lat. ex-, extremely; hence eschacher is 'to press extremely,' crush flat, squash. = Lat. ex-; and coact-us, pp. of coagere (= co-agere), lit. to drive together; see Ex., Cogent; also Con- and Agent. And see Squat, a closely allied word. Der. squash, sb., a soft, unripe peascod, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 166.

SQUAT, to cower, sit down upon the hams. (F., = L.) 'To squatte as a hare doth'; Minshew, ed. 1627. Here squat is to lie flat, as if pressed tightly down; and the old sense of squat is, not uncommonly, to press down, crush, much like the sense of Squash, which is a closely related word. [This is well exemplified in Spanish; see below.] 'His grief deepe squating,' where the Lat. text has pressat;

Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. l. 509. M. E. squaten, to press or crush flat. 'The foundations of hills ben togður smyten and squat' = the foundations of the hills are smitten together and crushed; Wyclif, s. King, xxi. 8. 'Squat sal he bevedat' = he shall crush the heads (Lat. comprensus capitis), Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Pa. cvii. (or cix.) 6. This explains prov. E. squat, to make flat, and squat, adj., flat. It is important also to note that quat is used in the same sense as squat; indeed, in the Glossary to the Exmoor Scolding, the word squat is explained by 'to quat down,' which shows that the s- in squat is a prefix. = O. F. esquatis, to flatten, crush (Roquefort). = O. F. es- = Lat. ex-, extremely; and quatis, to press down, hence, reflexively, to press oneself down, to squat, cower. 'Els es quatis deles lun de pilers' = she squatted down beside one of the pillars; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 262, l. 16. The corresponding word is Span. acachar, acachar, whence acacharse, 'to crouch, lie squat' (Meadows), acacharse, 'to stoop, crouch, squat, cower' (id.). Minshew's O. Span. Dict. has: 'acachar, to squat as a hare or conie.' Without the prefix, we find Span. acach, gach, bent, bent downward, lit. pressed down; Ital. quatto, 'quatte, kncht, close, still, lurking' (Florio), quattare, 'to squat, to hush, to lye close' (id.). Dies shows that O. F. quatis and Ital. quato are due to Lat. quatus, pressed close together (whence also F. acach, to squat, acach, to hide). Thus the etymology of squat is from Lat. ex-, es- for sum, together, and quatis, pp. of quatis, to drive. See Ex-, Con-, and Agent; and see Squash. Der. squatt or. Any connection of squat with Dan. squatte, to splash, is entirely out of the question; the E. word related to Dan. squatte is Squander, q. v.

SQUAW, a female, woman. (W. Indian.) 'Squaw, a female, woman, in the language of the Indian tribes of the Algonquin family. = Massachusetts squa, scaw; Narragansett squaw; Delaware scaw and scaw; used also in compound words (as the names of animals) in the sense of female'; Webster.

SQUEAK, to utter a shrill sharp cry. (Scand.) In Hamlet, l. 2. 216. 'The squeaking, or screeking of a rat'; Baret (1580). = Swed. squaka, to croak; cf. Norweg. skvaka, to cackle (Aasen); Icel. skvaka, to give a sound, as of water shaken in a bottle, skvaka, a noise. And cf. Swed. squaka, to squeal. Allied to Squeal, Quack, Cackle; expressive of the sound made. So also G. quaken, to quack; quäken, quäken, to squeak. Der. squack, sb.

SQUEAL, to utter a shrill prolonged sound. (Scand.) In Jul. Cæs. ii. 2. 24. M. E. squial, Censor Mundi, l. 1344. = Swed. squiala, to squeal; Norweg. skviala, to squeal (Aasen). Used (in place of squak?) as a frequentative of squack; the sense is 'to keep on squeaking'; see Squeak. ¶ Notwithstanding the close similarity, squall is not quite the same word, though the words are now confused. Both, however, are expressive of continuous sounds. See Squall. Der. squack, sb.

SQUEAMISH, scrupulously fastidious, over-nice. (Scand.) with F. suffix. 'To be squamous, or nice, Delicias facere'; Baret (1580). This is one of the cases in which initial qu is put for su; cf. squaine, a swain (Levinus); squalloryn, to swelter (Prompt. Parv.). M. E. swymous, 'Swymous, or swymous, Abominativus'; Prompt. Parv., p. 482; also written swymous, p. 419. Squamous, in Chaucer, 3317, means fastidious, sparing, infrequent, retentive, with occasional violent exceptions; see l. 3804. In a version of the Te Deum from a 14th-century primer given by Mackell (Mon. Rit. ii. 22) we have 'Thou wert not swymous of the masden wombe'; see Notes and Queries, 4 S. iii. 181. The word is formed (with the suffix -ous = O. F. -ous = Lat. -osum) from the M. E. swesm, in the sense of 'vertigo' or dizziness, or what we now call a 'swimming' in the head. 'Swesm, or swesm, subita agrotatio,' Goaldman; cited by Way to illustrate 'Swesm, of mornyng [mourning], Tristicia, molestia, meror' in Prompt. Parv. Swesm, a swoon, trance, occurs in The Crowned King, l. 29, pr. in App. to P. Plowman, Text C. 'Soche a swesm lys harte can swalm' = such a dizziness overpowered his heart, Le Bone Florence, l. 770, in Ritson, Met. Romances, vol. iii. Swesm, a sore grief, Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 391. The word is from a Scand. source, so that the putting of qu (a Scand. combination) for su is the less remarkable. For further illustrations, see 'Swesmish, Swesmish, hesitating, diffident' in the Cleveland Glossary; swesm, to grieve, vex, displease, in the Ancræn Riwe, pp. 312, 330, 308, 404. The orig. sense is dizzy, as if from a swimming in the head, hence overcome with disgust or distaste, faint, expressing distaste at, and so over-nice, fastidious, squamous. = Icel. swesm, a bustle, a stir (the sense 'a soaring' is out of place, as there is no real connection with swesm); Norweg. swesm, a hovering about, a sickness that comes upon one, esp. a contagious disease, a slight intoxication (Aasen). More common as Icel. swesm, a swarming in the head, Swed. swemmung, a swoon, swooning, Dan. swemmel, giddiness, dizziness, swime, a fainting-fit, A. S. swime, a swoon (Grenn), Dn. swijn, a swoon; cf. also Low G. swinnen, swinnen, to hover or totter, to swoon, A. S. swinnan, to wander (Grein). β . The simple verb appears in Icel. swima (frequent. swimma), to be giddy; O. Swed. swima, to be dizzy (Ihre), mod. Swed. swimma, to faint, Dan. swime, swimma, to faint. All from the base SWIM, as seen in E. swim, to be dizzy. Fick supposes this to be a different word from the usual E. swim, to float; and it is just as well to keep these verbs apart. See SWIM (2). γ . That swimmish was confused with quinnish is very probable; it seems to have affected the meaning of the word quinn, which was properly 'destruction,' from the verb to quell. That the words have no real connection, is clear from the utter difference between the verbs swim and quell. Der. swimmishly, swimmishly.

SQUEEZE, to crush or press tightly, to crowd. (E.) 'To squeeze, or thrust together;' Baret (1580). The initial s is prefixed for emphasis, being due to the O. F. sq- = Lat. sq-, an intensive prefix; to sq- = to squeeze out. M. E. quiesim; 'quies out the jus' = squeeze out the juice, Reliq. Antiquæ, l. 303 (Stratmann). = A. S. swincan, to squeeze, crush; generally written swycan, and used in the compound swycan, to crush to pieces, squeeze to death, Ælfric's Homilies, l. 60, 513; ii. 26, 166, 294, 310. Also swincan; in Luke, xii. 18, where the earlier version has swycan (short for swycan), the latter has swincan (short for swincan). β . Leo and Ettmüller have the spelling swincan, but adduce no authority; in the quotations given by Leo, it is not really so spelt in the MSS. They wish to force a connection with A. S. swincan, to lament (Grein); as if swincan were its causal. γ . It seems more likely to be related to Goth. swistjan, to destroy. Cf. Swed. quäsa, to squeeze, bruise, wound; G. quetschen, to squash, bruise. From the Teut. base KWIS, to destroy, Fick, iii. 55; where is further compared Lithuan. kwisiti, to destroy (Nesselmann, p. 145), Skt. kw, to overpower; perhaps from γ GI, to overpower; Fick, iii. 570. Der. squeeze, sb.

SQUIB, (1) a paper tube, filled with combustibles, like a small rocket; also (2) a lampoon. (Scand.) L. 'Can he tic squibs' their tails, and fire the truth out' Brama and Fletcher, The Chances, v. s. 6. 'A squib, a ball or darts of fire;' Minsheu, ed. 1637. Spenser has it in the curious sense of 'paltry fellow,' as a term of disdain; Mother Hubbard's Tale, 371. Squibs were sometimes fastened slightly to a rope, so as to run along it like a rocket; 'The squib' run to the end of the line, and now for the cracker' [explosion]; Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act v. sc. 1. 'Hung up by the heels like meteors, with squibs in their tails;' Ben Jonson, News from the New World (and Herald). β . Squib is a weakened form of swip, and this again is a Northern form of swip, a word significant of swift smooth motion; a swip was so named from its swift darting or flashing along. [A squib fastened to a ring on a string, or laid on very smooth ground, will run swiftly along backwards.] M. E. swyppen, swyppen, to move swiftly, fly, sweep, dash; 'the swyppend water' = the dashing or sweeping water, Anturs of Arthur (in Three Met. Romances), st. v. 'When the saul fra the body swypps,' i. e. flies; Prick of Conscience, l. 1196. 'Tharfor þai swypps [dart] þurgh purgatory, Als a foul [bird] that flys swerdy;' id. l. 3322. 'Swypp forð' = hurried away, snatched away, Ancren Riwe, p. 216, l. 4. = Icel. swipa, to flash, dart, of a sudden but noiseless motion; swipa, a swift movement, twinkling, glimpse; Norweg. swipa, to run swiftly (Ansen). The Teut. base SWIP was also used to express the swift or sweeping motion of a whip; so that we also find A. S. swipa, a whip (John, ii. 15). Du. swiep, a whip, G. schwippe, a whip-lash, a switch. Note also Dan. swippe, to crack a whip, swip, an instant, moment, at swip, in a trice, Swed. dial. swipa, swipa, to sweep, swing, lash with a whip.

γ . All from Teut. base SWIP, to move with a turning motion, move swiftly, sweep along (Fick, iii. 365); see further under SWEEP, SWOOP, SWIFT. Thus a swip is 'that which moves swiftly,' 'that which sweeps along;' cf. 'swypp, agilis' in Prompt. Parv. 2. A swip also means a political lampoon; but it was formerly applied, not to the lampoon itself, but to the writer of it. 'The swipes are those who, in the common phrase of the world, are call'd libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers; their fireworks are made up in paper;' Tatler, no. 68; Nov. 1, 1709. It has been noted above that Spenser uses swip as a term of derision; it was equivalent to calling a man a firework, a flashy fellow, making a noise, but doing no great harm. 8. The sense of child's squirt is due to its resemblance to a squib; it squirts water instead of spouting fire.

SQUILL, a genus of bulbous plants allied to the onion. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. quille. 'Squilla, herba, Cypa maria, bulbus;' Prompt. Parv. = F. quille, 'the squill, sea-onion; also, a prawn, shrimp;' Cot. = Lat. quilla, also quilla, a sea-onion, sea-leek; a kind of prawn. = Gk. skilla, a squill; cf. skivros, a squill. β . Prob for skil-la, skil-les, from its splitting into scales; the prawn might be also named from its scaly coat; cf. skil-les (= skil-les), to split, cleave; see Schism.

SQUINT, to look askew. (Scand.) The earliest quotation is the following: 'Biboldeð o luft and sqwint' = looks leftwards and askew; Ancren Riwe, p. 212, l. 3. Like most words beginning with sq, the word is prob. Scandinavian; and I suppose the usual sq to stand for sw, as in other instances; see Squamish. Moreover, the final t probably stands for an older k; as preserved in prov. E. (Suffolk) sqwint, to wink (Halliwell). Thus the oldest form would be swint. = Swed. swinda, to shrink, to flinch (whence the notion of looking aside or askance), nasalized form of swiha, to balk, fail, flinch. Cf. O. Swed. swinda, to beguile. β . This Swed. swinda is cognate with A. S. swindan, to defraud, betray, also to escape, avoid; the orig. sense was prob. 'to start aside' or flinch; see the Teut. base SWIK in Fick, iii. 364. γ . More light is desired regarding this word. The derivation above given is the best I can suggest.

SQUIRE (1), the same as Esquire, q. v. (F., = L.) It occurs, spelt sqwira, as early as in King Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 360. Doublet, sqwira.

SQUIRE (2), a square, a carpenter's rule. (F., = L.) Is Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 474. M. E. sqwira, Floria and Blancheville, ed. Lumby, 325. = O. F. esquiere, 'a rule, or square;' Cot. Mod. F. esquiere. Merely another form of O. F. esquiere, a square; see Square. Doublet, sqwira, sb.

SQUIRREL, a nimble, reddish-brown, rodent animal. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. sqwirl (with one r), Seven Sages, ed. Weber, l. 1777. Also sqwirl. 'Hic scurellus, a sqwirlle;' Wright's Voc. i. 251; cf. p. 188. = O. F. esquiere (Barguy); spelt esquiere in Cotgrave. Mod. F. esquiere. = Low Lat. esquiritus (as above), also esquiritus (DuCange). Put for esquiritus?, sciurulus?, diminutives of sciurus, a squirrel. = Gk. skirra, a squirrel; lit. 'shadow-tail,' from his bushy tail. = Gk. skia, for skia, a shadow, from γ SKA, to cover (see BOAMA); and skia, a tail, for which see Curtius, i. 434.

SQUIRT, to jet, throw or jerk out water. (Scand.) 'I sqwirts with a sqwyrte, an instrument;' Palgrave. It is difficult to account for the r, which appears to be intrusive. It is doubtless allied to prov. E. sqwarter, to squirt (Somersetsh.), and sqwitter, a leak or looseness, diarrhoea. Thus Palgrave has both: 'sqwyrte, an instrument;' and 'sqwyrte, a leak, sqwyrte.' Cotgrave gives O. F. sqwira, 'squirt, a leak.' = Swed. dial. skwirt, to sprinkle all round; frequentative of skwitta (pt. t. skwatt), a strong verb, with the same sense as Swed. skwitta, to squirt (Widegren), which is the causal form; see Rota. Icel. skwita, to squirt out, throw out, properly of the sound of water thrown out of a jug; skwerta, a gush of water poured out. Dan. skwarte, to splash. See further under Squander. The prov. skwirt, to squirt, is the same word, with sw for sq; we even find blaggod skwirt = dirtied with squirting, in Walter de Biblesworth, Wright's Voc. i. 273, l. 1. Der. sqwirt, sb., in Palgrave.

STAB, to pierce with a sharp instrument. (C.) 'I stabs in with a dagger or any other sharpe weppyn;' Palgrave. M. E. stabe, sb.; 'Stabe, or wovnde of smyttyng, Stigma;' Prompt. Parv. I believe this word to be of Celtic origin, and to signify, originally, the driving into the ground of a sharpened wooden stake. = Irish stobaim, I stab; Gael. stob, to thrust or fix a stake in the ground, to stab, thrust, from stab, a stake, a pointed iron or stick, a stub or stump. This Gael. stob is cognate with E. staff; see Staff, Stub. (So also Russ. staba, a setting, also a stake; stabit, to set, put, place.) Der. stab, sb., Temp. iii. 3. 63.

STABLE (2), firm, steady. (F., = L.) M. E. stable, Rob. of Glouc., p. 54, l. 9. = O. F. estable, stable (Barguy). = Lat. stabilis, acc. of stabilis, stable, standing firmly; formed with suffix -ilis from stare, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q. v. Der. stabil-y; stabil-ness, Mach. iv. 3. 93; stabil-ty, spelt stabiltyte, Wyatt, tr. of Pa. 38 (R.), coined from Lat. stabilitas, firmness. Also stabilsh, M. E. stabilsh, Chaucer, C. T. 3997, the same word as establich, q. v.

STACK, a large pile of wood, hay, corn, &c. (Scand.) M. E. stak, stak. 'Stakke or heep, Agger;' Prompt. Parv. Stak in Havelok, 814, is prob. merely our stak. [Stakke, Chaucer, Persones Tale, De Luxuria (Tyrrwhitt), is an error for stak; see Group I, 841.] = Icel. stakr, a stack of hay; cf. Icel. stakka, a stump, as in our chimney-stack, and in stak, a columnar isolated rock; Swed. stak, a rick, heap, stack; Dan. stak. The sense is 'a pile,' that which is set or stak up; the allied E. word is Stake, q. v. Der. stak, verb, as in Swed. staka, Dan. stakke, to stack; stak-gård, answering to Icel. stak-garðr, a stack-garth (garth being the Norse form of yard); also hay-stack, corn-stack.

M. E. staf, pl. staves (where s = z). 'Ylik a staf;' Chaucer, C. T. 194. 'Two staves;' P. Plowman, B. v. 28. = A. S. staf, pl. stafas, Exod. xii. 19. John. vii. 15. The pl. stafas also meant letters of the alphabet; this meaning seems to be nearly preserved in staves as a musical term. † Du. staf. † Icel. staf, a staff, also a written letter (see Icel. Dict.). † Dan. stak, stav. † Swed. staf. † G. stab; O. H. G. stap. † Gael. stab, a stake, stump. And cf. Lat. stipes, a stock, post, log; Goth. stabs, a letter, hence, an element, rudiment, Gal. iv. 3. β. The word is parallel to stab, with much the same orig. sense, viz. a prop, support, a post firmly fixed in the ground; as shewn by Skt. stāpaya, to place, set, establish, causal of stāb, to stand; from STA, to stand; see Stand. So also Gael. stab, to fix in the ground as a stake, Irish stobain, I stab. And see Stub, Stab. Der. distaff (for dis-staf), q. v. Doublet, stav, sb.

STAG, a male deer. (Scand.) The word was also applied to the male of other animals. 'Stagge, ceruus;' Levins. 'Staggander [= stag gander, male gander], anser;' id. Lowland Sc. stag, a young horse; prov. E. stag, a gander, a wren, a cock-turkey. = Icel. steggr, steggr, a he-bird, a drake, a tom-cat. Allied to Swed. steg, a step, a round of a ladder (lit. something to mount by). The sense is 'mounter'; from Icel. stiga, to mount. See Stair. Der. stagg, stagg.

STAGE, a platform, theatre; place of rest on a journey, the distance between two such resting-places. (F., = L.) M. E. stage, Floriz and Blanchefur, ed. Lumby, 255; King Alisaunder, 7684. = O. F. estage, 'a story, stage, loft, or height of a house; also a lodging, dwelling house;' Cot. Mod. F. stage; Ital. staggio, a prop; Prov. estage, a dwelling-place (Bartsch). Formed as if from a Lat. type stadium (not found), a dwelling-place; due to Lat. stadium, supine of stare, to stand, with suffix -ium, -ium. See Stable (1), Stand. Der. stage-coach, a coach that runs from stage to stage; stage-player; stag-ing, a scaffolding.

STAGGER, to reel from side to side, vacillate; also, to cause to reel, to cause to hesitate. (Scand.) 'I stagger, I stande not stedfast;' Palgrave. Stagger is a weakened form of staker, M. E. staker. 'She rist her up, and staker heer and ther;' Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 37 from end. = Icel. stakra, to push, to stagger; frequentative of staka, to punt, to push. We also find staka, to punt, push with a pole, derived from staki, a punt-pole, a stake; similarly staka must be derived from an old form (staki?) of staki, which is cognate with E. Stake, q. v. So also Dan. staga, to punt with a pole, from staga, a pole, a stake. Thus the orig. sense was 'to keep pushing about,' to cause to vacillate or reel; the intransitive sense, to reel, in later. † O. Du. staggeren, to stagger as a drunken man (Hexham); frequent. of staden, staden, to stop or dam up (with stakes), to set stakes, also 'to leave or give over work,' id. In this latter view, to stagger might mean 'to be always coming to a stop,' or 'often to stick fast.' Either way, the etymology is the same. Der. stagger, s. pl., vertigo, Cymb. v. 5. 234.

STAGNATE, to cease to flow. (L.) A late word; stagnate and stagnant are in Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. stagnatus, pp. of stagnare, to be still, cease to flow, to form a still pool. = Lat. stagnum, a pool, a tank. See Stank. Der. stagnant; also stagnant, from Lat. stagnant, stem of pres. part. of stagnare. Also stanch, q. v.

STAD, steady, grave, sober. (F., = O. Du.) It may be observed that the resemblance to steady is accidental, though both words are ultimately from the same root, and so have a similar sense. Stad stands for stay'd, pp. of stay, to make steady; and the actual spelling stay'd is by no means uncommon. 'The strongest man o' th' empire, Nay, the most stay'd... The most true;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Valentinian, v. 6. 11. 'The fruits of his stay'd faith;' Drayton, Polyolbon, song 24 (R.) Spenser even makes the word dissyllabic; 'Held on his course with stay'd stedfastness,' F. Q. ii. 12. 29. See Stay. Der. stead-ly, stead-ness.

STAIN, to tinge, dye, colour, sully. (F., = L.) An abbreviation of stains, like sport for disports, spend for dispend. M. E. stainen, Gower, C. A. l. 225, l. 19; short for distainum, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 255. = O. F. distaindre, 'to distain, to dead or take away the colour of;' Cot. 'I stoyas a thyng. I distoyas;' Palgrave. Thus the orig. sense was 'to spoil the colour of,' or dim; as used by Chaucer. = Lat. dis, away; and tingere, to dye. See Dis and Tinge. Der. stain, sb.; stain-lets, Tw. Nt. l. 5. 278.

STAIR, a step for ascending by. (E.) Usually in the plural. [The phrase 'a pair of stairs' = a set of stairs; the old sense of pair being a set of equal things; see Pair.] M. E. stair, stare, stayer. 'Ne stoyers to stoye [mount] on;' Test. of Love, b. l.; near the beginning. 'Heih se stare = high is the stair; Ancren Riwle, p. 284, l. 8; the pl. stare occurs in the line above. = A. S. stager, a stair, step; 'Ascensorum, stager;' Wright's Voc. l. 26, col. 2, l. 3. [The g passes into y as usual, and just as A. S. dag became day, so A. S. stager became stayer, stoyr, stair.] The lit. sense is 'a step to climb by,' 'a mounter;' from A. S. stah, pt. t. of stigan, to climb. † Du. steiger, a stair; allied to stegel, a stirrup, steg, a narrow bridge; all from stigen, to mount. Cf. also Icel. stigi, stegi, a step, ladder (whence prov. E. use, a ladder), stigr, a path, foot-way (orig. an uphill path); from stiga, to mount. † Swed. steg, a round of a ladder, stega, a ladder; from stiga, to mount. † Dan. stige, a ladder, sti, a path; from stige, to mount. † G. steg, a path; from stigen, to mount. β. All from Teut. base STIG, to climb, mount (Fick, iii. 347), answering to Aryan of STIGH, to climb, ascend, whence also Skt. stigh, to ascend, Gk. στειχων, to ascend, march, go. Gotha stigen, to ascend; also E. stila, q. v., stirrup, q. v. Der. stair-case; stair-work, Wint. Tale, iii. 3. 75.

STAIR, a landing-place. (E.) A provincial word; also spelt stair, stake (Halliwell). = A. S. staf, a bank, shore (Grein); also A. S. staf, Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 147, l. 5. Cf. Icel. staf, a harbour, roadstead. Allied to Stand, q. v.

STAKE, a post, strong stick, pale. (E.) M. E. stake, Chaucer, C. T. 2620 (dissyllabic). = A. S. staca, a stake, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. v. cap. 5; also a sharply pointed pin, Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 230, l. 14. The latter sense is important as pointing to the etymology. From the Teut. base STAK, to pierce; appearing in G. stach, pt. t. of the strong verb stachen, to pierce, stick into. See Stick (1). Thus, the orig. sense is 'a piercer,' the suffix -a marking the agent, as in A. S. stunt-a, a hunter; hence a pin, a sharply pointed stick. † O. Du. stake, stach, 'a stake or a pale, a pile driven into water, a stake for which one playeth;' Hexham (Du. stach). Cf. staken, to stab, put, stick, prick, sting; id. † Icel. staki, a stake, punt-pole. † Dan. stags, a stake. † Swed. stake, a stake, a candle-stick. And cf. G. stake, a stake, pole (perhaps borrowed); stachel, a prick, sting, goad. β. The sense of a sum of money to be played for may be borrowed from Dutch, being found in O. Dutch, as above. It occurs in Wint. Tale, l. 2, 248; and the phr. at stake or at the stake occurs five times in Shak. (Schmidt). In this sense, a stake is that which is 'put' or pledged; cf. O. Du. hanselom in schuldt steken, 'to runne himself into debt;' Hexham. ¶ A closely allied word is stach, a pile, a thing stuck up; see Stack.

STALACTITE, an inverted cone of carbonate of lime, hanging like an icicle in some caverns. (Gk.) Modern. So called because formed by the dripping of water. Formed, with suffix -itis (Gk. -ιτις), from σταλακτ-εις, trickling; cf. σταλακτις (base σταλακτις), that which drops. = Gk. σταλάξω (= σταλάξω), to drip, drip; lengthened form of σταλάω, to drip. We also find σταλακτις, trickling, from σταλάω (= σταλάω), to drip, from the base σταλάω of σταλάω, a drop, σταλάω, a drop. β. The notion seems to be that of becoming stagnant, as in the case of water that only drips, not flows; and both bases (σταλάω and σταλάω) may perhaps be referred to the prolific STA, to stand, be firm. See Stank. And see Stalagmite.

STALAGMITE, a cone of carbonate of lime on the floor of a cavern formed by dripping water. (Greek.) Modern. Formed with suffix -itis (Gk. -ιτις), from σταλάξω, a drop; from σταλάω (= σταλάω), to drip. See Stalactite.

STALE (1), too long kept, tainted, rapid, trite. (Scand.) Stale is also used as a sb., in the sense of urine. Palgrave gives it in this sense; and see staley in Cotgrave. These senses are certainly connected, as shewn in O. Dutch. Hexham gives: 'Stal, stale; stale, stale-beere; stal-pisse, stale-pisse, or urine.' Stale, adj., is in Chaucer, C. T. 13694, as applied to ale. The word is either of Low German or Scand. origin; we may, perhaps, consider it as the latter. = Swed. stalla, to put into a stall, to stall-feed; also, to stale, as cattle; Dan. stalde, to stall, stall-feed, stale, to stale (said of horses). = Swed. stall, a stable; Dan. stald, a stable (whence also staldmög, stable-dung). These words are cognate with E. Stall, q. v. Hence stale is that which reminds one of the stable, tainted, &c. β. In one sense, we may explain stale as 'too long exposed for sale,' as in the case of provisions left unsold; cf. O. F. estaler, 'to display, lay open wares on stalls' (Cot.), from estal, 'the stall of a shop, or booth, any place where wares are laid and shewed to be sold.' But since this F. estal is merely borrowed from the Teutonic word stall, it comes to much the same thing. ¶ Wedgwood, following Schmeiler, explains stale, sb., from stopping the horse to let him stale; and cites Swed. ställa en häst, to stop a horse. But, here again, the Swed. ställa is derived from Swed. stall, orig. a stopping-place; and this again brings us back to the same result. The etymology is certain, whatever may be the historical explanation. Der. stale, verb, Antony, ii. 2. 240; stale-ness, Per. v. 1. 58.

STALE (2), a decoy, snare. (E.) 'Still as he went, he crafty stales did lay;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 4. M. E. stale, theft; hence stealth, deceit, synem, or a trap; it occurs in Aycnbe of Inwyt, p. 9, l. 24. Compare the phrase cunnes bi stales = to come by stealth, to surprise; O. Eug. Homilies, l. 249, l. 20. = A. S. stala, theft, Matt.

STALE (3) STHAL, a handle. (E.) Chiefly applied to the long handle of a rake, hoe, &c.; spelt S'ale in Halliwell. Stale also means a round of a ladder, or a stalk (rd.) M. E. stale. 'A ladel . . . with a long stale' (3 MSS. have stale); P. Plowman, C. xlii, 379. — A. S. stal, stol; the dat. pl. stalum (in another MS. stolum) occurs in A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 134, in the sense of 'stalks'; † Du. steel, a stalk, stem, handle; † G. stiel, M. H. G. stiel, a handle, broom-stick, stalk. β. The form stale seems pat for stale; the org. vowel appears to be i, as in M. H. G. stal. The etymology is not clear; but it may be only a weakened form of STALL; a stall might mean the handle to which a tool is made fast, or by which it is held tight; see STILL.

γ. Cf. further Gk. σταλός, σταλάς, σταλαός, a handle or helve of an axe, στάλαξ, a column; which are certainly allied to Gk. στάλαξ, to set, place, and therefore allied also to STALL, STILL. We may also compare Gk. στασις, firm, solid, G. sturz, firm, stiff; words which spring from the same prolific √ STA, to stand, and are related to the words already cited. ¶ It is not likely that A. S. stal or stol is a mere derivative from Lat. stulus, in the sense of stem. Der. stall (1) and (2), q. v.

STALK (1), a stem. (E.) M. E. stalks, of which one sense is the stem or side-piece of a ladder. 'To clamber by the roages [rogers] and the stalks;' Chaucer, C. T. 3625. A dimin. form, with suffix -le, of M. E. stale, stela, a handle, A. S. stal, stol, a stalk; see STALE (3). † Icel. stáltr, a stalk; Dan. stilk; Swed. stjolk. Cf. also Gk. στάλαξ, a trunk, stem (of a tree), allied to σταλάς, a handle; also στάλαξ, a column; see Curtius, i. 261. Der. stall (2), q. v.

STALK (2), to stride, walk with slow steps. (E.) M. E. stalken, to walk cautiously. 'Stalbedes ful stilly;' Will. of Palerne, 2728. 'With dredful foot [timid step] than stalboth Palamon;' Chaucer, C. T. 1481. — A. S. staleum, to go warily; staleung, a stalking. These words are due to Somner, and unauthorized; but the word also occurs in Danish, and he is probably right. † Dan. stalts, to stalk. Cf. A. S. stale, lofty, high (Grein). The notion is that of walking with lifted feet, so as to go noiselessly; the word is prob. connected with STILL, q. v., and with STALK (1) above. Halliwell has Stalk, the leg of a bird; stalts, to go slowly with, a quotation from Gower, C. A. l. 187; also stilt, the handle of a plough, which (like stale) is clearly an extension of STALE (3). We may explain stalt, verb, as to walk on lengthened legs or stalts, to go on tiptoes or noiselessly. Der. stalt-er; stalt-ing-horse, a horse for stalking game, explained in Dictionary Rusticum, 1726, quoted at length in Halliwell.

STALL, a standing-place for cattle, shed, division of a stable, a table on which things are exposed for sale, a seat in a choir or theatre. (E.) All the senses are from the notion of fixed or settled place or station. Indeed, station is from the same root. M. E. stal; dat. stalle, Chaucer, C. T. 8083. — A. S. stal, a place, station, stall; Grein, ii. 480; also stal, id. 477. † Du. stal, † Icel. stallur, a stall, pedestal, shelf; cf. stall, an altar. † Dan. stald (for stall), a stable, † Swed. stall. † G. stall; O. H. G. stal, † Lithuan. stalus, a table. † Skt. stala, sthalā, firm ground, a spot drained and raised, a terrace. And cf. Gk. στάλαξ, a column; στάλαξ, to place, set. β. All with the sense of firm place or station; from √ STA, extended from √ STA, to stand fast. See STAND. The base STAL is the same as STAR, appearing in Gk. στασις, firm, G. sturz, firm, Skt. stāra, firm, fixed, steady, sure; see STAR. Der. stall-er, from O. F. estallage, 'stallage,' Cot., where stal, a stall, is borrowed from Teutonic, and the suffix -age answers to Lat. -arium. Also stall, verb, Rich. III, l. 3. 206; stall-ed, fattened in a stall, Prov. xv. 17, from Swed. stalla, Dan. stalle, to stall-feed, feed in a stall. Also stall-feed, verb; stall-fed, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Ody. xv. 161. Also stall-in, q. v. From the same root are station, stable, &c.

STALLION, an entire horse. (F., — O. H. G.) Spelt stalland in Levins, with excrement d; stallant in Palgrave, with excrement t. M. E. stalon, Wright's Vocab. l. 187, col. 1, Gower, C. A. iii. 280, l. 24. — O. F. estalon, 'a stallion for mares;' Cot. Mod. F. estalon; cf. Ital. stallone, a stallion, also a stable-man, ostler. So called because kept in a stall and not made to work; Dies cites opone ad stallum from the Laws of the Visigoths. — O. H. G. stal, a stall, stable; cognate with E. STALL, q. v.

STALWART, sturdy, stout, brave. (E.) A corruption of M. E. stalwart, Will. of Palerne, 1950; Pricks of Conscience, 689; Havelok, 904. It is noticeable that s sometimes appears after the l; as in stalwart, O. Eng. Hom. l. 25, l. 12; stalwart, Juliana, p. 43, l. 11; stalwart, St. Margaret, p. 13, l. 3 from bottom. — A. S. stali-wort (plural), A. S. Chron. an. 896. β. Bosworth explains this word as 'worth stealing,' and therefore 'worth having.' In the A. S. Chron. it is applied to ships, and means 'serviceable'; we are told that the men of London went to fetch the ships, and they broke up all they could not remove, whilst those that were serviceable (stal-wort) they brought to London. As applied to men, it is not improbable that the sense meant 'good at stealing,' clever at fetching off plunder, hence, excellent, stout, brave. The spellings stalwart, stalwart suggest a connection with A. S. stala, theft; whilst it is certain that the A. S. stal-in composition commonly refers to the same. Thus we have stal-gast, a thievish guest (Grein); stal-gang, supposed to mean a stealthy step (id.); stal-dara, a predatory army, A. S. Chron. 897 (close to the passage where stalwart occurs). We may also note A. S. staldra, a decoy reindeer, Elfrid, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 1. § 15. If this be right, we must refer the prefix to A. S. stalan, to steal; see STEAL.

γ. On the other hand, Leo suggests 'stall-worthy,' worthy of a stall or place; if this were right (which I doubt), the prefix would be STALL, q. v. We might then compare it with stall-ward. [Ettmüller cites 'stallward, adjutorium;' this would be 'stall-ward' in mod. E., and cannot be the same word, having a different suffix.] We should then expect to find an occasional M. E. stallward rather than stalwart; it seems certain that M. E. stale (with one s) could not have been understood as meaning stall. β. For the latter part of the word, see WORTH, WORTHY.

STAMEN, one of the male organs of a flower. (L.) The lit. sense is 'thread.' A botanical term. The pl. stamina, lit. threads, fibres, is used in E. (almost as a sing. sb.) to denote firm texture, and hence strength or robustness. — Lat. stamen (pl. stamina), the warp in an upright loom, a thread. Lit. 'that which stands up;' formed with suffix -men (Aryan -man) from stare, to stand; see STAND. Cf. Gk. στῆνός, a warp, from the same root. Der. stamen or tammy.

STAMIN, TAMIN, TAMINY, TAMIS, TAMMY, a kind of stuff. (F., — L.) The correct form is stamin or stamin; the other forms are corruptions, with loss of initial s, as in tamb (for stamb). M. E. stamin, Ancren Riwle, p. 418, l. 20. — O. F. stamin, 'the stuff tamine;' Cot. — Lat. staminum, consisting of threads, — Lat. stamin-, base of stamen, a thread, stamen; see STAMEN.

STAMMER, to stutter, to falter in speech. (E.) M. E. stammers, in Reliquie Antiquae, l. 65; Arthur and Merlin, 2864 (Stratmann). Formed as a verb from A. S. stamar or stamar, adj., stammering. 'Balbus, stammar,' Wright's Voc. l. 45, col. 2; 'Balbus, stammar,' id. 75, col. 2. The suffix -er, -or, or -or is adjectival, expressive of 'finess or disposition for the act or state denoted by the theme;' cf. bit-er, bitter, from bitan, to bite; March, A. S. Grammar, § 242. Thus stamar signifies 'disposed to come to a stand-still,' such being the sense of the base stam, which is an extension of the √ STA, to stand; see STUMBLE. † Du. stammer, stammelen, to stammer. † Icel. stamar, stammering; stamma, stama, to stammer. † Dan. stamme, to stammer. † Swed. stamma (the same). † G. stammer, stammeln (the same); from O. H. G. stamm, adj., stammering; † Goth. stamma, adj., stammering, Mark, vii. 32. Der. stammer-er.

STAMP, to strike the foot firmly down, tread heavily and violently, to pound, impress, coin. (E.) M. E. stampen, Chaucer, C. T. 11472. 'And stamped heom in a mortar;' King Alisaunder, 332. — A. S. stampa; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 378, l. 18. † Du. stampen; † Icel. stappa (for stamp, by assimilation). † Swed. stampa; † Dan. stamp. † G. stampen (whence F. estamper, estamper); cf. G. stampen, O. H. G. stamp, a pestle for pounding. † Gk. στάμψω, to stamp. † Skt. stambh, to make firm or immovable, to stop, block up, make hard; cf. stamba, sb., a firm post, stambha, a post, pillar, stem. β. All from √ STAMBH, to prop, to stem, to stop; one of the numerous extensions of √ STA, to stand. See Fick, l. 821. 'The notions of propping and stamping are united in this root;' Curtius, l. 262. To which we may add the notion of 'stopping;' see STOP. Der. stamp, sb., Cor. ii. p. 21; stamp-er; also stamp-ade, q. v.

STAMPEDE, a panic, sudden flight. (Span., — Teut.) 'Stampede, a sudden fright seizing upon large bodies of cattle or horses, . . . leading them to run for many miles; hence, any sudden flight in consequence of a panic;' Webster. The s represents the sound of Span. z. — Span. (and Port.) estampada, 'a crash, the sound of anything bursting or falling;' Neuman. Formed as if from a verb estampar, akin to estampar, to stamp. The reference appears to be to the sound caused by the blows of a pestle upon a mortar. The Span. estampar is of Teut. origin; see STAMP.

STANCH, STAUNCH, to stop the flowing of blood. (F., — L.) M. E. stanchen, to satisfy (hunger), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 3, l. 1948, b. iii. met. 3, l. 1961; to quench (flame), Gower, C. A. l. 14, l. 13. — O. F. estancher, 'to stanch, stop an issue of blood, to slake or quench hunger, thirst, &c.;' Cot. Cf. Span. estancar, to stop, check. — Low Lat. stancare, to stop the flow of blood; cf. Low Lat. stancare, a dam to hem in water. The Low Lat. stancare is a variant of stagnare, also used in the same sense of to stop the flow of blood (Ducange). See STAGNANT and STANK. Der. stanch or staunch, adj., firm, sound, not in early use; Phillips (ed. 1706) gives stanch, 'substantial, solid, good, sound;' this is derived from the verb, STAR, a heavenly body, not including the sun and moon. (E.) M. E. sterra, Chaucer, C. T. 2063. = A. S. sterra; Grein, ii. 482. + Du. ster (in composition, sterra). + O. H. G. sterra. (There are also forms with final -no), viz. Icel. stjarna, Swed. stjerna, Dan. stjerne, Goth. stairna, G. stern. + Lat. stella (for ster-ula, a dimin. form; the Lat. sternum is borrowed from Gk.) + Gk. stērā, gen. stērās, with prosthetic σ. + Corn. and Bret. stern; W. stern (for stern). + Skt. śārd (for śārd); also śrī. β. The sense is 'strewer' or 'spreader,' or dispenser of light. = ✓ STAR, to spread, strew, as in Skt. śrī, Lat. sternere, to spread; see STRATUM. 'Previous to the confusion of the Aryan tongues, the root stā, to strew, was applied to the stars, as strewing about or sprinkling forth their sparkling light;' Max Müller, Lect. on Lang. ii. 237 (8th ed.) Der. ster, verb; star-fish, star-gaze; star-light; starr-ed; starr-y; day-star, late-star. And see astar, stellar, stars (2); also stern, stratum, street, stern, structure.

STARBOARD, the right side of a ship, looking forward. (E.) Spelt starboard in Munsheu, ed. 1627. M. E. starboards, Mortie Arthur, 743; starboards, id. 3663. = A. S. stairbord, Elfric, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 1, where it is opposed to harbord, i. e. larboard; see Sweet's A. S. Reader, p. 18. There is no doubt whatever that stairbord = steer-bord, and it is certain that the steersman stood on the right side of the vessel to steer; in the first instance, he probably used a paddle, not a helm. The Icel. stjerna means steering, and the phr. stjerna, lit. at the helm (or steering-paddle), means on the right or starboard side. Thus the derivation is from A. S. stair, a rudder (whence also stairman, a steersman) and bord, a board, also the side of a ship; see STEER and BOARD. + Du. starboard; from starr, helm, and board, board, also border, edge. + Icel. stjörnbord, starboard; from stjerna, steering, and bord, a board, side of a ship; cf. stjör, a border. + Dan. stjörbord; from stjör, steering, and bord. + Swed. stjörbord (the same).

STARCHE, a gummy substance for stiffening cloth. (E.) 'Starche for kycheyns, i. e. starch for kerchiefs; Prompt. Parv. So named because starch or stiff; starch being properly an adjective, and merely a weakened form of Stark, q. v. So also starch from A. S. starc, starc from F. arr. starc for starc, &c. Cf. G. stärke, (1) strength, (2) starch; from stark, strong. Der. starch, adj. in the sense of 'formal,' due rather to stark, sb., than to a mere change of form and sense of the adjective stark; not an early word, and rare; see an example in Todd's Johnson; hence starch-ly, formally, and starch-meat; also starch-y. Also starch, verb, to stiffen with starch, as in 'starched beard,' Ben Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, A. iv. sc. 4 (Carlo).

STARVE (1), to gaze fixedly. (E.) M. E. starran, Chaucer, C. T. 12617. = A. S. starran, to stare; Grein, ii. 477. A weak verb, from a Teut. type STAR, adj., fixed; appearing in G. starr, stiff, inflexible, fixed, staring; cf. Skt. starr (put for starr), fixed, firm. This adj. is formed by adding the Aryan suffix -na, often adjectival (Schleicher, Compend. § 230) to the ✓ STA, to stand, be firm; see STAND. + Icel. starr, to stare; cf. Icel. stira, Swed. stirra, Dan. stirre, G. starr, to stare. ¶ Hence to stare is also 'to be stiff,' as in 'makest . . . my hair to stare,' Jul. Cesar, iv. 3. 280. Der. starr, sb., Temp. iii. 3. 95. And see stirra, starrscope.

STARVE (2), to shine, glitter. (E.) M. E. starran. 'Staryn, or schyryn, and glyderyn, Niteo, rutulo;' Prompt. Parv. 'Staryng, or schyng, as gaye thynng, Rutulana, rutulus;' id. We still speak of staryng, i. e. very bright, colours. The same word as Stare (1). The Prompt. Parv. also has: 'Staryn wibe brode eyne, Patentibus oculis respicere.' From the notion of staring with fixed eyes we pass to that of the effect of the stare on the beholder, the sensation of the staring look. In the word glare, the transference in sense runs the other way, from that of gleaming to that of staring with a piercing look. See Stare (1). ¶ No original connection with star, of which the M. E. form was sterra, with two r's and a different vowel.

STARVE, rigid, stiff; gross, absolute, entire. (E.) 'Stiff and stark;' Romeo, iv. 1. 103. M. E. stark, stiff, strong, Chaucer, C. T. 9332, 14376. = A. S. starr (for starr), strong, stiff; Grein, ii. 481. + Du. stark. + Icel. starr. + Dan. stark. + Swed. and G. stark. β. In most of these languages, the usual sense is 'strong;' but the orig. sense may very well have been rigid or stiff, as in English; cf. Goth. gastaurmīta, lit. becomes dried up, used to translate Gk. gastaureris in Mark, ix. 18, and Lithuan. strigti, to stiffen, to freeze. γ. The notion of rigidity is further due to that of straining or stretching tightly; this appears in G. strecken, to stretch, (whence the phr. nile brüste an stross strecken, to strain, strive very hard, do one's utmost), Lat. strigere, to draw tight, bind firmly. The root-form is STARC, to stretch, an extension of ✓ STAR, to spread out; Fick, l. 826. See Stretch. And see Strong, which is a mere variant of stark. Der. stark-ly, Meas. for Meas. iv. 2. 70; stark-ness. Also stark, adv., wholly, as in stark mad. Also stark, q. v. ¶ But not stark-mad, q. v.

STARK-NAKED, quite naked. (E.) In Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 374. This phrase is doubtless now used as if compounded of stark, wholly, and naked, just as in the case of stark mad, Cons. of Err. ii. 1. 39. v. 281; but it is remarkable that the history of the expression proves that it had a very different origin, as regards the former part of the word. It is an ingenious substitution for stark-naked, lit. tail-naked, i. e. with the hinder parts exposed. Stark-naked occurs in The Castell of Love, ed. Weymouth, l. 431; also in the Ancran Riwle, pp. 148, 260, where the editor prints stark-naked, stark-naked, though the MS. must have stark-naked, stark-naked, since stark is never spelled stark. The same remark applies to stark-naked in St. Marharette, p. 5, l. 19, where the editor tells us (at p. 109) that the MS. may be read either way. In St. Juliana, pp. 16, 17, we have stark-naked in both MSS. β. The former element is, in fact, the M. E. starr, a tail, Havelok, 2823, from A. S. starr, a tail, Exod. iv. 4. It is still preserved in E. redstart, i. e. red tail, as the name of a bird. The Teut. type is STERTA, a tail, from ✓ STAR, to spread out; Fick, iii. 346; see STRATUM. + Du. starr, a tail. + Icel. starr. + Dan. starr. + Swed. starr. + G. starr. ¶ The phrase was early misunderstood; see Trevisa, iii. 97, where we have stark blinde = wholly blind, with the various readings stark blinde and stark blinde; here stark blinde is really nonsense. There is also stark blind, Owl and Nightingale, l. 241; but this answers to Dan. stark blind, from starr, a cataract in the eye. We may also note prov. G. stark wall (lit. tail-wall), wholly drunk, cited by Schmeller, Bayer. Dict. col. 785, l. 48, but apparently not understood by him.

STARLING, the name of a bird. (E.) In Shak. 3 Hen. IV, l. 3. 224. M. E. staryng, Wright's Voc. l. 188, col. 2; formed (with double dimin. suffix -ing) from M. E. starr, a starling, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 248. = A. S. starr, a starling. 'Turdus, starr;' Wright's Voc. l. 29, col. 2; 'Starrus, starr;' id. 63, l. 6. It also means a sparrow, Matt. x. 29. (Lind. MS.) We also find the forms starr, starr. 'Beatica, starr;' Wr. Voc. i. 63, col. 2; 'Strobus [stornus?], starr;' id. 29, col. 2. + Icel. starr, starr. + Dan. starr. + Swed. starr. + G. starr. + Lat. starrus. See Fick, iii. 325. Perhaps allied to Gk. starr; Curtius, i. 443. Root uncertain.

START, to move suddenly, to wince, to rouse suddenly. (E.) M. E. starran, Chaucer, C. T. 1049. We also find starr, sb., a start, quick movement, Chaucer, C. T. 1705; Havelok, 1873. The verb does not appear in A. S., but we find the pt. t. starr, Havelok, 873; spelt starr, starr in Layamon, 23951. We may call it an E. word. Ettmüller gives an A. S. strong verb starran° (pt. t. starr° & pp. starr°), but it is a theoretical form; and the same seems to be the case with the cognate O. H. G. starran° (pt. t. starr°), to which he refers us. Stratmann cites an O. Icel. starr, but I cannot find it; there are traces of it in Icel. starrimadr, a man who walks proudly and stuffy, and Icel. upstarr, an upstart, both given in Egilsson. β. Allied words are Du. starran, to precipitate, plunge, spill, fall, rush; Dan. starr, to fall, precipitate, hurl; Swed. starr, to cast down, ruin, fall dead; G. stürzen, to hurl, precipitate, ruin, overturn. Note also Swed. dial. starr, to run wildly about (Riets); Low G. starran, to flee; these latter words certainly appear to be connected with Swed. starr, Low G. starr, a tail. The G. starran is derived from the sb. starr, a sudden fall, tumble, precipice, waterfall, but also used in the sense of stump (i. e. tail); G. starr on Pflug = E. plough-tail, prov. E. starr. The O. Du. starran, 'to lie, to run away, or to save one's self' (Hexham) is, doubtless, to turn tail, from O. Du. starr, 'a tail, the crupper' (id.); cf. starrballen, 'to tumble over one's head.' γ. I conclude that the verb is much more likely to be derived from the sb. starr, a tail, than contrariwise the sb. from a strong verb starran° which has not yet been found. If this be so, the orig. sense was to abut the tail, to tumble over suddenly, which seems to be precisely the sense to which the evidence points. On the sb. starr, see under Stark-naked. If upstarr can be thus explained as 'with one's tail up,' it is a very graphic expression.

In the Icel. Dict. we find: 'Sámr gélk mjok upp starr = Sámr stakald very haughtily, prob. from the fine dress (starr).' But why not from Icel. starr, a tail? Cf. 'skera tagi upp í starr, to dock a horse's tail,' just two lines above. Der. starr, sb., M. E. starr, as above; starr-er; starr-up, an upstart, Much Ado, l. 3. 69; upstarr, q. v. Also starr-le, the frequentative form, M. E. starran, to rush, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 1736, also to stumble along. Debate of Body and Soul, l. 120, pr. in Alteng. Sprachproben, ed. Matzner, i. 94, and in Mæser's Poema, ed. Wright, p. 335.

STARVE, to die of hunger or cold, to kill with hunger or cold. (E.) Orig. intransitive, and used in the general sense of 'to die,' without reference to the means. M. E. sterran (with u = o), strong verb; pt. t. starr, Chaucer, C. T. 935. pp. sterran, or sterran, id. 2016. = A. S. sterran, to die, pt. t. sterr, pp. sterran; 'sterr hunger' = died of hunger, A. S. Chron. an. 1124, last line. Hence was formed the trans. verb starven, to kill, weak verb; appearing in aster-fod, pp., Matt. xv. 13 (Rushworth gloss). The mod. E. has confused the two forms, making them both weak. + Du. starven, pt. t. starf, starf, pp. gestarven. + G. starben, pt. t. starb, pp. gestarben. β. All from Teut. base STARB, according to Fick, iii. 247; he also cites Icel. starf, labour, toil, starfa, to toil, as belonging to the same root. Der. starve-ling, with double dimin. suffix, expressive of contempt, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 76. Also starve-ation, a ridiculous hybrid word, now in common use; * it is an old Scottish word (?), but unknown in England till used by Mr. Dundas, the first Viscount Melville, in an American debate in 1775. That it then jarred strangely on English ears is evident from the nickname Starvation Dundas, which in consequence he obtained. See Letters of H. Walpole and Mann, vol. ii. p. 296, quoted in N. and Q. no. 225; and another proof of the novelty of the word, in Pegge's Anecdotes of the Eng. Language, 1814, p. 38.—Trench, Eng. Past and Present.

STATE, a standing, position, condition, an estate, a province, a republic, rank, dignity, pomp. (F., = L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. M. E. stat, Ancren Riwle, p. 204, l. 2. = O. F. estat, 'estate, case, nature, &c.:' Cot. = Lat. status, acc. of status, condition. = Lat. status, supine of stare, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q. v. = STA, to stand. ¶ Estata is a fuller form of the same word. Der. state, verb, quite a late word; stat-ol, stat-ally; state-man, a coined word; state-paper, state-prisoner, state-room; state-o-man, coined like hunt-o-man, spart-o-man; state-o-man-ship, state-o-man-ship. Also state-ly, M. E. statlich, Chaucer, C. T. 140, a hybrid compound; state-li-ness. And see station, stat-ist, stat-on, stat-ure, stat-us, stat-ute. Doublets, estate, status.

STATICS, the science which treats of the properties of bodies at rest. (Gk.) Spelt staticis in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed as a plural from the adj. static. 'The static aphorisms of Sanctorius,' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 7. § 2. = Gk. στατικός, at a standstill; cf. στατικός (sc. ἰσότητος), statics, the science of the properties of bodies at rest. = Gk. στατός, placed, standing, verbal adj. from στα-, base of στημι, I place, I stand. = STA, to stand; see Stand. Der. hydro-static.

STATION, a standing, a post, assigned place, situation, rank. (F., = L.) M. E. station, Gower, C. A. iii. 91, l. 24. = F. station, 'a station;' Cot. = Lat. stationem, acc. of statio, a standing still. = Lat. status, pp. of stare, to stand; see Stand. Der. station-ary, from F. stationnaire (Cot.), Lat. adj. stationarius. Also station-er, a bookseller, Minshew, ed. 1637, but orig. merely one who had a station or stand in a market-place for the sale of books; see Trench, Select Glossary; hence station-ary.

STATIST, a statesman, politician. (F., = L.; with Gk. στῆσις.) So in Shak. Hamlet, v. 2. 33. A hybrid word, coined from the sb. state by adding the suffix -ist (F. -iste = Lat. -ista = Gk. -ιστής). See State. Der. stat-ist-ic, i. e. relating to the condition of a state or people; whence stat-ist-ic-ian (like static from static).

STATUE, an upright image. (F., = L.) Sometimes statuf, trisyllabic, in which case it is generally printed statue in mod. edd. of Shakespeare, as if directly from Lat. statua. But it may be observed that Cotgrave writes statuf for the F. form. However, statue certainly occurs in Bacon, Essays 27, 37, 45. M. E. statue, Chaucer, C. T. 14165. = O. F. statue, 'a statue;' Cot. Mod. F. statue. = Lat. statua, a standing image. = Lat. status, crude form of status, a standing, position, state; see State. Der. statu-ary, from F. statuaire, 'a statuary, stone-cutter, from Lat. statuarius; statu-ette, from Ital. statuette, dimin. of statua; statu-que, formed with suffix -que (F. -ques = Ital. -que = Lat. -icus), see Brachet, Introd. § 219, note 4.

STATURE, height. (F., = L.) Used with special reference to the upright posture of a human being. M. E. stature, Chaucer, C. T. 8133. = F. stature, 'stature;' Cot. = Lat. statura, an upright posture, height, growth. = Lat. status, supine of stare, to stand; see State, Stand.

STATUS, condition, rank. (L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. = Lat. status, condition, state. See State. Doublets, state, estate.

STATUTE, an ordinance. (F., = L.) M. E. statute, Gower, C. A. l. 217, last line but one. = F. statut, a statute; Cot. = Lat. statutum, a statute; neut. of statutus, pp. of statuere, to set, establish. = Lat. status, crude form of status, position, state; see State, Stand. Der. statut-able, a coined word; statut-ally; statut-ary, a coined word. Here belong also con-stitute, de-stitute, in-stitute, pro-stitute, sub-stitute, re-stitute.

STAUNCH, adj. and verb; see Stanch.

STAVE, one of the pieces of a cask, a part of a piece of music, a stanza. (E.) 1. Merely another form of staff, due to the dat. sing. stave (= stave), Owl and Nightingale, 1167, and the pl. staves.

(= staves), Wyclf, Mark, xiv. 48. Perhaps the special sense is rather Scand. than E. Cf. Icel. stafr, a staff, also a stave; Dan. stav, a staff, stave, a stave. 2. A stanza was formerly called a staff, as forming a part of a poem; prob. suggested by the older use of A. S. staf, Icel. stafr, G. buchstab, in the sense of a letter or written character. Cf. Icel. staf, a stave in a song; Goth. staba, a letter, element, rudiment, Gal. iv. 3. 'Staffs in our vulgar poetry I know not why it should be so called, unless it be for that we understand it for a bearer or supporter of a song or ballad;' Puttenham, Art of Eng. Poesie, b. ii. c. 2. See Staff. Der. stave, verb; usually to stave in, to break into a cask, or to stave off, to ward off as with a staff; the verb readily puts v for f, as in strove from strife, live from life. Doublet, staff.

STAY (1), to remain, abide, wait, prop, delay. (F., = O. Du.) 'Stayn [= steyn], stoppyn, stytyn, or cesyn of gate, Restito, obsto; Prompt. Parv. The pt. t. staid occurs in Lydgate, Minor Poema, 103 (Stratmann). = O. F. estayer, 'to prop, shore, stay, under-set;' Cot. Mod. F. stayer. = O. F. estays, sb. fem., 'a prop, stay, supporter, shore, battresse.' This is mod. F. étais, a prop; used as a masc. sb., by confusion with the nautical term étais; see Stay (2). Thus the orig. use was to support, whence the senses to hold, retain, delay, abide, were easily deduced. β. The O. F. estay is of Low G. origin, and certainly from Du. or Flemish, as will appear. = O. Du. stade, or stays, 'a prop or stay;' Hexham. He also gives stey, 'stay, or leisure;' geen stey hebben, 'to have no time or leisure.'

The O. F. word was also stey, a prop; Delfortrie, p. 341; at p. 340 Delfortrie also gives stade, stade, a stead, or place; which he says is not to be confounded with staden, stade, or stays, a word still in use in Antwerp in the sense of 'leisure.' He must mean that the stades are not to be confounded, for the O. Du. stade remains the same word, in all its senses of 'commodious time,' 'aide, helpe, or assistance,' 'a haven, port, or a roade,' and 'a prop, or a stay;' Hexham. The orig. idea is that of fit or fixed place, hence a fit time. Cognate words are A. S. stede, a stead, a place (see also Staithe); Dan. stad, a town; Swed. stad, a town; G. stadt, a town, statt, a place, stead; Goth. stata, a place, stead; the mod. Du. form is stad, a town, also stade in the phr. te stede komen, to come in due time (lit. 'to the right place'). These words are closely allied to E. stead; and are all from STA, to stand. See Stand.

γ. We know the word to be Du. or Flemish, because it is only thus that we can explain the loss of d between two vowels, whereby stade became stays. This is a peculiarity of the Du. language, and occurs in many words; e.g. broder for broeder, a brother (Sewel), ner for neider or neider, tender (d.). Der. stay, sb., spell stays in Wyatt, tr. of Ps. 130 (R.), from O. F. estays, as above; this is really a more orig. word in F., though perhaps later introduced into English. Also staid, q. v.; put for stay'd = stayed, pp. Also stay-s, pl. lit. supports; it is remarkable that bedes is also, properly, a plural form.

STAY (2), as a nautical term, a large rope supporting a mast. (E.) Rare in old books. Cotgrave uses it to translate O. F. estay, which is the same word, the F. word being of Teut. origin. I find no example in M. E. = A. S. stag, a stay; in a list of the parts of a ship in Wright's Voc. l. 63, col. 2. The change from A. S. stag to E. stay is just the same as from A. S. dag to E. day. + Du. stag. + Icel. stagi, and Swed. stag. + G. stag. β. Perhaps orig. named from its being used to climb up by, and related to A. S. stager, a stair, Swed. stige, a ladder. See Stair, Stag. Der. stay-mat.

STEAD, a place, position, place which another person had or might have. (E.) M. E. stede, in the general sense of place. 'In twenty stades' = in twenty places; Havelok, 1246. = A. S. stede, a place; Grein, ll. 478. Closely allied to A. S. stæð, stæð, a bank, shore; see Staithe. + Du. stad, a town; O. Du. stade, opportunity, fit time (orig. place); O. Du. stade, 'a farme;' Hexham. + Icel. stadr, a stead, place, stads, a place. + Dan. and Swed. stad, a town; Dan. stads, a place. + G. stadt, statt, a town, place; O. H. G. stat. + Goth. stada, a stead, place. Cf. Lat. statio, a station; Gk. στάσις; Skt. stāth (for stāthi), a standing, residence, abode, state. β. From the Teut. base STAD, extension of STA, to stand; appearing (in a nasalized form) in E. Stadd, q. v. Der. stead-fast, q. v., stead-y, q. v., home-stead, q. v.; bed-wood. And see stay (1), staithe, station.

STEADFAST, STEDFAST, firm in its place, firm, constant, resolute. (E.) M. E. stedfast, appearing as a trisyllable in Gower, C. A. li. 115, l. 4; and in the Ormulum, l. 1507. = A. S. stæðfast, firm in one's place, steadfast; Battle of Maldon, 127, 249; see Sweet's A. S. Reader. [Spelt stæðfast in Grein, which is surely wrong.] = A. S. stede, a place; and fast, fast. See Stead and Fast. + O. Du. stedvast, 'steadfast,' Hexham; from O. Du. stede, a farm (orig. a place), and vast, fast. + Icel. stæðfast, from stæðr, a stead, and fast, fast. + Dan. stadfast.

STEADY, firm, fixed, stable. (E.) Spelt stady in Palgrave. M. E. stadi or stady, very rare; Stratmann only cites one instance, from the Ormulum, 988, where, however, it appears as stadi. = A. S.

stæðig, steady, appearing in unstæðig, unsteady, giddy, Ælfric's Homilies, l. 480, last line. [Not from A. S. stæðig, which means sterile, barren, Gen. xxiii. 38; though the words are connected.] Formed, with suffix -ig (mod. E. -y), from A. S. stæð, a place, stand, shore, which is closely allied to stede, a place; see STAND, STAITHE. + O. Du. stæðig, 'continual, firme,' Hexham; from stede, a stand. + Icel. stæðigr, steady, stable; from stæðr, a place. + Dan. stædig, steady; from stæde, a stall, stæd, a town, orig. a place. + Swed. stædig; from stæd, a place. + G. stædig, continual; from stætt, a place. ¶ Perhaps the spelling with d is due to Danish influence. Der. steadily, -ness. Also steady, verb.

STEAK, a slice of meat, esp. beef, ready for cooking. (Scand.) M. E. stake; spelt steyke in Prompt. Parv. = Icel. stak, a steak; so called from its being roasted, which was formerly done by placing it upon a wooden peg before the fire. = Icel. stakja, to roast, esp. on a spit or peg; cf. stikka, to be roasted or scorched. In the words stikja, stikka, the 'i' and 'j' indicate a lost strong verb. This lost strong verb answers to E. stick, to pierce (pp. stuck); see STICK (1). And cf. Icel. stika, a stick, stika, to drive piles. A stak is a piece of meat, stak on a stak to be roasted. + Swed. stak, roast meat; staka, to roast; cf. stak, a stab, prick, staka, to stick, stab. + Dan. stog (for stak), a roast; ad vunde stog, to turn the spit; stega, to roast; cf. stak, a stab, stikka, to pierce; stikka, a stick. Cf. G. anstachen, to put on a spit, anstachen, to pierce. Der. bof-stak; whence F. bifstek.

STEAL, to take away by theft, to thieve. (E.) M. E. stelan, Chaucer, C. T. 564; pt. t. stal, id. 3993; pp. stolen. = A. S. stelan, pt. t. stel, pl. stolena, pp. stolen; John, x. 10. + Du. stelen. + Icel. stela. + Dan. stiale. + Swed. styla. + G. stehlen; O. H. G. stolon. + Goth. stolon. The base is STAL, as seen in the pt. t.; Fick, iii. 347. β. Curtius, i. 563, compares it with Gk. στέρωμαι, I am deprived of, στέρω, I deprive; it seems better to connect it (as he seems to allow that it may be connected) with Gk. στάλας, to get ready, which 'has in certain connections the notion of secretness and stealth'; Curtius. Either way, the form of the root is STAR; and if we may take the form STAR which is the root of Gk. στάλας, we may connect steal with stall and still, words which certainly seem as if they should be related. Prob. steal meant to 'put by.' See STALL, STILL. We may also note Skt. stam, to steal; stama, a thief. Der. steal-th, M. E. stolpe, Rob. of Glouc. p. 197, l. 11, perhaps of Scand. origin; cf. Icel. stuld, Dan. stuld, Swed. stöld, theft. Hence stealthily, stealth-i-ly, -ness. Also stale (2).

STEAM, vapour. (E.) M. E. stoom, which also meant a flame or blaze. 'Stoom, or love of fyre. Flamma; Stoom, of hottie lycure. Vapor;' Prompt. Parv. In Havelok, 591, stom is a ray of light, described as resembling a sun-beam. 'Two stomys eyes' = two flaming eyes; Sur T. Wat. Sat. l. 53. = A. S. stom, a vapour, smell, smoke; Grein, ii. 480. = Du. stoom, steam. β. The final -m is certainly a suffix (Aryan -ma), as in soo-m, gloo-m. The diphthong ed = Goth. ed; from orig. u. Thus the base is STU, which in Teutonic means 'to stand upright' (cf. Gk. στρέω, to erect), and is another form of STA, to stand. Fick, iii. 343. The orig. sense was probably 'pillar,' just as in the case of boom, which meant (1) a tree, (2) a pillar of fire, (3) a sun-beam; see BOOM. The orig. stoom may have been the pillar of smoke and flame rising from an altar or fire; cf. Gk. στῆλαι, a pillar, any long upright body like a pillar; Skt. stānā, a pillar, a post. γ. This sense of pillar exactly suits the passage in Havelok above referred to, viz. 'Of his mouth it stod a stame Als it were a sunbeem' = out of his mouth it (a ray of light) stood like a pillar of fire, just as if it were a sun-beam. See STUD (2). Der. stoom, verb, M. E. stoomen, Chaucer, C. T. 202, A. S. stōman, as in be-stōman, Grein, i. 94; stoom-boat, -engine; stoom-or, stoom-y.

STEED, a horse, esp. a spirited horse. (E.) M. E. stede, Chaucer, C. T. 13831; Havelok, 1675. = A. S. stēda, masc., a stud-horse, stallion, war-horse; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 210, l. 14; also steod-hors, used as convertible with stede in Ælfred's tr. of Bede, b. ii. c. 13, where it is also opposed to myre, a mare, as being of a different gender. Cf. A. S. stēdmyr, a stud-mare, Laws of Ælfred (political), § 16, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 71. β. By the usual vowel change from e to i (as in fed, a foot, pl. fed, feet, and in a great number of instances), stēda is derived from stēd, a stud; with the addition of the masc. suffix -a. Thus stēd-a = 'studder,' i. e. stud-horse or stallion, for breeding foals. See STUD (1). γ. The Irish steed, a steed, appears to be borrowed from English. More remarkable is the Gael. steud, a horse, a race, as connected with steud, to run, to race; this appears to be a mere apparent coincidence, as it expresses a different idea, and has a different vowel sound. The word steed is certainly E., not Celtic, and is allied to G. stede, a mare, Icel. stēdda, a mare, stēdhor, a stallion, stēdmyrr, a stud-mare or brood-

M. E. steel, Chaucer, C. T. 10300. = A. S. stēle or stēle (the tree form); but only found with the spelling stēle, and in the compounds stēle-eg, steel-edged, and stēle-m, made of steel; Grein, ii. 490. 'The writing of e for i is common both in Early West-Saxon and Late West-Saxon; although in Late West-Saxon it generally undergoes a further change into y;' Sweet's A. S. Reader, 2nd ed., p. 26. This change has certainly taken place in the above instances. + Du. steel. + Icel. stál. + Dan. stål. + Swed. stål. + G. stahl, contracted from O. H. G. stahal.

β. The O. H. G. form furnishes the clue to the etymology; all the forms are due to a Teut. type STAHLA, Fick, iii. 344, formed with suffix -la (Aryan -ra) from the Teut. base STAH, answering to an Aryan base STAK, to be firm or still, appearing in Skt. stak, to resist, Lithuan. stakm, a stake, Lat. stacnum (for stacum), standing-water. See STANK. Thus the long vowel in stahl is due to loss of h before l. Der. steel, verb, from A. S. stēlan, to steel; cf. Icel. stala, to steel (derived from stál by the usual vowel-change), G. stählen (from stahl). Also steel-yard, q. v.

STEELYARD, a kind of weighing-machine. (E.) Sometimes explained as a yard or bar of steel, which may suit the appearance of the machine, but is historically wrong. It was so called because it was the machine in use in the place called the Steelyard in London, and this was so named as being a yard in which steel was sold. 'Next to this lane [Coan Lane], on the east, is the Steelyard, as they term it, a place for merchants of Almayne [Germany], that use to bring hither . . . steel, and other profitable merchandises;' Stow's Chronicle, ed. Thoms, p. 67; see the whole passage. The Steelyard was a factory for the Hanse Merchants, and was in Dowgate ward. 'The merchants of the steylards' are mentioned in Fabryus's Chron., an. 1227-8. And see Steylard in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

STEEP (1), precipitous. (E.) M. E. steop, steop. 'Theo path . . . was narve and steop;' King Alisaunder, 7041. = A. S. stēap, steep, high, lofty; Grein, ii. 481. Cf. O. Friesic stap, high, Icel. steypur, steep, rising high.

β. The A. S. stēap is commonly applied to hills; the derived verb stēpan means to erect, exalt, Grein, ii. 480. The Icel. steypur is allied to steypa, to overthrow, cast down, lit. to make to stoop, causal of the rare verb stēpa, to stoop, which is the same word as Swed. stupa, (1) to fall, (2) to tilt. Cf. Swed. stupa, sloping, stupa, a leaning forward; whence it appears that stēap is a derivative from stēap, and meant, originally, made to stoop, tilted forward, sloping down. So also Norweg. stepta, to fall, tumble head-long, stept, a steep cliff. See STOOP (1), and STROUP. Der. steep-ly, -ness; also steep-ly, q. v.; steep-y, Timon, i. 1. 74.

STEEP (2), to dip or soak in a liquid. (Scand.) M. E. steppan. 'Steppan yn water or other lycure, Infundo, illiqueo;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt stepe, Palladius, b. ii. l. 281. = Icel. steypa, to make to stoop, overturn, to pour out liquids, to cast metals; causal of stēpa, to stoop; see STOOP, and see STOOP (1). So also Swed. stēpa, to cast (metals), to steep, to sink; stēpa bor, 'to steep barley in water' (Widegren); Dan. stēbe, to cast, mould (metals), to steep (corn), stēb, the steeping of grain, steeped corn. The succession of senses is perfectly clear; viz. to make to stoop or overturn, to pour out or cast metals, to pour water over grain.

STEEPLE, a pointed tower of a church or building. (E.) M. E. stepele, Rob. of Gloucester, p. 528, l. 5. = A. S. stēpel, a lofty tower, Luke, xiii. 4; the Hatton MS. has stepele. So called from its 'steepness,' i. e. loftiness or height; from A. S. stēap, lofty, high, mod. E. steep. The vowel-change from ed to i is quite regular; see STOOP (1). Der. steple-chase, modern, not in Todd's Johnson.

STEER (1), a young ox. (E.) M. E. steer, Chaucer, C. T. 2151. = A. S. stēor; 'Juvencus, vel vitula, stēor;' Wright's Voc. l. 23, col. 2. + Du. and G. stör, a bull. + Icel. stýrr. + Goth. staur. + Lat. taurus (for staurus), a bull. + Gk. ταύρος (for στάυρος). + Russ. stör. + Ir. and Gael. tarbh, W. tarw. β. The word signifies 'full-grown' or 'strong,' and is merely an adj. used as a sb. The adj. appears in Skt. stāira, put for an older form stāra, great, powerful, coarse; which appears as a sb. in the form stāira, a man, stāira, a pack-horse, Zend stāra, a beast of burden (cited by Benfey, p. 1081). γ. We even find the adj. in Teutonic, viz. A. S. stōr, large, Icel. stýrr, Dan. and Swed. stör, large, O. H. G. stūr, stūr, large. δ. The etymology of the Skt. word is known; it is allied to stāra, fixed, firm, stable; and all the words cited above are from the same STU, to be firm, stand fast, a by-form of the wide-spread STA, to stand. See STAND. Thus a stōr is a firm, full-grown animal, esp. a young bull. Fick, i. 822, iii. 343. See also STEER (2). Der. stör-ē, a young bullock or heifer (Jamieson), A. S. stýric, Lake, xv. 23, formed with dimin. suffix -ic, and consequent vowel-change from ed to i.

STEER (2), to direct, guide, govern. (E.) M. E. stēran, P. Plowman, B. viii. 47. = A. S. stēran, stýran, to direct, steer, Grein, ii. 481, 491. + Du. stieren. + Icel. stýra. + Dan. styre. + Swed. styra. + G. stieren, O. H. G. stieren, stieren. + Goth. stieren, to establish, confirm. β. All from the Teut. base STIURYAN, to steer (orig. to strengthen, confirm, hence, hold fast, direct); Fick, iii. 343. This is a denominative verb, from the sb. of which the base is STIURA, a rudder (lit. that which strengthens or holds fast). This sb. is now obsolete in E., but appears in Chaucer as stere, C. T. 4868, 5253; so also Du. stuur, a rudder, Icel. stjóri, a rudder, Dan. styr, steering, G. steuer, a rudder, O. H. G. stiera, a prop, a staff, a paddle or rudder. It is still retained in E. in the comp. star-board, i. e. stear-board (rudder-side of a ship). γ . Closely allied to this sb. is Icel. staur, a post, stake, Gk. stēraipē, an upright pole or stake; from \sqrt{STU} , to set upright, variant of \sqrt{STA} , to stand. Thus stear (2) and stear (1) are from the same root; see Stear (1). The development of sense is easy: a stear meant a firmly fixed post or prop, then a pole to post with or a paddle to keep the ship's course right, then a rudder; whence the verb to stear, to use a stake or paddle, to use a helm. Der. stear-ops, Romeo, l. 4. 112, with F. suffix; stear-man, Milton, P. L. l. 513, formed like hunt-man, sport-man; also star-board, q. v., stern, q. v.

STELLAR, belonging to the stars. (L.) 'Stellar vertue,' Milton, P. L. l. 671. = Lat. stellarius, starry, = Lat. stella, a star; short for stellatus, a contracted dimin. from the same source as E. star; see Star. Der. (from stella) stell-ate, stell-at-ed; stell-ut-er, from the dimin. stellula, a little star. Also stell-i-fy, obsolete; see Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, li. 78.

STEM (1), the trunk or stalk of a tree or herb, a little branch. (E.) M. E. steme, a trunk of a tree, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 206, l. 8. = A. S. stafa, stafa, stama, (1) a stem of a tree, (2) the stem or prow of a vessel, (3) a stem or race of people, Grem, li. 479. [The change from fa to ma is regular; so also A. S. stafmasa is now stemma.] We also find a longer form stefna, stafna, a stem or prow of a ship (Grem). Both these forms are mere extensions from A. S. staf, a staff; a stem of a tree is the staf or stock, or support of it; the stem of a vessel is the upright post in front of it. See further under Staff. \dagger Du. stam, a trunk, stem, stock; stam, prow. \dagger Icel. stafa, later stama, the stem of a vessel (from staf, a staff); also written stafni, stama, also stafa, stama, the stem of a tree. \dagger Dan. stamme, the trunk of a tree; stama, the prow of a vessel. \dagger Swed. stam, trunk; staf, prow; framstam, fore-stem, prow, bakstam, back-stem, stern. \dagger G. stamm, a trunk; stamm or vorder stamm, the stem, prow-post; cf. hinter stamm, stern-post.

STEM (2), the prow of a vessel. (E.) Spelt stem in Morte Arthure, l. 1664; but this is rather the Scand. form; the pl. stemmen is in Baret (1580). It is precisely the same word as when we speak of the stem of a tree; see further under Stem (1). γ . As the orig. signification was merely 'post,' there was no particular reason (beyond usage) why it should have been used more of the prow-post than of the stern-post; accordingly, the Icel. stafa sometimes means 'prow,' and sometimes 'stern;' and in G. the distinction is made by saying vorder stamm (fore-stem) for stem or prow-post, and hinter stamm (hind-stem) for stern or stern-post.

STEM (3), to check, stop, resist. (E.) 'Stem, verb, to oppose (a current), to press forward through; in stem the waves, 3 Hen. VI, li. 6. 36; stemming it, Cæsar, l. 9. 109;' Schmidt, Shak. Lexicon. The verb is a derivative of stem, sb., in the sense of a trunk of a tree; throwing a trunk of a tree into a river stems or checks its current. It was then extended to the idea of a ship's stem pressing forward through waves. The idea is not confined to E.; cf. Icel. stemma, to dam up; Dan. stemme, to stem, from stamma, a stem of a tree; G. stemmen, to fell trees, to prop, to dam up water, from stamme, a trunk. See Stem (1) and Stem (2).

STENCH, a bad smell. (E.) M. E. stench, Rob. of Glouc. p. 405, l. 3. = A. S. steme, a strong smell, common in the sense of sweet smell or fragrance; Grem, li. 479. = A. S. stanc, pt. t. of stancan, to smell, to stink; see Stink. [Stench from stink, like drunch from drink.] \dagger G. stanch, a stench; from stinken. Cf. Icel. stancha, a stench.

STENCIL, to paint or colour in figures by means of a stencilling-plate. (F., = L.) In Webster; he defines a stencil (as a stencilling-plate is sometimes called) as 'a thin plate of metal, leather or other material, used in painting or marking; the pattern is cut out of the plate, which is then laid flat on the surface to be marked, and the colour brushed over it.' Various guesses have been made at the etymology of this word, all worthless. I think it probable that to stencil is from O. F. astinciller, 'to sparkle, . . . to powder, or set thick with sparkles;' Cot. It was an old term in heraldry. Littré gives a quotation of the 15th century; 'L'aurmoire estoit tute par dedans de fin ou estomelles' = the box (?) was all (covered) within with fine gold scattered in stars. This peculiar kind of ornamentation (star-work) is precisely what stencilling must first have been used for, and it is used for it still. Since the pattern is cut quite through the plate, it must all be in separate pieces, so that no better device can be used than that which, to quote Cotgrave, is not thick with sparkles. In short, stencil stands for stincel, the orig. form of linsel, which has lost its initial s; see Tinsel. Tinsel was commonly used for ornamentation of various kinds. 'Pawfler d'or, to purple, linsel, or overcast with gold thread;' Cot.

STENOGRAPHY, short-hand writing. (Gk.) Not a very new word; spelt stenographie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Coined from Gk. steno-, crude form of stenos, narrow, close; and -graphie, writing (as occurring in leptographie, orthography), from graphein, to write. Der. stenograph-er, stenograph-ic, -ic-al, -ic-al-ly.

STENTORIAN, extremely loud. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; he rightly explains it with reference to the voice of Stentor. = Gk. Stentor, Stentor, a Greek at Troy, famous for his loud voice, Homer, Iliad, v. 785. = Gk. stere-sur, to groan, make a noise; with suffix -sur of the agent, as in Lat. ama-tor, a lover. = \sqrt{STA} , STAN, to make a noise; as in Skt. stam, to sound, to thunder. Cf. E. stun. Stentor = stammer.

STEP, a pace, degree, round of a ladder, foot-print. (E.) M. E. steppes, in the sense of foot-step, Iwain and Gawain, 2889, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. i; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 81. = A. S. stapa, a pace, Jos. x. 13. = A. S. stapan, to go, advance, a strong verb, pt. t. stap, pp. stapan. This verb is not quite mod. E. step, which is rather the denominative weak verb steppan (see below); but it is a strong verb now obsolete, appearing in Chaucer in the pp. stapan, advanced, C. T. 9388, 14817. The pt. t. stap occurs frequently; see Grem, li. 476. β . The orig. sense is 'to set the foot down firmly;' from \sqrt{STAP} or STABI, to prop, to stem, to stop, one of the numerous extensions of \sqrt{STA} , to stand; see further under Stamp, which is merely the nasalised form. The E. word is well illustrated by Russ. stapa, the sole of the foot, a foot-step, a step; cf. also Du. stap, G. stapfe, a footprint, footstep. Der. step, verb, A. S. steppan, Grem, li. 480, a weak verb, formed from the strong verb stapan; foot step; door-step; stepping-stone, in Wright's Voc. l. 159, where it is misprinted stepping-stone, by an obvious error.

STEPCHILD, one who stands in the relation of child through the marriage of a parent. (E.) The pl. step-children occurs in Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Pa. xciii. 6. Stepmother is in Gower, C. A. l. 104, l. 8. = A. S. stodchild, Exod. xxii. 13; John, xiv. 18, q. v. For the etymology of child, see Child. β . The prefix step- occurs also in step-bearn, a stepbairn, stepchild, stepfather, stepmother, stepmother, stepson, and stepdaughter; see Wright's Voc. l. 52, col. 1, 72, col. 1. γ . The sense of step- is 'orphaned,' or 'deprived of its parent;' so that it was first used in the compounds stepchild, stepbearn, stepson, stepdaughter, and afterwards extended, naturally enough, so as to form the compounds stepfather, stepmother, to denote the father or mother of the child who had lost one of its first parents. Thus the Lat. 'Fiant filii ejus orfan' is translated in the Early Kentish Psalter by 'sien bearn his astappte;' Pa. cviii. 9, ed. Stevenson. 'Astappte, orbatio,' occurs in a gloss (Bosworth). δ . The Teut. type is STIUPA, adj., with the sense of 'orphaned' or 'deprived;' the root is unknown; Fick, iii. 347. We only know that it is wholly unconnected with step above; it may, however, be related to Stoop (1), q. v. \dagger Du. stiefkind; so also stiefzoon, stiefdochter, stiefvader, stiefmoeder. \dagger Icel. stjafbarn, a step-bairn; so also stjafpáan, -dóttir, -faðir, -móðir. \dagger Dan. stiefbarn, a corrupt form. \dagger Swed. stjefbarn. \dagger G. stiefkind; so also stiefsohn, -tochter, -vater, -mutter; cf. O. H. G. stiufo = G. stief, and O. H. G. stiufoan, to deprive of parents, also to deprive of children. See also Stoop (1).

STEPPE, a large plain. (Russ.) In Webster. Perhaps in Mida. Nt. Dream, li. 1. 69, such being the reading of the first quarto; most edd. have steep. = Russ. stepa (with final s mute), a waste, heath, steppe.

STEREOSCOPE, an optical instrument for giving an appearance of solidity. (Gk.) Modern. First constructed in 1838. Coined from Gk. stereop-, for stereops, stiff, hard, firm, solid; and skopos, to behold. β . Gk. stereops is cognate with G. starr, stiff; and anastere is allied to asterepsan, I look round; see Stare (1) and Scope or Scoptio. Der. stereoscopic, -ic-al, -ic-al-ly.

STEREOTYPE, a solid plate for printing. (Gk.) 'Stereotype was invented (not the thing, but the word) by Didot not very long since;' Trench, Eng. Past and Present, 4th ed., 1859. = Gk. stereops, for stereops, hard, stiff; and typo. See Stereoscope and Type. Der. stereotype, verb.

STERILE, unfruitful, barren. (F., = L.) Spelt steril in Levins. = O. F. sterile, 'sterile;' Cot. = Lat. sterilis, acc. of sterilis, barren. From the base STAR appearing in Gk. stereops, stereops, hard, stiff, firm, sterile, and in the G. starr, rigid; for which see Stare (1). Cf. also Gk. stereps, a barren cow. A sterile soil is a hard, stony, unproductive one. Der. steril-i-ty, from F. sterilité, 'sterility,' Cot., from Lat. acc. sterilitatem.

STERLING, genuine, applied to money. (E.) M. E. sterling, sterling, Chaucer, C. T. 12841; P. Plowman, B. xv. 343; Rob. of Glouc. p. 294, l. 8. In all these passages it is a sb., meaning 'a sterling coin, a coin of true weight. Thus Rob. of Glouc. speaks of 'Four thousand pound of sterlynges.' Of E. origin; the M. H. G. sterling, cited by Stratmann, is borrowed from it. First applied to the E. penny, then to standard current coin in general. Wedgwood cites from Ducange a statute of Edw. I, in which we meet with 'Denarius Anglus, qui vocatur Sterlingus;' also a Charter of Hen. III, where we have 'In centum marcis bonorum novorum et legalium sterlingorum, tredecim solidi. et 4 sterling. pro quilibet marcâ computatis.' That is, a mark is 13s. and 4d., a sterling being a penny. β Wedgwood adds: 'The hypothesis most generally approved is that the coin is named from the Easterlings or North Germans, who were the first moneyers in England. Walter de Puchbeck, a monk of Bury in the time of Edw. I, says: "sed moneta Anglia fertur dicta fuisse a nominibus opificum, ut Florentia a nominibus Florentiorum, ita Sterlingi a nominibus Esterlingorum nomina sua contraxerunt, qui hujusmodi monetam in Anglia primitus componebant." He adds that 'the assertion merits as little credit in the case of the sterling as of the florin.' γ . But I see no reason for doubting either assertion; the florin was not exactly named from Florence itself, but because the Florentine coin bore a lily, from Ital. fiore (= Lat. acc. floris), a flower; see Dies, who remarks that the O. Port. word for floris was frolampa (i. e. florampa), in which the very name of the town itself was commemorated. See Florin. δ . The Esterlings were the 'merchants of Almaine,' as Stow terms them, or the Hanse Merchants, to whom, 'in the year 1250, Henry III, at the request of his brother Richard, Earl of Cornwall, king of Almaine, granted that [they] ... should be maintained and upholden through the whole realm, by all such freedoms, and free usages or liberties, as by the king and his noble progenitors' time they had and enjoyed.' Stow, Survey of London, ed. Thomas, p. 87. For this charter, see Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 467; and see pp. 213, 417, 530. Fabian mentions 'the marchantys Esterlynges,' an. 1468-9. Cotgrave gives 'Esterlin, a penny sterling, our penny.' The word is English, though the origin was probably sterling or sterling, formed with the double suffix -ling from A. S. steran, adv., from the east, or astera, eastern. It has evidently been Latinised, and perhaps Normanised, for use in charters, &c. The suffix -ling is peculiarly E.; it is also found in G., but then suffers change before introduction into E., as in the case of chamberlain. See East.

STERN (1), severe, harsh, austere. (E.) M. E. stern, Wyclif, Luke, xix. 27, 28; also stern, Rob. of Glouc. p. 27, l. 1. = A. S. styrn, stern, Grein, ii. 493; where we also find styrn-mild, of stern mood, stern-minded, styrmas, to be severe. The A. S. γ often becomes M. E. σ , as in A. S. styrn, M. E. stern, a worm; A. S. styr, M. E. stern, stern, stern. Certainly stern should rather be spelt stern; it has been assimilated to the word below. β . The suffix -ness is adjectival (Aryan -nt), as in Lat. Africanus; with the base stern- we may compare Du. sternsch (short for stern-isch), stern, austere, sour, Swed. stern (short for stern-ig), refractory, and perhaps Icel. stern, gloom, despair, Goth. andsternan, to murmur against. γ . The base appears to be STUR, prob. allied to STOR, as seen in Icel. stern, large, Lithuan. sterns, large, thick, strong, heavy, deep-voiced, rough, and also to STAR, as seen in G. stern, rigid, stiff. It can no doubt be referred to the σ STA, to stand, which appears in Teutonic in all three forms, viz. STA, STO, and STU; see Pick, iii. 240, 241, 242. The idea of sternness is closely allied to those of stiffness and roughness of manner. Der. stern-ly, ness.

STERN (2), the hinder part of a vessel. (Scand.) M. E. stern, P. Plowman, B. viii. 85, footnote; other MSS. have stere, stern, stere, meaning a rudder. Spelt stern, a rudder, id. A. 12. 30. = Icel. stern, a steering, stowage; hence the par. stjra við stjerna, to sit at the helm; whence stern became recognised as a name for the hinder part of the vessel. Extended from stjra (occurring in stjara, a steerer, ruler), which answers to M. E. stern, a rudder. See Steer (1). Compare Icel. stjórubardi with E. starboard (= stear-board). Thus stern is an extension of stern, in the obsolete sense of rudder. γ . The A. S. stern is unauthorised; the word is clearly Scandinavian. Der. stern-mast; stern-choate, where choate has (I suppose) the nautical sense of 'rope.'

STERNUTATION, sneezing. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 9, l. 1. = Lat. sternutatio, acc. of sternutatio, a sneezing. = Lat. sternutatio, pp. of sternutare, to sneeze, frequent. of sternere, to sneeze. Allied to Gk. sternere, to sneeze. β . The base stern-, stern-, seem to be variants from the σ SPAR, expressive of violent action; see Spar (3). Der. sternutatio, stern-.

STERTOROUS, snoring. (L.) Modern. Coined (as if from Lat. stertorosus) from stertere, to snore. Prob. of imitative origin. Der. stertorosus-ly.

STETHOSCOPE, the tube used in auscultation, as applied to the chest. (Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Modern; lit. 'chest-examiner.' Coined from Gk. stethos, for stethos, the chest; and skopeo, to consider, examine. β . The Gk. stethos is so named from its presenting a firm front; allied to stethos, standing fast, fixed, firm. And stethos is from a base steth-, answering to Test. STAD, as in E. stead; this base being extended from σ STA, to stand; see Stand. γ . For steth-, see Scoop or Sceptile. Der. stethoscopic.

STEVEDORE, one whose occupation it is to load and unload vessels in port. (Span., = L.) Webster has stevedore, which is a well-known word in the mercantile world, and stew, verb, to stow, as cotton or wool in a vessel's hold. The word is Spanish, Spain being a wool-producing country and once largely engaged in sea-traffic. = Span. estivador, 'a packer of wool at shearing'; Neuman. It may also mean a stower of cargo, as will be seen. Formed with suffix -dor (= Lat. acc. -torum) from stivo, to stow, to lay up cargo in the hold, to compress wool. = Lat. stipare, to crowd together, press together; allied to Gk. stipho, to tread or stamp on, tread under foot, and to E. step, stamp. = σ STAP, allied to STABH, to prop, stem, also to lean on, stop or stop up; see Stop, Stamp, Stop. This is one of the numerous extensions from σ STA, to stand. The verb appears also in Ital. stivare, to press close, Port. estivar, to trim a ship. There is also a verbal sb., viz. Ital. stiva, ballast of a ship, Span. stiva, the stowage of goods in a ship's hold, O. F. stiva, 'the loading or lading of a ship'; Cot. From the same root are stipend, stipend-ium, con-stipend, co-stive.

STEW, to boil slowly with little moisture. (F., = Teut.) M. E. stewe. 'Stewys, or steyn meit, Stuphe; Stewys or batys, or steyn or stew, Balneo;' Prompt. Parv. The older sense was to bathe; and the verb was formed from the old sb. stew in the sense of bath or hot-house (as it was called), which was chiefly used in the pl. stews, with the low sense of broth-houses. See Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 248. The old spelling of the pl. sb. was stew, stewen, stewes, stewe, stewes, stewys, steyns, P. Plowman, B. vi. 73, A. vii. 63, all variously Anglicised forms of O. F. stewe, of which Cotgrave explains the pl. stewes by 'stews, also stoves or hot-houses.' Cf. Ital. stufa, Port. and Span. stufa, a stove, a hot-house; mod. F. stove. β . Of Test. origin. The O. H. G. form is stupa, a hot room for a bath; the mod. G. stube merely means a room in general. The corresponding E. word is stove, q. v. We may particularly note O. Du. stewe, 'a stews, a hot-house, or a baine' [bath], stew stowe ont te baden, 'a stews to bathe in'; Hexham. The stews in Southwark were chiefly filled with Flemish women, and it is not improbable that the E. word was influenced rather by the O. Du. than by the O. H. G. word. Der. stew, sb., in the sense of stewed meat; this is a merely derivative from the verb. The pl. sb. stews is treated of above; cf. 'The bathes and the stews both,' Gower, C. A. iii. 291.

STEWARD, one who superintends another's estate or farm. (E.) M. E. steward, Havelok, 666; Ancrens Riwe, p. 386, l. 5 from bottom. = A. S. steward (probably); but spelt steward, A. S. Chron. an. 1093, and an. 1130. 'Economus, steward;' Wright's Voc. i. 28, l. 13; also in Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 570, l. 12. The full form of the word would be steward, lit. a sty-ward; from A. S. stiga, a sty, and ward, a guardian, warden, keeper. The orig. sense was one who looked after the domestic animals, and gave them their food; hence, one who provides for his master's table, and generally, one who superintends household affairs for another. See By and Ward. β . For the change of sound, cf. the name Seward, formerly Seward, Mach. iii. 6. 31. The Icel. stewardr, gen. assigned as the origin of E. steward, occurs but rarely; the Icel. Dict. gives but one reference, and adds the remark that it is 'from the English.' It seems to be rather a late word, being somewhat rare in A. S. also; but it is found in Layamon, l. 1478, and is tolerably common after A. D. 1200. γ . Grein (ii. 484) draws especial attention to the parallel form stigma, also stigma, in the same sense of steward, the suffix being the A. S. stiga, a wise man, one who is skilled. Der. steward-ship, steward-ship, with F. suffix.

STICK (1), to stab, pierce, thrust in, to fasten by piercing; to adhere. (E.) The orig. sense is to stab or pierce (cf. sting), hence to fasten into a thing by thrusting it in; hence, the intransitive use, to be thrust into a thing and there remain, to cling or adhere, to be set fast, stop, hesitate, &c. Two verbs are confused in mod. E., viz. (1) stick, to pierce, and (2) stick, to be fixed in. β . STRONG FORM. M. E. stehen, strong verb, to pierce, fix, pt. I. stak, Rom. of the Rose, 358; pp. stehen, stehen, stehen (see Stratmann), also stehen, Gower, C. A. i. 60, l. 4, which = mod. E. stuck. = A. S. stahan, pt. I. stah, pp. stahan or stahan, a strong verb, which does not appear, though it must once have existed, to produce the M. E. verb above cited; moreover, it appears in O. Saxon, where we find the pt. I. stah, Heliland, 5707. To which we may add that the E. strong verb to sting is nothing but the nasalised form of it; see Sting. Cognate words are Low G. stehen, to pierce, stick, pt. I. stah, pp. stehen; and G. stehen, to sting, pierce, stuck, stab, pt. I. stach, pp. gestehen. Cf.

also Goth. stada, a mark, stigma; stika, a point, a moment of time. ST. The base is properly STAK, answering to an Aryan σ STAG, but we only find the latter in the sense 'pierce,' in the weaker σ STIG, to pierce (Fick, i. 823, iii. 343); whence Gk. $\sigma\tau\iota\gamma\omega$ (= $\sigma\tau\iota\gamma\omega$), to prick, Lat. stingere, to instigate, prick on, Skt. stij, to be sharp, steyra, to sharpen; see Stigma, Instigate, Sting. WEAK VERB. M. E. stihian, to be infixed, to stick into, cling to, adhere; a weak verb; also used in a trans. sense. 'And anon he styhede faste'—he stuck fast, Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 1246; pp. stihed, Chaucer, C. T. 1563. = A. S. stihian, pt. t. stihian, both trans. and intrans., Grein, ii. 482. Cognate words are Du. stehen, to stick, Icel. stika, to drive piles, Dan. stikke, to stab, Swed. stikka, to stab, sting, stitch, prick, G. stehen, to stick, set, plant, fix st, also, to stick fast, remain. Thus the sense of 'stick fast' appears in G. as well as in E., but G. restricts the strong form stehen to the orig. sense, whilst stehen has both senses. Der. stick (1), q.v.; stick-y, spelt stiekie in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 583, stick-to-ness; stick-to-back, q.v.; stick, q.v.; and see sting, sting, stagger, stach, stake, stach, stoch, stohar. From the same root are di-sting-ush, di-stinet, an-sting-ush, an-tinet, in-stinet, pre-stige, in-stig-ate, sti-mu-late, stige, stigma.

STICK (1), a staff, small branch of a tree. (E.) M. E. stikke, Chaucer, C. T. 16733. = A. S. sticca, a stick, also a peg or nail, Judges, iv. 21, 22. So called from its piercing or sticking into anything; the orig. sense was 'peg,' then any small bit of a branch of a tree. 'Se stidnesse stodes þurh his heafod'—the tent-peg stuck through his head, Judges, iv. 21. = Icel. stika, a stick. See Stick (2), Stank, and Staka. Der. stick-to-back. And see stick. Also single-stick; see under quarterstaff.

STICKLEBACK, a small fish. (E.) So called from the stickles or prickles on its back; cf. thornback. M. E. styklybak, Reliq. Antiqua, l. 85. Corruptly stickleback, Walton's Angler, p. l. c. § (R); and still more corruptly stickle (Halliwell). In the Prompt. Parv., and in Wright's Voc. l. 222, there is mention of a fish called a stickle. The sb. stichel or stichle is from A. S. sticel, a prickle, sting, used of the sting of a goat in Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 6, cap. xvi. § 2. = A. S. stician, to stick; just as prickle is from prican, to prick. See Stick (1) and Stitch. The suffix -el (= Aryan σ) denotes the instrument; it is not (as this case) a diminutive, as is often imagined; see March, A. S. Grammar, § 228. For back, see Back. Cf. O. Du. stichel, 'a prick or a sting'; Hexham.

STICKLER, one who parts combatants or settles disputes between two men fighting. (E.) Nearly obsolete; once common; see Halliwell, Nares, and Trench, Select Glossary. Now only used in the sense of a man who insists on etiquette or persists in an opinion. See Troil, v. 8. 18. The verb to stickle meant to part combatants, act as umpire. 'I styklyll betwene wrastlers, or any folkes that prove mastries [try conclusions] to see that none do other wronge, or I parte folkes that be redy to fyght;' Palgrave. It is common to explain this word (with profound contempt for the l in it) by saying that the umpire must have parted combatants by means of sticks, or else that the umpire arbitrated between men who fought with single-sticks. Both assertions are mere inventions; and a stickle is not a stick at all, but a prickle. If this were the etymology, the word would mean 'one who uses prickles!' β . I have no doubt at all that stickle represents the once common M. E. stighlen or stighlen, to dispose, order, arrange, govern, subdue, &c. It was commonly used of a steward, who disposed of and arranged everything, and acted as a master of the ceremonies; see Will. of Palerne, 1199, 2809, 3281, 3841, 3379; Destruction of Troy, 117, 1997, 2193, 13282; Gawain and Grene Knight, 1137; &c. 'When þey com to þe court, heppie þey wry þayre, stygled with þe steward, stad in þe halle;' Alist. Forms, B. 92. 'To stygile the peple' = to keep order among the people; P. Plowman, Crede, 315; and cf. P. Plowman, C. xvi. 40. γ . Thus M. E. stighlen is the frequentative of A. S. stihian, stihian. 'Wilhelm weilde and stichte Engleland' = William ruled and governed England, A. S. Chron. an. 1087 (Thorpe renders it by 'held despotic sway'). It is probable that stihian stands for stihian, as would appear from the cognate forms. = O. Du. stichem, 'to build, edifice, bond, breed or make (a contention), impose or make (a law),' Hexham; mod. Du. stichien, to found, institute, establish, excite, edify. This may stand for stihian, just as Du. lecht, sur, stands for leht. = Dan. stige, to found, institute, establish; stige forlig = to reconcile, stige fred = to make peace (just exactly to stickle). = Swed. stifta, also stifta, similarly used. = G. stiften, to found, institute, cause, excite; Fremdschaft stiften = to make friendship. δ . Taking the Teut. base to be STAF, this gives us an Aryan base STAF; cf. Skt. stāpaya, to establish, to found (which exactly agrees in sense), causal of stā, to stand. = σ STA, to stand. And see Stop. ϵ . I conclude that a stickler was one who stopped a quarrel, or settled matters; he probably often had to use something more persuasive than a stick.

ST. After writing this, I found that Wedgwood has already said that the proper reading of this word should be sticklers, as signifying those who have the arrangement or disposition of the field, from A. S. stithian, O. E. [M. E.] stithle, to govern or dispose.' He also refers to the A. S. Chronicle and to Sir Gawain. He adds the important remark, that the word is spelt stithler in the Coventry Mysteries, p. 23, where it means a stickler. This clinches the matter.

STIFF, rigid, obstinate, formal. (E.) The vowel was once long; and remains so in North E. strow, muscular, and in the derivative stife. M. E. stif, Chaucer, C. T. 7849; the superl. is spelt stymest, strowst, stafst, stifst, P. Plowman, C. vii. 43. = A. S. stif, stiff (Somner); this form is verified by the derivative stifian. 'Heora hand stifstodon' = their hands became stiff; Ælric's Homilies, l. 598, l. 21. = Du. stijf, stiff, hard, rigid, firm. = Dan. stiv. = Swed. stif. [The G. stif is supposed to be borrowed from Dutch.] β . Allied to Lithuan. stiprus, strong, stipul, to be stiff, Lat. stipes, a stem, trunk of a tree. And further to E. stiff and Skt. stāpaya, to establish, make firm, causal of stā, to stand. = σ STA, to stand; see Stand, Staff. Der. stiffly, stiffness, stiffen (Swed. stifna, Dan. stivna), Hen. V. iii. 1. 7, stiff-necked, Acts, vii. 51; stiff-le.

STIFLE, to suffocate. (Scand.; confused with F., = L.) 'Stifle, Stifle, suffocate;' Levinus. 'Smored [smothered] and stifed;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 68 f. = Icel. stifa, to dam up, prop. used of water; hence, to block up, choke. Norweg. stivla, to stop, hem in, check, lit. 'to stiffen;' cf. stivra, to stiffen; both are frequent forms of stiv (Dan. stiv), to stiffen. [Cf. also M. E. stivian, to stiffen, Will. of Palerne, 3033; Swed. stifva, Du. stijven, G. stifem, to stiffen.] All these words are derived from the adj. appearing as A. S. stif, stiff; the vowel of which was once long, and is still so in prov. E. Halliwell gives 'stiv, strong, muscular, North;' which is nothing but M. E. stiv, an occasional spelling of stiff; see Stiff. The loss of the adj. 'stiff' in Icel. is remarkable, as it is preserved in Swed., Dan., and Norwegian; the O. Icel. form was stif, cited by E. Müller. γ . We cannot derive stifle from the verb stiv, to pack close, the change from v to f being clean contrary to rule; but it is very probable that stifle has been frequently confused with stiv, which, though it properly means to pack close, easily comes to have much the same sense, as in prov. E. stivung, close, stifling (Worcestershire). Stiv is a F. word, from O. F. stiver = Lat. stipare, to compress, pack tight, as explained under Stavedore. Any further connection with stiv or stiff (with quite different vowels) is out of the question. We may, however, note that E. stiff and Lat. stipare are closely related words, from the same root.

STIGMATIC, to brand with infamy, defame publicly. (F., = Gk.) 'Stigmatized with a hot iron;' Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, p. 470 (R.) [Shak. has stigmata, naturally deformed, 2 Hen. VI, v. 1. 215; stigmatical, Com. Errors, iv. 2. 22.] = F. stigmatiser, in Cotgrave stigmatizer, 'to brand, burn, or mark with a red hot iron, to defame publicly.' = Gk. $\sigma\tau\iota\gamma\mu\alpha\tau\iota\sigma\tau\iota\varsigma$, to mark or brand. = Gk. $\sigma\tau\iota\gamma\mu\alpha\tau\iota\varsigma$, base of $\sigma\tau\iota\gamma\mu\alpha$, a prick, mark, brand. = σ STIG, to prick, as in $\sigma\tau\iota\gamma\omega$ (= $\sigma\tau\iota\gamma\omega$), to prick; whence also E. stick; see Stick (1). Der. (from Gk. $\sigma\tau\iota\gamma\mu\alpha\tau\iota\varsigma$) stigmat-ic, stigmat-ic-al. We also use now stigma, sb., from Gk. $\sigma\tau\iota\gamma\mu\alpha$.

STILE (1), a step or set of steps for climbing over a fence or hedge. (E.) M. E. stila, style, Chaucer, C. T. 10420, 12616. = A. S. stigel, a stile; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 146, l. 6. Formed with suffix -el, denoting the means or instrument (Aryan σ), from stig, base of pp. of A. S. stigan, to climb, mount. See Sty (1). The A. S. stigel first became stigel, and then stile; so also A. S. stigel = mod. E. ale. = O. H. G. stigla, a stile (obsolete); from O. H. G. stigan, to climb. And cf. Shetland stigg, a stile (Edmonston); from the same root.

STILE (2), the correct spelling of Style, q.v.

STILL (1), motionless, calm, silent. (E.) M. E. stille, Chaucer, C. T. 11782. = A. S. stilla, still, Grein, ii. 484. Allied to A. S. stilian, verb, to rest, be still, id.; lit. 'to remain in a stall or place;' a sense well shown by the adv. still = continuously. = A. S. stall, stall, a place, station, stall; see Stall. = Du. stil, still; stillon, to be still; stillon, to place; from stal, a stall. = Dan. stille, still, hushed; stille, to still, also, to set, post, station, put in place; from stald (formerly stall), a stall. = Swed. stilla, still, stilla, to quiet; from stall. = G. stille, still; stillon, to still; stillon, to place; from stall. β . Fick explains the G. verb stillon as standing for a Teut. type STELLYA, to make still, put into a place, from STALLA, a stall. There is, undoubtedly, a connection between G. stillon and G. stillon, and the latter is regularly formed from stall. The sense of still is 'brought to a stall or resting-place.' Der. still, adv., M. E. stilla, silently, Havelok, 1997, from A. S. stilla (Grein); this adverb has preserved the sense of 'continually' or 'abidingly,' and has come to mean always, ever, as in the strange compound still-ness = always vexed, Temp. i. 3. 229. Also still, verb, A. S. stillan; stil-by, adj., M. E. stilled (= still-like), Layamon, 2374; stil-by, adv.; stil-ness; stil-born, s Hen. IV, l. 3. 64; stil-stand, s Hen. IV, ii. 3. 64; stund-stil.

STILL (s), to distil, to trickle down. (L.; or F. = L.) In a few cases, still represents Lat. stillare, to fall in drops; as, e.g., in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 7. 35. But it is more often a mere contraction for distil, just as spout is for disport, spend for dispend, and spus for despite. Thus Tasse writes: 'The knowledge of stilling is one pretie feat;' May's Husbandry, st. 33; where stilling plainly stands for distilling. See Distil. Der. still, sb., an apparatus for distilling, a contraction for M. E. stillatoris, in the same sense, Chaucer, C. T. 16048, answering to a Low Lat. stillatorium, from stillatus, pp. of stillare. And see di-stil, in-stil.

STILT, a support of wood with a foot-rest, for lengthening the stride in walking. (Scand.) M. E. stilis. 'Stylis, calepodium, lignipodium;' Prompt. Parv. = Swed. stylla, Dan. stylla, Norweg. styllra, a stilt; cf. Dan. stylla, to walk on stilts, also to stalk, walk slowly. We also find Swed. dial. styll, a prop (Riets); cf. Dn. stelt, a stilt. cf. G. stels, a stilt; O. H. G. stelsa, a prop, a crutch.

β. We may particularly note prov. E. stilt, the handle of a plough, which is clearly connected with Stale (3) and Stalk (1). In fact, stilt is a parallel form to stalt, sb., whilst the Dan. stylla, to stalk along, is parallel to stalk, verb. Both are extensions from the base STAL, as seen in E. stale, a handle, Gk. στῆλα, a column, στῆλαι, a handle; whilst Swed. dial. styll, a prop, finds its parallel in Gk. στῆλας, a prop; see Curtius, l. 261. The sense of height, as expressed by the stilt or lengthened leg, is again paralleled by A. S. stels, high, lofty; and see further under Stout.

γ. Indeed, there is yet a third form of extension of the base STAL, with added p; so that we have all three forms: (1) STAL-K, as in E. stalk, A. S. stels, high, and stelsom, to stalk; (2) STAL-T, as in E. stilt, Dan. stelt, proud (i. e. high), and in Dan. stylla, to stalk; and (3) STAL-P, as in Icel. stópl, Dan. stolpe, Swed. stolpe, a pillar, post, prop; with which cf. Banthshire stolper, awkward walking by lifting the feet high, commonly used of one who has long legs (Macgregor).

δ. Lastly, the base STAL is an extension from ✓STA, to stand; see Stand. The orig. sense of stilt is a high post or upright pole; hence a stilt, a crutch, or a prop, according to the use to which it is put. Note M. E. stalts, one of the uprights at the side of a ladder; Ch. C. T. 3623. Der. stilt-ed.

STIMULATE, to instigate. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [The sb. stimulation is in Minshew, ed. 1627.] = Lat. stimulare, pp. of stimulare, to prick forward = Lat. stimulus, a goad; put for stig-mulus, formed with suffixes -mulus (Aryan -mura) from ✓STIG, to stick, to prick; see Stick (1). Der. stimulation, from F. stimulation, 'a pricking forward,' Cot.; stimulat-ivus; stimulant, from Lat. stimulans, base of pra. part. of stimulare. We also now use Lat. stimulus as an E. word.

STING, to prick severely, pain acutely. (E.) M. E. stingen, strong verb; pt. t. stang, stong; pp. stungen, stongen, Chaucer, C. T. 1081. = A. S. stingan, pt. t. stang, pp. stungen; Grein, ii. 484. cf. Dan. stinga, cf. Swed. stinga, cf. Icel. stinga, pt. t. stah (for stang), pp. stunginn. Cf. Goth. us-stiggan (for us-stingan), to push out, put out, Matt. v. 29. β. The base is STANG (Fick, iii. 344); a nasalised form of the base STAK, to prick; see Stick (1). Fick expresses some doubt, but we may notice how this result is verified by the prov. E. stang, a pole (a derivative from STANG), which is the nasalised form of stade (a derivative from STAK). See Stang, Stake. Der. sting, sb., A. S., Dan., and Swed. sting. Also sting-y, q. v.

STINGY, mean, avaricious. (E.) Pronounced stinji. 'Stingy, niggardly;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'A stingy, narrow-hearted fellow;' L'Estrange (Todd). It is the same word as prov. E. stingy [pronounced stinji], common in Norfolk in the sense of 'nipping, unkindly,' and esp. used of a cold East wind. Forby defines it: (1) cross, ill-humoured, (2) churlish, biting, as applied to the state of the air. See Stingy in Ray's Glossary (E. D. S. B. 16), and my notes upon it, esp. at p. xix. It is merely the sdj. formed from sting, sb., by the addition of -y, and means (1) stinging, keen, (2) churlish; by an easy transition of sense, which is exactly paralleled by the Swed. sticken, pettish, waspish, fretful, from sticks, to sting.

β. The sounding of g as j causes no difficulty, as it is still common in Wiltshire, where a bee's sting is called a stings [stinj]. See Sting. γ. Todd's derivation, from M. E. chinske, stingy, is impossible; we might as well derive sting from chink. Wedgwood suggests that stingy stands for stungy, meaning (1) cold, nipping, as applied to the weather, and (2) stingy (Halliwell reverses these meanings). But stungy may stand for stingy, the change being due to confusion with shinching, narrow-minded, from shinch, to give scant measure (Halliwell). And shinch is merely a weaker form of shink, to deal out portions, a word fully explained under Nuncheson. Der. sting-y, stinn.

STINK, to smell strongly. (E.) M. E. stinken, strong verb; pt. t. stank, stank, Chaucer, C. T. 14535; pp. stunken = A. S. stincan, pt. t. stanc, stanc, pp. stuncan, Grein, ii. 484. This verb not only means to stink, or to be fragrant, but has the singular sense of to rise as dust or vapour. 'Dust stans to heofonum' = dust rose up to heaven. cf. Du. stinken, cf. Icel. stikka, pt. t. stikk (for stink), pp. stokkan (for stinkian), to spring up, take to flight; the pp. stokkinn means bedabbed, sprinkled. cf. Dan. stinde, cf. Swed. stinka, cf. G. stinken, cf. Goth. stiggwan (= stingwan), to strike, smite, thrust; whence stuggwan, a cause of offence, s Cor. vi. 3.

β. The form of the root is STAG; the orig. sense is uncertain; perhaps 'to strike against.' As to the possible connection with Gk. σῆγος, rancid, and Lat. stagnare, see Fick, i. 823. Der. stink, sb., stink-pot; also stunch, q. v.

STINT, to limit, restrain. (E.) Properly 'to shorten, or 'curtail.' M. E. stinten, stinton, gen. in the sense to stop, cause to cease, P. Plowman, B. i. 130; also, intransitively, to pause, id. v. 585. Also spelt stinter, Chaucer, C. T. 905, 7734. = A. S. stintan, of which the traces are slight; for stintan (= Lat. contundere), in a gloss (Bosworth). Also stintian, to warn, perhaps to restrain, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 6, l. 24. The proper sense is rather 'to make dull,' as it is a causal verb, formed (by vowel-change from s to y) from the adj. stunt, dull, obtuse, stupid, Matt. v. 22; cf. stuntscipe, folly, Mark, vii. 22. cf. Icel. stytta (by assimilation for stytta), to shorten; from the adj. stuttur (put for stuntur), short, stunted. cf. Swed. dial. stytta, to shorten; from stunt, small, short (Riets). cf. Norweg. stytta, stutta, to shorten, tuck up the clothes; from stutt, small, short (Aasen).

β. The E. word comes nearer to the sense of the Icel. word; the A. S. stunt is used metaphorically, in the sense of 'short of wit.' However, stint is certainly formed from Stunt by vowel-change; see further under Stunt. Der. stint, q. v.

STIPEND, a salary, settled pay. (L.) 'Yearly stipendos;' Ascham. Toxophilus, b. ii. ed. Arber, p. 130. = Lat. stipendium, a tax, impost, tribute, stipend. Put for stip-pendium or stipi-pendium, a payment of money; from stipi or stip, crude form or base of stips, small coin or a contribution in small coin, and pendium, a payment, from pendere, to weigh out, to pay.

β. Stips is supposed to mean a 'pile' of small money, allied to stipare, to compress, heap together, and stipes, a post (hence probably a pillar or pile); from the ✓STAP, to make firm, extension of ✓STA, to stand. For pendere, see Pendant. Der. stipendi-arius, from Lat. stipendiarius, receiving pay.

STIPPLE, to engrave by means of dots. (Du.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; he calls it a modern term in art. = Du. stippen, to speckle, cover with dots. = Du. stoppel, a speckle, dimin. of stap, a point. Hexham gives stip. stap, or stippelken, 'a point, or a small point;' also stippen, 'to point, or to fix;' stippen or stippen met de naald, 'to stitch with the needle,' stip-naald, 'a stitching-needle.' He also gives another sense of stippen, 'to make partitions, or hedges, to fence about.' The word is clearly allied to Stab, q. v.

STIPULATION, a contract, agreement. (F., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. [The verb to stipulate is prob. later, but is used by Cotgrave to translate F. stipuler] = F. stipulation, 'a stipulation, a covenant;' Cot = Lat. stipulationem, acc. of stipulatio, a covenant, bargain. = Lat. stipulari, to settle an agreement, bargain; lit. to make fast. = O. Lat. stipulus, fast, firm; 'stipulum apud veteres firmum appellabatur,' Justiniani Institutiones, iii. 15 (White). Allied to stipem, a post. = ✓STAP, to make firm, extension of ✓STA, to stand; see Stipend and Stand. Der. (from Lat. stipulatus, pp. of stipulari) stipulate, verb.

β. The story about stipula, a straw, noticed in Trench, Study of Words, is a needless guess; stipulate simply keeps the sense of the root. It may be noted that Lat. stipula = E. stubble.

STIR, to rouse, instigate, move about. (E.) M. E. stiren, sturen (and even sturen, but properly always with one r), Chaucer, C. T. 12280, 16746. = A. S. stiran, to move, to stir, Gen. vii. 21, ix. 5; Grein, ii. 491. [Various forms are given in Ettmüller, which seem to have been altered and accented in order to bring the word into connection with stern; but its true connection is rather with stern. Grein keeps stiran, to stir, and stiran, stiran, to steer, quite distinct.] Allied to Icel. stjrra, a stir, disturbance, Du. stieren, to disturb, interrupt, vex, Swed. störa, G. stören, to disturb, O. H. G. störren, störren, to scatter, destroy, disturb. The last is plainly allied to Lat. sternere, to strew, to scatter. = ✓STAR, to spread, scatter, strew, overturn, dissipate; see Stratum and Strow; also Storm. Fick, i. 824; iii. 345.

β. The orig. sense is well illustrated by 'wind stjrr 145 gewifr' = the wind spreads (brings) bad weather, i. e. rouses the storm (Grein). Der. stjrr-geon; and see stjrr-m.

STIRK, dimin. of Steer (1), q. v.

STIRRUP, a ring or hoop suspended from a saddle. (E.) Put for stjrr-ope, i. e. a rope to climb by; the orig. stjrrup was a looped rope for mounting into the saddle. Spelt stirrup in Palgrave. M. E. stirup, Chaucer, C. T. 7347. = A. S. stirup. 'Scansile, stirup;' Wright's Voc. i. 23, col. 1; fuller form stirup, id. p. 84, l. 1. = A. S. stirp, base of stigon, pp. of stigan, to climb, mount; and stip, a rope. See Stile (1) or Sty (1), and Rope. + O. Du. stirup-rop, or stirup-rop, 'a stirrup-leather,' Hexham. [This is really a better use of the word; that which we now call a stirrup is called in Du. stirupgel, i. e. 'the little bow' or loop whereby to mount.] Similarly formed from Du. stigon, to mount, and rop, a rope. + Icel. stirup-rop; from stiga and rop. + G. stirup, a stirrup; from stigon and raif; cf. stirupgel, a stirrup.

STITCH, a pain in the side, a passing through stuff of a needle and thread. (E.) The sense of 'pain in the side,' lit. 'pricking sensation,' is very old. M. E. stiche. 'Styche, pynne on þe syde;' Prompt. Parv. = A. S. stice, a pricking sensation; A. S. Leechdoms, l. 370. § 10. = A. S. stician, to prick, pierce; see Stick (1). So also G. stich, a prick, stitch, from stochen, to prick; also stichen, to stitch, from the same. Der. stich, verb; also stich-wort, a herb good for the stitch, spelt stichwurt in Palgrave; stich-ort, stich-ort. Cor. i. 3. 75.

STITH, an anvil. (Scand.) 'Vulcan's stith;' Hamlet, iii. 1. 89; some edd. have stithy, properly a smithy. M. E. stith, Chaucer, C. T. 3028; Havelok, 1877. = Icel. stithi, an anvil. Allied to stathr, a place, i. e. fixed stead; and so named from its firmness. Cf. A. S. stabil, a foundation, basis, stafol, firm. From the same root as Stead, q. v. + Swed. stad, an anvil. Der. stithy, properly a smithy, but also used with the sense of anvil.

STIVER, a Dutch penny. (Du.) In Evelyn's Diary, Oct. 2, 1641. = Du. stiver, formerly steyver, 'a stiver, a Low-Countrie pece of coine, of the value of an English penny;' Hexham. (f.) Allied to G. stiber, a stiver; which appears to be related to G. stoben, to start, drive, fly about, be scattered, stoben, to dust, powder, stobchen, an atom, stob, dust. Perhaps the orig. sense was atom or small pece.

STOAT, an animal of the weasel kind. (Scand.) 'Stoat, a stallion-horse, also, a kind of rat;' Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1735. M. E. stot; in the Coventry Mysteries, ed. Halliwell, p. 218, l. 14, a scribe says to the woman taken in adultery: 'Therefore come forthe, thou stynkyng stot;' and in l. 29: 'To save such stotys, it xai (shall) not be.' Here the sense is probably stout. The M. E. stot means (1) a stoat, (2) a horse or stallion, (3) a bullock; see Chaucer, C. T. 617; and my note to P. Plowman, C. xvii. 267. The reason is that the word is a general name for a male animal, and not confined to any one kind; the word stog is in the same case, meaning a hart, a gander, and a drake; see Stag. The vowel was orig. long, but has been shortened into stot in the case of the horse and bullock, though Bailey (as above) also has stout for the former. = Icel. stotr, a bull; Swed. stot, a bull, also a hard blow with a rod; Dan. stot, a bullock; Swed. dial. stot, (1) a young ox, (2) a young man; Norweg. stot, (1) a bullock, (2) an ox-horn. (f.) The orig. sense is 'pusher,' hence its use in the sense of 'ox-horn' or 'hard blow,' also, a strong creature, a male. The verb appears in Du. stooten, to push, thrust, whence Du. stooter, sb., a thruster, also a stallion, stootig, adj., butting, poring; Swed. stoda, to push, Dan. stode, G. stossen (strong verb), Goth. stontan, to strike. (y.) The Gothic is the orig. form; from the Teut. base STUT, appearing also in Stutter, q. v. Fick, iii. 348.

STOCCADO, STOCCATA, a thrust in fencing. (Ital. = Test.) Stocada, Merry Wives, ii. 1. 234. Stocada, Romeo, iii. 1. 77. Stocada is an accommodated form, prob. from O. F. stocada, with the same sense, with a final a to imitate Spanish; cf. Shakespeare's barriada with E. barriada. [The true Span. form was stocada, 'a stocada or thrust with a weapon;' Minshew.] Stocada is the better form. = Ital. stocata, 'a foyné, a thrust, a stocada given in fence;' Florio. Formed as if from a fem. pp. of a verb stoccare, which is made from the sb. stocca, 'a truncheon, a tuck, a short sword, an arming sword;' Florio. = G. stock, a stick, staff, trunk, stump; cognate with E. Stock, q. v. And see Stoka. Cf. O. Du. stock, 'a stock-rapier;' Hexham.

STOCK, a post, stump, stem, &c. (E.) In all its senses, it is the same word. The sense is 'a thing stuck or fixed,' hence a post, trunk, stem (metaphorically a race or family), a fixed store or fund, capital, cattle, trunk or butt-end of a gun; the pl. stocks signify a place where a criminal is set fast, or a frame for holding ships fast, or public capital. See Trench, Study of Words, which partly follows Horne Tooke's Divisions of Purley, pt. ii. c. 4. M. E. stok, trunk of a tree, Fricke of Conscience, 676; pl. stokkes, the stocks, P. Plowman, B. iv. 108. = A. S. stoc, a post, trunk; Deut. xxviii. 26, 64. (f.) The word is clearly allied to stake, and derived (like stake) from the verb to stick, with the sense of stuck fast. The A. S. strong verb stoccan must once have existed, though it has not yet been found; the pt. t. must have been stac, and the pp. is generally given as stacen, to accord with the M. E. pp. stoben; by analogy with A. S. stem, to eat, pt. t. ast, pp. stem. But it is reasonable to suppose that a pp. stocan was also once in use, as we find M. E. stoben, and still have stob; cf. G. gestochen, pp. of stochen, and the analogy of A. S. bræcan, to break, pt. t. bræc, pp. bræcan. We might then deduce stoc directly from this pp. stocan of the strong verb stocan, which would suit both sense and form. However this may have been, the etymology from stick, verb, is quite certain. See Stick. + Du. stob, stick, handle, stocks; O. Du. stoc; whence O. Du. stocduyus, a stock-dove, stocwisch, stock-fish; stocvrou, 'a rose so called beyond the sea,' i. e. stocks; Hexham. + Icel. stobtr, trunk, log, stocks, stocks for ships. + Dan. stob, a stick. + Swed. stock, a beam, log. + G. stock; O. H. G. stock; from gustoch-on, pp. of stochen. Der. stock, verb, M. E. stokken, Chaucer, Troilus, b. iii. l. 381; stock-braker; stock-dow, Skelton, Philip Sparowe, l. 439; stock-exchange, stock-holder, stock-jobbing; stock-fish (prob. from Du. stocwisch), Prompt. Parv., and Temp. iii. 2. 79; stock-ash, i. e. log-like, Merch. Ven. v. 81; stock-still, i. e. still as a post (cf. O. Du. stock-stille, 'stone-still, or immovable,' Hexham); stock, a flower, called stocke-gyllofer (stock-gilliflower) in Palgrave stock-ing, q. v., stob, q. v. Also stoc-ade, stoc-ate; and stock-ade, q. v.

STOCKADE, a breast-work formed of stakes stuck in the ground. (E.; with F. suffix.) A modern word; it occurs in Mason's Eng. Garden, b. ii, spelt stocade (R.) But it is a coined word; for the F. estocade only means a stocada, or thrust in fencing; still, it is made in imitation of it, and the F. estocade is borrowed from Ital. stocada; see Stocada.

STOCKING, a close covering for the foot and leg. (E.) 'A stocking, or paire of stockings;' Minshew, ed. 1627. Formerly called stockes; 'Our knit silke stockes, and Spanish leather shoes;' Gascogne, Steele Glas, l. 375. 'He rose to draw on his strait stockings, and, as the devil would, he hit vpon the letter, bare it away in the heele of his stocke;' &c.; Holinsbed, Chron. of Ireland, an. 1532 (R.) 'Un bas de chausses, a stocking, or netter-stock;' Cot. He also has: 'Un bas de manches, a half-sleeve;' which we may compare with 'Manche Lombarde, a stock-sleeve, or fashion of halfe sleeve;' id. (f.) The clothing of the legs and lower part of the body formerly consisted of a single garment, called hose, in F. chausses. It was afterwards cut in two at the knees, leaving two pieces of dress, viz. knee-breeches, or, as they were then called, upper-stocks, or in F. haut de chausses, and the netter-stocks or stockings, in F. bas de chausses, and then simply bas. In these terms the element stock is to be understood in the sense of stump or trunk, the part of a body left when the limbs are cut off. In the same way G. strumpf, a stocking, properly signifies a stump; Wedgwood. Similarly, a stock-sleeve is a truncated sleeve, a half-sleeve. (y.) To this I may add that stock-ing is a dimin. form, the netter-stock being the smaller portion of the cut hose; it was sometimes called stock simply, but also netter-stock or stock-ing (= little stock); and the last name has alone survived.

STOIC, a disciple of Zeno. (L. = Gk.) From Lat. Stoicus = Gk. Stoikós, a Stoic; lit. belonging to a colonnade, because Zeno taught under a colonnade at Athens, named the Porciké (στοικιάς) = Gk. stoa (Ionic stoa, Attic stoa), a colonnade, place enclosed by pillars. So called from the upright position of the pillars; from Gk. stoa, base of στῆλαι, I set up, make to stand. = √ STA, to stand; see Stand. Der. stoa-al, stoa-al-ly, stoa-ism.

STOKER, one who tends a fire. (Du.) We have now coined the verb to stoke, but only the sb. appears in Phillips, Bailey, &c. 'Stoker, one that looks after a fire and some other concerns in a brew-house;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The word is Dutch, and came in as a term in brewing. = Du. stoker, 'a kindler, or a setter on fire;' Hexham. = Du. stoken, 'to make or kindle a fire, to instigate, or to stirre up;' id. This is the same word as O. F. estiquer, M. E. stoben, to stab; see Chaucer, C. T. Group A. 2546 (Six-text), altered in Tyrwhitt to stike, l. 2548; and is derived from the same source, i. e. in the present case, from O. Du. stock, a stick, stock, also a stock-rapier (stabbing rapier); no doubt from the use by the stoker of a stock (thick stick) to stir the fire with and arrange the logs; see Stocada. The O. Du. stock (Du. stob) is cognate with E. Stock, q. v. Der. stoke, in the mod. sense (as distinct from M. E. stoben, to stab, which is from O. F. estiquer).

STOLE, a long robe, a long scarf for a priest. (L. = Gk.) In very early use. A. S. stole; 'Stola, stole;' Wright's Voc. i. 81. = Lat. stola. = Gk. στῆλαι, equipment, a robe, a stole. = Gk. στῆλαιον, to equip, lit. to set in order; from the same base as E. Stall, q. v.

STOLID, dull, heavy, stupid. (L.) A late word. 'Stolid, foolish;' Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. = Lat. stolidus, firm, stock-like; hence, dull, stupid. = Lat. base STAL, to set firm, extension of √ STA, to stand; cf. Gk. στάλαξ, and Lat. stultus; see Stultify. And see Stout. Der. stolid-ity, coined from Lat. stoliditas.

STOMACH, the bag for food within the body. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. stomach, Prompt. Parv. [Now accommodated to the Gk. spelling.] = F. estomac, spell estomach in Cotgrave. = Lat. stomachus, acc. of stomachus. = Gk. stomachos, a mouth, opening, the gullet, the stomach; dimin. of stoma, the mouth. Prob. connected with stomachos, to groan, sigh, Skt. stā, to sound, as meaning that which makes a noise; see STUN. The Zend word for mouth is stomān; Fick, i. 824. Der. stomach, verb, to resent, Antony, iii. 4. 13, from the use of stomach in the sense of anger, 1 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 141; stomach-er, an ornament for the breast, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 226; stomach-ic.

STONE, a hard mass of mineral matter, piece of rock, a gem. (E.) M. E. ston, stoun, Chaucer, C. T. 7997. = A. S. stān (common); the change from d to long e is usual, as in baia, a bone, baer, a boar. + Du. steen. + Icel. stein. + Dan. and Swed. sten. + G. stein. + Goth. stains. β. All from Teut. type STAINA, a stone; Fick, iii. 347. Cf. Russ. stona, a wall. The base is STI, appearing in Gk. stis, a stone, pebble. Curtius, i. 364. Der. stone, verb; stone-blind, as blind as a stone; stone-bow, used for shooting stones, Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 31; stone-chat, a chattering bird; stone-cutter, K. Lear, ii. 2. 63; stone-fruit; stone-still, K. John, iv. 1. 77; stone-ware; stone's cast or stone's throw, the distance to which a stone can be cast or thrown; stone-y, A. S. stānig; stone-heart-ed; Hen. IV, ii. 2. 28.

STOOL, a seat without a back. (E.) M. E. stool, Prompt. Parv.; dat. stolis, P. Plowman, B. v. 394. = A. S. stol, a seat, a throne; Green, i. 485. + Du. stool, a chair, seat, stool. + Icel. stóll. + Dan. and Swed. stol, a chair. + Goth. stols, a seat. + G. stuhl, O. H. G. stul, stual. + Russ. stol, a table. + Lithuan. stolas, a table. β. All from the type STO-LA, a thing firmly set; cf. Gk. stēla, a pillar. And STO is put for STĀ, from STA, to stand. The same base appears in stow and stead (1). Der. stool-ball, a game played with a ball and one or two stools, Two Noble Kinsman, v. 2; see stool-ball in Halliwell.

STOOP (1), to bend the body, lean forward, condescend. (E.) M. E. stoupen, Wyclif, John, xx. 8. = A. S. stāpian, Alfred, tr. of Orosius, b. vi. c. 24 § 1. + O. Du. stoupen, 'to bowe'; Hexham. + Icel. stupa (obsolete). + Swed. stupa, to fall, to tilt; cf. stupans, sloping, stupung, a leaning forward. β. From a Teut. base STUP, apparently meaning to lean forward; hence also are steep (1) and steep (2), the latter of which is merely the causal of steep. γ. And perhaps the step in step-child is from the same root; it is not improbable that step, meaning 'orphaned,' may be from the notion of overturning (hence destroying) implied in steep (2). Der. steep (1); steep (2).

STOP, to obstruct, hinder, restrain, intercept, to cease. (L.) M. E. stoppen, Ancren Riwle, p. 72, l. 19. = A. S. stopian, in the comp. for-stopian, to stop up, an unauthorised word noted by Somner, but prob. genuine; it is not a form which he would have been likely to invent. So also Du. stoppen, to fill, stuff, stop; Swed. stoppa, to fill, stuff, cram, stop up; Dan. stoppe, to fill, stuff, cram, &c.; G. stopfen. Not a Teut. word, but the same as Ital. stoppare, to stop up with tow, Low Lat. stoppare, to stop up with tow, also used in the general sense of cram, stop. β. All from Lat. stupa, stoppa, the coarse part of flax, hards, oakum, tow; cognate with Gk. stēra, stēra, with the same sense. Allied to STUB, STUPID, and STUMP. Cf. Skt. stambhā, to stop, allied to stambh, to stop, orig. to make firm. The base of stupa is STUP, to make firm or hard, an extension from STU, by-form of STA, to stand; see Stand. Cf. E. stump with Skt. stambhā, a post, a pillar. Der. stop, sb., K. John, iv. 3. 239; stop-sock, stop-ages (with F. suffix), stop-er; also stop-les, M. E. stopel, Prompt. Parv. (with E. suffix, signifying the instrument). Doublets, astop, to impede, bar, a law term, borrowed from O. F. astoper (mod. F. astoper), from Low Lat. astopere, as above; also stopf, verb.

STORAX, a resinous gum. (L., = Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xii. c. 23, heading. = Lat. storax, styrax. = Gk. stirax, a sweet-smelling gum produced by the tree called stirax; Herodotus, iii. 107.

STORE, provision, abundance, stock. (F., = L.) M. E. stor, stow, Chaucer, C. T. 600; Rob. of Glouc. p. 395, l. 13; the derived verb storen occurs as early as in Layamon, l. 13412, later text. 'Stow, or purveyance, stowrus;' Prompt. Parv. = O. F. astor, which Roquefort explains by 'a nuptial gift;' closely allied to O. F. astore, store, provisions. = Low Lat. astorium, the same as instaurum, stor. = Lat. instaurare, to construct, build, restore, renew; Low Lat. instaurare, to provide necessities. Cf. O. F. astorer, 'to build, make, edify; also to store;' Cot. = Lat. in, prep. as prefix; and *asturare, to set up, place, found also in the comp. restaurare, to restore. β. This form *asturare is due to a lost adj. *asturus, cognate with Gk. asturus, an upright pole or stake, orig. 'upright,' and Skt. asthura, fixed, stable, immovable. The Skt. asthura is from asth, to stand; hence *asturus is formed from the STA, to stand, by help of the Aryan suffixes -ura; see Stand. Der. store, verb, M. E. stow, O. F. astorer, as above; store-ages, with F. suffix -age = Lat. astorium; store-house; also re-store, q. v.; stor-y (1), q. v.

STORK, a wading bird. (E.) M. E. stork, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 361. = A. S. stora, Wright's Voc. i. 77, col. 1, 280, col. 2. + Du. stork. + Icel. storkr. + Dan. and Swed. stork. + G. stork, O. H. G. stork, stork. β. Root uncertain; but almost certainly the same word as Gk. storkos, a large bird, Fick, iii. 346; which Fick considers as allied to E. stork, as if the orig. sense were 'the strong one.' γ. Or rather, 'the tall one;' cf. A. S. stole, high, noticed under Stalk (2). Stork and stork are prob. connected with Gk. storkos, firm, and all are from the STA, to stand. Der. stork's-bill, a kind of geranium, from the shape of the fruit.

STORM, a violent commotion, tempest. (E.) M. E. storm, Chaucer, C. T. 1982. = A. S. storm, Green, ii. 485. + Icel. stormr. + Du., Swed., Dan., storm. + G. sturm. β. All from Teut. base stern-ns (Fick, iii. 346), meaning 'that which lays low,' or strews or destroys trees, &c.; the suffix -ns is the same as in stern-ns, stern-ns. = STAR, to strew; cf. Lat. sternere, to lay low, strew, prostrate. See Strew, Star, Stir. We also find Gael. and Irish stairm, Bret. stourm, a storm. Der. storm, verb, A. S. styrman, with vowel-change; storm-y, storm-ness.

STORY (1), a history, narrative. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. storie, Chaucer, C. T. 1203, 13503; Havelock, 1641; Ancren Riwle, p. 154, l. 24. = O. F. storie, storie [and prob. storie], Burguy; variants of O. F. storie, history. = Lat. istoria; see History. Der. stori-ed, i. e. painted with stories, representing tales, Milton, Il Pens. 159; cf. O. F. istorid, 'beautified with story-work,' Cot. Doublet, history.

STORY (2), the height of one floor in a building, a set of rooms at one level. (F., = L.) Bacon, in his Essay 45 (On Building), speaks of 'the first story,' 'the under story,' 'the second story,' &c. The M. E. story in the following passage seems to be the same word: 'Hil bygonne her heye tounes strengly vaste aboute, Her castles and stors, but hil myghte be yune in doute' = they began fast about to strengthen their high towns, their castles and buildings, that they might be in [them] when in fear; Rob. of Glouc. p. 181, l. 9. Here the word is plainly used in the more gen. sense of building; and story represents O. F. asture, a thing built. = asture, built, made, erected, edified; also furnished, stored; Cot. This is the pp. of asture, to build, to store; see Store. ¶ Wedgwood adds: 'I cannot find that asture was ever used in the sense of E. story.' This is prob. right; the sense in E. seems to have been at first simply a thing built, a building; the restriction of the word to one floor only is peculiar to English. Just in the same way, a floor is properly only a boarded (or other) covering of the ground, but was used, by an easy extension of meaning, as synonymous with story. There can be no doubt as to the derivation, as is best shown by the strange attempts that have been made to fashion story out of astoria [not found] = astoria [not found] = astury (?), an extension of astore; or to derive it from astir-y [not found], or, in desperation, from Gael. stair, a stair, flight of stairs; Der. stair-story or stair-story, Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 479, a story lighted with windows, as distinct from the blind-story, as the triforium was sometimes called (Lee, Gloss. of Liturgical Terms; Oxford Glossary, p. 57).

STOOP, STOOP, a vessel or flagon. (E.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 68. M. E. stope. 'Hec cups, a stope;' Wright's Voc. i. 235. = A. S. stōp, a cup; Grein, ii. 481. [The change from st to long e is rare, but occurs in stow (A. S. stōw), and stough, miswritten for stogh (A. S. stōgh).] + Du. stoop, a gallon. + Icel. stōp, a knobby lump, also a stoup, beaker, cup. + Swed. stōp, a measure, about 3 pints. + G. stōp, a cup; O. H. G. stōp, stōp. β. All from the Teut. type STAUPA, Fick, iii. 343. The orig. sense seems to have been a lump or mass, as in Icelandic; properly a mass of molten metal, as shown by Icel. stōpa (put for stōp-ja), to pour, cast, found, Dan. stōbe, to cast, mould, steep. See further under Stoop (2).

STOUT, bold, strong, robust. (F., = O. Low G.) M. E. stout, Chaucer, C. T. 547. = O. F. astout, stout, furious, also rash, stupid (Burguy). = O. Du. stout, stout, stout, bolde, rash; Hexham. Low G. stout, the same; A. S. stult (Bosworth), a rare word; cognate with G. stolz, proud. β. Further cognate with Lat. stolidus, of which the orig. sense was 'firm' from the base STAL, extension of STA, to stand. See Stolid, Stall. Der. stout, sb., a strong kind of beer; stout-ly, adv.

STOVE, a hot-house, an apparatus for warming a room. (Du.) 'This word has much narrowed its meaning; [a] bath, hot-house .. was a stove once;' Trench, Select Glossary. 'A stove, or hot-house;' Minahan, ed. 1627. Not an old word. [The A. S. stofs, suggested by Somner, can hardly be right; or, if so, the word was, at any rate, re-introduced.] = O. Du. stove, 'a stove, a hot-house, or a baine;' Hexham. Low G. stove, stove, the same. + Icel. stofs, older form stofs, a bathing-room with a stove, a room. + G. stofs, a room;

O. H. G. stupa, a heated room. β . Root unknown; supposed to be a Teut. word, but even this is doubtful. The Ital. stufa, Span. estufa, F. étuve, are borrowed from German. γ . Still, the Icel. stá, occurring in aldstá, a fire-stove or fire-place, a hearth, suggests a close connection with Stow, q. v.

STOVER, fodder for cattle. (F., = L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 63. M. E. stover (with v = u). Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 1606. = O. F. astover, astovoir, necessaries, provisions; orig. the infim. mood of a verb which was used impersonally with the sense 'it is necessary'; Burguy, Dies. On the difficult etymology see Dies, who refers it either to Lat. stare, or (rather) to Lat. studere, to study, endeavour, desire; see Student.

STOW, to arrange, pack away. (E.) M. E. stowen, Allit. Poema, B. 113. Lit. 'to put in a place;' a verb made from M. E. stow, a place, Layamon, 1174. = A. S. stow, a place, Mark, l. 43. + O. Fric. sto, a place. We also find Icel. stá, in the comp. aldstá, a fire-place, hearth. Cognate with Lithuan. stova, the place in which one stands; from stoti, to stand. β . All from the base STO, put for STÁ, from \sqrt{STA} , to stand; see Stand. See Fick, iii. 241. Der. stow-ogv, with F. suffix, Cymb. l. 6. 192. Also bestow, q. v. γ . Possibly stove is a closely related word.

STRADDLE, to stand or walk with the legs wide apart. (E.) In Minabeu, ed. 1637. Spelt striddil and stridle in Levins, ed. 1370. The frequentative of stride, used in place of striddila. See Strida. Cf. prov. E. striddle, to straddle; Halliwell.

STRAGGLE, to stray, ramble away. (E.) Formerly stragle, with one g, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, b. x. l. 158; and in Minabeu, ed. 1637. Put for strackle; cf. prov. E. strackling, a loose wild fellow (North); strackle-brained, dissolute, thoughtless; Halliwell. It is the frequentative of M. E. straken, to go, proceed, roam; 'Pey over land strake' = they roam over the land; P. Plowman's Creed, l. 82; and cf. Cursor Mundi, l. 1845, Trin. MS. 'To strake about, circumsire'; MS. Devonsh. Glosa, cited in Halliwell. Formed from A. S. stráe, pt. t. of stréan, to go, also to strike (Stratmann). See Strike, Stroke. γ . No doubt often confused, in popular etymology, with stray, but the frequentative of stray would have taken the form strail, and could not have had a g. Der. straggler.

STRAIGHT, direct, upright. (E.) Spelt stroyght in Palgrave. It is identical with M. E. strayt, the pp. of strachen, to stretch. 'Sithe thi fleesch, lord, was furst peroryued And, for oure sake, larde strayt in stalle'; Political, Religious, and Love Poema, ed. Furnivall, p. 252, l. 46. = A. S. stráht, pp. of strécan, to stretch; see Stretch. β . The adverbial use is early; 'William strayt went hem to'; Will. of Palerne, l. 3328; spelt straght, Gower, C. A. iii. 36, l. 6. Der. straight-ly, straight-mess; straight-forward-ly; straight-way = in a straight way, directly, spelt straightway, Spenser, F. Q. l. 10. 73; straight-on, verb, a late coinage. γ . Quite distinct from strait, which is, however, from the same root.

STRAIN, to stretch tight, draw with force, overtask, constrain, filter. (F., = L.) M. E. strainen, Chaucer, C. T. 9617. = O. F. estraindre, 'to straine, wring hard'; Cot. = Lat. stringere, to draw tight; pt. t. strinxi, pp. strinximus. Allied to Gk. στρίγγω, twisted, στρίγγω(ω), to press out, Lithuan. stráigtis, to become stiff, freeze into ice, A. S. strécan, to stretch. See Stretch. Der. strain, sb., strain-er; con-strain, dis-strain, re-strain; and see strait, stratagem.

STRAIT, strict, narrow, rigid. (F., = L.) M. E. strait, Chaucer, C. T. 174; Layamon, 2270. = O. F. estroit, later estroit, 'strait, narrow, close, contracted, strict'; Cot. Mod. F. strait. = Lat. strictum, acc. of stricere, strict, strait. See Striot. Der. strait, sb., used to translate O. F. estroit, sb., in Cotgrave; strait-ly, -ness; strait-laced; strait-on, a coined word, Luke, xii. 50. Doublet, strit.

STRAND (1), the beach of the sea or of a lake. (E.) M. E. strand, often strand, Chaucer, C. T. 2345. = A. S. strand, Matt. xiii. 48. + Du. strand. + Icel. strand (gen. strandar), margin, edge. + Dan., Swed., and G. strand. Root unknown; perhaps ultimately due to \sqrt{STAR} , to spread, strew; see Stratum. Der. strand, verb; cf. Du. strandon, 'to arrive on the sea-shore'; Hexham.

STRAND (2), one of the smaller strings that compose a rope. (Du.?) 'Strand, in sea-language, the twist of a rope'; Phillips, ed. 1706. It is most probable that the d is excrement, as commonly in E. after s final, and that the word is Dutch. = Du. strava, 'a trivial word, a skain'; Sewel. Sewel further identifies this form with Du. strang, 'a skain, hank; see strong gearm, a hank of thread'; the words are prob. not identical, but only nearly related. + G. stränke, a skain, hank; prob. closely related to G. strang, a rope, cord, string, skein. See String.

STRANGE, foreign, odd. (F., = L.) M. E. strange, Rob. of Glouc. p. 16, l. 22; Chaucer, C. T. l. 13. = O. F. estränge, 'strange'; Cot. Mod. F. étrange; Spah. extranio, Ital. estraneo, extraneo. = Lat. extraneus, acc. of extraneus, foreign; lit. 'that which is without.' = Lat. extra, without, outside; see Extra. Der. strange-ly, -ness; γ .

strang-er, from O. F. estrangier, 'a stranger'; Cot. Also estränge, q. v. Doublet, extraneous.

STRANGLE, to choke. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. strangle, Havelok, 642. = O. F. estrangler, 'to strangle, choke'; Cot. = Lat. strangulare, to throttle, choke. = Gk. στραγγιλλέω, to strangle; also στραγγιλλίζω. = Gk. στραγγίλλω, a halter. = Gk. στραγγίλλω, twisted. = \sqrt{STRAG} , STRAG, to stretch, strain, twist; Fick, iii. 226. See Stratoh. Der. strangl-er; strangulation, from F. strangulation, 'a strangling'; Cot., from Lat. acc. strangulationem.

STRANGURY, extreme difficulty in discharging urine. (L., = Gk.) Modern and medical. = Lat. stranguria. = Gk. στραγγιγμία, retention of the urine, when it falls by drops. = Gk. στραγγί, base of στραγγί, that which oozes out, a drop; and σπρω, urine. The Gk. στραγγί is allied to στραγγί, twisted, compressed. See Strangle and Urine.

STRAP, a narrow strip of leather. (L.) Frequently called a strop in prov. E., and this is the better form. M. E. stroppe, a noose, loop; 'a rydyng-knotte or a stroppe'; Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 33. 'A thonge. . . a stroppe, or a loupe,' Elyot, 1559; cited in Halliwell. = A. S. stropp. 'Struppis, strop, wá á-wíððe'; Wright's Voc. l. 36, col. 2. = Lat. strappus, a strap, thong, fillet. Allied to Gk. στρίψω, a twisted band or cord; from στρίψω, to twist. See Strophe. From the same Lat. word are borrowed Du. strop, a halter, F. stroppe, &c. Doublet, strop. And see strappado.

STRAPPADO, a species of torture. (Ital., = Teut.) In Hen. IV. ii. 4. 262. The word has been turned into a Spanish-looking form, but it is rather Italian. In exactly the same way, the Ital. strocata also appears as strocato; see Stroccado. = Ital. strappata, a pulling, wringing; the strappado. = Ital. strappare, to pull, wring. = High-German (Swiss) straffen, to pull tight, allied to G. straff, tight (Dies). Perhaps G. straff is not a real Teut. word, but due to Lat. strappus, a strap, twisted cord; see Strap.

STRATAGEM, an artifice, esp. in war. (F., = L., = Gk.) Spelt stratagem, Sur P. Sidney, Apology for Poetry, ed. Arber, p. 37. = O. F. stratagem, 'a stratagem'; Cot. = Lat. stratagema. = Gk. στρατήγημα, the device or act of a general. = Gk. στρατήγος, a general, leader of an army. = Gk. στρατός, an army; and στρω, to lead. β . The Gk. στρατός means properly an encamped army, from its being spread out over ground, and is allied to Gk. στέρω, I spread out, and Lat. sternere; see Stratum. The Gk. στρω is cognate with Lat. agro; see Argent. Curtius, l. 265. Der. strateg-er, from Gk. στρατήγος, generalship, from στρατήγος, a general; strateg-ic, Gk. στρατηγικός; strateg-ic-al-ly; strateg-ist.

STRATUM, a layer, esp. of earth or rock. (L.) In Thomson, Autumn, 745. = Lat. stratum, that which is laid flat or spread out, neut. of stratus, pp. of sternere. Allied to Gk. στέρω, I spread out. = \sqrt{STAR} , to scatter, spread out; see Star. Der. strati-fication, strati-fy, coined words. And see strait, con-strat-ation, pro-strate, strat-agem; also strew, straw.

STRAW, a stalk of corn when thrashed. (E.) M. E. straw, Chaucer, C. T. 11007; also stra, stres, id. 3020. = A. S. strawa, straw, strad; it occurs in strad-berige, a strawberry, Wright's Voc. l. 31, col. 2, and in the derivative straw-ian, to strew, as below. + Du. straw. + Icel. strá. + Dan. straa. + Swed. strå. + G. streu, O. H. G. strew, straw. Cf. Lat. straw, litter, straw-er, to heap up; Goth. strawan, to strew. β . From the base STRU, to scatter, allied to STRA (as in Lat. stratum, stratum); variants of \sqrt{STAR} , to spread out, scatter; see Star. Der. straw-y; straw, verb, q. v.; straw-berry, A. S. stradberige, as above, from the resemblance of its runners or suckers to straws.

STRAY, to wander, rove, err. (F., = L.) M. E. strains: the derivative s-strayed, pp., is in Gower, C. A. ii. 132, l. 11; and see the Prompt. Parv. = O. F. estrais, to stray; Burguy. β . A consonant has been lost, as usual in O. F., between ai and er, and this consonant is, doubtless, d. See Dies, who compares Prov. estradiar, one who roves about the streets or ways, one who strays, from Prov. estrada, a street; also O. F. estru, a street. This is confirmed by O. Ital. stradotto, 'a wanderer, gadder, traveller, earth-planet, a high-way-keeper'; Florio, from Ital. strada, a street. γ . Thus the lit. sense is 'one who roves the streets.' All from Lat. strata, a street; see Street. δ . The Low Lat. extrarius, cited by Wedgwood, would have become extraire in O. F., whereas the O. F. adj. was estraver or estruer (see Cotgrave). The Low Lat. forms for stray, sb., given by Ducange, are extraria, extrajeria, extraseria, which are rather borrowed from F. than true Lat. words. The explanation given by Dies is quite satisfactory. Cf. mod. F. butteur d'estrade, a loiterer (Hamilton). Der. stray, sb., oddly spelt strayis, strayes, in P. Plowm. B. prol. 94. C. l. 92, old form also estray (Blount, Non-lexicon), from O. F. estrais, to stray, as above.

STREAK, a line or long mark on a differently coloured ground.

STREAM, a current or flow. (E.) M. E. stream, Chaucer, C. T. 466, 3893. = A. S. stream, Grein, ii. 488. + Du. strom. + Icel. stromur. + Swed. and Dan. ström. + G. strom. + O. H. G. stroma, strom. ¶ All from the Teut. base STRAU-MA, where -ma is the Aryan suffix -ma; the word means 'that which flows', from the Teut. base STRU, to flow. The orig. root is $\sqrt{\text{SRU}}$, to flow; cf. Skt. sr, to flow, Gk. hēr (put for epifēr), to flow, Irish srath, a stream, Lathan. strama, a stream. The t seems to have been inserted, for greater ease of pronunciation, not only in Teutonic, but in Slavonic; cf. Russ. strava, a stream. See Curtius, i. 439; Fick, i. 837, iii. 349. The putting of er for str occurs, contrariwise, in Irish sráid, a street, from the Lat. strada; see Street. From the same root we have rham, rhythm, ruminate, catarrh. Der. stream, verb, M. E. streamen, streamen, Ancren Riwle, p. 188, note 2; stream-er, Hen. V, iii. chor. 6; stream-let, a double diminutive; stream-y.

STREET, a paved way, a road in a town. (L.) M. E. strote, Wych, Matt. xii. 19. = A. S. stræt, Grein, ii. 487. = Lat. strata, put for strata uia, a paved way; strata is fem. of stratus, pp. of strare, to strew, scatter, pavu. = $\sqrt{\text{STAR}}$, to spread out; see Stratum and Star. ¶ The G. strass is likewise borrowed from Latin; so also Ital. strada, &c. Der. stroy, q. v.

STRENGTH, might. (E.) M. E. strengthe, Chaucer, C. T. 84. = A. S. strongða, Grein, ii. 487. = A. S. strong, strong; see Strong. Der. strenght-en.

STRENUOUS, vigorous, active, zealous. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Englished from Lat. stronus, vigorous, active. Allied to Gk. στυφός, strong, στυφίλος, to make firm, στυφός, firm; see Stereoscope. Der. stronus-ly, -ness.

STRESS, strain, force, pressure. (F., -L.) 1. Used in the sense of distress, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 321, last line. 'Stress, or wed take [pledge taken] by strength and violence. Vadimonium.' Prompt. Parv. Here stress is obviously short for M. E. distress, in the sense 'distress for rent'; and stress may sometimes be taken as a short form of distress; see Distress. 2. 'Stress, or streyting, Constrictio.' Prompt. Parv. 'I stress, I strayght one of his liberty or thurst his body to guyther, Is streyting;' Palgrave. This is from O. F. streuer (also spelt estruier), 'to straiten, pinch, contract, bring into a narrow compass.' Cot. This answers to a Low Lat. form struere?, not found, a derivative of strictus, draws together; see Strict. We may regard stress as due, in general, to this verb, but it comes to much the same thing. ¶ The loss of the initial st occurs also in spost, sply, spand, &c.; and is therefore merely what we should expect.

STRETCH, to draw out, extend. (E.) M. E. stretchen, Chaucer, C. T. 15937; pt. t. straghte, id. 2918; pp. straght or straght, whence mod. E. straight. = A. S. streccan, John, xxi. 18; pt. t. strakte, Matt. xxi. 8; pp. strakt. Formed as a causal verb from A. S. strac, stroc, strong, violent, of which the pl. stroc occurs in Matt. xi. 18, and the derivative astroc, resolute, in Gregory's Past. Care, c. xlii, ed. Sweet, p. 305, l. 18. This A. S. strac is a mere variant of starc, stark, strong; see Stark. The sense of stretch is, accordingly, to make stiff or hard, as in tightening a cord, or straining it. Or we may regard stretch as a secondary verb due to Teut. base STARK, to draw tight = $\sqrt{\text{STAR}}$, an extension of $\sqrt{\text{STAR}}$, to spread out. Either way, the root is the same, and it makes but little difference. + Du. stretchen. + Dan. strække, to stretch; stræk, a stretch. + Swed. sträcka. + G. stretchen; from strach, adj., straight; cf. stracks, straightway, immediately. Cf. also Lat. stringere, to draw tight, which is closely related; Gk. στυγγός, twisted tight. Other nearly related words are string and strong; also strain, strait, stringent, strangle, strict. Der. stretch, sb., stretch-er, stretching.

STREW, STRAW, to spread, scatter loosely. (E.) Spelt straw, Matt. xxi. 8. M. E. strawen, strawen, Chaucer, C. T. 10927. = A. S. strawian, Matt. xxi. 8; Mark, xi. 8. = A. S. straw, straw; see Straw. + Du. strooien, to scatter; from straw, straw. ¶ The E. and Du. verbs are mere derivatives from the sb., but Icel. strá, Swed. strå, Dan. strå, and (perhaps) G. strawen, to strew, are more orig. forms, and related to Lat. struere, to heap up, struere (pt. t. stru-er), pp.

stru-er), to scatter. All from $\sqrt{\text{STAR}}$, to scatter; see Straw, Stratum, Star.

STRICKEN, advanced (in years); see Strike. STRICT, strait, exact, severe, accurate. (L.) In Mens. for Mens. l. 3, 19. = Lat. strictus, pp. of stringere; see Stringent. Der. strictly, -ness; strict-ura, from Lat. strictura, orig. fem. of fat. part. of stringere. Der. stress. Doublet, strait, adj.

STRIDE, to walk with long steps. (E.) M. E. striden, Cursor Mundi, 10235; Layamon, 17982; pt. t. strade, Iwan and Gawin, 3193, in Ritson's Met. Rom. vol. i; cf. bestride, bestrood, in Chaucer, C. T. 13831. = A. S. stridan, to strive, also to stride; an unauthorised word, but a strong verb, and a true form; Lye gives bestridan, to bestride, as a derivative. The pt. t. would have been strōd, and the pp. striden, as shown by mod. E. strade, and the derivative striddle, cited under Straddle. Cf. O. Sax. and O. Fries. strid, strife; O. Sax. striden, O. Fries. strida, to strive. ¶ That the word should have meant both to strive and to stride is curious; but is certified by the cognate Low G. striden (pt. t. strōd, pp. gestriden), meaning (1) to strive, (2) to stride; with the still more remarkable derivative bestriden, also meaning (1) to combat, (2) to bestride, as in dat Pared bestriden, to bestride the horse; Bremen Wörterbuch, pp. 1063, 1064. [Precisely the same double meaning reappears in Low G. strewen, (1) to strive, (2) to stride, and the sb. strew, (1) a striving, (2) a stride. Hexham notes O. Du. strewen, 'to force or to strive, to walke together;' which points to the meaning of stride as originating from the continuation of two men who, in walking side by side, strive to out-pass one another, and so take long steps.] ¶ Other cognate words are Du. strijden (pt. t. strōd, pp. gestriden), G. strewen (pt. t. strōd, pp. gestritten), Dan. stride (pt. t. strōd), only in the sense to strive, to contend; cf. also the weak verbs, Icel. stríða, Swed. strida, to strive. See further under Strife, Strive. Der. straid-ly, q. v.; stride, sb.; o-stride, adv., King Alisaunder, 4447; be-stride.

STRIFE, contention, dispute, contest. (F., -L.) In early use; Layamon, 29466, later text; Ancren Riwle, p. 200, last line but one. = O. F. strif, 'strife, debate'; Cot. = Icel. stríð, stríð, contention; by the common change of ð to f, as in Shakespeare's kill-horse for thill-horse. + O. Sax. and O. Fries. strif, strife. + Du. strif. + Dan. and Swed. strid. + G. strif. + O. H. G. strif. See Stride. ¶ Further cognate with O. Lat. stis (gen. stis-ū), stris, later Lat. lis; see Litigate. Root unknown. Der. strive, q. v.

STRIKE, to hit, dash, stamp, coin, give a blow to. (E.) M. E. striken, orig. to proceed, advance, esp. with a smooth motion, to flow; hence used of smooth swift motion, to strike with a rod or sword. 'Ase strem [at strike] stille' = like a stream that flows gently; Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 48, l. 21. 'Strik into a studie' = fell into a study; Will. of Palerne, 4038. 'A mous . . . Strake forth sternly' = a mouse advanced boldly; P. Plowman, prol. 183. Strong verb, pt. t. strak, strak, strak, mod. E. struck; pp. striken, later strucken, mod. E. struck. The phr. 'stricken in years' = advanced in years; Lake, i. 7. = A. S. strican, to go, proceed, advance, pt. t. stric, pp. stricem. 'Rodor stricē ymbetan' = the firmament goes round, i. e. revolves; Grein, ii. 489. + Du. strijken, to smooth, rub, stroke, spread, strike. + G. stricken, pt. t. strich, pp. gestrichen, to stroke, rub, smooth, spread, strike. ¶ All from Teut. base STRIK; cf. Goth. strika, a stroke, dash with a pen, cognate with Lat. striga, a row, a furrow. We also find Icel. stryða, pt. t. strōd, pp. strahan, to stroke, rub, wipe, to strike, fog; Swed. stryka, to stroke, wipe, strike, rove; Dan. stryge, the name; from a related base STRUK; Fick, iii. 349. ¶ The Aryan base is STRIG, appearing in Lat. stringere, which is precisely equivalent to A. S. strican, when used in the sense to graze, or touch slightly with a swift motion. See Stringent. Der. strick-er, strick-ing; also stroke, q. v.; strak, q. v. Also strids, sb., the name of a measure, orig. an instrument with a straight edge for levelling (striking off) a measure of grain.

STRING, thin cord. (E.) M. E. string, string, Chaucer, C. T. 7649. = A. S. stringa, John, ii. 15. From its being strongly or tightly twisted. = A. S. string, strong, violent. + Du. string; from string, adj., severe, rigid. + Icel. stringr; from stringr. + Dan. string; from string. + Swed. string, sb.; from string, adj. + G. string. Cf. Gk. στυγγήλη, a halter; from στυγγός, hard twisted. See Strong. Der. string, verb, properly a weak verb, being formed from the sb., but the pp. string also occurs, L. L. L. iv. 2, 343, formed by analogy with flung from fling, and sung from sing. Also string-ed, the correct form; string-y; bow-string; heart-string.

STRINGENT, urgent, strict. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. stringens, stem of pres. part. of stringere, to draw tight, compress, urge, &c.; pp. strictus. From the base STRIG, weakened form of STRAG, from $\sqrt{\text{STAR}}$, to stretch, twist, extension of $\sqrt{\text{STAR}}$, to spread. Fick, i. 827. See Stark, Strong. Der. stringent-ly, stringent-y; and see strict, strat, a-stringent, a-striction, strain, con-string, dis-strain, re-strain, straw, dis-straw.

STRIP, to tear off, skin, render bare, deprive, plunder. (E.) M. E. stripen, strepen, Chaucer, C. T. 1008, 8739; pt. 1. stripte, spelt stripte, Juliana, p. 63, l. 16; pp. stripte, spelt i-striped, Ancien Riwle, p. 148, note g. = A. S. stripan, in comp. bedstripan, to plunder, A. S. Chron. an. 1065. + Du. stroepen, to plunder, strip; cf. strippen, to whip, to strip off leaves; stripen, to strike. + O. H. G. strovein, cited by Stratzmann. β. The base is STKUP, to strip off; cf. O. Du. stropen, 'to flea [flay], to skin, or to pill,' Hexham. Perhaps related to the base STRUK, to stroke, rub, wipe, as seen in Icel. strika; see under Strika. The equivalence of these bases appears in E. strip, as compared with stroke and streak; no also G. strosen, to graze, has just the sense of Lat. stringere, which is related to E. strids. Der. strip, sb., a piece stripped off. And see stripe, strip-lung.

STRIPPE, a streak, a blow with a whip. (Du.) Not a very old word, and apparently borrowed from Dutch; prob. because connected with the trade of weaving. M. E. stripe, Prompt. Parv. = O. Du. stripe, as in strip-blende, 'a parti-coloured suite,' Hexham; cf. Du. strop, a stripe, streak. Low G. stripe, a stripe, strip; stripen, to stripe; striped Tag, striped cloth. + G. stropf, a stripe, streak, strip. From the notion of flaying; the O. Du. stroepen meant 'to flay,' as shown under Strip. Hence, a strip, the mark of a lash, a stripe. ¶ Similarly E. streak is connected with E. stroke; from the mark of a blow. Der. stripe, verb.

STRIPLING, a youth, lad. (E.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, l. 1. 144. 'He is but a youngling, A stalworthy stripling;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 345. A double dimin. from strip; the sense is 'one as thin as a strip,' a growing lad not yet filled out. Cf. 'you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case;' 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 273. Similarly a stripped is a very narrow stream; 'a little brooke or stripped;' Holinshed's Descr. of Scotland, c. 10. § 2.

STRIVE, to struggle, contend. (F., = Scand.) M. E. striven, a weak verb, pt. t. strived, Will. of Palerne, 4099. Made into a strong verb, with pt. t. stryf, Chaucer, C. T. 1040; mod. E. strive, pp. striven; by analogy with drive (drave, driven). = O. F. striver, 'to strive,' Cot. = O. F. stryf, strife. See Strife.

STROKE (1), a blow. (E.) M. E. stroh, stroch, Chaucer, C. T. 1709. = A. S. strac, pt. t. of strican, to strike; with the usual change of d to long e. See Strika. So also G. strich, a stroke, from G. strichen, to stroke, to whip.

STROKE (2), to rub gently. (E.) M. E. stroben, Chaucer, C. T. 10479. = A. S. strician, to stroke; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, p. 303, l. 10. A causal verb; from strac, pt. t. of A. S. strican, to go, pass swiftly over, mod. E. strike. See Strika. So also G. strichen, to stroke, from strichen, to rub, strike.

STROLL, to rove, wander. (Scand.?) A late word. 'When strollers durst presume to pick your purse;' Dryden, 5th prol. to Univ. of Oxford, l. 33. 'Knowing that rest, quiet, and sleep, with lesser meat, will sooner feed any creature than your meat with liberty to run and stroll about;' Blith's Husbandry, 1653; cited by Wedgwood. The spellings strolle, stroll, show that a consonant has been lost; the forms are contracted as if from strulle, or strulle. The verb is clearly the frequentative of Dan. stryge, to stroll, as in stryge Landet om or stryge omkring i Landet, to stroll about the country; Swed. strula, to stroke, also, to stroll about, to ramble. The l appears in Swed. dial. strytel, one who strolls about, also used in the form stryker (Riets). The verb appears in Da. strulle, to stumble, with a variation in the sense; so also G. strucheln. β. All these are from the base STRUK, which, as explained under Strika, occurs in Teutonic as a variant of STRIK, to strike. The corresponding E. word from the latter base would be strickle or strickle; of these, the former is only represented by the simple verb appearing in M. E. striden, to bow, to advance, and G. stricken, with its derivative stricker, a stroller; but the latter is still in use in the form Straggla, q. v. γ. I conclude that, as regards the sense, stroll is a mere doublet of straggla, the difference of vowel being due to a difference in the vowel of the base; whilst, as regards the form, stroll answers to M. E. striglen, to struggle; see Struggle. See further under Strika. I suppose the Swiss strucheln, to rove about, cited by Wedgwood, to be equivalent to G. strucheln. Der. stroll, sb.; stroller.

STRONG, forcible, vigorous, energetic. (E.) M. E. strong, Chaucer, C. T. 2137, &c. 'Strong and stark;' Havelok, 608. = A. S. strong, strong; Grein, ii. 485. + Du. strong. + Icel. strongr. + Dan. strong + Swed. strang. + G. strong, strict. β. All from Teut. type STRANGA, adj., strong, which is merely a nasalized form of Stark, q. v. The nasal also appears in Gk. στραγγαλῆ, a halter (E. strang), and in Lat. strangere; hence the identity in meaning between Lat. strucus and G. strong. Fick, iii. 827. Der. strong-ly, strong-hold; strong, q. v.; strong-ly, q. v.; strong-om. Related words are stringent, strain, strut, strait, stretch, straggle, strangle, &c.

STROP, a piece of leather, &c. for sharpening razors. (L.) Merely the old form of strap; from Lat. strappus; see Strap.

STROPHE, part of a song, poem, or dance. (Gk.) Formerly used also as a rhetorical term; 'Strophes, wily devoirs, subtilities in arguing, conversions, or turnings;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Gk. στροφή, a turning, twist, truck; esp. the turning of the chorus, dancing to one side of the orchestra; hence, the strain sung during this evolution; the strophé, to which the antistrophe answers. = Gk. στροφή, to turn. Perhaps related to strap. Der. anti-strophe, epi-strophe, cata-strophe, epi-strophe.

STROW, the same as Strew, vb., q. v.

STRUCTURE, a building, construction, arrangement. (F., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. structure, 'a structure;' Cot. = Lat. structura, a building; orig. fem. of fat. part. of struere (pp. structus), to build, orig. to heap together, arrange. From the base STRU, allied to Goth. stronjan, G. struen, to strew, lay; from √ STAR, to spread out. Cf. Lat. stratum, from struere. Fick, i. 824. See Star. Der. (from struere) con-struere, con-struct, de-struere, de-structum, in-struct, in-structum, re-structum, ob-struct, super-structum.

STRUGGLE, to make great bodily efforts. (Scand.) M. E. struglen, Chaucer, C. T. 10248. Palgrave not only gives: 'I struggill with my bodye,' but also: 'I strugill, I marmare with wordes secretly, je grammelle.' The latter, however, is merely a metaphorical sense, i. e. to oppose with words instead of deeds. The M. E. struglen is a weakened form of strablan, which is, practically, the frequentative of stribe, but formed from the Scand. base STRUK instead of the E. base STRIK, as explained under Strika. The sense is 'to keep on striking,' to use violent exertion; cf. Icel. ströðr, a hand-churn, with an upright shaft which is worked up and down, ströðla, to churn, from stryka (pp. strahan), to stroke, also to strike, to beat, flog. So also the M. E. struglen is derived from stroð, base of ströð-ian, the pp. of the above strong verb. We may also note Swed. sträka, to ripple (strip) flax, stryd, sb., a beating, from stryka, to stroke, strike; Swed. dial. ströd, a stroke, blow (Riets); Dan. stryg, a beating, from stryge, to strike, stroke. The weakening of k to g is common in Danish. β. We also find cognate words in Da. strucheln, G. strucheln, to stumble, lit. 'to keep on striking one's feet.' ¶ It is worth while to notice the three frequentative verbs formed from strike, viz. (1) struggle, 'to keep on going about'; (2) struggle, 'to keep on beating or striking'; and (3) the contracted form stroll, with much the same sense as struggle, but in form nearer to struggle. The difference in sense between the first and second is due to the various senses of M. E. striken. See Stroke, Strika. Der. struggle, sb.

STRUM, to thrum on a piano. (Scand.) 'The strum-strum [a musical instrument] is made like a cittern;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1684 [R.]. The word is imitative, and stands for strum; it is made from strum by prefixing the letter a, from its occurrence in several words as representing O. F. su- (= Lat. su-), has acquired a fictitious augmentative force. So also s-plash for plash. See Thrum.

STRUMPET, a prostitute. (F., = L.) M. E. strumpet, P. Plowman, B. xv. 42. The m in this word can only be accounted for on the supposition that it is an E. addition, and that the word is a strengthened form of stropet or stropet. The -et is a F. dimin. suffix; and the derivation is from O. F. stropes, noted by Roquefort as a variant of O. F. stupra, concubinage. = Lat. stuprum, dishonour, violation. Root uncertain. β. The curious position of the r causes no difficulty, as there must have been a Low Lat. form *stropare, used convertibly with Lat. stuprare. This is clear from Ital. stropare, variant of stuprare, Span. stropar, variant of stuprar, to ravish, and from the O. F. stropes quoted above. Perhaps the E. word was formed directly from Low Lat. *stropata = stropata, fem. of the pp. of stropare. The verb stropare is from the sb. stropum. γ. We find also Irish and Gael. striopach, a strumpet; this is rather to be referred to the same Low Lat. *stropata than to be taken as the orig. of the E. word. δ. The prob. root is √ STUP, to push, strike against; cf. Gk. στυπῶν (su-), to maltreat; Fick, i. 826.

STRUT (1), to walk about pompously. (Scand.) M. E. struten, to spread out, swell out. 'His here [hair] struted as a fenne large and brode;' Chaucer, C. T. 3315. 'Struttye, or bocyn out [to boss out, swell out], Turgers;' Prompt. Parv. In Havelok, 1779, to strute is to make a disturbance or to brag = Dan. strutte, strude, to strut, Swed. dial. strutta, to walk with a jolting step (Riets). The Norweg. strut means a spout that sticks out, a nozzle; the Icel. strútr is a sort of hood sticking out like a horn; the Swed. strut is a cone-shaped piece of paper, such as grocers put sugar in. The orig. notion of strut seems to be 'to stick out stiffly.' Note further Low G. strutt, rigid, stiff, G. strussen, a tuft, bunch, strutzen, to be puffed up, to strut. The prov. E. strut, (1) a bird's tail, (2) to strut (Halliwell), is a nasalized form of strut. Der. strut, sb.

STRUT (2), a support for a rafter, &c. (Scand.) = Strut, with carpenters, the brace which is framed into the ring-piece and principal rafters; Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. The orig. sense is a stiff piece of wood; cf. Low G. struff, rigid. It is, accordingly, closely linked with Strut (1).

STRYCHNINE, a violent poison. (Gk.) Modern. Formed with suffix -ine (F. -ine, Lat. -inus) from Gk. strykxos, nightshade.

STUB, the stump of a tree left after it is cut down. (E.) 'Old stockes and stubs of trees;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 34. M. E. stube, Chaucer, C. T. 1980. = A. S. stūb, a stub; 'Styrps, stūb,' Wright's Voc. i. 80, col. 1; also spelt stob, id. 17, col. 1, l. 7. + Du. stobbe. + Icel. stubi, stubb. + Dan. støb. + Swed. stubb.

β. Allied to Gk. strōros, a stub, stump; from the base STUP, to make firm, set fast, extension of STU, by-form of STA, to stand. Also allied to Gael. stob, a stake, a stub, Lithuan. stobas, an upright pillar, mast of a ship, Lat. stipes, Skt. stambha, a post, Skt. stambhā, to make firm, set fast. Fick, i. 821. Der. stūb, verb, to root out stubs; stubb, stubb-ed, stubb-ed-ness; and see stubb-le, stubb-orn, stump, stipul-ate.

STUBBLE, the stubs of cut corn. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. stobil, Wyclif, Job, xiii. 25; Chaucer has stobbe-gene, C. T. 4351. = O. F. estouble, 'stubble,' Cot.; also estuble (Littré, a. v. stuble). = O. H. G. stuppil, G. stoppe, stubble. + Du. stoppel, stubble. + Lat. stipula, dimin. of stipes. See Stub.

STUBBORN, obstinate, persistent. (E.) M. E. stoborn, also stiborn, 'Styburne, or stoburne, Austerns, ferox,' Prompt. Parv.; stiborn, Chaucer, C. T. 6038 (Group D, 456). Cf. stoburness, sb., Prompt. Parv. As the A. S. y is represented in later English both by i and u (as in A. S. eysson = E. hus, A. S. fyr = E. furze) we at once refer stoborn or stiborn to A. S. stūb, a stub, with the sense of stub-like, hence immovable, stiff, steady, &c.

β. The suffix -orn is to be regarded as adjectival, and stands for -or, the -or being merely added afterwards, as in mod. E. bitter-ness from M. E. bittore; -or being the same adj. suffix as in A. S. bit-or, E. bit-or (of course unconnected with M. E. bittore, a word of F. origin). We should thus have, from A. S. stūb, an adj. stūbor = stub-like, stubborn, and the sb. stūbornes, stubbornness; and the form stiborn is doubtless arose from misdividing stūbor-ness as stiborn-(n)es.

γ. This is verified by the forms in Faigraue; he gives the adj. as stoburns and stubburns, but the sb. as stoburness and stubburness, the latter of which could only have arisen from an A. S. form stūbor, with suffix -ness as in war-of, vigilant. ¶ The suffix -ness in north-ness admits of a different explanation. Der. stoborn-ly, ness.

STUCCO, a kind of plaster. (Ital., -O. H. G.) In Pope, Imit. of Horace, ii. 193. = Ital. stucco, 'glatted, gorged, . . . dried, stiffe, or hardened; also, a kind of stasse or matter to build statue or image-work with, made of paper, sand, and lyme, with other mixtures; the imagerie-work at Nonesech in England in the inner core is built of such;' Florio, -O. H. G. stucki, a crust; Graff, vi. 631 (Dies), the same as G. stuck, a piece (hence, a patch). Allied to Stook.

STUD (1), a collection of breeding horses and mares. (E.) M. E. stod, Gower, C. A. iii. 204, l. 19, 280, l. 25; cf. stod-mare, a stud-mare, Ancren Riwle, p. 316, l. 25. = A. S. stōd, a stud; spelt stoad, Wright's Voc. i. 23, l. 10; stōd, Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 574, l. 20. + Icel. stōd + Dan. stod. + G. gestud; O. H. G. stuat, stuat. Cf. Russ. stado, a herd or drove. β. All from Teut. type STŌDI, a stud; the orig. sense is 'an establishment,' as we should call it; from Teut. base STŌ, to stand, from STA, to stand. Cf. Lithuan. stodi, to stand; stodas, a drove of horses. So also E. stall, from the same root. Fick, iii. 347. Der. stud-horn; also stod, q. v.

STUD (2), a nail with a large head, large rivet, double-headed button. (E.) A stud is also a stout post; 'the upright in a lath and plaster wall,' Halliwell. It is closely allied to stob and stump, with the similar sense of stiff projection; hence it is a boss, &c. M. E. stode; Lat. bulla is glossed 'a stode,' also 'nodus in cingulo,' Wright's Voc. i. 175, l. 11. The Lat. membratae (ferro) is glossed by ystodyd = studded, id. 123, l. 1. = A. S. studu, a post, Alfred, tr. of Bede, l. iii. c. 10; written stupa in one MS. + Dan. stød, in the sense of stub, stump. + Swed. stod, a prop, post. + Icel. stob, a post; whence stoda, stupa, to prop. β. The Teut. type is STUDA, a prop; Fick, iii. 341. = STA, by-form of STA, to stand; see Stand. Cf. Skt. stūnd, a post. Der. stūd, verb; stūd-ed, Shak. Venus, 37.

STUDENT, a scholar, learner. (L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 1. 38. = Lat. studens, stem. of pres. part. of studere, to be eager about, to study. β. It is extremely probable that studere stands for spudere, and is cognate with the almost synonymous Gk. ευσπιδειν, to hasten, to be eager about. The senses of Lat. studium and Gk. ευσπιδειν are curiously similar; see Curtius, ii. 360. See Study.

STUDY, application to a subject, careful attention, with the wish to learn. (F., -L.) M. E. studia, Will. of Palerne, 2087, 4038, 4056. = O. F. estudie, later estude, mod. F. étude, study (Littré). = Lat. studium, eagerness, zeal, application, study. Prob. for spudere, and cognate with Gk. ευσπιδειν, eagerness, zeal. It is probable that E. stud is also from the same root, though with a different affix; see Spand. Der. study, verb, M. E. studium, Chaucer, C. T. 184; studi-ed; studi-ous, from F. studiosus, 'studious,' from Lat. studiosus; stud-ous-ly, ness. Also studio, Ital. studio, study, also a school, from Lat. studium.

STUFF, materials, household furniture. (F., -L.) 1. See Lake, xvii. 31 (A. V.) 'The sayd treasure and stuffe;' Fabian's Chron. c. 123, § 2. = O. F. estoffe, 'stuffe, matter;' Cot. Mod. F. estoffe; Ital. stoffe; Span. estufa, quilted stuff. Derived from Lat. stupa, stoppa, the coarse part of flax, hard, oakum, tow (used as material for stufing things or for stopping them up); but, instead of being derived directly, the pronunciation of the Lat. word was Germanised before it passed into French. See Dies. Hence also G. stoff, stuff; but English retains the Lat. s in the verb to stop; see Stop. 2. The sense of the Lat. word is better shewn by the verb to stuff, i. e. to cram. Skelton has the pp. stuffed, Bowge of Court, 180. = O. F. estoffer, 'to stuffe, to make with stuffe, to furnish or store with all necessaries;' Cot. This answers to G. stopfen, to fill, to stuff, to quilt (note the Span. estufa, quilted stuff, above), which is a Germanised pronunciation of Low Lat. stupare, stuppere, to stop up with tow, to cram, to stop; see Stop. 3. We also use E. stuff-y in the sense of 'close, stifling;' this sense is due to O. F. estouffer, 'to stifle, smother, choke, stop the breath,' Cot. Mod. F. estouffer. The etymology of this last word is disputed; Dies derives it from O. F. su- (= Lat. su-) prefix, and Gk. σπῆρα, smoke, mist, cloud, which certainly appears in Span. sufo, warm vapour from the earth. Scheler disputes this view, and supposes O. F. estouffer to be all one with O. F. estoffer; which seems reasonable. In E., we talk of 'stopping the breath' with the notion of suffocating. Littré says that the spelling estouffer is in Dies's favour, because the F. word for stop is étouper, with p, not f; but this is invalidated by his own derivation of F. stoffe from Lat. stupa, as to which no French etymologist has any doubt. In E., we certainly regard all the senses of stuff as belonging to but one word; 'I stuff one up, I stoppe his breathe;' Palgrave.

STULTIFY, to cause to seem foolish. (L.) A mod. word; coined (as if with F. suffix -ify, F. -ifier) from a Lat. form stultifera, to make foolish. = Lat. stulti, for stulto, crude form of stultus, foolish; and -fera, for facere, to make. β. The Lat. stultus is closely allied to stolidus, with the like sense of fixed, immovable, hence, stupid, dull, foolish. See Stolid. Der. stultifera-ism, also a coined word.

STUMBLE, to strike the feet against obstacles, to trip in walking. (Scand.) M. E. stumblen, Wright's Voc. i. 141, l. 20; stumbla, Chaucer, C. T. 2615. The h is excrement, as usual after m, and the better form is stumelen, or stumelen. In the Prompt. Parv. pp. 476, 481, we have stumelyn, stumelystyn, with the sb. stumelars or stumelars, and stumelinge or stumelinge. The form stumelen also occurs, in the same sense, in Reliquie Antiquæ, ii. 211 (Stratmann).

β. The forms stumelen, stumelen (stumelen, stumelen), are frequentatives from a base stum, which is a duller (less clearly sounded) form of the base stum, as seen in Goth. stannus, stammering, and E. stammer. The word is of Scand. origin. = Icel. stumra, to stumble; Norweg. stumra, the same (Aasen); Swed. dial. stambla, stamballa, stambla, stambura, to stumble, to falter, go with uncertain steps (Rietz). γ. Thus the word is, practically, a doublet of stammer, with reference to hesitation of the step instead of the speech; cf. E. faller, which expresses both. The base STAM is significant of coming to a stand-still, and is an extension of STA, to stand. Thus 'to stumble' is to keep on being brought to a stand. See Stammer. ¶ The G. stummeln, to mutilate, is not the same thing, though it is an allied word; it means to reduce to a stump, from G. stummel, a stump, dimin. of a word not now found in G., but represented by Norweg. stamma, a stump, allied to G. stamm, a stock, trunk; we are thus led back to the base of stem and stiff, and to the same STA. Der. stumble, sb., stumb-er, stumb-er-block, 1 Cor. i. 23.

STUMP, the stock of a tree, after it is cut down, a stub. (Scand.) M. E. stump, Prompt. Parv.; stump, Joseph of Arimathea, 681. Not found in A. S. = Icel. stump, Swed. and Dan. stump, a stump, end, bit. + O. Du. stompe, Du. stomp + G. stumpf. Cf. Skt. stambha, a post, pillar, stem; Icel. stúfr, a stump. Closely allied to stob, of which it is a nasalised form. See Stub. Der. stump, verb, to put down one's stumps, in cricket.

STUN, to make a loud din, to amaze with a blow. (E.) M. E. stunien, Romance of Partenay, 2940; stunien, Gawayn and Grene Knight, 301. = A. S. stunian, to make a din, resound, Grein, ii. 490. = A. S. stun (written stun, the prefix st- making no difference), a din, Grein, i. 459. = A. S. stun, stem of pp. of a strong verb of which the only other relic is the pt. t. stun (rugiebam) in the Blickling Glosses. + Icel. stynja, to groan; stynr, a groan. + G. stöhnen, to groan. Further allied to Lithuan. stuneti, Russ. stomat, Gk. εστῆναι, to groan, Skt. stān, to sound, to thunder. = \checkmark STA, STAN, to make a din; see Stantorian. Fick, i. 834. Der. a-stony, a-stounded, q. v.; and see a-ston-ish.

STUNTED, hindered in growth. (E.) 'Like stunted hide-bound trees;' Pope, Misc. Poems, Macer, l. 11. Made from the A. S. adj. stūm, dull, obtuse, stupid; hence, metaphorically, useless, not well grown. The proper form of the verb is stunt, made from stūm by vowel-change; see Stint. Cf. Icel. stuttur (put for stuttur by assimilation), short, stunted; O. Swed. stūm, cut short (Ihre); showing that the peculiar sense is rather Scand. than E.

STUPEFY, to deaden the perception, deprive of sensibility. (F., = L.) Less correctly stupify. Spenser has stufefide, F. Q. v. 3. 17. = F. stupéfier, to stupefy, found in the 16th cent., but omitted by Cotgrave (Litté). This verb is due to the F. pp. stupéfact, formed from Lat. stupéfactus, stupefied; there being no such Lat. word as stupéfier, but only stupéficare, and even the latter is rarely found except in the pp. and in the past form. = Lat. stūpe-, stem of stupere, to be amazed; and facere (pp. factus), to make. See Stupendous and Fact. Der. stupéfact-ion, from F. stupéfaction, from Lat. acc. stupéfactio; also stupéfact-ivus.

STUPENDOUS, amazing. (L.) In Milton, P. L. 2. 351. Englished from Lat. stupendus, amazing, to be wondered at, fut. pass. part. of stupere, to be amazed, to be struck still with amazement. β . Formed from a base STUP, due to \checkmark STAP, to make firm, to fix, extension of \checkmark STA, to stand. Cf. Skt. stūpaya, to set, place, causal of stūh, to stand. γ . Similarly Gk. stūpōō, I was astonished, and Skt. stūmāh, to make immovable, to stupefy, are from \checkmark STABH, to make firm, a similar extension of \checkmark STA, to stand; see Stand. Note also Skt. stūmāh, stūmāh, to stupefy. Fick, i. 821, Curtius, i. 270. Der. stupendous-ly, -ness; also stup-or, sb., Phillips, ed. 1706, from Lat. stupor, sb., amazement; and see stup-id, stupéfact-ion.

STUPID, insensible, senseless, dull. (F., = L.) In Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 409. = F. stupid, 'stupid'; Cot. = Lat. stupidus, senseless. = Lat. stupere, to be amazed; see Stupendous. Der. stupid-ly, stupid-ness; also stupid-i-ty, from F. stupidité, 'stupidity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. stupiditatem.

STURDY, resolute, stout, firm. (F., = L.?) The sense of the word has suffered considerable change; it seems to have been influenced by some notion of relationship with stout, with which it is not connected. The true sense is rash or reckless. M. E. sturdil, inconsiderate, Chaucer, C. T. 8573; sturdy, Rob. of Glouc. p. 157, l. 7; stourdy, p. 186, l. 2, p. 212, l. 20. = O. F. stourdi, 'dulled, amazed, astonished, . . . heedless, inconsiderate, unadvised, . . . rash, reckless, or careless'; Cot. Pp. of astourdir, 'to astonish, amaze'; id. Mod. F. astourdir, Span. asturdir, Ital. asturdire, to stun, amaze, surprise. β . Of doubtful origin; Dies explains it from Lat. torpidus, torpid, dull, whence might easily have been formed a Low Lat. *asturpidire, to numb, and this might have been contracted to *asturdire in accordance with known laws, by the loss of p as in F. totid from Lat. tepidae. The Lat. asturpidire is 'to grow numb,' and *asturpidire would be the causal form. γ . Another suggestion, also in Dies, but afterwards given up by him, is to derive it from Lat. sturdus, a thrush, because the Span. proverb tenor cabeza de tordo = to have a thrush's head, to be easily stupefied. In the latter case, the prefix st- = Lat. st-, can hardly be explained. See Torpid. Der. sturdy-ly, -ness.

STURGEON, a large fish. (F., = Low Lat., = O. H. G.) M. E. sturgeon, Havelok, 753. = O. F. asturgeon, later asturgeon, 'a sturgeon'; Cot. = Low Lat. asturgenus, acc. of asturgen. β . Of Teut. origin; the kt. sense is 'stirrer,' from its habits. 'From the quality of floundering at the bottom it has received its name; which comes from the G. verb stürm, signifying to wallow in the mud;' Buffon, tr. pub. at London, 1792. = O. H. G. sturo, sturyo, M. H. G. stür, G. stür, a sturgeon. = O. H. G. stürm, stürm, to spread, stir, G. stören, to trouble, disturb, rake, rummage, poke about. So also Swed. and Dan. stör, a sturgeon, from Swed. stora, to stir; Icel. stýra. If there be any doubt as to the etymology, it is quite set at rest by the A. S. form of the word, viz. stýras, a sturgeon, also spelt stýrige, Wright's Voc. i. 55, col. 2, 65, col. 2. This word means 'stirrer,' from A. S. stýrian, to stir, agitate; see Stir.

STUTTER, to stammer. (Scand.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. It is the frequentative of stut, which was once commonly used in the same sense. 'Her fellow did stammer and stut'; Elynour Rammyng, l. 330. 'I stutte, I can nat speake my wordes redyly'; Palgrave. M. E. stotum; the F. styl ne bus is glossed 'bote he stude' = unless he stutter; Wright's Voc. i. 173, l. 6. = Icel. stutta, to beat, strike; also, to read stutteringly; Swed. stilla, to strike, push, hit against; Dan. støde, to push, jolt, jog, trip against, stumble on. \dagger G. stossen, to strike. \dagger Goth. stundan, to strike. β . Thus the orig. sense of stut is to strike, strike against, trip; and stutter = to keep on tripping up. The Teut. base is STUT, as shown in Goth. stutan. From \checkmark STUD, to strike; whence also Lat. tundere, to beat (pt. t. tu-tud-i), Skt. tud, to strike, the initial s being lost in Skt. and Lat. See Benley; Fick, i. 826. Der. stutter-or, stutter-ing. From the same root are cut-tum, cut-ture, stures; also stout, q. v., stot.

STY (1), an enclosure for swine. (E.) M. E. stie, stye, Chaucer, C. T. 7411; sti, Ancrén Riwe, p. 128, l. 1. = A. S. stigo, a sty. In a glossary printed in Wright's Voc. i. 286, col. 2, we find: 'incipit de subna,' followed by: 'Vistrina, stige;' where a stye is doubtless meant. Sommer gives the form stige, without a reference. In Thorpe's Diplomatarium, p. 613, we have: 'gif caubt binnan stig sitte' = if a servant sit within the recess; where it appears to mean a place set apart for men of rank, perhaps with a raised step. \dagger Icel. stia, sti, a sty, a kennel; sviast, a swine-sty; stia, to pen. \dagger Dan. sti, a path; also, a sty, pen. \dagger Swed. stis, 'a sty, cabin to keep hogs or geese in; whence gåstia (a goose-pen), svinstis (a swine-sty)'; Widgren; O. Swed. stis, stige (Ihre); Swed. dial. sti, stige, a pen for swine, goats, or sheep (Rietz). Rietz also cites Da. svin-stige. \dagger G. stige, a stair, steps, stile, stair-case; also a hen-roost, chicken-coop; O. H. G. stiga, a pen for small cattle, also a sow's litter (whilst lying in the sty). β . All from Teut. type STIGA, a pen for cattle, Fick, i. 348. Thre notes that the word was used to mean a pen for any kind of domestic animal; and its application to pigs is probably later than its other uses. The reason for the name is not clear, though it must have been from the notion of rows or layers rising above the ground or one another, or from the use of a row of stakes; cf. Gk. στύχων below. Just as Ettmüller derives A. S. stige from stigan, to climb, so Rietz derives Swed. stis from stiga, to climb, and Fick (iii. 248) derives G. stige from G. stigen, to climb. γ . The verb to sty, M. E. stigen, to climb, was once common in E., but is now obsolete; the forms of it are A. S. stigan, Du. stigen, Icel. stiga, Swed. stiga, Dan. stige, G. stigen, Goth. stigen, and it is a strong verb. Further cognate with Gk. στύχων, to climb, to go; whence the sb. στύχος, a row, a file of soldiers, also (in Xenophon) a row of poles with hunting-nets into which the game was driven (i. e. a pen or sty). = \checkmark STIGH, to climb; Fick, i. 826. Der. (from same root) sty (2), stils (1), stirrup, stair, acro-stic, di-stich, vo-stige.

STY (2), a small inflamed tumour on the edge of the eye-lid. (E.) The A. S. name was stigm. This is shown by the entry 'Ordeolus, stigm' in Wright's Voc. i. p. 30, l. 12; where ordeolus = Lat. hordolus, a sty in the eye. This stigm is merely the pres. part. of stigan, to climb, rise, and signifies 'rising,' i. e. swelling up. For the verb stigan, see Sty (1). β . As stigm is properly a pres. part., it was really a short way of saying stigm edge = a rising eye, which phrase must also have been used in full, since we meet with it again in later English in the slightly corrupted form stymy, where the whole phrase is run into one word. This word was readily misunderstood as meaning sty on eye, and, as on eye seemed unnecessary, the simple form sty soon resulted. We meet with 'stymy, or a perle in the eye,' Prompt. Parv.; 'the stymy, sycois,' Levins, ed. 1570 (which is a very late example); also 'Stymy, disease growyng within the eyelidde, sycois,' Huloet (cited in Wheatley's ed. of Levins). γ . Cognate words are Low G. stug, stige, a sty in the eye, from stigen, to rise; Norweg. stig, sti, stige, sty, also called stighjums (where homs = a pustule, from Icel. hann, a sore), from the verb stige, to rise.

STYLE (1), a pointed tool for engraving or writing, mode of writing, manner of expression, way, mode. (F., = L.) M. E. stils, Chaucer, C. T. 10419, where it rhimes with stils in the sense of way over a hedge. = F. stils, style, 'a stile, form or manner of indicting, the pin of a pair of writing-tablets'; Cot. = Lat. stilus, an iron-pointed peg used for writing on wax tablets; also, a manner of writing. The orig. sense is 'that which pricks or punctures'; stilus stands for *stig-lus, just as stimus is for *stig-mulus. = \checkmark STIG, to prick; see Stimulus, Stigma. \dagger The spelling style is false; it ought to be stils. The mistake is due to the common error of writing the Lat. word as stylus. This error was due to some late writers who, imagining that the Gk. στύλος, a pillar, must be the original of Lat. stilus, took upon themselves to use the Gk. στύλος with the sense of the Lat. word. As a fact, the Gk. στύλος, a pillar, post, has a distinctly different sense as well as a different form, and comes from a different root, viz. STŪ, by-form of \checkmark STA, to stand, just as Gk. στύλη, a pillar, comes from the \checkmark STA itself. β . But note, that when the E. style is used, as it sometimes is, in botany or dialling, it then represents the Gk. στύλος; see Style (2). Der. style, verb, styl-ish, -ly, -ness.

STYLE (2), in botany, the middle part of a pistil of a flower. (Gk.) 1. Style, or stylus, among herbalists, that middle branching out part of the flower of a plant, which sticks to the fruit or seed; Phillips, ed. 1706. = Gk. στύλος, a pillar, a long upright body like a pillar; see further under Style (1). Not connected with Lat. stilus, as is often imagined. 2. Another sense may be noted; 'in dialling, style is a line whose shadow on the plane of the dial shows the true hour-line, and it is the upper edge of the gnomon, cock, or needle;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Here style orig. meant the gnomon itself, and answers rather to Gk. στυλιος than to Lat. stilus. Some difficulty has resulted from the needless confusion of these two unrelated words. Der. styl-ar, pertaining to the pis of a dial.

STYPTIC, astringent, that stops bleeding. (F., = L., = Gk.) Spelt styptic in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 13, and in Cotgrave. = F. styptique, 'styptick.' Cot. = Lat. stypticus. = Gk. στυπτικός, astringent. = Gk. στυπέω, to contract, draw together, also, to be astringent; orig. to make hard or firm; allied to στυπός, a stump, stem, block, so called because firmly set. Gk. στυπός is allied to E. Stub, q. v. And see Stop.

SUASION, advice. (F., = L.) In Sir T. More's Works, p. 137, l. 5. = F. suasion, 'persuasion,' Cot. = Lat. suasione, acc. of suasus, persuasion. = Lat. suasus, pp. of suadere, to persuade. = Lat. suadus, persuasive; orig. 'pleasant'; allied to Lat. suavis (put for suad-vis), sweet. See Suave. Der. suas-ive, a comed word; suas-ive-ly, suas-ive-ness; see also dis-suade, per-suade.

SUAVER, pleasant, agreeable. (F., = L.) Not common; the derived word suaivity is in earlier use, in Cotgrave. = F. suaive, 'sweet, pleasant,' Cot. = Lat. suaavis, sweet; put for suad-vis, and allied to E. Sweet, q. v. Der. sua-ivity, from F. suaivité, 'suavity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. suaivitate.

SUB-, a common prefix (L.; or F., = L.) Lat. sub-, prefix (whence F. sub-); Lat. sub, prep., under. The Lat. sup-er, above, is certainly a comparative form from sub (orig. sup), and corresponds, in some measure, to Skt. apari, above. As to the connection of super with apari there can be no doubt, but the prefixed s in Lat. super has not been explained. (Perhaps the s corresponds to Goth. us, out, so that s-sub means 'from under'; or we may suppose (with Beney) that s-sub = as sub, where as is simply the def. article, corresponding to Skt. as, demonstr. pronoun.) Certainly Lat. super is allied to E. over; and Lat. sub to E. up. See further under Over and Up.

β. Sub, it is true, means generally below, under; but, like the Gk. ὑπό (hypo), it is used in the sense of 'from below,' and thus may seem to have two meanings diametrically opposed to each other, below and upward. Submittere means to place below, to lay down, to submit; sublevaris, to lift from below, to raise up. Summus, a superl. of sub, ὑψιστος (hypos), a superl. of ὑπό (hypo), do not mean the lowest, but the highest; Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 310, ed. 1875. And see Hypo-γ. Sub-, prefix, becomes sub- before e following, sub- before f, sub- before g, sub- before m, sub- before p (though sup is rather the orig. form), sub- before r. And see Sub-. Der. sub-ter-, prefix; sub-er-, prefix; sub-er-, prefix; sub-, prefix (French); and see sum, supreme, supra, superius, sup-er-. Doublet, hypo-, prefix.

SUBACID, somewhat acid. (L.) Richardson gives an example from Arbuthnot, Of Aliments, c. 3. = Lat. subacidus, somewhat acid, lit. 'under acid.' See Sub- and Acid.

SUBALTERN, subordinate, inferior to another. (F., = L.) 'Subalterni magistratus and officers of the crown;' Sidney, Arcadia, b. iii. (R.) 'Subalternus, vnder another;' Minshew, ed. 1637. = F. subalterne, adj. 'subalterne, secondary;' Cot. = Lat. subalternus, subordinate. = Lat. sub, under, and alter, another; with adj. suffix -nus (Aryan -no). See Sub- and Alter. Der. subaltern, sb., a subordinate; put for subaltern officer.

SUBAQUEOUS, under water. (L.) In Pennant's Brit. Zoology, on swallows (R.) A coined word; from Lat. sub, under, and aquea, water; see Sub- and Aquatic. The true Lat. word is subaquosus.

SUBDIVIDE, to divide again into smaller parts. (L.) 'Subdividit into verbes;' Fuller's Worthies, Kent (R.) = Lat. subdividit, lit. to divide under. See Sub- and Divide. Der. subdivis-ion.

SUBDUCE, to reduce, conquer, tame, soften. (F., = L.) In Palgrave; and in Sir T. More, Works, p. 962, l. 4. The M.E. form was subdum, and this was afterwards altered to subducere for the greater clearness, by analogy with the numerous words beginning with sub-. We find 'schal be seduced' in Trevisa, iii. 123, l. 7, where two other MSS. have seduced, seduced, but Caxton's (later) edition has subduced. = O. F. subducere, 'to reduce,' Cot.; but the older sense must rather have been to subdue. Roquefort gives the pres. part. subducens (plural), seductive, with a quotation. = Lat. subducere, to draw away, withdraw, remove; hence to carry off, and so to overpower. [Formed like F. reduire from Lat. reducere, redire from ducere.] = Lat. sub, from below, hence away; and ducere, to lead, carry; see Sub- and Duke.

¶ The true Lat. words for the sense of 'subdue' are rather subdere and subducere, but subducere is clearly not derived from either of these. Der. subdu-er, subdu-al, subdu-able.

SUB-EDITOR; from Sub- and Editor.

SUBJACENT, lying beneath. (L.) In Boyle's Works, vol. i. p. 177 (R.) = Lat. subjacent, stem of pres. part. of subiacere, to lie under. = Lat. sub, under; and iacere, to lie. Iacere is due to iacere to cast, throw. See Sub- and Jot (1); and see Subject.

SUBJECT, laid or situate under, under the power of another, liable, disposed, subservient. (F., = L.) The spelling has been brought nearer to Latin, but the word was taken from French. The O. F. word was also, at one time, re-spelt, to bring it nearer to Latin. M. E. subget, adj., Wyclif, Rom. xiii. 1; subget, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 8358. = O. F. subiect, later subiect, 'a subject, vassal;' Cot. Mod. F. subjet. = Lat. subiectus, subject; pp. of subicere, to place under, put under, subject. = Lat. sub, under; and iacere, to cast, throw, put. See Sub- and Jot (1). Der. subject, sb., M. E. subget, as above; subject, verb, spelt subiecte in Palgrave; subject-ion, M. E. subiectioun, Chaucer, C. T. 14384, from O. F. subiection, 'subjection,' Cot., from Lat. acc. subiectionem; subject-ive, from Lat. subiectionis; subject-ive-ly, subject-iveness; subject-ive-ty, a late coinage.

SUBJOIN, to join on at the end, annex, affix. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = O. F. subjoindre, 'to subjoin;' Cot. = Lat. subiungere, to subjoin. See Sub- and Join. And see subjoin-er.

SUBJUGATE, to bring under the yoke. (L.) In Palgrave. = Lat. subjugatus, pp. of subjugare, to bring under the yoke. = Lat. sub, under; and iugum, a yoke, cognate with E. yoke; see Sub- and Yoke. Der. subjugat-or, from Lat. subjugator; subjugat-ion, from F. subjugation, 'a subduing,' Cot., from Lat. acc. subjugationem, not used.

SUBJUNCTIVE, denoting that mood of a verb which expresses contingency. (L.) Spelt subiunctus, Minshew, ed. 1637. = Lat. subiunctus, subjunctive, lit. joining on at the end, from its use in dependent clauses. = Lat. subiunct-us, pp. of subiungere, to subjoin; see Subjoin.

SUBLEASE, an under-lease. (F., = L.; with L. prefix.) From Sub- and Lease.

SUBLET, to let, as a tenant, to another. (Hybrid; L. and E.) From Sub- and Let (1).

SUBLIME, lofty, majestic. (F., = L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 8. 30. [As a term of alchemy, the verb sublimis is much older; Chaucer has subliming, C. T. 16238; also sublimatorie, id. 16261; these are rather taken directly from Lat. sublimare and sublimatorium than through the F., as it was usual to write on alchemy in Latin.] = F. sublime, 'sublime,' Cot. = Lat. sublimis, lofty, raised on high.

β. A difficult word; prob. it means passing under the lintel or cross-piece of a door, hence reaching up to the lintel, tall, high; if so, the part -limis is connected with limus, transverse, limas, a boundary, limen, a threshold. See Sub- and Limit. Der. sublime-ly; sublim-i-ty, from F. sublimité, 'sublimity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. sublimitatem. Also sublimis, verb, in alchemy = Lat. sublimare, lit. to elevate; sublim-ate, verb and sb., sublim-ation, sublim-ation-er.

SUBLUNAR, under the moon, earthly. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 777. Coined from Sub- and Lunar. Der. sublunary, Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel (1642), sect. vi. parag. 7.

SUBMARINE, under or in the sea. (Hybrid; L. and F., = L.) Rich. gives a quotation from Boyle's Works, vol. iii. p. 342. It occurs in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, where it is said to have been used by Bacon. Coined from Sub- and Marine.

SUBMERGE, to plunge under water, overflow, overflow with water. (F., = L.) In Shak. Antony, ii. 3. 94. = F. submerger, 'to submerge;' Cot. = Lat. submergere (pp. submersus); see Sub- and Merge. Der. submerg-ance; submerg-ion, from L. submersio, 'a submergion,' Cot., from Lat. acc. submersione; also submerge, from the pp. submersus; submers-er.

SUBMIT, to refer to the judgment of another, yield, surrender. (L.) 'I submit myselfe. Je me submit;' Palgrave. 'Ye been submitted;' Chaucer, C. T. 4455. It may have been taken from F. in the first instance, but, if so, was early conformed to the Lat. spelling = Lat. submittere, to let down, submit, bow to. = Lat. sub, under, down; and mittere, to send (pp. missus); see Sub- and Miselle. Der. submit-tion, from O. F. submit-tion, 'submissioun,' Cot., from Lat. acc. submit-tionem; submit-ive, -ly, -ness; submit, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 51, from Lat. pp. submit-tus.

SUBORDINATE, lower in order or rank. (L.) 'Inferior and subordinate sorts;' Cowley, Essay 6, Of Greatness (R.) 'His next subordinate;' Milton, P. L. v. 671. Coined as if from Lat. subordinatus, not used, but formed (with pp. suffix) from sub ordinatus, under the order or rank. Ordinatus is the acc. of ordo, order, rank. See Sub- and Order. Der. subordinate, as sb., subordinate-ly; subordinat-ion, Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel (1642), sect. vi. parag. 8; whence in-subordinate-ness.

SUBORN, to procure privately, instigate secretly, to cause to commit perjury. (F., = L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 34. Sir T. More has subornacion, Works, p. 311 h. = F. subornar, 'to suborn,' Cot. = Lat. subornare, to furnish or supply in an underhand way or secretly. = Lat. sub, under, secretly; and ornare, to furnish, adorn. See Sub- and Ornament. Der. subornor; subornation, from F. subornation, 'a subornation,' Cot.

SUBPENA, a writ commanding a person to attend in court under a penalty. (L.) Explained in Minshew, ed. 1627; and much older. — Lat. sub pena, under a penalty. — Lat. sub, under; and pena, abl. of pena, a pain or penalty. See Sub- and Pain. Der. sub-pena, verb.

SUBSCRIBE, to write underneath, to sign one's name to. (L.) 'And subscribed their names vndre them;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 38. — Lat. subscribere, to write under, sign one's name to. — Lat. sub, under; and scribere, to write. See Sub- and Scribe. Der. subscrib-er; subscript, from the pp. subscriptus; subscript-ion, from O. F. subscriptio, 'a subscription or subscribing,' Cot., from Lat. acc. subscriptio.

SUBSECTION, an under-section, subdivision of a subject. (Hybrid; L. and F., — L.) From Sub- and Section.

SUBSEQUENT, following after. (L.) In Trud. l. p. 334, and Milton, Samson, 325. — Lat. subsequent-, stem of pres. part. of subsequi, to follow close after. — Lat. sub, under, close after; and sequi, to follow. See Sub- and Sequel. Der. subsequent-ly.

SUBSERVE, to serve subordinately. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 57. Engliſhed from Lat. subseruere, to serve under a person. — Lat. sub, under; and seruire; see Sub- and Serve. Der. subserui-ent, from Lat. subseruiens, stem of pres. part. of subseruire; subseruiant-ly, subseruiens.

SUBSIDE, to settle down. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has subside, subsid-ens. — Lat. subsidiere, to settle down. — Lat. sub, under; and sidere, to settle, allied to sedere, to sit, which latter is cognate with E. sit. See Sub- and Sit. Der. subsid-ens, from Lat. subsidiens, a settling down. And see subsidy.

SUBSIDY, assistance, and in money. (F., — L.) In Shak. s Hen. VI, iv. 7. 25, iv. 8. 45. M. E. subside, The Crowned King, l. 36, pr. in App. to P. Plowman, C-text, p. 525; the date of the poem is about A. D. 1415. I have little doubt that it is derived from an old Norman-French subsidie, though the usual F. form is subside, as in Cotgrave and Palgrave. — Lat. subsidius, a body of troops in reserve, aid, assistance. The lit. sense is 'that which sits behind or in reserve;' from Lat. sub, under, behind, and sidere, to sit, cognate with E. sit; see Sub- and Sit; and see Subside. Cf. Lat. praesidium, ob-sidius, from the same verb. Der. subsid-ary, from Lat. subsidiarius, belonging to a reserve; subsid-ize, a coined verb.

SUBSIST, to live, continue. (F., — L.) In Shak. Cor. v. 6. 73. — F. subsister, 'to subsist, abide;' Cot. — Lat. subsistere, to stand still, stay, abide. — Lat. sub, under, but here used with very slight force; and sistere, orig. to set, make to stand, but also used in the sense to stand. Sistere is the causal of stare, to stand; prob. a reduplicated form, put for sti-stare?; and stare is from STA, to stand; see Sub- and Stand. Der. subsist-ens, from F. subsister, 'subsistence, continuance,' Cot., from Lat. subsistentia; subsist-ent, from the stem of the pres. part. of subsistere.

SUBSTANCE, essential part, matter, body. (F., — L.) M. E. substancia, substancia, Chaucer, C. T. 14809. — F. substancia, 'substance;' Cot. — Lat. substantia, essence, material, substance. — Lat. substanti-, crude form of pres. part. of substare, to be present, exist, lit. to stand beneath. — Lat. sub, beneath; and stare, to stand, from STA, to stand. See Sub- and Stand. Der. substanti-al, M. E. substantial, Gower, C. A. iii. 92, l. 10, from F. substantial, from Lat. adj. substantialis; substanti-ally; substanti-ate, a coined word. Also substant-ive, M. E. substantif, P. Plowman, C. iv. 345, from F. substantif (Littre), from Lat. substantivus, self-existent, that which denotes existence, used of the 'substantive' verb esse, and afterwards extended, as a grammatical term, to nouns substantive as distinct from nouns adjective.

SUBSTITUTE, one person put in place of another. (F., — L.) Orig. used as a pp. 'This pope may be deposed, and another substitute in his room;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1417 f. Hence used as a verb. 'They did also substitute other;' id. p. 821 d. — F. substitut, 'a substitute;' Cot. — Lat. substitutus, one substituted; pp. of substituere, to lay under, put in stead of. — Lat. sub, under, in place of; and stituere, to place, pp. statutus; see Sub- and Statute. Der. substitut, verb, as above; substitut-ion, Gower, C. A. iii. 178, l. 29, F. substitution (Cot.), from Lat. acc. substitutionem.

SUBSTRATUM, an under stratum. (L.) Lat. substratum, neut. of substratus, pp. of substrare, to spread under. See Sub- and Stratum.

SUBTEND, to extend under or be opposite to. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives subtended and subtensus as mathematical terms; subtensus is in Blount, ed. 1674. — Lat. subtendere (pp. subtensus), to stretch beneath. — Lat. sub, under; and tendere, to stretch; see Sub- and Tend. Der. subtensus, from pp. subtensus. And see Apoptosis.

SUBTER-, under, secretly. (L.) Formed from Lat. sub, under, by help of the suffix -ter, which is properly a comparative suffix, as in in-ter; see Inter-, Other.

SUBTERFUGE, an evasion, artifice to escape censure. (F., — L.) In Bacon, Life of Henry VII, ed. Lowy, p. 182, l. 18. — F. subterfuge, 'a subterfuge, a shift;' Cot. — Low Lat. subterfugium, a subterfuge (Ducange). — Lat. subterfugus, to escape secretly. — Lat. subter, secretly; and fugere, to flee; see Subter- and Fugitive.

SUTERRANEAN, SUBTERRANEOUS, underground. (L.) Both forms are in Phillips, ed. 1706. Blount, ed. 1674, has subterrany and subterraneous. Both are formed from Lat. subterraneus, underground; the former by adding -ny (= Lat. -nus) after e, the latter by changing -us to -eus. — Lat. sub, under; and terra, the earth; with suffix -us or -eus. See Sub- and Terra.

SUTILE, fine, rare, insinuating, sly, artful. (F., — L.) Pronounced [sur-il]. The word was formerly spelt without h, but this was sometimes inserted to bring it nearer to the Lat. form. We also meet with the spellings subtil, subtile. M. E. sofil, sofil, Chaucer, C. T. 1056; subtil, id. 2051; the Six-text edition has the spellings sofil, sofyl, subtil, subtile, sofil, sofil, Group A, 1054, 2049. — O. F. sofil, sofil (Burguy), later subtil, 'subtil,' Cot. — Lat. subtilis, fine, thin, slender, precise, accurate, subtle. β. It is gen. thought that the orig. sense of subtilis is 'finely woven,' from sub, beneath (= closely?), and tex, a web. Tex stands for texa, from texere, to weave. See Sub- and Text. Der. subtil-ly (sometimes subtile-ly), subtile-ness (sometimes subtile-ous); also subtile-ty or subtil-ty, M. E. sofilite, sofilite, P. Plowman, B. xv. 76, from O. F. sofilite (Littre), also subtilite, from Lat. acc. subtilitatem. ¶ Note that the pronunciation without h agrees with the orig. M. E. form.

SUBTRACT, to take away a part from the whole. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. subtrahere, pp. of subtrahere, to draw away underneath, to subtract. — Lat. sub, under; and trahere (pp. trahens), to draw. See Sub- and Trae. Der. subtract-ion (as if from F. subtraction, not used), from Lat. acc. subtractionem; subtrah-er; also subtrahend, in Minshew, a number to be subtracted, from Lat. subtrahendus, fut. pass. part. of subtrahere.

SUBURB, SUBURBS, the confines of a city. (L.) Commonly used in the pl. form. 'The suburbs of the towne;' Fabyan's Chron. c. 219. — Lat. suburbium, the suburb of a town. — Lat. sub, under (here near); and urbs, crude form of urbs, a town, city; see Sub- and Urban. Der. suburb-um, from Lat. suburbium.

SUBVERT, to overthrow, ruin, corrupt. (F., — L.; or L.) M. E. subverten, Wyclif, Titus, ii. 11. — F. subvertre, 'to subvert,' — Lat. subvertens (pp. subvertens), to turn upside down, overthrow, lit. to turn from beneath. — Lat. sub, from under; and vertens, to turn. See Sub- and Verbe. Der. subvert-ion, F. subversion, 'a subversion,' Cot., from Lat. acc. subversionem; subvert-ive.

SUCCEED, to follow next in order, take the place of, to prosper. (F., — L.) Better spelt succede. M. E. succeden, Chaucer, C. T. 8508. — F. succeder, 'to succeed;' Cot. — Lat. succedere (pp. succedens), to go beneath or under, follow after. — Lat. sub (for sub before e), under; and cedere, to go; see Sub- and Cede. Der. succes, an issue or result, whether good or bad (now chiefly only of a good result), as in 'good or ill success,' Ascham, Schoolmaster, pt. i, ed. Arber, p. 35, from O. F. succes, 'success,' Cot., from Lat. succesum, acc. of succedere, result, event; succes-ful-ly, succes-ful-ly. Also succes-er, M. E. succeser, Rob. of Glouc. p. 507, l. 9, F. succeser, from Lat. acc. succesorem, one who succeeds; succes-ion, F. succesio, 'succession,' Cot., from Lat. acc. succesio; succes-ion-al; succes-ive, F. succesif, 'successive,' from Lat. succesivus; succes-ive-ly. Also succes-er-er, explained by Phillips, ed. 1706, as 'succeeding, or coming in the room of another,' from Lat. succedens, that which supplies the place of another; succes-er-er-er, sb., neut. of succedens.

SUCCINCT, concise. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. succinctus, prepared short, small, contracted; pp. of succingere, to gird below, tuck up, gird up, furnish. — Lat. suc- (for sub before e), under, below; and cingere, to gird; see Sub- and Cincture. Der. succinct-ly, succinct-ness.

SUCCORY, chicory. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'Of cybory or saucory,' Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Heith, b. ii. c. 8. Minshew gives saucory, cybory, and chicory. Saucory is a corruption of cybory, now usually called chicory; see Chicory.

SUCCOUR, to assist, relieve. (F., — L.) M. E. succorum, Will. of Palerne, 1186. — O. F. succorre, succorre (Burguy), later succorre, as in Cotgrave; the change to s is no improvement. — Lat. succurrere, succurrere, to run under, run up to, run to the aid of, aid, succour. — Lat. sub, under, up to; and currere, to run; see Sub- and Current. Der. succor-er. Also succour, sb. M. E. succors, Ancren Riwle, p. 244, l. 9, from O. F. succors, later succors, as in Cotgrave, from Lat. succorsus, succorsus, pp. of succurrere.

SUCCULENT, juicy. (F., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. succulentus, 'succulent'; Cot. = Lat. succulentus, succulentus, full of juice; formed with suffix -lentus from succu-, succu-, juice (the gen. is succi, but there is a collateral form with -stem, found in the gen. pl. succorum). β . Sucus is prob. cognate with Gk. bros, juice, sap; perhaps with E. sap; see Optum and Sap. The root of Lat. sucus is SUK, appearing in supe (pp. supe-tus), to suck, which is cognate with E. Suck, q. v.

SUCCUMB, to yield. (L.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. l. c. 3. l. 459. = Lat. succumbere, to lie or fall under, yield. = Lat. sub- (for sub before c), under; and cumbere, to lie, a nasalized form allied to cubere, to lie. See Sub- and Incumbus, Incumbent.

SUCH, of a like kind. (E.) M. E. sucle, swile, swick, swich, swich, swich (with numerous other forms, for which see Stratmann). We find swile, swile in Layamon, 31585, 1375; swick, Reliquiae Antiquae, l. 131; swich, swich, Chaucer, C. T. 3 (see Six-text). It will thus be seen that the orig. i was lost, and the final e weakened to sch. The forms swile, swile are from A. S. swile, swile, swile, such, Græm, ii. 513. ϕ O. Sax. swile. ϕ O. Fries. swile, swilich, swich, swich, swich. ϕ O. S. swilich. ϕ Icel. swilich. ϕ Dan. swilich. ϕ Swed. swilich (Ihre). ϕ G. swilich. ϕ O. H. G. swilich. ϕ Goth. swilich. β . The Goth. swilich is simply compounded of swil, swil, and swilich, like; and all the Teut. forms admit of a similar explanation. Thus swich is for swilich, of which it is a corruption. See So and Like; and cf. Which.

SUCK, to draw in with the mouth, imbibe, esp. milk. (E.) M. E. sucken, Chaucer, C. T. 8326; once a strong verb, with pt. t. suck or se, Ancren Riwle, p. 330, l. 6, pp. i-suck (for i-suck), Trevisa, iii. 267, l. 13. = A. S. sucan, strong verb, pt. t. suck, pp. sucan; Græm, ii. 492, Matt. xii. 16, Luke, xl. 27. There is also a form sigan, and there is a double form of the Teut. base, viz. SUK and SUG. Of the former, we find examples in A. S. sucan, E. suck, cognate with Lat. sugere. Of the latter, we have examples in A. S. sugan, Icel. suga, suga (pt. t. sug, pp. sugan), Dan. suga, Swed. suga, G. sugan, O. H. G. sigan; which is the prevailing type. We find also W. sugno, to suck, sug, juice; Irish sugham, I suck in, sug, juice; Gael. sug, to suck, sug, juice; cf. Lat. sucus, sucus, juice. β . The root has a double form, SUK and SUG, Fick, i. 801; and this is best accounted for by supposing them to be both extensions from the ϕ SU, to generate, also to express somatic juice, as seen in Skt. su (with these senses) and in the Skt. sb. su-ma, juice, nectar. This root appears in E. Son, q. v. The words succulent, opium, asp, are all related. Der. suck, verb, suck-er, sb.; suck-le, Cot. i. 3. 44, a frequentative form, with the usual suffix -ing; M. E. sucking or sobling, spelt sobling in Prompt. Parv., formed with dimin. suffix -ing from the form sobel = one who sucks, where the -el is the suffix of the agent (so that it is not a parallel form to suckling, which is merely a double dimin. from suck). Also honey-suckle, q. v.; mother-suck, q. v.

SUCTION, the act or power of sucking. (F., = L.) In Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 191. = F. suction, 'a sucking'; Cot. Formed, as if from L. suctio, from suctus, pp. of sugere, to suck; see Suck.

SUDATORY, a sweating bath. (L.) In Bloat's Gloss., ed. 1674. Rare. Rich. gives an example from Holyday, Juvenal, p. 224. = Lat. sudatorium, a sweating-bath; neut. of sudatorius, serving for sweating. = Lat. sudatori, crude form of sudator, a sweater. = Lat. sudare, to sweat, allied to E. Sweat, q. v.; with suffix -tor of the agent. See sudorific.

SUDDEN, unexpected, abrupt, hasty. (F., = L.) M. E. sudden, suden, Chaucer, C. T. 4841; sudenliche, suddenly, King Alisaunder, 3568. = O. F. sudain, sudain, mod. F. sudain, sudden. Cf. Prov. sopamens, suddenly (Bartsch); Ital. subitano (also subitano). = Low Lat. subitaneus, for Lat. subitaneus, sudden; extended from subitus, sudden, lit. 'that which has come stealthily,' orig. pp. of sudare, to go or come stealthily = Lat. sud, under, stealthily; and ire, to go, from ϕ I, to go. See Sub- and Itinerant. Der. sudden-ly, -ness.

SUDORIFIC, causing sweat. (F., = L.) 'Sudorific herbs'; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 706. = F. sudorifique, causing sweat, Cot. = Lat. sudorificus, the same. = Lat. sudori, crude form of sudor, sweat; and ficus, making, from facere, to make. See Sweat and Fact. Der. sudorific, sb.; and see sudatory.

SUDS, boiling water mixed with soap. (E.) 'Sprinkled With suds and dish-water'; Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit without Money, A. iii. ac. 1. Suds means 'things sodden'; and is formed as a pl. from sud, derived from the base of solden, pp. of seethe, q. v. Hence Gascoigne uses suddes metaphorically, in the sense of 'worthless things'; see Gascoigne's Works, ed. Hazlitt, ii. 310, l. 9. In the sud = in the middle of a wash, is a proverbial expression for being in a sulky temper; cf. prov. E. sudded, flooded. Cf. O. Du. sode, a seething, boiling, Hexham; Icel. sod, water in which meat has been sodden; and see Sod.

SUE, to prosecute at law. (F., = L.) The orig. sense is merely to follow; it was technically used as a law-term. Spelt sue in Palgrave. M. E. sue, Wyclif, Matt. viii. 19, 21; also sueu, sueu, P. Plowman, B. xi. 21; sueu, Ancren Riwle, p. 308, l. 9. = O. F. sueu, sueu, sueu (with several other forms, Burguy), mod. F. sueu, to follow. Cf. Prov. sueu, sueu (Bartsch), Ital. sueu, to follow. = Low Lat. sueu, to follow, substituted for Lat. sueu, to follow; see the changes traced in Brachet. See Sequens. Der. sueu, q. v. par-sueu; mat, mat, q. v.

SUET, the fat of an animal about the kidneys. (F., = L.) M. E. suet. 'Suet [where w=sw], suet (due syllable), of seiche or fysche or ojer lyke, Liquamen, suetan;' Prompt. Parv. Formed with dimin. suffix -et from O. F. sue, sue (also suef, as in mod. F.), suet, fat; see Littré. Cf. Span. sue; Ital. sue, 'tallow, fat, sueu,' Florio. = Lat. suetum, also suetum, tallow, suet, grease. Prob. allied to Lat. sapo, soap; see Soap.

SUFFER, to undergo, endure, permit. (F., = L.) M. E. suffren, suffren, in early use; Chaucer, C. T. 11089; Layamon, 24854 (later text). = O. F. suffrir, suffrir, mod. F. suffrir. = Lat. sufferre, to undergo, endure. = Lat. suf- (for sub before f), under; and ferre, to bear, cognate with E. bear. See Sub- and Bear (1). Der. suffer-er, suffer-ing; suffer-able; also suffer-ance or suffer-ance, M. E. suffrance, Chaucer, C. T. 11100, O. F. suffrance, later suffrance, 'sufferance,' Cot. from Low Lat. suffrentis (Ducange).

SUFFICE, to be enough. (F., = L.) M. E. suffice, Chaucer, C. T. 9908. = F. suffire, occurring in suffire-ant, stem of pres. part. of suffire, to suffice; cf. M. E. suffiance, sufficiency, Chaucer, C. T. 492, from F. suffiance, sufficiency. = Lat. sufficere, lit. to make or put under, hence to substitute, provide, supply, suffice. = Lat. suf- (for sub before f), and facere, to make; see Sub- and Fact. Der. suffice-ant, Merch. Ven. l. 3. 17, from Lat. sufficiens, stem of pres. part. of sufficere; sufficere-ly; sufficiens-y, Meas. for Meas. l. 1. 8.

SUFFLE, a letter or syllable added to a word. (L.) Modern; used in philology. = Lat. sufflans, pp. of sufflare, to fasten on beneath. = Lat. suf- (for sub before f), and flare, to fix; see Sub- and Fix. Der. suffla, verb.

SUFFOCATE, to smother. (L.) Orig. used as a pp. 'May he be suffocatus,' Hen. VI, l. 1. 124. = Lat. suffocatus, pp. of suffocare, to choke. Lit. 'to put something under the gullet, to throttle.' = Lat. suf- (for sub before p), and focare, stem of fovere, a pl., the gullet, throat. [The same change from su to s occurs in fovea, a neck-cloth.] Perhaps allied to Skt. śāśā, a hole, the head of a fountain. Der. suffocatus, from F. suffocation, 'suffocation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. suffocationem.

SUFFRAGE, a vote, united prayer. (F., = L.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 2. 143. = F. suffrage, 'a suffrage, voice'; Cot. = Lat. suffragium, a vote, voice, suffrage. Suffragium has been ingeniously explained as 'a broken piece' such as a pot-herd, &c., whereby the ancients recorded their votes (Venice). If this be right, suf- is the usual prefix (= sub), and -fragium is connected with frangere, to break, cognate with E. Break. Cf. Lat. navis-fragium, a ship-wreck. Der. suffrag-er, M. E. suffragan, Trevisa, ii. 115, l. 9, from F. suffragant, 'a suffragant, or suffragan, a bishop's deputy,' Cot., from Lat. suffragant, stem of pres. part. of suffragari, to vote for, support, assist; but suffragan may also represent the Low Lat. suffraganus, a suffragan bishop.

SUFFUSE, to overspread or cover, as with a fluid. (L.) 'Her suffused eyes;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 10. = Lat. suffusus, pp. of suffundere, to pour beneath, diffuse beneath or upon. = Lat. suf- (for sub before f), and fundere, to pour; see Sub- and Fuse. Der. suffusio, from F. suffusion, 'a suffusion, or pouring upon,' Cot., from Lat. acc. suffusionem.

SUGAR, a sweet substance, esp. that obtained from a kind of cane. (F., = Spaa., = Arab., = Pers., = Skt.) M. E. sugre, Chaucer, C. T. 10928; in P. Plowman, B. v. 122, two MSS. read sugre, of which sugre is a weakened form. = F. sugre, 'sugar'; Cot. = Span. azucar, sugar. = Arab. sakhar, sakhar, sugar; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 357, Freytag's Arab. Dict. ii. 334; whence, by prefixing the article al, the form asakhar, accounting for the prefixed s in the Span. form. = Pers. asakar, sugar; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 385. = Skt. śakara, gravel, a soil abounding in stony fragments, clayed or candied sugar; Benfey, p. 936. Prob. allied to Skt. śakara, hard; cf. Lat. calcem, a pebble. See Calx. β . From the Pers. asakar are derived Gk. σάκχαρ, σάκχαρ, and Lat. saccharum. It is quite a mistake to derive F. sugre (as Brachet does) from Lat. saccharum directly. See Saccharinus. Der. sugar, verb, sugary, sugar-ous.

SUGGEST, to introduce indirectly, hint. (L.) In Shak. Rich. II, l. 1. 101, iii. 4. 75. = Lat. suggere, pp. of suggere, to carry or lay under, furnish, supply, suggest. = Lat. sug- (for sub before g); and gerere, to carry; see Sub- and Jest. Der. suggest-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 14727, from F. suggestion, 'a suggestion,' from Lat. acc. suggestionem; suggest-ive, a coined word; suggest-ive-ly.

The word was really coined in England, but on a F. model. See note at the end of the article. In Blackstone's Commentaries, b. iv. c. 14 (R.); in the latter sense. Rich. gives a quotation for it, in the former sense, from a tr. of Montesquieu, The Spirit of Laws, b. xiv. c. 12; the first E. translation appeared in 1749, immediately after its appearance in France. Littré says that suicide is in Richelet's Dict. in 1759, and is said to have been first used in French by Desfontaines not much earlier (1738). As remarked under Homicide, the same form has two senses, and two sources. 1. F. suicide, a coined word, from Lat. sui, of oneself, gen. case of se, self; and -cidium, a slaying (as in homicidium), from caedere, to slay. 2. F. suicide, coined from Lat. sui, of oneself, and -cida, a slayer (as in homicida), from caedere, to slay.

β. The Lat. sui, se is connected with Skt. sa, Gk. sa, and with E. she; from the pronominal base SA, he. The Lat. caedere is from SKID, to cut; see Sohism. Der. suicid-ol, -ly. ¶ Trench, in his English Past and Present, observes that Phillips notices the word, as a monstrous formation, in 1671, long before its appearance in French; and it is given by Blount, ed. 1674. It seems to have been suggested by the queer words suave, a selfish man, and suavium, selfishness, which had been coined at an earlier date, and were used by Whitlock in an essay entitled The Grand Schismatic, or Suis Anatomized, in his Zootomia, 1654. The word is clumsy enough, and by no means creditable to us, but we may rightly claim it. Littré's objection, that the form of the word is plainly French, is of no force. We had the words homo-cida, patri-cida, matricida, fratricida, already in use; and suicida was coined by analogy with them, which accounts for the whole matter simply enough. It may be added that, though the translator of Montesquieu uses the word, the original has only l'homicide de soi-même.

SUIT, an action at law, a petition, a set, as of clothes. (F., -L.) M. E. suits, Chaucer, C. T. 1375, 3242. - F. suits (also suits in Cotgrave), 'a chase, pursuit, suit against, also the train, attendants, or followers of a great person; Cot. = Lat. suetus, a following, a sect (whence the sense of suit or train); in Low Lat. extended to mean a suit at law, a series, order, set, a suit of clothes, &c.; see Ducange. From the base of sequi, to follow, as noted under Book, q. v. Der. suit, verb, to clothe, As You Like It, l. 3. 118, also to fit, adapt, agree, accord, id. ii. 7. 81, Macb. ii. 1. 60; 'to suit is to agree together, as things made on a common plan,' Wedgwood. Also suit-or, L. L. ii. 34; suit-able, Timon, iii. 6. 92, suit-able-ly, suit-able-ness. Doublet, suits, q. v.

SUITE, a train of followers. (F., -L.) 'With fifty in their suite to his defence;' Sidney (in Todd's Johnson; no reference). - F. suite; see further under Suit.

SULCATED, furrowed, grooved. (L.) 'Sulcatus, to cast up in furrows, to till;' Blount, ed. 1674. Chiefly scientific. - Lat. sulcatus, pp. of sulcare, to furrow. - Lat. sulcus, a furrow.

SULKY, obstinate, silently sullen. (E.) The word is rare in old books, and the Dictionaries omit it, till we come to Todd's Johnson, where 'the sulkiness of my disposition' is quoted from a Letter of Gray to Dr. Clarke, A.D. 1760. It is an incorrect form, and should rather be sulken; it arose from misdividing the sb. sulken-ness as sulken-ness, by analogy with happy-ness from happy, &c. The sb. appears as sulkiness, i. e. sloth, O. Eng. Hom. l. 63. l. 25; and is not uncommon in A. S., which also has the true old form of the adj. - A. S. sulcan, orig. slothful, remiss; in the comp. ædæscan, slothful, remiss, lary, Ælfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, vol. i. p. 306, l. 11, p. 340, last line; also ii. 220, l. 23, where it means 'diligent.' The sb. ædæscan is quite a common word; see Ælf. Hom. l. 602, l. 8, li. 46, l. 11, li. 218, l. 22, li. 220, l. 21; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 240, l. 12; the sense comes very near to that of mod. E. sulkiness. 'Accidiosus, vel tediosus, ædæcan;' Wright's Vocab. l. 60. Another trace of A. S. sulcan occurs in the comp. ædæscan, used as a pp., with the sense of 'stopefed;' Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 35, ed. Sweet, p. 238, l. 3.

β. We further know that sulcan was the pp. of a strong verb sulcan (pt. t. sulc, pp. sulcan), appearing in the comp. ædæscan (pt. t. ædæc, pp. ædæscan), for which Leo refers to Ælf. Hom. li. 592, the reference, unluckily, being wrong. We find the verb again, spell ædæscan, in Cedmon, ed. Grein, 2167; see Grein, l. 41. γ. There is even a cognate O. High G. word, viz. the verb swilhan, Graff, vi. 216, where the prefix sw- = A. S. sw-. Thus the Teut. base is SALK, answering to an Aryan base SARG. δ. It is remarkable that the Skt. arij means 'to let loose, abandon,' and the pp. arishan is 'abandoned,' which comes very near the sense of A. S. sulcan. Der. sulk-ness, really pat for sulken-ness, as explained above. ¶ Etymuller, p. 753, gives a form ædæscan, but the MS. has ædæless, Liber Scient. § 16, fol. 16 b; also ædæscanyss, id. § 24, fol. 45 b.

SULLEN, gloomily angry, morose. (F., -L.) M. E. sullen, sullen, orig. merely 'solitary,' then 'hating company,' or morose, as explained in the Prompt. Parv. 'Solus of maners, or he that loveth no company, Solitaris;' Pr. Parv. A mess of meat for one person was also called solus, as explained on the same page. By him-self as a solus, i. e. a lonely person; P. Plowman, li. xii. 205. In the Rom. of the Rose, 3897, solus means 'sullen,' but in Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 982, and Parl. of Foules, 607, it means 'solitary' or 'lonely.' - O. F. solain, lonely, solitary, of which the only trace I find is in Roquefort, where solain is explained as 'a portion served out to a religious person,' a pittance, doubtless a portion for one. E. Muller and Maha cite Prov. solus, solitary. These Romance forms presuppose a Low Lat. solanus, solitary, but it does not occur; however, it is a mere extension from Lat. solus, sole, alone; see Sole. Cf. O. F. solain, solitary (Berguy), which answers, similarly, to a Low Lat. solitanus. Der. sullen-ly, -ness.

SULLY, to tarnish, spot, make dirty. (E.) M. E. sulley; whence sulley = sulleth, Owl and Nightingale, 1240; pp. sulled = sullied, P. Plowman, Creed, 752, Ancren Riwle, p. 396, l. 1. = A. S. sylhan, to sully, defile with dirt or mud. 'So sanga hi wile sylhan on hure seld after þam he hio æðwepen bið' = the sow will wallow [lit. sully herself] in her mire after she is washed; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, c. liv. p. 419, l. 27. The lit. sense is to blemish, to cover with mud; a causal verb, formed (by regular vowel-change of o to y) from A. S. sul, mire, mud, for which see the quotation above. Cf. A. S. byrn, a hornet, from born, a horn. + Swed. seia, to blemish; Dan. sole, to blemish, from sul, mire. + Goth. swuljan, to sully, render impure. + G. sullen, to sully, sch horm sullen, to wallow; from sulb, slough, mire, M. H. G. sul, selt, mire. β. It thus appears that the verb is a denominative from a Teut. sb. sul, signifying 'mire.' This resembles Lat. solum, the ground, but the connection is by no means certain, since solum seems rather to mean 'basis' or 'foundation' than mud. The A. S. sul is quite as likely to be related to Skt. avru, a pond, lake, and Lat. sul, salt; see Salt. ¶ It is now the case that the verbs to sully and to sul are almost convertible; but it is quite certain they are entirely unconnected. The final y in sully is worth noting, as representing the causal ending seen in Goth. swuljan, A. S. syl- + an.

SULPHUR, brimstone. (L. - Skt ?) M. E. sulphur, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ul. 418. Introduced, as a term in alchemy, directly from Lat. sulphur, also spell sulfur. β. Perhaps the Lat. word was borrowed from Skt. gulndri, sulphur; the spelling with g (from orig. h) shows that they cannot be cognate words. Der. sulphur-ous, from Lat. sulphureus or sulfureus, adj.; sulphur-ous, from F. sulphureux, 'sulphurous,' Cot. from Lat. adj. sulphureus or sulfureus; also the coined words sulphur-ic, sulphur-ate, sulphur-ate-d, and sulph-ate (used for sulphur-ate).

SULTAN, an Eastern ruler, head of the Ottoman empire. (F. - Arab.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 1. 26. - F. sultan, 'a sultan or souldan,' Cot. = Arab. sultān, victorious, also a ruler, prince; cf. sultān, dominion; Rich. Dict. pp. 343, 344. β. The word occurs early in the M. E. form souldan, Chaucer, C. T. 4597; this is from O. F. souldan, souldan, both in Cotgrave, which are corruptions of the same Arab. word. It makes no difference to the etymology. Der. sultan-ess, with F. suffix; sultan-a, from Ital. sultana, fem. of sultano, a sultan, from Arab. sultān.

SULTRY, SWELTRY, very hot and oppressive. (E.) Sultry and sweltry, both in Phillips, ed. 1706, are the same word; the latter being the fuller and older form. Shak. has sultry, Hamlet, v. 1. 101; also sweltry = caused to exude by heat, Macb. iv. 1. 2. The w has passed into s, a lesser change than in sw from A. S. swa, and in mod. E. swear, where the w is entirely lost. The -y (= A. S. -ig) is an adjectival suffix, and sweltry-y is short for sweltry-ig, formed from the verb to swel. 'Sweltryng or sweltryng, or swonyng, Sincopa,' Prompt. Parv.; where the sense is 'a swooning with heat.' 'Sweltryng, for hets, or febrilness, or other cawys, or swowyny, Exalto, sincopiro,' id. p. 481. β. Again, sweltry is a frequent form (with the usual suffix -er) from M. E. swelten, to die, also to swoon away or faint. 'Swoun or swelte' = swoon or faint, P. Plowman, R. v. 154. - A. S. sweltan, to die, Grein, ii. 305. + Icel. swelta, to die, starve (pt. t. swelt, pl. swelta, pp. sweltan). + Dan. swelt. + Swed. swalta. + Goth. swiltan, to die. β. All from Teut. base SWALT, to die; Fick, iii. 263. This Fick considers as an extension of the base SWAL, to swell; which is supported by the singular fact that the M. H. G. swellen, O. H. G. swellan, not only means to swell up, but also to swell with disease, and to pine away or starve, which is the usual sense of Icel. swelta. See Swallow. γ. At the same time, there seems to have been some confusion with the Teut. base SWAL, to glow, be hot, from which the E. word has undoubtedly received its present sense; this appears in A. S. swelian, to burn, M. E. swelian, swelien, prov. E. swual, to waste away under the action of fire, A. S. swel, heat, with numerous cognates, of which the most notable are G. swellen, to burn slowly, swel, sultry, with the extended forms O. H. G. swelzen, heat, swelzen, to burn slowly. All these are from of SWAR, to glow, whence also E. swart, swarm, swar; see Solar, R 1

Swart. ¶ The Dan. swite is worth notice; still the E. swtry is not Scandinavian, but formed in the same way as the Dan. word; acite also Icel. pt. pl. swita, pp. switna. Der. switri-mens.

SUM, the amount, whole of a thing, substance, total, summary, fulness. (F., = L.) M. E. summa, Chaucer, C. T. 11337. = Norman-F. summa, a sum, Vic de St. Aubas, ed. Atkinson; F. somme, 'a summe of money,' Cot. = Lat. summa, suma, chief part, amount; orig. fem. of summus, highest, chief, principal. Summus stands for sup-mus = uppermost, superl. form from *sup, old form of sub (cf. super); the sense of 'under' and 'over' are curiously mixed; see Sub-. Allied words are Gk. hymnos, highest, with a different suffix, and E. upmost, which agrees all but the ending -out; see Upmost. Der. sum, verb, M. E. summen, Trevisa, iii. 161, l. 15, F. summer, from Lat. summare; summa-ria, from F. summation, 'the summing of money,' Cot., due to Lat. summat-ria, pp. of summari; summa-ry, sb., answering to F. summaire, 'a summary,' Cot., from Lat. summarium, a summary, epitome, which presupposes an adj. *summarius; summary, adj., answering to F. summaire, adj., 'summary,' Cot.; summa-ri-ly, summa-ri-ness; summa-ry, a coined word. Also summa-ry, q. v. And see supreme, oversight, supra.

SUMACH, a tree. (F., = Span., = Arab.) 'Sumach or Sumack, a kind of rank-smelling shrub that bears a black berry made use of by curriers to dress their leather;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt sumach, sumache, sumaper in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, with a similar definition. = F. sumac, formerly spelt sumack, Littré. = Span. sumaque. = Arab. sumuq, a species of shrub; Rich. Dict. p. 847. Another Arab. name is sumuq (id.); this will account for another F. form summat, noticed by Littré.

SUMMER (1), the warmest season of the year. (E.) M. E. summer, summer (with one m), Chaucer, C. T. 396. = A. S. sumor, sumor, Matt. xxiv. 33. + Du. summer. + Icel. sumar. + Dan. summer. + Sved. summer. + G. summer; O. H. G. sumar. β. From a form SUM-RA or SOM-KA (Fick, iii. 327), which is prob. connected with O. Welsh hem, W. haf, summer (the initial h standing, as usual, for s), Skt. amad, a year, Zend hama, summer; words cited by Fick, as above. So also Rhys (Welsh Philology) connects W. haf with the Skt. and Zend words. Der. summer, verb, to pass the summer, Isaiah, xviii. 6; summer-house, Amos, iii. 15.

SUMMER (2), a beam. (F., = Low Lat., = Gk.) See Sumpter.

SUMMERSET, the name as Bombersault, q. v.

SUMMIT, highest point, top. (F., = L.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 4. 70, iii. 3. 18; K. Lear, iv. 6. 57. = F. sommet, 'the top,' Cot. Damm., with suffix -it, of O. F. sum, the top, esp. of a hill; see Burguy, Littré. = Lat. summum, highest point, neut. of summus, highest; see Sum.

SUMMON, to cite to appear, call with authority. (F., = L.) The examples in the Glossary to Layamon, a v. summon, show that two distinct words were early confused, viz. A. S. summan, summan, to collect together (a derivative verb from summa, together, from sum, together) and O. F. summoner, sumoner, mod. F. sumondre. But since summan, sb., and summoner are both F. words, and the word to summon properly belongs to the law-courts, we need only here consider the F. form. We find let summony = caused to attend, in Rob. of Glouc. p. 377, l. 13; and the word sumpter in Chaucer, C. T. 6943, clearly refers to the mod. E. sense of summon, though its form would suit the A. S. summan equally well. = O. F. summoner, in which form it is very rare, being early corrupted to sumoner or sumondre. Cotgrave gives F. sumondre, 'to bid, invite, summon, warn, cite.' Littré gives an 11th-cent. example of the form sumoner; and Roquefort gives an excellent example in which the O. F. sumoner is used with the orig. sense of 'to admonish,' the word summonit being used to translate Lat. admoneret; Dial. de Saint Grégoire, liv. s. chap. 3. Cf. Prov. sumone, to summon, a common word (Bartsch). = Lat. summonere, to remind privily. = Lat. sum- (for sub before m); and sonora, to advise; see Sub- and Monition. Der. summoner, M. E. sumponer, Chaucer, C. T. 623 (represented by mod. E. sumner as a proper name), also summoner, P. Plowman, B. iii. 133 (footnote), from the old form (*summoner) of F. summoner, 'a summoner, citer, apparitor,' Cot. Also summon, M. E. summona, Allit. Morte Arthure, 91, from the old form (*summoner) of F. summoner, 'a warning, citation, summons,' Cot.; Littré explains that the F. summoner, formerly summoner (*summoner), is the fem. of summon (*summoner), the pp. of sumondre (*sumondre), to summon. Cf. Prov. summona, a summons, cited by Littré; we also find Prov. sumos, sumonta, sumontis used in the same sense. ¶ Thus the s at the end of summoner is not due to the Lat. summonere, as some have supposed.

SUMPTER, a horse for carrying burdens, a pack-horse. (F. = Low Lat., = Gk.) Two forms of the word were once in use, viz. M. E. sumor, King Alisaunder, 850, and sumpter, id. 6033. The former, once the commoner form, is now lost; but it is necessary to explain it first. 1. From O. F. sumor, summier, sumor (Burguy), a pack horse; formed, with suffix -er of the agent, from O. F. summa, summa, summa, summa, a pack, burden. [Cotgrave gives O. F. summier, 'a sumpter-horse, also the piece of timber called a summer.]= Low Lat. summa, corrupt form of summa, a pack, burden; whence summarius, summarius, a pack-horse (= F. summier). = Gk. σάμπος, a pack-saddle. = Gk. σάμπος (= σάμπος, fut. σάμπος), to pack, put a burden on a horse, fasten on a load, orig. to fasten. Allied to Skt. śady, śady, to adhere, pp. śadya, attached. = ś SAK, to fasten, SAG, to hang down from; Fick, i. 791.

2. The etymology of sumpter is similar; it orig. meant, not the horse, but the horse's driver; and such is the sense in King Alisaunder, 6033, where the sumpters are reckoned among the squires and guides belonging to an army. Hence, also, the mod. E. sumpter-horse, i. e. a baggage-carrier's horse, the addition of horse being necessary to the sense, whereas the M. E. sumor was used alone, in the same sense. Sumpter is, accordingly, from O. F. summier, a packhorse-driver (Roquefort). This answers to a Low Lat. segestatorum, not found, but formed from the Gk. σάμπος, the true stem of σάμπος, just as agrarium is formed from the nom. άγρος itself. 3. The E. word summer, noticed by Cotgrave (above) as meaning 'a beam,' is worth notice. It occurs in Barbour's Bruce, xvii. 696, and is given in Halliwell; being so called from its bearing a great burden or weight. Hence also the E. breast-summer (gen. pronounced breastomer), defined in Webster as 'a summer or beam placed breast-wise to support a superincumbent wall.' ¶ Note that sumpter in K. Lear, ii. 4. 319, probably does not mean 'a pack-horse,' but rather a packhorse-driver.

SUMPTUARY, relating to expenses. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate E. sumptuous. It is rather Englished from Lat. sumptuarius, belonging to expenses, than borrowed from French. Formed, with suffix -arius, from sumptus, crude form of sumptus, expense, cost; see Sumptuous.

SUMPTUOUS, expensive, costly. (F., = L.) 'Sumptuous expenses of the means people;' Sir T. Elyot, Castell of Helth, d. li. c. 28. = F. sumptueux, 'sumptuous,' Cot. = Lat. sumptuosus, costly. = Lat. sumptus, crude form of sumptus, expense, cost. = Lat. sumptus, pp. of sumere, to take, spend, consume. β. Sumere is short for sumere, comp. of sub, under, secretly, and sumere, to buy, orig. to take. See Sub- and Example. Der. sumptuosus-ly, -ness.

SUN, the celestial body which is the source of light and heat. (E.) M. E. sunne, two syllables, Chaucer, C. T. 7. = A. S. sunna, a fem. sb., Esod. xvi. 21, xvi. 18 (common). + Du. sun, fem. sb. + Icel. sunna, fem., only in poetry, the common word being sol. + G. sunna, fem., O. H. G. sunna, + Goth. sunna, masc., sunna, fem. β. The Teut. type is SUNNAN, Fick, iii. 324. Here -na is a suffix as in Test. STER-NAN, a star; and the base SUN is an extension from su, to beget, whence also the Lat. sol, the sun, Icel. sol, Skt. śurya, the sun, &c. See Solar. The sun was considered as the life-giver, the emblem of procreation, &c. See also Son, from the same root. The Skt. śivas means both 'son' and 'sun.' Der. sun, verb; sun-ness, A. S. sunnes; sun-born; sun-rye, spelt sunne rye in Palgrave, where sunne (= A. S. sunna) is the gen. case; sun-est, spelt sunne este in Palgrave, to which the same explanation applies. Also sun-day, A. S. sunnes dag, lit. 'day of the sun,' where sunne is the gen. case. Other compounds are sun-fish, flower, -shins, -strake, sun-y, sun-lass, sun-word; and see sun.

SUNDER, to part, divide. (E.) M. E. sunder, Ancrun Riwe, p. 370, last line. = A. S. sunderian, genendrian, Grein, i. 459; also sunderian, in comp. sunderian, Matt. x. 35; lit. 'to put sunder.' = A. S. sunder, adv., sunder, Grein, ii. 495. + Icel. suundra, to sunder; from suendr, adv., suunder. + Dan. suundra, to sunder; from suinder, adv. + Sved. suundra; from suinder, adv. + G. suunder; from suunder, adj., separate. And cf. Goth. suundra, adv., separately; Du. suunder, conj. but. β. All from the Teut. type SUNDRA, adv., separately, which is clearly a comparative form, with suffix -ra, from a positive form SUND. The origin is unknown; Fick's proposal to compare it with Lat. sum, without, is unsatisfactory; nor can we clearly connect it with the verb to suend, which would appear to be the nearest Teut. form. Der. su-sunder, q. v.; sunder-y, adj., separate, hence several, divers, M. E. sunderly, sunderly, Chaucer, C. T. 4601, from A. S. sunderig, Lake, iv. 40, put for sunderig, and formed with suffix -ig (mod. E. -y) from suender, adv., as above.

SUP, to imbibe, as a liquid, gradually; also, to eat a supper. (E.) Once a strong verb; weakened by confusion with F. supper; see Supper. M. E. suppen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 96, vi. 130. = A. S. suppan (strong verb, pt. t. suppa, pl. suppan, pp. suppan), Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past Care, c. 28, ed. Sweet, p. 447, l. 1. + Du. suppen; Low G. suppen. + Icel. suppa (pt. t. suppa, pp. suppan). + Sved. suppa. + O. H. G. suppan. β. All from Teut. base SUP, to drink in, sup up (Fick, iii. 326); obviously a parallel form to Teut. SUK, SUG, to suck; see Suck. The ultimate root is ś SU, to express juice, &c. Der. sup, sb., sup, sup, sup (with which cf. O. H. G. sup, a sigh); also sup, q. v., sup-er, q. v. SUPER, supra, above. (L.) Lat. super, above, prep.; orig. a comparative form of sup, orig. form of sub; see Sub. Orig. a locative case of superus, adj. upper; whence Superior. + Gk. hups, above; orig. a locative case of hupsos, upper, comparative from trés (E. hyper); see Hyper, Hypo. + Skt. spari, above; locative of Vedic spars, compar. of spa, near, close to, under. See Up, Of. Der. super-ior, superius, in-super-able; super-b, super-a-d. Doublet, hyper, prefix. Add see super, prefix.

SUPERABOUND, to be more than enough. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave; and Howell, Famil. Letters. b. iv. let. 39, § 3. = F. super-abonder, 'to superabound,' Cot. = Lat. superabundare, to be very abundant. = Lat. super and abundare; see Super- and Abound. Der. superabundantia, from F. superabundance, 'superabundance,' Cot., Lat. superabundantia; also superabundant, adj., from the stem of the Lat. pres. part.; superabundant-ly.

SUPERADD, to add over and above. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; and earlier, see Richardson. = Lat. superaddere; see Super- and Add. Der. superaddit-ion (not in Cotgrave).

SUPERANNUATE, to be disabled by length of years. (L.) Bacon has superannate = to live beyond the year, used of annual plants; Nat. Hist. § 448. This is cited by Richardson, who misspells it. Howell has 'superannuated virgins;' Famil. Letters, vol. i. let. 13; A. D. 1619. Blount, ed. 1674, has both superannate and superannate. An ill-coined word, prob. suggested by annu-al, annu-ity; Bacon's superannate is countenanced by Low Lat. superannatus, that has lived beyond a year; hence F. surannier, 'to pass or exceed the compass of a year; also, to wax very old;' Cot. Thus superannate is put for superannate; coined from super, above, and annus, a year. See Super- and Annual. Der. superannat-ion.

SUPERCARGO, an officer in a merchant-ship. (Lat.; and Span., = C.) 'Supercargo, a person employed by the owners of a ship to go a voyage, to oversee the cargo, &c.;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Partially translated from Span. sobrecargo, a supercargo, by substituting Lat. super for Span. sobra, which is the Span. form of the same word. See Super- and Cargo.

SUPEREROGATION, doing more than duty requires. (L.) 'Works of supererogation;' Articles of Religion, Art. 14 (1562). From Low Lat. supererogatio, that which is done beyond what is due. = Lat. supererogatus, pp. of supererogare, to pay out beyond what is expected. = Lat. super, above, beyond; a, out; and rogare, to ask. The Lat. erogare = to lay out, expend money (lit. to ask out, require). See Super-, E, and Rogation.

SUPEREXCELLENT, very excellent. (L.; and F., = L.) Used by Spenser in a postscript to a letter to G. Harvey (R.) = Lat. super, above; and O. F. excellens; see Super- and Excellent.

SUPERFICIES, the surface of a thing. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Cotgrave, to translate F. superficie and surface. = Lat. superficius, upper face, surface. = Lat. super, above; and facies, a face; see Super- and Face. Der. superfici-al, from F. superficiel, 'superfici-al,' Cot., from Lat. superficialis; superfici-al-ly, -ness; also superfici-al-ity, spell superficiality in Palgrave, from O. F. superficielid, recorded by Palgrave. Doublet, surface.

SUPERFINE, extremely fine. (L.; and F., = L.) 'Many inventions are so superfine;' Gascoigne, Works, ed. Hazlitt, l. 50; also in Steel Glas, &c., ed. Arber, p. 31. Coined from super and finis; see Super- and Fine (1).

SUPERFLUOUS, excessive. (L.) 'Superfluous eating of banquetting meats;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 18. (Palgrave gives superflus as an E. word, from F. superflu, superfluous.) Englished from Lat. superfluum, overflowing. = Lat. super, over; and fluere, to flow; see Super- and Fluent. Der. superfluous-ly; superflu-ity, M. E. superfluous, Gower, C. A. li. 301, l. 27, from F. superfluité, 'superfluity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. superfluitatem.

SUPERHUMAN, more than human. (L.; and F., = L.) Spelt superhumane in Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Super- and Human.

SUPERIMPOSE, SUPERINCUMBENT, SUPERINDUCE; see Super- and Impose, Incumbent, Induce.

SUPERINTENDENT, an overseer. (F., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. superintendant, 'a superintendent,' Cot. = Lat. superintendens, stem of pres. part. of superintendere, to superintend. = Lat. super, over, above; and intendere, to attend to, apply the mind. See Super- and Intend. [The verb superintend is directly from the Latin.] Der. superintendence, from F. superintendance, 'a superintendency,' Cot.

SUPERIOR, higher in rank, &c. (F., = L.) Now spelt so as to resemble Latin; spelt superieur in Palgrave. = F. superieur, 'superior,' Cot. = Lat. superiorum, acc. of superior, higher, comp. of superus, high, which is itself an old comp. form from sub (sup). Hence super-ior is a double comparative; see Super- and Sub-. Der. superior-ity, from F. superiorité, 'superiority,' Cot., from Low Lat. acc. superioritatem.

SUPERLATIVE, superior, extreme, supreme. (F., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. superlatif, 'superlative,' Cot. = Lat. superlativus, superlative, as a gram. term. = Lat. superlat-us, excessive; with suffix -ivus; lit. 'carried beyond,' exaggerated. = Lat. super, beyond; and latius, carried, or borne. Latius = stitius?; see Super- and Tolerate. Der. superlativ-ly.

SUPERNAL, placed above, heavenly. (F., = L.) 'Supernal judge;' K. John, ii. 112. = F. supernal, 'supernal,' Cot. As if from Low Lat. supernalis, not in use; formed by suffix -alis from supern-us, upper, extended by help of suffix -us from super, above; see Super-.

SUPERNATURAL, miraculous. (F., = L.) In Mach. i. 3. 30; and in Palgrave. = F. supernaturel, 'supernatural,' Cot. See Super- and Natural. Der. supernatural-ly.

SUPERSCRIPTION, something written above or without. (F., = L.) M. E. superscriptions, Henryoun, Complaint of Cresceide, last stanza but one. = F. superscription, 'a superscription,' Cot. = Low Lat. superscriptionem, acc. of superscribere, a writing above, Luke, xxiii. 38 (Vulg.) = Lat. superscriptus, pp. of superscribere, to write above. = Lat. super, above; and scribere, to write; see Super- and Scribe. ¶ The verb superscribe is coined directly from Lat. superscribere.

SUPERSEDE, to displace by something else, to come in place of something else. (F., = L.) The word has much changed its meaning, both in Lat. and E. Supersede in old authors means to desist, forbear, stay proceedings, &c. Thus Rich quotes from the State Trials, 19 Hen. VIII, an. 1528: 'He [Hen. VIII] desired the bishop of Paris to certify Francia, that if the Pope would supersede from executing his sentence, until he had indifferent [impartial] judges sent who might hear the business, he would also supersede from the executing of what he had deliberated to do in withdrawing his obedience from the Roman see.' 'Supersede, to suspend, demurr, put off or stop an affair or proceeding, to countermand;' Phillips. Thus, the sense was to stay a proceeding, whence, by an easy transition, to substitute some other proceeding for it. A writ of supersedeas is, in some cases, a writ to stay proceedings, and is mentioned in P. Plowman, C. iii. 187, on which see my note. = O. F. superseder, superseder (mod. F. superséder), 'to surcease, leave off, give over;' Cot. = Lat. supersedere, pp. supersedens, lit. to sit upon, also to preside over, to forbear, refrain, desist from. = Lat. super, above; and sedere, cognate with E. sit. See Super- and Sit. Der. supersession, from O. F. supersession, 'a surceasing, giving over,' the suspension of an account upon the accountant's humble suit; Cot. = Lat. supersessionem, acc. of supersedere, not used, but regularly formed from supersedere, pp. of supersedere. Doublet, surcease, q. v.

SUPERSTITION, excessiveness in religious worship or belief. (F., = L.) Skelton has superstitions, a pl., Philip Sparowe, l. 1350; the adj. superstitious occurs in Acts, xvii. 23, in the Bible of 1551 and in the A. V.; also, spelt superstitious, in Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. iii, How the bishop Amphiorax, &c. = F. superstition, 'superstition;' Cot. = Lat. superstitioem, acc. of superstitio, a standing still over or near a thing, amazement, wonder, dread, religious scruple. = Lat. superstiti, crude form of superstes, one who stands near, a witness. = Lat. super, near, above; and stare, supine of stare, causal of stare, to stand, which is cognate with E. stand. See Super- and Stand. Der. superstitious-ous, as above, from F. superstitiosus, 'superstitious,' Cot., from Lat. adj. superstitiosus; superstiti-ous-ly.

SUPERSTRUCTURE, the upper part of a building. (L.) 'In some places, as in Amsterdam, the foundation costs more than the superstructure;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. sect. 2. let. 15, May 1, 1633. From Super- and Structure.

SUPERVENI, to occur or happen in consequence of, to occur, happen. (L.) 'Supervening follies;' Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 4 (R.) = Lat. supervenire, to come upon or over, to come upon, to follow; pp. supervenire. = Lat. super, over, upon, near; and venire, to come, cognate with E. come. See Super- and Venture or Come. Der. supervenition, regularly formed from the pp. supervenire.

SUPERVISE, to inspect, oversee. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 2. 135. = Lat. super, above; and visere, to survey, formed from vis-um, supine of videre, to see. See Super- and Visit or Vision. Der. supervisor, sb., Hamlet, v. 2. 23; supervisor, Oth. iii. 3. 395 (First Quarto); supervisor, ibid. (Folio editions); supervisor.

SUPINE, lying on one's back, lazy. (L.) Sir T. Browne has supinity, Vulg. Errors, b. l. c. 5. § 3. 'Supine felicity;' Dryden, Astraea, 107. = Lat. supinus, backward, lying on one's back; extended, with suffix -inus, from sup-, orig. form of sub, under, below; hence, downward. Cf. super, from the same source. So also Gk. supine, bent backwards, backward, lying on one's back, from trés, under. See Sub-. Der. supine, sb., as a grammatical term, Lat. supinum, of which the applied sense is not very obvious; supinely, supine-ness; also supine-ty, as above, prob. obsolete.

SUPPER, a meal at the close of a day. (F., = O. Low G.) M. E. sooper, sooper; spelt sooper, Havelok, 1763. = O. F. sooper, sooper, later sooper, 'a supper;' Cot. It is the infin. mood used as a substantive, exactly as in the case of dinner. = O. F. sooper, sooper, later sooper, to sup, to eat a meal sopped in gravy, &c. Cf. O. F. sopa, sopa, later soupa, 'a sop, a piece of bread in broth, also potage or broth, wherein there is store of sops or sippets,' Cot. = Low G. sooper, to sup or sip up; Icel. siþa, Swed. sopa, to sup; cognate with E. Sup, q. v.

SUPLANT, to take the place of, displace, undermine. (F., = L.) M. E. supplantan, Gower, C. A. l. 539, l. 11. = F. supplander, 'to supplant, root or trip up;' Cot. = Lat. supplantare, to put something under the sole of the foot, to trip up the heel, overthrow. = Lat. sup- (sub); and planta, the sole of the foot, also a plant. See Sub- and Plant. Der. supplant-er, spelt supplantor in Gower, C. A. l. 264, l. 6.

SUPPLE, pliant, lithe, fawning. (F., = L.) M. E. couple, Chaucer, C. T. 203; Rob. of Glouc. p. 223, l. 15. = F. supple, spelt couple in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'supple, limber, tender, pliant.' = Lat. supplicem, acc. of supplex, in the old orig. sense of 'bending under,' hence submissive, which is the usual sense in Latin. The O. F. supple also kept the orig. sense, though the classical Lat. supplicare only means to beseech; hence Cotgrave has 'couplid, bent or bowed underneath, subject unto.' β. The formation of couple from supplex is precisely like that of E. double from duplex, trouble from triplex, simple from simplicem, &c. γ. The Lat. supplex is from sup- (sub) and the base plac-, as seen in plac-ere, to fold, which is from PLAK, to plait, fold. See Sub- and Ply; also Supplicate. Der. supplicious.

SUPPLEMENT, that which supplies, an addition. (F., = L.) In Skelton, Carl. of Laurell, 415. = F. supplément, 'a supplement;' Cot. = Lat. supplementum, a supplement, filling up. = Lat. supple-re, to fill up; with suffix -mentum. = Lat. sup- (sub), up; and plere, to fill; see Supply. Der. supplement-er, supplement-er-y.

SUPLIANT, entreating earnestly. (F., = L.) In Rich. II, v. 2. 75. = F. suppliant, 'suppliant;' Cot.; pres. pt. of supplicare, 'humbly to pray;' id. = Lat. supplicare, to supplicate; see Supplicate. Doublet, suppliant.

SUPPLICATE, to entreat. (L.) In Blount, ed. 1674; it seems to be quite a late word, though supplication, spelt supplication, is in Gower, C. A. iii. 348, l. 12, and suppliant in Shak. Complaint, 276. = Lat. supplicat-ur, pp. of supplicare, to supplicate. = Lat. supplic-, stem of supplex, bending under or down, hence beseeching, suppliant; see Supple. Der. supplic-ant, from the stem of the pres. pt. of supplicare; supplic-er-y; supplic-ation (as above), from F. supplication, 'a supplication,' Cot., from Lat. acc. supplicationem. Also suppliant, q. v.

SUPPLY, to fill up a deficiency. (F., = L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. l. 3. 38. Levins (1570) spells it suppluy, and Huloet has supploys. = F. supplier, 'to supply;' Cot. = Lat. supplere, to fill up. = Lat. sup- (sub), up; and plere, to fill; see Sub- and Plenary. Der. supply, sb., Hamlet, ii. 2. 24; and see supple-ment.

SUPPORT, to endure, sustain. (F., = L.) M. E. supporten, Wyclif, 2 Cor. xi. 1. = F. supporter, 'to support;' Cot. = Lat. supportare, to carry, bring, or convey to a place; in Low Lat., to endure, sustain. = Lat. sup- (sub), near; and portare, to carry; see Sub- and Port (1). Der. support, sb., M. E. support, Gower, C. A. iii. 193, l. 11, from F. support, 'a support,' Cot.; support-er, support-able, support-er-y.

SUPPOSE, to assume as true, imagine. (F., = L., and Gk.) M. E. supposen, Chaucer, C. T. 6368. = F. supposer, 'to suppose, to put, lay, or set under, to suborn, forge; also to suppose, imagine;' Cot. = F. sup-, prefix = Lat. sup- (sub), prefix, under; and F. poser, to place, put. Thus the orig. sense is 'to lay under, put under,' hence to substitute, forge, counterfeit; all of which are senses of Lat. supponere.

β. The F. poser is not from Lat. ponere, but from Gk., though it (with all its compounds) took up the sense of Lat. ponere. See further under POSE; and note Cotgrave's use of the verb to supposen, now obsolete. Der. suppos-er, suppos-able; but not supposition, q. v.

SUPPOSITION, an assumption, thing supposed. (F., = L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 18. = F. supposition, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th cent. (Littre). = Lat. suppositionem, acc. of suppositio, properly 'a substitution,' but extended in meaning according to the extension of meaning of the verb supponere (pp. suppositus) from which it is derived. = Lat. sup- (sub), under, near; and ponere, to place; see Sub- and Position. Der. supposit-er-y, spurious, substituted, from Lat. suppositivus, formed with suffix -ivus from supposit-, stem of pp. of supponere, of which one sense was 'to substitute.' Also supposit-er-y, as in 'suppositories are used where the patient is weak,' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 5, from Lat. suppositivus, that which is placed underneath.

SUPPRESS, to crush, keep in, retain, conceal. (L.) The instance of suppressed, cited by Rich. from Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. ii, The Answer of Ethiocles, is not to the point; it is clearly an error for surprised. For the verb suppress, see Palgrave. = Lat. suppressus, pp. of supprimere, to press under, suppress. = Lat. sup- (sub), under; and primere, to press; see Sub- and Press. Der. suppressor, Lat. suppressor; suppression, printed suppression in Sir T. More, p. 250 f, from F. suppression, 'suppression,' Cot., from Lat. acc. suppressionem. Also suppressive, a coined word.

SUPPURATE, to gather pus or matter underneath. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = Lat. suppuratum, pp. of suppurare, to gather pus underneath. = Lat. sup- (sub), beneath; and pur-, stem of pus, matter; see Sub- and Pus. Der. suppurat-ion, from F. suppuration, 'a suppuration,' Cot., from Lat. acc. suppurationem; suppurat-ive, adj., from F. suppuratif, 'suppurative,' Cot., a coined word.

SUPREME, greatest, most excellent. (F., = L.) Accented suprême, Cor. iii. 1. 110; usually suprême, K. John, iii. 1. 155. = F. suprême, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th cent. (Littre); now written suprême. = Lat. suprēmus, supreme, highest. Put for *supra-imus, formed with superl. suffix -imus (Aryan -yo-mans) from supra, short for supera (*supera), a form cognate with Skt. supara, E. upper, a comparative form from *supa = Skt. spa, represented in Lat. by sub-, under, though the orig. sense is up. Thus supremus answers to an Aryan type *i-supa-ra-yo-mans, with both compar. and superl. affixes. See Sub- and Up. Der. supreme-ly; also supremacy, K. John, iii. 1. 156, from supremacie (Littre, not in Cotgrave), a word arbitrarily formed on the model of primacy (Low Lat. primacia) from primus.

SUB-(1), prefix. (L.) Put for sub- before r following; see Sub-. Only in sub-raptious and sub-rogate.

SUB-(2), prefix. (F., = L.) F. sur-, prep., contr. from Lat. super, upon, above. Ex. sur-charge, sur-charge, sur-fuse, &c.

SURCEASE, to cease, to cause to cease. (F., = L.) It is obvious, from the usual spelling, that this word is popularly supposed to be allied to cease, with which it has no etymological connection. It is a monstrous corruption of sursum or sursum, and is etymologically allied to supercede. It was very likely misunderstood from the first, yet Fabyan spells the word with s for c, correctly. 'By whiche reason the kyngdome of Mercia surceased, that had contynued from their firste kyng;' Fabyan, Chron. c. 171, § 5. β. But the verb is really due to the sb. sursum, a delay, cessation, which was in use as a law-term, and prob. of some antiquity in this use, though I do not know where to find an early example. It occurs in Shak. Mach. i. 7. 4, and (according to Richardson) in Bacon, Of Church Govern-ments; Nares cites an example from Danett's tr. of Comines (published in 1506 and 1600).—F. suris, masc., suris, fem. 'surcharged, intermitted'; Cot. The word was also used as a sb. (prob. in Law F.); Littré explains it by 'delay,' and says it was a law-term; he also quotes 'pendant ce suris' = during this delay, from Ségur, Hist. de Nap. x. s. Suris is the pp. of surisier, 'to surcharge, pause, intermit, leave off, give over, delay or stay for a time.' Cot.—Lat. supercedere, to preside over, also to forbear, refrain, desist from, omit; see Supernada. The word also appears in F. as superceder, spelt also superceder in Cotgrave, and explained by 'to surcharge, leave off, give over.' This shows that, not only was surisus in E. connected in the popular mind with suris, but that, even in F., superceder was similarly connected with Lat. cedere, from which cedere is derived. Der. surisus, sb., really the older word, as shown above.

SURCHARGE, an over-load. (F.,—L.) 'A surcharge, or greater charge; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 328.—F. surcharge, 'a surcharge, or a new charge;' Cot.—F. sur, from Lat. super, over; and charge, a load; see Bur- (2) and Charge. Der. surcharge, vb., from F. surcharge, 'to surcharge;' Cot.

SURED, inexpressible by a rational number or having no rational root. (L.) Cotgrave translates numeros surdus by 'a surd number.' A term in mathematics, equivalent to irrational, in the math. sense.—Lat. surdus, deaf; hence, deaf to reason, irrational. The word is frequently applied to colours, when it means dim, indistinct, dull; thus surdus color = a dim colour, Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. xxiii. c. 5. So likewise Lat. surdus = to be dirty; allied to E. surt and surety; see Swart. Der. surd, adj., irrational; surdus, q. v.

SURE, certain, secure. (F.,—L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. M. E. sur, Will. of Palermo, 973; sur, Seven Sagen, ed. Weber, 2033.—O. F. sur, sur, oldest form surur (Burguy); mod. F. sûr.—Lat. surus, secure, sure; see Secura. Der. sur, adv., sur-ly; sur-ty, M. E. surty, Will. of Palermo, 1493, also surisus, Chaucer, C. T. 4663, from O. F. sûrre, urgaret, from Lat. acc. securitatem. Hence sur-ship, Prov. xi. 25.

SURF, the foam made by the rush of waves on the shore. (E.) This is an extremely difficult word, being disguised by a false spelling; the r is unoriginal, just as in the word hoarsus, which is similarly disguised. The spelling surf is in Defoe, Robinson Crusoe, ed. 1719, pt. I, in the description of the making of the raft. 'My Raft was now strong enough . . . my next care was . . . how to preserve what I laid upon it from the Surf of the Sea.' But the earlier spelling is surfs, with the sense of 'rush,' in a remarkable passage in Hackluyt's Voyages, ed. 1598, vol. II, pt. I, p. 227, where we are told that certain small rafts are carried to the shore by the force of the in-rushing wave; 'the Surfs of the Sea setteth her [the raft's] lading dry on land.' β. This surfs is, I believe, a phonetic spelling of the word usually spelt surgh, i. e. 'rush' or 'rushing noise;' see surgh of the sea in Jamieson, who also spells it surf and surck. [We may here note that Halliwell gives surgh, a drum, with the remark that it is pronounced surf; this is a different word, but exemplifies the change of pronunciation.] The word surgh is properly Northumbrian, and has lost a w after the s; the Middle-English spelling is surough or surou, in the sense of 'rush,' or 'rushing sound.' 'For suroughs of his dyattes' = for the rushing sound of his blows; Morte Arthure, 1127. But it was particularly used of the swaying or rushing of the sea; 'with the surough of the sea' = with the swaying motion [surf] of the sea; id. 759. Halliwell notes prov. E. surous, 'to make a noise, as water does in rushing down a precipice; also, to foam or boil up,' &c. Cf. 'surroughs of watyre,' rushing of water, accompanied by noise; Morte Arthure, 931. γ. The M. E. verb surousen or surouen answers to A. S. suragan, to make a rushing noise, &c., treated of under Surwood, q. v. The derived sb. in A. S. took the form surig (with vowel-change from o to i), and this word answers in force, though not in form, to E. surgh. Even the verb has a secondary form suragan, with such the same sense as the primary verb suragan. In Luke, xxi. 25, we might almost translate surig by surf; 'for gedre-fednesses suris suragan and ypa' = for confusion of the sound [surf] of the sea and waves; Lat. prae confusionis sonitus maria. In Ælfric's Hom. I. 566, l. 7, we have: 'com seó seó færlíce surigande,' which Thorpe translates by 'the sea came suddenly sounding;' but it rather means rushing in, as appears by the context. In Ælfric's Hom. I. 562, l. 14, we read that a spring or well of water 'surigde út,' i. e. rushed out, or gushed forth, rather than 'sounded out,' as Thorpe translates it.

δ. There is thus plenty of authority for the use of M. E. surgh with the sense of 'rush' or 'noisy gush,' which will well explain both Hackluyt's surfs and mod. E. surf. I believe this will be found to be the right explanation. ε. We may connect surf with Norweg. sog in some of its senses, viz. (1) a noise, tumult, rushing sound; and (2) a current in a river, the inclination of a river-bed, where the stream is swift, i. e. a rapid. [This is distinct from Norweg. sog in the sense of 'sucking.'] ¶ The usual explanation of surf from F. surfot [= Lat. super-fluctus], 'the rising of billow upon billow, or the interchanged swelling of several waves,' as in Cotgrave, is unlikely; for (1) it interprets f as equivalent to a whole word, viz. F. surf, and (2) it is contradicted by the form surfs, which involves no r at all.

SURFACE, the upper face of anything. (F.,—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. surfass, 'the surface, the superfcies;' Cot. Not directly derived from Lat. superficies, but compounded of F. sur (from Lat. super, above), and facies (from Lat. facies, acc. of facies, the face); see Bur- (2) and Facies. However, it exactly corresponds to Lat. superficies, which is compounded in like manner of super and facies. Hence the words are doublets. Doublet, superfcies.

SURFEIT, excess in eating and drinking. (F.,—L.) M. E. surfat, P. Plowman, A. vii. 251; surfut, id. B. vi. 267.—O. F. surfat, excess (Burguy); orig. pp. of surfure, later surfairs, 'to overprise, to hold at an overdeer rate;' Cot.—O. F. sur, F. sur, from Lat. super, above; and F. fait (pp. of faire), from Lat. factus (pp. of facere), to make, hence, to hold, deem. See Bur- (2) and Fact. Der. surfait, verb, spelt surfet in Palgrave; surfait-ing, sb.

SURGE, the swell of waves, a billow. (L.) The orig. sense was 'a rising' or rise, or source. 'All great ryuers are gurged and assembled of divers urgis and springes of water;' Berner, tr. of Fromart, vol. i. c. 1 (R.) 'Thus with a urges of teares bedewde;' Turberrie, The Louer to his carefull Bed (R.) 'Surge of the see, urgis;' Palgrave. Coined directly from Lat. surgere, to rise; prob. suggested by O. F. surgens, 'the spring of a fountain, or the rising, boiling, or sprouting out of water in a spring.' Cot., which is likewise derived from the same Lat. verb. The proper F. sb. is sources, E. source; see Bources. β. The Lat. surgere makes pt. t. sur-rent, shewing at once that it is contracted from *surrigere; from Lat. sur- (for su- or sub before r), and regere, to rule, direct; thus the orig. sense was 'to direct or take one's way from under,' hence to rise up. See Sub- and Regent. Der. surge, verb, urgis. Also (from urgere) in-surge-nt, re-surrection, source, re-sources, uritia.

SURGEON, a chirurgian, one who cures diseases by operating upon the patient. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) A very early corruption of chirurgus. M. E. surgen, P. Plowman, B. xx. 308; urgens, urgens, id. C. xxiii. 310, 313; spelt chirurgian, Rob. of Glouc. p. 566, last line.—O. F. chirurgien, urgien, a surgeon; see Littré, s. v. chirurgien.—O. F. chirurgie, later chirurgie, surgery; with suffix -us = Lat. -us. See further under Surgery.

SURGERY, the art practised by a surgeon, operation on a patient. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. surgerie, Chaucer, C. T. 415. A singular corruption of O. F. chirurgie, urgie, later form chirurgie, surgery. We have, in fact, turned chirurgie or urgie into urgery.—Low Lat. chirurgus = Gk. χειρουργία, a working with the hands, handicraft, skill with the hands.—Gk. χηρ-, from χρη, the hand; and ργειν, to work, allied to E. work; see Chirurgian, Chirography, and Work. Der. surgens, short for chirurgien, old form of chirurgus. ¶ The corruption was helped out by the contraction of O. F. chirurgien to M. E. surgen. There is no evidence to shew that urgery is short for urgens-ry; it seems to have been rather, as above said, entirely a corruption of O. F. chirurgie, and due to no other form. Der. urgerie-al, short for *chirurgien*al, formed with suffix -al (F. -al, Lat. -alis) from Low Lat. chirurgicus, an extended form of Low Lat. chirurgus = Gk. χειρουργία, working with the hand, skilful; hence urgerie-al-ly.

SURLAIN, the upper part of a loin of beef. (F.,—L.) Frequently spelt airlain, owing to a fable that the loin of beef was knighted by one of our kings in a fit of good humour; see Johnson. The 'king' was naturally imagined to be the merry monarch Charles II, though Richardson says (on no authority) that it was 'so entitled by King James the First.' Both stories are discredited by the use of the orig. F. word urlaine in the fourteenth century; see Littré. Indeed, Wedgwood actually cites 'A urlain beef, vii. d.' from an account of expenses of the Ironmonger's Company, temp. Henry VI; with a reference to the Athenæum, Dec. 28, 1867.—F. urlain, 'a sirloin,' Hamilton; see Littré for its use in the 14th cent.—F. sur, from Lat. super, above, upon; and lains, a loin; see Super- and Loin.

SURLY, morose, uncivil. (Hybrid; F.,—L.; with E. surly.) In Shak. K. John, iii. 3. 42; &c. 'The orig. meaning seems to have been sur-ly, magisterial, arrogant. "For shepherds, said he, there does leade As Lords done other-where . . . Sike surly shepherds han we none;" Spenser, Sheph. Kal. July, 183-203. Ital. signoreggiare, to have the mastery, to domineer; signoreggiante, magisterial, haughty, stately, surly; Altieri. Faire du gros, to be proud or surly, to take much state upon him; Cotgrave:—Wedgwood. I give the quotation from Cotgrave slightly altered to the form in which it stands in ed. 1660. As to the spelling, it is remarkable that while Spenser has surly, the Glossæ to the Sheph. Kal. by E. K. has 'surly, stately and proude.' The spelling with u may have been due to a supposed connection with F. sur, above. Cotgrave also has: 'Sourcilless, . . . surly, or proud of countenance;' with other examples. Levin (1570) has: 'Surly, imperious;' col. 100, l. 90. It is thus clear that surly is a misspelling for sirly = sur-like, compounded of Sir and like, q. v. The change of sense from proud, stately, imperious, to that of rude, uncivil, is but slight; and the sense of the word being once somewhat changed for the worse, it has never recovered its orig. force. ¶ A suggested derivation from M. E. sur, soar, is unlikely; sur is quite an early spelling, and soon became sour, whilst surly in the 16th century was an adverb, as now, with quite a different vowel-sound from that in surly or sirly. On the other hand, the words homely, lowly, manly, are similarly formed, being likewise adjectives, not adverbs. Der. surly-ly, surly-ness.

SURMISE, an imagination, suspicion, guess. (F., -L.) Levin has surmise both as sb. and vb.; so has Baret (1580). Halliwell gives the obs. verb surmit, with an example. - O. F. surmise, an accusation (Roquefort); properly fem. of surmis, pp. of surmettre, to charge, accuse, lit. 'to put upon,' hence to lay to one's charge, make one to be suspected of. - F. sur, from Lat. super, upon, above; and F. mettre, to put, from Lat. mittere, to send; see Super- and Mission. Der. surmise, verb; surmis-al, Milton (R.)

SURMOUNT, to surpass. (F., -L.) M. E. surmounten, spelt surmounten, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 8, l. 2223. - F. surmonter, 'to surmount;' Cot. From Sur- (2) and Mount (1). Der. surmount-able, surmount-ably.

SURNAME, a name added to the Christian name. (Hybrid; F., -L.; and E.) In Trevisa, iii. 265, l. 10. See Trench, Study of Words. A partial translation of M. E. surnam, spelt surname in Chron. of Eng. 982 (in Ritson, Met. Romances, ii. 311), from F. surnam, 'a surname;' Cot. - F. sur, from Lat. super, over, above; and E. name. See Super- and Name; and see Noun. So also Span. sobrenombre, Ital. soprannome. Der. surname, verb.

SURPASS, to go beyond, excel. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 58. - F. surpasser, 'to surpass;' Cot. From Sur- (2) and Pass. Der. surpass-ing, surpass-able, un-surpass-able.

SURPLICE, a white garment worn by the clergy. (F., -L.) Spelt surplus, surplys, in Chaucer, C. T. 3523. - F. surplis, 'a surplice;' Cot. - Low Lat. superpellicum, a surplice. - Lat. super, above; and pellis, neut. of pellis, pellis, made of skins; see Super- and Pellice. Cf. 'surplys, superpellicum;' Prompt. Parv. So also Span. sobrepelliz.

SURPLUS, overplus, excess of what is required. (F., -L.) M. E. surplus, Gover. C. A. iii. 24, l. 18. - F. surplus, 'a surplage, overplus;' Cot. - Lat. super, above; and plus, more; see Super- and Plural. Der. surplus-age, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 18; Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. iii. Of a tame tiger, &c.; see Richardson.

SURPRISE, a taking unawares. (F., -L.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, v. 5. 131. The verb (though from the sb. in F.) occurs earlier, Rom. of the Rose, 3225. - O. F. surpris, surpris (Burguy), also spelt surprins, 'a surprisal, or sudden taking;' Cot. Properly fem. of surpris, surpris (surpris in Cot.), pp. of surprendre, surprendre, 'to surprise, to take napping;' Cot. - F. sur, from Lat. super, above, upon; and prendre, from Lat. prehendere, to take; see Super- and Prehenale. Cf. Ital. surprendere, to surprise. Der. surpris, verb, surpris-al (as Cotgrave, as above), surpris-ing, -ing-ly.

SURREBUTTER; see Surrejoinder.

SURREJOINDER, a rejoinder upon, or in answer to a rejoinder. (F., -L.) 'The plaintiff may answer the rejoinder by a surrejoinder; upon which the defendant may rebut; and the plaintiff answer him by a surrebuter;' Blackstone, Comment., b. iii. c. 20 (R.) And in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The prefix in F. sur, upon, hence, in answer to; see Sur- (1) and Rejoin. And see Rebut.

SURRENDER, to render up, resign, yield. (F., -L.) 'I surrender, ie surrends;' Palgrave. - O. F. surrendre, to deliver up into the hands of justice, Roquefort, Palgrave; not in Cotgrave. - F. sur, upon, up; and rendre, to render; see Sur- (2) and Render. Der. surrender, sb., Hamlet, i. 2. 23.

SURREPTITIOUS, done by stealth or fraud. (L.) 'A soden surreptitious delyte;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1278 (miscalled 1276) g. - Lat. surreptivus, better surreptivus, stolen, done stealthily. - Lat. surreptivus, supine of surrepere, to creep under, steal upon. - Lat. sur (for sub before r), under; and perere, to creep; see Sur- (1) and Reptile. Der. surreptitiously.

SURROGATE, a substitute, deputy of an ecclesiastical judge. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. surrogatus, pp. of surrogare, to substitute, elect in place of another. - Lat. sur (for sub before r), under, in place of; and rogare, to ask, elect. See Sur- (1) and Rogation.

SURROUND, to encompass. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. An E. coined word; from Sur- (2) and Bound. [There is no F. surrender.]

SURTOUT, an overcoat, close frock-coat. (F., -L.) 'Surtout, Surtout, a great upper coat;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Worn over all. - F. sur tout, over all. - Lat. super totum, over the whole; see Super- and Total.

SURVEILLANCE, inspection. (F., -L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. - F. surveillance, superintendence; Hamilton. - F. surveiller, pres. part. of surveiller, to superintend. - F. sur, from Lat. super, over; and vigiler, from Lat. vigilare, to watch; see Sur- (1) and Vigil. F. surveillance = Lat. vigilantia.

SURVEY, to look over, inspect. (F., -L.) 'To survey, or oversee;' Minshew, ed. 1627. The obs. sb. surveys is in Chaucer, C. T. 12029. - F. sur, over; and O. F. voir, later veoir, 'to see,' Cot. - Lat. super, over; and videre, to see; see Super- and Vision. And see Supervise. Der. survey, sb., All's Well, v. 3. 16; survey-or, survey-or-ship.

SURVIVE, to overlive, outlive. (F., -L.) Spelt survive in Palgrave. - F. survivre, 'to survive;' Cot. - Lat. supervivere, to outlive. - Lat. super, above; and vivere, to live; see Super- and Victual. Der. survival, a coined word, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Ody. b. i. 638; survive-or, Hamlet, i. 2. 90; survive-or-ship.

SUR-, prefix. (L.) Lat. sur-, prefix; put for sub-, as extended form of sub, under; so also Gk. επι-, aloft, επι-, aloft, from επι-; see Sub-. Der. sur-, sur-, sur-, sur-, sur-.

SUSCEPTIBLE, readily receiving anything, impenetrable. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. - F. susceptible, 'susceptible, capable;' Cot. - Lat. susceptibilis, ready to undertake. - Lat. suscipere, for suscipere, crude form of suscipere, pp. of suscipere, to undertake; with suffix -ibilis. - Lat. sur, for sub, extension of sub, under; and capere, to take; see Sub- and Captive. Der. susceptibility, a coined word; susceptive, from Lat. suscipere, capable of receiving or admitting.

SUSPECT, to mistrust, conjecture. (F., -L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. The word was orig. a pp., as in Chaucer, where it is used adjectively, with the sense of 'suspicious,' C. T. 8317, 8318. - F. suspect, 'suspected, mistrusted;' Cot. - Lat. suspensus, pp. of suspensum, to look under, look up to, admire, also to mistrust. - Lat. sur, for sub, extension of sub, under; and spicere, to look; see Sub- and Spy. Der. suspicion, M. E. suspicion, K. Alimunder, 453. O. F. suspension (Burguy), later suspension, 'suspition;' Cot. (mod. F. suspension), from Lat. suspensionem, acc. of suspensio, suspicion; hence suspension, M. E. suspension, Chaucer, C. T. 8316; suspension-ly, -ness. ¶ Observe that the old spellings suspicion, suspension, have been modified to accord more with the Lat. originals.

SUSPEND, to hang beneath or from, to make to depend on, delay. (F., -L.) M. E. suspenden, Rob. of Glouc., p. 563, l. 7. - F. suspendre, 'to suspend;' Cot. - Lat. suspendere (pp. suspensum), to hang up, suspend. - Lat. sur, for sub, extension of sub, under; and pendere, to hang; see Sub- and Pendant. Der. suspend-or. Also suspensus, properly an adj. or pp., as in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 6. 34, from F. suspensus, 'doubtful, uncertain,' Cot., from Lat. pp. suspensus, suspended, wavering, hesitating; suspension, from F. suspension, 'a suspension or suspending,' Cot., from Lat. acc. suspensionem; suspension-or-y, from F. suspensionis, 'hanging, suspensory, in suspense,' Cot.; suspension-y, sb., a hanging bandage, &c.

SUSTAIN; see under Suspect.

SUSTAIN, to hold up, bear, support. (F., -L.) M. E. sustainer, sustainer, Rob. of Glouc., p. 111, l. 14. - O. F. sustainer, sustainer, spelt sustainer in Cot.; mod. F. sustainer. - Lat. sustinerre, to uphold. - Lat. sur, for sub, extension of sub, up; and tenere, to hold; see Sub- and Tenable. Der. sustain-or, sustain-able; also sustenance, M. E. sustenance, Rob. of Glouc., p. 41, l. 23, from O. F. sustenance, spelt sustenance in Cotgrave, from Lat. sustinentia; also sustain-ment, Bacon, Essay 58, from Lat. acc. sustinentationem, maintenance, from sustinerre, frequent form of sustinerre (pp. sustentus).

SUTLER, one who sells provisions in a camp. (Du.) In Shak. Hen. V. ii. 1. 116. - Du. sutelaar (Sewel), usually sutelaar; in Hexham sutelaar, 'a scullion, or he that doth the druggerie in a house, a sutler, or a victualler.' Formed with suffix -ear of the agent (cf. Lat. -arius) from sutlede, 'to sully, to soil, or to victual'; Hexham. β. This frequent verb is cognate with Low G. suddele, to sully, whence suddele, a dirty fellow, scullion, and sometimes a sutler (Brem. Wort.); Dan. sudde, hondde, to sully, G. sudde, to sully, daub. All these are frequent forms, with the usual frequent. suffix -el; the simple form appears in Swed. sudde, to daub, stain, soil; whence Swed. dial. sudde, sb., a dirty woman (Riets). These are obviously connected with Icel. suddi, steam from cooking, drizzling rain, suddaligr, wet and dank, a derivative of sub, broth in which meat has been sodden, from subda, to seethe. Also with E. sudde, a derivative of sudde; with which cf. G. sudde, a seething, brewing, sudde, a puddle, sudde, to daub, dabble, sully, suddehorn, a sluttish cook. γ. Every one of these words is a derivative from the Teut. base SUTH, to seethe; see Sesithe. The orig. th is represented, abnormally, by t in Du. swelste, and regularly by d in Du. zielden, to seethe, G. swelen, swel, swelen, swelen.

SUTURE, a seam. (F., -L.) In Minibeu, ed. 1627. = F. suture, 'a suture or seam;' Cot. = Lat. sutura, a suture. = Lat. sutus, pp. of sare, to sew; cognate with E. sew.

SUTTEE, a widow who immolates herself on the funeral pile of her husband; also the sacrifice of burning a widow. (Skt.) The E. s represents Skt. short a, which is pronounced like a in mad. The word is properly an epithet of the widow herself, who is reckoned as 'true' or 'virtuous' if she thus immolates herself. = Skt. antī, a virtuous wife (Benfey, p. 63, col. 2); put for antī, fem. of ant, being, existing, true, right, virtuous. Sant is short for ant, pres. part. of ant, to be. = ant, to be; see Booth and Ia.

SUZERAIN, a feudal lord. (F., -L.) Not in Johnson; hardly an E. word. = F. suzerain, 'sovereign, yet subaltern, superior, but not supreme;' Cot. A coined word; made from F. suz, Lat. suum or suum, above, in the same way as suzerain is made from Lat. super; it corresponds to a Low Lat. type suzerainus, for suzerainus. β. The Lat. suum is contracted from su-suum, where su- is for sub, up, and suum (E. -ward) means 'turned,' from Lat. vertere, to turn; see Sub- and -Ward, suffix. Der. suzerain-ty, from F. suzeraineté, 'sovereignty, but subaltern, jurisdiction,' Cot.

SWAB, to clean the deck of a vessel. (Du.) Shak. has swabber. Temp. ii. 2. 48; whence the verb to swab has been evolved. The sb. is borrowed directly from Du. swabber, 'a swabber, the drudge of a ship;' Sewel. Cf. Du. swabber, to swab, do dirty work. + Swed. swab, a fire-brush, swabla, to swab; Dan. swabbe, to swab; G. schwabber, a swabber, schwabber-stück, a mop-stick; schwabbern, to swab. Cf. also Norw. swabbe, to splash about, G. schwabbeln, to shake to and fro. Allied to Swap, Bwoop. Der. swab-er.

SWADDLE, to swathe an infant. (E.) 'I swaddled a chyld;' Palgrave. Also spelt swadil, swadell in Levins. Swadil stands for swadthel, and means to wrap in a swadthel or swaddling-band. M. E. swadband, a swaddling-band; spelt swadband, swadling-band, swadling-bands in Cursor Mundl, 1343; whence the verb swaddel, swadthel = swaddled, id. 12136. = A. S. swadl, swadl, a swaddling-band; in a gloss (Bosworth). The sense is 'that which swathes;' formed by suffix -el, -il (Aryan -wa), representing the agent, from the verb to swathe; see Swathe. Der. swaddling-band; swaddling-doths, Lake, ii. 7.

SWAGGER, to hector, to be boisterous. (Scand.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 79. 'To swagger in gait is to walk in an affected manner, swaying from one side to the other;' Wedgwood. It is the frequentative of swag, now almost disused. 'I swagge, as a fatte persons belly swaggeth as he goth;' Palgrave. 'Swag, to hang loose and heavy, to sag, to swing about;' Halliwell. = Norweg. swaga, to sway; Aasen. The base is SWAG, of which the nasalised form appears in E. swag, and in the G. verb schwaben, to stagger, reel, totter, falter. See Swing and Bway. With the sense 'to sag' cf. Swed. swaga, to give way, bend, swag, weak, bending, Icel. swaga, to give way. Der. swagger-er.

SWAIN, a young man, peasant. (Scand.) M. E. swain, Chaucer, C. T. 4025; swain, Havelok, 272. The form is Scand., not E.; the A. S. form was swain, Grein, ii. 500, which would have given a mod. E. swane, like stear from staa. We do, indeed, find swain in the A. S. Chron. aa. 1128, but this is borrowed from Scand. = Icel. swain, a boy, lad, servant; Dan. swain, a swain, journeyman, servant; Swed. swain, a young man, a page. + Low G. swain, a swineherd, Hannover (Brenz. Wört.) + O. H. G. swain, swain, a servant. Not connected with swain; the sense, swineherd, of Low G. swain, is accidental. β. The Teut. type is SWAINA, Fick, iii. 365. The sense is 'becoming strong' or 'growing up,' just as swain is connected with the notion of attaining full growth. Allied to Goth. swainas, A. S. swain, Icel. swain, strong, swift, G. swain, quick, swift; of which the Teut. type is SWINTHA (Fick). These forms SWAINA, SWINTHA, are from a common base SWIN, to be quick (?); see Fick, i. 843; and see Swim (2). Der. swain-swain, swain-swain.

SWALLOW (1), a migratory bird. (E.) M. E. swaloun, Prompt. Parv.; Chaucer, C. T. 3258. = A. S. swalona, a swallow; Wright's Voc. i. 77. + Du. swalven. + Icel. swala, put for swalva; gen. swala. + Dan. swala. + Swed. swala. + G. schwalbe; O. H. G. swalona. β. The Teut. type is SWALWA; Fick, iii. 364. The prob. sense is 'to come about,' or 'to move to and fro;' allied to Gk. swalwa, to shake, to move to and fro, to toss like a ship at sea; swalos, the tossing rolling swell of the sea. See Swall. Fick, i. 842. Cf. O. Du. swalpen, 'to flote, to toss, beate against with waves,' swalpe, a tossing, swalcke, a swallow; Hexham.

SWALLOW (2), to absorb, ingest, receive into the stomach. (E.) M. E. swaloun, swaloun, Chaucer, C. T. 16985; also swaloun, Juliana, p. 74. l. 4; swalouen, Ormulum, 10224 (written swalouen in the MS.). Thus the final w stands for an older guttural. It is a secondary form, modified from the A. S. strong verb swalgan, to swallow, pt. l. swalg, pp. swalgan; Grein, ii. 505. + Du. swalgen. + Icel. swalga, pt. l. swalg, pp. swalgan; also as a weak verb. + Dan. swalga. + Swed. swalpa. + G. schwelgen, to eat or drink immoderately. β. All from Teut. base SWALG, to swallow, Fick, iii. 364. Der. ground-sw, q. v.

SWAMP, wet spongy land, boggy ground. (Scand.) Not found in old books. 'Swamp, Swamp, a bog or marshy place, in Virginia or New England;' Phillips, ed. 1706. This points to its being a prov. E. word. According to Rich., it occurs in Dampier's Voyages, an. 1685. The β is excrement, as is not uncommon after sw, and this particular form is Scand. = Dan. and Swed. swamp, a sponge, fungus (hence applied to spongy ground, which seems to be exclusively an E. use); cf. Swed. swampg, spongy. + M. H. G. swamp, G. schwamm, a sponge, fungus. + Du. swamp, a fungus; O. Du. swamp, a sponge. + Goth. swamma, a sponge. + Low G. swamm, but more commonly swamp, a fungus. + A. S. swam; 'Fungus, vel tuber, swamm,' Wright's Voc. i. 31, col. 2. β. Connected on the one hand with Gk. swampis, spongy, damp, and on the other with Gk. swampis, a sponge (Attic swampis, whence Lat. fungus is borrowed). The common root of all these words is SWAM, to swim; for which see Swim. See Curtius, i. 476. This root at once gives Goth. swammis, a sponge, swammal, a swamp; Gk. swampis, spongy; Icel. swapp, a sponge, of which the base is swapp, put for swamp by assimilation. By change of initial sw to sp (not unlike the curious change of initial sw to sp as seen in spants, an occasional form of swants, sweet) we should get a Gk. form swampis, and this easily became swampis in the same way that we have E. swamp in the same sense as swamp, &c. Other derivatives from the same root are Dan. and Swed. swamp, G. swamp, a swamp, which are mere duplicate forms of the Dan. and Swed. swamp, due to the common change of sw to s. It is remarkable that the E. word has kept the form of Scand. swamp with the sense of Scand. swamp. γ. We should also note, as far too curious to be passed over, the prov. E. swamp, swamp, a swamp, bog, and swampy, boggy (Halliwell); for this is the very change above noted as taking place in Gk. And we have the proportion: as E. swamp: Gk. swampis :: prov. E. swamp: Gk. swampis. δ. We may conclude that swamp, sponge, and fungus are all related words, and are all from the root of Swim. Der. swamp, vb., swamp-y, swampiness.

SWAN, a large bird. (E.) M. E. swan, Chaucer, C. T. 206. = A. S. swan, Grein, ii. 500. + Du. swaan. + Icel. swan. + Dan. swan. + Swed. swan. + G. schwan; O. H. G. swan, swan. β. The Teut. type is SWANA, Fick, iii. 361. Root uncertain.

SWAP, to strike. (E.) M. E. swappes; 'Swap of his bed' = strike off his head; Chaucer, C. T. 15834. 'Beofs to hum swaple' = Beofs went swiftly to him; Layamon, 26775 (later text). The orig. sense is to sweep or swoop, to strike with a sweeping stroke or to sweep along. Closely allied to Swapp, q. v. Cf. Icel. swipja, to sweep, swoop; G. schwappen, to swap, schwaben, to hover, drive, soar; and cf. E. swabble, q. v. And see Swab.

SWARD, green turf, grassy surface of land. (E.) It formerly meant also skin or covering; the grass-sward is the turf surface of the land; the prov. E. sward-forth is bacon cured in large slices or flakes (Halliwell, Forby). 'Swards, or swards of fesch, Swans; Swards of erpe, turf-flag, or sward of erth, Cesper;' Prompt. Parv. pp. 481, 506. = A. S. sward, the skin of bacon, in a gloss (Bosworth). + Du. swaerd, skin of bacon. + Icel. swaerd, skin, hide of the walrus, sward or surface of the earth; jarðar-swærd, earth-sward, græss-swærd, grass-sward. + Dan. swaerd, flesh-sward, skin of bacon; græs-swærd, green sward. + G. schwartz, rind, bark, skin, outside-plank. β. The Teut. type is SWARDA, with the sense of 'rind;' Fick, iii. 361. Root unknown. Der. sward-ol, grass-sward.

SWARM, a cluster of bees or insects. (E.) M. E. swarm, Chaucer, C. T. 15398. = A. S. swarm (Bosworth). + Du. swarm. + Icel. swarm. + Dan. swarm. + Swed. swarm. + G. schwarm; M. H. G. swarm. β. All from Teut. type SWARMA, where -ma is a noun-suffix, as in blow-m, do-m. The sense is 'that which hums,' from the buzzing made by a swarm of bees. Cf. Lithuan. swarna, a pipe or life, from the sound it makes; Russ. swarna, a pipe, G. schwarzen, to buzz, whiz, swarm, to hum, buzz. = swar, to hum, buzz; whence Skt. swari, to sound, swara, a sound, voice; Lat. swarrus, a hum, whisper. See Swear and Biron. Der. swarm, verb, A. S. swarmen, A. S. Leechdoms, i. 384, l. 21. And see swarm, swarna, swarn.

SWART, SWARTHY, black, tawny. (E.) The proper form is swart; thence a less correct form swarth was made, occurring in Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odyss. i. xix. l. 343; and hence swarth-y (= swart-y) by the help of suffix -y (A. S. -ig) occasionally added to adjectives (as in swarth-y), with the same force as the suffix -ish. Shak. has swarth, Titus, ii. 3. 72; swarthy, Two Gent. ii. 6. 36; swarty, Titus, ii. 3. 72, in the quarto editions. M. E. swart, spelt swart in Rob. of Glouc. p. 490, l. 6. = A. S. swart, black; Grein, ii. 507. +

Du. swart. † Icel. swart. † Dan. svart. † Swed. svart. † G. schwarz; O. H. G. swarz, swarz. † Goth. swarts. β. The Teut. type is SWARTA, Fick, iii, 365; allied to Lat. sordis, dirt, sordidus, dirty, and prob. to Lat. urdus, dim-coloured. The form of the root is certainly SWAR, with the sense 'to be dirty'; and this may easily be identified with √SWAR, to shine, glow, from the sense of sworthing or blackening by intense heat; Fick, i, 357. This is made certain by the occurrence of G. schwarzen, to burn by a slow fire, and other forms discussed under Sultry. The Norse god Swart, i. e. Swart, is the god of fire. Der. swarthly or swarty, as above; swarthily, swarthness. And see swarm, swar.

SWASH, to strike with force. (Scand.) 'Thy swashing blow', Romeo, i. 1. 70. Swashing is also swaggering, and a swasher is a swaggerer, a bully; As You Like It, i. 3. 122, Hen. V, iii. 2. 30. — Swed. dial. swasha, to make a 'squashing' or 'swashing' noise, as when one walks with water in the shoes (Rietz); Swed. swasa, to speak or write bombast. β. By the interchange of sh and st (as in prove E. see = to ask), swasha stands for swast or swag = an extension from a base SWAK or SWAG. Norweg. swasha, to make a noise like water under the feet; Aasen. Cf. prov. E. swash, a blow or fall, swashing, crushing, huge, swag, the noise of a heavy fall (Halliwell). The base appears to be partly imitative of the noise of a blow or fall, and partly connected with Norweg. swaga, to sway or swing, as in prov. E. swag, to swing about. See Sway, Swing, Swagging.

SWATH, a row of mown grass. (E.) M. E. swathe. 'A meade ... in swathe swepene dowe' = a meadow, mown (lit. swept) down in swaths; Allit. Morte Arthure, 2508. 'Cam him no ferres swathe ner' = no track (or trace) of fire came near him; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 3786. = A. S. swaþa, a track, foot-track, trace, Grein, ii, 500. † Du. swaad, a swathe; also swaad, swaada, 'a swath, a row of grass mowed down', Sewel. † G. schwad, a row of mown grass. β. The sense 'row of mown grass' is the orig. one, whence that of track or foot-track easily follows. This appears by comparing Low G. swad, a swath, with swade, a scythe; see Brem. Wörterbuch, pt. iv, 1207, where the E. Frisian swade, swas, swad, a scythe, is also cited; these are closely allied to Icel. swaða, a kind of large knife. γ. The Icel. swað means a slippery place, a slide, whence is formed the verb swaða, to slide or glance off, particularly used of a sword glancing off a bone or hard substance; as, 'sverðit swað af stálhornum hjálmi' = the sword slides off the steel-helm. Hence Icel. swaðja, sb., may be explained as a knife that slices, and the Low G. swade as a blade that slides or glances over the ground, i. e. a scythe; and the E. swath may be explained as 'a slice' or 'sliced', thus bringing it into close connection with E. swathe, a shred of cloth, bandage for an infant, and swathe, verb, to bind up an infant in swaddling-bands. And as a piece of mown grass lies in rows, so any cut corn is easily formed into bundles; this explains Cotgrave's 'Yvill, swathed, or made into sheaves', as well as prov. E. swath, in all its senses, viz. (1) to band with a swath, to swaddle; (2) a pattern, sample, piece, or swath cut off from anything; (3) to separate, cut off, i. e. slice off; and (4) a row of barley. We may also note Icel. swaða, a kind of halberd. δ. All the evidence points to a Teut. base SWATH, to shred or slice off, appearing in Norweg. swada, vb. act. and neut., to strip off, flake off, as in: 'Han hadde slegst seg, so Kjetel swadde fra Benet' = he had struck himself so that the flesh was sliced off from the bone; with which cf. the adj. swad, smooth, slippery; see Aasen. Der. swathe, q. v.

SWATH, to bind in swaddling-cloths, to bandage. (E.) Shak. has swath, that which the mower cuts down with one sweep of the scythe, Troil. v. 3. 25; also a swaddling-cloth, Timon, iv. 3. 252; also swathing-clothes, Hen. IV, iii. 2. 112; swathing-cloths, Hamlet, ii. 2. 401; swathed, Complaint, 49. M. E. swathen, pt. t. swathed, Cursor Mundi, 11236. = A. S. swaþan, in comp. beswaþan, to envelop, John, xix. 40 (Lindisfarne MS.); A. S. swaðoma, ii. 18, l. 8. = A. S. swaða, orig. a shred; hence (1) as much grass as is mown at once, (2) a shred of cloth used as a bandage; see farther under Swath. Der. swath-to (for swath-to).

SWAY, to swing, incline to one side, influence, rule over. (Scand.) M. E. swayen, Gawain and Green Knight, 1429; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 151. It also means to go, walk, come, Allit. Poems, B. 788, C. 429; spelt sway, id. C. 73, 236. Prov. E. sway, to swing about (see Swag). = Icel. swiða, to bow, bend as one does a switch, to bend a bow, to swing a distaff, to strike a harp; swiðast, refl. to be swayed, to swerve; swiða, to make to sway or swag. A causal form from a lost verb swiða, pt. t. swiðe, pp. swiðinn, whence also the sb. swið, a bend, curve, circuit, swiði, a switch, swiða, to bend, give way. Cf. also Swed. dial. swiðrygga (sway-ndged), saddle-backed, swið, a switch, from the strong verb swiða, to bend (pt. t. swið, sup. swið), Kretz; Swed. swiða, to bend, yield, swiða, to jerk, swið, weak; Dan. swais, to swing to and fro, to sway, swag, weak; Du. swaen, a turn, swaenjen, to swing, turn, sway, brandish; also Norweg. swiða, to bend, swið, a switch, swiða, a switch, swiða, to bend or give way. β. All from the Teut. base SWAG, to sway, swing, also to sag, give way, well preserved in Norweg. swaga, to sway, swing, reel, stagger (Aasen). The nasalised form of the base is SWANG, to swing; see Swing. And see Swail, § 7. Der. sway, sb., Jul. Caesar, i. 3. 3, M. E. swiða, Chaucer, C. T. 4716.

SWEAL, to singe, scorch slightly. (E.) See under Sultry, § 7, and Swart, § 6.

SWEAR, to affirm to be true, to affirm with an oath, to use oaths freely. (E.) M. E. sweren, strong verb, pt. t. swor, swore, Rob. of Gloec. p. 33, l. 10; pp. sworen, sworn, Havelok, 439. = A. S. swerian, pt. t. swor, pp. sworen, to swear, Grein, ii, 506. We also find A. S. sweran, with the simple sense of speak or declare, conjugated as a weak verb, particularly in the comp. andswerian, to declare in return, to answer. The orig. sense was simply to speak aloud, declare. † Du. sweren, pt. t. swoor, pp. gesworen † Icel. swiða, pt. t. swið, pp. swiðinn. † Dan. swerge. † Swed. swiða. † G. schwören. And cf. Goth. swarian, Icel. swara, Dan. sware, Swed. swara, to answer, reply. β. All from √SWAR, to hum, buzz, make a sound; whence also Skt. swi, to sound, to praise, swara, sound, a voice, tone, accent, Lat. swarvus, a humming, and E. swarm; see Swarm. Der. swear-ing, for swore; sworn.

SWEAT, moisture from the skin. (E.) M. E. swete (Tyrwhitt prints swete), Chaucer, C. T. 16046; whence the verb sweten, id. 16047. = A. S. swēta, Grein, ii, 501. (By the usual change from d to long a, A. S. swēta became M. E. swete, and should have been swete in mod. E.; but the vowel has been modified to make the sb. accord with the verb, viz. A. S. swētan, M. E. sweten, mod. E. swet, with the ea shortened to the sound of e in let (= M. E. leten = A. S. lētān). The spelling swet would, consequently, be better than swet, and would also be phonetic.) † Du. swet. † Icel. swiða. † Dan. swid. † Swed. swið. † G. schwitzen; O. H. G. swiz. β. The Teut. type is SWAITA, sweat, cognate with Skt. swada, sweat; from Teut. base SWIT, to sweat, of which we find traces in Icel. swiða, from Teut. schwizzen. This answers to Aryan √SWID, to sweat, whence Skt. swid, to sweat, Lat. swid (for swid), sweat, Gk. swid, sweat. Der. swet, verb, A. S. swētan, as above; swet-ig, swet-ness; and see swat-at-er-ig, swat-er-ig.

SWEEP, to brush, strike with a long stroke, pass rapidly over. (E.) M. E. swepen, Chaucer, C. T. 16404; pp. sweped, Fricke of Conscience, 4947. This is a weak secondary verb answering to an A. S. form swepan = swepan, not found, but regularly formed from swepan, to sweep, a strong verb with pt. t. swep, Grein, ii, 500. Cf. 'Frouba, swid-swepe,' Wright's Voc. i, 288. This A. S. swepan is represented in mod. E. by the verb to SWOOP, q. v. Der. swoop, sb., Timon, i. 2. 137; swoop-er, chimney-sweep-er (often used in the forms swoop, chimney-sweep, cf. A. S. swista, M. E. swiste, a hunter); swoop-ing; swoop-stake, the same as swamp-stake, sweeping off all the stakes at once, Hamlet, iv. 5. 142, whence swoop-stake, sb., the whole money staked at a horse-race that can be won or swept up at once.

SWEET, pleasing to the senses, esp. to the taste. (E.) M. E. swete, Chaucer, C. T. 3206; with the by-forms swete, swite, id. 3205. = A. S. swēta, Grein, ii, 506. † O. Sax. swēta. † Du. swet. † Icel. swið, swið. † Dan. swid. † Swed. swið. † G. swis; O. H. G. swiz, swiz. β. The A. S. swē is a modified ō; cf. the oe in Du. swet, and the ē in Dan. swid, Swed. swið. All are from a Teut. type SWÖTYA, sweet, to which Goth. swita, sweet, is nearly related. The base is SWAT, answering to Aryan √SWAD, to please, to taste nice, whence also Skt. swad, swid, to taste, to eat, to please, swāda, sweet, Gk. swē, sweet, Lat. swāvis (for swāvis), pleasant, swādore, to persuade. Der. swet-ly, swet-ness; swet-brand, the pancreas of an animal, so called because swet and resembling brand; swet-briver, Milton, L'Allegro, 47; swete, pl. sb., Cor. iii. 1. 157; swet-ich, swet-ich-ness; swet-er, to make sweet, Rich. II, ii. 3. 13; swet-on-er, swet-on-ing; swet-ig, formed with a dimin. suffix -ig, a term of endearment, Oth. ii. 3. 252, also a kind of sweet apple, Romeo, ii. 4. 83; swet-pea, swet-potato; swet-william (from the name William). Also swet-sweet, lit. sweet food, chiefly in the pl., M. E. swets swetes, Henryson, Complaint of Crevice, l. 14; see Moat. And see swet-heart, below.

SWEETHEART, a lover or mistress. (E.) Used as a term of endearment. The derivation is simply from swet and heart; it is not an absurd hybrid word with the F. suffix -ard (= O. H. G. -hard), as has been supposed. Crevice calls Troulus her 'swet herte' and her 'swets herte' both; Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1181-1183. Again, he calls her 'my swet herte dore', id. iii. 1210; and in the last line of bk. iii we read: 'Is with Crevice his swet herte swite.' Further examples are needless, but may easily be found in the same poem. ¶ No ingenuity can explain herte in herte swete as a F. suffix. For a similar example, cf. beef-eater, where the simple derivation from beef and eat is too simple for most people.

SWELL, to grow larger, expand, rise into waves, heave, bulge out. (E.) M. E. swellen, strong verb, pt. t. swal, Chaucer, C. T. 6449, pp. swellen, id. 8826. = A. S. swellan, pt. t. swaell, pp. swollen, Etod. ix. 10; Grein, ii. 505. + Du. swellen, pt. t. swell, pp. geswollen. + Icel. swella, pt. t. swal, pp. swellan. + Swed. swälla. + G. schwellen. β. All from Teut. base SWAL, to swell, Fick, iii. 363; cf. Swed. swell, the swell of the sea, an agitation, which (according to Curtius, i. 465) is cognate with Gk. swálos, swálos, tossing, restless motion, Lat. salum, the open, tossing sea. Allied words are also Gk. swáleios, to toss, wave, swáleif, a sieve (from its being shaken), swálos, a quost (as being tossed).

γ. The ultimate root is probably √SU or SWA, to drive, as seen in Skt. sá, to cast, send, incite, impel, Gk. swéivw, to drive, throw, hurl, Gk. swéivw (= ofiswv), to shake, toss, agitate. From this ultimate √SWA, to drive, toss, we can form not only SWAL, to toss, agitate, boil up (hence, to swell), but also the forms SWAP, to swoop, sweep, drive swiftly over a surface, SWAG, to sway, SWANG, to swing, SWAM, to swim. See SWOOP, SWAY, SWING, SWIM. Der. swell, sb., Antony, iii. 2. 49; swell-ing. Also swallow (s), q. v.; swallow, q. v.; swallow, q. v., ground-swell.

SWELLER, to be faint with heat, also, to cause to exude by excess of heat. (E.) See further under Bultry.

SWERVE, to depart from a right line, turn aside. (E.) M. E. swerven (swervan), Gower, C. A. iii. 7, l. 8; iii. 92, l. 16. Once a strong verb, with pt. t. swarf, swarf (Stratman). = A. S. swerfan, to rub, to file, to polish, pt. t. swarf, pp. swarfen, Grein, ii. 509; whence the sb. swarf, swarf, filings. A. S. Leechdoms, l. 336, note 15. + Du. swerven, to swerve, wander, rove, riot, revel. + O. Sax. swerban, pt. t. swarf, to wipe. + O. Fries. swerwa, to creep. + Icel. swafa, to file; pt. t. swarf, pp. swarfan. + Goth. bi-swairban, to wipe. β. The range of meanings is remarkable; the orig. sense seems to have been to wipe or rub, then to file, to move backwards and forwards, to wander, to turn aside. In motion over a rough surface, there is a tendency to swerve aside. The Goth. form is plainly from a base SWIR, which Wedgwood well illustrates from 'Dan. dial. swirre, to move to and fro; swirre, the sledge swirre, turns to one side.' So also Dan. swirre, to whirl round, swirre, to revel, riot, swirre, a revel, swirre, starts, to turn in a lathe, of which the latter answers in form to E. swerve. So also Swed. swirra, to murmur, to hum (Widegren), swirra, to turn in a lathe. γ. In fact all the various senses can be explained by the √SWAR, weakened form SWIR, to hum, buzz, whirl, orig. used of noises made by rapid motion, whether of whirling or of moving swiftly to and fro; hence the Teut. base SWARB, to rub rapidly, to file with a grating noise, and finally, with a loss of the sense of the root, to go to and fro, wander, rove. See further under Swarm, which is from the same root.

δ. The close connection between swerve and swerve is well shown by the use of both prov. E. swerve and prov. E. swerve in the same sense of 'to climb a tree devoid of side-boughs,' by creeping and scraping one's way up it; cf. O. Fries. swerwa, to creep, cited above.

SWIFT, extremely rapid. (E.) M. E. swyft, Chaucer, C. T. 190. = A. S. swif, Grein, ii. 513. Put for swift; cf. Icel. swifa, to pull quickly. It answers to a Teut. form SWIFTA = SWIFTA, Fick, iii. 366; from Teut. base SWIP, to move swiftly or suddenly, as seen in Icel. swipa, to swoop, flash, also to whip, lash; swipill, shifty, changeable, swipflgr, unstable, sudden, swift, swiptand, the twinkling of an eye. So also A. S. swipe, a whip, G. schwippe, a whip, schwippen, to whip, also to heave, undulate. Allied words appear in A. S. swifnes, to move quickly, as in 'swifnes swif antiorig' = [it] revolves swiftly and untiringly, Grein, ii. 513; Icel. swifa, to turn, rove, ramble, G. schwifsen, to sweep or move along, rove, ramble. β. This base SWIP, to move swiftly, is closely allied to Teut. SWAP, to sweep; see further under Swoop. Der. swif, sb., swif-ty, -ness. And see swiflet.

SWILL, to wash dishes; to drink greedily. (E.) The proper sense is to wash dishes. M. E. swillen, swillen; 'dishes swillen' = wash dishes, Havelok, 919. = A. S. swilian, to wash, in the Lambeth Psalter, Ps. vi. 6 (Bosworth). β. It is to be suspected that the oldest form was from a base SKWAL, as seen in Swed. spuala, to gush, stream, spual, a gush of water, spualer, washings, swill. 'Regnet spualade på gatorna, the streets were streaming with rain.' Widegren; at the rain swilled the streets. Hence we can explain also M. E. swyler, a swiller of dishes; see Boullery. By loss of w, we get Icel. skyla, Dan. skyle, to swill, rinse, wash; skylaregn (= Swed. spulregn), a heavy shower of rain; skylreund, dish-water. By change of hw (gw) to p, common in the Aryan languages, we get G. spülen, to swill, wash, rinse. The comparison of all these forms renders the base SKWAL, to wash, tolerably certain; Fick does not notice it. Der. swill, hog's-wash, whence swill-ing-trib, Skelton, Elmor Kummynge, 173. Hence the verb to swill, to drink like a pig, as in 'the bear that . . . swills your warm blood like wash,' Rich. III, v. 2. 9; there is no reasonable pretence for connecting swill with swallow, as is sometimes needlessly done. Hence swill-er; and see swill-er-y.

SWIM (1), to move to and fro on or in water, to float. (E.) M. E. swimmen, Chaucer, C. T. 2877. = A. S. swimman, pt. t. swama, swoman, Grein, ii. 515. + Du. swommen. + Icel. swimma, pt. t. swama, pp. swamit. + Dan. swimme. + Swed. swimna. + G. schwimmen, pt. t. schwamm. β. All from Teut. base SWAM, to swim; Fick, iii. 362. Perhaps an extension from √SWA, to impel; cf. Skt. swi, to impel; and see Swall. Der. swim, sb., swim-er, swim-ing, swim-ming-ly.

SWIM (2), to be dizzy. (E.) 'My head swims' = my head is dizzy. The verb is from the M. E. swime, sb., dizziness, vertigo, a swoon; spelt swyme, swime, Cursor Mundi, 14201; swyme, Allit. Morte Arthure, 4246. = A. S. swima, a swoon, swimming in the head, Grein, ii. 515; whence drudman, verb, to fail, be quenched, and drudman, verb, to wander, id. l. 43, 44. + Icel. swima, a swimming in the head; whence swima, verb, to wander about; cf. Dan. swime, to be giddy, swimmel, giddiness, swime, to swoon; Swed. swimna, to be dizzy, swimel, dizziness. β. The A. S. swime probably stands for swimma; the present word is distinct from the word above, and the orig. base is rather SWIN than SWIM, as appears by the Swed. swindel, dizziness, G. schwindel, dizziness, schwinden, to disappear, dwindle, decay, fail, schwindlich, consumption. Fick cites an O. H. G. swimma, to be quick, which is a more orig. form; note also Swed. swimma, to disappear, Icel. swima, to subside (said of a swelling). Der. swim-der, q. v.

SWINDLER, a cheat. (G.) 'The dignity of the British merchant is sunk in the scandalous appellation of the swindler;' V. Knox, Essay 8 (first appeared in 1778); cited in R. One of our few loan-words from High-German = G. schwindler, an extravagant projector, a swindler. = G. schwindeln, to be dizzy, to act thoughtlessly, to cheat. = G. schwindel, dizziness. = G. schwinden, to decay, sink, vanish, fail; cognate with A. S. swindan (pt. t. swand), to languish. See Swim (2). Der. swindle, verb and sb., evolved from the sb. swindler rather than borrowed from G.

SWINE, a sow, pig; pigs. (E.) M. E. swin, with long i, pl. swine (unchanged). 'He slepte as a swin' (riming with win, wine); Chaucer, C. T. 5165. 'A flocks of many swyne;' Wyclif, Matt. viii. 30. = A. S. swin, pl. swine, Grein, ii. 515. The A. S. swin is a swester sb., and therefore unchanged in the plural by rule. + Du. swijn, a swine, hog. + Icel. swin, pl. swin, neuter sb. + Dan. swin, neut., pl. swin. + Swed. swin, neut. + G. schwein, O. H. G. swin. + Goth. swina, neut. Cf. Russ. swinya, a swine, dimin. swinka, a pig, swini, adj., belonging to swine, swinina, pork. β. The Teut. base is SWINA, a swine; Fick, iii. 324. Fick conjectures that the form was orig. adjectival, like that of Lat. swinus, belonging to swine, an adj. not given in White's Dict., but noted by Varro (Vanicek, p. 1048); this adj. is regularly formed from swi, crude form of swa, a sow. There can be no doubt that swine is, in some way, an extended form from swin, q. v. Der. swine-ub, -ty, -ness; swine-herd, M. E. swynne-herd, Prompt. Parv.; swine-rote, M. E. swynne-rote, id.; swine-ey, M. E. swynny, id., spelt swynny, Pricke of Conscience, 9003.

SWING, to sway or move to and fro. (E.) M. E. swingen, strong verb, pt. t. sweng, swung, pp. swungen; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1058 (or 1059), Havelok, 226. = A. S. swingan, pt. t. sweng, pp. swungen, to scourge, also, to fly, flatter, flap with the wings; Grein, ii. 515. + Swed. swinga, to swing, to whirl. + Dan. swinga, to swing, whirl. + G. schwingen, to swing, soar, brandish; also, to swingle or beat flax; pt. t. schwung. β. All from Teut. base SWANG, appearing in the pt. t. of the above strong verbs. This is a nasalised form of SWAG, to sway; see Sway. Der. swing, sb.; swing, q. v.; swingle, q. v.

SWINGE, to beat, whip. (E.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 1. 83, &c. M. E. swingen, to beat; see Prompt. Parv. = A. S. swingen, to shake, toss; cf. sweng, a stroke, blow; see Bosworth. A. S. swingen is the causal form of swung, to swing, to beat; and swinge (pt. t. swingaf) is the causal form of swing (pt. t. sweng); just as fall is from fall, and set from st. See Swing.

SWINGLE, a staff for beating flax. (E.) 'To swingle, to beat, a term among flax-dressers;' Phillips. The verb is M. E. swinglen, Reliquia Antiqua, ii. 197; formed from the sb. swingle. In Wright's Voc. i. 156, near the bottom, we find swingle, sb., swingled, sb., and the phrase 'to swingle thi flax.' = A. S. swingla, a scourging; Laws of Ine, § 48, in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 132. But the M. E. swingle answers rather to an A. S. form swingol, not found, lit. 'a beater,' formed by suffix -ol (Aryan -us) of the agent from A. S. swing-an, to beat, to swing. Thus a swingle is 'a swinger,' a beater; and swingle, verb, is 'to use a swingle.' Cf. Du. swingelen, to swingle flax, G. schwinge, a swingle. See Swing. Der. swingle, verb. Also swingle-tree, q. v.

SWINGLETREE, the bar that swings at the heels of the horses when drawing a harrow, &c. (E.) See Halliwell. Also applied to the swinging bar to which traces are fastened when a horse draws a coach. Corruptly called single-tree, whence the term double-tree has arisen, to keep it company. 'A single-tree is fixed upon each end of another cross-piece called the double-tree, when a horse draws abreast.' Haldeman (in Webster). M. E. swingle-tree, spelt swyngelre in Fitzherbert, On Husbandry, § 13 (E. D. S.). The word tree here means a piece of timber, as in ash-tree. The word swingle means 'a swing-er,' a thing that swings; so named from the swinging motion, which all must have observed who have sat behind horses drawing a coach. See Swingle, Swing.

SWINK, to toil; obsolete. (E.) Once an extremely common word; Milton has 'swind's hedger' = hedger overcomes with toil. Comus, 393. M. E. swinken, pt. t. swank, Havelok, 788; pp. swinken, Ormulum, 6103. = A. S. swincan, pt. t. swanc, pp. swincan, to toil, labour, work hard. This form, running parallel with A. S. swingan, pt. t. swing, pp. swingan, is clearly a mere variant of the same verb; the base is SWANK, nasalised form of SWAK, which is a by-form of SWAG, the root of sway; see Swing, Sway. Cf. G. schwanken, to totter, stagger, falter, which is clearly allied to swagger and sway. The sense of 'toil' is due to that of constant movement; from the swinging of the labourer's arms and tools. And see Switch.

SWIRL, to whirl in an eddy. (Scand.) Swirl, a whirling wavy motion, East; Halliwell. A prov. E. word, now used by good writers, as C. Kingsley, E. B. Browning, &c.; see Webster and Worcester. = Norweg. swirla, to wave round, swing, whirl (Aasen), frequent of swerra (Dan. swerre), to whirl, turn round, orig. to make a humming noise. Formed from the base SWIR, to hum, just as whirl is from whir; see further under Swerve, Swarm.

SWITCH, a small flexible twig. (Du.) In Romeo, ii. 4. 73; Dr. Schmidt notes that old editions have swiss for the pl. swistles. Not found in M. E., and merely borrowed from Du. in the 16th cent. Switch or swich is a weakened form of swick. = O. Du. swick, 'a scourge, a switch, or a whip.' Hexham. The same word as swick, 'a brandishing, or a shaking,' id.; Hexham notes that swick is used with the same sense. He also gives swicken, 'to totter or to waggle.' Thus a switch is a 'shaking' or a pliant rod, one that sways about. ß. The base is SWIK, weakened form of SWAK, to bend, appearing (nasalised) in Du. swinken, to bend, G. schwanken, to totter, and in O. Du. swick, a switch, as above. This base SWAK, to bend, is a by-form of SWAG, to bend, treated of under Sway. From the latter base we have, in like manner, Swed. swig, a switch, green bough, swiga, to yield, swigt, vibration, swigta, to totter; so also Norweg. swiga, swig, a switch, swiga, to bend; Icel. swigr, swigi, a switch. See further under Sway, Swink. Note the proportion; as O. Du. swick; Norw. swiga; E. swick; E. swing. Der. swick, verb.

SWIVEL, a ring or link that turns round on a pin or neck. (E.) Spelt swivell in Minshew, ed. 1637. Not found in M. E.; it corresponds to an A. S. form swifol, not found, but regularly formed, with the suffix -ol of the agent, from swifan, to move quickly, revolve; for which see Swift. Related words are Icel. swifla, to swing or spin in a circle, like a top, swif, a swinging round, from swifa, to ramble, to turn. The base is SWIP, to move quickly; cf. also Icel. swipill, shifty, changeable, swipa, to swoop; see Swoop. The sense is 'that which readily revolves.'

SWOON, to faint. (E.) M. E. swounen, Chaucer, C. T. 5478; also swounen, King Alisunder, 5837; also swounen (Stratmann). A comparison of the forms shew, as Stratmann points out, that the standard M. E. form is swounen, the ß being represented either by g, w, or s; and this is a mere extension of a form swouien, with the same sense. The a is the same formative element as is seen in Goth. verbs ending in -aon; cf. E. swaen from swaen, &c. ß. The form swouen appears, slightly degraded, as swounen (with w for s), to swoon, P. Plowman, B. v. 154, xiv. 326; also as swouhen, swouhen, to sigh deeply, Romans of Parthenay, 1944, 2890. This is a weak verb, closely allied to the strong verb swouen, to make a loud or deep sound, to sigh deeply, droop, swoon, pt. t. swou, pp. swouen or swouwen. 'Sykaende ho swou down' = sighing, she drooped down; Gawain and Green Knight, 1796. 'Adun be feol swou' = down she fell in a swoon, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 428. = A. S. swougan, to move or sweep along noisily, to sigh, to sigh, orig. used esp. of the wind. 'Swogað windas' = the winds sough, Grein, ii. 516; cf. swougan, pp. swoked, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, § 52, ed. Sweet, p. 411, l. 17. Mr. Cockayne points out that the form swouwen, a swooning, occurs in A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 176, l. 13; and that in Ælfred's Hom. ii. 336, we find: 'Se lrg . . . swougan betwux ðam ofsligenum' = he lay in a swoon amongst the slain. Here A. S. swougan = M. E. swouen, as cited above. This A. S. swougan is represented by mod. E. Sough, q. v. γ. It will thus be seen that the final e is a mere formative element, and unoriginal; hence it is quite out of the question to compare swoun, as is often done, with the A. S. swinden, to fail, to swoon, and the G. schwinden, to fail. With these words swoun has nothing in common but the initial sw; the vowel is widely different, and the s is not to be compared. The A. S. swougan may have been of imitative origin; in form, it is allied to the base SWAG, to sway; see Sway. ß. The A. S. swounen, to swoon, is unauthorised, and due to Sommer; the A. S. swouenan, to languish, appears as swouenan in Grein, and is a doubtful and difficult word. The mod. E. swoun, not being rightly understood, seems to have led editors astray. The descent of swoun from A. S. swougan is certain; for further examples and details, see Stratmann. And cf. Low G. swouen, to sigh, swouen, to sigh, also to swoon; Brem. Wort. Der. swoun, sb.

SWOOP, to sweep along, to descend with a swift motion, like a bird of prey. (E.) Shak. has swoop, sb., Macb. iv. 3. 219. M. E. swoupen, almost always in the sense to sweep. In Chaucer, C. T. 16404, where Tyrwhitt prints swoupe, the Corpus MS. has swoupe (Group G, l. 936); two lines lower, in place of swouped, the Lachfeld MS. has swoupen. It is usual to look on swoupe as a derived form from swoupen; but the truth lies the other way. Swoupe is a weak verb, formed from swoupen by vowel-change (cf. haul from whale); and swoupen was orig. a strong verb, with pt. t. swep, and pp. swoupen, as above. = A. S. swoupan, to sweep along, rush; also, to sweep; a strong verb, pt. t. swoupe, pp. swoupan; Grein, ii. 500. 'Swoupan windum' = with swooping (rushing) winds; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, iii. 16, ed. Smith, p. 542, l. 37. 'Swoupe wind swoupeð' = a swift wind swooped; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, met. vii (b. ii. met. 4). ß. Icel. swoupa, to sweep, swoop; also swoupe, pt. t. of an obsolete strong verb swoupe; swoupan, pp. of the same. Also Icel. swipa, weak verb, to sweep. And cf. G. schwoufen, to rove, ramble; A. S. swifan, to move quickly; Goth. swipjan, in the comp. swipja-swipjan, a deluge, Luke, xvii. 27. ß. The A. S. swoupan answers to a Teut. swoupan, from the base SWIP, to move quickly; for which see Swift. Fick, iii. 366, remarks that SWIP is a weakened form of swifan, to move forcibly, cast, throw, strew (Fick, l. 841). This root appears in Gk. swifan, to shake, beat, scare birds; Lat. supare, to throw about, to scatter (whence Lat. dis-supare and E. disipulate); Lithuan. swipa, to swing, tom, rock a cradle, swipabala, a (swinging) plummet, swipabala, to sway, swing; &c. γ. And lastly, this root SWAP, to move forcibly, is probably an extension from the swifan or swip, to impel, appearing in Skt. swi, to impel, drive, Gk. swifan (= swif-an), to shake, swifan, to drive. From the same root we have other extensions in sway, swig, &c., all from the primary sense of 'impel.' See Sway, Swing. Der. swoupe, sb.; also swoupe, q. v.; and swoupe, swif.

SWORD, an offensive weapon with a long blade. (E.) M. E. swerd, Chaucer, C. T. 1700. = A. S. swerd, Matt. xxvi. 47. ß. Da swerd; cf. Icel. sworð. ß. Dan. swerd. ß. Swed. swerd. ß. G. swert; M. H. G. swert. ß. The Teut. type is SWERDA, Fick, iii. 366. The prob. sense is 'the wounder,' or that which wounds; cf. M. H. G. swerde, O. H. G. swerde, pain, O. H. G. swere, to pain; G. swert, painful. = swar, to hurt, wound; cf. Skt. swi, to hurt, kill, swi, to be pained; Zend swa, a wound; Fick, l. 843. We also find Skt. swara, Indra's thunder-bolt, or an arrow. Der. sword-cane, swif, swich; sword-man, formed like hunt-man, part-man; sword-man.

SYBARITE, an effeminate person. (L. = Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; he also has the adj. Sybaritical, dainty, effeminate. = Lat. Sybarites. = Gk. Sybarites, a Sybarite, an inhabitant of Sybaris, a luxuriant liver, voluptuary; because the inhabitants of this town were noted for voluptuousness. The town was named from the river Sybaris (Gk. Sybaris), on which it was situated. This river flows through the district of Lower Italy formerly called Lacania. Der. Sybaritic, Sybaritic.

SYCAMINE, the name of a tree. (L. = Gk. = Heb.?) In Luke, xvii. 6 (A. V.) = Lat. sycaminus. = Gk. sycaminos; Luke, xvi. 6. It is gen. believed to be the mulberry-tree, and distinct from the sycamore; Thomson, in The Land and the Book, pt. i. c. 1, thinks the trees were one and the same. ß. That the word has been confused with sycamore is obvious, but the suffix -inus (-inos) is difficult to explain. Thomson's explanation is worth notice; he supposes it to be nothing more than a Gk. adaptation of a Heb. plural. The Heb. name for the sycamore is shiqmah, with the plural forms shiqmahim and shiqmahot; from the latter of these the Gk. sycaminos may easily have been formed, by partial confusion with Gk. sycaminos, a sycamore; see Sycamore.

SYCAMORE, the name of a tree. (L. = Gk.) The trees so called in Europe and America are different from the Oriental sycamore (Ficus sycamorus). The spelling should rather be sycamore; Cotgrave gives sycamore both as an E. and a F. spelling. Spelt sycamore in Wyclif, Luke, xix. 4. = Lat. sycamorus. = Gk. sycaminos,

Sycamore

p. 28. Also syncope, as a grammat. term, also a swoon, from Lat. syncope = Gk. σύνκοπή, as above.

SYNDIC, a government official, one who assists in the transaction of business. (F., = L., = Gk.) Spelt syndich in Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. syndic, 'a syndick, censor, controller of manners;' Cot. = Lat. syndicus = Gk. σύνδικος, adj., helping in a court of justice; as ab., a syndic. = Gk. σύνδικος, with; and δίκη, justice. The orig. sense of δίκη is a shewing, hence a course, custom, use, justice; from δική, to shew. See Syn- and Diction. Der. syndic-ate, a coined word.

SYNEGDOCHE, a figure of speech whereby a part is put for the whole. (L., = Gk.) Spelt synecdoche in Minshew, ed. 1627. = Lat. synecdoche = Gk. συνεκδοχή, lit. a receiving together. = Gk. συνεβάλλω, I join in receiving. = Gk. σύν, together; and ἐβάλλω, I receive, compounded of βα, out, and βάλλω, I receive, from DAK, to take. See Syn-, Ex-, and Digit.

SYNOD, a meeting, ecclesiastical council. (F., = L., = Gk.) 'Synodus and consayles;' Sur T. More, Works, p. 406 h. = F. synode, 'a synod;' Cot. = Lat. synodus, acc. of synodus. = Gk. σύνδοτος, a meeting, lit. a coming together. = Gk. σύν, together; and δός, a way, here a coming, from SAD, to go. Der. synod-er, from Gk. συνωδός, adj.; synod-ic-al, synod-ic-al-ly.

SYNONYM, a word having the same sense with another. (F., = L., = Gk.) The form is French; in old books it was usual to write synonyma, which, by a curious blunder, was taken to be a fem. sing. instead of a neut. pl., doubtless because the Lat. synonyma was only used in the plural; and, indeed, the sing. is seldom required, since we can only speak of synonyma when we are considering more words than one. Synonyma is used as a sing. by Cotgrave and Blount. = F. synonime, 'a synonyma, a word having the same signification which another hath.' = Lat. synonyma, neut. pl., synonyms; from the adj. synonymus, synonymous. = Gk. συνώνυμος, of like meaning or like name. = Gk. σύν, with; and ὄνομα, a name, cognate with E. name; see Syn- and Name. Der. synonymus, Englished from Lat. adj. synonymus, as above; synonymously; synonym-ly, Lat. synonymia, from Gk. συνωνυμία, likeness of name.

SYNOPSIS, a general view of a subject. (L., = Gk.) Spelt synopsis in Minshew, ed. 1627. = Lat. synopsis = Gk. σύνopsis, a seeing all together. = Gk. σύν, together; and opsis, a seeing, sight, from ὄψωμαι, fut. from base op-, to see. See Syn- and Optica. Der. synopt-er, from Gk. adj. συνωπτικός, seeing all together; synopt-ic-al, -ly.

SYNTAX, the arrangement of words in sentences. (L., = Gk.) In Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar, b. ii. c. 1; spelt synaxis in Minshew, ed. 1627. = Lat. syntaxis = Gk. σύνταξις, an arrangement, arranging. = Gk. σύν, together; and τάξις, order, from τάσσω (= τάσσω), to arrange. See Syn- and Tactica. Der. syntact-ic-al, due to Gk. συντακτικός, adj., put in order; syntact-ic-al-ly.

SYNTHESIS, composition, combination. (L., = Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, s. v. Synthetical. = Lat. synthesis = Gk. σύνθεσις, a putting together. = Gk. σύν, together; and θέσις, a putting; see Syn- and Thesis. Der. synthet-ic-al, due to Gk. adj. συνθετικός, skilled in putting together, from συνθέτω, a pater together, where θε- is the base = to put, and -τω is the suffix denoting the agent (Aryaa -ta); synthet-ic-al-ly.

SYPHON, SYREN, inferior spellings of Siphon, Siren, q. v. Cot. has the F. spelling cyphas; also sphas.

SYRINGE, a tube with a piston, for ejecting fluids. (F., = L., = Gk.) The g was prob. once hard, not as j. Cot., however, already has striga. = F. syngue, 'a sringe, a squirt;' Cot. = Lat. syngum, acc. of syngus, a reed, pipe, tube. = Gk. σύνγυγ, a reed, pipe, tube, shepherd's pipe, whistle. From the Gk. base σύν, to make a noise, whistle; with suffix -γυγ as in φύγγυγ, πλάγγυγ (prob. = Aryan -ng-ge). = SWAR, to sound, resound; see Swarm. Der. syng-er, a flowering shrub so named because the stems were used for the manufacture of Turkish pipes; see Eng. Cycl., s. v. Syringa.

SYRUP, SIRUP, a kind of sweetened drink. (F., = Span., = Arab.) 'Spicery, suwces, and sirups;' Fryth's Works, p. 99, col. 1. = F. sirop, 'sirrop;' Cot. Mod. F. sirop; O. F. ysorop (Littre), q. v. Span. soropo, a medicinal drink; the O. F. ysorop is due to a Span. form asorops, where o represents al, the Arab. article. = Arab. sharib, sharib, wine or any beverage, syrup; lit. a beverage; Rich Dict. p. 886, col. 1. = Arab. root shariba, he drank; id. p. 887. See Sherbet.

SYSTEM, method. (L., = Gk.) It is not an old word in F., and seems to have been borrowed from Latin directly. Spelt systema in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. systema = Gk. σύστημα, a complex whole, put together. = Gk. σύν (put for σύν before σ), together; and the base σύν, to stand; with suffix -μα (Aryaa -ma). The base σύν occurs in σύνταξις, to stand; from STA, to stand; see Stand. Der. system-ate, from Gk. adj. συστηματικός, adj., formed from συστηματίζω, stem of σύνταξις; system-ate-ic-al, -ly; system-ate-us, a coined word; system-ate-us-er.

SYSTOLE, contraction of the heart, shortening of a syllable. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished (with y for s) from Gk. συστολή, a contracting, drawing together. = Gk. συστάλλω, to draw together, contract. = Gk. σύν (for σύν before σ), together; and στάλλω, to equip, set in order. See Syn- and Stole.

SYZYGY, conjunction. (Gk.) A modern term in astronomy. = Gk. σύνζυγία, union, conjunction. = Gk. σύνζυγος, conjoined. = Gk. σύν (for σύν before ζ), together; and ζυγός, base of ζεύγωμαι, I join (cf. ζυγός, a yoke), from the base YUG, extension of YU, to join. See Syn- and Yoke; and compare Conjunction.

TA-TE.

TABARD, a sleeveless coat, formerly worn by ploughmen, noblemen, and heralds, now by heralds only. (F., = L., = Gk.?) M. E. tabard, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 280, l. 2; Chaucer, C. T. 543. = O. F. tabart, tabard; see a quotation in Roquefort with the spelling tabart; mod. F. tabard (Hamilton, omitted in Littre). Cf. Span. and Port. tabardo; Ital. tabarro. The last form (like F. tabarro in Cotgrave) has lost a final d or t. The W. tabar is borrowed from English. We also find a M. H. G. tafarri, tafari; and even a mod. Gk. ταβάρια. β. Etym. unknown; Diez suggests Lat. tapet-, stem of tapete, hangings, painted cloths; see Tapetry. γ. This is almost confirmed by our use of tipper;

TABBY, a kind of waved silk. (F., = Span., = Arab.) Chiefly retained in the expression 'a tabby cat,' i. e. a cat brindled or diversified in colour, like the markings on tabby. 'Tabby, a kind of waved silk;' Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. tabis, in use in the 15th century (Littre). = Span. tabi, a silken stuff; Low Lat. (or rather O. Span.) atabi, where at was supposed (but wrongly) to represent the Arab. article al, and so came to be dropped. = Arab. atabi, a kind of rich undulated silk; Rich. Dict. p. 992. See De Vic, who calls it an Arab. word (Rich. marks it Pers.). He adds that it was the name of a quarter of Bagdad where this silk was made (Defréreux, Journal Asiatique, Jan. 1862, p. 94); and that this quarter took its name from prince Attab, great-grandson of Omeyya (Dozy, Gloss. p. 243.)

¶ Hence perhaps tabinet, spelt tabinet in Webster, and explained as 'a more delicate kind of tabby;' but Trench, Eng. Past and Present, tells us that it was named from M. Tabinet, a French Protestant refugee, who introduced the making of tabinet in Dublin; for which statement he adduces no reference or authority.

TABERNACLE, a tent used as a temple, a tent. (F., = L.) M. E. tabernacle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 20. = F. tabernacle, 'a tabernacle;' Cot. = Lat. tabernaculum, double dimin. of taberna, a hut, shed; see TEVENS.

TABID, wasted by disease. (L.) Rare; in Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. tabidus, wasting away, decaying, languishing. = Lat. tabes, a wasting away; whence also Lat. tabere, to waste away, languish. Allied to Gk. τάρβω, in the same sense, Lithuan. tabiti, to run, flow. = TAK, to flow; cf. Skt. tab, to start. Fick, i. 587. See Thaw. Der. tabify, to cause to melt, Blount's Gloss., from F. tabifier, to waste (Cot.), due to Lat. tabescere, to cause to melt.

TABLE, a smooth board, usually supported on legs. (F., = L.) M. E. table, Chaucer, C. T. 355. = F. table. = Lat. tabula, a plank, flat board, table. = TA, TAN, to stretch, spread out; so that the lit. sense is 'extended;' cf. Skt. tan, pp. of tan, to stretch. See Thin. Der. table-e, pl. sb., a kind of game like backgammon, played on flat boards, Rob. of Glouc. p. 192, l. 3; table, verb, Cymb. l. 4. 6; table-book, Hamlet, ii. 2. 136; table-talk, Merch. Ven. iii. 2. 93; table-land, land flat like a table; table-st, Cymb. v. 4. 109, from F. tablette, 'a little table;' Cot., dream of F. table. Also tabet-er, tabet-er, from Lat. tabula. Also tab-er, borrowed from F. tableau, dimin. of table. Also taffir-et, q. v.

TABOO, TABU, to forbid approach to, forbid the use of. (Polynesian.) 'Taboo, a political prohibition and religious consecration interdict, formerly of great force among the inhabitants of the islands of the Pacific; hence, a total prohibition of intercourse with, or approach to anything;' Webster. It seems to be the same as the Tahitian custom of te pi, described in Max Muller, Lect. on Language, vol. ii. lect. 1.

TABOUR, TABOR, a small drum. (F., = Span., = Arab., = Fern.?) M. E. tabour, Havelok, 2329. = F. tabour, 'a drum, a tabor;' Cot. Mod. F. tambour; Littre gives the spellings tabur, 11th cent.; tabor, 13th to 16th century. Cf. Prov. tabur, tabor (cited by Littre); Span. tambor, O. Span. stambor (Minshew); Ital. tamburo. The F. word was most likely borrowed from Span. tambor, also called atabor, where the prefix a- stands for the Arab. def. art. al, shewing that the word was borrowed from the Moors. = Arab. tambūr, 'a kind of lute or guitar with a long neck, and six brass strings; also, a drum;' Rich. Dict., p. 976. He gives it also as a Pers. word, and Devic seems to think that the word was borrowed from Persian. The initial letter is the 19th of the Pers. alphabet, sometimes written th, not the ordinary t. On the same page of Rich. Dict. we also find Pers. tambūr, a trumpet, clarion, bagpipe, tambūr, a small drum; also Arab. tah, a drum, a tambourin, Pers. tahab, a small drum, p. 964. Also Pers. tahab (with the ordinary t), a drum, kettle-drum, a large pipe, flute, or hautboy, p. 365; tahārah, a drum, tabour, tambourin, a drum beaten to scare away birds, p. 364. See the account in Devic, who considers the form tambūr as derived from Pers. tahab; and the form tahārah to be dimin. of Pers. tahāra, a form not found. β. It will be observed that the sense comprises various instruments that make a din, and we may note Port. atabak, a kettle-drum, clearly derived from a for al, the Arab. article, and Pers. tahab, a drum. All the above words contain a base tah, which we may regard, with Mr. Wedgwood, as being of imitative origin, like the English clap and tap. This is rendered likely by the occurrence of Arab. tahab, the sound made by the dashing of waterfalls; Rich. Dict. 963; cf. Arab. tahādī, a drummer, ibid. Der. tahar-ar, Temp. iii. s. 160; tahour-ans, Antony, iv. s. 37, from F. tahourin, 'a little drum,' Cot.; tahour-as, Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. s. 78, a dimin. form; shortened to tahar, Gen. xxxi. 37. And see tambourin.

TABULAR, TABULATE; see Table.
TACHE (1), a fastening. (C.) In Exod. xxvi. 6. 'A tache, a buckle, a clasp, a bracelet, Spinter;' Baret, s. v. Claspe. A weakened form of tach, just as housch is for housch, church is for kirch, &c.; cf. the derived words attach, de-tach. Minshew, ed. 1637, actually gives: 'To tache, or tache.' See Tack.

TACHE (2), a blot, blemish; see Totohy.
TACIT, silent. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 430. No doubt directly from Lat., though Cot. gives F. tacite, 'silent.' = Lat. tacitus, silent. = Lat. tarsus, to be silent. Cognate with Goth. tahan, to be silent, Icel. þaga, Swed. tiga, to be silent. All from a base TAK, with the sense 'to be silent.' Der. tacit-urn, from F. taciturnus, 'silent,' Cot.; tacit-urn-i-ty, Troilus, iv. s. 75, from F. taciturnité, 'taciturnity,' Cot.; from Lat. acc. taciturnitatem.

TACK, a small nail, a fastening; to tacken. (C.) M. E. takke, 'Tack, or botun, Fisula,' Prompt. Parv.; where we also find: 'Takhyn, or festyn to-gedur, or some-what sowyn to-gedur.' The sb. is spelt tak, Legends of Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 145, l. 419. Of Celtic origin. = Irish taca, a peg, pin, nail, fastening; Gael. tacaid, a tack, peg, stab; Breton tack, a nail, tacka, to fasten with a nail. An initial s appears to have been lost, which appears in Irish stang, a peg, pin, Gael. stang, a peg, cloak-pin, allied to E. stake. From STAG, to strike, to touch, take hold of; Fick, l. 833. See Stake, Take, and Attach. β. The nautical use of tack is from the same source. 'In nautical language a tack is the rope which draws forward the lower corner of a square sail, and fastens it to the windward side of the ship in sailing transversely to the wind, the ship being on the starboard or larboard tack according as it presents its right or left side to the wind; the ship is said to tack when it turns towards the wind, and changes the tack on which it is sailing;' Wedgwood. Cf. to tack, to sew slightly, fasten slightly. Der. tacks, q. v.; and see tack-les. Also tack-ol, a small nail (Levine).

TACKLE, equipment, implements, gear, tools. (Scand.) M. E. takel, Chaucer, C. T. 106; Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, 883; takel, the tackle of a ship, Gower, C. A. iii. 391. = Swed. and O. Swed. tackel, tackle of a ship (Ihre), whence tackla, to rig; Dan. tackel, tackle, whence tackla, to rig. Cf. Du. takel, a pulley, tackle, whence takelen, to rig. β. The suffix -el (for -la = Aryan -us) is used to form substantives from verbs, as in E. sett-les, sb., a thing to sit on, from sit, stopp-les from stop, shoo-les from shoo, shoat-les from shoat, gird-les from gird, and denotes the implement. Tack-les is that which takes or grasps, holding the masts, &c. firmly in their places; from Icel. taka, O. Swed. taka (mod. Swed. taga), to take, seize, grasp, hold, which had a much stronger sense than the mod. E. tak; cf. Icel. tak, a group in wrestling, taka, a seizing, capture; and observe the wide application of tackle in the sense of implements or gear. γ. Often derived from W. taci, an instrument, fool, tackle; but the W. word may have been borrowed from E., or they may be cognate. The E. tack (of Scand. origin) may be related to E. tach (of Celtic origin), because as initials s appears to have been lost; see Tack, Take. Der. tackel-rag, Rich. III. iv. 4. 331.

TACT, peculiar skill, delicate handling. (L.) Modern; Webster gives examples from Maculay. Todd says: 'Tact, touch, an old word, long disused, but of late revived in the secondary senses of sensib. as a masterly or eminent effort, and the power of exciting the affections.' He then cites a passage containing 'sense of tact,'

l. e. touch, from Roma, Arcana Microcosmi (1653), p. 66. = Lat. tactus, touch. = Lat. tactus, pp. of tangere, to touch; see Tangent. Der. tact-able, that may be touched, Massinger, Parl. of Love, li. s. 8, a coined word, made to rhyme with tractable; tact-ile, from Lat. tactilis, tangible; tact-ion, a touching, Blount. TACTICS, the art of arranging or manœuvring forces. (Gk.) 'And teaches all the tactics;' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iv. 1 (Lackfenger). = Gk. τακτική, sb. pl., military tactics. = Gk. τακτικός, adj., fit for arranging, belonging to tactics. = Gk. τακτός, ordered, arranged; verbal adj. from τάσσειν (= τάσσω), to arrange, order. Of uncertain origin; Curtius, ii. 328. The base is certainly TAK; Fick, l. 588. Der. tactic, adj., from Gk. τακτικός; tactic-ian, a coined word.

TADPOLE, a young frog in its first stage, having a tail. (Hybrid; E. and C.) 'Young frogs. . . while they be tadpoles and have little wriggling tails;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 10. Called bull-head in Cotgrave; he has: 'Chabot, the little fish called a gull, bull-head, or miller's thumb; also the little water-vermine called a bull-head.' Also: 'Testard, the pollard, or chevin fish, also the little black water-vermine called a bull-head.' Observe that F. chabot is from Lat. caput, a head (cf. Lat. capite, a fish with a large head); that testard is from O. F. teste, a head; that chevin is from F. chef, a head; and that bull-head contains the E. head; the striking feature about the tadpole is that it appears nearly all head, with a little tail attached which is body and tail in one. See Wedgwood, who adduces also E. dial. poll-head, Lowl. Sc. pow-head, a tadpole (which merely repeats the notion of head), E. dial. polwiggle, pollywig, a tadpole, with which we may compare wiggle or waggie, to wag the tail. β. Hence tad-pole = toad-poll, the toad that seems all poll; see Toad and Poll. The former part of the word is E., the latter (ultimately) of Celtic origin.

TAFFEREL, TAFFERAIL, the upper part of the stem of a ship. (Du., = L.) 'Taffrel, the uppermost part, frame, or rail of a ship behind, over the poop;' Phillips, ed. 1706. = Du. tafervel, a pannel, a picture; Hezham explains it by 'a painter's table or board,' and adds the dimin. tafervilken, 'a tablet, or a small board.' The taffrail is so called because it is flat like a table on the top, and sometimes ornamented with carved work; cf. G. tafel, boarded work, flooring, wainscoting. β. The Du. tafervel stands for tafel-vel, a dimin. from Du. tafel, a table; just as G. täfel is from G. tafel, a table. The Du. and G. tafel are not to be considered as Teut. words; the M. H. G. form is tauwil, O. H. G. tauwil, borrowed from Lat. tabula, a table, just as O. H. G. tauwern, a tavern, is from Lat. taberna. See Table. ¶ The spelling taffrail is prob. due to confusion with E. rail.

TAFFETA, TAFFETY, a thin glossy silk stuff, with a wavy lustre. (F., = Ital., = Pers.) 'Tafeta, a masser of sylke, taffetas;' Palgrave. M. E. taffeta, Chaucer, C. T. 442. = F. taffetas, 'taffata;' Cot. = Ital. taffeta, 'taffeta;' Florio. = Pers. tāfāh, 'twisted, woven, a kind of silken cloth, taffeta;' Rich. Dict. p. 356. = Pers. stāfan, to twist, to spin, curl, &c.; also to burn, glow, shine; ibid. It is difficult to see how it can be the same word in all the senses. β. In the sense 'to glow, burn,' it is clearly cognate with Skt. tap, to warm, to shine; see Topid. Fick (l. 329) notes Zend tap, to burn, tafta, enraged, passionate.

TAG, a point of metal at the end of a lace, anything tacked on at the end of a thing. (Scand.) 'An aglet or tag of a poynt;' Baret, ed. 1580. 'Are all thy points so void of Reasons tags?' Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 61. A 'point' was a tagged lace; cf. 'Tag of a poynt, Ferretum; Levine. = Swed. tagg, a prickle, point, tooth. + Low G. takk, a point, tooth. β. The Low G. takk is the same word as E. tack, a small sail, and G. tacke, a tooth, tine, prong. Perhaps all these words are of Celtic origin. See Tack, Tacha. Der. tag, verb; tag-rag, used by Stanyhurst (tr. of Virgil, ed. Arber, p. 21) to mean 'to small pieces,' but usual in the sense of 'every appendage and shred,' a shortened form of tag and rag, as in 'they all came in, both tags and rags,' Spenser, State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 662, col. 2. So also tag and rag, Whitgift's Works, l. 315 (Parker Soc.) So also tag-rag-and-bobtail, where bobtail = short or bunched tail, from bob, a bunch; see note to Bob.

TAIL (1), the end of the back-bone of an animal, a hairy appendage, appendage. (E.) M. E. tail, teyl, Chaucer, C. T. 3876. = A. S. taeg, taegol, a tail, Grein, ii. 523. + Icel. taeg. + Swed. tagel, hair of the tail or mane. + Goth. taig, hair, Mark, l. 6. + G. zagal, a tail. β. Root uncertain; it has been compared with Skt. dāp, the skirt of a garment, from Skt. dāp, dāp, to bite, allied to Goth. tehan, to tear. Perhaps the orig. sense was a shred, hence shaggy rough hair, &c. Fick, iii. 116. Der. tail-piece, a piece or small drawing at the tail or end of a chapter or book. Also tail-od, Rich. Coeur de Lion, l. 1868.

TAIL (2), the term applied to an estate which is limited to certain hairs. (F.=L.) Better spelt taille. 'This limitation,' or taille, is either general or special; 'Cowel, in Todd's Johnson; see the whole article. = F. taille, 'a cutting,' &c.; Cot. The same word as taille, a tally; see Tally, Tailor, Entail.

TAILOR, one who cuts out and makes cloth garments. (F.=L.) Properly 'a cutter.' M. E. tailor, taylor, Rob. of Glouc. p. 313, l. 5. = O. F. tailleur, later tailleur, 'a cutter'; Cot. = F. tailleur; to cut. = F. taille, an incision, a slitting. = Lat. taila, a thin rod, stick; also a cutting, slip, layer; an agricultural word. See Dies, who cites from Nonius, 4. 473; 'tailas scissions lignorum vel praeagmina Varro dicit de re rust. lib. I.; nam etiam nunc rustica voce intertalare dicitur dividere vel excindere ramum.' This verb intertalare is preserved in the Span. entretallar, to slash. Root unknown. Der. tailor-ing. And see tally, de-tail, en-tail, re-tail.

TAINTE, a tinge, dye, stain, blemish. (F.=L.) In Shak. Mach. iv. 3. 124. = F. taint, spelt taint, 'a tincture, die, stain'; Cot. = F. taint, pp. of taindre, 'to stain,' id. = Lat. tingere; see Tinge. Der. taint, vb., Romeo, l. 4. 76. ¶ Perhaps confused with attaint, from taingere.

TAKE, to lay hold of, seize, grasp, get. (Scand.) M. E. take, pt. t. tok, pp. taken, Chaucer, C. T. 572; pp. take, id. 2649. Not a true A. S. word, but borrowed from Norse. = Icel. taka, pt. t. tók, pp. takinn, to lay hold of, seize, grasp (a very common word); Swed. taga, O. Swed. taka; Dan. tagge. + Goth. tahan, pt. t. tahōn, pp. tahans, to touch. β. The Goth. tahan is certainly cognate with Lat. tingere (pt. t. tingit, pp. tingo-tingo = tag-tingo), to touch; and the identity of the initial sounds shows that an initial s has been lost; see Curtius, l. 269. Hence the root is of STAG, to touch, grasp, thrust, sting, stick or pierce; whence also Gk. τε-ρα-σ-ω, having taken, Skt. si, to be sharp, and A. S. stician, to sting. See Stake and Stiock (1). Der. take-ing, take-ing-y. Allied words are wake, stick (1); also take, tack, tag, tack-le, atack, at-tack, de-tack; tact, tag-ant, cow-tact, in-tact, &c.; see under langant.

TALC, a mineral occurring in thin flakes. (F.=Span.=Arab.) 'Oil of talc;' Ben Jonson, Epigram to the Small-pox; Underwoods, lib. 11. And see Nares. = F. talc (Cot.) = Span. talco. = Arab. talq, 'talc, mica;' Rich. Dict. p. 974.

TALC, a number, reckoning, narrative. (E.) M. E. talc; see Chaucer, Cant. Tales. = A. S. talca, a number, a narrative; Grein, ii. 531. + Da. taal, language, tongue, speech. + Icel. tal, talk, a tale; tala, a number, a speech. + Dan. talke, speech. + Swed. tal, speech, number. + G. zahl, number; O. H. G. zala. β. All from Teut. type TALA, a tale, number; Fick, iii. 120. It is probable that Goth. talca, uninflected, taljam, to instruct, are related words. The orig. sense was prob. 'order,' whence (1) number, (2) orderly arrangement of speech, narrative. The prob. root is of DAR, to see, consider; cf. Skt. dri, to consider, respect, dhara, regard, concern, care. Fick, l. 617. Perhaps E. tail is related; see Till (2). Der. talc-bearing, talc-bearing, talc-tale (Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave has 'a talc-bearing or talc-tale'); talc-tell-er, P. Plowman, B. ex. 297. Also tall, q. v. ¶ But not talk.

TALENT, a weight or sum of money, natural gift or ability, inclination. (F.=L.=Gk.) See Trench. Study of Words, and Select Glossary. We derive the sense of ability from the parable in Matt. xxv, our talents being gifts of God. The M. E. talent occurs in the sense of will or inclination, from the figure of the inclination or tilting of a balance. M. E. talent; whence mal-talent, ill-will, Rom. of the Rose, 274, 340; and see Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 15; King Almsunder, 2280. = F. talent, 'a talent in money; also will, desire, an earnest humor unto;' Cot. = Lat. talentum. = Gk. τάλαντον, a balance; a weight, weight or sum of money, talent. Named from the notion of lifting and bearing; allied to ταλα (stem ταλα-ν-), bearing, enduring, suffering, ε-ταλα, I endured, Lat. tal-erare, to endure, tal-ere, to lift, sustain, Skt. tal, to lift, weigh, talana, lifting, talā, a balance, weight. All from of TAL (for TAR), to lift; Fick, l. 601. See Tolerate. Der. talent-ed, endowed with talent, added by Todd to Johnson, with the remark that the word is old; he gives a quotation from Archbp. Abbot, in Rushworth's Collections, p. 449; which book first appeared between 1659 and 1701, and treats of matters from 1618-1648; see an excellent note on talented in Modern English, by F. Hall p. 70.

TALISMAN, a spell. (Span.=Arab.=Gk.) 'In magic, talisman, and cabal;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 530. The F. is also talisman, but is a late word; both F. and E. words were prob. taken directly from Spanish. = Span. talisman, a magical character; also a doctor of the Mohammedan law, in which sense Littré notes its use in French also. = Arab. talisman, or talism, 'a talisman or magical image, upon which, under a certain horoscope, are engraved mystical characters, as charms against enchantment;' Rich. Dict. p. 974. (Dies thinks that the Span. talisman was derived rather from the Arab. pl. talismān than from the sing. form; which is probable enough.] = Gk. τάλασμα, a payment; used in late Gk. to mean initiation or mystery (Devic); cf. τάλασμα, an accomplishment or completion. = Gk. τάλαστω, to accomplish, fulfill, complete, end; also, to pay. = Gk. τάλαστω, end, completion. = of TAR, to pass over; cf. Skt. tri, to pass over, accomplish, fulfill, conquer. It is remarkable that, from the same root, we have Skt. tura, a passage, also a spell for banishing demons (Benfey); so also Gk. τάλαστω means initiation into a mystery, whence the sense of the derived sb. τάλασμα. Der. talisman-er.

TALK, to discourse. (Scand.=Lithuan.) M. E. talken, Wyclif, Luke, xxiv. 15; and much earlier, in St. Marharette, p. 13, Ancren Riwle, p. 439. = Swed. talta, Dan. talte, to interpret, explain; Icel. talta, to interpret, plead one's case. It is quite clear that the vowel a in the E. word is due to confusion with M. E. talien, talon, to tell tales; indeed, Tyrwhitt actually prints talien in Chaucer, C. T. 774, where the Sir-text, A. 772, has talon in all the MSS. It is, however, a curious fact, that talk is not a Teutonic word at all, as will appear. β. The Icel. talta is from taltr, sb., an interpreter, spelt taltr in Dan. and Swed., also in Dutch, and in M. H. G.; the word even passed into E., and we find M. E. talk in the vague sense of 'man'; Gawayn and the Grene Knight, l. 3. The irregularity seen in the identity of form in Swed. and M. H. G. is due to the fact that the word is non-Teutonic. = Lithuan. talbas, an interpreter; whence talbanti, talbėti, to interpret. And perhaps we may further connect this with Skt. taltr, to suppose, utter one's supposition, reflect, speak, taltr, sb., reasoning. ¶ This remarkable word points to a time when some communications were carried on, through an interpreter, between the Scandinavians and Lithuanians. The communication was prob. of a religious nature, since the Lithuan. per talbas kalbėti means 'to preach by means of an interpreter.' It is the only Lithuanian word in English. Der. talk-er; talk-er-er, a strangely coined word, spelt talentise in The Craft of Lovena, et. 4, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 341. Hence talk-at-er-er, &c.

TALL, high in stature, lofty. (E. or C.?) See Trench. Select Glossary. M. E. tall. 'Tall, or seemly, decent, degnas;' Prompt. Parv. 'So humble and tall;' Chaucer, Compl. of Mar. l. 38, where the sense appears to be 'obedient or docile, or obsequious.' In old plays it means 'valiant, fine, bold, great;' Halliwell. In the Plowman's Tale, st. 3, untall seems to mean 'poorly clad.' β. The curious sense of 'docile' is our guide to its etymology; this clearly links it to Goth. tal, only used in the comp. untal, indocile, disobedient, uninflected, which is allied to gastils, convenient, suitable, gastilan, to obtain. Hence, just as small corresponds to A. S. smal, we have tall corresponding to an A. S. tal. This word is very rare, but it occurs in the comp. adj. loft-tal, friendly, Grein, ii. 176. Still more important are the forms untal, untale, bad, used to gloss mal in the Northumb. Gospels, Matt. xvii. 23. Another allied word is the adj. tal, fit, good, excellent, in common use (Grein, ii. 532); and cf. tala, talma, well, excellently, id. 524. The orig. sense may have been fit, docile, suitable; from whence it is no great step to the notion of 'comely,' which is the sense suitable to its use in plays. Lye gives also A. S. ungastal, bad, inconvenient, which presupposes the adj. tal or gastal, good, convenient; and Sommer gives ungastalan, unprofitableness, as if from tal, profitable. These traces of the word seem sufficient. See further under Till (1). γ. Perhaps, in the sense of 'lofty,' the word may be Celtic. We find tal, tall, high, both in W. and Cornish; Williams instances tal awn, the high rock, in St. Allen. It is remarkable that the Irish talca means 'meet, fit, proper, just.' Further light is desired as to this difficult word. Der. tall-ness.

TALLOW, fat of animals melted. (O. Low G.) M. E. talgh, Reliquie Antiq. i. 53; talgh, Eng. Gilda, p. 359, l. 11; talgha, Rich. Coer de Lion, 2522. = O. Du. talgh, talch, tallow, Hexham; mod. Du. talh, Low G. talg; Dan. and Swed. talg. + Icel. talgr, also talgr, tallow. β. There is an A. S. talg, talga, a stain, dye, but its connection with tallow is very doubtful; the sense is very different; see Grein, ii. 524. It is more to the purpose to observe that the G. word is also talg, tallow, suet; whence talgm, to tallow, to smear. This G. word must either have been borrowed from Low G. (since it begins with t instead of z); or an initial s has been lost; or the word is non-Teutonic. Origin uncertain. Perhaps we may further compare the Bavarian ver-talhen, to besmear; Schmeiler, l. 505. Some imagine a Slavonic origin.

TALLY, a stick cut or notched so as to match another stick, used for keeping accounts; an exact match. (F.=L.) M. E. taille, Chaucer, C. T. 572; whence tailen, verb, to score on a tally, P. Plowman, B. v. 429. = F. taille, 'a notch, nick, incision, notching, nicking; . . . also, a tally, or score kept on a piece of wood;' Cot. = Lat. talus, a slip of wood; see Tallow. It is probable that the final -y in tally is due to the frequent use of the F. pp. taillé, 'cut, nicked, notched,' as applied to the piece of wood scored, in place of the sb. taille. The final -y in lev-y, jur-y, pan-y is likewise due to the F. pp. suffix. Der. tally, verb; tally-shop. And see en-tail, de-tail, tai-or.

TALMUD, the body of Hebrew laws, with comments. (Chaldee.) See Talmud in Index to Parker Society. Spelt talmud, thalmud in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; talmud in Minshew, ed. 1627; thalmud in Cotgrave. = Chaldee talmud, instruction, doctrine; cf. Heb. talmid, a disciple, scholar, from tamad, to learn, hammad, to teach.

TALON, the claw of a bird of prey. (F., = L.) Spelt talant in Palgrave (with excrement t after n). He gives: 'Talant of a byrde, the hynder claws, talon.' Thus the talon was particularly used of the bird's spur or heel. M. E. talon, Allit. Romance of Alexander, 5454; taloun, Mandeville's Travels in Spec. of English, p. 174, l. 130. = F. talon, 'a heel'; Cot. = Low Lat. talounis, acc. of talus, a heel. = Lat. talus, heel. Root uncertain.

TAMARIND, the fruit of an E. Indian tree. (F., = Span., = Arab. and Pers.) Spelt tamarinde in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helith, b. iii. c. 5. = F. tamarind, 'a small, soft, and dark-red Indian date'; Cot. Also tamarinds, 'the Indian date-tree'; id. = Span. tamarindo. (Cf. Ital. tamarindo; Florio gives the Ital. pl. tamarindi, and Minshew the Span. pl. tamarindus, without mention of the sing. form.) = Arab. amar, a ripe date, a dry or preserved date; and Hind, India; whence amar'ul Hind, a tamarind, lit. date of India; Rich. Dict. pp. 446, 1691. The Arab. tamar is allied to Heb. tamar, a palm-tree, occurring in the Bible as Tamar, a proper name. The word Hind is borrowed from Persian (which turns s into h), and is derived from Skt. sindhu, the river Indus; see Indigo.

TAMARISK, the name of a tree. (L.) Spelt tamariske in Minshew, ed. 1627. Cf. F. tamaris, 'tamarisk,' in Cot.; but the E. word keeps the h. = Lat. tamariscus, also tamaris, tamarice, tamariscus, a tamarisk. (The Gk. name is populus.) = Skt. tamardaka, tamardakid, tamdala, a tree with a dark bark; allied to temas, darkness; from tem, to choke (be dark); Fick, iii. 593. See Dim.

TAMBOUR, a small drum-like circular frame, for embroidering. (F., = Span., = Arab., = Pers.?) In Todd's Johnson. = F. tambour, a drum, a tambour; brader au tambour, to do tambour-work; Hamilton. See further under Tabour. Der. tambour-ins, spelt tambourin in Spencer, Shep. Kalender, June, l. 60, from F. tambourin, a tabor (Hamilton), dimin. of F. tambour.

TAME, subdued, made gentle, domesticated. (E.) M. E. tame, Wyclif, Mark, v. 4. = A. S. tama, Matt. xxi. 5; whence tamias, vb., to tame, spelt tamias in Ælfric's Colloquy (section on the Fowler), in Wright's Voc. l. 7. = Du. tam. = Icel. tamr. = Swed. and Dan. tam. = Gk. tamia. Cf. Goth. gotamjan, to tame; a causal verb. = All from Teut. type TAMA, tame; Fick, iii. 117. = G. DAM, to tame; as seen in Skt. dam, to be tame, also to tame, Gk. ἄμαρτος, Lat. domare, to tame; Curtius, l. 287. Der. tame, vb., as above; tame-ly, -ness; tame-er, tame-able; also (from same root) domat, q. v., in-dom-it-able. And see term (2).

TAMMY, the same as Stamin, q. v. See Tamias in Names.

TAMPER, to meddle, practise upon, play with. (F., = L.) 'You have been tampering, any time these three days. Thus to disgrace me;' Beaumont and Fletcher, The Captain, iv. 3 (Jacomo). The same word as temper, but used in a bad sense; to temper is to moderate, allay by influence, but is here made to mean to interfere with, to influence in a bad way. See Temper. Doubtless, temper.

TAMPION, a kind of plug. (F., = Du. or Low G.) 'Tampion for a gun [gun], tampion;' Palgrave. = F. tampion, 'a bung or stopple'; Cot. A nasalised form of tapon, 'a bung or stopple'; id. Formed with suffix -ion (Lat. -ionem) from F. taper (or tapper), 'to bung, or stop with a bung,' id.; marked as a Picard word, and borrowed, accordingly, from Du. or Low German. = Du. tap, 'a bunge or a stopple,' Hexham; Low G. tappe, a tap, bung. See Tap (1).

TAN, oak-bark or other bark used for converting hides into leather. (F., = Bret.) The sb. is, etymologically, the orig. word, but is rarely seen in books; Levis has only tan as a verb. Rich. quotes 'skunnes in tan-nar' from Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. iii. p. 104. The M. E. tannare, verb, to tan, occurs in Eng. Gilda, p. 358, l. 16, and the sb. tannar is common, as in P. Plowman, C. i. 223, &c. = F. tan, 'the bark of a young oak, wherewith leather is tanned'; Cot. = Bret. tann, an oak, occasionally used (but rarely) with the sense of tan; Leonidec. The G. tannus, a fir-tree, is prob. the same word, and, if so, a Celtic word; the names of oak and fir seem to have been confined; see Max Muller, Lect. vol. ii, App. to Lect. v. Der. tan, verb, as above; tan-er; tan-er-y, from F. tannarie, 'tanning, also a tan-house,' Cot. Also tan-er, a coined word; tan-ia, F. tannia (Hamilton), a coined word; tan-lug, one scorched by the sun, Cymb. iv. 4. 29. Also tan-er-y, q. v.

TANDEM, applied to two horses harnessed one before the other instead of side by side. (L.) So called because harnessed at length, by a peon upon the word in universality along Latin. = Lat. tandem, at len h. = Lat. tam, so, so far; and suffix -dem, allied to -dem in quo dem. From pronom. bases TA and DA.

TANG (1), a strong or offensive taste, esp. of something extraneous. (Du.) 'It is said of the best oil that it hath no tast, that is, no tang, but the natural gust of oil therein;' Fuller, Worthies, England (R.) M. E. taunge, 'sharpness of lycure in tastynge'; Prompt. Parv. Suggested by O. Du. tangere, 'sharpe, or tart upon the tongue; tangere hanc, tart or byting cheese'; Hexham. The lit. sense of tanger is 'pinching.' = Du. tang, a pair of tongs, pinces; cognate with E. tong; see Tonga, and Tang (3). Cf. M. H. G. tangor, sharp, sharp-tasted.

TANG (2), to make a shrill sound. (E.) Shak has it both as sb. and verb. 'A tongue with a tang,' i. e. with a shrill sound, Temp. ii. s. 51. 'Let thy tongue tang,' i. e. ring out; Tw. Nt. ii. s. 163, iii. 4. 78. An imitative word, allied to ting, whence the frequentative tingle; also to tiak, whence the frequent. tiakle. Cf. Prov. ting-tung, the saints-bell; tingle-tingle, a small bell, which occurs in Randleph's Amintas (1640); Halliwell. So also O. Du. tang-tangon, to tinkle; Hexham. Cf. F. tanton (= tang-tang), 'the bell that hangs about the neck of a cow'; Cot. See Tingle, Tinker, Twang.

TANG (3), the part of a knife which goes into the haft, the tongue of a buckle, the prong of a fork. (Scand.) See Halliwell; who cites: 'A tange of a knife, primum,' from a MS. Dict. abt. 1500. It also means a bee's sting. 'Pugro, a tange;' Wright's Voc. p. 221. 'Tangge of a bee, Aculeus; Tangge of a knife, Primum;' Prompt. Parv. = Icel. tangi, a spit or projection of land; the pointed end by which the blade of a knife is driven into the handle, allied to tang (gen. tangar), a smith's tong; tangja, to fasten. So called because it is the part sapped and held fast by the handle; so the tangue of a buckle (corrupted from tang of a buckle) ups and holds fast the strap; the bee's sting ups or stings. The form tang in the Prompt. Parv. answers to the sing. of E. tong. See Tonga.

TANG (4), sea-wood; see Tangla.

TANGENT, a line which meets a circle, and, being produced, does not cut it. (L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. = Lat. tangens, touching, stem of pres. part. of tangere (base tag-), to touch; pp. tactus. = Gk. base vey-, to touch, seen in vervayen, having taken. = Goth. tahn, to touch. = Icel. taha, to take; see Take. Der. tangent-i-ol, in the direction of the tangent, Tatler, no. 43; tangent-y; also (from pp. tactus) tact. And see tang-ible, tark, tubs, tusts.

TANGIBLE, perceptible by the touch, that can be realised. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. tangible, 'tangible'; Cot. = Lat. tangibilis, touchable; formed with suffix -ibilis from tangere, to touch; see Tangent. Der. tangibil-y, tangibilit-y.

TANGLE, to interweave, knot together confusedly, ensnare. (Scand.) 'I tangell thynges so together that they can nat well be parted asunder, Jembrouille;' Palgrave. Levis has the comp. entangle. To tangle is 'to keep twisting together like sea-wood'; a frequentative verb from tang, sb., sea weed, a Northern word. = Dan. tang, Swed. slag, Icel. tang, kelp or bladder-wrack, a kind of sea-wood; whence the idea of confused heap. We also find the dimin. Icel. þongull, sea-weed. Cf. Norman dialect taugon (a Norse word), explained by Méviver as Fucus Anguliformis. (The G. tang, sea-wood, was borrowed from Scand; for it begins with t, not ð) The orig. form was THANGA, Fick, iii. 129; allied to Thong, q. v.

β. We also find tangle in the sense of sea weed (Halliwell); and the verb to tangle may have been made directly from it. It makes no great difference; cf. Icel. þongull, as above. Der. tangl, sb., which seems to be a later word than the verb, Milton, P. L. ix. 632; in-tangle, q. v.

TANIST, a presumptive heir to a prince. (Irish.) Spelt taniist in Spencer, View of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 611. = Irish tanista, the second person in rank, the presumptive or apparent heir to a prince, a lord. Cf. tanas, dominion, lordship. Perhaps from Irish tan, a country, region, territory. Der. taniist-ry, a coined word, to signify the custom of electing a taniist; also in Spencer, as above.

TANK, a large cistern. (Port., = L.) In Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 66; and at p. 43 in another edition (Todd). Also in Dryden, Don Sebastian, ii. 3. The same word as Stank, q. v. The form tank is Portuguese, which is the only Romance language that drops the initial s. = Port. tanque, a tank, pond; the same word as Span. estanque, O. F. estanc, F. daung, Prov. estanc, stanc, Ital. stagno. = Lat. stagnum, a pool; see Stank, Stagnant.

TANKARD, a large vessel for holding drink. (F., = L., = Gk.?) M. E. tankard, used to translate Lat. ampatera, Wright's Voc. i. 178, l. 18; and in Prompt. Parv. = O. F. tankard, 'a tankard, in Rabelais'; Cot. Cf. O. Du. tankhardt, 'a wooden [wooden] tankard,' Hexham; a word prob. borrowed from the O. F. β. The suffix -ard is common in O. F., shewing that the word was really, at some time, French; the Irish tankard must have been borrowed from E., and does not help us. γ. Origin unknown; the best suggestion is that in Mahn, that it may have been coined, by metathesis, out of Lat. cantharus, a tankard, large pot; which is from Gk. κάνθαρος, the same. ¶ The suggestion in E. Muller, that it is connected with tanak, is completely disproved by chronology; the word tanard is older than tanak, in English at least, by two centuries and more; besides which, tanak is a corrupt form of tanak, as shewn.

TANSY, a tall plant, with small yellow flowers. (F., = Low Lat., = Gk.) M. E. Tansye; 'Hoc tansetum, tansyo, Wright's Voc. i. 276, col. 2. 'Tansy, an herbe, tansio, Palgrave. = O. F. tansio, as in Palgrave, later tansie, 'the herb tansie;' Cot. Other forms are Ital. and Span. tansetto; O. F. athanasio, Cot.; O. Ital. atanasia, 'the herb tansie,' Florio; Port. atanasia, athanasia; also Late Lat. tanacetum.

β. Of these, the late Lat. tanacetum (spelt tanacetum above) is nothing but the Ital. form Latinised, and it means properly 'a bed of tansy,' as remarked in Prior, Popular Names of British Plants. The O. F. athanasio, O. Ital. atanasia, and Port. atanasia, athanasia, answer to a Lat. form athanasia, which is only the Gk. ἀθανασία, immortality, in Latin spelling. Prior says that athanasia was 'the name under which it was sold in the shops in Lyta's time.' The plant is bitter and aromatic, and was (and is) used in medicine, whence, probably, the name. Prior thinks there is a reference to 'Lucian's Dialogues of the Gods, no. iv, where Jupiter, speaking of Ganymede, says to Mercury, ἀθανασία εἶδος, ἡ ἔστιν, ἀθανασία τῆς ἀθανασίας ἐστὶ ἀθανασία φύσις, take him away, and when he has drunk of immortality, bring him back as cupbearer to us; the ἀθανασία here has been misunderstood, like ἀθανασία in other passages, for some special plant.' Cf. O. Ital. atanasia, 'the rose campion,' Florio; lit. 'the immortal.' γ. The Gk. ἀθανασία is allied to ἀθάνατος, immortal; from ἀ, negative prefix, and θανάτος, a sor. of θάνατος, to die.

TANTALISEN, to tease or torment, by offering something that is just out of reach and is kept so. (Gk.) 'What greater plague can hell itself devise, Than to be willing thus to tanaisise?' Answer to Ben Jonson's Ode (Come leave the lashed Stage), by T. Randolph, st. 3; printed in Jonson's Works, after the play of The New Inn. Formed with the suffix -ise (F., = -iser, Lat. -isare, Gk. -isō) from the proper name Tantalus, Gk. Τάνταλος, in allusion to his story. The fable was that he was placed up to his chin in water, which fled from his lips whenever he desired to drink. This myth relates to the sun, which evaporates water, but remains, as it were, unaltered. The name Tantalus may be explained as 'enduring,' from the ✓ TAL, to endure; see Tolerate, Talent. Der. tantalis- (with F. suffix -ium = Lat. -ium = Gk. -ium), Beau. and Fletcher, Wit at Several Weapons, act ii, l. 10 from end.

TANTAMOUNT, amounting to as much, equal. (F., = L.) Rich. points out, by 2 quotations from Bp. Taylor, Episcopy Asserted, §§ 9 and 31, that it was first used as a verb; which agrees with the fact that amount was properly at first a verb. It meant 'to amount to as much' = F. tant, so much, as much; and E. AMOUNT, q. v. β. The F. tant = Lat. tantum, neut. of tantus, so great; formed from pronominal base TA, he, she, so as to answer to quantus, from the base KA, who. See THE.

TAP (1), to strike or knock gently. (F., = Teut.) M. E. tappen, to tap; the imperative appears as tap (for tap). Ancren Riwle, p. 296, l. 4; cf. tappe, sb., a tap, Gawain and the Green Knight, 2377 = F. taper, tapper, 'to tap, strike, hit, bob, clap;' Cot. Of Teut. origin; Low G. and G. tappen, to grope, to fumble, tapp, tappe, the fist or paw, a blow, a kick. So also Icel. tappa, to tap. Prob. of imitative origin; cf. Russ. stapat, to stamp with the foot; Malay tabak, to beat out corn, tapak, to slap, pat, dab (Maraden's Dict. pp. 69, 77); Arab. tabl, a drum; E. dab-dab, noise of a drum, E. dab, a pat. Der. tap, sb. And see TIP (2).

TAP (2), a short pipe through which liquor is drawn from a cask, a plug to stop a hole in a cask. (E.) M. E. tappe, Chaucer, C. T. 2890. Somner gives A. S. tappa, a tap, and tappan, to tap; but they are not found; we do, however, find the sb. tappers, one who taps casks; 'Caupo, tabernarius, tappers, Wright's Gloss., p. 28, l. 10. + Du. tap, sb.; whence tappen, verb. + Icel. tappi, sb.; tappa, vb. + Dan. tap, sb.; tappe, vb. + Swed. tapp, a tap, handful, wisp; whence tappa, vb. + G. tappen, sb. and vb.; O. H. G. tappo, sb. (Fick).

β. All from Teut. base TAPAN, a tap; Fick, iii. 117. The Swed. tapp means a wisp, handful, and G. tappen is bung, stopple. Prob. the orig. idea (as Wedgwood suggests) was a bunch of some material to stop a hole with, a tuft of something. We may connect it, as Fick does, with E. top, G. soff; the G. soff means a top of a tree, a wisp or tuft of hair, a 'pig-tail;' and the Icel. tapp means, first of all, a tuft or lock of hair. We even find Gael. tap, tow wreathed on a distaff, a forelock. Certainly tap, top, tuft are related words; see TOP, TUFF. Der. tap, vb., Merry Wives, i. 3. 11; tap-room; tap-root, a root like a tap, i. e. conical, cf. G. zapfen, a tap, cone of a fir, zapfenwurz, a tap-root. Also tapsiter, M. E. tapsiter,

TAPPE, a narrow band or fillet of woven work, used for strings, &c. (L., = Gk.) M. E. tappe, Chaucer, C. T. 3241; also tappe. 'Hec tenen, tappe;' in a list of ornaments, Wright, Voc. i. 196, col. 2. = A. S. tappe, a tape, fillet. 'Tenia, tappas vel del-mellias,' where tappe is a pl. form; Wright, Voc. i. 16, l. 4 from end. The orig. sense must have been 'a covering' or 'a strip of stuff;' it is closely allied to A. S. tappet, a tippet, and the use of the pl. tappas is suggestive of strips of stuff or cloth. Not an E. word, but borrowed from L. tapete, cloth, hangings, tapestry, a word borrowed from Greek. See Tapestry, Tippet. In like manner we find O. H. G. tepeh, teppi (mod. G. tappich) tapestry, with the same sense as O. H. G. tepit, from the same Lat. word. Der. tapo- tap-.

TAPER (1), a small wax-candle. (C.) M. E. taper, Rob. of Glouc., p. 456, l. 9. = A. S. taper, taper, a taper; Wright, Voc. i. 81, col. 1; 284, col. 1. Perhaps not E., but Celtic; cf. Irish taper, a taper; W. tampwr, a taper, torch. In the latter case, we may compare it with Skt. tapas, fire, tap, to shine, to glow; and the orig. sense may have been 'glowing torch.' See Tapid.

TAPER (2), long and slender. (C.) 'Her taper fingers;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Metam. bk. i. l. 676. Here the 'fingers' are likened to tapers or small wax-candles; and the word is nothing but a substitution for taper-like. This appears more clearly from the use of taper-wise, i. e. in the form of a taper, in Holland's tr. of Pliny, h. xvi. c. 16: 'the French box [box-tree] . . . groweth taper-wise, sharp pointed in the top, and runneth vp to more than ordinary height.' As wax tapers were sometimes made smaller towards the top, the word taper meant growing smaller towards the top, not truly cylindrical; whence the adj. tapering with the sense of taper-like, and finally the verb to taper. We find A. S. taperan, a tapering axe, A. S. Chron. an. 1031; also 'tapering top' in Pitt. tr. of Virgil, Æn. bk. v. l. 489 of Lat. text. Der. tapering, taper, vb.

TAPESTRY, a kind of carpet-work, with wrought figures, esp. used for decorating walls. (F., = L., = Gk.) 'A faire and pleasant lodgeryng, hangyd with riche arame or tapestry;' bur T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 2 (fol. 144). Tapestry is a corruption of tapissary; Palgrave gives: 'Tapissary works, tapissaria.' = F. tapissaria, tapistry; Cot. = F. tapissier, 'to furnish with tapistry;' id. = F. tapet, 'tapistry hangings;' id. (cf. Span. tapeta, tapestry, tapete, small floor-carpet; Ital. tapetto, a carpet, tappezzeria, to hang with tapestry; tappezzeria, tapestry) = Low Lat. tapetaria, tapestry, a. n. 1010. = Lat. tapete, cloth, hangings. = Gk. ταπέτης, stem of τάπηξ, a carpet, woolen rug. Cf. Pers. tabaksh, a fringed carpet or cushion, Rich. Dict., p. 362. See also Tape, Tippet, Tabard. Der. We say 'on the tapet;' from F. tapet, carpet.

TAPIOCA, the glutinous and granular substance obtained from the roots of the Cassava plant of Brazil. (Brazilian.) Not in Todd's Johnson. 'The secula or flour [of the cassava] . . . is termed manihava in Brazil. . . . When it is prepared by drying on hot plates, it becomes granular, and is called tapiova;' Eng. Cyclopaedia, art. Tapiova. = Brazilian tipioca, 'the Tept-Guarum (Brazilian) same of the poisonous juice which issues from the root of the manihava [cassava] when pressed;' Littré. He refers to Burton, it. 39, who follows The Voyage to Brazil of the Prince de Wied-Neuwied, i. 116.

TAPIR, an animal with a short proboscis, found in S. America. (Brazilian.) Called the tapir or omis in a tr. of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792, i. 250; where the animal is said to be a native of Brazil, Paraguay, and Guiana. = Brazilian tapyra, a tapir (Mahn, in Webster's Dictionary).

TAR, a resinous substance of a dark colour, obtained from pine-trees. (E.) M. E. terre, Prompt. Parv.; spelt terre, P. Plowman, C. x. 262. = A. S. tearu, tar; the dat. tearu occurs in A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 132, l. 5; also spelt teru in gloss (Bosworth); also tyrwa, Gen. vi. 14; Exod. ii. 3. + Du. ter. + Icel. tyra. + Dan. tyrr. + Swed. tyra. And cf. G. tharr, prob. borrowed from Low G. thar or Du. ter. We find also Irish tearr, prob. borrowed from E., as the word is certainly Teutonic. β. We also find Icel. tyri, tyrst, a resinous fir-tree; whence tyrnátr, tyrnátr, tyrnátr, all with the sense of 'tar-wood.' Proved to be Teutonic by the cognate Lithuan. darna, darna, resinous wood, particularly the resinous parts of the fir-tree that easily burn (Nesselmann); and this is allied to Russ. darva, a tree, darva, a tree, wood, timber, W. darw, an oak-tree, and E. Tree, q. v. See Fick, iii. 218; Curtius, l. 395. γ. Thus the orig. sense was simply 'tree' or 'wood,' esp. resinous wood, as most in request for firing; hence the resin or tar itself. δ. Tar is also a sailor, as being supposed to be daubed with tar, though the word is really short for tarponius, used in the sense of sailor; see Tarpauling, Der. terr; also tar-pauling, q. v.

TARAXACUM, the dandelion. (Arab.) 'Taraxacum or Tarax-men, the herb dandelion or sow-thistle; Phillips, ed. 1706. The common dandelion is Leontodon taraxacum. The etymology of this strange word is given by Devic, Supp. to Littré. He shows that it is not Greek, but Arabic or Persian. We find Pers. tarāshāqīn, wild endive; Rich. Dict. p. 967; but Devic says he can only find, in Razi, the statement that 'the tarāshāqīn is like succory, but more efficacious,' where he thinks we evidently ought to read tarāshāqīn, and to explain it by dandelion or wild succory. In Gerard of Cremona he finds Arab. taraxacum, explained as a kind of succory; and a chapter on taraxacum in a Latin edition of Avicenna, Basle, 1503, p. 312.

TARDY, slow, sluggish, late. (F., = L.) In Shak. As You Like It, iv. 1. 51. = F. tardif, 'tardy,' Cot. Cf. Ital. tardivo, tardy. These forms correspond to Low Lat. *tardus, formed with suffix -us from Lat. tardus, slow.

β. Tardus is allied to terere, to rub, to wear away, waste, as in the common phrase terere tempus, to waste time; hence terere, wasteful of time. = √TAR, to rub; see TRITA. Der. tardi-ly, -ness; (from Lat. tardus) re-tard.

TARBE (1), a plant like the vetch. (E.) M. E. tarv, Chaucer, C. T. 3996; pl. taris, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 23. Palgrave has: 'taris, a corn like a pease, taris;' also: 'tarifliche [= tare-vetch], a corn, taris.' Halliwell gives prov. E. tarv, eager, brisk (Hereford); which we may compare with prov. E. tarv, to go fast, which is only a peculiar use of the verb tarv, to rend. The word is peculiarly E., and may mean 'quick-growing' or 'destructive' plant; in any case, it may safely be referred to A. S. tarva, to tear. Cf. also tearing, great, rough, noisy, blustering (Halliwell). See TEAR (1).

TARBE (2), an allowance made for the weight of the package in which goods are contained, or for other detriment. (F., = Span., = Arab.) A mercantile term; explained in Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. tare, 'loss, diminution, . . . waste in merchandise by the exchange or use thereof;' Cot. = Span. tare, tare, allowance in weight. (Cf. Ital. and Port. tare, the same.) = Arab. tarba (given by Devic); from tarā, throwing, casting, flinging. Richardson, Pers. Dict. p. 967, gives Arab. arā tarāb, thrown away, from tarā. The orig. sense is 'that which is thrown away,' hence loss, detriment. From the Arab. root tarāba, he threw prostrate; Rich., as above.

TARGET, a small shield, buckler, a mark to fire at. (E.; with F. arçif.) The mark to fire at is named from its resemblance to a round shield. It is remarkable that the g is hard; indeed, the pl. is spelt targettes in Achaem. Topophiles, bk. 1. ed. Arber, p. 69, l. 28; and we find target in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, bk. 1. c. 18, § 2. This may be accounted for by considering the word as mainly of E. origin; though we also had target as a F. word as early as in Rob. of Glouc., p. 361; and see Chaucer, C. T. 473. The dimin. suffix -et is the usual F. dimin. so common in E. = A. S. target, a target, shield, pl. targetas, in a will dated 970; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 316. √ Ital. target (perhaps a foreign word), a target, small round shield. √ O. H. G. targeta, a frame, side of a vessel, wall; G. target, a frame, case, side, border. β. We find also F. target, 'a kind of target or shield,' Cot.; Port. target, an escutcheon on a target, a border; Span. targeta, a shield; Ital. targeta, a buckler; words which Dies explains to be of Teut. origin.

γ. Again, the G. targete and O. Du. targete (Hexham), are borrowed back from F. target. And we even find Irish and Gael. targetid, a target, shield, which must have been taken from M. E. target; cf. Rhys, Lect. II. β. Fick gives the Teut. type as TARGA, enclosure, border, hence rim, shield; iii. 119. He compares the Lithuan. darlas, a garden, enclosure, border or halo round the moon; and supposes the Teut. base to be TARG, to hold fast, corresponding to Skt. darā, to hold fast; i. 619. ¶ Among the words of Teut. origin Dies includes the Port. and Span. adarga; the Port. adarga is a short square target, and the Span. adarga is explained by Minshew to be 'a short and light target or buckler, which the Africans and Spaniards doe vse.' But this word is plainly Moorish, the a being for ad, the Arab. article, and the etymology is from Arab. darbat, darabat, 'a shield or buckler of solid leather;' Rich. Dict., p. 664. It is remarkable that Cotgrave explains F. target as 'a kind of target or shield, almost square, and much in use along the Spanish coast, lying over against Africk, from whence it seems the fashion of it came.' He is, of course, thinking only of the Moorish square shield; but the O. F. target occurs as early as the 11th cent., and the A. S. target can hardly be of Moorish origin. Still, the resemblance is remarkable.

TARGUM, a Chaldee paraphrase of the Old Testament. (Chaldee.) See Targum in Index to Parker Society. In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'The Targum or paraphrase of Jonathan;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. 1. c. 1. § 4. = Chaldee targetum, an interpretation; from targeta, to interpret (Webster). Cf. Arab. tarjuman, an interpreter; for which see DRAGOMAN.

TARIFF, a list or table of duties upon merchandise. (F., = Span., = Arab.) 'Tariff, a table made to shew . . . any multiple or product . . . a proportional table . . . a book of rates agreed upon for duties,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. tarifa, 'arithmetick, or the coating of accounts;' Cot. = Span. tarifa, a list of prices, book of rates. = Arab. tarīf, giving information, notification (because a tarīf does this); Rich. Dict. p. 416. = Arab. arīf, knowing, knowledge; from Arab. root arafa, he knew; Rich. Dict. p. 1003. See further in Devic, Supp. to Littré.

TARN, a small lake, a pool. (Scand.) In Levins. M. E. tarva, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, E. 1041. = Icel. tjarna (gen. tjarnar), a tarn, pool; Swed. dial. tjärn, tjärn, a tarn, pool without inlet or outlet (Riets); Norweg. tjörn, tjörn, hjärn, tjäd, hjärn, a tarn (Aasem). β. Perhaps allied to M. H. G. trinnen (pt. t. trann), to separate oneself; cf. G. trinnen, to sever, dujon. It may thus have meant a pool lying asunder from any other water.

TARNISH, to soil, diminish the lustre of, to dim. (F., = O. H. G.) Also to grow dim, as in Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel, 249; this appears to be the orig. sense in E. = F. tarner, stem of pres. part. of tarner, 'to was pale, wan, discoloured, to lose its former lustre;' Cot. Cf. tarvi, pp. 'wan, discoloured, whose lustre is lost;' id. = M. H. G. tarvan, O. H. G. tarvan, tarvan, to obscure, darken; cf. tarvat, tarvat, a hat or cap which rendered the wearer invisible. √ A. S. derman, dyman, to hide, Gen. xiv. 1; causal verb from derma, dyran, hidden, secret, Grein, i. 214; and this adj. is cognate with O. Sax. derni, O. Fries. derin, hidden, secret. Cf. Gk. θάλασσαν, a secret chamber, lurking-place, den, hole, darkest part of a ship. = √ DHAR, to hold, secure; cf. Skt. dāri, to maintain, support.

TARPAULING, TARPAULIN, a cover of coarse canvas, tarred to keep out wet. (Hybrid; E. and L.) In Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 148. It was once oddly used to denote also a sailor, whence our modern tar, in the same sense, rather than from an extension of tar to mean a man drenched with tar; though it makes little ultimate difference. 'Tarpauling, or Tarpaulin, a piece of canvas tar'd all over, to lay upon the deck of a ship, to keep the rain from soaking through; also a general name for a common seaman, because usually clothed in such canvas;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; Phillips, ed. 1706. And see Trench, Select Gloss., who gives two quotations for tarpaulin = sailor, viz. from Smollett, Rod. Ransom, vol. i. c. 3, and Turkish Spy, letter 2. Compounded of tar and palling. β. A palling is a covering, from pall, verb, to cover, which from pall, sb., Lat. pallio; see PALL. 'Come, thick night, And pall thee in the dunnet smoke of hell;' Mach. i. 5. 52. 'Palling, a covering for a cart or waggon, Lincolnsheer;' Halliwell.

TARRAGON, the name of a plant. (Span., = Pers., = Gk.) 'Tarragon, a certain herbe, good to be eaten in salads with lettuce;' Haret (1580); Taragon in Levins. = Span. taragona; Minshew also gives the form taragonna, which he explains by 'an herbe called dragona.' [Hence also F. taragon, 'the herb tarragon;' Cot.] = Pers. tarthūn, dragon-wort; Rich. Dict. p. 389. = Gk. spanon, a dragon; see DRAGON. Thus the strange form tarragon is nothing but dragon in a form changed by passing through an Oriental language, and decked in Spanish with a Low Latin suffix (viz. -ina). The botanical name is Astrucius dracunculoides, where dracunculoides is a double dimin. from Lat. acc. dracuncul.

TARRY, to linger, loiter, delay. (E.; confused with F., = L.) The present form is due to confusion of M. E. tarven, to irritate, with M. E. target, to delay. The sense goes with the latter form. 1. M. E. target, to delay, tarry. 'That time thought the king to target no longer;' Alexander, fragment A, l. 211, pr. with Will. of Palerne. = O. F. target, to tarry, delay; allied to tarde, with the same sense; Cot. = Low Lat. *tardeare, an extension of Lat. tardare (= F. tarder), to delay. = Lat. tarvus, slow; see TARDY. 2. M. E. tarven, tarven, to irritate, vex, provoke, tre. 'I wol nat tarven you; for it is prime;' Chaucer, C. T. 10387, where it might almost be explained by 'delay.' In the Prompt. Parv. we have: 'tarven, or longe abydyn. Moros, pigritor;' but also 'tarven, or eryn, irrita.' = A. S. target, to vex; a rare word. 'Tredaþ þec and target and heora torn wrecas' = they will tread on thee and vex thee and wreak their anger; Guthlac, l. 259. Closely allied to tarven, to tire; see TIRE, TEAR (1). ¶ We also find O. F. tarier, to vex (Barjory); this is the same word, borrowed from O. Du. target, 'to vex' (Hexham), which is cognate with A. S. target. So also G. target, Dan. target, to irritate; all from √ DAR, to tear.

TART (1), acrid, sour, sharp, severe. (E.) 'Very tarte vinegar;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 22. § 15. Spelt tarte also in Palgrave. 'Pondre-marchant tart' = a sharp (tart) kind of flavouring powder; Chaucer, C. T. 381 (or 383). [Not a tart, as in Stratmann.] = A. S. tarst, tart, sharp, severe; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 344, l. 4 from bottom; ii. 590, l. 4 from bottom. Lit. 'tearing, just as bitter is from the notion of biting. = A. S. tar, pt. t. of tarvan, to tear; see TEAR (1). Der. tart-ly, -ness.

TART (2), a small pie. (F., = L.) M. E. taris; pl. taris, Ross of Rose, 7041. = O. F. taris, 'a tart;' Cot. So called from the paste being twisted together; it is the name word as F. taris, a tart, which must once have been spelt taris, as shown by the dimin. forms tarid, a cake (Roquefort), taridou, a pancake (Cotgrave). So also Ital. tariera, 'a tart;' Florio, taris, a pie, tart, Span. taris, a round cake; Du. taeri, Dan. taris, G. taris, not Teutonic words. = Lat. toris, fem. of torus, twisted, pp. of torquere, to twist; see Torture, Torision. Der. tar-tid, from F. tarlette, 'a little tart;' Cot.

TARTAN, a woollen stuff, chequered, much worn in the Highlands of Scotland. (F. = Span. = L.) In Jamieson; borrowed, like many Scottish words, from French. = F. tarstain, 'linne-woisne, or a kind thereof, worn ordinarily by the French peasants;' Cot. = Span. tarstain, a thin woollen cloth, sort of thin silk; so named from its fineness. = Span. taritar, to shiver, shake with cold. So also Port. tarstain, a very light silk; from taritar, to shake. Prob. from a lost Latin verb, allied to Gk. vapraizav, to shake with cold; see Tartar (3).

TARTAR (1), an acid salt which forms on the sides of casks containing wine; and a concretion which forms on the teeth. (F. = Low Lat. = Arab.) This is one of the terms due to the alchemists. Called sal tartis in Chaucer, C. T. 16278; and simply tartris, id. 16281. = F. tartra, 'tartar, or argall, the lees or dregs that stick to the sides of wine-vessels, hard and dry like a crust;' Cot. = Low Lat. tartrium (whence the mod. E. spelling tartr). = Arab. darid, 'dregs, sediment, the tartar of wine, the mother of oil;' Rich. Dict. p. 662; where it is marked as a Pers. word, though, according to Devic, of Arab. origin. Rich. also gives Pers. darid, Arab. darid, 'sediment, dregs;' p. 663. Also Arab. darid, a shedding of the teeth, darid, a toothless woman; which Devic explains with reference to the tartar on teeth. Der. tartr-ic, tartr-ous.

TARTAR (2), a native of Tartary. (Pers.) Chiefly used in the phr. 'to catch a Tartar,' to be caught in one's own trap. The phrase is prob. owing to some particular story; Todd's Johnson, with the following quotation. 'Is this defeat they lost about 5000 men, besides those that were taken prisoners—so that, instead of catching the Tartar, they were caught themselves;' Life of the Duke of Tyrconnel, 1689. 'Tartar, a native of Tartary. . . the people of which are of a savage disposition; whence the proverbial expression to catch a Tartar, i. e. to meet with one's match, to be disappointed, balked, or cowed;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Shak. has 'the Tartar's bow;' Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. a. 201. Sir J. Mandeville professed to have travelled in Tartary; see prol. to his Travels. See Trench, Eng. Past and Present, where he explains that the true spelling is Tatar, but the spelling Tartar was adopted from a false etymology, because their multitudes were supposed to have proceeded out of Tartarus or hell. = Pers. Tâdr, 'a Tartar, or Scythian;' Rich. Dict. p. 351.

TARTAR (3), Tartarus, hell. (L. = Gk.) 'To the gates of Tartar;' Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 225. = Lat. Tartarus. = Gk. Tétrapos, Tartarus, the infernal regions; apparently conceived to be a place of extreme cold. Cf. Gk. vapraizav, to shiver with cold. Der. tartr-ous, 'the black tartarous cold;' Milton, P. L. vii. 338; tartr-ous, id. ii. 69.

TASK, a set amount of work imposed upon any one, work. (F. = L.) Lit. a tas. M. E. task, tasche, Cursor Mundi, 3875. = O. F. tasque (Burguy), also tasche, 'a task;' Cot. Mod. F. tasche. = Low Lat. tasca, a tax; the same word as Low Lat. tasca, a tax. (For a similar metathesis cf. E. ask with prov. E. ass). = Lat. tasca, to rate, value; see Tax. Der. task, vb., task-ed, sb.; 'to task the tasker;' L. L. L. ii. 20, task-master, Milton, Sonnet ii. 14. Doublet, tas.

TASSEL (1), a hanging ornament consisting of a bunch of silk or other material. (F. = L.) M. E. tasel, a fastening of a mantle, consisting of a cord ending in a tassel, Cursor Mundi, 4389. Cf. 'a Mantle of Estate, . . . with strings dependant, and tasselled;' Guillim, Display of Heraldry (1664), p. 271; a wood-cut on p. 273 shows the tasel, ornamented with strings and dots, that divide it into squares like the are on a die. = O. F. tasel, a fastening, clasp; mod. F. tasson, only in the sense of bracket. We also find Low Lat. tassellus, used in the Prompt. Parv. as equivalent to E. tassel. The O. F. tasel also meant a piece of square stuff, used by ladies as an ornament; see Burguy and Roquefort. Cf. Ital. tassella, a collar of a cloak, a square. = Lat. tassillum, acc. of tassillus, a small die; dimin. of talus, a knuckle-bone, also a die orig. made of the knuckle-bone of an animal. We may conclude that the tassel was a sort of button made of a piece of squared bone, and afterwards of other materials. β. The curious form tassillus shows that talus is a contraction for tassillus, from √ TAK, also extended to TAKS, to prepare, to fit; cf. Gk. via-vus, a carpenter, Skt. taksh, to hew, prepare, make. Cf. Curtius, i. 271. Hence talus is a thing fitted, a joint, a squared die. Der. tassell-ed, M. E. tasselled, Chaucer, C. T. 2351.

TASSEL (2), the male of the gothawk. In Shak. Romeo, ii. 5. 160. The same as Tereol, q. v.

TASTE, to handle, to try, to try or perceive by the touch of the tongue or palate, to eat a little of, to experience. (F. = L.) The sense of feel or handle is obsolete, but the M. E. tasten meant both to feel and to taste. 'I rede thee let this don upon it falle, And taste it wel, and ston thou shalt it finde;' Chaucer, C. T. 15970. 'Every thyng Himselof schewith in tastyn;' King Alisander, 4042. = F. taster, to taste or take an assay of; also, to handle, feel, touch; Cot. Mod. F. tâter; Ital. tastare, 'to taste, to assaie, to feele, to grope, to try, to proove, to touch;' Florio. We find also Low Lat. tasta, a tent or probe for wounds; whence Ital. tasta, 'a tent that is put into a sore or wound, also a taste, a proove, a tryall, a feeling, a touch;' Florio.

β. The Low Lat. tasta is short for tastis, and points clearly, as Dies says, to a Low Lat. verb tastare, not found, but a mere iterative of Lat. tamere, to feel, to handle (Gellius). This tastare (= tastare) is an intensive form of tangere (pp. tactus), to touch; see Tact, Tangent. Hence the orig. sense of tasta was to keep on touching, to feel carefully. Der. taste, sb., M. E. taste, Gower, C. A. iii. 32, l. 21; tast-er, tast-able, tast-ful, tast-ful-ly; tast-ful-ness, tast-less, -less-ly, -less-ness; tast-y, tast-i-ly.

TATTER, a shred, loose hanging rag. (Scand.) 'Tear a passion to tatters;' Hamlet, iii. 2. 11; spelt tattors in quarto edd. So also tattors in Ford, Sea's Darling, l. 1, 2nd Song; and see tattered in Nares. It is remarkable that the derived word tattered occurs earlier, spelt tattered, P. Plowman's Crede, 753, where it means 'jagged;' tattird, ragged, Fricke's Conscience, 1537. = Icel. tatturr, pl. tatturr, better spelt tatturr, pl. tatturr; the pl. signifies tatters, rags; Norweg. tattur, pl. tattur, tatturr, also tattira, tattira, pl. tatturr, tatturr, tatters, rags. + Low G. tattura, tatters, rags; to tatturen ritem, to tear to tatters; tattirig, tattered. β. It will be seen that an t has been lost; and this is why the Icel. word should be spelt with double t, for tatturr = tatturr, by assimilation. Hence tatter stands for tattur; the assimilation of t to tt being due to Scand. influence. I suppose tatter to be closely allied to tatter = to wag, vacillate, shake about; and that tatter meant orig. a shaking rag, a flapping strip. At any rate, tatter is in the like case as regards letter-change, since it stands for tattur. See Totter. Der. tatter-ed, as above.

TATTLE, to talk idly, prattle. (E.) In Shak. Much Ado, ii. 1. 11. 'Every tattling fable;' Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 724. M. E. tattelen, variant of tattoren, to tattle, Prompt. Parv.; pp. 498, 487. We may consider it E.; it is closely allied to tittle, to tell tales, talk idly, which is equivalent to M. E. tittoren, whence tittore (also tittore), a tattle, teller of tales, P. Plowman, B. x. 297. The verbs tatt-le, titt-le, and M. E. tatt-eren, titt-eren, are all frequentatives, from a base TAT, expressive of the sound of talking or repeating the syllables ta ta ta (Wedgwood). Allied words are Du. tattoren, to stammer, O. Du. tattoren, 'to speak with a shrill noise, or to sound tarantular with a trumpet;' Hexham; Low G. tatteln, to gabble as a goose, to tattle; tattelstein, to tittle-tattle, tatteler, a tattle; tatt-goon, a gabbling goose, chatterer; tatt-lidit, an interjection, the noise of a child's trumpet; and even Ital. tattarella, chat, prattle, tattellare, to prattle, which clearly show the imitative origin of the word. Allied to Titter, q. v. Der. tattle, sb.; tittle-tattle, sb. and vb., see Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 248; tattler-tattler (Fluellen's pronunciation), Hen. V, iv. 1. 71. And see tattler (formerly tattler).

TATTOO (1), the beat of drum recalling soldiers to their quarters. (Du. or Low G.) 'Tattoo, Tappoo (also Tappoo), the beat of drum at night for all soldiers to repair to their tents in a field, or to their quarters; also called The Retreat;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'To beat the tappoo, de Aftogt slaan;' Sewel, Eng.-Du. Dict., 1754. 'The tappoo is used in garrisons and quarters by the beat of the drum;' Silas Taylor, On Gevelind, ed. 1663, p. 74. The word, though omitted by Sewel, must be Du. or Low G. = Du. tappoo, tattoo (Taschauts Du. Dict.) = Du. tap, a tap; and tap, put to, shut, closed. The sense is 'the tap is closed;' cf. Du. Is de deur toe = is the door closed? doe het boek toe = shut the book; haef't venster toe = shut the window (Sewel). The tattoo was thus the signal for closing the taps of the public-houses.

β. This looks, at first, more like a bad jest than a sound etymology; but it is confirmed by the remarkable words for tattoo in other languages, viz. G. tappstrich, the tattoo (lit. tap-stroke), where tappen is a tap of a cask; and Low G. tappening, the tattoo (lit. a tap-shutting). Cf. Low G. tappen te slaan = to close a tap, an expression used proverbially in the phrase Wi will den Tappen te slaan = we will shut the tap, put the tap to, i. e. we will talk no more of this matter. This last expression clearly shows that 'a tap-to' was a conclusion, a time for shutting-up. ¶ I do not think that Spaa. tappato, the sound of a drum, has anything to do with the present tattoo. It is remarkable that the word should appear so early in English, and should be omitted in Sewel's Du. Dictionary.

TATTOO (2), to mark the skin with figures, by pricking in colouring matter. (Tahitian.) 'They have a custom . . . which they call tattoung. They prick the skin so as just not to fetch blood,' &c.; Cook, First Voyage, b. i. c. 17; id. ib. b. iii. c. 9 (R.) Cook is speaking of the inhabitants of Tahiti. = Tahitian tatau, signifying tattoo-marks on the human skin; derived from ta, a mark, design; see Littré, who refers us to Berchou, Recherches sur le Tatouage.

TAUNT, to scoff, mock, tease. (F., = L.) 'I taunted one, I checked him, Je fardai;' Falgrave. 'Smooze . . . a check or taunt in word or deed;' Florio. The old sense had less of mockery in it, and sometimes meant merely to tease. 'For a proper wit had she, . . . sometime taunting without displeasure and not without sport;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 57 b. 'Which liberal taunts that most gentill emperor toke in so good part;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 5. § 19. A variant of M. E. taunt, to tempt, try; the pp. taunted occurs in Ancren Riwle, p. 228, l. 7. = O. F. taunter (Burguy), occasional form of tauler, 'to tempt, to prove, try, sound, essay, attempt; also to suggest, provoke, or move unto evil;' Cot. = Lat. tautare, to try, prove, test, attack, assail, agitate, disquiet, &c. As used by Cicero, the sense of tautare comes very near to that of taunt; cf. 'at exal potius tautare, quam comul uexare rem publicam potest;' C. Cat. l. 10. 17. See Tempt. β . We may note that taunt has taken up something of the sense of F. tauser (formerly also tauser), 'to chide, rebuke, check, taunt, reprove;' Cot. But this F. tauser answers to a Low Lat. tautare (formed from tautum, pp. of taure), which is a mere by-form of tautare, going back to precisely the same original; so that confusion between the senses of taunter and tauser was easy enough. Of course we cannot derive taunt from tauser itself. Der. taunt, sb.; taunt-er, taunt-ing-ly. Doublet, taunt.

TAURUS, the bull; the 2nd zodiacal sign. (L.) In Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 8, l. 2. = Lat. taurus, a bull. + Gk. tauros, a bull. + A. S. stear, a young ox, a steer; see Steer (1). Der. stear-ness, from Lat. taurinus, adj., belonging to bulls.

TAUT, a variant of Tight, q. v.

TAUTOLOGY, needless repetition, in the same words. (L. = Gk.) 'With ungrateful tautologies;' Fuller's Worthies, Kent (R.) = Lat. tautologia (White). = Gk. vautologia, a saying over again of the same thing. = Gk. vautologos, repeating what has been said. = Gk. vautó, contracted from vo autó, or vo autós, the same; and -logos, speaking, allied to lógos, to speak, for which see Legend. The Gk. vo is allied to E. the; and autós, he, same (= eo-s-vós), is compounded of the pronom. bases SA and TA; see She and The. Der. tautology, tautolog-is-al-ly; tautolog-ous.

TAVERN, an inn, house for accommodating travellers and selling liquors. (F., = L.) M. E. tavern (with a = o), Rob. of Glouc. p. 195, l. 6. = F. tavern, 'a tavern;' Cot. = Lat. taverna, a hut, orig. a hut made of boards, a shed, booth, tavern. β . To be divided as ta-vern, where the suffixes answer to ta-va-na; from \sqrt{TA} , TAN, to stretch, spread out. See Tant, and cf. Table, from the same root. So called because at first made of planks, i. e. of wood that spreads out.

TAW, TEW, to prepare skins, so as to dress them into leather, to curry, to toil. (E.) Spelt taw and taw; Levins. M. E. tawen, to prepare leather, Prompt. Parv.; tawen, Ormulun, 15908. = A. S. tawian, to prepare, dress, get ready, also, to scourge. 'See deofol eow tawende, = the devil scourged you; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 486, l. 4 from bottom. 'Tó yranþe geawende' = reduced to poverty; S. Veronica, p. 24, l. 18. Cf. gawens, implements, Grein, l. 462. Here aw = Goth. au. + Du. tawen, to curry leather. + O. H. G. tawjan, tawjan, to make, prepare. + Goth. tawjan, to do, cause, bring out. β . From the \sqrt{DU} , to move about; see Tool. Der. taw-er, M. E. tawer, tawer, Wyclif, Deeds, ix. 43, early version, where the later version has currier, i. e. carrier; cf. low-er, low-er. And see ta-m, ta-m.

TAWDRY, showy, but without taste, gaudy. (E.) 'A tawdry lace;' Spenser, Shep. Kal., April, 135; 'a tawdry lace,' Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 253; 'tawdry-lace,' Beaumont and Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, Act iv. sc. 1 (Amarillis). Thus it was first used in the phr. tawdry lace = a rustic necklace; explained in Skinner (following Dr. Hickes) as being a necklace bought at St. Audry's fair, held in the Isle of Ely (and elsewhere) on St. Audry's day, Oct. 17. Wedgwood doubts the ancient celebrity of this fair (which I do not), and accepts in preference the alternative account in Nares, that St. Audry died of a swelling in the throat, which she considered as a particular judgment, for having been in her youth much addicted to wearing fine necklaces; see Nich. Harpsfield, Hist. Eccl. Anglica, Sec. Sept. p. 86; Brady, Clavis Calendaris, Oct. 17. β . In any case, we are quite sure that Tawdry is a corruption of St. Audry; and we are equally sure (as any one living near Ely must be) that Audry is a corruption of Ætheldred, the famous saint who founded Ely Cathedral.

γ . Again, Ætheldred is the Latinized form of the A. S. name Æþeldrýð; Ælfréd, tr. of Bede, lib. iv. c. 19, which see.

The name is spelt Æþeldrýð in the earliest MS. of the A. S. Chron. an. 673; and Æþeldrýð in the Laud MS. It means 'noble troop.' = A. S. æþel, noble; and dryht, properly a troop, a body-guard (the Icel. drott, a body-guard, is also used as a female name); cf. dryhten, a man, dryhten, dominion, dryhtens, royal hall, palace.

TAWNY, a yellowish brown. (F., = C.) Merely another spelling of tawny, i. e. resembling that which is tanned by the sun, sun-burnt. By heraldic writers it is spelt tawny or tawnd. 'Tawny . . . in blazon, is known by the name of tawny;' Guillim, Display of Herakry, sect. i. cap. 3. M. E. tawny. 'Tawny coloure, or tawny;' Prompt. Parv. = F. tawnd, 'tawny;' Cot. It is the pp. of F. tanner, tawer, to tan. = F. tan, tan; see Tan. Der. tawny-ness. Doublet, tawnd or tawny.

TAX, a rate imposed on property, anything imposed, a task. (F., = L.) M. E. tax, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 151, l. 4 (temp. Edw. II.). = F. taxe, 'a taxation;' Cot. = F. taxer, 'to tax, rate, assess;' Cot. = Lat. taxare, to handle; also to rate, value, appraise; whence Low Lat. taxa, a rating, a taxation. Put for taxare; from taxum, supine of taxare, to touch; see Tangent, Tact. Der. tax, verb, F. taxer; tax-able, tax-able-ness, from F. taxation, 'a taxation,' from Lat. acc. taxationem. Doublet, tax.

TAXIDERMY, the art of preparing and stuffing the skins of animals. (Gk.) Modern; coined from Gk. τέξω, crude form of τέξω, order, arrangement; and δέρμα, a skin. β . Táxi (= tax-er) is from τάξις (= tax-er), to arrange, from \sqrt{TAK} , to hew, to fit; see Technical. Gk. τέξω, a skin, is that which is tax or flayed off; formed with suffix -μα from τάξω, to flay, cognate with E. tear; see Tear (1). Der. taxidermy-ist.

TEA, an infusion made from the dried leaves of the tea-tree, a shrub found in China and Japan. (Chinese.) Formerly pronounced tay [tai], just as tee was called ay; it names with obey, Pope, Rape of the Lock, iii. 8, and with amoy, id. l. 62. 'I did send for a cup of tee (a China drink) of which I never had drank before;' Pepys, Diary, Sept. 28, 1666. Oddly spelt cha in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, with a reference to Hist. of China, fol. 19; also cha, Dampier's Voyages, an. 1687 (R.) Prof. Douglas writes: 'The E. word tea is derived from the Amoy pronunciation of the name of the plant, which is td. In the other parts of the empire it is called chá, ts'a, &c.; see Williams, Chinese Dict., p. 5. Cf. td, tea; Chinese Dict. of the Amoy Vernacular, by Rev. C. Douglas, 1873, p. 481. This accounts for the old spelling cha, and for the Ital. tea, tea. Cf. F. thé, G. thee, pronounced as tea was in Pope's time. So also Malay téa, tea; Marsden, Malay Dict., p. 97.

TEACH, to impart knowledge, shew how to do. (E.) M. E. techen, weak verb, pt. t. taught (properly dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 99; pp. taught. = A. S. tecan, tecan, to shew, teach, pt. t. téhte, pp. téht, gáht; Grein, ii. 522. Closely allied to A. S. tecan, tecan, a token. From \sqrt{DIK} , to shew; cf. G. zeigen, to shew; see further under Token. Der. teach-able, teach-able-ness, teach-er.

TEAK, an E. Indian and African tree, with very hard wood. (Malayálam.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson = Malayálam téba, the teak tree; Tamil téba; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 516. The best teak is from the mountains of the Malabar Ghats; also found on the Coromandel coast; Eng. Cycl.

TEAL, a web-footed water-fowl. (E.) Tails; Levins. M. E. teie, Prompt. Parv.; Squire of Low Degree, l. 320, in Ritson, Met. Rom. vol. iii. p. 158; used to translate O. F. tealete in Walter de Bibbesworth, pr. in Wright's Voc. l. 151, l. 15; l. 165, l. 15. This takes us back to the close of the 13th cent., and the word is prob. E.; certainly Low German, in any case. + Du. teiling, a generation, production, also, teal; derived from teien, to breed, produce. It thus appears that teal meant, originally, no more than 'a brood' or 'a flock'; it is quite accidental that it has come to be used as a specific name; we still use teal as a plural form. The Du. teig, a plant, off-set, issue, with its pl. teigen, off-spring, is clearly a related word. Cf. Low G. teiling, a progeny, teien, to breed, teige, a branch. We find also A. S. teiga, a branch, teigan, to bud, germinate, Grein, ii. 524; teigur, a small branch, prov. E. teiler, a sapling (Halliwell). Closely connected with the verb to teal; see Till (1).

TEAM, a family; a set; a number of animals harnessed in a row. (E.) M. E. team, team, team; 'a teame [of] foure gret oxen,' P. Plowman, B. xix. 257; team = a family, Rob. of Glouc. p. 261, l. 4. = A. S. teama, a family, Gen. v. 31; offspring, Grein, ii. 526. + Du. teem, the rein of a bridle; the same word; from the notion of reducing to order. + Icel. teama, a rein. + Low G. teem, a progeny, team; also, a rein. + Dan. teama, Swed. team, a rein. + G. teama, a bride, M. H. G. teama; allied to M. H. G. teama, O. H. G. teama, to make, cause, prepare, which = E. team. β . All from Teut. type TAU-MA, a preparing, setting in order; hence, a family, row, set; or otherwise, a lace, rein, bridle; formed with the common substantival suffix -ma (as in E. dean, noon, noon) from the Teut. base TAU, seen in E. tau, to curry leather, and in Goth. tawjan, to cause, make, bring about; see Taw. Fick, iii. 115. Der. tear, verb, q. v. Also tear-stir (Webster, not in Johnson), with suffix -stir; for which see Spinator.

TEAR (1), to rend, lacerate. (E.) M. E. tear, strong verb, pt. t. tear, Seven Sages, ed. Weber, l. 473, pp. tear, id. 783. = A. S. teara, pt. t. tear, pp. teara, Grein, ii. 515. + Goth. ga-tearum, to break, do-stroy, pt. t. ga-tear. + Lithuan. dariti, to lay. + Gk. δαρην, to lay. + Russ. драть, to tear; cf. дра, a rent, a hole. + Zend dar, to cut. + Skt. drī, to burst, burst open, tear asunder. β. All from √ DAR, to burst, split open; Curtius, i. 190; Fick, iii. 118. The G. zāra, Low G. teara, Icel. teara, to consume, are weak verbs, from the same root; so also E. stare and starry, as well as obsolete E. terro, to provoke, tease. Der. tear, sb. (Goth. gatarum), Chevy Chase, l. 134, in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 75. Also tear (1), tear (1), q. v., teary, q. v.; and (from same root) epi-derm-is, lani-der-my. The E. derm, from W. deru, a piece, fragment, is clearly also from the same root.

TEAR (2), a drop of the fluid from the eyes. (E.) M. E. tear, Chaucer, C. T. 3960. = A. S. teard, Grein, ii. 516. + Icel. tear. + Dan. tear, teare. + Swed. tear. + Goth. tear. + O. H. G. zaher, M. H. G. zaher, contracted form zār; whence G. zāher, made out of the M. H. G. pl. form zahere. β. All from a Teut. type TAGRA (= TAH-RA), a tear; Fick, iii. 115. Further allied to O. Lat. lacrima, usually lacrima, lacrimosus (whence F. larme), a tear; Gk. δαρην, δαρηνος, δαρηνος, a tear; W. dagr, a tear; from an Aryan type DAK-RA, DAK-RU, a tear. γ. All from √ DAK, to bite; a notion still kept up in the common phr. biter tears, i. e. biting tears; cf. Gk. δαρην, Skt. dagr, to bite. In a similar way the Skt. agra, a tear, is from the √ AK, to be sharp, Curtius, i. 163; Fick, l. 611; Der. tear-ful, 3 Hen. VI, v. 4. 8; tear-ful-ly, tear-ful-ness; tear-less. And see train-oil.

TEAR, to comb or card wool, scratch or raise the nap of cloth; to vex, plague. (E.) M. E. teasen, of which the pp. teased is in Gawain and the Green Knight, 1169. But the more common form is teese or teasen. 'They teese and pulle'; Gower, C. A. l. 17, l. 8. 'Teese, or teese wul' [teese wool]; Prompt. Parv. We also find to-teese, to tease or pull to pieces, Owl and Nightingale, l. 70. = A. S. teasan, to pluck, pull, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zepher, p. 170, l. 13. The M. E. teese would answer to a by-form *teasan, not recorded. + O. Du. teesse, to pluck; wolle teesse, 'to pluck wooll,' Hexham. + Dan. teese, teese, to tease wool. + Bavarian zaesse, to tease wool, Schmeller; he also cites M. H. G. zēssen, to tease, a strong verb, with pt. t. zēst, pp. gezēssen. β. The form of the base appears to be TIS; perhaps allied to G. zēssen, to tease, pull, drag, of which the apparent base is TUS. Der. tear-ful, q. v.

TEASEL, a plant with large heads covered with crooked awns which are used for teasing cloth. (E.) M. E. teasel, Wright's Voc. i. 141, col. 1; also teasel, P. Plowman, B. xv. 446. = A. S. teasel, teasel, a teasel, A. S. Leechdoms, l. 182, note 26. Formed with suffix -el (Aryan -el) from teas, to tease; the sense is 'an instrument to tease with.' See Tease.

TEAT, the nipple of the female breast. (E.) Also called tit. M. E. teat, Chaucer, C. T. 3704; also titte, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2621; also titte, Ancrén Riwe, p. 330, l. 6. = A. S. tit, Wright's Voc. i. 44, col. 1; pl. titas, id. 65, l. 7; 283, l. 29. + O. Du. teite, a teat; Hexham. + G. teite. Cf. also F. teite (teite in Cotgrave), Span. teite, Ital. teite, words of Teut. origin; Icel. teita; W. did, didi, a teat. These words have much the appearance of being reduplicated from a base TI (Aryan DI). β. Besides these, there is a second set of forms represented by W. teith, G. teithe, Gk. τεῖθη, τεῖθη; of these the Gk. τεῖθη, τεῖθη, have been explained from √ DHA, to suck; cf. Skt. dhā, to suck, Goth. dadjan, to suckle. But it would seem impossible to derive teat from the same root; see Tit.

TEAZLE, the same as Teasel, q. v.

TECHNICAL, artificial, pertaining to the arts. (Gk.; with L. suffix.) In Blount's Glom., ed. 1674. Formed with suffix -el (= Lat. -elo), from Gk. τεχνικός, belonging to the arts. = Gk. τεχνος, art; allied to τέχνη, a carpenter. = √ TAK, to prepare, get ready; cf. Russ. skate, to weave, Skt. tabhā, to prepare, form, cut wood, tabhān, a carpenter; see Text. Curtius, l. 171. Der. technical-ly, technical-ity; techno-logy, with suffix = Gk. -λογία, from λέγω, to speak. Also (from the same source) archi-techn, psycho-techn, teat, teat-ura.

TECHY, the same as Tetohy, q. v.

TEED, to spread new-mown grass. (Scand.) 'I teede hay, I tounne it afore it is made in cockes'; Palgrave. 'To teede and make hay'; Fitzherbert, Book of Husbandry, § 25. = Icel. teða, to spread manure; from teð, manure. Cf. Icel. teða, hay grown in a well-manured field, a home-field; teðu-wörk, making hay in the infield. Also Norw. dial. teða, to spread manure; from teð, manure; Aasen. So also Swed. dial. teða, vb., from teð. + Bavarian teite, to straw, to let fall in a scattered way, Schmeller, p. 1159; cf. G. verstreuen, to scatter, spill, disperse. Cf. also M. H. G. zāten, to scatter, derived from O. H. G. zāten, zāten (mod. G. zähen, a rag), cited by Fick, iii. 113.

β. All these words can be derived from a sb. of which the Teut. type is TADA, that which is spread, a rag, manure; Fick, as above. From a Teut. base TA = Aryan √ DA, to divide, Fick, l. 608; whence also Skt. dā, to cut, Gk. δαρηνος, I divide, distribute, portion out.

γ. If this be right, the suggested etymology from W. teða, to stretch, distend, is entirely out of the question. Besides, 'to distend' and 'to scatter' are not quite the same thing.

TEDIOUS, tiresome, from length or slowness, irksome. (L.) Spelt tediosus in Palgrave. Coined immediately from Lat. tediosus, irksome. = Lat. tedium, irksomeness. = Lat. teder, it irks one. Root uncertain. Der. tediously, -ness. We also use tedium, the sb.

TEEM (1), to bring forth, bear, or be fruitful; to be pregnant, full, or prolific. (E.) 'Hyndre [her] of teeming'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 644 g. M. E. teeman, to produce, Ancrén Riwe, p. 220, l. 16. Obviously from M. E. teem, a team, a progeny; see Team. The A. S. verb is teoman, to teem, Gen. xxx. 9; formed (by the usual vowel-change from ed to f) from A. S. teom, a team, a progeny.

TEEM (2), to think fit. (E.) Rare, and obsolete; but Shak. has the comp. detestum, to be explained presently. 'I could teeme it [think fit] to rend thee in pieces'; Gifford's Dialogue of Witches, A. N. 1603. 'Alas, man, I could teeme it to go'; id. See both quotations in full, in Halliwell, s. v. Teem. The word is hardly to be traced in E., but we find the related A. S. suffix -teome, -teome, with the notion of fitting or suitable, as in teof-teome, pleasant, acceptable (lit. love-befitting), in Bosworth; spelt teofteome (explained as 'grateful' by Thorpe), Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 126, l. 26. Cf. teof-teome, troublesome (lit. unbefitting); Bosworth. This suffix is from the same source as the common E. adj. teem, domesticated, lit. rendered fit or suitable.

β. Related words are easily found, viz. in Goth. gatawoda, fitly, from the strong verb gatawan (pt. t. gatawan), to suit, agree with; Laks. v. 36. + Du. teemen, 'to be comely, convenient, or seemly,' Hexham; teemlich, or teemigh, 'comely, convenient'; id.; whence het teemend, 'it is convenient, requisite, meete, or fitting'; id.; mod. Du. betemmen, to bescem. + G. teemen, to be fit; teemlich, passable, lit. suitable; O. H. G. teeman, to fit, closely related to teemen, teemen, to tame. + Low G. teemen, teemen, or teemen, to fit, also to allow, as in He teemet sich een good Glas Wein = he allows himself a good glass of wine; betemmen, to befit; closely allied to teemen, to tame. Cf. Skt. dam, which signifies not only to tame, but also to be tame. All from √ DAM, to tame, subdue; see Tame.

γ. We can now explain teem in Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 131; Hamlet, i. 2. 147. It means to make or consider as fitting, hence to permit, allow; a slightly forced use of the word. In Golding's translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses, A. N. 1587, we have 'could he not betemmen' = he did not think fit, would not deign; the Lat. text has dignatur, Metam. x. 157. Spenser uses it still more loosely: 'So would I . . . betemmen to you this sword' = permit, grant, allow you the use of this sword; F. Q. ii. 8. 117. On the connection between teem and tame, see Fick, iii. 117; Etymologies A. S. Dict. 525; Bremen Wörterbuch, v. 16, 17; &c.

TEEM (3), to empty, pour out. (Scand.) See Halliwell. = Icel. teema, to empty, from teem, empty; Dan. teemmen, to empty, from teem, empty; Swed. teemna, from teem; see Teem.

TEEN, vexation, grief. (E.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 64; &c. M. E. tean, Chaucer, C. T. 3108. = A. S. teana, accusation, injury, vexation, Grein, ii. 528. = A. S. teða, contracted from teana, to accuse; see Grein, ii. 523, s. v. teana. [To be distinguished from teða (= teðan), to draw.] + Goth. gatahan, to tell, announce, make known to, point out (as distinct from gatahan, to lead). + G. zāhen, to accuse (as distinct from zāhen, to draw). + Lat. teere, to make known. = √ DIK, to show. See Tokan, Toe. On the successive senses of teem are making known, public accusation, reproach, injury, vexation. We have indications and indications from the same root. See Etymologies A. S. Dict., pp. 334-337; Leo's Glossar, p. 303. The word teem also occurs as Old Saxon teana, injury; Icel. teða, teem.

TEETOTALLER, a total abstainer. (F., = L.; with E. prefix and suffix.) A teetotaller is one who professes total abstinence from all spirituous liquors; the orig. name was total abstainer. The adj. teetotal is an emphasized form of total, made on the principle of reduplication, just as we have Lat. te-tegi as the perfect of tegere. The word originated with Richard Turner, an artisan of Preston, who, contending for the principle at a temperance meeting about 1833, asserted that 'nothing but te-te-total will do.' The word was immediately adopted. He died 27 Oct., 1836. These facts are taken from the Stannish Teetotaller, edited by Joseph Livesey, of Preston (an originator of the movement in August, 1832), Jan. 1867; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. And see Teetotum. On Teetotal may have been suggested by teetotum.

TEETOTUM, TOTUM, a spinning toy. (L.) Not in Todd's

sa. 1257, ed. Ellis, p. 343. 'Tensour, a parte in pricke-songe, tensour;' Palsgrave. = F. tensour, 'the tenor part in music; the tenor, content, stuff, or substance of a matter;' Cot. = Lat. tensura, acc. of tensor, a holding on, uninterrupted course, tenor, sense or tenor of a law, tone, accent. = Lat. tensura, to hold; see Tenable. ¶ The old (and proper etymological) spelling is tensour, like Acousour, colours, &c. The tensur in music is due to the notion of holding or continuing the dominant note (Scheler).

TENSE (1), the form of a verb used to indicate the time and state of the action. (F., = L.) In Levins. Spelt tense by Palsgrave. On the Verb. In Chaucer, C. T. 16343 (Group G, 875), the expression 'that futur tense' ought to be explained rather as 'that future tense' than 'that future time;' see my note on the line. = F. tense, time, season; O. F. tense (Burguy). = Lat. tensus, time; also a tense of a verb; see Temporal.

TENSIO (2), tightly strained, rigid. (L.) A medical word, in rather late use (R.). = Lat. tensio, stretched, pp. of tendere; see Tend (1). Der. tensio-ly, -ness; tensio-ion, in Phillips, ed. 1706, from Lat. tensionem, acc. of tensio, a stretching; tensior, in Phillips, used as a short form of extensor; tensio-ile, in Blount, ed. 1674, a coined word; tensio-ity, a coined word. Also in-tensio, toise.

TENT (1), a pavilion, a portable shelter of canvas stretched out with ropes. (F., = L.) M. E. tente, Rob. of Glouc., p. 203, l. 8. = F. tente, 'a tent or pavilion;' Cot. = Low Lat. tenta, a tent; Ducange. Properly fem. of tentus, pp. of tendere, to stretch; see Tend (1). Obviously suggested by Lat. tentorium, a tent, a derivative from the same verb. Der. tent-ed, Oth. i. 3. 85.

TENT (2), a roll of lint used to dilate a wound. (F., = L.) See Nares. Properly a probe; the verb to tent is used for to probe, Hamlet, ii. 2. 626. M. E. tente. 'Tente of a wovnde or a soore, Tente;' Prompt. Parv. = F. tente, 'a tent for a wound;' Cot. Due to the Lat. verb tentare, to handle, touch, feel, test; cf. F. tentor, 'to tempt, to prove, try, sound, essay;' Cot. See Tempt. Cf. Span. tenta, a probe, tente, a touch. Der. tent, verb, as above.

TENT (3), a kind of wine. (Span., = L.) 'Tent, or Tent-wine, is a kind of Alicante, . . . and is a general name for all wines in Spain except white; from the Span. wino tinta, i. e. a deep red wine;' Blount, ed. 1674. = Span. wino tinta, red wine; tinto, deep-coloured, said of wine. = Lat. tinctus, pp. of tingere, to dye; see Tinge.

TENT (4), care, heed. (F., = L.) 'Took tent;' Burns, Death and Doctor Hornbook, st. 3. Short for attend or attention; see Attend. Der. tent, verb.

TENTACLE, a feeler of an insect. (L.) Modera. Englished from late Lat. tentaculum, which is also a coined word, formed from tentare, to feel; see Tempt. Cf. Lat. epitaculum, from epirare. Der. tentacul-ar.

TENTATIVE, experimental. (L.) 'Falsehood, though it be but tentative;' Bp. Hall, Contemplations, b. xx. cont. 3. § 21. = Lat. tentativus, trying, tentative. = Lat. tentatus, pp. of tentare, to try; see Tempt.

TENTRE, a frame for stretching cloth by means of hooks. (F., = L.) Properly tenture; but a verb tent was coined, and from it a sb. tenter, which took the place of tenture. The verb occurs in P. Plowman, B. xv. 446; or rather the pp. tented, suggested by Lat. tentus. M. E. tenture, 'Tenture, Tentours, for clothe, Tensorium, extensorium, tentura;' Prompt. Parv. 'Tentur for clothe, tend, tende; Tenturhous, houet;' Palsgrave. = F. tenture, 'a stretching, spreading, extending;' Cot. = Lat. tentura, a stretching. = Lat. tensus, pp. of tendere, to stretch; see Tend (1). Der. tenter-hook, a hook orig. used for stretching cloth.

TENUITY, slenderness, thinness, rarity. (F., = L.) Spelt tenuite in Minabeu, ed. 1627. = F. tenuité, 'tenuity, thinness;' Cot. = Lat. tenuitatem, acc. of tenuitas, thinness. = Lat. tenuis, thin. = ¶ TAN, to stretch; see Thin. Der. (from Lat. tenuis) eo-tenu-ate.

TENURE, a holding of a tenement. (F., = L.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 108. = F. tenure, 'a tenure, a hold or estate in land;' Cot. = Low Lat. tenura (in common use); Ducange. = Lat. tenere, to hold; see Tenable.

TEPID, moderately warm. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 417. = Lat. tepidus, warm. = Lat. teperare, to be warm. = ¶ TAP, to be warm, to glow; whence Skt. tap, to be warm, to warm, to shine, tapas, fire; Russ. topis, to heat. Der. tepid-ity, from F. tepidité, 'lukewarmness.' Cot., as if from Lat. acc. tepiditatem; tepid-ness.

TERAPHIM, idols, images, or household gods, consulted as oracles. (Heb.) See Judges, xvii. 3, xviii. 14; Hosea, iii. 4 (A. V.) = Heb. teraphim, s. pl., images connected with magical rites. Root tttrhwhh.

TERCE, the same as Tierce, q. v.

TERCEL, the male of any kind of hawk. (F., = L.) Correctly spelt tercel, Romeo, ii. 2. 160; rightly tercel, Troilus, iii. 2. 56. See Tassel in Nares. M. E. tercel; 'the tercel egle,' Chaucer, Assembly of Fowls, 393. Also tercellet, a dimin. form; Chaucer, C. T. 10818 = O. F. tercellet (tercel is not found), 'the tassel, or male of any kind of hawk, so termed because he is, commonly, a third part less than the female;' Cot. Cf. Ital. terzolo (now spelt terzolo), 'a tassel-gentle of a hawk;' Florio. Derived (with dimin. suffixes -el-et) from O. F. tiers, terce, third; just as Ital. terzolo is from Ital. terza, third. = Lat. tertius, third; see Tierce and Thres. ¶ Burguy gives a different reason, viz. that, in popular opinion, every third bird hatched was a male; he refers to Raynour's Provençal Dict., v. 412. Either way, the etymology is the same.

TEREBINTH, the turpentine-tree. (L., = Gk.) In Spenser, Shep. Kal., July, 86. = Lat. terebinthus. = Gk. τερεβινθος, the turpentine-tree. Der. terebinth-in.

TERGIVERSATION, a subterfuge, fickleness of conduct. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. tergiversation, 'tergiversation, a flinching, withdrawing;' Cot. Lit. a turning of one's back. = Lat. tergiversationem, acc. of tergiversatio, a subterfuge. = Lat. tergiversatus, pp. of tergiversari, to turn one's back, decline, refuse, shuffle, shift. = Lat. tergi = tergo, crude form of tergere, the back; and versari, to turn oneself about, pass, of versare, to turn about, frequentative of vertere (pp. versus), to turn; see Verso.

TERM, a limited period, a word or expression. (F., = L.) M. E. terme, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 216, l. 21. = F. terme, 'a term, time, or day; also, a term, word, speech;' Cot. = Lat. terminum, acc. of terminus, a boundary-line, bound, limit (whence also Ital. termino, termino, Span. termino). Cf. O. Lat. terminus, with the same sense; Gk. τέρμα, a limit. = ¶ TAR, to pass over, cross, fulfil; cf. Skt. tri, to pass over, cross, fulfil. Der. term, vb., Temp. v. 15; and see Termination. Also (from Lat. terminus) termin-al, adj., from Lat. terminalis; co-termin-ous, de-termin-ing, co-termin-ate, pre-de-termin-ing. And (from the same root) co-ter; thrum (1).

TERMAGANT, a boisterous, noisy woman. (F., = Ital., = L.) M. E. Termagant, Termagant, Chaucer, C. T. 13741 (Group B, 2000). Termagant was one of the idols whom (in the mediæval romances) the Saracens are supposed to worship; see King of Tara, in Ritson's Metrical Romances, ii. 174-183; Lybeaus Duconin, in the same, ii. 55. See Nares, who explains that the personage of Termagant was introduced into the old moralities, and represented as of a violent character. In Ram Alley, we have the expression: 'that swears, God bless us, like a very termagant;' Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. Haslitt, s. 322; and see Hamlet, iii. 2. 15. So also: 'this hot termagant Scot;' Hem. IV, v. 4. 114. It has now subsided into the signification of a scolding woman. The name is a corruption of O. F. Terrogant, Terrogan, or Terrogan; spelt Terrogan in the Chanson de Roland, cxxxiii (Littre), where it likewise signifies a Saracen idol. = Ital. Trivigante, the same, Ariosto, xii. 59 (see Nares, s. v. Trivigant); more correctly, Trivigante. It has been suggested that Trivigante or Terrogante is the moon, wandering under the three names of Selene (or Luna) in heaven, Artemis (or Diana) in earth, and Persephone (Proserpine) in the lower world. Cf. des trivies as an epithet of Diana. = Lat. ter, thrice, or tri, thrice; and magant, stem of pres. part. of magare, to wander. See Ternary and Triform, and Vagabond. ¶ See also my note to the line in Chaucer, and Tyrwhitt's note; Ritson, Met. Rom. iii. 506; Quarterly Review, xxi. 515; Wheeler, Noted Names of Fiction; Trench, Selling Glossary; &c.

TERMINATION, end, limit, result. (F., = L.) In Much Ado, ii. 1. 256, where it is used with the sense of term, i. e. word or expression. = F. termination, 'a determining, limiting;' Cot. = Lat. terminationem, acc. of terminatio, a bounding, fixing, determining. = Lat. terminatus, pp. of terminare, to limit. = Lat. terminus, a bound, limit; see Term. Der. termination-al. Also (from Lat. terminare) termin-ate, termin-able, termin-at-ive, termin-at-ive-ly. We also use Lat. terminus, sb., as an E. word.

TERN, an aquatic fowl. (Scand.) Not in the old dictionaries. I find it in a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792; and it was, doubtless, in much earlier use. = Dan. terne, terne, a tern; Swed. terne; Icel. terna, a tern, occurring in the local name þarny (tern-island), near Reykjavik in Iceland. Widegren's Swed. Dict. (ed. 1788) has terne, 'tern.' β. It is remarkable that Dan. terne, Swed. terne, Icel. terna, also mean a hand-maid, maid-servant; cf. G. dirpe. The Icel. Dict. says there is no connection between the words, but gives no reason. ¶ I suppose that the scientific Lat. name Sterna is a mere coinage, and of no authority as showing the orig. form of the word. There was, however, a small bird called in E. a sterna. 'The field is Azure, a Cheuron between three Sternes;' the said birds being figured in the accompanying wood-cut;

Guillim, Display of Heraldry, ed. 1664, p. 216. Evidently from A. S. starna; 'Beacita, starna,' in a list of birds, Wright's Voc. I. 281; 'Beacita, vel sturnus, starna,' id. i. 29. See Starling.

TERNARY, proceeding by, or consisting of threes. (L.) 'A senary, and a termary; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 652 (R.) = Lat. termaris, consisting of threes. = Lat. termi, pl., by threes. Allied to ter, thrice, and to tris, three; the latter being cognate with E. three. See THREE. Der. (from Lat. termi), terma-ate, arranged in threes, a coined word.

TERRACE, a raised level bank of earth, elevated flat space. (F., = Ital., = L.) Frequently spelt terras, as in Spenser, F. Q. v. 9. 81; here ar is put for er, as in parson for person, Clark for clark; &c. = F. terras, terrasses, 'a plat, platform, hillock of earth, a terrace, or high and open gallery'; Cot. = Ital. terrazza, terrazza, 'a terrace'; Florio. Formed with suffix -acea, usually with an augmentative force, from Ital. terra, earth. = Lat. terra, earth. β. Lat. terra stands for an older form *terre, and signifies dry ground or land, as opposed to sea. Allied to Gk. vapēis (Attic vappēis), a stand or frame for drying things upon, any broad flat surface; vīpērothū, to become dry, dry up. Also to Irish tír, land, terras, main land, tír, dry; W. tir, land; Gael. tír, land (whence seann-tír, headland, land's end, Cantire). Cf. also Lat. terras, to parch. = √ TARS, to be dry; whence Skt. trīṣā, to thirst, Goth. thaurus, dry, G. dür, dry. See THIRST and TORRID. Fick, i. 600. Der. terro-cotta, baked earth, from Ital. terra, earth, and cotta, baked = Lat. cotta, fem. of pp. of coquere, to cook, bake; see COOK. Also terro-aquosa, consisting of land and water; see AQUOUS. And see terro-um, terro-um, terrestrial, terro-er, terro-er-g. Also fun-terry, in-ter, medi-terro-um-um, ter-moris.

TERRIEN, TURRIEN, a large dish or vessel, esp. for soup. (F., = L.) Both spellings are poor; it should rather be terrens; terren is the commonest, and the worst, spelling. So called because orig. made of earthenware. Spelt terrens, Goldsmith, The Haunch of Venison; terrens in Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. terrens, 'an earthen pan'; Cot. Formed, as if from a Lat. adj. *terrenus, earthen, from terra, earth; see TERRACE.

TERRINE, earthy. (L.) In Shak. Antony, iii. 13. 153. = Lat. terrēnis, earthy. = Lat. terra, earth; see TERRACE.

TERRISTRAL, earthy. (L.) Spelt terrestrial, Skelton, Of the Death of Edw. IV, l. 15. Coined by adding -al (Lat. -alis) to Lat. terrestris, crude form of terrestrial, earthy. β. Terrestris is thought to stand for *terro-um-tris, formed with suffixes -um (as in prut-um-is, belonging to a meadow) and -tris (for Aryan -terā) from terra, earth; see TERRACE.

TERRIBLE, awful, dreadful. (F., = L.) Spelt terrible in Pala-grave. = F. terrible, 'terrible'; Cot. = Lat. terribilis, causing terror. = Lat. terrore, to terrify; with suffix -ilis. Allied to Lat. terror, terror; see TERROR. Der. terribly, terrible-ness.

TERRIER, a kind of dog; also a register of landed property. (F., = L.) In both senses, the word has the same etymology. 1. M. E. terriere, terriere, howard, Terrarius; Prompt. Parv. The dog was so called because it pursues rabbits, &c., into their burrows. Terrier is short for terrier-dog, i. e. burrow-dog. = F. terrier, 'the hole, berry, or earth of a coney or fox, also, a little hillock'; Cot. = Low Lat. terrarium, a little hillock; hence, a mound thrown up in making a burrow, a burrow. Formed with neut. suffix -arium from terra, land, earth; see TERRACE. 2. A legal term; spelt terrar in Blount's Nomenclicon. = F. papier terrier, 'the court-roll or catalogue of all the names of a lord's tenants'; &c.; Cot. = Low Lat. terrarius, as in terrarius liber, a book in which landed property is described. Formed with suffix -arius from Lat. terra, as above.

TERRIFIC, terrible, inspiring dread. (L.) Spelt terrific, Milton, P. L. vii. 497. = Lat. terrificus, causing terror. = Lat. terri-, appearing in terri-fus, pp. of terrere, to frighten; and -ficus, causing, from facere, to make; see TERROR and FACT. Der. terrific-ly. Also terrify, formed as if from a F. *terrifier (given in Littré as a new coinage), from Lat. terrificare, to terrify.

TERRITORY, domain, extent of land round a city. (F., = L.) In As You Like It, iii. 1. 8. = O. F. *territorie, later territoire, 'a territory'; Cot. = Lat. territorium, a domain, the land round a town. Formed from Lat. terra, land; as if from a sb. with crude form territori-, which may be explained as possessor of land. See TERRACE. Der. territorial, adj.

TERROR, dread, great fear. (F., = L.) Formerly written terror. All's Well, ii. 3. 4 (first folio); but also terror, Meas. for Meas. i. 1. 10; ii. 1. 4 (id.) Certainly from F., not directly from Latin. = F. terreur, 'terror'; Cot. = Lat. terrorum acc. of terror, dread. = Allied to terrere, to dread, be greatly afraid, orig. to tremble. β. Terrere stands for terere (like terra for terra); cognate with Skt. trās, to tremble, be afraid, whence trāse, teror. = √ TARS, to tremble, be afraid; whence also Lithuan. triazāti, to tremble, Russ. triazati, triazati, to shake, shiver. Fick, i. 600. Der. terror-ism. And (from same root) terribile, terri-fic, do-ter.

TERSE, concise, compact, neat. (L.) 'So terse and elegant were his concepts and expressions'; Fuller, Worthies, Devonshire (R.)

⊕ Used also in the sense of smooth: 'many stones also, . . . although terre and smooth'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 4. § 3. = Lat. terras, wiped off, clean, neat, pure, nice, terse. Terras is pp. of tergere, also tergere, to wipe, rub off, wipe dry, polish a stone (whence Sir T. Browne's use of terre). Root uncertain. Der. terro-by.

TERTIAN, occurring every third day. (F., = L.) Chiefly in the phr. tertium febris or tertium ager. 'A fever tertiana'; Chaucer, C. T. 14965. = F. tertiane, 'a tertian ague'; Cot. = Lat. tertiana, a tertian fever; fem. of tertianus, tertian, belonging to the third. = Lat. tertius, third. = Lat. tres, three, cognate with E. Three, q. v. And see TIERCE.

TERTIARY, of the third formation. (L.) Modera. = Lat. tertarius, properly containing a third part; but accepted to mean belonging to the third. = Lat. tertius, third; with suffix -arius; see TERTIAN.

TESSELATE, to form into squares or lay with checker-work. (L.) Chiefly used in the pp. tesellatus, which is given in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. 'Tesselated works'; Knolles, Hist. of the Turks, 1603 (Nares). = Lat. tesellatus, furnished with small square stones, checkered. = Lat. tesella, a small squared piece of stone, a little cube, dimm. of testera, a squared piece, squared block, most commonly in the sense of a die for playing with. β. Root uncertain; frequently referred to Gk. τετραπτερος, four, from its square shape; but such a borrowing is very unlikely, and a testera was cubical, having six sides. It has been suggested that testera = *testere, a thing shaken; cf. Vedic Skt. śama, to shake. The word is Latin, not Greek.

TEST, a pot in which metals are tried, a critical examination, trial, proof. (F., = L.) The test was a vessel used in alchemy, and also in testing gold. 'Test, is a broad instrument made of marble or ashes, hooped about with iron, on which refiners do fine, refine, and part silver and gold from other metals, or as we use to say, put them to the test or trial'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. M. E. test or teste, Chaucer, C. T. 16286; Group G, 818. = O. F. test, mod. F. test, a test, in chemistry and metallurgy (Hamilton). Cf. O. F. testa, sometimes used in the sense of skull, from its likeness to a potsherd; mod. F. teste. It is probable that O. F. test and teste were sometimes confused; they merely differ in gender; otherwise, they are the same word. Test answers to a Low Lat. *testum, not found; whilst teste answers to a Low Lat. testis, used to denote a certain vessel in treatises on alchemy; a vessel called a testis is figured in Theatrum Chemicum, iii. 326. In Italian we find the same words, viz. testa, 'the test of silver or gold, a kind of melting-pot that goldsmiths use'; Florio; also testa, 'a head, pate, . . . a test, an earthen pot or galle-cup, burnt tile or brick, a piece of a broken bone, a shard of a pot or tile'. β. All the above words are due to Lat. testis, a brick, a piece of baked earthenware, pitcher, also a potsherd, piece of bone, shell of a fish, skull. Testis is doubtless an abbreviation of *testis, i. e. dried or baked, with reference to clay or earthenware; allied to terro (= terra), dry ground. = √ TARS, to be dry; see TERRACE and TORRID; also THIRST. Der. test, verb; cf. testad gold, Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 149. Also test-er-ous, test-er, test-y, q. v.

TESTACEOUS, having a hard shell. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished from Lat. testaceus, consisting of tiles, having a shell, testaceous. = Lat. testis, a piece of dried clay, tile, brick. See TEST.

TESTAMENT, a solemn declaration in writing, a will, part of the bible. (F., = L.) M. E. testament, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 20, l. 9; Ancres Riwle, p. 388. = F. testament, 'a testament or will'; Cot. = Lat. testamentum, a thing declared, last will. = Lat. testari, to be a witness, depose to, testify; with suffix -mentum. = Lat. testis, a witness. Root uncertain. Der. testament-ary; in-test-ate, q. v.; test-er, Heb. ix. 16, from Lat. testator, one who makes a will; testat-rix, Lat. testatrix, fem. form of testator. And see testify. (From Lat. testis) at-test, con-test, de-test, pro-test.

TESTER, a sumpence; a flat canopy over a bed or pulpit. (F., = L.) 1. The sense 'sumpence' is obsolete, except as corrupted to tuzy; see Shak. 2 Henry IV, iii. 2. 206. The tester was so called from the test upon it; it is a short form of teston, as in Latimer's Sermons, 1584, fol. 94 (Todd). Again, teston is, apparently, a corruption of teston (sometimes teston), which was a brass coin covered with silver, first struck in the reign of Hen. VIII. The name was given to shillings and sixpences, and Latimer got into trouble by referring to the newly coined shilling or teston; see Latimer, Seven Sermons, ed. Arber, p. 85, where it is spelt teston. In 1560 the teston of 6d. was reduced to 4½d. The name teston was given to the new coins of Louis XII. of France because they bore the head of that prince; but Rading observes that the name must have been applied to the E. coin by mere caprice, as all money of this country bore the head of the sovereign; H. B. Wheatley, note to Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, iv. 2. 104, where testes occurs. = F. teston, 'a testoon, a piece of silver coin worth xvijd. sterling;' Cot. = O. F. testa, a head; mod. F. testa. = Lat. testa, of which one sense was 'skull'; see further under Test. 2. 'Tester for a bedde;' Palgrave. The same word as M. E. testere, a head-piece, helmet, Chaucer, C. T. 2501. Cf. 'Tester of a bed;' Prompt. Parv. = O. F. testera, 'any kind of head-piece;' Cot. = O. F. testa, a head; as above. The slang E. trixy, a six-pence, is clearly a corruption of tester.

TESTICLE, a gland in males, secreting seminal fluid. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. testicule, 'a testicle;' Cot. = Lat. testiculum, acc. of testiculus, dimin. of testis, a testicle. Prob. considered as a witness of manhood, and the same word as testis, a witness; see Testament.

TESTIFY, to bear witness, protest or declare. (F., = L.) M. E. testifien, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 172. = F. testifier, 'to testify;' Cot. = Lat. testificari, to bear witness. = Lat. testis, crude form of testis, a witness; and facere, for facere, to make; see Testament and Fact. Der. testif-er.

TESTIMONY, evidence, witness. (L.) In K. Lear, i. 2. 88. Englished from Lat. testimonium, evidence. = Lat. testis, crude form of testis, a witness; see Testament. The suffix -monium = Aryan -mon-ya. The F. word is testimon, O. F. testimong. Der. testimoni-um, in Minabeu, from F. testimonial, 'a testimonial;' Cot.; from Lat. testimonia, adj.

TESTY, heady, fretful. (F., = L.) In Palgrave; and in Jul. Cæs. iv. 3. 46. = F. testu, 'testy, heady, headstrong;' Cot. = O. F. testu, the head; mod. F. testu. See Test. Der. testi-ly; testi-ness, Cymb. iv. 1. 23.

TETCHY, TETCHY, touchy, fretful, peevish. (F., = C.) In Rich. III. iv. 4. 168; Troil. i. 1. 99; Rom. i. 3. 22. The sense of tetchy (better techy) is full of tetches or tetches, i. e. bad habits, freaks, whims, vices. The adj. is formed from M. E. teche or tacha, a habit, esp. a bad habit, vice, freak, caprice, behaviour. 'Tetche, tache, teche, or maner of condycyona, Moa, cooldio;' Prompt. Parv. 'A chylidis tatches in playe, moros pueri inter ludendum;' Horman. Vulgaria; cited by Way. 'Offritia, crafty and deceitfull taches;' Elyot's Dict. 'Of the maners, tatches, and condycions of boundes;' MS. Sloane 3501, c. xi; cited by Way. 'Pe sires tachas' = the father's habits; P. Plowman, B. ix. 146. Tachas, vices; Aynbite of Lawyt, p. 62, l. 15. = O. F. tacha, 'a spot, staine, blemish; also, a reproach, disgrace, blot unto a man's good name;' Cot. Also spelt tachis, tachis, tachis, tach, a natural quality, disposition, esp. a bad disposition, vice, ill habit, defect, stain (Burguy). Mod. F. tache, only in the sense of stain, mark. Cf. Ital. tacca, a notch, cut, defect, stain, Port. and Span. tacha, a defect, flaw, crack, small nail or tack. Prob. of Celtic origin; from Bret. tach, a nail, a tack; whence the sense appears to have been transferred to that of a mark made by a nail, a dent, scratch, notch, &c. See Tache and Tack. Cf. at-tach and de-tach, from the same source. We even find the E. form tach, a spot, stain; Whitgift's Works, ii. 84 (Parker Soc.). Now corrupted to touchy, from the notion of being sensitive to the tach. This is certainly a mere adaptation, not an original expression; see Touchy.

TETHER, a rope or chain for tying up a beast. (C.) Formerly written tadder. 'Live within thy tadder,' i. e. within your income's bounds; Tusser, Husbandry, sect. 10, st. 9 (udenote). 'Taddered cattle,' id. sect. 16, st. 33 (E. D. S. p. 43). M. E. tedir: 'Hoc ligatorium, a tedyre;' Wright's Voc. l. 234, col. 2. Not found earlier than the 15th century. Of Celtic origin. = Gael. teadhair, a tether; teadh, a halter, a hair rope, a chain, cable; teadhon, a little halter, cord; Irish teadh, teadh, a cord, rope, teadh, a small rope, cord; W. tid, a chain, tidwney, a tether, tie. Wedgwood also cites Manx teadh, teadh, a rope. Cf. also W. teadh, a stretch, spasm, also a chord, string. W. teadh, teadh, to stretch; Skt. tedis, a thread, from tea, to stretch. Rhys gives Irish teadh, O. Irish teadh, as equivalent forms to W. teadh; Lectures, p. 56. The root is perhaps TA, to stretch; and the orig. sense may have been 'stretched cord.' We also find Icel. teður, a tether, Low G. teður, teður, a tether, Norw. teður (Aasen), Swed. teður, Dan. teður, N. Frisian teđer (Outen); but all these are probably of Celtic origin. Der. teður, verb.

TETRAGON, a figure with four angles. (F., = L., = Gk.) 'Tetragonal, that is, four-square, as a tetragon or quadrangle;' Blount's Glos., ed. 1674. = F. tetragone, adj., 'of four corners;' Cot. = Lat. tetragonus. = Gk. τετραγωνος, four-angled, rectangular, square. = Gk. τετρα-, pat for τετρα-, prefix allied to τετρα-, Attic form of τετρα-, four, which is cognate with E. Four, q. v.; and γωνια, an angle, corner, from Gk. γωνια, a knee, cognate with E. Knee. Cf. Lat. prefix quadri-, similarly related to quatuor, four. Der. tetragon-um, adj., as above.

TETRAHEDRON, a pyramid, a solid figure contained by four equilateral triangles (Gk.) Spelt tetrahedron and tetrahedron in Phillips, ed. 1706. = Gk. τετρα-, prefix allied to τετρα-, four; and ἕδρα, from ἕδρα, a base, which from ἕδρα, cognate with E. seat. See Tetragon; and see Four and Bit. Der. tetrahedr-um, adj.

TETRARCH, a governor of a fourth part of a province. (L., = Gk.) M. E. tetrarch (ill spelt tetrak), Wyclif, Luke, ix. 7. = Lat. tetrarcha, Luke, ix. 7. = Gk. τετραρχος, a tetrarch. = Gk. τετρα-, prefix allied to τετρα-, four; and ἀρχα-, to be first. Cf. Skt. arh to be worthy. See Tetragon; also Four and Arch. Der. tetrarch-ia; tetrarch-ia, Gk. τετραρχία.

TETRASYLLABLE, a word of four syllables. (F., = L., = Gk.) A coined word; from F. tetrasyllabe, 'of four syllables;' Cot. = Late Lat. tetrasyllabus (not in Ducange). = Gk. τετρασλλαβος, of four syllables. = Gk. τετρα-, prefix allied to τετρα-, four; and σλλαβη, a syllable. See Tetragon; also Four and Syllable. Der. tetrasyllab-ia.

TETTER, a cutaneous disease. (E.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 71; and in Baret (1580). M. E. teter, Trevisa, li. 61. 'Hec serpedo, a teter;' Wright's Voc. l. 267. = A. S. teter. 'Inpetigo [=impetigo], teter;' Wright's Voc. l. 20, l. 2; 'Briensia, teter;' id. l. 288, l. 5. Cf. G. zittermal, a tetter, ring-worm, scurigo. E. Müller also cites O. H. G. astoroch with the same sense, which Stratzmann gives as zitteroch. β. Diez, in discussing F. dartre, explained as 'a tetter or ringworm' in Cotgrave, derives dartre from a Celtic source, as seen in Bret. darvoden or darvoden, W. darvoden, darvoden, a tetter, which he compares with Skt. dardra, with the same sense; and he supposes tetter to be a cognate word with these. γ. Tetter seems certainly connected with Icel. titra, to shiver, twinkle, G. zittern, to tremble; with the notion of rapid motion, hence, itching.

TEUTONIC, pertaining to the Teutons or ancient Germans. (L., = Gothic.) Spelt Teutonick in Blount, ed. 1674. = Lat. Teutonus, adj., formed from Teutoni or Teutones, the Teutons, a people of Germany. The word Teutones means no more than 'men of the nation,' being formed with Lat. suffix -ones (pl.) from Goth. thiuda, a people, nation, or from a dialectal variant of this word. See further under Dutch.

TEXT, the original words of an author; a passage of scripture. (F., = L.) M. E. teste, Chaucer, C. T. 17185. = F. teste, 'a text, the original words or subject of a book;' Cot. = Lat. textus, that which is woven, a fabric, also the style of an author; hence, a text. Orig. neut. of textus, pp. of texere, to weave. + Skt. tabhi to cut wood, prepare, form. β. Both from a base TAKS, extension of TA, to prepare. See Curtius, l. 271, who gives the three main meanings of the root as 'generate,' 'hit,' and 'prepare,' and adds: 'The root is one of the oldest applied to any kind of occupation, without any clearly defined distinction, so that we must not be astonished if we meet the weaver [Lat. tex-tor] in company with the carpenter [Skt. tabhi-va, Gk. τετα-ρω] and the marksman' (Gk. τετα-ρω, a bow). Der. text-book; text-hand, a large hand in writing, suitable for the text of a book as distinct from the notes; text-ual, M. E. textuel, Chaucer, C. T. 17184, from F. textuel, 'of, or in, a text;' Cot., coined as if from a Low Lat. textualis, adj.; text-ual-ly, text-ual-ist. And see text-ile, text-ure below. From the same root are text-ic-um, q. v.; con-text, pro-text. Also sub-tilis, pen-tilis, tail (2).

TEXTILE, woven, that can be woven. (L.) 'The warp and the woof of textilis;' Bacon, Nat. Historie, § 846. = Lat. textilis, woven, textile. = Lat. textus, woven, pp. of texere; see Text. See also textura, textus.

TEXTURE, anything woven, a web, disposition of the parts. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. texture, 'a texture, contexture, web;' Cot. = Lat. textura, a web. = Lat. textus, pp. of texere, to weave; see Text. And see textile above.

TH.

TH. This is a distinct letter from t, and ought to have a distinct symbol. Formerly, we find A. S. þ and ð used (indiscriminately) to denote both the sounds now represented by th; in Middle-English, þ soon went out of use (it occurs in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris), whilst ð and th were both used by the scribes. The letter þ was assimilated in shape to y, till at last both were written alike; hence y, þ (really th, that) are not unfrequently pronounced by modern Englishmen like y and yet; it is needless to remark that y was never pronounced as y man in the middle ages.

For greater distinctness, the symbol þ will be used for A. S. words (and th for M. E. words) corresponding to mod. E. words with the 'voicless' th, as in thou; and the symbol þ for A. S. and M. E. words corresponding to mod. E. words with the 'voicless' th, as in this. It is useful to note these three facts following. 1. When th is initial, it is always voiceless, except in two sets of words, (a) words etymologically connected with that; and (b) words etymologically connected with them. 2. When th is in the middle of a word or is final, it is almost always 'voiced' when the letter s follows, and not otherwise; cf. breasts with breast. A remarkable exception occurs in smooth. 3. No word beginning with th (except thurs, the base of which is Greek) is of Latin origin; most of them are E., but some (easily known) are Greek; thimble is Hebrew.

THAN, a conjunction placed, after the comparative of an adjective or adverb, between things compared. (E.) Frequently written than in old books; extremely common in Shakespeare (1st folio). M. E. thanne, thanne, thanne; also than, than, than. = A. S. þanne, þan; 'betere þanne ðæt reaf' = better than the garment; Matt. vi. 23. Closely allied to (perhaps once identical with) A. S. þane, acc. masc. of the demonst. pronoun; see THAT. See March, A. S. Grammar, § 152. + Du. dan, than, then. + Goth. þan, then, when; allied to thana, acc. masc. of demonst. pron. with neut. þata. + G. dann, then; dann, for, then, than; allied to den, acc. masc. of der. + Lat. tum, then (= Skt. tan, acc. masc. of ta, that). ¶ The same word as then; but differentiated by usage.

THANE, a dignitary among the English. (E.) In Mach. i. 2. 45. M. E. þan, Havelok, 2466. = A. S. þegen, þega, often þin (by contraction), a thane; Grein, ii. 578. The lit. sense is 'mature' or grown up; and the etymology is from þigan, pp. of þian, to grow up, be strong, avail, a verb which is commoner in the by-form þian, with pp. þegen. Leo gives 'þegenon, matura,' from a gloss. See further under THOU (1). + Icel. þegn, a thane (the verb cognate to þigan does not appear) + G. degen, a warrior; orig. one who is mature; from gudigen, pp. of M. H. G. gihan, O. H. G. gihan (mod. G. guden), to grow up, become mature. ¶ Not connected with G. dimen, to serve, which is from quite a different base, and connected with Goth. þina, a servant; Fick, iii. 135, 136. ¶ Fick considers thane (A. S. þegen, G. degen) as immediately identical with Gk. thanos, a child, often applied to grown up people. This is even a simpler solution, and does not disturb the relationship with the verb to than, which is allied to Gk. thano. See Fick, iii. 129; Curtius, i. 271; also Fick, i. 588. From THAT, to generate.

THANK, an expression of good will; commonly used in the pl. thanks. (E.) Chaucer uses it in the sing. number. 'And have a þank;' C. T. 614. So also Gower: 'Although I may no þank deserve;' C. A. l. 66, last line. = A. S. þanc, often also þanc, thought, grace or favour, content, thanks. The primary sense of 'thought' shows that it is closely allied to THINK, q.v. The verb þancian, to thank (Mark, viii. 6), is a derivative from the sb. + Du. danck, sb.; whence dancken, vb. + Icel. þak (= þak), gen. þakar; whence þakka, vb. + Dan. tak, sb.; whence takke, vb.; cf. tanke, a thought, idea. + Swed. tack, sb.; whence tacka, vb. + Goth. þagha (for þanþa), thank, Luke, xvii. 9; where the s is the nasal suffix of the nom. sing.; cf. þagþan, to think. + G. danke, sb., whence dancken, verb. Der. thank, verb, as above; thankful, A. S. þancful, spelt þancful and glossed 'gratiosus'; Wright's Voc. i. 61, col. 2; thankful-ly, thankful-ness; thank-less, Cor. iv. s. 76, thank-less-ly, thank-less-ness, thank-offer-ing, thank-worthy, 1 Pet. ii. 19. Also thank-giving, i.e. a giving of thanks, L. L. L. ii. 193; thank-giver.

THAT, demonst. and rel. pronoun and conjunction. (E.) M. E. that. = A. S. þat, orig. neut. of demonstrative pronoun, frequently used as neut. of the def. article, which is merely a peculiar use of the demonst. pronoun. [The masc. se, and fem. seo, are from a different base; see She.] Very rarely we meet with a corresponding masc. form þe, as in 'þe hearpere' = the harper, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxv. § 6, lib. iii. met. 12, where the Cotton MS. has 'se hearpere'. Also with a corresponding fem. form þed, as in 'þe ðæt sæwul hæbban seol' = which the soul is to have; Adrianus and Ritheus, in Ettmüller's A. S. Selections, p. 40, l. 43. This gives us masc. þe, fem. þed, neut. þæt, all from the same pronominal base THA = Aryan TA, meaning 'he' or 'that'; Fick, iii. 127, l. 586. The suffix -ly in that-ly is merely the mark of the neut. gender, as in who-ly from who, is (formerly is-s) from he; it answers to Lat. -d as seen in is-to-d, qui-d, is-d, illud. ¶ This Aryan TA appears in Skt. ta, it, that, and in numerous cases, such as tam, him (acc. masc.), tam, her (acc. fem.), ta, they, &c. Also in Gk. ta, neut. of def. art., and in the gen. tau, vñ, dat. tau, vñ, acc. tau, vñ, &c. Also in the latter part of Lat. is-ta, is-ud, is-tud. So also Lithuan. ta, masc., ta, fem., that; Russ. to, masc., ta, fem., to, neut., that; Du. de, masc. and fem., dat, conj., that; Icel. þat, neut., the; Dan. den, masc. and fem., det, neut., the; Swed. den, masc. and fem., det, neut., this; G. der, masc., die, fem., das, neut., the; dass, conj., that; Goth. þata, neut. of def. article.

For the purposes of E. etymology it is necessary to give the A. S. def. art. in full. It is as follows, if we put se and seo (the usual forms) in place of þe, þed. SING. NOM. se, sed, þæt; GEN. þæs, þæres, þam; DAT. þam, þæres, þim; ACC. þam, þæ, þæt; INSTRUMENTAL, þy (for all genders). PLUR. NOM. AND ACC. þe; GEN. þæs; DAT. þe.

The proper plural of that is they; those and those are doublets, both being the pl. of this; see THIS. Der. (from dat. sing.) thaw (2); (from acc. sing.) than, tham; (from instrumental sing.) the (2); (from nom. pl.) they; (from gen. pl.) their; (from dat. pl.) tham; see each of these words. And see the (1), thence, thers (1), this, thun, thun. From same base, tant-amount.

THATCH, a covering for a roof. (E.) A weakened form of that, due to the use of the dat. thakke and pl. thakkes. Cf. prov. E. thack, a thatch, thacker, a thatcher. M. E. þat, Prompt. Parv. = A. S. þac, thatch; Grein, ii. 564; whence þaccan (for þac-ian), to thatch, cover, Grein, ii. 577. + Du. dat, sb., whence draken, verb (whence E. drack is borrowed), + Icel. þak, sb., þaka, v. + Dan. tæg, sb., tække, v. + Swed. tak, sb., tække, v. + G. dach, s., decken, v. ¶ All from Teut. base THAKA, a thatch; Fick, iii. 127; from Teut. base THAK, to cover. This base has lost an initial s, and stands for STHAK = Aryan STAG, to cover; as is well shown by Gk. stáras, variant of stéraras, a roof. From the same root we have Skt. stáras, to cover, Gk. stéraras, to cover, Lat. stegere (for stegere), to cover, Lithuan. stágti, to cover, Irish togha, a house, Gael. togha, tigh, a house, Gael. a stágh, within (i. e. under cover), W. ty, a house, ty, to thatch; &c. Der. thatch, vb., as above; thatch-er; spelt thacker, Pilkington's Works, p. 381 (Parker Soc.). Also (from Lat. stegere) steg-ment, stila. Also (from Du. decken) deck; and see TIGHT.

THAW, to melt, as ice, to grow warm after frost. (E.) M. E. þawen, in comp. þ-þawed, pp. thawed away, Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 53. Spelt þawyn, Prompt. Parv. = A. S. þawian, or þawian; 'se wind to-wyrpð and þawð' = the [south] wind disperses and thaws; Popular Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, p. 17, last line. A weak verb, from a lost sb. + Du. dooyen, to thaw, from doei, thaw. + Icel. þawja, to thaw; from þá, a thaw, thawed ground; cf. þeyr, a thaw. + Dan. thø, to thaw; te, a thaw. + Swed. ta, to thaw; is, a thaw. Cf. M. H. G. thawian, G. auflösen, to concoct, digest. ¶ Fick gives the Teut. base as THAWYA, to melt, from a base THU (Aryan TU), to swell, to become strong; see TUMID. Cf. Skt. toya, water, ta, to become strong, to swell, tho, to become fat; the orig. sense was to become strong, overpower, sud of the sun and south wind; Fick, i. 602. ¶ Der. Curtius, i. 269, connects thaw with Gk. tháras, to melt, Lat. labes, moisture, Russ. tanet, to thaw; from TAK, to run, flow. Der. tham, sb. ¶ Is no way connected with des.

THE (1), def. article. (E.) M. E. the. A. S. þe, very rarely used as the nom. masc. of the def. article; we find, however, þe harpere = the harper; see quotation under THAT. The real use of A. S. þe was as an indeclinable relative pronoun, in extremely common use for all genders and cases; see several hundred examples in Grein, ii. 573-577. ¶ Just as A. S. se answers to Goth. se, so A. S. þe answers to an earlier form þe, which is the exact equivalent of Aryan TA, a pronom. base signifying 'that man' or 'he'; see further under THAT.

THE (2), in what degree, in that degree. (E.) When we say 'the more, the merrier' we mean 'in what degree they are more numerous, in that degree are they merrier.' This is not the usual def. article, but the instrumental case of it. M. E. the; as in 'never the bet' = none the better, Chaucer, C. T. 7533. = A. S. þe, þe, as in þe bet = the better; see numerous examples in Grein, ii. 568. This is the instrumental case of the def. article, and means 'on that account' or 'on what account,' or 'in that degree' or 'in what degree.' Common in the phrase for þe, on that account; cf. for amf, on what account. See THAT; and see Why. + Goth. the, instrumental case of def. article. + Icel. þá, þá, dat. (or inst.) case of þat. Cf. Skt. taná, instr. case of ta, sometimes used with the sense of 'therefore'; Benfey, p. 249, s. v. ta, sect. iv.

THEATRE, a place for dramatic representations. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. theatre, Chaucer, C. T. 1887; spelt maire, Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xix. 31. = F. théâtre, 'a theatre'; Cot. = Lat. theatron. = Gk. théatron, a place for seeing shows, &c.; formed with suffix -trion (Aryan -tr), from theō, i. see. Cf. thea, a view, sight, spectacle. ¶ Allied to Skt. dhyaui, to contemplate, meditate on; dhyaui, religious meditation; dhyaui, one who meditates; according to Fick, i. 625. But see Curtius, i. 314, where the word is allied to Russ. tho, a wonder, &c.; cf. Gk. thauma, a wonder. Der. theatrical, adj., theatrical-ly; theatrical-s, s. pl.; amphi-theatre. And see theo-dolite, theo-ry.

THEE (1), acc. of Thou, pers. pron., which see.

THEE (2), to prosper, flourish, thrive. (E.) Obsolete; M. E. þeen, usually þe or þee, Chaucer, C. T. 7788; 'Thom, or thryvya, Vigeo'; Prompt. Parv. = A. S. þeān, þiān, to be strong, thrive; a strong verb, pt. t. þeāh, pp. þeāgan, Grein, ii. 588; closely allied to þiān, to increase, thrive, be strong, pt. t. þiāh, pp. þiāgan, Grein, ii. 591. + Goth. þiāhan, to thrive, increase, advance. + Du. gelyden, to thrive, prosper, succeed. + G. guldiden, O. H. G. gihan, to increase, thrive. ¶ From Teut. base THIH, to thrive (Fick, iii. 134).

answering to Aryan TIK, appearing in Lithuan. tikti, to be worth, to suffice; ni tiku (= G. nicht gedeihen), to be unprofitable; tikyti, to aim; tikyti, to fit; tikti (pres. t. tenbi), to fall to the lot of. — \sqrt{TAK} , to generate, fit, &c.; see Curtius, l. 271; Fick, l. 588. Cf. Gk. taos, birth, also interest, increase, product.

THEFT, the act of thieving, stealing. (E.) M. E. þæft, Chaucer, C. T. 4393 (or 4395). Theft is stealing for thefta, as being easier to pronounce. — A. S. þæfþe, þæfþe, þæfþe (with f sounded as v, and þ voiced), theft; Laws of Ine, §§ 7 and 46; Thorpe, Ancient Laws, l. 106, 130. Formed with suffix -ða (Aryan -ta) from A. S. þæf, þæf, or þæf, a thief, or from þæftan, to steal; see Thief. + O. Fries. thefta, theft; from thiaf, a thief. + Icel. þjǫf, sometimes þjǫft; from þjǫftr, a thief.

THEIR, belonging to them. (Scand.) The word their belongs to the Northern dialect rather than the Southern, and is rather a Scand. than an A. S. form. Chaucer uses hire or here in this sense (= A. S. hira, of them); C. T. 32. M. E. their, Pricks of Conscience, 52, 1862, &c.; thar, Barbour, Bruce, l. 22, 23; þeyre, Ormulum, 127. The word was orig. not a possess. pron., but a gen. plural; moreover, it was not orig. the gen. pl. of he (he), but of the def. article. — Icel. þeirra, O. Icel. þeira, of them; used as gen. pl. of hann, hon, þat (he, she, it), by confusion; it was really the gen. pl. of the def. article, as shown by the A. S. forms. (The use of that for it is a Scand. peculiarity, very common in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambs.) + A. S. þeira, also þeira, gen. pl. of def. art.; see Green, ii. 565. + G. der, gen. pl. of def. art. + Goth. þessa, fem. þessa, gen. pl. of an, an, thata. See further under They and That. Der. thar-a, Temp. i. 1. 58; spelt þeyres, Ormulum, 3506; cf. Dan. deres, Swed. deres, theirs; formed by analogy with our-a, your-a.

THEISM, belief in the existence of a God. (Gk.) 'All religion and theism;' Pref. to Cudworth, Intellectual System (R.) Coined, with suffix -ism (Gk. -ισμός), from Gk. θεός, a god, on which difficult word see Curtius, ii. 122. β . It can hardly be related to Lat. deus, despite the (apparent) resemblance in sound and the identity of sense. It is rather connected with θεοδοσία, to pray; cf. θεο-φωρος, spoken by a god, decreed; and even related (perhaps) to Gk. θεῖον, I place, set. Der. theist (from Gk. θεός); theistic, theist-ical; o-theist, q. v.; apo-theosis, q. v. And see theo-crazy, theo-gou-y, theo-log-y, the-og-y.

THEM, objective case of They, q. v. Der. them-selves.
THEME, a subject for discussion. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. teme, P. Plowman, B. iii. 95, v. 61, vi. 23. At a later period spelt theme, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 434. — O. F. teme, F. theme, 'a them,' Cot. — Lat. thema. — Gk. θέμα, that which is laid down, the subject of an argument. — Gk. base θε-, to place; θέμα, I place. — \sqrt{DHA} , to place, put; whence Skt. dād, to put; &c. See Themis.

THEN, at that time, afterward, therefore. (E.) Frequently spelt than in old books, as in Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 3. 300 (First folio); it times with þen, Lucrece, 1440. Orig. the same word as than, but afterwards differentiated. M. E. þenus, P. Plowman, A. l. 56; þenus, B. l. 58. — A. S. þenus; also þenus, þenas, then, than; Grein, ii. 562, 563. See Than.

THENCE, from that place or time. (E.) M. E. þennis (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 4930; whence (by contraction) thens, written thence in order to represent that the final s was voiceless, and not sounded as s. Older forms þennus, þennus, Owl and Nightingale, 132, 508, 1726; also þennus, Rob. of Glouc., p. 377, l. 16. Here thens is a shorter form of þennus (or þennus) by the loss of n. — A. S. þennus, þennus, thence; also þennus, þennus, thence. Grein, ii. 560, 561. It thus appears that the fullest form was þennus, which became successively þennus, þennus, thens, and (by addition of s) þennus, thens, thence. s was added because -us was a favourite M. E. adverbial suffix, orig. due to the genitive suffix of þen. Again, þe-nus, þe-nus-as, is from the Teut. base THA = Aryan TA, he, that; see That. March (A. S. Grammar, § 252) explains -nus, -nussas, as an oblique case of the (repeated) adj. suffix -na, with the orig. sense of 'belonging to'; cf. Lat. super-nus, belonging (super) above, whence the ablative adverb super-nus, from above. He remarks that belonging to and coming from are near akin, but the lost case ending inclines the sense to from. 'The Goth. in-nans, within, ut-nus, without, hind-nus, behind, do not have the plain sense from. Pott suggests comparison with a preposition (Lettish na, from). Here belong seit-nus, from the east; aft-nus, aft; foerr-nus, from far; &c.' Compare also Hence, Whence. + G. dannum, O. H. G. dannus, thence; from G. base da- = Aryan ta. Der. thence-forth, thence-forward, not in early use.

THEOCRACY, the government of a state immediately by God; the state so governed. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. — Gk. θεοκρατία, the rule of God; Josephus, Against Apion, ii. 16 (Trench. Study of Words). Formed (by analogy with demo-crazy, aristocracy, &c.), from Gk. θεο-, crude form of θεός, a god; and -κρατία, -κρατία (as in δημο-κρατία, δημο-κρατία), i. e. government, power, from κρατία, strong, allied to E. hard. See Thalam and Hard; and see Democracy. Der. theocrat-ic, theocrat-ical.

THEODOLITE, an instrument used in surveying for observing angles and distances. (Gk.) In Blount, ed. 1674. Certainly of Gk. origin; and a clumsy compound. The origin is not recorded and can only be guessed at. Perhaps from Gk. θεο-δολίτης, I see; δόλις, a way; and αὐτός, smooth, even, plain. It would thus mean 'an instrument for seeing a smooth way, or a direct course.' It is no particular objection to say that this is an ill-construed formation, for it was probably composed by some one ignorant of Greek, just as at the present day we have 'simoniacal hair-brushes,' although simon governs an ablative case. β . Another suggestion is to derive it from θεο-δολίτης, I see, and βαλυσός, long, which is rather worse. The former part of the word we may be tolerably sure of. See Theatra.

THEOGONY, the part of mythology which taught of the origin of the gods. (L., -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. 'The theogony in Hesiod;' Selden, Illustrations to Drayton's Polyolbion, song 11 (R.) Englished from Lat. theogonia. — Gk. θεογονία, the origin of the gods; the title of a poem by Hesiod. — Gk. θεο-, crude form of θεός, a god; and -γονία, origin, from Gk. base γεν-, to beget, from Aryan \sqrt{GAN} , to beget. Cf. Gk. γένος, race, γενέσθαι, I become. See Thalam and Genus or Kin. Der. theogon-ist, a writer on theogony.

THEOLOGY, the science which treats of the relations between God and man. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. theologie, Chaucer, Penitence Tale, 3rd pt. of Penitence (Group I, 1043). — F. théologie, 'theology'; Cot. — Lat. theologia. — Gk. θεολογία, a speaking about God. — Gk. θεολογία, adj., speaking about God. — Gk. θεο-, crude form of θεός, a god; and λόγος, to speak. See Thalam and Logia. Der. theologic, theologic-al, theologic-ally; theologic-ian, -ist; theologi-an.

THEORBO, a kind of lute. (F., -Ital.) F. thorbis, thorbis (Litré) = Ital. torbo (Florio). Remoter origin unknown.

THEOREM, a proposition to be proved. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — Lat. theorema. — Gk. θεώρημα, a spectacle; hence, a subject for contemplation, principle, theorem. Formed with suffix -μα (-μα) from θεοράω, to look at, behold, view. — Gk. θεοράω, a spectator. — Gk. θεο-μα, θεο-μα, I see; with suffix -μα (Aryan -ma). See Theatra. And see Theory.

THEORY, an exposition, speculation. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt theorie in Minshew. [The M. E. word was theorie, as in Chaucer. On the Astrolabe, prol. 89; Gower, C. A. iii. 86, l. 17. This is F. théorie, sb. fem. = Lat. theoria, adj. fem., the sb. ars, art, being understood. See Nares.] — F. théorie, 'theory'; Cot. — Lat. theoria. — Gk. θεωρία, a beholding, contemplation, speculation. — Gk. θεωρίω, a spectator; see Theorem. Der. theor-ist, theor-ist; also theor-ist-ic, Gk. θεωρητικός, adj.; theor-ist-ical, &c.

THERAPEUTIC, pertaining to the healing art. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt therapeutick, Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674; and see Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13. § 26. — F. therapeutique, 'curing, healing'; Cot. — Lat. therapeutica, fem. sing. of adj. therapeuticus, healing; the sb. ars, art, being understood. — Gk. θεραπευτικός, inclined to take care of, tending. — Gk. θεραπεύω, one who waits on a great man, one who attends to anything. — Gk. θεραπεύω, to wait on, attend, serve. — Gk. θεραπ-, stem of θεράω, a rare sb., for which the more usual form θεράω, a servant, is used. The stem θερα- means, literally, one who supports or assists; from base θρα- = Aryan DHAR, to support; cf. Skt. dāri, to bear, maintain, support; and see Firm. Der. therapeutic-s, s. pl.

THERE (1), in that place. (E.) M. E. thar, Chaucer, C. T. 43; written thar in Barbour's Bruce. — A. S. þar, þar, Grein, ii. 564; perhaps better written þar, þar, with long vowel. The base in Teut. THA = Aryan TA, he, that; see That. March, A. S. Gram. § 252, explains the suffix -r as the locative case of the comparative suffix -ru; cf. Skt. up-rī, Gk. ὕψ-η, Lat. sup-r, Goth. uf-r, A. S. ofer, E. over. + Da. dær. + Icel. þar. + Dan. and Swed. der. + Goth. thar. + G. dā, M. H. G. dār, O. H. G. dār, dāra. Cf. Here and Where.

THERE (2), only as a prefix. (E.) In there-fore, there-by, &c. It will suffice to explain there-fore. This is M. E. tharfor, with final -e, as in Ormulum, 2431, where we find: 'tharfor seggð þu þu þu word.' Compounded of A. S. þara, dat. fem. of def. art., and the prep. for (disyllabic), before, for the sake of, because of; hence þara-for = for þara = because of the thing or reason, where some fem. sb. is understood. We might supply anon, dat. case of anon, strife, process at law, cause; so that there-for = for þara anon = for that cause. For the prep. for (allied to, yet distinct from for), see Grein, ii. 390.

β . It thus appears that the final e in therefore is not wrong, but therefor and therefor are equivalent. For the fem. dat. þara, see further under That. We may also note that thara- composition is not quite the same as the adv. there. γ. Similar compounds are there-about or (with added adverbial suffix -s) there-about-s, there-after, there-at, there-by, there-from, there-in, there-of, there-on, there-through, there-to, there-onto, there-upon, there-with. As to these, the A. S. prepositions after (after), at (at), be (by), from (from), in (in), of (of), on (on), to (to), with (with), are all found with the dat. case; and the forms there-about, there-through, are not early, and prob. due to analogy. The construction with þær (e) before its preposition occurs even in A. S. 'When a thing is referred to, þær is generally substituted for hit with a prep., the prep. being joined on to the þær; e. g. on hit becomes þæron; Curion hic þæt of beorhtum stāne, geetton hic þæras sigora Wealdend = they cut it [the tomb] out of the bright rock, they placed it in the Lord of victories.' Sweet, A. S. Grammar, 2nd ed. p. xci. We can easily see how þæron, þæra, þær, and this may account for the loss of the final s of there in M. E. therefore.

THERMOMETER, an instrument for measuring the variations of temperature. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. First invented about 1597 (Haydn). Coined from Gk. θερμo, crude form of θερμης, hot, warm; and μετρος, a measure, a measurer, for which see Metre. β. The Gk. θερμης is supposed by Curtius (ii. 99) to be cognate with E. warm; but there are difficulties as to this; see Warm. Rather, θερμης is almost certainly related to Skt. gharṃa, heat, and therefore to E. glow. The root is ghar, to shine, glow; see Glow. Der. thermometr-is, -is-at, -is-al-ly; and see iso-therm-al.

THESAURUS, a treasury of knowledge, esp. a dictionary. (L., =Gk.) A doublet of Treasure, q. v.

THESE, pl. of Thiss, q. v. Doublet, these.
THESIS, a statement laid down to be argued about, an essay on a theme. (L., =Gk.) In Minabeu, ed. 1627. = Lat. thesis. = Gk. thesis, a proposition, statement, thing laid down. Put for θε-σις, allied to θε-σις, placed, verbal adj. from the base θη-σ = q/DHA, to put, place. See Thema. Der. anti-thesis, apo-thesis, epi-thesis, hypo-thesis, meta-thesis, para-thesis, para-thesis, pro-thesis, pro-thesis, syn-thesis. From same root are apo-thero-ry, apo-thero-ry, epi-thero-ry, thero-ry, thero-ry, treasure.

THEURGY, supernatural agency. (L., =Gk.) Rare. A name applied to a kind of magic said to be performed by the operation of gods and demons. Rich. gives an example from Hallywell's Melampus (1682), p. 51. Englished from Lat. theurgia, Latinised form of Gk. θεουργία, divine work, magic. = Gk. θεός, crude form of θεός, a god; and εργον, work, cognate with E. work. The diphthong eu is due to coalescence of e and u. See Theism and Work. Der. theurgic, theurgic-al.

THEWS, pl. th, sinews, strength, habits, manners. (E.) 'Thews and limbs.' Jul. Cæs. iii. 1. 81; cf. Haml. i. 3. 12. M. E. þewe, i. e. habits, manners, Chaucer, C. T. 9416. 'Alle gode þewes,' all good virtues; Ancren Riwle, p. 240, l. 16. The sing. þewe (dat. case) occurs in Layamon, l. 6361, with the sense of sinew or strength; on which Sir F. Madden remarks: 'This is the only instance in the poem of the word being applied to bodily qualities. Cf. Scotch thawes, feeble.' In other passages it occurs in the pl. þewes, þewes, ll. 2147, 6899, 7161, with the usual sense of mental qualities. Of course, as in all metaphorical expressions, the sense of 'bodily strength' is the orig. one, and that of 'mental excellence' is secondary. = A. S. þewe, habit, custom, behaviour; the pl. þewes signifies manners; Grein, ii. 584. The word does not happen to occur with the orig. sense of strength, but the derived verb þewes exhibits it. 'Esco, sumanda bowes ad campum' is glossed by 'ic gā ut, þewende oxen to fields' = I go out, driving oxen to the fields, i. e. exercising my strength to compel them; Ælfric's Colloquy (Autor). = O. Sax. þew, custom, habit. = O. H. G. deu, deu (cited by E. Müller). β. The base is thaw-, evidently from Teut. base THU, to be strong, to swell, as noted by Fick, iii. 135. = q/TU, to be strong, to swell; cf. Skt. tu, to be strong, to increase, tho, to become fat, tu- (prefix), greatly, much; Lithuan. stūti, to grow fat, Russ. tušiti, to fatten. γ. It will thus be seen that the sense of bulk, strength, comes straight from the root, and is the true one; it survives in Scotch thowless, thowless, thowless, for which Jamieson gives a wrong etymology, from A. S. þewe, a servant, a word which, however, is from the same root. The remarks in Trench, Select Glossary, are due to a misapprehension of the facts.

Quite distinct from thigh, but the root is the same.

THEY, used as pl. of he, she, it. (Scand.) The word they is chiefly found in the Northern dialect; Barboer uses nom. thai, gen. thair, dat. and acc. thaim or tham, where Chaucer uses nom. they, C. T. 18, gen. hays, hays, hir, id. 588, dat. and acc. hem, id. 18. The Ormulum has þey, þeyr, their, of them, þeym, dat. and acc., them. Of these forms, hem survives only in the mod. prov. E. 'em, as in 'I saw 'em go;' whilst the gen. hays is (perhaps) entirely lost.

Again, hays and hem (A. S. hira or hæra, hæm or him) are the true forms, properly used as the pl. of he, from the same base; whilst they, thair, thaim are really cases of the pl. of the def. article. β. The use is Scand., not E.; the A. S. usage confines these forms to the def. article, but Icelandic usage allows them to be used for the personal pronoun. = Icel. þeir, nom.; þeirra, gen.; þeim, dat.; used to mean they, their, them, as the pl. of hann, hon, he, she. The extension of the use of dat. thaim to its use as an accusative is precisely parallel to that of hem, properly a dat. form only. The Icel. acc. is þá, but Danish and Swedish confuse dat. and acc. together. Cf. Dan. and Swed. de, they; dem (dat. and acc.), them. Also Dan. deres, their, theirs; Swed. deras, their, theirs. = A. S. þai, nom.; þæra, gen.; þam, þam, dat.; Grein, ii. 568. [The A. S. acc. was þá, like the nom.; cf. prov. E. 'I saw they horses,' i. e. those horses.] These forms þai, þæra, þam, are cases of the plural of the def. art.; from Teut. THA = Aryan TA, pronom. base of the 3rd person. See That. γ. This explains they, thair, thaim; thair was orig. only the gen. pl., just like our, your. Thair occurs as þeyrre, in the Ormulum, 2506, and may be compared with Dan. deres, Swed. deras, their.

THICK, dense, compact, closely set. (E.) M. E. þikke, Chaucer, C. T. 1058. = A. S. þicc, thick, Grein, ii. 590. = O. Sax. thicki, = Du. dik, = Icel. þykkir; O. Icel. þykkir, þykkir. = Dan. tyk, = Swed. tyk, tyck. = G. dicke, O. H. G. dicke. β. The Teut. base is THIKYA, Fick, iii. 133. Perhaps further allied to Gael. and Irish thugh, thick, fat, dense, W. tw, thick, plump. Frequently referred to E. thick, to prosper, see Thes (2); but this is very doubtful and unsatisfactory. γ. Fick also suggests (i. 87) a connection between thick and Lithuan. tuškus, thick; and compares both with Skt. tušā, to contract. Der. thick-ly, thick-ness, A. S. þiccnes, Mark, iv. 5; thick-ish; thick-on, Macb. iii. 2. 50, properly intransitive, like Goth. verbs in -nan, formed by analogy with other verbs in -an, or borrowed from Icel. þykkja, to become thick (cf. A. S. þiccnes, to make thick, Ælfric's Gram. ed. Zupitza, p. 220); thick-et, L. L. l. iv. 2. 60, A. S. þiccet, of which the pl. þiccetu occurs in Ps. xxviii. (xxix.) 8 to translate Lat. condensus; thick-head-ed; thick-shin, sb., Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 13.

THEIF, one who steals. (E.) Pl. thieves. M. E. þeuf, Wyclif, Matt. xvi. 55; pl. þeuf, id. Mark, xv. 27. = A. S. þeuf, pl. þeufas, Grein, ii. 596. = Du. dief. = Icel. þýfr. = Dan. tyv. = Swed. tyv. = G. dieb, O. H. G. diup. = Goth. thiubo. β. All from Teut. base THEUBA (or THIUBA), a thief; Fick, iii. 133. Root unknown; perhaps related to Lithuan. tupe, to squat or crouch down. Der. theft, q. v.; thieve, A. S. þeufþeas, Laws of Ine, § 48, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, l. 133; thief-ish, Romeo, iv. 1. 79; thief-ery, Tumor, iv. 2. 438, a coined word (with F. suffix -erie).

THIGH, the thick upper part of the leg. (E.) M. E. þi, Layamon, 26071; þai, Trevisa, iv. 185; but the guttural is usually dropped, and the common form in þ or þy. Prompt. Parv., or þe, Havelok, 1950. = A. S. þi, or þe, Grein, ii. 588. = Du. dy. = Icel. þý, thigh, ramp. = M. H. G. dicke, dicke, O. H. G. dicke, dicke. β. The Teut. type is THEUHA, thigh, Fick, iii. 135. The orig. sense is 'the fat, thick, plump part'; cf. Icel. þý, the ramp. Closely allied to Lithuan. tuškus, fat of animals, tušis, to become fat, tušinti, to fatten; Russ. tuš, fat of animals, tušiti, to fatten. From a base TUK, extension of q/TU, to increase, be strong, swell; see Tuzid; and see Thew.

THILL, the shaft of a cart. (E.) 'Thill, the beam or draught-tree of a cart or waggon, upon which the yoke hangs; Thiller or Thill-horse, the horse that is put under the thill;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Hence thill-horse, put for thill-horse, Merch. Ven. ii. 2. 100; thill for thill, Troil. iii. 2. 48. M. E. þille. 'Thyllie, of a carte, Temo; Thyllie-horse, Veredus;' Prompt. Parv. = A. S. þilla, glossed by subulamus, Wright's Voc. i. 390, col. 2, where the sense seems to be 'board' or 'trancher'; þilla meant a thin slip of wood, whether used for a thill or for a wooden platter; cf. Wright's Voc. i. 168, 202, 234. We also find: 'Tabulatorum, uðþýlling,' id. l. 38, l. 15; also: 'Ara, brada þilling, vel flor ad þroccum,' i. e. a thilling of boards, or floor to thrash on, id. 37. = Icel. þýla, a plank, planking, esp. in a ship, a bench for rowers, deck. = M. H. G. dille, O. H. G. dilla, thill, G. diele, a board, plank. β. These Fick combines under the Teut. type THELYA, a plank; there is another closely allied type THELA, under which may be ranged A. S. þel, a plank (occurring in þell-fastum, that which is compacted of planks, a ship, Grein, ii. 579, and in other compounds, noted by Grein, a. v. þel), Icel. þili, a wainscot, plank, O. H. G. dil, diele, a plank. Root unknown; Fick suggests comparison with Skt. tala, a surface. γ. Many dictionaries render the Icel. and G. words by thill, with reference to a deal-board; but the connection of deal with thill is very doubtful. No doubt the Du. diel, meaning a plank, board, is the same as E. deal, and prob. gave rise to that particular use of the E. word. But we may just as well connect Du. diel, a plank, with Du. diel, a division, share; and then E. deal remains the same word in all its senses. Der. thall-hera, as above.

THIMBLE, a metal cover for the finger, used in sewing. (E.) Though now worn on the finger, similar protections were once worn on the thumb, and the name was given accordingly. M. E. þimbel. 'Thymbyl, Theca;' Prompt. Parv. Formed with excrement b, as in thumb itself from A. S. þymel, a thumb-stall; A. S. Læchdoma, ii. 150, l. 6. Formed with suffix -l, indicative of the agent, or in this case of the protector, from A. S. þama, a thumb; see Thumb. Thimble = thumb-er; formed by vowel-change.

THIN, extended, slender, lean, fine. (E.) M. E. þinn, Chaucer, C. T. 9556; þinne, Ancrén Riwe, p. 144, l. 13. = A. S. þinn, Grein, ii. 613. + Du. thin. + Icel. þinn. + Dan. tynd (for tynd?). + Swed. tinna. + G. dünn; O. H. G. dünn. + W. tinou; Gael. and Irish tinna. + Russ. tonii. + Lat. tinna. + Gk. tinna, slim. + Skt. tinu. β. All from Aryan TĀNU, thin, slender, orig. outstretched, as in Gk. tinna; in the Teut. words, the vowel a has changed to e by the influence of following n, and then to i or y; see Fick, i. 592, iii. 130. From TAN, to stretch; cf. Skt. tan, to stretch, Goth. af-thanjan, A. S. þanjan, to stretch out, Lat. tan-d-ere. Der. thin-ness; thin-ly; thin-ly; thin, verb. From same root are tan-ny, at-tan-ny, ex-tan-ny; tan-ble, q. v.; and (1), q. v.

THINE, THY, poss. pron. belonging to thee. (E.) M. E. thin, with long i, and without final e; gen. thine, dat. thine, nom. and acc. pl. thine; by loss of n, we also have M. E. thi = mod. E. thy. The n was commonly retained before a vowel; 'This was thin oth, and min also certain;' Chaucer, C. T. 1141; 'To me, that am thy cousin and thy brother,' id. 1133. = A. S. þin, poss. pron., declined like an adjective; derived from þin, gen. case of þu, thou; see THOU. + Icel. þinn, þin, poss. pron.; from þin, gen. of þú. + Dan. and Swed. þin, poss. pron. + G. dein; from dein, gen. of du. + Goth. þine; from þinein, gen. of þu.

THING, an inanimate object. (E.) M. E. þing, Chaucer, C. T. 13865. = A. S. þing, a thing; also, a cause, sake, office, reason, council; also written þing, þine, Grein, ii. 592. + Du. ding. + Icel. þing, a thing; also, an assembly, meeting, council. + Dan. and Swed. ting, a thing; also, an assize, + G. ding, O. H. G. ding. β. From Teut. type THINGA, Fick, iii. 134; prob. allied to Lithuan. þinti (pres. t. þinti), to fall to one's share, to suffice; þinti (pres. t. þinti), to suit, fit; þinti, it happens, þinti, fit, right, proper. If so, it is from TAK, to fit, prepare; on which root see Curtius, i. 371. The sense would thus appear to be 'that which is fit,' 'that which happens,' an event; or 'that which is prepared,' a thing made, object. γ. From the same root is A. S. þinga, to thrive, as shown under THOSE (3); which is certainly related to the curious verb þinga, to grow, only found in pt. t. subj. þinga (Grein, ii. 593) and pp. þingjan (id. l. 471). ¶ Only very remotely related to thing. Der. any-thing, M. E. any þing; no-thing, M. E. no þing; also þing-ly, q. v.

THINK, to exercise the mind, judge, consider, suppose, purpose, opine. (E.) M. E. þinken, to think, suppose, also þenken, as in Chaucer, C. T. 3254. Orig. distinct from the imper. verb þinken, explained under Method; but confusion between the two was easy and common. Thus, in P. Plowman, A. vi. 90, we have I þinke, written I þinke in the parallel passage, B. v. 609. The pt. t. of both verbs often appears as þoughte, pp. þoght. Strictly, the pt. t. of think should have become þoght, and of no-think should have become no-thoght, but the spellings ogh and ugh are confused in modern E. under the form ough. = A. S. þencan, þencan, to think, pt. t. þohte; Grein, ii. 579. A weak verb, allied to þene, ab. (1) a thought, (2) a thank; see Thank. + Icel. þykja, old pt. t. þykki, to perceive, know. + Dan. tenke. + Swed. tenka. + G. denken, pt. t. dachte. + Goth. þagþan (= þanþan), pt. t. þakta. β. All from a Teut. base THANK or THAK, to think, suppose; Fick, iii. 128. This is allied to the curious O. Lat. þagþra, to think, to know, a Prænestine word preserved by Festus (see White); also to Lithuan. þinti, to believe. The last word may be connected with the Lithuan. words mentioned in the last article. The root is TAG, weakened from TAK, to fit; see Fick, i. 388, Curtius, i. 371. γ. The word think is from the same root, but in a much closer connection; see Thing. Der. thought, sb., q. v. Allied to think, and (very remotely) to thing.

THIRD, the ordinal of the number three. (E.) Put for third. M. E. þridde, Chaucer, C. T. 12770; spelt þridde, Seven Sages, ed. Wright, l. 49. = A. S. þridde, third; Grein, ii. 490. = A. S. þrod, þri, three; see Three. + Du. derde. + Icel. þridi. + Dan. tridde; Swed. tridde. + G. dris. + Goth. þridya. + W. tryde, trydd; Gael. and Irish dris. + Russ. triti. + Lithuan. tricitas. + Lat. tertius. + Gk. epitros. + Skt. tritiya. β. All from a form TERTA, TERTIA, or TARTIA, as variants of TRITA; Fick, i. 605. Der. third-ly; and see riding.

THIRL, to pierce. (E.) See Thril.

THIRST, dryness, eager desire for drink, eager desire. (E.) M. E. þurst, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 366; various readings þurst, þurst, þurst. = A. S. þurst, Grein, ii. 611; also þurst, þurst, id. 612; whence þurstan, verb, id. 614. + Du. dorst; whence dorsten, verb. + Icel. þursti; whence þyrsta, vb. + Dan. tørst; whence tørste, vb. + Swed. törst; whence törsta, vb. + G. durst; whence dürsten, vb. + Goth. þurstai, ab. β. All from Teut. base THORSTA, thirst, Fick, iii. 133; where -st is a noun-suffix; the orig. sense is dryness. From Teut. base THARS, to be dry, appearing in the Goth. strong vb. thauran (in comp. guthairson), pt. t. thars, pp. thaurans. = TARS, to be dry, to thirst; cf. Skt. tarika, thirst, trik, to thirst, Irish tairt, thirst, drought, Gk. tripo-sobos, to become dry, tripo-alobos, to dry up, wipe up, Lat. torrens (for torrens), to parch, torre (for torrens), dry ground. Der. thirst, vb., as above; thirst-y, A. S. þurstig, Grein, ii. 611; thirst-i-ly, thirst-i-ness. And (from the same root) thirst-acc, thirst-id, thirst, thirst-ness.

THIRTEEN, three and ten. (E.) M. E. þirtene, P. Plowman, B. v. 214. = A. S. þirtene, þirtene, Grein, ii. 599. = A. S. þred, three; and ten, ten; with pl. suffix -en. See Three and Ten. + Du. dertien. + Icel. þrettán. + Dan. trættien. + Swed. tretton. + G. dreizehn. All similar compounds. Der. thirteen-ly, A. S. þirteneða (Grein), Icel. þrettándi, where the n, dropped in A. S., has been reintroduced.

THIRTY, three times ten. (E.) M. E. þritti, Wyclif, Luke, iii. 23; þretty þirty, Prompt. Parv., p. 491. = A. S. þritig, þritig, Grein, ii. 601; the change of long i to short i caused the doubling of the t. = A. S. þri, variant of þred, three; and -ig, suffix denoting 'ten;' see further under Three and Ten. + Du. dertig. + Icel. þritti. + Dan. tridde. + Swed. trötis. + G. dreissig. All similar compounds. Der. thirt-eth, A. S. þritigða.

THIS, demonstr. pron. denoting a thing near at hand. (E.) 1. SINGULAR FORM. M. E. this, Chaucer, C. T. 1574; older form thos, Ancrén Riwe, p. 170, l. 12. = A. S. þes, masc.; þese, fem.; þis, neuter; see Grein, ii. 581. + Du. deus. + Icel. þessi, masc. and fem.; þetta, neuter. + G. dieser; M. H. G. dieser; O. H. G. dieser. The O. Sax. form is supposed to have been thos, but it does not appear in the nom. masculine. β. This is most likely an emphatic form, due to joining the two pronominal bases THA and SA. For the discussion of these, see That and She. See March, A. S. Grammar, § 133. 2. PLURAL FORM. The mod. E. pl. form is these; thos being only used as the plural of that. This distinction is unoriginal; both thos and thes are varying forms of the plural of thas, as will at once appear by observing the numerous examples supplied by Stramon.

β. The M. E. word for 'those' was thos or thes, due to A. S. þas, nom. pl. of the def. article; in accordance with this idiom, we still have the common prov. E. 'they horses' = thes horses; it will be easily seen that the restriction of the form thes (with s) to its modern use was due to the influence of this older word thas. For examples of thos = those, see Wyclif, Matt. iii. 1, xiii. 17. γ. It remains to give examples of the M. E. pl. forms of this. Layamon has þes, þes, þes, þes, ll. 476, 1038, 2219, 3816; alle þes = all these, Aycnbit of lawyt, p. 10, l. 17; þes word = these words, Owl and Nightingale, 139; þes wordes = these words, P. Plowman, B. prol. 184; þes wordes = these words, id. C. l. 198. = A. S. þas, þas, these, pl. of þes, thas, Grein, ii. 581. Of these forms, þas became thos, while þes became thes.

THISTLE, a prickly plant. (E.) M. E. þistil, spelt thystille in Prompt. Parv.; where we also find sumthystille = sow-thistle. = A. S. þistil; 'Carduus, þistil,' Wright's Voc. l. 31, col. 2. + Du. distel. + Icel. þistill. + Dan. tistel. + Swed. tistel. + G. distel; O. H. G. distil, distula. β. The Teut. type is THISTILA, Fick, iii. 134. The loss of s before t being not uncommon, there can be little doubt that Fick is right in regarding THISTILA as standing for THINSTILA, i. e. 'the tearer;' from the base THINS, to pull, appearing in Goth. af-thinann, to pull towards one, M. H. G. dinzen, O. H. G. thinnan, to pull forcibly, to tear. Cf. Lithuan. þinti (put for þinti), to stretch, pull, þinti (for þinti), to pull forcibly, tear, from a base TANS which is clearly an extension from the common TAN, to stretch; see Thin. Der. thist-ly.

THITHER, to that place. (E.) M. E. thider (cf. M. E. fader, moder for mod. E. father, mother); Chaucer, C. T. 1265. = A. S. þider, þyder, thither; Grein, ii. 590. + Icel. þaðra, there. + Goth. thithra, thence. β. The Teut. type is THATHRA, Fick, iii. 127; cf. Skt. attra, there, thither. Formed from Teut. THA = Aryan TA, demonstr. pronom. base, for which see That; with a suffix (Aryan -tra) supposed to be the instrumental case of a comparative in -tra; see March, A. S. Grammar, § 153. Compare Hither and Whither. Der. thither-ward, A. S. þadornard, Grein, ii. 591.

THOLE (1), THOWL, a pin or peg in the side of a boat to keep the oars in place. (E.) Commonly called a thole-pin, though the addition of pin is needless. M. E. thol, sol. 'Tholle, carte-pynne, y. We thus see that A. S. þryr = through-of; whence the verb was formed. See Through. The ultimate root is √TAR, to pierce; cf. Irish air, through. √Fick, l. 295, derives A. S. þryr, a hole, directly from √TAR; but the true form is certainly þryr, and he passes over one step in the descent from the root to through, and from through to þryr, without any explanation. From following this lead, I have made the same mistake in explaining Drill, q. v. The Du. drillen is from dril (O. Du. drille), a hole; and O. Du. drille must have been a derivative from the old form of Du. door, through; cf. O. Saxon thura, through. Der. thruil, sb., a late word; thruil-ing, prep. part as ad. Also mas-tril, q. v. Doublet, drill (from Dutch).

THRIVE, to prosper, flourish, be successful. (Scand.) M. E. þrive (with s-v), Chaucer, C. T. 3677; Havelok, 280; Ormulum, 1086b. A strong verb; pt. t. þraf, Ormulum, 312a, þraf, Rob. of Glouc. p. 21, l. 5; pp. þriuen. = Icel. þryfa, to clutch, grasp, grip, seize; hence þryfask (with suffixed -sk = sb. self), lit. to seize for oneself, to thrive. [It is suggested in the Icel. Dict. that þryfask is not connected with þryfa, but the transition from 'seizing to oneself' to 'thiving' is easy, and, as both are strong verbs, conjugated alike, it is hardly possible to separate them. Cf. Norw. trova, to seize, treat, to thrive.] The pt. t. is þraf, and the pp. þriuen; hence the sb. þrif, prosperity, and E. thrift. + Dan. trives, reflex. verb, to thrive; whence trivsel, prosperity. + Swed. trivas, reflex. verb, to thrive; whence trivsel, prosperity. Der. thruing-ly, thrift, q. v.; thrift, M. E. þryft, Chaucer, C. T. 12905; þryft-ly, þryft-ness; þryft-les, þryft-les-ly, -ness. Also thruen, q. v.

THROAT, the fore-part of the neck with the gullet and windpipe, the gullet. (E.) M. E. þroat, Ancien Kivie, p. 216, l. 4. = A. S. þrota, throat, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxii, § 3 (bk. iii, pr. 2); also þrota, þrota; 'Guttur, þrota', Wright's Voc. l. 43, col. 2; 'Guttur, þrota', id. 70, last line. + O. H. G. throzza, M. H. G. throzza, the throat; whence G. throzza, throat, throatle. β. Referred in Etimologie to A. S. þrota (pp. þroten), to press; a verb treated of s. v. Threat. But it is more likely that an initial s has been lost, and that A. S. þrota stands for strota. This s is preserved in Du. strot, the throat, O. Du. strot, strot, 'the throat or the gullet,' Hexham, strota, 'the wren [wrennamd] or the wind-pipe,' id. So also O. Fris. strothalla = A. S. þrothalla, the gullet or windpipe; and cf. Ital. strozza, the gullet, a word of Teut. origin. We must therefore refer it to a base STRUT.

y. Again, the Swed. strupa, Dan. strube, the throat, are clearly related; and are allied to Icel. strypa, the spurting or bleeding trunk, when the head is cut off, Norweg. strupa, the throat, a small opening, strupa, strupa, water flowing out of lumps of ice or snow. These lead us to a base STRUP. β. We actually possess derivatives of þrota bases in the equivalent dimin. forms þrothille and þrothulle (see Thropps); and it is easy to see that both sets of words are from the common base STRU, to flow, stream, whence E. Stream, q. v. = √SRU, to flow. The orig. sense was clearly that of 'pipe' or of an opening whence water flows; easily transferred to the sense of that wherein things flow. Der. throth-le, the wind-pipe, dimin. of throta; throth-le, verb, to press on the windpipe, M. E. þrothle, Destruction of Troy, 1273a. Also þrothulle, q. v.

THROB, to beat forcibly, as the heart. (E.) M. E. þroben, rare. 'With þroben herte' = with throbbing heart; P. Plowman, A. 22. 48. The word must be either E. or Scand., as it begins with þ; but it appears neither in A. S. nor in the Scand. languages. We must call it E. β. Allied to Russ. trobit, palpitation, throbbing, trembling, fear; trobitate, to throb, palpitate with joy; and prob. to trobit, to beat hemp, also to knock softly. Also to Lat. trochus; see Trepidation. Der. throth, sb., Spenser, Shep. Kal. May, 308.

THROE, pang, pain, agony. (E.) It might be spelt throu, but is probably spelt throu to distinguish it from the verb to throu. M. E. þrou. 'Throue, Erumpas,' Prompt. Parv. And see þrouen, pl. pangs, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 181, l. 2. = A. S. þrod (short for þroden), a rebuke, affliction, threat, evil, pain: 'þoliað wé uð þrod on helle' = now we suffer a throu is hell, Caedmon, ed. Green, l. 389; see Green, ii. 596. = A. S. þrota, pt. t. of strong verb þrota (pp. þrota), to afflict severely; a verb of which the traces are slight. Lye has: 'þrota, agomare, Cot. 140, 194,' but his reference is not clear; we also find the pp. þrota in an obscure passage; see Green, l. 46. The clearest traces of þrota are in the derivatives of the pp. þrota; these are numerous and common, such as þrota, a martyr, þrota, to suffer, esp. to suffer great pain, þrota, martyrdom, &c.; see Green, ii. 601, 602. + Icel. þrod, a throe, hard struggle; þrod, to pant after; þroja, to endure. + O. H. G. throzza, throzza, throza, M. H. G. throzza, throza, throza, a throe; whence G. throzza, to threaten. β. All from Teut. base THRU = Aryan TRU, to bore, hence, to vex; cf. Russ. trojiti, to nip, pinch, gall. From √TAR, to bore; see Trite, and see Threat.

THROWE, a royal seat, chair of state. (F., = L., = Gk.) Now conformed to the Gk. spelling. M. E. troue, Wyclif, Matt. v. 34. =

O. F. troue (13th cent.), spelt troue in Cot.; mod. F. troue. = Lat. troum, acc. of trouus, Matt. v. 34. = Gk. θρόνος, a seat, chair; lit. a support. = √DHAR, to hold, support; cf. Skt. dhri, to bear, hold, support, whence dhrona, preserving, supporting, a support, dhruant, the earth.

THROW, a great crowd of people. (E.) M. E. þrow, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 135; þrow, Fricks of Conscience, 4704. = A. S. þrow, a throng, Green, l. 473; where the common prefix þ makes no difference. = A. S. þrow, pt. t. of the strong vb. þrowan, to crowd, to press (pp. þrowen), Mark, v. 24. + Du. draug, a crowd; from dringon, to crowd. + Icel. þrow, a throng. + G. draug, a throng; from drang, pt. t. of dringon (pp. drungen), to crowd, press. Cf. Dan. traw, Swed. traw, adj., pressed close, tight, prov. E. thruw, adj., busy. (And cf. Goth. thrudus (pp. thrudans), to throng, press round, from the √TARK.) β. All from Teut. base THRANG (for THRANH); Fick, iii. 139. Allied to Lithuan. trambti, to jolt, to push, trambimas, a tumult. Thus the Aryan base is TRANK, assimilated form of √TARK, to twist, press, squeeze; see Throw, and see Torture. Der. thruw, verb, M. E. þrowen, Morris Arthur, ed. Brock, 3755.

THROPPLE, THRAPPLE, the wind-pipe. (E.) Spelt thropple by Johnson, who gives it as a Lowland Sc. word; better thropple, see Halliwell and Jamieson. Halliwell gives also thropple, to throttle; a derived sense. A dimin. form of thrope, a variant of thrope, the throat, as appearing in Norweg. and Swed. strupa, Dan. strube, the throat. Thropple is, in fact, a mere variant of throthle. See further under Throat. γ. This seems to me the simplest explanation; it is usually said to be a corruption of A. S. þrothalla, the gullet, which requires very violent treatment to reduce it to the required form, besides having a different sense. The A. S. þrothalla survived for a long time; Palgrave gives: 'Throthale or throthale, neu de la gorge, gosier.' It means throat-hole rather than throat-bell, as Halliwell renders it; see Bola.

THROSTLE, the song-thrush. (E.) M. E. þrostel, Chaucer, C. T. 13703. 'Moues' is glossed by 'a throstele-kok' in Walter de Bibbesworth; Wright's Voc. l. 164, l. 1. = A. S. þrosta; 'Merula, þrosta', Wr. Voc. l. 62, col. 2; spelt þrosta (by loss of r), id. l. 29, col. 2. + M. H. G. trostet; of which a varying form is trostet or drostet (G. drostet); the latter answers to O. H. G. throsta, dimin. of throsta (for throsta), a thrush. β. Throstle is a variant of throthle, a dimin. of throta; we actually find the form throthle as well as throthle in the Prompt. Parv. See Thru (1).

THROTTLE, the wind-pipe. (E.) See Throat.

THROUGH, from beginning to end, from one side to the other, from end to end. (E.) For the form through, see Thorough. M. E. þruh, þruh, Ancien Kivie, p. 92, ll. 11, 17. Other forms are þruh, þruh, þruh, þruh, þruh, þruh, þruh, þruh, &c.; see Strattmann. Also þruh, Reliquiae Antiquae, l. 102, by metathesis of r; and hence mod. E. through. = A. S. þruh prep. and adv., through, Green, ii. 607, 610; O. Northumb. þruh, Matt. xxvii. 18 (Lindisfarne MS) + Du. door. + G. durch, O. H. G. durh, durh. + Goth. thairh, through. β. The Goth. thairh, a hole, is doubtless connected with thairh; and the A. S. þruh, a hole, is a derivative from þruh, through; as shown under Thril. The fundamental notion is that of boring or piercing; and we may refer through to the √TAR, to bore. γ. This is made more probable by comparing through with Irish air, beyond, over, through, air, through, air, beyond; Lat. trans, across; Skt. trans, through, over, from tri, to pass over, a verb which is allied to Lat. trare; see Trite. Der. through-by, thoroughly (see Thorough); through-out, M. E. þruhwut, Ancien Kivie, p. 212, l. 23, with which cf. G. durchaus, a similar compound.

THROW, to cast, to hurl. (E.) One sense of the word was to twist or wind silk or thread; hence throwster, a silk-winder; 'Throustar, deviderens de soys,' Palgrave. The orig. sense was to turn, twist, whirl; hence a turner's lathe is still called a throu (Halliwell). M. E. þrown, pt. t. þrown, P. Plowman, B. 22. 163; pp. þrown, Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 24 (earlier version), now contracted to þrown. = A. S. þrown, to twist, whirl, hurl; pt. t. þrown, pp. þrown; a verb which, strangely enough, is rare. 'Cot-torquee, u annod þrown, i. e. I twist together, occurs in Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 255, l. 16. The pt. t. þrown = turned itself, occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 510, l. 8. Leo quotes, from various glossaries: 'go-þrown, torquere; d-þrown, crispare; ad-þrown, to twist double; þrown-spin, a throwing (or winding) spindle.' The orig. sense is still preserved in the derived word throu = that which is twisted. β. It is difficult to make out the exact form of the base; perhaps we may take it to be THRIW, standing for THRIHW, from THARH, corresponding to Lat. trivere, to twist. At any rate, the Lat. trivere is certainly a cognate word, with precisely the same senses, viz. to twist, to wind, to whirl, to fling; see further under Torture. γ. Other allied words, from the same of TARK, to turn, twist violently (Fick, l. 597), are Goth. strahan, to throng round, press upon, G. strahan, O. H. G. strahan, to turn, whirl, Du. draaijen, to turn, twist, whirl; also Skt. strāva, a spindle, strāvata, spinning. The A. S. þringan, whence E. throng, is a nasalized form from the same root; see THROING. Der. thrum, sb., thrum-er; and see thrum-d, throng.

THRUM (1), the tufted end of a weaver's thread; coarse yarn. (Scand.) See Thrum in Nares. In Shak. Midd. Nt. Dr. v. 201. M. E. þrum. 'Thrumm, of a clothe, Filamen;' Prompt Parv. 'Hoc licuus, a thrum;' Wright's Voc. l. 235. = Icel. þrum (gen. þrumar), the edge, verge, brim of a thing (hence the rough edge of a web); Norweg. þrum, þrum, þrumm, edge, brim (Aasen); Swed. dial. þrumm, þrumm, þrum, a stamp, the end of a log (Rietz). † O. Du. þrum, or þrum-garn [thrum-yarn], 'thread on the shuttle of a weaver;' Hexham. † G. þrumm, end, thrum, stamp of a tree. β. All from Teut. type THRAMA, an end, thrum; Fick, iii. 131. Here THRAMA = THAR-MA, the suffix -ma being substantival. Allied to Gk. τράμα, end, Lat. ter-massa, end, limit; see TORM. Der. thrumm-at, Merry Wives, iv. 2. 80.

THRUM (2), to thrum, play noisy music. (Scand.) 'This single thrumming of a fiddle;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Woman's Prize, l. 1 (Jacques). = Icel. þruma, to rattle, to thumder; cf. þrum, an alarm, a scare; Dan. trums, a drum; Swed. trums, to beat, to drum. See TRUMPET and DRUM.

THRUSH (1), a small singing-bird. (E.) M. E. þrusch. 'Boþe þe þrusche and þe þruschle'—both the thrush and thrush, Will of Falmer, 820. = A. S. þryssa, spelt þryssa in Wright's Voc. l. 63, l. 2; þrysa, id. 281, l. 21. † O. H. G. drussa, a thrush; whence G. drussel. β. These answer to a Teut. type THRASKA, but the more usual type is THRASTA; Fick, iii. 140. The latter appears in Icel. þrast (gen. þrastar), a thrush; Norweg. trast, trast (Aasen); Swed. trast; and in the dimin. A. S. þrust-le, M. H. G. trust-el, a thrush; cf. Russ. trush, a thrush (perhaps a borrowed word). γ. The forms in the latter set correspond to Lat. turdus, turdus, a thrush, Lithuan. strudas, struda, a thrush; and the last of these shows that an initial s has been lost. The orig. form appears to have been STAR-DA. Cf. Vedic turda, a kind of bird (cited by Fick); perhaps Skt. turda, a kind of bird, may also be related. The orig. sense was prob. 'chirper' or 'twitterer'; cf. Gk. εψίαιον, εψίαιον, to twitter, Lat. stris, a screech-owl, star-aur, a starling, and E. star-ling. Der. thrust-le, q. v.

THRUSH (2), a disease marked by small ulcerations in the mouth. (Scand.) 'Thrush, a disease in the mouth, esp. of young children;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The form of the word shows that the word is English or Scandinavian; it appears to be the latter. It occurs again in the Dan. stråde, the thrush on the tongue, Swed. strå, Swed. dial. trish (Rietz). These words are clearly allied to Dan. tør, Swed. torr, dry, Icel. þorr, dry, A. S. þorr, dry (a rare word), and to Dan. strå, Swed. strå, Icel. þurka, drought; also to M. E. thrust, thrust. The Swed. toral = torr-ist; similarly thrusk (= thrusk) is formed from Icel. þurr, dry, by adding the E. suffix -sk = -isk. See THIRST.

THRUST, to push forcibly. (Scand.) M. E. þrusten, but more commonly þrusten, as in Havelok, 2019, and sometimes þrusten, as in Chaucer, C. T. 2614 (or 2613). The form þrusten may have been due to A. S. þrustan, to oppress, afflict, cf. geþrustan in Grimm, l. 473; this is related to Thread and Throw, which see. But thrust is properly of Scand. origin. = Icel. þrusta, to thrust, compress, press, force, compel. β. The base THRUST is doubtless from an earlier form THRUT, answering to Aryan TRUD, as seen in Lat. trudens, to thrust, push, which has precisely the same sense. The base THRUT is treated of under Threaten, q. v. Perhaps we may refer hither Swed. trut, the snout of an animal, as being that which is thrust into the ground. γ. TRUD is an extension from TRU, to vex; from Aryan of TAR, to rub, bore; see Threaten and Trita. Der. thrust, sb., Oth. v. 1. 24.

THUD, a dull sound resulting from a blow. (E.) In Burns, Battle of Sheriffmuir, l. 8. Also used by G. Douglas and others (Jamieson); and see Notes and Queries, 4 S. l. 34, 115, 163, 231, 275. It seems to be connected with A. S. þōdan, a whirlwind, violent wind, in Alfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xviii.; ed. Sweet, p. 128, l. 17. 'Turbo, 6666;' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 37, l. 10. It belongs to the same family as Thump, q. v.; and see Type.

THUG, an assassin. (Hindustani.) Modern. = Hind. thag, thag (with cerebral ṭ), a cheat, knave, impostor, a robber who strangles travellers; Marāthi thad, thag, the same; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms; p. 517.

THUMB, the short, thick finger of the hand. (E.) M. E. þumbe, Chaucer, C. T. 265 (or 263); formed with excrement ḍ (after m) from the earlier þume, Ancrén Riwle, p. 18, l. 14. = A. S. þuma or þūma, the thumb; 'Pollex, þuma;' Wright's Voc. l. 283, col. 1. † Du. duim. † Swed. tomme. † O. H. G. thūma, G. thūma. Cf. Icel. þumill, the thumb of a glove. β. All from the Teut. type THU-MAN, a thumb, lit. 'the thick finger;' Fick, iii. 235. From Teut. base THU = TU, to swell, grow large; see TUMID. Cf. Tuber. Der. thumb-le, a dimin. of thumb, but used as equivalent to thumb-stone, an instrument of torture for compressing the thumb (Webster); thumb-ring, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 365; also thumb-le, q. v.

THUMMIM, perfection. (Heb.) We have urim and thummim, Exod. xxviii. 30, Ezra, ii. 63, &c. The literal sense of these difficult words is, probably, 'ares (or lights) and perfections,' but the Heb. pl. need not be exactly kept to in English; 'light and perfection' would probably be the best E. equivalent; Smith, Doct. of the Bible. = Heb. thummim, pl. of thim, perfection, truth. = Heb. root thaman, to be perfect. See URIM.

THUMP, to beat heavily. (E.) In Rich. III, v. 2. 334; and in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 2. 10. I know of no earlier example. By the confusion between th and d sometimes seen in Low G. languages (cf. E. father with A. S. fader), we meet with the word also in the form dump; as in Icel. dumpa, to thump, Swed. dial. dumpa, to thump, dumpa, to make a noise. β. As E. th = Gk. τ (initially) and a final p is not unfrequently unchanged in comparing Gk. with E., I see no reason why we may not connect E. thump with Gk. τρυμπος, a drum, and τρυμπος, to strike. See TYMPANUM and TYPE; and see Dump. Der. thump, sb., thump-er.

THUNDER, the loud noise accompanying lightning. (E.) For thunder; the d after n is excrement. M. E. þuner, þwan and Gawain, l. 370, in Ritson, Met. Romances, l. 16; more commonly þunder or þunder, Chaucer, C. T. 494, 6314. = A. S. þuner, þunder, Grein, ii. 606. Allied to A. S. þunan, (1) to become thin, be stretched out, (2) to rattle, thunder; Grein, ii. 606. Cf. A. S. þrun, a loud noise, in a gloss (Bosworth). † Du. donder. † Icel. þorr (for þurr), Thor, the god of thunder; with which cf. Dan. tordein, Swed. tordein, thunder. † G. donner, O. H. G. thunar, thunder. β. All from Teut. base THAN, to thunder (Fick, iii. 130) = Aryan TAN. Consequently, we have further allied words in Lat. tonare, to thunder, tonitru, thunder, Skt. tan, to sound. γ. Instead of identifying this base TAN, to sound, with the common of TAN, to stretch (see Max Müller, Lectures, 8th ed. ii. 101), it seems better to separate them; esp. as we may consider TAN as a by-form of of STAN, to thunder, make a noise, appearing in Skt. stan, to sound, sigh, thunder, stanata, thunder, stanata, sound, groaning, Gk. στάνω, to groan, Lithuan. staniti, to groan, Russ. stanat, stanat, to groan, moan; Fick, i. 249; see STUN. This accounts for the fact that we actually also find A. S. tanian, to thunder. 'Tono, is tonige;' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 138, l. 3. Der. thunder, verb, A. S. þunian, Grein; thunder-bolt, Temp. ii. 2. 38 (see Bolt); thunder-stone, J. Can. l. 3. 49; thunder-struck, Temp. ii. 1. 204; thunder-struck, Milton, P. L. iv. 858; thunder-rod, id. P. L. x. 702; thunder-er, id. P. L. vi. 491. Also thunr-day, q. v.

THURIBLE, a censer for burning frankincense. (L. = Gk.) 'A pot of manna, or thurible;' Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2 (R.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has only the Lat. form thuribulum. Englished from Lat. thuribulum, also spelt thuribulum, a vessel for holding frankincense. = Lat. thuri, thuri, crude form of thure or thure, frankincense; with suffix -bulum, as in frankincense (from frankere). This Lat. sb. is not a true Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk. θύρα, incense. = Gk. θύρα, to offer part of a meal to the gods, by burning it, to sacrifice. Cf. Skt. dhūma, smoke; Lat. fumus, smoke, which is the native Lat. word from the same root as Gk. θύρα. = of DHU, to shake, blow, fan a flame. See FUME. Der. (from Lat. thuri), thuri-fer, one who carries incense; where the suffix -fer = bearing, from ferre, to bear. From the same root are thyme and fume.

THURSDAY, the fifth day of the week. (E.; confused with Scand.) The day of the god of thunder, the Scand. Thor. Thor is a corruption of thunder (= thunder), due to confusion with Thor, which had the same sense. M. E. þurs-day, Ancrén Riwle, p. 40, l. 7; þursday, þursday, þursday, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 142, and footnotes; spelt þurses-day, Layamon, 13929. = A. S. þurses dag, rubric to Matt. xv. 21; where þurses is the gen. of þuner, thunder, and dag = day; see Thunder and Day. † Icel. þorsdagr, Thursday; from þors, gen. case of þorr, Thor, thunder; dagr, a day. So also are compounded Dan. Donnerdag, Swed. and Dan. Torsdag, G. Donnerstag.

THUS, in this manner. (E.) M. E. thun, Chaucer, C. T. 1830. = A. S. þun, þun, so, Grein, ii. 611. Certainly allied to the word thū, but it is hardly possible to determine what case and gender it represents. It most resembles A. S. þis, instrumental case (maac. and neut.) of þis; so also the O. Sax. thun, thun, may be compared with O. Sax. thun, neut. of instrumental case of thun, thun. See THIA, THAT. † O. Fric. and O. Sax. thun, thun. † Du. den.

THWACK, WHACK, to beat severely. (E.) In Levine, and in Shak. Cor. iv. 5. 189. 'If it be a thwack' [blow]; Beaumont and Fletcher, Nice Valour, iii. 2 (Lapet). Most likely a slightly varied form of M. E. þættes, to stroke, used in a jocular sense; compare our double use of stroke. 'When Nicholas had done thus every del, And staketh her about the lendes wel;' Chaucer, C. T. 3304.—A. S. þaccian, to stroke, mid. of stroking a horse; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 41, ed. Sweet, p. 303, l. 10. + Icel. þakka, to thwack, thump. β For the change from þakka to thwack, see Whittle.

THWART, transversely, transverse. (Scand.) Properly an adv., as used by Spenser: 'Yet whether thwart or flatly it did lyte' [light, slight]; F. Q. vi. 6. 30. He also has it as a prep.: 'thwart her horse'—across her horse, F. Q. iii. 7. 43. The M. E. use shows clearly that the word was used adverbially, esp. in certain phrases, and then as an adj.; the verbal use was the latest of all. M. E. þwart, þwert. 'Andeloug, souht swarþwart'—endlong, not across; Havelok, 2822. 'Quarþwart and endeloug'—across and endlong, Chaucer, C. T. 1093; þwertour, Arcana Kirke, p. 82, l. 12; þwert our þe slond, Trevisa, v. 225; 'His herde 50 wurd þwert'—his heart then became perverse, Genesis and Exodus, 3099. The word is of Scand. origin, as it is only thus that the final -t can be explained. The A. S. for 'perverse' is þwera, Grein, ii. 618, cognate with which is Icel. þwerr, masc., the neut. being þwert. The sense of þwert is across, transverse, whence was þwert—across, thwart; tak þwert, to take athwart, to deny flatly; sturm mikinn af veðr þwert—a great storm and adverse winds. + Dan. tvær, adj., transverse; tvært, adv., across; Swed. tvär, adj., cross, unfriendly, tvärt, adv., rudely. + Du. dwars, adj. and adv., cross, crossly. + A. S. þwora, perverse, transverse, as above. + M. H. G. dwarsch, twarsch, G. zwersch, adv., across, awry, askance, obliquely. + Goth. thwairhs, cross, angry. β. All from Teut. type THWERHA, transverse, also cross, angry, Fick, iii. 142. The base THWARH sufficiently resembles that of Lat. twaryus, to twist; and this relationship is well established by the occurrence of M. H. G. dwarc(n), O. H. G. twaren, to twist, turn round, twirl, allied to Gk. τράωω, a hole, and Lat. twara, to bore. The ultimate root is √TAK, to bore, rub; see Torture and Trits. γ. The sense of perverse, cross, or angry is easily deducible from that of transverse, which again is from that of twisting; from the entangled and irritating condition of threads twisted into confusion; all from the notion of twirling or turning round and round. Der. thwart, verb, M. E. þwertes, Genesis and Exodus, 1324; also e-thwart, q. v.

THWITTE, to cut. (E.) See Whittle.

THY, shorter form of Thine, q. v. (E.) Der. thy-self, A. S. þin self, where both þin and self are declined, the gen. being þinn self; see Grein, ii. 427, n. v. self.

THYME, a fragrant plant. (F., = L., = Gk.) The th is pronounced as t, because the word was borrowed from F. at an early period. M. E. tyme, Prompt. Parv., p. 494.—F. thym, 'the herb time'; Cot.—Lat. thymum, acc. of thymus, thyme.—Gk. θύμος, θύμω, thyme; from its sweet smell; cf. Gk. θύω, incense, and Lat. fumus, smoke. See Thurible. Der. thymy, Gay, Fable 22, l. 11.

TIARA, a round wreathed ornament for the head. (L., = Gk., = Pers. ?) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil, vii. 337; and see Index to Parker Soc. publications. [The form tiara in Milton, P. L. iii. 625, is from F. tiara, given in Cotgrave.]—Lat. tiara, Virg. Æn. vii. 247.—Gk. τίρα, τίρας, the Persian head-dress, esp. on great occasions; see Herodotus, i. 132, vii. 61, viii. 120; Xenophon, Anab. ii. 5. 23. And see Smith's Dict. of Antiquities. β. Clearly not a Gk. word, and presumably of Persian origin. I suggest a possible connection with Pers. tiywar, wearing a crown, crowned. The proper word is simply Pers. tāj, 'a crown, a diadem, a crest'; see Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 351, where the tiara is described; and see p. 352.

TIBIA, the large bone of the leg. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. A medical term.—Lat. tibia, the shin-bone. Der. tibia.

TIC, a convulsive motion of certain muscles, esp. of the face, a twitching. (F., = Teut.) Borrowed from F. tic, a twitching; and chiefly used of the tic dolorem, painful twitching, the name of a nervous disease; where dolorem—Lat. dolorosus, painful, from dolor, pain. The F. tic was formerly esp. used with respect to a twitching of the muscles of horses (see Littré), and is the same word as F. tiç, or tiçus, 'a disease which, on a sudden stopping a horse's breath, makes him to stop and stand still'; Cot. Cf. près des tiçus de la mort, 'near his last gasp'; id. The F. tic also means a vicious habit; cf. Ital. ticchie, a ridiculous habit, whim, caprice. β. Of Teutonic origin; guided by the etymology of espries, Dies suggests a prob. origin from O. H. G. ziht, a kid, dimin. of O. H. G. ziug, G. ziug, a goat, cognate with A. S. zicen, a goat, Gen. xxxviii. 19. γ. Scheeler thinks the word may be allied to G. zucken, to twitch, abrug; with which cf. G. zug, a draught, ziehen, to draw, and E. zug. It comes still nearer to Low G. zucken, to twitch. And see Tick (4).

TICK (1), a small insect infesting dogs, &c. (E.) 'A tick in a sheep;' Troul. iii. 3. 315. M. E. tyke (dat. case), in Polit. Songs, p. 238, l. 4, in a poem of the time of Edw. II. Spelt tyke, Wright's Voc. i. 255, col. 2. Prob. an E. word, as it is certainly Teutonic; the F. tyque being merely borrowed. + O. Du. tyke, 'a tick, or a dog's louse'; Hexham; Low G. tike, tyke. + G. zücke, a tick (whence Ital. zecca). β. From the Teut. base TAK, to seize, touch, appearing in Icel. taka, to seize, Goth. takan, to touch; this base, as has been explained (s. v. Take), has lost initial s, and stands for STAK, to stick, pierce; from √STAG, to seize. The meaning of the word is either 'seizer,' i. e. biter, or 'piercer,' with the same sense; and it is closely allied to Tickle, q. v.

TICK (2), the cover into which feathers are put, to serve for a bed. (L., = Gk.) 'Quilts, ticks, and mattresses;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xix. c. 2. § 2. 'And of featherbeddes ryped the ticks & helde theym in the wynde, that the fethers myght be blowyn away;' Fabyan's Chron., an. 1305-6, fol. lxxx; ed. Ellis, p. 414. Spelt tiche in Palgrave. The spelling tete used by Fabyan is Englished from Lat. thema, a case, which became Low Lat. techa, a linen case, a tick (Ducange); also tesa, as in Prompt. Parv., s. v. teye. 'The ticks of a bed, Teca culcitaria,' Lewis; the Lat. th being sounded as t. From the same Lat. thema was derived the F. taie, spelt taie in Cotgrave, and explained as 'any flimsie or thin skin,' whence was taie d'oreiller, 'a pillowcase,' i. e. a pillow-case.—Gk. θήκη, a case to put anything into; derived from the base θη- as seen in θη-ω, I place, put.—√DHA, to put; see Thame. ¶ The Du. tyck, a tick, is likewise from Lat. thema. Der. tick-ing.

TICK (3), to make a slight recurring noise, to beat as a watch. (E.) Todd cites from Ray, Remains, p. 324, 'the leisurely and constant tick of the death-watch.' The word is prob. imitative, to express the clicking sound, cf. click; yet it may have been suggested by Tick (4), q. v. Cf. G. tickel, pat-a-pat.

TICK (4), to touch lightly. (E.) There is a game called tig, in which children endeavour to touch each other; see Halliwell. This was formerly called tick. 'At hood-wink, barley-break, at tick, or prison-base;' Drayton, Polyolbion, song 30. M. E. tyk, a light touch. 'Tyk, or lyllyle towche, Tactulus;' Prompt. Parv. Not found earlier, except in the frequentative form tyklen; see Tickle. + Du. tyk, a touch, pat, tick; tyken, to pat, to tick. + Low G. tyck, a light touch with the tip of the finger; metaphorically, a moment of time. 'Ik quam up den Tyck daer, I came there just in the nick of time;' Bremen Wörterbuch. β. A weakened form of the Teut. base TAK, to touch, just as tip (in tip and run) is a weakened form of tap, made by the substitution of a lighter vowel. See Take. Der. tick-ty, q. v.

TICK (5), credit; see Ticket.

TICKET, a bill stuck up, a marked card, a token. (F., = G.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave.—O. F. atquet, 'a little note, breviate, bill or ticket; especially such a one as is stuck up on the gate of a court, &c., signifying the seizure, &c. of an inheritance by order of justice'; Cot. This is the masc. form of etiquette (formerly etiquette, Littré), a ticket.—G. zichen, to stick, put, set, fix; cognate with E. Stick, q. v. And see Etiquette. Der. tick-et, vb. Also tick, credit, by contraction for ticket; 'taking things to be put into a bill, was taking them on tickets, since corrupted into tick,' Nares; he gives examples, shewing that tick occurs as early as 1668, and that the phrases upon tickets and on tickets were in use.

TICKLE, to touch slightly so as to cause to laugh. (E.) M. E. tikelen, tikelen, Chaucer, C. T. 6053. Not found earlier, but the frequentative from the base tik-, to touch lightly, weakened from the Teut. base TAK, to touch; see Tick (4), and Take, Tangent. We also find M. E. tikel, adj., unstable, ticklish, easily moved by a touch, Chaucer, C. T. 3428; from the same source. Der. tickl-er; tickl-ish, Troul. iv. 5. 61, formed by adding -ish to M. E. tikel above; tickl-ish-ly, ness.

TIDE, season, time, hour; flux or reflux of the sea. (E.) M. E. tide, Chaucer, C. T. 4920; the usual sense is 'season' or hour; hence the time between flux and reflux of the sea, and, finally, the flux or reflux itself.—A. S. tid, time, hour, Mark, xiii. 33. + Du. tyd. + Icel. tíð. + Dan. and Swed. tid. + G. zeit. + O. H. G. zita. β. All from Teut. type TĪ-DĪ, time, division of time, portion of time; from the Teut. base TĪ, TAJ, to divide, apportion, answering to Aryan DA-I, as appearing in Skt. day, to allot, Gk. δαίωμι, δαίωμι, I allot, assign.—√DA, to divide, distribute; as in Skt. dā, to cut, pp. dita, cut off, Gk. δαίωμι, to divide. From the same root is E. Time, q. v. Der. tide, vb., to happen, Mida. Nt. Dr. v. 205, M. E. tiden, Chaucer, C. T. 4757, A. S. ge-tiden, to happen, John, v. 14; hence bo-tide, q. v. Also morning-tide, morning-tide, even-tide, harvest-tide, &c.; tide-mill, tide-table; tide-waiter, an officer who waits for the arrival of vessels with the tide, to secure payment of duties; tide-way; tid-el, adj., tide-less; and see tid-ing, tid-y.

TIDINGS, things that happen; usually, information respecting things that happen. (Scand.) Not an E. word, but adapted from Norse. M. E. tidinge, Layman, 2052, altered in the later text to tidings; spelt tithende (for tithende), Orvulum, dedication, l. 158. = Icel. tíðindi, neut. pl., (tidings, news); also spelt tíðenda. The word must have originated from a pres. part. tíðandi of a verb tíða, to happen, with the same sense as A. S. tíðan; and this verb is from Icel. tíð, sb., tide, time, cognate with A. S. tíð; see TIDE. The final s is an E. addition, to show that the word is a pl. form; the M. E. tiding or tithing (without s) is not uncommon; see Chaucer, C. T. 5146, 5147. Cf. Dan. tíðende, tidings, news; Du. tijding; G. Antung.

TIDY, seasonable, hence, appropriate, neat. (E.) M. E. tidy. 'Tidy men'; P. Plowman, B. ix. 104; 'be tidy child'; Will. of Palerne, 160. Formed with suffix -y (= A. S. -ig) from M. E. tíð (A. S. tíð), time; see TIDE. † Du. tijdig, timely; from tijd. † Dan. and Swed. tidig, timely; from tid. † G. antig. Der. tid-ness.

TIE, a fastening, band; to fasten, bind. (E.) I. M. E. tigen, verb, Allit. Poema, ed. Morris, A. 464; tyen, P. Plowman, B. i. 96; tyen, tyen, id. A. 94. The M. E. forms tyen, tyen answer to A. S. tygan, to tie, fasten, spelt tygan, Matt. xxi. 2. The forms tyen, tyen answer to a form tygan or tyegan, not found. R. The verb is an unoriginal form, due to the sb. tye. 'And tyen heom to-gaderen mid goldene tyen' = and tie them together with golden ties; Layman, 2097, 2099. The corresponding A. S. word is teag, a rope (Grim, ii. 326), or rather teak (stem teag-); we find: 'Scode, teak,' in Wright's Voc. l. 289, col. 1, where scode means 'a scroll'; but it is prob. the same word, from the sense of enclosing or containing; cf. Laws of Cant. § 77, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, l. 419, where the dat. tege, tege occurs, explained to mean cranium, a chest. Again, we read: 'habbað langne tye to gefelðan truminge' = they have a long-lasting tye for the establishment of the faith; Ælfric, Of the New Test., ed. De L'Isle, p. 27, last line; here tye = tye = tyge. Cf. Icel. teug, a tie, string; tygill, a string. β. The common base of teak and tye is teag-, as seen in teagan, pt. pl. of teakan, to tow, pull, draw, drag; so that a tye means that which teag or draws things teagly together. For the strong verb teakan or teak (pt. t. teak, pl. teagan, pp. teagan), see Grim, ii. 327. It exactly corresponds to Goth. teihan (pt. t. teih, pp. teihans), to tow, tug, pull, and to G. ziehen. See further under TOW (1). γ. Thus te, vb., is from te, sb.; and the latter is from Teut. base TUH = Aryan DUK, as in Lat. ducere, to draw. ¶ No connection with Gk. tygma, I band; for which see DIADEM.

TIER, a rank, row. (F., = Teut.) The spelling tier is not a good one; it should rather be tira. 'Tira (or tier of ordinance, as the seamen pronounce it), a set of great guns on both sides of a ship, lying in a rank,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt tira, with the same sense of 'row of guns,' in Milton, P. L. vi. 605. Also 'tyre of ordinance,' Florio, a v. tira. = F. tira, 'a draught, pull, . . . stretch, retch [retch]; also, a tire; a stroke, hit, . . . a reach, gate, course, or length and continuance of course;' Cot. [Cf. Port. and Span. tira, a long strip of cloth; Span. de una tirada, in one stretch; tira, a set of mules; Ital. tira, 'a shoot, . . . a shot, a tire, a reach, a distance . . . a shoots out of a bow or of a caliver, a stones caste, a caste at dice, a tyre of ordinance' [ordnance]; Florio.] = F. tira, 'to draw, drag, . . . stretch, retch, dart, wrest, jerk, wince, fling;' Cot. The orig. sense seems to have been to tear away, snatch violently. Of Teut. origin; from the verb appearing as Goth. tiran, A. S. tiran, to tear; see TEAR (1). See DICZ. ¶ The spelling tier seems to have been a mere adaptation to preserve the sound of F. i, and to prevent confusion with the tira of a wheel. I cannot see that we have clear evidence for connecting it with O. F. tira, a row, rank, notwithstanding the similarity of sense; see TIRE (2). Still less is there evidence to connect it with the alleged A. S. tír, a very doubtful word, occurring but once (Grim, ii. 535). Todd gives a quotation for 'a tier of ordinance.' Der. tir-ade, re-tira. Doublet, tira (5).

TIERCE, TEBCE, one of the canonical hours, a cask holding a third of a pipe; a sequence of three cards of a colour; a thrust in fencing. (F., = L.) In all its senses, it meant orig. 'third,' as the third hour, third of a pipe, third card, third sort of thrust. M. E. terce; 'At howrs of terce,' Myroure of Our Lady, ed. Bunt, p. 13, l. 31; spelt terce, Wyclif's Works, ed. Matthew, p. 41. = F. terce, masc., terce, fem., 'third'; terce, m., 'a tierce, third, third part;' Cot. = Lat. tertius, masc., tertia, fem., third: the ordinal corresponding to tres, three, which is cognate with E. THREE, q. v.

TIGER, a ferocious animal. (F., = L., = Gk., = Pers.) M. E. tygre, Chaucer, C. T. 1657. = F. tygre, 'a tiger;' Cot. = Lat. tygrus, acc. of tygris, = Gk. tygrus. β. Said to be of Pers. origin; according to Littre, named from its swiftness, the tiger being compared to an arrow. = Zend. (O. Pers.) tigri, an arrow; from tigra, sharp, pointed; words cited by Fick, i. 333. Hence mod. Pers. tír, 'an arrow, also the river Tigris, so named from its rapidity;' Rich. Dict.

p. 473. Allied to Skt. tigma, sharp, tygras, flying swiftly, from ty- to be sharp. All these words have lost initial s; ty being allied to Gk. tyros (= tyros), to prick. = √ STAG, to stick, prick; see STIGMA and STICK (1). Der. tygr-ness, tygr-ish.

TIGHT, close, compact, not leaky. (Scand.) It should rather be tighr; the change from th to t is common in Scandinavian, since neither Danish nor Swedish admits of initial th, which is only preserved in Icelandic. The th still exists in prov. E. thate, 'tight, close, compact, East;' Halliwell. M. E. tyjt; whence tyjt, closely, Will. of Palerne, 66; also tyjt, spelt tyht in the Prompt. Parv., which has: 'Thyht, hool, not brokyne, Integer, solidus;' also: 'Thyht, or make thyht, Integer, consolido.' Hence prov. E. thaw, firm, close, staunch, spoken of barrels when they do not run (Halliwell). So also: 'as some tyht vessel that holds against wind and water;' Bp. Hall, Contemplations, Ruth; bk. xi. cont. § 11. It is spelt tith four times in Beaumont and Fletcher; see NARE. [The nautical word taut is the same word, borrowed by sailors from the Dan. taut.] = Icel. títt, tight, esp. not leaking, water-tight, whence titta, to make tight; Swed. tít, close, tight, solid, thick, hard, compact, whence táta, to make tight, tátta, to become tight (E. tighten used intransitively); Dan. tæt, tight, close, dense, compact, taut, water-tight, used as a naut. term in tæt til Vinden, close to the wind; tætte, to tighten. β. The substitution of M. E. ty for Icel. t is curious; the E. has preserved the old guttural, which in the Icelandic is no longer apparent. Fick, iii. 128, well compares títt with the cognate G. ticht, tight, compact, Du. ticht, tight, compact (where the guttural is also preserved), and infers the Teut. type THEH-TA, i. e. thatched, hence rain-proof, water-tight, exactly answering to Lat. tectus, covered, and to Gk. tyktos as seen in tyktos, without a roof, houseless, also not taut, used metaphorically of a loquacious person. = Teut. base THAK (Aryan √ STAG), to thatch; see THATCH.

¶ Thus tighr is, practically, merely a variant of thatched. Der. tighr-ty, tighr-ness; also tighr-on, properly intransitive like Swed. tátta, but used, by analogy, in the sense 'to make tight.' Doublet, taut.

TICK, a dog; contemptuously, a low fellow. (Scand.) M. E. tick, tyck; P. Plowman, B. xii. 37; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3642. = Icel. tíck, Swed. tíck, a bitch.

TILE, a piece of baked clay for covering roofs, &c. (L.) M. E. tile, Chaucer, C. T. 7687. A contracted form of tygel, the long i being due to loss of g. Spelt tygel, Genesis and Exodus, 2552; tyele, Aymbite of Inwyt, p. 167, l. 13. = A. S. tygole; pl. tygolan, Gen. xi. 3; hence tygel-wyrtia, a tile-wright, a potter, Matt. xxvii. 7. = Lat. tegula, a tile, lit. 'that which covers;' formed with suffix -a (Aryan -as), from tegan, to cover. = √ STAG, to cover; see TEGUMENT. Der. tile, verb, til-er, til-ing; also til-er-y, imitated from F. tuilerie, which is from F. tuile, Lat. tegula, a tile.

TILL (1), to cultivate. (E.) M. E. tilen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 21, l. 9. = A. S. tilian, teadan, to labour, endeavour, strive after, to till land, Grim, ii. 333. The orig. sense is to strive after or aim at excellence. = A. S. tíl, good, excellent, profitable, Grim, ii. 532; cf. til, sb., goodness. Closely allied to till, preposition; see TILL (2). † Du. telen, to breed, raise, till, cultivate. † G. zielen, to aim at; from ziel, O. H. G. zîl, an aim, mark. Der. til-er, til-er-y; also til-th, Temp. ii. 1. 252, from A. S. til-ð, cultivation, crop, A. S. Chron. an. 1098. Also teal, q. v.

TILL (2), to the time of, to the time when. (Scand.) A Norse word; orig. used as a preposition, then as a conjunction. M. E. tíl, prep., to, occurring (rarely) even in Chaucer, where it seems to be put for to because it is accented and comes before a vowel. 'Hoom tíl Athenes when the play is doom;' C. T. 2964 (or 2966). As a rule, it is a distinguishing mark of works in the Northumbrian dialect, such as Barboar's Bruce, where tíl occurs for to throughout. Sommer cites 'cweð tíl him hælend' = the Saviour said to them, without a reference; but he really found 'cweð tíl him ðe hælend,' Matt. xxvi. 31, in the O. Northumb. (not the A. S.) version. = Icel. tíl, till, to, prep. governing the genitive; Dan. tíl; Swed. till; in very common use; it even answers to E. too in phrases such as tíl ungr, too young; tíl gamall, too old. β. Quite distinct from to, and orig. a case (perhaps acc. sing.) of tíli or tíli, sb., in the sense of 'aim' or 'bent,' whence the notion of 'towards' was easily developed. The Icel. tíl frequently expresses 'purpose,' as in tíl ámbur = for what purpose. The sb. is rare in Icel., though it occurs in ð-tíli, a mischance; but O. H. G. zîl, G. ziel, aim, purpose, is a common word; so also is the closely allied A. S. adj. tíl, suitable, fit (cognate with Goth. g-tíli, fit, convenient), as well as the A. S. adv. tíls, tíls, excellently, Grim, ii. 524. γ. All from Teut. base TAL = √ DAR, to see, consider (hence, to aim at); whence also E. TALK, q. v. Fick, iii. 119. And see TILL (1). Der. teal-er, q. v.

TILL (3), a money-box or drawer is a tradesman's counter. (E.) The proper sense is 'drawer,' something that can be 'pulled' in and out. Dryden uses tiller in this sense, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 384, where tiller is just parallel to draw-er. Cotgrave explains F. levette by 'a till or drawer'; also, 'a box with tills or drawers.' Palgrave has: 'Till of an almshouse, Lette' [sic]; an almshouse being a kind of cupboard or cabinet. Thus the word is by no means modern; and, just as drawer is from the verb to draw, so till is from M. E. allien, to draw, pull, allure, now obsolete, but once not uncommon. To the scold him for to till = to draw (or allure) him to school, Curios Mund, 12175. 'The world . . . tyl him drawe And till' = the world draws and allures to itself, Fricke of Conscience, 1183; and see Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 1763, and esp. Rob. of Glouc. p. 115, last line, where it occurs in a literal, not a metaphorical sense. Spelt also tillen; the pt. t. tulle = drew, is in Ancren Riwia, p. 320, l. 13. Origin obscure; perhaps the same as A. S. tyllan, appearing only once in the comp. for-tyllan, with the apparent sense of draw aside, lead astray, Gress. l. 332. + Du. tillen, 'to leave or lift up'; Hexham. + Low G. tillen, to lift, move from its place; whence tillbar Götter, movable goods. + Swed. dual tills; whence tills på sig, to take upon oneself, lay hold of (Rietz). Root uncertain. See TILLER.

TILLER, the handle or lever for turning a rudder. (E.) Cf. prov. E. tillar, the stalk of a cross-bow, the handle of any implement (Halliwell). Phillips has it in the usual sense. 'Tillar, in a boat, is the same as helme in a ship;' Coles, ed. 1684. The word means 'pull-er' or handle; from M. E. tillen, to pull, draw; see further under TILL (3). Cf. Low G. tillbar, movable.

TILT (1), the canvas covering of a cart or waggon. (E.) M. E. tild, a covering, tent, Layamon, 31384; a later form was tilt. 'Tide or tents;' Prompt. Parv.; hence our tilt. = A. S. tild; whence goteid, a tent, Gen. xviii. 1; the prefix go- making no difference. + O. Du. tilda, a tent; Hexham. + Icel. tjald. + Dan. telt; Swed. tält. + G. zelt. β. It thus appears that the form tilt (with final t for d) may have been due to Danish influence. The Teut. type is TEL-DA, Fick, iii. 120. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'hide' of an animal, from Teut. TAL = Aryan DAL, to tear, strip = DAR, to tear. Cf. Gk. tylos, a skin, Skt. dara, a cave, a shell. See TEAR (1).

TILT (2), to ride in a tourney, thrust with a lance; to cause to heel over. (E.) In 1 Hen. IV, ii. 3. 95. But the verb was orig. intransitive, meaning 'to totter, to tot about unsteadily'; whence the active use of 'cause to totter, upset' was evolved. The intrans. sense occurs at least as late as Milton, and is still in use when we say 'that table will tilt over.' 'The floating vessel . . . Rode tilting o'er the waves;' Milton, P. L. xi. 747. M. E. tiltan, to totter, fall; 'Dis ikk tonn schal gytt to grounde,' Allit. Poema, C. 361. β. The lit. sense is 'to be unsteady,' formed from A. S. tilt, adj., unsteady, tottering, unstable; see Sweet's A. S. Reader, § xv. 74. Hence the verb *tyllan, to totter, would be regularly formed, with the usual vowel-change from ea to y. + Icel. títla, to amble as a horse; cf. Milton's use of tilting above. + Swed. tulta, to waddle. + G. zelt, an ambling pace; zelter, a palfrey. γ. All from Teut. base TALT, to totter; root unknown.

Der. tilt, sb., tilt-ing; tilt-hammer, a hammer which, being tilted up, falls by its own weight. Also tilt-er, q. v.

TILT/TH, sb. (E.) See TILL (1).

TIMBER, wood for building. (E.) The b is extraneous, as usual after m, but occurs very early. M. E. timber, Chaucer, C. T. 3666. = A. S. timber, stuff or material to build with; Gress. ii. 534. + Du. timmer, 'timber or structure'; Hexham. + Icel. timbr. + Dan. timmer. + Swed. timmer. + G. zimmer, a room; also timber. Cf. also Goth. timbran, to build, timra, a builder. β. All from Teut. type TEMRA (i. e. TAM-IRA), timber, Fick, iii. 117; formed with agential suffix -ra from Teut. base TAM = DAM, to build, as seen in Gk. typanon, to build; see DOMA. Der. (from same root) doma, dom-icile, dom-estic, major-domo.

TIMBRILL, a kind of tambourine. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 11. 7. Dimin., with suffix -il (= -s), from M. E. timbre, used in the same sense as in Gower, C. A. iii. 63, l. 14. = F. timbre, 'the bell of a little clock'; Cot.; O. F. tymbre, a timbrel, as shown by a quotation in Dict. = Lat. tympannum, a drum = Gk. tympanon, a kettle-drum; see TYMPANUM. Cf. 'Hoc tympanum, a tympylus;' Wright's Voc. l. 240.

TIME, season, period, duration of life, &c. (E.) M. E. time, Chaucer, C. T. 25. 44. = A. S. tima, time, Gress. ii. 534. + Icel. timr. + Dan. time. + Swed. amma, an hour. β. The Teut. type is TI-MA, Fick, iii. 114, closely allied to TI-DI, tide, time, from which it only differs in the suffix. See TIDE. Der. time, verb, cf. M. E. time, to happen, A. S. gertiman; time-ly, adj., Mach. iii. 3. 7; time-ly, adv., Mach. ii. 3. 81; time-li-ness; time-honoured, keeper, quest, curator, table, warra.

TIMID, afraid, fearful. (F., -L.) 'The timid friend;' Pope, Prol. to Satires, 343. [The sb. timidity is earlier, occurring in Cotgrave.] = F. timide, 'timorous'; Cot. = Lat. timidus, full of fear. = Lat. timeo, fear; timeo, to fear; see TIMOROUS. Der. timid-ly, -ness; timid-i-ty, from F. timidus, 'timidity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. timiditatem.

TIMOROUS, full of fear. (L.) The Court of Love begins: 'With timorous herte;' but this is quite a late poem. Fabryus has timorososus, Chron. esp. 175; Sir T. Elyot has timorososus, The Governour, b. l. c. xli. § 6. [There is no F. timoroso.] Coined, as if from Lat. adj. *timorosus, fearful, a word not used. = Lat. timor, fear. β. Prob. allied to Skt. timas, darkness; whence timas-óbhis, dark, involved in darkness, foolish, timas-maya, involved in darkness, (blind) wrath. The Skt. timas was one of the three qualities incident to creation, viz. darkness, whence proceed folly, ignorance, stupidity, &c. (Bentley, p. 353); or the Lat. timor may be directly referred to the root of timas, viz. Skt. tem, to become breathless, to be distressed, to become staring, immovable (all signs of fear). = √ TAM, to choke; Vedic tem, to choke. Der. timoros-ly, timoros-ness; (from same root) tim-id, m-tim-id-ate; tim-id-er-ous.

TIN, a silvery-white metal. (E.) M. E. tin, Chaucer, C. T. 1636. = A. S. tin; 'stagnum, tin,' Ælfric's Gram. (ed. Zupatza), p. 13, l. 11; whence 'stagnum, tin' as an adj., ibid. + Du. tin. + Icel. tin. + Dan. tin. + Swed. tenn. + G. zinn. β. All from Teut. type TINA, tin; Fick, iii. 121. Possibly connected with Teut. TAINA, a rod, for which see MISTLETOE; cf. G. zinn, an ingot, a bar of metal. γ. Quite distinct from Lat. stagnum, stagnum, tin, whence W. ystann, Corn. stann, Bret. stann, Irish stann, F. stann, are all borrowed; see Rhy. Lectures on Welsh, Appendix C. Der. tin-ful, spelt tyngful in Levens, l. e. tin-leaf; see FOLD (2).

TINCURM, a shade of colour, a solution. (L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iv. 4. 160. Englished from Lat. tingitura, a dyeing. = Lat. tingere, pp. of tingo, to tinge; see TINGE. Der. tinctor, verb. Shak. also has tinctor, sb., a dye, Hamlet, iii. 4. 91, from pp. tinctor.

TIND, to light or kindle. (E.) Also spelt tin. Now obsolete, except in prov. E. Spelt tinde in Minshew, ed. 1637. M. E. tinde, Wyclif, Luke, xi. 33. = A. S. tindeas, to kindle; chiefly in comp. on-tindeas, Exod. xxii. 6. + Dan. tinde. + Swed. tinda. + Goth. tindegum. β. These are verbs of the weak kind, from the base of a lost strong verb making *tinde in the pt. t., and *tindeas (to adopt the Goth. spelling) in the pp. γ. From the pp. of the same strong verb was formed E. tinder, q. v.

TINDER, anything used for kindling fires from a spark. (E.) M. E. tinder, Layamon, 29267; more often tunder, tundre, P. Flowerman, B. xvii. 245. = A. S. tyndra, Wright's Voc. l. 284 (De igne). = A. S. *tunden, pp. of a lost strong verb *tyndan, to kindle, whence the weak verb tinden, to kindle; see TIND. + Icel. tundur, tunder; cf. tundra, to light a fire, tundri, fire. + Dan. tender. + Swed. tunder. + G. zunder; cf. anzundern, to kindle.

TINE, the tooth or spike of a fork or harrow. (E.) Formerly tin; cf. wood-bus for wood-bud. M. E. tin, spelt tynde, Allit. Poema, ed. Morris, A. 78; 'tyndis of harrowis,' Allit. Romance of Alexander, 3908, 3925. = A. S. tin, pl. tindeas, Salomon and Saturn, ed. Kemble, p. 150, l. 25. + Icel. tin, a spike, tooth of a rake or harrow. + Swed. tinne, the tooth of a rake. β. The same word as Dan. tinde, G. zinn, a pinnacle, battlement. All from Teut. base TENDA, a tin, Fick, iii. 114. Allied to Tooth, q. v. Cf. Skt. tin, a tooth; hastu-tin, a peg to hang clothes on. Der. tin-er, TINGE, to colour, dye. (L.) 'Tinged with anfron;' Holmebeck, Desc. of Scotland, c. 7. The pp. form tin is in Spenser, Shep. Kal. November, 107. = Lat. tingere (pp. tinctor), to dye, stain. + Gk. tyngere, to wet, moisten, dye, stain. Supposed to be allied to Vedic Skt. ting, to sprinkle. See TOWEL. Der. tinge, sb., tinge-ure, q. v.; also tinnet, tin (3), tin, stann, marco-tin.

TINGLE, to thrill, feel a thrilling sensation. (E.) Spelt tingil in Levens. M. E. tinglen. In Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 3, we have: 'a cymbal tyngylge,' where other readings are tyngylge and tingylge. Tingle is merely a weakened form of tin, being the frequentative of ting, a weakened form of tin. 'Cupide the king tingyng a mair bel;' Text of Crucide, st. 21. 'To ting, tuncire; to tingil, tin-nire;' Levens. Cf. ting-ting, the saint's-bell (Halliwell); 'Scanner, to sound, . . . to ting, as a bell,' Cot. To make one's ears tingle or tingle is to make them seem to ring; hence, to tingle, to vibrate, to feel a sense of vibration as when a bell is rung. Hence 'bothe his eris abulen tynglen;' Wyclif, 1 Sam. iii. 11. See TINKLE, TINKLE.

TINKER, a mender of kettles and pans. (E.) M. E. tinkeve, P. Flowerman, A. v. 160; B. v. 317. So called because he makes a *tin*king sound; from M. E. tinke, to ring or tinkle. 'A cymbal tyngylge;' Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 3. Of imitative origin; cf. O. Du. tinge-tingen, to tingle (Hexham); also O. Du. tinkeles, 'to ring, tingle, or make a noise like brass' (id.), where mod. Du. has tinkeles only in the sense to tingle or sparkle. + Lat. tinire, to tinkle, ring, tinacium, a tinkling; cf. F. tinier, 'to ting, ring, tinkle,' Cot., whence les orailles se tintent, 'mine ears tingle or glow,' id.; F. tinin, tinin,

'the ting of a bell,' id. Perhaps allied to Tone, q. v. ¶ Grimm's ab does not necessarily apply to words so directly imitative as this.

TINKLE, to jingle. (E.) M. E. tinclon, whence 'a cymbal brodyng,' in some MSS. of Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 1. See further under Tinker and Tingle.

TINSEL, gaudy ornament, showy lustr. (F., = L.) 'Tinell clothe,' Baret, ed. 1580; cf. Much Ado, iii. 4. 22. 'Under a duke, no man to wear cloth of gold tinell;' Literary Remains of K. Edw. VI, an. 1551-2; cited in Trench, Select Glossary, q. v. 'Tinell (dictum a Gall. tinelle, i. scintilla, a sparkle). It significth with vs, a staffe or cloth made partly of silke, and partly of gold or silver, so called because it glistereth or sparkleth like starres;' Minshen, ed. 1627. [Minshen's etymology is correct; the F. tinelle or tinelle lost its initial sound just as did the F. tinquet or tinquet, which became tinnet in English.] - F. tinelle, tinelle, 'a sparkle or sparkle of fire, a twinkle, a flash;' Cot. - Lat. tinilla, a spark; which seems to have been mispronounced as tinella; cf. F. bravis from Lat. coruscum. Scintilla is dimin. from a form scinta°, a spark, not used. Allied to Gk. σπινθηρ (= σπινθηρ), a spark. And perhaps allied to A. S. scinan, to shine; see Shine. Der. tinell, adj., i. e. tinsel-like; tinsel-slipped, Milton, Comus, 677. And see scintill.

TINT, a slight tinge of colour. (L.) Put for tinnet, which was the older form of the word; Hamlet, iii. 4. 91. 'The first scent of a vessel lasts, and the tinnet the wool first receives;' Ben Jonson, Discoveries, Præcipiendi Modi. 'A rosy-tinted feature is hear'n's gold;' Drayton, K. John to Matilda, l. 57. Cf. tinnet = dyed; Spenser, Shep. Kal. Nov. 107. - Lat. tinctus, pp. of tingere, to tinge; see Tinge. Der. tinnet, verb.

TINY, very small. (E.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. v. 398, 9 Hen. IV, v. 1. 29, v. 3. 60, K. Lear, iii. 2. 74, where it is always preceded by little; the old editions have tin or tinne. He speaks of 'a little tiny boy' (twice), 'my little tiny thief,' and 'pretty little tiny kick-shaws.' The word is certainly E.; and is clearly an adj. formed with suffix -y from a sb., like stony, spiny, and the like. As there is no sb. tin except the tin of a harrow, my explanation is that it must be formed from the sb. tin. The word is often called tinny; Halliwell gives 'tinny, (1) tiny, very small, North; and (2) fretful, peevish, fractions, Low.' In the latter sense, the adj. is clearly from the old sb. tin, anger, peevishness; and I suppose the word to remain the same in all its senses. 'A little tinny boy' would, in this view, mean at first 'a little fractious boy,' and might afterwards be used in the sense of 'little' only, and even as a term of endearment. β. We have a very similar change of sense, though in the opposite direction, in the case of fat, a dear child, spoilt child, whence fatish, peevish. γ. If this be right, the sb. tin is to be identified with M. E. tin, used in the stronger sense of venation or grief, as has been already explained; see Tone. ¶ Other suggestions are hardly worth mention; tinny can hardly be from Dan. tynd, thin, since tin is a well-known E. word; nor from F. tinne, a moth. Nor can I believe it to be of purely imitative origin.

TIP (1), the extreme top, the end. (E. F.) 'The tippe of a staffe;' Levins. M. E. typ. Prompt. Parv. 'Uort þe node tippe' - until the extremity of need, i. e. until [there be] extreme need, Ancren Riwle, p. 318, l. 19. Prob. E., though not found in A. S. - Dn. tip, tip, end, point. - Low G. tip, tip, point; up den Tipp van der Tied, in the very nick of time; Brem. Wort. - Dn. ap, tip. - Swed. tip, end, point, extremity. - G. tipfel, a dimin. form. A weakened form of Top, q. v. We also find local typpi, a tip, typpa, to tip, formed from toppe, top, by vowel-change. Der. tip, verb, to place on the tip of, chiefly in the pp. tipped, as in Chaucer, C. T. 14909. Hence the sb. tipped-staff, i. e. spiked or piked staff, Chaucer, C. T. 7319; and hence (just as pihed-staff became pike-staff) tip-staff, a term afterwards applied to 'certain officers that wait on the judge bearing a rod tip with silver,' Phillips; also to other officers who took men into custody. Also tip-toe; cf. on tip-toe - on tip-toes, Chaucer, C. T. 15313.

TIP (2), to tilt, cause to slant or lean over. (Scand.) Gen. in the phr. to tip up = to tilt up, or tip over = to overturn. It is a weakened form of tip, as in tip (i. e. tip) and run, a game. Thus tip up is to tilt up by giving a slight tap, or by the exercise of a slight force; cf. ap for tap (blow for blow), Bullinger's Works, l. 281, now ut fur lat. From the sense of slight movement we can explain the phrase to tip the wind = to make a slight movement of the eye-lid, sufficient to warn a person; it occurs in Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 202. Johnson gives: 'tip, to strike lightly, to tap;' with an illustration from Swift: 'he tips me by the elbow.' Palgrave has: 'I type over, I overthrow or overwhelms, to romarve.' 'Tip, a fall;' Bradford's Works, ii. 104 (Parker Soc.). As the word tip is of F. origin (borrowed from Teutonic) it is most probable that tip was borrowed directly from Scandinavia, though now only appearing in Swedish.

- Swed. tippe, 'to tap, to tip, to strike gently, to touch lightly; see Johnson's E. Dict.;' Widegren. Allied to Tap, q. v. Der. tip, sb., a slight tap, wink, hint; tipple, q. v.

TIPPET, a cape, a cape of a cloak. (L., = Gk.) Also sepet, as in Babes Book, ed. Farnvall, p. 201, l. 92. M. E. tipet, tipet, Chaucer, C. T. 231. - A. S. teppet. 'Tipia, an healf bruh teppet,' i. e. a half-rough (?) tippet; Wright's Voc. l. 40, col. 2 (Vestrum nomen). We also find A. S. teppa, a fillet or band; 'Tania, teppan, vel dol-smetas,' Wright's Voc. l. 16, col. 2; where teppan is the nom. plural. Not E. words, but borrowed. - Lat. tepete, cloth, hangings. - Gk. τεπερ, stem of τεπερ, a carpet, woollen rug. See Tap, Tabard, Tapstry.

TIPPLE, to drink in small quantities, and habitually. (Scand.) Shak. has tippling, Antony, l. 4. 19. 'To tipple, potitate;' Levens, ed. 1570. The frequentative of tip, verb, to cause to slant, incline; thus it means to be continually inclining the drinking-glass, to be always tippling wine or beer down the throat. Cf. prov. E. tipple, to tumble, to turn over, as is done in tumbling (Halliwell). A Scand. word; still preserved in Norway. tipple, to drink little and often, to tippie (Ansea). See Tip (2), Tipay. Der. tippler, tippl-ang.

TIPSY, intoxicated. (Scand.) In Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. v. 48. The formation of the word is difficult to explain, but it is clearly related to Tipple and Tip (2), q. v. It means 'fond of tippling,' where tip is used in the sense of tipple. Cf. prov. E. tip, a draught of liquor, tip, to empty liquor from one vessel into another (Halliwell); tip off, to tippie (Nares). The s appears to be a verbal suffix, as in claw-s from claw; cf. Swed. dial. tippsa, to pat hands (in a children's game). Cf. trick-y, and other words with suffix -y, in F. Hall, Modern English, p. 272. β. Wedgwood cites Swed. tip, a fuddling with drink, tippla, to fuddle oneself, tippsig, tipsy. These words present a remarkable likeness, especially as the E. and Swed. words can only be cognate, and neither language can easily have borrowed from the other. Der. tipst-y, ness.

TIRADE, a strain of censure or reproof. (F., = Ital., = Teut.) Modern. - F. tirade, 'a draught, pull, . . . a shooting;' Cot. Hamilton explains F. tirade by 'a passage, a tirade or long speech (in a play).' The lit. sense is a drawing out, a lengthening out. - Ital. tirata, a drawing, a pulling. - Ital. tirare, to pull, draw, pluck, match. Cf. Teut. origia, like F. tirer; see further under Tier.

TIRE (1), to exhaust, weary, fatigue, become exhausted. (E.) M. E. tir, tesion, not a very common word. Struttman refers us to the Towneley Mysteries, p. 126; and to p. 5 of a Fragment printed by Sir Thos. Phillips, where occur the words Am (am) his milt - his might is exhausted. It occurs also in the compound atires, as: 'gief mihte þe ne atires' - if might (or power) fail thee not, i. e. be not tired out; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, p. 29, l. 25. - A. S. tesion, (1) to be tired, be weary, (2) to tire, fatigue; Green, ii. 529. β. It is remarkable that the dictionaries frequently refer tire (in the sense to be weary) to A. S. tesion, which is not quite the same thing; see Tire (2). That tesion is its real equivalent, may be seen by examining the uses of tesion, gatesion, and atiresion. One example may suffice. 'Tesion hwa þe . . . wering þes weoces' - nevertheless the strong one tires, being weary of the work; Exeter Book, ed. Thorpe, p. 436, Middle iv, l. 16. Confusion between tesion and tesion is easy, because both are mere derivatives from the strong verb tesion, to tear; indeed, Leo considers them as identical. The orig. sense was to tear, then to wear out, exhaust, or to become exhausted. - √ DAR, to tear; see Tear. ¶ Green connects tire with Skt. das (a Vedic word), to be exhausted. Der. tir-ed, tir-ed-ness, tire-some, tire-some-ness.

TIRE (2), a head-dress; as a verb, to adorn or dress the head. (F., = Teut.) The examples show that this is an abbreviation for attire. See esp. Prompt. Parv. p. 494: 'Tyre, or e-tyre of wemmeno, Mundum muliebria.' Again, in Will. of Palerne, 1174, we have anr, but in l. 1723 we have tr; cf. 'in no gay tyr,' Alexander and Dindimus, 883; 'till e-tyr,' id. 599. β. We have also the verb to tire, 2 Kings, ix. 30; cf. 'Attoured, tired, dressed, attired, decked,' Cot. The M. E. verb was attire, whence attired, pp., Will. of Palerne, 1228. However, the sb. appears earlier than the verb, being spelt atyr, with the sense 'apparel;' Layamon, 3275, later text. γ. It would suffice to refer the reader to the article on Attire, if it were not that some corrections are needed of the account there given; my chief fault is in the derivation of O. F. attirer. The M. E. verb attire is from O. F. attirer, better attirer, to adjust, decorate, adorn, dispose; see Roquefort, and the quotation s. v. Attire. - O. F. a tira, in order; in the phr. tire a tira, in order, one after the other; see examples in Roquefort. - O. F. a (= Lat. ad), to; and tire, another form of tira, tira, a row, rank, order; see Burguy and Roquefort. Cf. Prov. tira, tira, a row (Bartch); which sometimes had the sense of adornment or attire (Dies). This sb. is from O. H. G. tiara, M. H. G. tiara, G. tiara, ornament; cf. G. tiara, to adorn.

8. The source of O. H. G. ziar can hardly be assigned; in form it answers best to A. S. tír, said to mean 'row'; but as this is a very doubtful word, and Grein's identification of it with mod. E. row is probably wrong, this cannot be depended on. Fick (iii. 111) proposes to connect it with A. S. tr, Icel. trr, glory; but this also is doubtful. ¶ The correction of the etymology of O. F. stirior is due to Mr. H. Nicol; and see Dies, s. v. stir. ¶ Quite distinct from stirra, and (probably) from stir.

TIRE (3), a hoop of iron that binds the felloes of wheels together. (F., = Test.) 'Tire, the ornament or dress of womens heads; also, the iron band of a cart-wheel;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'The metall [a kind of iron] is brittle and short . . . such as will not serve one whit for stroke and nail to bind cart-wheels withall, which tire indeed would [should] be made of the other that is gentle and pliable;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 14. [Here straba = straba, rim of a wheel; see Halliwell.] β. The history of the word is obscure; it seems to me that the word may be identical with Tire (2), the wheel-band being likened to a woman's tire. Tire meant to dress or arrange; 'I tire an egge, to acoustre; I tire with garments,' &c.; Palsgrave. ¶ I have no belief in Richardson's just-like suggestion, that a tire is a ti-er, because it ties the wheel together. The M. E. tyere or tyere nowhere occurs in this sense.

TIRE (4), to tear a prey, as is done by predatory birds. (E.) In Shak. Venus, 56; 1 Hen. VI. i. 1. 269. M. E. tyre, to tear a prey, only used of vultures, &c.; see Chaucer, Troilus, l. 768; tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 12, l. 2055. = A. S. tyrgan, to provoke, vex, irritate, Deut. xxxiii. 21. 'Lacemo, ie tyrgis;' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 165, l. 12. Merely a derivative from the strong verb tean, to tear; and closely allied to Tire (1), q. v. See Tire in Nares; he derives it from F. tyer, which only means to pull, not to tear, though it makes but little ultimate difference; see Tier.

TIRE (5), a train. (F., = Test.) Only in Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 35. Doubtless coined from F. tyer, to draw; see Tirade. Practically the same word as Tier, q. v. Doublet, tyer.

TIRO, TYRO, a novice. (L.) Always grossly misspelt tyro. 'Tyro, a new fresh-water soldier, a novice, apprentice;' Phillips, ed. 1706. In Bloon's Gloss., ed. 1674, it appears as tyronis, evidently from a F. form tyron, answering to Lat. acc. tyronem. = Lat. tyro, a recruit, novice, tiro. Root uncertain; perhaps allied to Gk. tyrōn, tender, soft, delicate, which is usually connected with tyros, to rub; see Trito. Der. tyro-civium, a first campaign, school, apprenticeship; the title of a poem by Cowper.

TIBIUM, cloth interwoven with gold or silver. (F., = L.) M. E. tieme, a ribband, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 639. = F. tiem, 'a bawdrick, ribbon, fillet, or head-band of woven stuffe;' Cot. Also tiem, m., tiems, l., woven, plaited, interlaced; id. Tiems was the old pp. of tiere (mod. F. tiiser), to weave. = Lat. texere, to weave; see Text. TIT, a small horse or child. (Scand.) 'The tit are little worth;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Metam. ix. 14; where tit means 'a little girl.' 'A little tit,' a small horse; Holinshed, Desc. of Ireland, c. ii (R.) = Icel. títtr, a tit, bird (now obsolete); the dimin. títlingr, a sparrow, is still in use; Norweg. tita, a little bird (Aasen). The orig. sense is merely something small; cf. prov. E. titty, small; tiddy-urum, a wren (Halliwell). Perhaps orig. a term of endearment; cf. Tant. Der. tit-lang, a sparrow, from Icel. títlingr, as above, with double dimin. suffix -ling. Also tit-lark, q. v., tit-mouse, q. v.

TIT FOR TAT, blow for blow. (Scand.) A corruption of tít for tap, where tít is a slight tap; Ballinger's Works, i. 283 (Parker Society). See Tip (2).

TITAN, the sun-god. (L., = Gk.) In Shak. Rom. ii. 3. 4; &c. = Lat. Titan, Titanus; whence Titani, descendants of Titan, giants. = Gk. Títos, the sun-god, brother of Helios. + Skt. títá, fire; in the dict. by Bohnling and Roth, iii. 327. = Gk. TITHI, to burn. Der. titan-ic, i. e. gigantic.

TITHES, a tenth part, the tenth of the produce as offered to the clergy. (E.) M. E. tithe, Chaucer, C. T. 541. The proper sense is 'tenth'; hence tenth part. Another spelling is tithe, as in 'the tithe best' = the tenth commandment, Will. of Shoreham, p. 101, l. 1. = A. S. teofa, tenth, Grein, ii. 526. Hence teofung, a tithing, a tith; 'he seide him þá teofung of callum þám þingum' = he gave him the tith of all the possessions, Gen. xiv. 20. The A. S. teofa stands for teofas, formed with suffix -fa from teof, ten; see Ten. The loss of s before f occurs again in teof, teof, &c. We also have teofa, in which s is retained; so that teofa and teof are doublets. Cf. Icel. tíund, tenth, tith; see Decimal. Der. tithe, verb, M. E. tithen, tithen, P. Ploverman, C. xiv. 73, A. S. teofian, Matt. xxiii. 23; tith-er, Chaucer, C. T. 6894; tith-ing, M. E. teofung, a district containing ten families, Rob. of Glouc. p. 267, l. 3.

TITILLATION, a tickling. (F., = L.) [The verb titillare is in much later use; cf. titillating dust; Pope, Rape of the Lock, v. 84.]

The sb. is in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 766. = F. titillation, a tickling; Cot. = Lat. titillationem, acc. of titillatio, a tickling. = Lat. titillatus pp of titillare, to tickle.

TITLARK, a kind of lark. (Scand. and E.) Lit. 'small lark'; see Tit and Lark.

TITULE, an inscription set over or at the beginning of a book, a name of distinction. (F., = L.) M. E. titule, Chaucer, C. T. 14329; Wyclif, John, xix. 19. = O. F. titule; mod. F. titre, by change from t to r. = Lat. titulum, acc. of titulus, a superscription on a tomb, altar, &c.; an honourable designation. Prob. connected with Gk. τίτλος, honour. Der. titule, verb; titul-ed, All's Well, iv. 2. 2; titul-dead; titul-page, Per. ii. 3. 4; titul-er, from F. titulaire, 'titular, having a title, Cot., as if from Lat. titularis, from Lat. titulare, verb, to give a title to. Hence titular-by, titular-y.

TITMOUSE, a kind of small bird. (Scand. and E.) Not connected with mouse; the true pl. should be titmouses, yet titmouse is usual, owing to confusion with mouse. In Spenser, Shep. Kal. Nov. 26, it is spelt titmouse. M. E. titmouse; spelt tytmouse, Prompt. Parv.; titmouse, Wright's Voc. i. 188, col. 2; titmouse, id. i. 165, l. 2. Compounded of tit, small, or a small bird, Icel. títtr (see Tit); and A. S. miis, a name for several kinds of small birds. β. The A. S. miis occurs in: 'Sigatula, fron-miis; Parra, cul-miis; Parrala, not-miis,' all names of birds; see Wright's Voc. i. 62, col. 2. The i is long, as shewn by the M. E. -miis. + Du. miis, a titmouse. + G. miis, a titmouse; O. H. G. meisid.

γ. Perhaps the orig. sense of A. S. miis was also 'small'; cf. Lithuan. meigas, little, small; Nesselmann remarks that Lith. meis or meis, small, is a base occurring in a large number of words, amongst which we may note meištas, small and pretty, meištas stendas, the name of a kind of thrush, Turdus iliacus. Perhaps from MA or MI, to diminish; see Minor.

TITTLER, to giggle, laugh restrainedly. (E.) Cf. twitter. In Pope, Dunciad, iv. 276. The same as M. E. titler, to chatter, prattle, tell idle tales, whence titler, a teller of tales, P. Ploverman, B. xx. 297. A frequentative from a base TIT, expressive of repeating the sound ti ti ti, just as tattle expresses the repetition of ta ta ta. See further under Tattle. Cf. Twitter. Der. titler, sb.

TITULE, a jot, small particle. (F., = L.) M. E. titul, titil, used by Wyclif to translate Lat. apex; Matt. v. 18; Luke, xvi. 17. [Really a doublet of titla.] = O. F. titule, a title; (F. tyre, a title); also titule, titre, 'a little, a small line drawn over as abridged word, to supply letters wanting; also a title, &c.; Cot. = Lat. titulum, acc. of titulus, a title, used by Petronius in the sense of sign or token. β. In late Lat. titulus must have meant a mark over a word in writing, as this sense appears again in Span. titlo, Port. tit, a stroke over a letter such as the mark over Span. ñ; also in the Catalan titilla, Wallachian titla, a mark of an accent, cited by Dies, s. v. titlo. The latter forms are unmistakably Latin. See Titile. ¶ Not allied to tit.

TITTLER-TATTLE, prattle. (E.) See Wmt. Tale, iv. 4. 248. A reduplicated form of tattle. Note the use of titler, also spelt titler, a prattler, P. Ploverman, B. xx. 297. See Tattle and Twaddle.

TO, in the direction of, as far as. (E.) M. E. to, Chaucer, C. T. 16; and, as sign of the gerund, 13. 17; it is now considered as the sign of the infin. mood, the gerundial use being lost. = A. S. to, prep.; also as sign of the gerund as distinct from the infin. mood; Grein, ii. 536-542. + Du. to. + G. zu; M. H. G. zuo, zu; O. H. G. zu, zi, zuo. + Goth. du (where the occurrence of d for t is exceptional). + Russ. do, to, up to. Supposed to be further related to Lat. de as appearing in O. Lat. ondo, indu (see in in White); also to Gk. -de, towards, as in eláde-de, homewards; see Curtius, i. 289. Perhaps also to O. Irish do, to; O. Welsh di (mod. W. i), to; W. dy- as a prefix; see Rhy, Lectures on W. Philology. Doublet, too, q. v. And see to (2), to-ward, to-day, to-night.

TO, prefix, in twain, asunder, to pieces. (E.) Retained in the phr. all-to-brake = utterly broke asunder, Judges, ix. 53. With regard to the dispute as to whether it should be printed all-to-brake or all-to-brake, it is quite certain that only the former is etymologically correct, though it may be admitted that the phrase was already so ill understood in the Tudor period that such a mistaken use as all-to-brake was possible, though it is charitable to give our translators the benefit of the doubt. It is purely a question of chronology. At first the prefix to- was used without all; later, all was often added as well, not only before the prefix to-, but before the prefixes for- and be-; also; next, all was considered as in some way belonging to to, as if all-to were short for altogether (which it is not), and consequently all-to appeared as a sort of adverb, and was considered as such, apparently, by Surrey and Latimer. It would be difficult to find any clear example of this latest use before A. D. 1500. To prove the above statements, it would be easy to fill several pages with hundreds of examples. I select a few. 1. A. S. to, prefix; appearing in to-bras, to bear apart, remove; to-brasom, to burst asunder; to-brasom, to blow asunder, dissipate; to-brasom, to break asunder; and in nearly fifty other verbs, for which see Green, ii. 542-549. We may particularly note 'heora actiu be to-bras' = he brake in pieces their seats, Matt. xxi. 12. S. M. E. to-, prefix; appearing in to-brasom, to beat in pieces, to-brasom, to bite in pieces, to-brasom, to break in pieces; and in nearly a hundred other verbs; for which see Strattmann's Dict., 3rd. ed., pp. 565-568. We may particularly note 'al his bondes he to-brak for ioys' = all his bonds he brake in twain for joy; Will. of Palerne, 3236. It should also be observed that most verbal prefixes (such as for-, to-) were usually written apart from the verb in old MSS.; ignorance of this fact has misled many. Good examples of the addition of al as an intensive, meaning 'wholly,' are the following. '[He] al to-tare his a-tir pat he to-tare miht;' Will. of Palerne, 3884; 'al for-waded' = entirely worn out with lying awake, id. 784; 'al bi-weped for wo' = all covered with tears for wo, id. 661; 'al is to-brasom thilke regionn,' Chaucer, C. T. 2759; 'he suld be soyne to-frucht al' = he would soon be dashed in pieces, Barbour, Bruce, s. 597. The last instance is particularly instructive, as al follows the pp., instead of preceding. S. All-to or al-to, when (perhaps) misunderstood. 'To-day redy ripe, to-morowe all-to-shakom;' Surrey, Sonnet 9, last line. 'We be fallen into the dirt, and be all-to-dirtid;' Latimer, Remains, p. 397 (Parker Soc.). 'Smiling speakers . . . love and all-to love him;' Latimer, Sermons, p. 289. The last instance is a clear one. Spenser has all-to-torne, F. Q. v. q. 10, and all-to-morow in the same stanza; all-to-root, F. Q. iv. 7. 8. Milton has all-to-ruffed, Comus, 380; this is a very late example. B. Etymologically, the A. S. to- is cognate with O. Fries. to-, to-; O. H. G. to-, to-, to-, to-; mod. G. to-, as in zerbrechen, to break in pieces, pt. t. zerbrach (= to-brak). The Goth. form is dis- (by the same exceptional occurrence of d for t as is seen in Goth. du = E. to), as seen in dis-tairon, to tear asunder, burst, Mark, ii. 22, Luke, v. 37. The Lat. form is also dis- (by the regular sound-shifting), standing for an older form dis-, from dis, to; so also Gk. di-, only used in the sense of 'double.' Thus the prefix to- is connected with E. two, and had the orig. sense of 'into two parts,' or 'in twain'; hence, 'in pieces' or 'asunder.' See Dis-, Di-, and Two; and see note to All.

TO- (1), to-, (E.) Besides the prefix to- (= in twain) discussed above, we also have the prep. to in composition in some verbs, &c. Of these compounds, we still see to-ward, q. v. Others are obsolete: the chief are the sb. to-wards, advent, to-fight, a refuge, to-peak, hope, to-wards, a nick-name; and the verb to-warden, to approach. Wyclif, Judith, xiv. 14. See Strattmann. And see to-day.

TOAD, an amphibious reptile. (E.) M. E. toad; spelt toade, Prompt. Parv., p. 495; toad, Proke of Conscience, 6000. = A. S. toadige; 'Buffo, toadige,' Wright's Vocab. i. 24. Also toade, id. i. 78. Root unknown. The Dan. toade, Swed. toada, a toad, must be from a different root. Der. toad-pole, q. v.; also toad-stool, spelt toadstools, Spenser, Shep. Kal. Dec. 69; toad-stone; toad-aster, formerly an assistant to a mountebank (see Wedgwood, and N. and Q. 3rd S. i. 128, 176, 236, 276, v. 142), now shortened to toady; toad-stone, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 12, § 3.

TOAST (1), bread scorched before the fire. (F., = L.) M. E. toast, whence the verb toasten, to toast; see Prompt. Parv. p. 497. = O. F. toaste, 'a toast of bread;' marked as a Picard word in Cotgrave. = Lat. toast, fem. of toastus, pp. of torrare, to parch; see Torrid. Cf. Span. toastar, torrar, to toast, toasted, a toast, slice of toasted bread; Port. toasted, toasted, toastar, torrar, to toast. Der. toast, verb; toast-er, toast-ug-iron, K. John, iv. 3. 99.

TOAST (2), a person whose health is drunk. (F., = L.) It was formerly usual to put toasted bread in liquor; see Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 3. 33. The story of the origin of the present use of the word is given in the Tatler, no. 24, June 4, 1709. 'Many wits of the last age will assert that the word, in its present sense, was known among them in their youth, and had its rise from an accident at the town of Bath, in the reign of king Charles the Second. It happened that, on a public day, a celebrated beauty of those times was in the Cross Bath, and one of the crowd of her admirers took a glass of the water in which the fair one stood, and drank her health to the company. There was in the place a gay fellow half fuddled, who offered to jump in, and swore, though he liked not the liquor, he would have the toast. He was opposed in his resolution; yet this whim gave foundation to the present honour which is done to the lady we mention in our liquors, who has ever since been called a toast.' Whether the story be true or not, it may be seen that a toast, i. e. a health, easily took its name from being the usual accompaniment to liquor, esp. in loving-cups, &c. Der. toast, vb.; toast-messer, the announcer of toasts at a public dinner.

TOBACCO, a narcotic plant. (Span., = Hayti.) Formerly spelt tabacco, Ben Jonson, Every Man, i. 4 (last speech). See remarks in Wheatley's Introduction to Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour. Harrison fixes on 1573 as the date when the smoking of tobacco became general in England. Cotgrave mentions tabacco, s. v. Nicotiana. = Span. tabaco, tobacco. Maha (in Webster) derives this from the [West] Indian tabaco, the tube or pipe in which the Indians or Caribbees smoked the plant, transferred by the Spaniards to the herb itself. Clavigero, in his Conquest of Mexico (E. transl. i. 430), says: 'tabaco is a word taken from the Hartine language, i. e. the language spoken in the island of Hayti or St. Domingo. Der. tabacco-ner, a coined word, orig. used, not of the tabaco (as now), but of the smoker of tobacco; see examples in Tranch. Select Glossary; tabacco-pipe.'

TOCSIN, an alarm-bell, or the sound of it. (F., = Teut. and L.) Added by Todd to Johnson. He quotes: 'The priests went up into the steeple, and rang the bells backward, which they call tochaine, whereupon the people . . . flocked together;' Fulke, Answer to F. Frarize (1580), p. 53. = O. F. toysin, 'an allarm bell, or the ringing thereof;' Cot. Mod. F. toisin (see Littré). = F. toysur, 'to clap, knock, hit, Cot.; and O. F. sig., 'a sign, mark, . . . also a bell or the sound of a bell, whence toysur, an alarm bell;' id. Thus it means 'a striking of the signal-bell.' S. The F. toysur is another form of toysur, to touch; see Touch. The O. F. sig., mod. F. signe, is from Lat. signum, a mark, hence a signal, signal-bell; see Sign. Thus to-ast = touch-ast. See Touch.

TOD, a bush; a certain measure of wool; a fox. (Scand.) 'An yvie todde,' an ivy-bush; Spenser, Shep. Kal. March, 67. 'Wulle is bought by the sacke, by the tod, by the stone;' Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 191. Palgrave has 'Todde of wolle' = tod of wool; and 'toode of chese' = tod of cheese. See Nam. Tod, a fox, occurs in Ben Jonson, Pan's Anniversary, hymn 4; and see Jamieson's Sc. Dict. The fox is supposed to be so named from his bushy tail. = Icel. toddi (nearly obsolete), a tod of wool; a bit, a piece. + G. sette, sete, a tuft of hair hanging together, a rag, anything shaggy. Origin uncertain; cf. Fick, iii. 113.

TODAY, this day. (E.) Compounded of to, prep., and day. The etymology is obscured by the duse of the prep. to in the old sense of 'for; thus to day = for the day; to night = for the night; &c. Strattmann cites me chas him to kinge = people chose him for king. Rob. of Glouc. p. 301; yowen to wive = to give to wife, Chaucer, C. T. 1862. See particularly the article on A. S. to in Green, p. 540; he gives examples of to days, for the day, today; to days bismum, for this day, today; to midre nite, to or at midnight; to morgene = for the morn, to-morrow. Hence our to-day, to-morrow, to-night, and prov. E. to-year, i. e. for the present year, this year. ¶ To explain to as a corruption of the is a gross error.

TODDLE, to walk unsteadily, as a child. (E.) Given as a Northern word by Todd, in his additions to Johnson. The same as Lowl. Sc. tottle, to walk with short steps; Jamieson. Further, tottle is the same as totter, the frequentative suffixes -to and -er being equivalent; see Totter. + Swed. tolla, to toddle; the spelling with l is duly explained s. v. totter. And cf. G. tolleln, to toddle, though probably formed in another way.

TODDY, a mixture of spirits. (Hindustani.) 'The toddy-tree is not unlike the date or palm;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 29 (R.) = Hindustani tar, tadi, 'vulgarily toddy, the juice or sap of the palmyra-tree and of the cocco-nut [which] when allowed to stand . . . becomes a fiery and highly intoxicating spirit;' H. H. Wilson, Glossary of Indian Terms, p. 510. = Hind. tar, 'a palm-tree, . . . most appropriate to the Palmyra, from the stem of which the juice is extracted which becomes toddy;' id. Cf. Pers. tar, 'a species of palm-tree from which an intoxicating liquor, toddy, is extracted;' Rich. Dict. p. 353. The r in the Hind. word has a peculiar sound, which has come to be represented by d in English.

TOE, one of the five small members at the end of the foot. (E.) M. E. toe, pl. toen, Chaucer, C. T. 14868. = A. S. to, pl. tin or tan, Laws of Æthelbirt, §§ 70, 71, 72, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 20. This is a contracted form, standing for tohe. + Du. toen. + Icel. to, pl. toer. + Dan. toe, pl. toer. + Swed. to. + G. toe; O. H. G. tohe, a toe, also a finger. S. All from Teut. base TIH (Aryas DIK). = DAK, perhaps 'to take,' rather than 'to shew;' see note to Digit, which is a cognate word. ¶ Distinct from tee in misallecta. Der. to-af, having toes.

TOFT, a form of Tuft (2), q. v.

TOGA, the mantle of a Roman citizen. (L.) Whether toga = toga really occurs in Shakespeare is doubtful. Phillips gives it in his Dict. = Lat. toga, a kind of mantle, lit. a covering. = Lat. togare, to cover; see Togement.

TOGETHER, in the same place, at the same time. (E.) M. E. to-geders, to-gedre, to-gidre, P. Plowman, B. prol. 46; to-gidern, id. xvi. 80. We even find the compound alto-geders as early as in the Ætner Riwle, p. 320, l. 25. For the spelling with d, cf. M. E. fader, a father, moðer, a mother. = A. S. id-gader, id-gadre; together, Grein, li. 544. = A. S. id, to; and gader, together, Grein, i. 491; see further under Gather. Der. id-gader.

TOIL (1), labour, fatigue; as a verb, to labour. (F., = Teut.?) M. E. tail; the dat. tailis, in Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1802, means a tunic or struggle. 'And when these com on ther was so grete tailis and ranoer of noyse that wonder it was to here, and therwith arose so grete a duste;' Merlín, ed. Wheatley, p. 393, l. 1. Thus the old sense was rather turmoil or disturbance than labour; the sense of labour may have been imported by confusion with M. E. tailien, a form of tilen, to till (P. Plowman, B. vii. 3). β. As to the verb tailen, its meaning was also different from that of mod. E. tail. We find: 'reulche tailied to and fro' = ruelfully pulled or tugged to and fro, Debate between Body and Soul, l. 368, in Mätzner, Sprachproben, i. 200. Also: 'tore and tailied' = torn and pulled about or spoilt, Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 143, l. 373. It may have its present meaning in P. Plowman's Crede, 742, where it is joined with tailen, to till. We may also note Lowland Sc. tail, toil (Jamieson); and perhaps Sc. tailie, tailie, a quarrel, broil, struggle, is closely related, as well as tailie, to harass, occurring in Barbour's Bruce, iv. 152, where the Edinb. MS. has the pp. tailit.

γ. The origin seems to be found in O. F. tailier, 'filthily to mix or mingle, confound or shuffle together; to intangle, trouble, or pester by scurry meddling, also to bedirt, begrime, besmear, smeech, betray;' Cot. The origin of this F. word is very obscure; if we may take the senses of the M. E. word as a guide, perhaps we may derive it from an unrecorded frequentative form of O. H. G. zachen (G. zachen), to twitch, pull quickly, or from closely related forms such as zachen, to pull, tear, snatch away, zagen, to tear, pull, pluck; all of these are derivatives from O. H. G. zachen, zāhan (G. zachen), to pull. These words are related to E. Tow (1), q. v. δ. If this be right, the orig. sense of tail was to keep on pulling about, to harass; which is precisely the sense found. (Burgoy connects O. F. tailier with taille, a towel; but it does not seem likely that it would then mean 'to soil;' it would rather mean to wipe clean. As to this F. taille, see Towal.) ¶ The usual etymology of tail is from O. Du. teylen, 'to till, or to manure lands,' Hexham; cf. teyl, sb., 'tilling or manuring of lands,' id.; but it seems impossible to explain the senses of M. E. tailen from this source only. Der. tail-some, Spenser, F. Q. li. 12, 29; tail-ones, tail-ones.

TOIL (2), a net or snare. (F., = L.) In Hamlet, iii. 3. 362. The pl. toylys is in Spenser, Astrophel, 97. = F. toile, 'cloth, linen cloth, also, a stalking-horse of cloth; toile de araignee, a cob-web; pl. toiles, toils, or a hay to inclose or intangle wild beasts in;' Cot. = Lat. tilia, a web, thing woven; put for tilia = Lat. telum, to weave; see Text. Der. tail-st (below).

TOILET, TOILETTE, a small cloth on a dressing-table; hence, a dressing-table, or the operation of dressing. (F., = L.) 'Toilet, a kind of table-cloth, . . . made of fine linnen, &c. spread upon a table . . . where persons of quality dress themselves; a dressing-cloth;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt toyilet in Cotgrave. = F. toilette, 'a toylet, the stuff which drapers lap about their cloths, also a bag to put nightgowns in;' Cot. Dimin. of toile, cloth; see Toll (2).

TOFT, a clearing. (Scand.) See Toom.

TOISE, a French measure of length. (F., = L.) It contains 6 feet, and a little over 4½ inches. = F. toise, 'a fathom, a measure containing six feet in length;' Cot. Cf. Ital. tesa, a stretching. = Lat. tesis, fem. of pp. of tesere, to stretch. See Tense (1).

TOKAY, a white wine. (Hungary.) Mentioned in Townson's Travels in Hungary; see quotation in Todd's Johnson. So named from Tokay, a town in Hungary, at some distance E.N.E. from Pesth.

TOKEN, a mark, sign, memorial, coin. (E.) M. E. tokeu, Chauv. C. T. 13289. The e answers to A. S. e, as usual. = A. S. teian, teian, a very common word; Grein, li. 520. = A. S. teoh (for teah), pt. t. of teian, usually teian, to accuse, criminate, the orig. sense being to indicate, point out (hence point out as guilty); Grein, li. 532. = Du. toeken, a sign, mark, token, miracle. = Icel. teian, teian. = Dan. tege. = Swed. tecken. = G. zeichen. = Goth. teihan. β. All from Teut. base TIH (Aryas DIK); from di DIK, to shew, whence also Lat. in-dicare, to point out, A. S. teian, Goth. gathian, to shew, G. zeigen, to shew, zeichen, to accuse. See Teach and Diction. Der. be-teian. From the same root are ad-dict, in-dir-ate, in-dex, &c.; see under diction.

TOLERATE, to bear, endure, put up with. (L.) 'To tolerate those things;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 14. § 4. = Lat. tolerans, pp. of tolerare, to endure; allied to tolerare, to lift, bear. = TAR, TAL, to lift, bear; cf. Skt. tal, to lift, Gk. talōō, to suffer, A. S. tolian, to endure, L. tolus, pp. (for tolans). See Thole (1). Der. intoler-ble, from F. intolerable, 'intolerable,' Cot., from Lat. toler- abilis, that can be endured; toler-abil-er, toler-abilis-ness; toler-ation, from F. toleration, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th cent. (Littre), from Lat. acc. tolerationem, endurance; toler-ance, from F. tolerance, 'toleration, sufferance,' Cot., from Lat. tolerantia, sufferance; toler-ant, from the stem of the pres. part. of tolerare. From the same root are a-tlas, tol-out, ex-ter; e-late, col-late, di-late, ob-late, pro-late, re-late, trans-late, legis-late, ob-lat-ive, super-lat-ive.

TOLL (1), a tax for the privilege to use a road or sell goods in a market. (E.) M. E. tol, tribute, Wyclif, Rom. xiii. 7. = A. S. tail, Matt. xvii. 25. = Du. tol. = Icel. tolfr. = Dan. tol (for tolft). = Swed. tol. = G. zoll. β. All from Teut. type TOLA (or perhaps tol-la = TOL-NA), a toll; Fick, iii. 120. Probably allied to tol, in the old sense of number, numeration; from the teiling or counting of the tribute; see Tale. Cf. A. S. tolian, to reckon esteem. γ. If the word be Teutonic, as it seems to be, this is a satisfactory solution; much more so than that which supposes tol to be a violent corruption of Low Lat. tolerans, Lat. tolerans, from Gk. tolōō, a toll-house. The A. S. has tolst, i. e. toll-settle, as the equivalent of Low Lat. tolerans, in a gloss; Wright's Voc. i. 60, col. 2, shewing that tol and tolerans are not quite the same thing. ¶ The Gk. tolōō is from tolōō, a tax, toll, allied to Lat. tolere, to take, and Gk. tolōō (see Talent); a distinct word from tolōō, with the sense of end (see Tarum). Der. tol, verb, M. E. tolien, Chauv. C. T. 564; tol-er, M. E. toliers, P. Plowman, B. prol. 220; tol-beeth, M. E. tolbeeth, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 9; tol-ber, gan-beeth.

TOLL (2), to pull a large bell; to sound as a bell. (E.) We now say 'a bell tolle,' i. e. sounds, but the old usage was 'to tol a bell,' i. e. to pull it, set it ringing, as in Minshew, Skinner, and Phillips. The latter explains to tol a bell by 'to ring a bell after a particular manner.' It is remarkable that the sense of 'sound' occurs as early as in Shakespeare, who has, 'the clocks do tol;' Hen. V, chorus to act iv. l. 15. Yet we may be satisfied that the present word, which has given some trouble to etymologists, is rightly explained by Nares, Todd, and Wedgwood, who take tol to be the M. E. tolien, to pull, entice, draw, and Wedgwood adds: 'To tol the bells in when they ring slowly to invite the people into church.' The double sense of tol is remarkably shewn by two quotations given by Richardson from Dryden, Duke of Guise, Act iv: 'Some crowd the spires, but most the hallow'd bells And softly tol for souls departing knells;' and again: 'When hollow murmurs of the evening-bells Dismis the sleepy swains, and tol them [invite them] to their cells.' Minshew has: 'To tol a bell,' and 'to tolle, draw on or entice.' See examples in Nares and Todd. β. M. E. tolien, Tollien, or teyven, or steyn to doan, incite, provoke, excite; Prompt. Parv. 'Tollere, or styrene to do good or badde, Excitator, instigator;' id. '[He] tolled [drew] bys ounce wyf away;' Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 302. 'This tolled him toward thee' = this draws him towards you; Ætner Riwle, p. 390, l. 5. There is a long note on this curious word, with numerous examples, in St. Marbarette, ed. Cockayne, p. 110; the oldest sense seems to be to coax or fuddle, entice, draw towards one. γ. All is clear so far; but the origin of M. E. tolien is obscure; Mr. Cockayne supposes it to answer to Icel. tolle, to grope for, feel, touch, handle. We may rather suppose it to be nearly related to A. S. forlytan, to allure, Grein, i. 332; cf. M. E. tolien, to entice, lure, Chauv. C. T. 4132. See Till (3).

TOLU, a kind of resin. (S. America.) Also called tolu balsam or balsam of Tolu. Said to be named from Tolu, a place on the N.W. coast of New Granada, in S. America.

TOM, a pet name for Thomas. (L., = Gk., = Heb.) Spelt Thomus, P. Plowman, B. v. 28. = Lat. Thomus. = Gk. Θωμάς, Matt. x. 3. From the Heb. thomas, a twin; Smith's Dict. of the Bible. This is why Thomas was also called Didymus; from Gk. διδυμος, a twin. Der. tom-boy, tom-cat, tom-tit.

TOMAHAWK, a light war-hatchet of the N. American Indians. (W. Indian.) Modern. From the Algonkia tomahagan, tomahagan, Delaware tomahagan, a war-hatchet (Webster).

TOMATO, a kind of fruit, a love-apple. (Span., = Mexican?) Modern. From Span. (and Port.) tomate, a tomato; we probably used final e for a because e is so common an ending in Spanish. Borrowed from some American language; according to Littre, from Mexican tomatl. It is a native of South America.

TOMB, a grave, vault for the dead. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. tombe, tombe, Chauv. C. T. 10832; tombe, Layamon, 6080, later text. = O. F. tombe; F. tombe, 'a tombe;' Cot. = Lat. tumba, a tomb (White). = Gk. τύμβη, put for the common form τύμβος, a tomb, sepulchre; properly a burial-mound. Prob. allied to Lat. tumbus (Curtius, li. 139); see Tumulus. Der. tomb-less, Hen. V, l. 2, 219; tomb-stone; on-tomb.

TOMBOY, a rude girl. (L., = Gk., = Heb.; and O. Low G.) In Shak. Cymb. i. 6. 122. From Tom and Boy. ¶ So also tom-cat, tom-tit, tom-fowl.

TOME, a volume of a book. (F., = L., = Gk.) In Bouc's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Cotgrave. = F. toime, 'a tome, or volume'; Cot. = Lat. tomus, acc. of tomus, a volume. = Gk. τόμος, a section; hence, a volume. From the stem of Gk. τίπομαι, to cut. = √ TAM or TAN, to cut (Fick, i. 594); whence Lat. tondere, to shear; see TONSURE. Der. (from same root) ant-tom-y, ant-tom, ant-tom-e-log, op-tom-e, litto-tom-y, philo-tom-y, top-tom-y.

TOMORROW, on the morrow, on the morn succeeding this one. (E.) M. E. to morrow, P. Plowman, B. ii. 42. From to, prep., with the sense of 'for' or 'on'; and morro, morrow. So also A. S. to morigan, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 246, l. 12. See Today and Morrow.

TON, TUN, a large barrel; 4 hogheads; so hundredweight. (L.) We use ton for a weight; and ton for a cask; but the word is all one. Properly a large barrel, hence, the contents of a large barrel; and hence, a heavy weight. M. E. tonne, Chaucer, C. T. 589s. = A. S. tonna, a barrel; 'Cape, tonna,' Wright's Voc. i. 24, col. 2; the pl. tonnas is in the A. S. Chron. an. 852. We find also Du. ton, a tun; Icel. and Swed. tonna, Dan. tonde, a tun, cask; G. tonne, a cask, also a heavy weight; Low Lat. tonna, tonna, whence F. tonneau, 'a tun,' Cot. Also Irish and Gael. tonna, Irish tonna, W. tonnal, a tun, barrel. β. The common form is TUNNA or TONNA; and the word is not Teutonic, the G. form being tonna (not tonne); neither is it Celtic, being so widely spread; moreover, the orig. sense is 'cask.' All the forms appear to be from the Low Lat. tonna, a cask; we find it written tonna, and considered as a Latin word, in the Cassel Glossary of the 9th century; see Bartsch, Christ. Franc. col. 2, l. 15. It is generally supposed to be related to Lat. tina, trina, or tonna, a wine-vessel, cask; see Dix. Root unknown. Der. ton-eg, a coined word; ton-e-l, q. v. Doublet, ton, q. v.

TONE, the sound emitted by a stretched string, the character of a sound, quality of voice. (F., = L., = Gk.) Spelt tonus in Levins. In Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 112. = F. ton, 'a tone or sound'; Cot. = Lat. tonus, acc. of tonus, a sound. = Gk. τόνος, a thing stretched, a rope, sinew, tone, note; from the sound of a stretched string. = √ TAN, to stretch; Skt. tan, to stretch, Gk. τείνω, to stretch; see Tend (1). Der. ton, vb.; ton-e-l; ton-is, increasing the tone or giving vigour, a late word, from Gk. τείνω, relating to stretching. Also ton-ic, berry-ton, meat-ton, oily-ton, semi-ton. Doublet, ton, q. v.

TONGS, an instrument consisting of two jointed bars of metal, used for holding and lifting. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 5. 44. But earlier, the singular form single or single is usual. M. E. single, single. 'Thou twingest him as doth a single' = thou twingest therewith as doth a tong; Owl and Nightingale, 156. = A. S. lang; 'Forepart, single,' Wright's Voc. i. 86, l. 30. Also spelt lang, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 67, l. 3. = Du. lang, a pair of tongs or pinces. = Icel. lang (pl. langar). = Dan. lang. = Swed. slang. = G. zanga. β. All from Teut. type TANGA, with the sense 'a biter' or 'nipper'; cf. E. nipper, pinners (Fick, iii. 116). From the base TANG, nasalised form of TAH (Aryan DAK), to bite. = √ DAK, to bite; cf. Gk. δάσσειν, to bite, Skt. dashy, dash, to bite, ambdashita, pressed together, tight, dashya, a tooth, dashya, a crab (a pincher). In particular, cf. O. H. G. zanga, a pair of tongs, with O. H. G. zanger, biting, pinching. See Tang (1).

TONGUE, the fleshy organ in the mouth, used in tasting, swallowing, and speech. (E.) The spelling with final -us looks like a parody upon F. langue; a far better spelling is lang, as in Spenser, F. Q., introd. to h. l. st. 2. M. E. single, single, Chaucer, C. T. 267 (or 265). = A. S. langa, a tongue. Lake, i. 64. = Du. lang. = Icel. and Swed. langa. = Dan. langa. = G. zanga, O. H. G. zanga. = Goth. zugga (= zanga). β. All from Teut. type TONGA, Fick, iii. 123. Further related to O. Lat. lingua, Lat. lingua (whence F. langue), the tongue; Irish and Gael. lingua, the tongue, a language, put for an older form langa, the initial letter being hardened; whence the European forms DANGHWA, DANGHÚ are inferred; Fick, i. 613. It is further supposed that Skt. jihvá, Vedic jihvá, the tongue, are related, since jihvá might stand for dhivá or dhivá; and that the form of the root is DAGH, the meaning being uncertain. Der. single, vb., Cymb. v. 4. 148; single-ed; single-less, Rich. II, i. 1. 105; single-tail, Mida. Nt. Dr. v. 104. From the same root are ling-e, ling-e-ge.

TONIC, strengthening. (Gk.) See Tone.

TONIGHT, this night. (E.) See Today.

TONSIL, one of two glands at the root of the tongue. (F., = L.) * Tonsilla or almonds in the month; 'Holland, tr. of Pliny, h. xvii. c. 7. § 1. = F. tonsille; tonsilles, pl., 'certain kernels at the root of the tongue'; Cot. = Lat. tonsilla, a sharp pointed pole stuck in the ground to fasten vessels to the shore; pl. tonsilla, the tonsils. The reason for the name is not obvious, Tonsilla is the dimn. of tonna, an ear. Origin uncertain.

TONSURE, a clipping of the hair, esp. the corona of hair worn by Romish priests. (F., = L.) M. E. tonsure, Gower, C. A. iii. 291, l. 20. = F. tonsure, 'a sheering, clipping, the shaven crown of a priest'; Cot. = Lat. tonsurus, a clipping. = Lat. tonsurus, pp. of tondere (pp. tonsus), to shear, clip. Cf. Gk. τίσσειν, to gnaw. = √ TAM or TAN, to cut; whence also Gk. τίσσειν, to cut; see Tome.

TONTLINE, a certain financial scheme, the gain of which falls to the longest liver. (F., = Ital.) See Haydn's Dict. of Dates, and Littré. First started at Paris, about a. d. 1653. = F. tonline, a tonline. Named from Laurence Tenti, a Neapolitan, who originated the scheme.

TOO, more than enough, likewise. (E.) The same word as tu, prep. M. E. to; 'to hadde' = too bad; Will. of Palerne, 5024. = A. S. to, too; Grein, ii. 342, q. v. The same word as tu, prep., but differently used. See To.

TOOL, an instrument used by workmen. (E.) M. E. toel, toel; pl. toles, toles, P. Plowman, A. xi. 123; B. x. 177. = A. S. toel, a tool; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 162, l. 12; spelt toel, Wright's Voc. i. 21, col. 2; toel, id. ii. 49. = Icel. toel, neut. pl., tools. β. Doubtless a contracted form for TAU-I-LA, an implement for making things, Fick, iii. 115; from the verb which appears as Goth. taujan, to make, cause, and in E. toe, toe, to work hard, to dress leather; see Taw. The Teut. base is TU, answering to Aryan DU; from the √ DU, to work, γ. 'This root is not recognized by Skt. grammarians, but it has to be admitted by comparative philologists. There is the verb devayati in the Veda, meaning to worship, a denominative verb derived from divas. Divas meant, originally, any open operation, and presupposes a root du or da, in the sense of actively or assiduously working. It exists in Zend as du, to do. With it we may connect Goth. taujan, the G. zamen (Grimm, Gram. i. 1041), Goth. tauc, work, &c. See my remarks on this root and its derivatives in the Veda in my Translation of the Rig-Veda, i. 63, 191; Max Müller, letter to The Academy, July, 1874.

TOOM, empty. (Scand.) Common in Lowland Scotch; 'toom dish' = empty dish; Burns, Hallowe'en, l. 12 from end. M. E. toom, toom. 'Toom, or voyde, Vacuus'; Prompt. Parv. Not an A. S. word, though the adv. toome occurs once (Grein). = Icel. toom, empty; Swed. and Dan. toom. Fick cites also O. H. G. toomi, empty, free from, iii. 124. The Teut. type is TOMA, empty. Root unknown. Der. toom (3), q. v. Also toyt, in the sense of clearing, from Icel. toft (pronounced toft), toft, toft, a clearing or space marked out for a house or building, also spelt toom, and probably from toom, empty, though the o is now short; see farther under Tuft (1).

TOOT (1), to peep about, spy. (E.) A form of Tout, q. v.

TOOT (2), to blow a horn. (O. Low G.) 'To toote in a horn, cornucopia'; Levins. Not an A. S. form, which would have given toot; but borrowed from a dialect which sounded tu as t. = O. Du. tooten, 'to sound or wade a cornet,' Hezham; cf. Du. toothorn, a bagle-horn. = Swed. toota, to howl; Dan. toote, to howl, blow a horn. = Icel. þjóta, strong verb, pt. t. þjót, to whistle as wind, sigh, resound; also, to blow a horn. = A. S. tootan, to howl, make a noise; Grein, ii. 580. = M. H. G. toosan, O. H. G. toosan, to make a loud noise. = Goth. toota, a trumpet. β. All from Teut. base THUT, to make a noise, resound (due to the sound of a blow) = Aryan √ TUD, to strike; Fick, iii. 137. See Thump and Type.

TOOTH, one of the small bones in the jaws, used in eating, a prong. (E.) M. E. tooth, tooth; pl. teeth, teeth, spelt teeth, Ancren Riwle, p. 288, l. 2 from bottom. = A. S. toth, pl. teoth and teothas, Grein, ii. 543. Here the e is long, to compensate for loss of a before it following; teoth stands for teoth; cf. O. Sax. tooth. = Du. tooth. = Icel. tooth, orig. tooth (= teoth). = Dan. tooth; Swed. tooth. = G. zahn; M. H. G. zahn, O. H. G. zand. = Goth. toothan. β. All from Teut. type TANTHU or TANTHI, Fick, iii. 113; cognate with Lat. dens (stem dent-), W. dant, Gk. δένδον (stem δένδ-), Lithuan. dantis, Skt. dasra, a tooth. And cf. Pers. dasāda, a tooth. γ. The Aryan base is either DANT or ADANT, pres. participial form from √ DA, to divide, or from √ AD, to eat; roots which are probably related. All turns upon the question whether, in Gk. δένδον, the initial d is unoriginal or original. See arguments in favour of the latter view in Curtius, l. 303. The orig. sense was either 'dividing,' i. e. cutting, or 'eating,' the former being taken as present participles. Der. tooth, verb, spelt tooth, Fittsbert, Husbandry, § 24, l. 2; tooth-ed; tooth-ache, Much Ado, iii. 2. 21; tooth-less, Prompt. Parv.; tooth-drummer, Prompt. Parv.; tooth-pick, All's Well, i. 1. 171; tooth-comes, La. daunt, asap, not an early word.

crest, top, + Swed. topp, a summit. + G. zopf, a tuft of hair, pig-tail, top of a tree; O. H. G. zopfa. β . All from Tent. type TOPA, a peak, top; allied to E. top, a spike for a cask; Fick, iii. 117. Cf. G. zoffen, a peg, tap, also a fir-cone; Norweg. tepp, a top, a bung (Aasen). Root unknown; we also find Gael. tepack, having a tuft or crest (but no sb. top); W. top, a top, also a stopple, topps, to top, to crest, also to stop up, toppys, to form a top; and perhaps W. topi, to gore with the horns, may be related; see remarks on Topper. Der. top, verb, Mach. iv. 3. 57; top-dressing; top-gallant-mast, for which Shak. has top-gallant, Romeo, ii. 4. 202; top-full, K. John, iii. 4. 180; top-less, Troil. i. 3. 152; top-mast, Temp. i. 1. 37; top-omit, Temp. i. 1. 7; top-most, really a double imper. form, see Aftermost; topple, to tumble, be top-heavy, and so fall headlong, Mach. iv. 1. 56. Also top-sy-turvy, q. v. Der. top (2), tip.

TOP (2), a child's toy. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, v. 1. 27. M. E. top, a child's toy, King Alimunder, 1727. As Dr. Schmidt observes, a top is an 'inverted conoid which children play with by setting it to turn on the point'; so called because sharpened to a top or point, and really the same word as the above. Cf. O. Du. top, a top, in both senses (Hexham); whence the G. topf is borrowed, the true G. form topf being only used in the same sense as Top (1).

TOPAZ, a precious stone. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. topas, whence Chaucer's Sir Topas; spelt topase, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 98, l. 172. = F. topase, 'topase, a stone'; Cot. = Lat. topasus, topasus, topasius, a topaz. = Gk. topazion, topazion, the yellow or oriental topaz. β . According to Pliny, b. xxxvii. c. 8, named from an island in the Red Sea called Topazos; which is very doubtful. Perhaps from its brightness, from \sqrt{TAP} , to shine, warm; see Tepid. Cf. Skt. topa, illuminating, topas, heat, topasmas, burning.

TOPPER, a great drinker. (F. or Ital.) 'Toppe, to drink briskly or lustily'; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'The jolly members of a topping club'; Butler, Epigram on a Club of Sots, l. 7. Certainly connected, as Wedgwood shews, with F. topper, to cover a stake, a term used in playing at dice; whence toppe! interj. (short for je toppe, lit. I accept your offer), used in the sense of good! agreed! well done! It came to be used as a term in drinking, though this only appears in Italian. 'According to Florio (not in ed. 1598) the same exclamation was used for the acceptance of a pledge in drinking. (He gives): toppe, a word among dicers, as much as to say, I hold it, done, throw! I also by good fellows when they are drinking; I'll pledge you'; Wedgwood. β . Apparently from the same base as E. top, to strike; from the striking of hands in making a bargain. Dies derives Span. topar, to butt, strike against, meet, accept a bet, Ital. intoppare, to meet or strike against an obstacle, from the Teut. base appearing in E. top, as if to strike with the head. Perhaps both explanations come to much the same thing; and top and top (as well as top) are formed from an imitative word meaning to top or to butt. See Top (1).

TOPIC, a subject of discourse or argument. (F., = L., = Gk.) Properly an adj.; Milton has 'a topic folio' = a common-place book; Arceopagica, ed. Hales, p. 40, l. 28, on which see the note. 'Topicks (topica), books that speak of places of invention, or that part of logic which treats of the invention of arguments'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Spelt topiches in Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. topique, 'topicka, books or places of logical invention'; Cot. = Lat. topica, a pl., the title of a work of Aristotle, of which a compendium is given by Cicero (White). = Gk. topikos, adj., local; also concerning topics or common-places. Aristotle wrote a treatise on the subject (ra topika). = Gk. topos, a place. Root uncertain. Der. topical (Blount), topical-ly; and see topo-graphy.

TOPOGRAPHY, the art of describing places. (F., = L., = Gk.) Spelt topographus in Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. topographie, 'the description of a place'; Cot. = Lat. topographia. = Gk. topographia, a description of a place; Strabo. = Gk. topos, crude form of topos, a place; and graphein, to describe. See Topic and Graph. Der. topographer, formed with E. suffix -er from Gk. topographos, a topographer, describer of places; topograph-ic, topograph-ic-ally.

TOPSYTURVY, upside down. (E.) There is no doubt that ey stands for side, as the word is sometimes so written, and we have a similar use of side in the corresponding phrase upside-down. In Stanhurst's tr. of Virgil, ed. Arber, we have top-turvy, p. 33, l. 13; topsy-turvy, p. 63, l. 25; and top-syd-turvy, p. 59, l. 23. Topside-turvy occurs twice (at least) in the play of Cornelia, printed in 1594, in Act I, and Act V; see Doddsley's Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, vol. v. p. 186, l. 1, p. 250, l. 15. Much earlier, we find 'He turneth all thynge topsy turvy'; Roy, Rede Me and Be Not Wroth, ed. Arber, p. 51, l. 25 (printed in 1538). β . In Trench, Eng. Past and Present, we are told that topsy turvy is a corruption from topside the other way; to which the author adds: 'There is no doubt of the fact; see Stanhurst's Ireland, p. 33, in Holinshed's Chronicles.' After searching in three editions of Holinshed, I find, in the reprint of 1808, at p. 33, that Stanhurst has the equivalent expression topside the other way; to which may be added that Richardson quotes topside tother way from Search's Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 23. γ . But this hardly proves the point; it only proves that such was a current explanation of the phrase in the time of Stanhurst and later; but Stanhurst may easily have erred in interpreting a phrase which already occurs as early as 1528. For myself, I can hardly believe in a corruption so violent, so uncalled for, and so clumsy. I would rather suppose that it means what it says, viz. that the topside is to be topsy or placed upon the ground; for, though this may seem unlikely at first, it must be remembered that, in old authors, the plural of top is topps, and the adjective might very well appear occasionally in the form toppy, just as we have loopy for loopy (Mach. v. 6. 1, first folio), and weepy for weepy. Cf. 'toppy, glebarius,' Prompt. Parv. (I prefer this to making toppy = toppy-way.) δ . If this be not admitted, we must accept the other explanation.

TORCH, a light formed of twisted tow dipped in pitch, a large candle. (F., = L.) M. E. torche, Florio and Blanchefur, l. 238. = F. torche, 'a link; also, the wreathed cloak, wrap, or wad of straw, layed by benches between their heads and the things which they carry on them'; Cot. Cf. Ital. torcia, a torch, torciera, to twist; Span. antorchar, to twist, antorchas, a torch = Low Lat. torcia, torcia, a torch; also torcia, occurring A. S. 1287; also torcia, &c. All various derivatives from Lat. torus, pp. of torquere, to twist; see Torture. A torch is simply 'a twist.' Der. torch-light. And see Tram.

TORMENT, anguish, great pain. (F., = L.) M. E. torment, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 148, l. 6, where it means 'a tempest'; also torment, K. Alimunder, 3869. = O. F. torment, 'torment'; Cot. Mod. F. torment. = Lat. tormentum, an instrument for hurling stones, an instrument of torture, torture. Formed with suffix -mentum from tor- (for tor-), base of torquere, to twist, hurl, throw; see Torture. Der. tormental, verb, M. E. tormental, Rob. of Glouc. p. 240, l. 14; tormental-ly; tormental-er, M. E. tormentaler, Chaucer, C. T. 15995; also tormental-er. And see tormental.

TORMENTILL, the name of a herb. (F., = L.) In Levinus. = F. tormentille, 'tormentilla'; Cot. Cf. Ital. tormentilla, 'tormentill,' Florio. Said to be so called because it relieved tooth-ache, an idea which is at least as old as the 16th century; see Littré. = O. F. torment, great pain, an ache; see Tormant.

TORNADO, a violent hurricane. (Span., = L.) 'Tornado (Span. torнадо, i. e. return, or turning about) is a sudden, violent, and forcible storm . . . at sea, so termed by the mariners'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. It is a sailor's word, and coined after the Span. fashion; there is no such word (in the same sense) either in Spanish or Portuguese. = Span. torнадо, a return; from torner, to return. Perhaps confused with Span. torneado, turned round, from torner, to turn round, whirl round. But both words are from Lat. torrens, to turn; see Turn.

TORPEDO, the cramp-fish; a kind of eel that produces numbness by communicating an electric shock. (L.) 'Like one whom a torpedo stupefies'; Drummond, sonnet 33. = Lat. torpedo, numbness; also, a torpedo, cramp-fish. = Lat. torpere, to be numb; see Torpid.

TORPID, sluggish, lit. numb. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. torpidus, benumbed, torpid. = Lat. torpere, to be numb, to be stiff. Perhaps the orig. sense was to grow fat and sluggish; cf. Lithuan. torpi, to thrive, grow fast, Gk. torpion, to feed, torpion, to fill full, satisfy, content. = \sqrt{TARP} , to satiate; cf. Skt. trip, to be sated, to enjoy, torpaya, to satisfy; Fick, i. 599. Der. torpid-ly, torpid-ness, torpid-ly; torp-or, Lat. torpor, numbness, inactivity; also torp-or-ent, from the stem of pres. part. of torpescere, to grow torpid, inceptive form of torpere; torp-or-ent. From the same root is sturdy.

TORRENT, a boiling, rushing stream. (F., = L.) In Shak. J. Cæs. i. 2. 107. = F. torrent, 'a torrent, land-flood.' = Lat. torrentium, acc. of torrens, hot, boiling, raging, impetuous; and as a sb. a torrent, raging stream. Orig. pres. part. of torrens, to parch, dry up; see Torrid. Der. torrent-gate, a trout; Babees Book, p. 173, note 4.

TORRID, parching, violently hot. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. torride, 'torrid, scorched, parched'; Cot. = Lat. torridus, parched. = Lat. torrens, to parch, dry up. β . Torrens stands for torrens, like torre for torus; from \sqrt{TARS} , to be dry; see TERRACE and Thirst. Cf. Gk. torrosos, to become dry. Der. torr-or-ent; torr-or-ent, to make dry, from F. torrefier, 'to scorch,' Cot.; torrefaction, from Lat. torrefactio, pp. of torreficere, to make dry, dry up.

itself. Tourniquet*, a turn-still (stic); also the gripe stick us'd by surgeons in cutting off an arm; Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. tourniquet, 'the pin of a kind of saddle, that which the saddler turns with his hand as he plays;' Cot. He refers, apparently, to a sort of hurdy-gurdy, of which the F. name was estille. Tourniquet is formed, with dimin. suffixes, from tourner, to turn; see TURN.

TOUSE, to pull about, tear or rend. (E.) In Shak. Mens. v. 313; much the same word as tease, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 760. Spenser has teuse in the sense to worry, to tease; F. Q. ii. 11. 31. M. E. teusem, properly to tease wool, Prompt. Parv. 'And what sheep, that is fall of wulle Upon his backe, they teuse and pulle;' Gower, C. A. l. 17, l. 7. See TEASE. Cf. Low G. tuaria, G. zamen, to touse. Der. teuse; spelt also teuser, as a dog's name.

TOUT, to look about, solicit custom. (E.) 'A touter is one who looks out for custom;' Wedgwood. We often shorten the sb. to tout. But tout is properly a verb, the same as M. E. totum, to peep, look about, P. Plowman's Crede, 142, 168, 339, 425. 'Totahille, Specula;' Prompt. Parv.; whence Tethill, a look-out hill. Also tout, to look, search, pry; Index to Parker Soc. publications. = A. S. totian, to project, stick out; hence, to peep out; 'M heafdu tótodan ut' = the heads projected out; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xvi, ed. Sweet, p. 104, l. 5. Allied to Icel. tota, the peak of a shoe, tóta, a peak, prominence; Dan. tude, a spout; Swed. tut, a point, nozzle; Du. tuit, a pipe, pike, felly of a wheel; O. Du. tuyt, tude, a tent, tuyt-pot, 'a pot or a cauldron with ears,' Hexham. The orig. sense was 'to project;' hence, to put out one's head, peep about, look all round; and finally, to tout for custom. Der. tout-er.

☞ Tout and touter are found in no dictionaries but those of very recent date; yet these words were in use before 1754. See S. Richardson, Correspondence, &c., vol. iii, p. 316; F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 334. Nares has touters, s. v. Tout. In no way connected with tout, verb, to blow a horn.

TOW (1), to tug or pull a vessel along. (E.) M. E. tozen, tozen; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, lii. 700; Layamon, 7536 (later text). The verb does not appear in A. S., but we find the sb. teow-linc, a tow-line, Wright's Voc. l. 57, l. 5. + O. Fric. toga, to pull about, + Icel. toga, to draw, pull; tog, a cord, a tow-rop. + M. H. G. togem, to tear, pluck, pull. β. Derived from A. S. tog, stem of togen, pp. of the strong verb tōhan, tēan, to pull, draw, which is cognate with G. ziehen, O. H. G. ziehen, Goth. ziehen, to draw. All from Teut. base TUH, to draw (Fick, lii. 132), answering to Aryan DUK, as seen in Lat. ducere, to draw; Fick, i. 624. ☞ F. touse, to tow, is of Teut. origin. Der. teow-hant, line, ropes; teow-aga, Blount's Nomenclicon, 1691. And see tie, tug.

TOW (2), the coarse part of flax or hemp. (E.) M. E. toe or toes, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 245; Tyrwhitt prints toes in Chaucer, C. T. 3772. = A. S. tow; it occurs in teow-linc, tow-line, fit for spinning. 'Textorium opus, teow-linc weave;' Wright's Voc. l. 26, col. 1; the next entries being 'Coites, distaf;' and 'Fama, spind;' i. e. distaff and spindle. Again, we find: 'teow-his of walle' = a tow-house or spinning-house of wool, id. sp. l. 11; see the foot-note. Tow was, in fact, orig. the working or spinning itself, the operation of spinning; whence it came to be applied to the material wrought upon. Hence we find gotama, implements (Grein); and the word is brought into close connection with E. toe and toes. See further under TOOL, Taw. The root is DU, to work; and the words toe, verb, and toe, sb., are from different roots. [The facts that toe is used for ropes, and that ropes are used for toeing, are wholly independent of each other in every way.] + O. Du. toes, or toesh, 'tows;' Hexham; toes, 'the instrument of a weaver;' toesum, 'to tance leather,' i. e. to tow; id. + Icel. tá, a tuft of wool for spinning; toes tá, to dress wool. (Quite distinct from Icel. tog, goat's hair.) Cf. Low G. toe, toes, implements; Dan. toes, fibre; also Goth. toes, a work, a thing made, tōjan, to make. Similarly G. toeg or toesh, tow, is merely the same word as toesh, s. work.

TOWARD, TOWARDS, in the direction of. (E.) As in other cases, towards is a later form, due to adding the adverbial suffix -ward (orig. the mark of a gen. case) to the shorter toward. In Layamon, 666, we have 'toward Brutus' = toward Brutus; in l. 515, we have 'him towards com' = he came towards him. The A. S. tōward is used as an adj. with the sense of 'future,' as in: 'on tōward woralde' = in the future world, in the life to come; Mark, x. 30. Hence was formed tōwardas, towards, used as a prep. with a dat. case, and commonly occurring after its case, as 'eow tōwardas' = towards you, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxii. § 1 (B. iv. met. 4). β. Compounded of tá, to (see TO); and ward in the sense of 'becoming' or 'tending to.' Ward only occurs as the latter element of several adjectives, such as afterward (lit. off-ward), absent; afterward, afterward; backward, present; forward, forward, in front; inward, inward; inward, netherward; upward, upward; upward, upward; backward, contrary; and in the

γ. Cognate with Icel. -vord, similarly used in the adj. stowardr, outward, and in other adjectives; also with M. H. G. -ward, whence G. vorwärts, forwards, and the like; also with Goth. -wairts, as in andwairts, present, 1 Cor. vii. 26; also allied to Lat. versus, towards, which is often used after its case. δ. And just as Lat. versus is from vertor, to turn, so A. S. ward is from the cognate verb weardjan (pt. I. weard), to become. See further under WORTH (s), verb. ε. We may note that ward can be separated from to, as in to you-ward = toward you, 2 Cor. xiii. 13; see Ward in The Bible Word-book, ed. Eastwood and Wright. Also that toward is properly an adj. in A. S., and commonly so used in later E., as opposed to forward; it is common in Shakespeare. Der. toward-ly, Timon, iii. 1. 37; towardness, towardliness. And (with the suffix -ward) after-ward, back-ward, east-ward, far-ward, fr-ward, homo-ward, hither-ward, in-ward, nether-ward, north-ward, out-ward, south-ward, to-ward (as above), thither-ward, up-ward, west-ward, with-ward.

TOWEL, a cloth for wiping the skin after washing. (F., = O. H. G.) M. E. toewalle, Florus and Blanchefleur, 363; toewal, Chaucer, C. T. 14663. = F. toewalle, 'a towel;' Cot. O. F. toewalle, toewille; Low Lat. toewale; Span. toewille; Ital. toewaglia. All of Teut. origin. = O. H. G. toewalla, toewalla, M. H. G. toewale, G. toewalle, a towel. = O. H. G. toewahan, M. H. G. toewahan, to wash + Icel. þúð (pp. þúðjan), to wash; Dan. taa + A. S. wealdan (contr. for wealdan), to wash + Goth. toewahan, to wash. And cf. Du. doewal, a towel, doewal, a clout; whence prov. E. doewal, a clout, coarse rag for rubbing. β. All from Teut. base THWAH, to wash; Fick, lii. 142. Der. toewal-ing, stuff for making towels.

TOWER, a lofty building, fort, or part of a fort. (F., = L.) Spelt tur in the A. S. Chron. an. 1097. = O. F. tur, later tour, 'a tower;' Cot. = Lat. turrem, acc. of turris, a tower. + Gk. τόπος, τόπος, a tower, bastion. We also find Gael. turr, a hill or mountain of an abrupt or conical form, a lofty hill, eminence, mound, tower, castle; Irish tur, a castle; W. tur, a tower; cf. prov. E. (Devon.) tur, a conical hill, a word of Celtic origin; whence A. S. tor. 'Scopulum, turr;' Wright's Voc. l. 38, col. 1. If the Gael. turr be not borrowed from the Latin, it is interesting as seeming to take us back to a more primitive use of the word, viz. a hill suitable for defence. Der. tower, verb; tower-ed, tower-ing, tower-y.

TOWN, a large village. (E.) The old sense is simply 'enclosure;' it was often applied (like Lowland Sc. toon) to a single farm-house with its outbuildings, &c. M. E. town, Wyclif, Matt. xxii. 5. = A. S. tūn, Matt. xxii. 5; where the Lat. text has villam. The orig. sense is 'fence;' whence the derived verb tūnan, to enclose. + Du. tuin, a fence, hedge, + Icel. tún, an enclosure, a homestead, a dwelling-house. + G. maun, O. H. G. zūn, a hedge. β. All from Teut. type TUNA, a hedge, enclosure; Fick, lii. 132. Cognate words appear in Irish and Gael. tuin, a fortress, W. tuin, a hill-fort (whence tuinn, a town); this Celtic word is conspicuous in many old place-names, such as Augusto-tuinn, Camulo-tuinn, &c. Perhaps allied to Irish tuir, firm, strong, and Lat. tuus, hard, lasting; see Dura. Der. town-clerk, -crier, -hall, -house, -ship, -talk; also townsmen (= town's men), town-folk (= town's folk). Also town-ship, Sir T. Wyt, Sat. i. 4.

TOXICOLOGY, the science which investigates poisons. (Gk.) Modern; not in Johnson. Coined from Gk. τοξικός, poison for sneezing arrows with; and -λογία, from λόγος, a discourse, λόγος, to say (see LOGIO). Τοξικός is neut. of τοξικός, adj., belonging to arrows or archery; from τόξον, a bow, lit. a piece of shaped wood. = TAKS, extended from TAK, to cut, hew, shape; cf. Skt. taksh, to cut. See TECHNICAL. Der. toxicology, toxicologist.

TOY, a plaything; also, as a verb, to trifle, dally. (Du.) 'Any silk, any thread, any toys for your head;' Wint. Tale, iv. 2. 316. 'On my head no toy But was her pattern;' Two Noble Kinsmen, l. 2. This is only a special sense. It seems to correspond to Du. toel, attire, but this is a mod. Du. word, which may be taken from the E. toy itself. The true Du. word is tug, as will appear. Palgrave has: 'Toy, a tryell;' also, 'I toys, or tryell with one, I deale not substantially with hym; I toys, I playe with one; He doth but toys with you, It no fut que se jouer avecques eux.' Not in M. E. = Du. toig, tools, utensils, implements, stuff, refuse, trash; which answers to Palgrave's definition as 'a trifle.' The sense of plaything occurs in the comp. speeltoig, playthings, child's toys; lit. 'stuff to play with.' Sewel gives: 'Speeltoig, play-tools, toys;' also: 'Op de toy houde, to amuse; lit. to hold in trifling, toy with one; also: 'om toig op zy, silver chains with a knife, canars, pincushion, &c. on women wear,' which explains the Shakespearean usage. + Low G. tög, used in all the senses of G. soig. + Icel. toig, gear + Dan. tøj, stuff, things, gear, dømt tøj, stuff and someone, trash; whence legotøj, a plaything, a toy, from legs (= prov. E. laish), to play. + Swed. tyg, gear, stuff, trash. † O. weg, stuff, matter, materials, lumber, trash; whence spolung, toys; M. H. G. was, stuff, materials. β. The orig. sense was probably 'spoil'; hence materials for one's own use, as well as stuff, gear, and trash. The various forms can all be deduced from Teut. base TUH (Aryan DUK, as in Lat. ducere), to draw, used in the special sense of stripping off clothes. Cf. G. die Haut über die Ohren ziehen, to flay, to skin, Icel. taqa af, to draw shoes and stockings of a person. In any case, the form of the word shows the base clearly enough; see Tow (1), Tug. ¶ The M. E. toggen is certainly to tug, as far as the form is concerned; it may not be wrong to translate toggen by 'toy' in St. Marharet, ed. Cockayne, p. 110; but this is rather a pun than an etymology, and must not be pressed; it leads back, however, to the same root. The pronunciation of ey in toy is an attempt at imitating the pronunciation of Du. tuig, just as hey, a sloop, answers to the Flemish hai; see Hoy (1). Der. toy-ish.

TRACE (1), a track left by drawing anything along, a mark left, a footprint. (F., -L.) M. E. traces, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 7771; Fricke of Conscience, 4349. -F. trass, 'a trace, footing, print of the foot; also, a path or tract;' Cot. Cf. Ital. traccia, a trace, track; Span. traza, a first sketch, outline. A verbal sb., from F. trasser, verb, 'to trace, follow, pursue;' of which another form was trasser, 'to delineate, score, trace out;' Cot. Cf. Ital. tracciare, to trace, devise; Span. trazar, to plan, sketch. These verbs are all formed (as if from a Low Lat. *trahere) from trahere, pp. of trahere, to draw, orig. to drag with violence. Supposed to be related to Gk. θραύω (thrauo), to trouble, θραύω, a cracking or crushing. - of TARGH, to tear or pull; Fick, l. 508. ¶ Not related to E. draw. Der. trass, verb, M. E. trass, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 54 (less common than the sb.), directly from F. trasser, to trace, as above; trasser, trassable, trassing; trass-er, a coined word, in rather late use. Also (from Lat. trahere) trass (1), trass (2), trass-able, trass-ible, trass-ness, trass-ate, trass-ive, trass-ment, trass-ment; also ab-trass, at-trass, con-trass, dis-trass, en-trass, pre-trass, re-trass, sub-trass; mal-trass, par-trail, par-tray or par-tray, re-trass.

TRACE (2), one of the straps by which a vehicle is drawn. (F., -L.) Traces, horse harness, trays; Palgrave. M. E. traise; Trays, horsey harness, Tenda, traxus, restis, trahale; Prompt. Parv. Evidently from the O. F. trays, cited by Palgrave, which is probably a pl. form and equivalent to F. traits, pl. of trait. At any rate, Cotgrave gives as one sense of trait (which he spells traic) that of 'a team-trace or trait, the cord or chain that runs between the horses, also the draught-tree of a caroch.' I suppose that trass = F. traits, and that traces is a double plural. See Trait.

TRACHEA, the wind pipe. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1607. = Lat. trachea; also trachia. The latter form is given in White. = Gk. τραχία, lit. 'the rough,' from the rings of gristle of which it is composed; τραχία is merely the fem. of τραχίς, rough, rugged, harsh. Allied to τράπηλον, perf. tense of θραύω, to disturb. See Trace (1). Der. trach-al.

TRACK, a path, course. (F., -Teut.) Confused with tract in old authors; also with trass both in old and modern authors. Mishou has: 'A trass, or trass;' Cotgrave explains F. trac by 'a track, tract, or trace.' In Shak. Rich. II, iii. 3. 66, Rich. III, v. 3. 20, the folios have tract for track; and in Timon, l. 1. 50, the word trass is used in the sense of trass. These words require peculiar care, because trass and tract are really connected, but track is not of Lat. origin at all, and therefore quite distinct from the other two words. = F. trac, 'a track, tract, or trace, a beaten way or path, a trade or course.' The sense of 'beaten track' is the right one; we still use that very phrase. Of Teut. origin. = O. Du. trac, Du. trak, a draught; from trahen, to draw, pull, tow, travel, march, &c., O. Du. trahen, 'to draw, pull, or hale,' Hezham; also M. H. G. trahen, to draw, a secondary verb formed from the strong O. H. G. verb trahen, trahen, to scrape, shove, draw. As the last is a strong verb, we see that track is quite independent of the Lat. trahere. Der. track, verb; track-less, Cowley, The Muse, l. 25.

TRACT (1), continued duration, a region. (L.) Often confused both with trass and track; it is related to the former only; see Trace. 'This in tracts of time made hym welthy;' Fabian, Chron. c. 56. = Lat. tractus, a drawing out; the course of a river, a tract or region. = Lat. tractus, pp. of trahere, to draw; see Trace (1). And see TRACTABLE.

TRACT (2), a short treatise. (L.) An abbreviation for tractate, which is now little used. 'Tractate, a treatise;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. tractatum, acc. of tractatus, a handling, also a treatise, tractate, or tract. See TRACTABLE. Der. tract-er-us, one who holds opinions such as were propounded in 'Tracts for the Times,' of which 95 numbers were published, A. D. 1833-1841; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates.

TRACTABLE, easily managed, docile. (L.) In Shak. Hen. IV, iii. 2. 194. = Lat. tractabilis, manageable, easily wrought. = Lat. tractare, to handle, frequent of trahere (pp. tractus), to draw. See Trace (1). Der. tractabil-ly, tractable-ness, tractabili-ty. Also (from Lat. pp. tractus) tract-ive, that may be drawn out; tract-ion, from F. traction, 'a draught or extraction,' Cot.; tract-ive, drawing or pulling; tract-or (see Webster). Also tract-ate, for which see TRACT (2).

TRADE, way of life, occupation, commerce. (E.) 'Properly that path which we tread, and thus the ever recurring habit and manner of our life;' Trench, Select Glossary. It once meant, literally, 'a path'; 'A common trade, to pass through Priams house;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 593. Not an old form; the M. E. words are trad and tred, both in the sense of footmark, Amers. Rivis, p. 380, note g. All from A. S. tradan, to tread; see Tread. Der. trademan, i. e. trades-man, one who follows a trade; trades-woman; trades-union (= either trades' union or trades' union). Also trade, vb., trad-ed, K. Jobn, iv. 3. 209; trad-or, 1 Hen. IV, l. 3. 141. Also trad-wind, a wind blowing in a constant direction, formed from the phr. to blow trade = to blow always in the same course; 'the wind blowing trade,' Hackluyt's Voyages, iii. 249 (R.); the word tradewind is in Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, last line but one. ¶ I see no reason for confusing trade with F. traite (Cotgrave), Span. trata, traffic; see Trot.

TRADITION, the handing down to posterity of unwritten practices or opinions. (L.) M. E. traditionem, Wyclif, Col. ii. 8. Formed directly from Lat. traditio, a surrender, delivery, tradition (Col. ii. 8). [The F. form of the word gave us our word tradition.] = Lat. tradit-us, pp. of tradere, to deliver; see TRADITOR. Der. tradition-al. Doublet, traison.

TRADUCE, to defame. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 175. In the Prologue to the Golden Bole, traduce occurs in the sense of traducere, and traducere is translation. = Lat. traducere, to lead across, transfer, derive; also, to divulge, convict, prove guilty (whence our use to defame). = Lat. tra-, put for trans, across; and ducere, to lead; see Trans and Duke. Der. traduc-or.

TRAFFIC, to trade, exchange, barter. (F., -L.) In Shak. Timon, i. 1. 158; Macb. iii. 5. 4; we have also the sb. traffic, split traffice in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 11. 9. = F. traffiquer, 'to traffick, trade;' Cot. We find also F. traffique, sb. 'traffic;' id. Cf. Ital. trafficare, to traffic, manage (trafficare in Florio); Span. traffica, traffigar; Port. traffear, traffegar, to traffic, to cheat. Also Ital. traffico (traffico in Florio), Span. traffico, traffage, traffic, careful management; Port. traffico, traffega, traffic. β. Origin uncertain; but almost surely Latin. Dies compares Port. traffegar, to decant, to pour out from one vessel to another, traffega, a pouring out or decanting, and remarks that the O. Port. traffegar also had the sense of traffic, and that the Catalan traffeg, traffic, also meant a decanting. If the two are identical, the accent must have been upon the preposition, which is exceptional. He explains O. Port. traffegar, to decant (corrupted to traffegar in Spanish by change of f to h and subsequent loss) from Lat. tra- (trans), across, and a supposed Low Lat. traffegere, to exchange, from Lat. traffere, change; this verb actually appears in the Span. traffega, a time, a turn (= Low Lat. traffegere); and the change from Lat. traffegere to F. traffegere appears in F. traffegere, certainly derived from traffegere. This seems the best solution; the sense 'to change across' suits both 'traffic' and 'decant;' see Trans and Viozar. γ. Scheler suggests Lat. traffegere (= traffere), and the common suffix -egere, due to traffegere, to make. But traffegere would rather produce a F. form traffier, and it is hardly an intelligible word. Der. traffice, sb.; traffice-or, Merch. Ven. i. 1. 12.

TRAGEDY, a species of drama of a lofty and mournful cast. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. tragedia; see Chaucer's definition of it, C. T. 13979. = F. tragedie, 'a tragedy;' Cot. = Lat. tragedia. = Gk. τραγῆδία, a tragedy. 'There is no question that tragedy is the song of the goat; but why the song of the goat, whether because a goat was the prize for the best performance of that song in which the germs of the future tragedy lay, or because the first actors were dressed, like satyrs, in goat-skins, is a question which has stirred abundant discussion, and will remain unsettled to the end;' Trench, Study of Words, lect. v. A third theory (yet more probable) is that a goat was sacrificed at the singing of the song; a goat, as being the spoiler of vines, was a fitting sacrifice at the feasts of Dionysus. In any case, the etymology is certain. = Gk. τραγῆδός, lit. a goat-singer, a tragic poet and singer. = Gk. τραγῆς, a he-goat; and ἔδω, a singer, contracted from ἔδοξο; see Ode. The Gk. τραγῆς means 'a nibbler;' cf. τραγῆς, to gnaw, nibble; see Trout. Der. tragedi-an, All's Well, iv. 3. 299, apparently a coined word, not borrowed from French. Also trag-er, 1 Hen. IV, l. 1. 61, from F. tragedier, 'tragicall, tragick,' Cot., Lat. tragicus, Gk. τραγικός, goatish, tragic, from τραγῆς, a goat. Hence trago-al, al-ly, al-ness.

TRAIL, to draw along the ground, to haul by tracking. (F., -L.) M. E. tralen. In Wyclif, Esther, xv. 7, later version, we find: 'but the tother of the seruantemis suede the lady, and bar vp the clothes stränge down in to the erthe; where, for stränge, some MSS. have stränge, and the earlier version has stränge = stränge. Cf. 'Branchis de trale'; Palladius, iii. 289, p. 71. 'Troylys as cloyya, Segmento.' Prompt. Parv. We have also M. E. trale, sb. 'Troyle, or trayne of a clothe.' Prompt. Parv. So also: 'Troyle, sledge [sledge], traha; to Troyle, trahere.' Levins, ed. 1570. John de Garlande, in the 13th cent., gives a list of 'instrumenta mulieribus convenientia'; one of these is trahale, of which he says: 'Trahale dicitur a traho, Gallice trahil.' Wright's Voc. i. 134. Palgrave has: 'I trayle, lyke as a gowne dothe behynde on the grounds; 'also 'I trayle, as one trayleth an other behynde or at a horse-tayle.' = F. trailer, 'to wind a yarn; also, to traile a deer, or hunt him upon a cold scent.' Cot. = O. F. trahil, in John de Garlande, as above; it clearly means a reel to wind yarn on, as it is mentioned with other implements for spinning. = Low Lat. trahale, a reel, as above; it may doubt also meant a sledge, as shown by E. trayle in Levins. Cf. Lat. traha, a sledge; trahula, a sledge (White); Low Lat. traha, a harrow, trahere, to harrow. We may also note Low Lat. trahere, answering to F. traher, E. train. It is clear that trahil and trahere are both derivatives from Lat. trahere, to draw or drag along; see Trace, Train. ¶ The mod. F. traille is a ferry-boat dragged across a river by help of a rope; it seems much better to connect this with E. trail than to suppose it to stand for trahille, from the verb trahere, 'to rend or tear in pieces,' as Cotgrave explains it. However this may be, the E. trail is certainly independent of traher and trahere. Cf. Du. traylen, 'to draw, or dragge a boate with a cord,' Hexham; borrowed (like Du. traya, a train) from French.

TRAILBASTON, a law-term. (F., = L.) See Blount's Nomenclicon, ed. 1691, and Spelman. There were justices of trailbaston, appointed by Edw. I. 'The common people in those days called them tray-baston, quod sonat trahere bastonem.' Blount. Roquefort divides the word as tray-le-baston. It would seem that the usual derivation from trahere is wrong, and that the word is compounded of O. F. tray (= Lat. trahere, deliver up, take away); le, def. art.; and O. F. baston, a wand of office, for which see Baton. The object was to remedy injustice by depriving unjust officers of their offices; 'many were accused and redeemed their offences by greuous fines.' Fabyan, Chron. an. 1300. (Trail-baston explains nothing) For O. F. traya, to take away, see Bartsch, Christ. Franquise, col. 249, l. 7.

TRAIN, the hinder part of a trailing drum, a retinue, series, line of gun-powder, line of carriages; as a verb, to trail, to allure, educate, discipline. (F., = L.) M. E. train, sb., spelt troyn, with the sense of plot, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 205, l. 23; troyns, id. p. 205, l. 23; 'troyn and troyns,' Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 4193; M. E. troynen, verb, to entice, id. 1683. = F. train, m., 'a great man's retinue, the train or hinder part of a beast; . . . work, dealing, trade, practice.' Cot. Also trains, f., 'a sled, a drag or dray without wheels, a drag-net,' id. Also traher, verb, 'to traile, drag, draw;' id. O. F. trahis, trahis, a train of men; trahere, trahere, verb. Low Lat. trahere, to drag; occurring A. D. 1268. Evidently extended from Lat. trahere, to draw; see Trace, Trail. Der. trahere; trahere, i. e. trahere's hand, a band of trained men, Cowper, John Gilpin, st. 1, and used by Dryden and Clarendon (Todd); trahere-or. ¶ But not trahere-oil.

TRAIN-OIL, oil procured from the blubber or fat of whales by boiling. (Hybrid; Du. and F., = L., = Gk.) Spelt trahere-oyle, Hackluyt's Voyages, l. 477, last line; trahere oyle, Arnold's Chron. p. 236. In Hexham's Du. Dict., ed. 1658, we find: 'Trahere, trahere-oile made of the fat of whales.' Also: 'trahere, a tear; liquor pressed out by the fire.' Cf. mod. Du. trahere, a tear; trahere, train-oil. We thus see that the lit. sense of trahere is 'tear,' then, a drop of liquor forced out by fire; and lastly, we have trahere-oil, or oil forced out by boiling. Cf. Dan. and Swed. trahere, train-oil, blubber, G. trahere, all borrowed from Dutch; cf. G. trahere, a tear, also a drop exuding from a vine when cut. So also Low G. trahere, train-oil; trahere, a tear; very well explained in the Bremen Wörterbuch. Similarly, we use E. tear in the sense of 'a drop' of some balsams and resins, &c. β. The Du. trahere is closely allied to E. tear, and is the only form used in Dutch; the G. trahere is really a pl. form, due to M. H. G. trahere, pl. of trahere, a tear, closely allied to M. H. G. trahere (put for trahere), a tear; see Tear (2).

¶ It thus appears that trahere-oil is a tautological expression; accordingly, we find trahere, train-oil, in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775.

TRAIT, a feature. (F., = L.) Given in Johnson, with the remark 'scarcely English.' = F. trait, 'a draught, line, streak, stroke,' Cot. He also gives the spelling traist. = F. trait, formerly also traist, pp. of trahere, to draw. = Lat. trahere, to draw; see Trace.

TRAITOR, one who betrays, a deceiver. (F., = L.) M. E. trahere, spelt trahere. Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 61, l. 112; trahere, O. Eng. Homilies, l. 379, l. 22. = O. F. trahere, trahere, a traitor. = Lat. trahere, acc. of trahere, one who betrays. = Lat.

trahere-m, pp. of trahere, to hand over, deliver, betray. = Lat. trahere, for trahere, across, over; and -dere, put for dare, to give; (hence trahere, pt. t., corresponds to dedit, I gave). See Trans- and Data. Der. trahere-m, 1 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 173; trahere-m, 1 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 184. From the same source are trahere-m, trahere-m, trahere-m.

TRAJECTORY, the curve which a body describes when projected. (F., = L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Suggested by F. trahere, 'casting, thrusting, sending, transporting;' Cot. Formed as if from a Lat. trahere-m, belonging to projection; formed from trahere-m, pp. of trahere (trahere), to throw, cast, or fling over or across. = Lat. trahere, across; and trahere, to cast. See Trans- and Jot. Der. trahere, which is certainly the right reading for trahere in Merch. of Ven. iii. 4. 53; from F. trahere, 'a ferry, a passage over.' Cot., which from Lat. trahere, a passage over. Shakespeare would have written trahere, which was made into trahere, a word that belongs to no language whatever.

TRAM, a coal-wagon, a carriage for passengers running on iron rails. (Scand.) There have been frequent enquiries about this word; see Notes and Queries, 3 Ser. v. 128, xii. 229, 276, 358; 4 Ser. xii. 299, 420; 6 Ser. ii. 225, 356. A tram is an old Northern word for a coal-wagon, esp. such a one as ran upon rails. In N. and Q., 2 Ser. xii. 276, J. N. quoted an Act of Parliament for the year 1794, for the construction of 'an iron tram-road, tram-road, or railway' between Cardiff and Marthyr Tydvil; and in N. and Q., 6 S. ii. 356, A. Wallis stated that 'tramways were in use in Derbyshire before 1790; one of planks and log-sleepers was laid between Shipley colliery and the wharf near Newmansley, a distance of 1½ miles, and was discontinued in the above year.' About A. D. 1800, a Mr. Benjamin Outram made certain improvements in connection with railways for common vehicles, which gave rise to the silly fiction (ever since industriously circulated) that tram-road is short for Outram road, in ignorance of the fact that the accent alone is sufficient to show that Outram, if shortened to one syllable, must become Out rather than ram or tram. Besides which, Mr. Outram was not a coal-wagon; yet Bruckett's Glossary (3rd ed. 1846) explains that a tram is the Northern word for 'a small carriage on four wheels, so distinguished from a sledge. It is used in coal-mines to bring the coals from the hewers to the crane.' The word is clearly the same as Lowland Scotch tram, '(1) the shaft of a cart or carriage of any kind, (2) a beam or bar,' Jamieson. Cf. prov. E. tram, a small milk bench (Haliwell); which was orig. a block of wood. It was prob. used first of the shaft of a small carriage, and then applied to the small carriage itself, esp. such a one as was pushed or drawn by men & boys in coal-pits. This notion is borne out by the cognate Low G. trahere, a word particularly used of the handles of a wheel-barrow or the handles by which a kind of sledge was pushed; Bremen Wörterbuch, ed. 1771. In N. and Q., 6 S. ii. 498, J. H. Clark notes that 'the amending of the highway or tram from the Weste ende of Bridgegat, in Barnard Castle' occurs in a will dated 1555; see Serates Soc. Publications, vol. xxxviii, p. 37. Here a tram prob. means a log-road. The word is Scandinavian. = Swed. dial. trahere, a log, stock of a tree; also a summer-sledge (summer-sledge); also trahere, trahere (Rietz); O. Swed. trahere, trahere, a piece of a large tree, cut up into logs. The orig. sense is clearly a beam or bit of cut wood, hence a shaft of a sledge or cart, or even the sledge itself. Cf. Low G. trahere, a balk, beam, esp. one of the handles of a wheel-barrow, as above; also O. Du. trahere, a beam (obolets); Hexham. Also O. H. G. trahere, trahere, a beam, once a common word; see Grimm's Dict. ii. 1331, 1332. The last form may account for the variation trahere, in the Act of Parliament cited above; and it has been already observed that a trahere or trahere might also be explained as a log-road.

β. The comparison of Swed. trahere with Du. trahere shows that the original Low G. initial letter must have been tr; which is proved by the Icel. trahere, lit. 'a beam-hawk,' a post. word for a ship. γ. The Swed. dial. trahere (above) further resembles G. trahere, hump, stump, end, trahere, fragment, and suggests a connection with Thrum (1). If so, the orig. sense was 'end'; then fragment, bit, lump, log, &c. Der. trahere-m, trahere-m.

TRAMMEL, a net, shackle, anything that confines or restrains. (F., = L.) M. E. trahere, 'grete nette for fischeyng;' Prompt. Parv. Spenser has trahere, nets for the hair, F. Q. ii. 6. 15. = F. trahere, 'a trammel, or a net for partridges.' Cot. Cf. F. trahere (answering to an older form trahere), 'a kind of drag-net for fish, a trammel net for fowls;' this comes still nearer to Spenser's trahere. Cf. Ital. trahere, a drag-net, trammel; Port. trahere, Span. trahere, a trammel or net; mod. F. trahere, trahere. = Low Lat. trahere, trahere, a trammel, occurring in the Lex Salica, ed. Hassels and Kern, xxvii. 20, col. 154; cf. coll. 158, 161. The word has numerous other forms, such as trahere, trahere, trahere, &c., in other texts of the Lex Salica. Kern remarks: 'trahere, &c. is a diminutive, more or less Latinized. The Frankish word must have differed but slightly, if at all, from the Drenthian (N. Saxon) trawle (for trawke, trawke), a trammel. Both the English and Drenthian word point to a simplex trami or tramis; col. 501. This assumes the word to be Teutonic, yet brings us back to no intelligible Teut. base; nor does it account for the Ital. form, which requires the longer Low Lat. tramacula or tromacula. Dies takes it to be Latin, and explains tramacula from Lat. tri-, thrice, three times, and macula, a mesh or net, as if it meant treble-mesh or treble-net. He remarks that a similar explanation applies to Trellis, q. v. [This account is accepted, without question, by Scheler and Littré.] It is to be further noted that, according to Dies, the Piedmontese trimag is explained by Zalli to mean a fish-net or bird-net made of three layers of net of different-sized meshes; and that Cherubini and Patriarchi make similar remarks concerning the Milanese trimag and Venetian trimag. These forms are surely something more than mere diminutives. γ. As to Lat. tri-, see THREE; as to Lat. macula, see MAT (1). The Span. trasmalla is an altered form, as if from trasm maculam, across the net, which gives but little sense.

TRAMONTANE, foreign. (F., = Ital., = L.) The word is properly Italian, and only intelligible from an Italian point of view; it was applied to men who lived beyond the mountains, i. e. in France, Switzerland, Spain, &c. It came to us through the French, and was at first spelt trasmontain. The Italians account all trasmontain doctors but apothecaries in comparison of themselves; Fuller, Worthies, Hertfordshire (R.) = F. trasmontain, 'northerly'; Cot. = Ital. trasmontano, pl. trasmontani, 'those folks that dwell beyond the mountains'; Florio. = Lat. trasmontanus, beyond the mountains. = Lat. trans, beyond; and mont, base of mons, a mountain; see Trans- and Mountain.

TRAMP, to tread, stamp. (E.) M. E. trampen. 'Trampelyn, trampyn, Tero'; Prompt. Parv. 'He trampeth with the feet'; Wyclif, Prov. vi. 13. Not in A. S., but prob. E., being found in G. and Low G. as well as in Scand. Cf. Low G. and G. trampen, trampeln, to stamp; Dan. trampe, Swed. trampa, to tread, trample on. From the Teut. base TRAP, to tread, occurring in the Goth. strong verb antrampjan. 'Managai antramp ina' = the multitude pressed upon him, lit. trampled on him, Luke, v. 3. β. This is a nasalized form of the Teut. base TRAP, to tread, occurring in Du. treppen, to tread upon, to trample. Low G. treppen, to tread, Swed. trappa, a pair of stairs, G. trappe, a flight of steps; also in E. Trip, q. v. This base appears in the same form TRAP even in Gk. τραπέζω, to tread grapes, Homer, Odyss. vii. 125; and in Lithuan. tripti, trypti, to stamp; see Fick, i. 604. These words may, I think, safely be considered as cognate with the G. forms, as the letter p presents numerous exceptions to Grimm's law, and often remains unchanged. γ. We may also note a probable connection with the Teut. base TRAD, to tread; see Tread. Der. tramp, sb., a journey on foot; tramp-er, a vagrant (see Johnson); also tramp, a shortened familiar form of tramp-er, both forms being given in Grose's Dict of the Vulgar Tongue, 1790. And see tramp-le.

TRAMPLE, to tread under foot. (E.) M. E. trampelen; Prompt. Parv. The frequentative of TRAMP, q. v. The sense is, accordingly, 'to keep on treading upon.' Cf. Low G. trampeln, G. trampeln, to trample, stamp; from Low G. and G. trampen, to tramp or stamp.

TRAM-ROAD, TRAM-WAY; see Tram.

TRANCE, catalepsy, ecstasy, loss of self-consciousness. (F., = L.) M. E. trance, Chaucer, C. T. 1573. = F. trance, 'extreme fear, dread, . . . a trance or swoon'; Cot. A verbal sb. from the O. F. trancer, of which Cot. gives the pp. trandi, 'fallen into a trance or swoon, astonished, amazed, half dead.' = Lat. transire, to go or pass over; whence Ital. transire, 'to go sooth, pass over'; . . . also to fall in a swoon, to dye or gaspe the last'; Florio. [This shows that transire came to have the sense of 'die' or 'swoon'; similarly the O. F. trampere (our trampen) commonly means 'to die.' = Lat. trans, across; and ire, to go; see Transit. β. This explanation is Scheler's; it seems more likely than that of Dies, that trance was formed directly from Lat. transitus; however, it comes at last to much the same thing. Der. en-trance (1). Also trans-ed, K. Lear, v. 3. 218.

TRANQUIL, quiet, peaceful. (F., = L.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 248. [The sb. tranquillity is in much earlier use; we find M. E. tranquillite, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 4. l. 1113.] = F. tranquille, 'calm'; Cot. = Lat. tranquillus, calm, quiet, still. = Lat. trans, for trans, beyond, hence surpassingly; and the base qui or ci- (h), to rest, so that -quillus means 'resting' or lying down. This base is from κλ, to lie, as in Gk. κείω, I lie down, Skt. gā, to lie down. See Trans- and Quiet or Cemetery. Der. tranquill-ly; tranquill-ty, from F. tranquillité, 'tranquillity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. tranquillitatem. Also tranquill-iss, Thomson, Castle of Indolence, c. li. st. 19.

TRANS-, beyond, across, over. (L.) Lat. trans-, prefix; also as prep. trans, beyond. Trans is the pres. part. of a verb *trans, to cross, go beyond, only occurring in in-trans, ex-trans, post-trans. = TAR, to cross; cf. Skt. tri, to pass over, cross, fulfil, causal trāya, to bring over. β. The comp. suffix -ter (in Latin) is prob. from the same root; cf. pra-ter, sub-ter, in-ter-ior, &c. In composition, trans- becomes trans- in tran-qui, trans-act, trans-cribe, trans-sept, trans-spore, trans-substantiv; and tra- in tra-dition, tra-duce, tra-jectory, tra-montane (though the last is only an Ital., not a Latin spelling); also in tra-vers, tra-vesty.

TRANSACTION, the management of an affair. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. transaction, 'a transaction, accord, agreement'; Cot. = Lat. transactionem, acc. of transactio, a completion, an agreement. = Lat. transactus, pp. of transagere, to drive or thrust through, also to settle a matter, complete a business. = Lat. trans, across, through; and agere, to drive; see Trans- and Act. Der. transact-er, in Cot. to translate F. transacteur, but perhaps directly from Lat. transactor, a manager. Hence was evolved the verb transact, Milton, P. L. vi. 186.

TRANS-ALPINE, beyond the Alps. (F., = L.) 'Transalpine parts'; Beaum. and Fletcher, The Concoomb, i. 1. = F. transalpin, 'foreign'; Cot. = Lat. transalpinus, beyond the Alps. = Lat. trans, beyond; and Alp-, stem of Alpes, the Alps; with suffix -inus. See Trans- and Alp. γ. So also trans-atlantic, a coined word, 'used by Sir W. Jones in 1783; see Memoirs, &c., p. 217'; F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 275.

TRANSCEND, to surmount, surpass. (L.) In Gawain Douglas, Palace of Honour, pt. ii. st. 18. = Lat. transcendere, to climb over, surpass. = Lat. trans, beyond; and scendere, to climb. See Trans- and Boan. Der. transcend-ent, used by Cot. to translate F. transcendant; transcend-ent-ly, transcendence, All's Well, ii. 3. 40, from Lat. sb. transcendentia; transcend-ent-ial, given as a math. term in Phillips, ed. 1706; transcend-ent-ial-ly, ism, -ist.

TRANSCRIBE, to copy out. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1637; and in Cot., to translate F. transcrire. = Lat. transcribere (pp. transcriptus), to transfer in writing, copy from one book into another. = Lat. trans, across, over; and scribere, to write; see Trans- and Scribe. Der. transcrib-er; transcript, in Minsheu, from Lat. transcriptum; transcript-ion.

TRANSEPT, the part of a church at right angles to the nave. (L.) Lat. 'a cross-enclosure.' Not an old word; and coined. Oddly spelt transsept in Wood's Fasti Oxonienses, vol. ii. (R.); of which the first edition appeared in 1691-s. = Lat. trans, put for trans, across; and septum, an enclosure. Septum is from sepius, pp. of sepiere or seperire, to enclose; which is from sepius, a hedge. β. Sepius is cognate with Gk. σπίς, a pen, fold, enclosure, which is allied to σέρω (fut. σέξω), to pack, to fill full. See Trans- and Sumpter.

TRANSFER, to transport, convey to another place. (L.) In Shak. Sonnet 137. Cot. gives F. pp. transfert, 'transferred'; but the E. word was prob. directly from Lat. transfere, to transport, transfer. = Lat. trans, across; and ferre, to carry, cognate with E. bear. See Trans- and Bear (1). Der. transfer-able, also spelt transfer-ible (quite needless); transfer-ance, transfer-er.

TRANSFIGURE, to change the appearance of. (F., = L.) M. E. transfigure, Chaucer, C. T. 1107. = F. transfigurer, 'to transfigure'; Cot. = Lat. transfigurare, to change the figure of. = Lat. trans, across (hence implying change); and figura, figure, outward appearance. See Trans- and Figure. Der. transfiguration-ous, from F. transfiguration, 'a transfiguration,' Cot., from Lat. acc. transfigurationem.

TRANSFIX, to fix by piercing through. (L.) 'Quite through transfixed with a deadly dart'; Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 31. = Lat. transfixus, pp. of transfigere, to thrust through. See Trans- and Fix.

TRANSFORM, to change the form of. (F., = L.) M. E. transformen, Wyclif, 3 Cor. iii. 18. = F. transformer, 'to transform'; Cot. = Lat. transformare, to change the form of. = Lat. trans, across (implying change); and forma, form. See Trans- and Form. Der. transform-ation, from F. transformation, 'a transformation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. transformationem.

TRANSFUSE, to cause to pass from one person or part into another, to make to imbibe. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 389, vi. 704. = Lat. transfusus, pp. of transfundere, to pour out of one vessel into another, to decant, transfuse. = Lat. trans, across; and fundere, to pour; see Trans- and Fuse. Der. transfus-ion.

TRANSGRESSION, violation of a law, sin. (F., = L.) 'For the rage of my transgression'; Lydgate, Stone of Thebes, pt. iii (How the Child was slain by a serpent). = F. transgression, 'a transgression, trespass'; Cot. = Lat. transgressionem, acc. of transgressio, a passing over, transposition, also a transgression of the law. = Lat. transgressus, pp. of transgredi, to step over, pass over. = Lat. trans, across; and grad, to step, walk; see Trans- and Grada. Der. Transgresser, formerly transgressor, Fabian, Chron. an. 1180, ed. Ellis, p. 299, from F. transgressor, 'a transgressor,' Cot., from Lat. acc. transgressus. Hence was made transgress, verb, used by Tyndall, Works, p. 214, col. 1, l. 3 from bottom. ☞ Observe trans-pass, a similar formation to trans-grass.

TRANSIENT, passing away, not lasting. (L.) In Milton, P. L. xii. 554. Suggested by Lat. transiens, of which the true stem is transiunt, not transient. [Cf. ambient, from ambire, which is conjugated regularly.] Transiens is the pres. part. of transire, to go across, to pass away. — Lat. trans, across; and ire, to go, from √ I, to go. See Trans- and Itinerant. Der. transient-ly, -ness. Also (from pp. transitus) transit, in Phillips, ed. 1706, shortened from Lat. transitus, a passing over; transit-ion, Phillips, from Lat. acc. transitionem, a passing over, a transition; transit-ion-al; transit-ive, from Lat. transitivus, a term applied to a transitive or active verb; transit-ive-ly, -ness; transit-or-y, Minshew, ed. 1627, suggested by F. transitivoire, 'transitory,' Cot., from Lat. transitorius, liable to pass away, passing away; transit-or-i-ly, -ness. And see Trans.

TRANSLATE, to transfer, move to another place, to render into another language. (F., = L.) M. E. translaten, to remove, Gower, C. A. l. 261, l. 26. — F. translaten, 'to translate, . . . reduce, or remove;' Cot. — Low Lat. translatore, to translate, in use in the 13th century. — Lat. translatio, transferred; used as the pp. of transfere, but really from a different root. — Lat. trans, across; and latex, carried, borne, put for stans, from √ TAL, to lift, bear, whence Lat. tollo, to lift. See Trans- and Tolerate. Der. translat-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 15493, from F. translation, 'a translation,' Cot., from Lat. translatio, acc. of translatio, a transference, transferring.

TRANSLUCENT, clear, allowing light to pass through. (L.) In Milton, Comus, 861. — Lat. translucens, stem of pres. part. of transluere, to shine through. — Lat. trans, through; and lucere, to shine; see Trans- and Luclid. Der. translucent-ly, translucence.

TRANSMARINE, beyond the sea. (L.) In Eloquent's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. transmarinus, beyond sea. — Lat. trans, beyond; and mare, sea; with suffix -inus. See Trans- and Marine.

TRANSMIGRATION, the passing into another country or state of existence. (F., = L.) Spelt transmigrationem, Trevisa, l. 33, l. 20. — F. transmigration, 'a transmigration, a sitting or shifting of a soul;' Cot. — Lat. transmigrationem, acc. of transmigration, a removing from one country to another. — Lat. transmigratus, pp. of transmigrare, to migrate across, from one place to another. See Trans- and Migrate. Der. (from Lat. pp. transmigratus) transmigrates, Antony, ii. 7. 51; transmigrat-or, transmigrat-or-y.

TRANSMIT, to cause or suffer to pass through, to deliver. (L.) In Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 576 (R.) — Lat. transmittere, to cause to go across, send over, dispatch, transmit. — Lat. trans, across; and mittere, to send; see Trans- and Mission. Der. transmitt-al, transmitt-or; transmission, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 2, from Lat. acc. transmissionem; transmiss-ible, from F. transmissibile, 'transmittable,' Cot.; transmiss-ibil-ity.

TRANSMUTE, to change to another form or substance. (L.) '[He] transmuted the sentence of death vato perpetuitye of pryson;' Fabian, Chron. c. 150. [The M. E. form was transmuten, or transmuter, Chaucer, C. T. 8261, from F. transmuter, 'to change or alter over,' Cot., from Lat. transmutare.] — Lat. transmutare, to change into another form. — Lat. trans, across (implying change); and mutare, to change; see Trans- and Mutable. Der. transmut-ible; transmut-at-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 2841, from F. transmutationem, 'a transmutation, alteration,' Cot., from Lat. acc. transmutationem.

TRANSOM, a thwart-piece across a double window; the lintel over a door; in ships, a beam across the stern-post to strengthen the after-part. (L.) 'Transoms, or lintel over a dore;' Baret, ed. 1580. 'The transoms of a bed, trabula;' Levins. 'Mans de fenestre, the transoms, or cross-bar of a window;' Cot. 'Beames, prickposts, groundsels, summers or dormants, transoms, and such principals;' Harrison, Desc. of England, b. ii. c. 12, ed. Furnivall, p. 235. Halliwell notes the spelling transumpt, but this is a corrupt form; the real meaning of transumpt is a copy of a record; see Transumpt in Cot. Webster says it is sometimes spelt transummer, but I can nowhere find it, and such a spelling is obviously due to confusion with summer, a beam, as used in the above quotation from Harrison. β. The etymology of this word has caused much trouble; and both the usual explanations are merely absurd. These are (1) from Lat. transomes, a rope, noose in a cord, which cannot possibly have anything to do with it; and (2) from Lat. trans, across, and sumere (pp. sumpta), to take, which gives no intelligible sense in this connexion, but rightly accounts for the word transumpt in Cotgrave, which is another word altogether. γ. Wedgwood assumes transummer as the orig. form, which gives a real sense; since trans may mean

'across;' and Cot. gives 'Summer, a piece of timber called a summer;' see Bumpton. There is a fatal objection to this explanation, in the fact (if it be so) that transomes is the old word, and transummer a corruption due to confusion with summer. δ. I think the word is obviously a corruption of Lat. transstrum, used as an architectural and nautical term. It means precisely a transom, in all its senses. 'Transitra et tabula sanium dicuntur et tigna, que et pariete in parietem porriguntur;' Festus (White). The corruption was inevitable, it being hardly possible for an English workman to pronounce transstrum in any other way. 'Transoms est vox Architectonica et transversas trabes notat, Vitruvio transstra;' Skinner, 1671. I believe that Skinner, for once, is right. α. The Lat. transstrum is derived from Lat. trans, across; and -strum is a mere suffix, denoting the agent (Aryan -sar), as in aro-strum, that which ploughs. Hence trans-strum = that which is across.

TRANSPARENT, clear, allowing objects to be seen through. (F., = L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 3. 31. — F. transparent, 'transparent, clear-shining;' Cot. — Lat. trans, through; and parent, stem of pres. part. of parere, to appear; see Trans- and Appear. Der. transparent-ly, -ness; transparent-y.

TRANSPICUOUS, transparent, translucent. (L.) In Milton, P. L. viii. 141. Comes, as if from Lat. transpicuus, from Lat. transpicere, to see or look through; see Conspicuous. — Lat. trans, through; and spicere, to look; see Trans- and Spy.

TRANSPIERCE, to pierce through. (F., = L.) Used by Dryden (R.) — F. transpercer, 'to pierce through;' Cot. See Trans- and Pierce.

TRANSPIRE, to pass through the pores of the skin, to become public, or come out. (L.) In Milton, P. L. v. 438. — Lat. trans, for trans, through; and spirare, to breathe, revive. See Trans- and Spirit. Der. transpirat-ion, from F. transpirationem, 'a transpiration, evaporation,' Cot. This sb. prob. really suggested Milton's verb.

TRANSPLANT, to plant in a new place. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. — F. transplanter, 'to transplant;' Cot. — Lat. transplantare. — Lat. trans, across, implying change; and plantare, to plant. See Trans- and Plant. Der. transplant-at-ion, from F. transplantationem, 'a transplantation,' Cot.

TRANSPORT, to carry to another place, carry away by passion or pleasure, to banish. (F., = L.) In Spenser, Hymn 4, Of Heavenly Beauty, l. 18. — F. transporter, 'to transport, transfer;' Cot. — Lat. transportare, to carry across. — Lat. trans, across; and portare, to carry. See Trans- and Port (1). Der. transport, sb., Pope, Windsor Forest, 90; transport-able; transport-ness, Tröll, iii. 2. 12; transport-at-ion.

TRANSPOSE, to change the position of, change the order of. (F., = L. and Gk.) M. E. transposen, Gower, C. A. ii. 90, l. 26. — F. transporter, 'to transpose, translate, remove;' Cot. See Trans- and Pose. Der. transpos-el.

TRANSPOSITION, a change in the order of words, &c. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. — F. transpositionem, 'a transposition, removal out of one place into another;' Cot. See Trans- and Position. ☞ Not ultimately connected with transport, which is from a different TRANSUBSTANTIATION, the doctrine that the bread and wine in the Eucharist are changed into Christ's body and blood. (F., = L.) In Tyndall, Works, p. 447, col. 2; he also has transubstantiatum, id. p. 445, col. 2. — F. transubstantiationem; Cot. — Late Lat. transubstantiationem, acc. of transubstantiatio; see Hildebert, Bp. of Tours, Sermon 93. Hildebert died in 1134 (Trench, Study of Words). — Late Lat. transubstantiatus, pp. of transubstantiare, coined from trans, across (implying change), and substantia, substance. See Trans- and Substance.

TRANSVERSE, lying across or cross-wise. (L.) 'But all things tost and turned by transversus,' Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 56; where by transversus = in a confused manner, or reversedly. — Lat. transversus, turned across; hence, athwart. Orig. pp. of transversare, to turn across. See Trans- and Varus. And see Transversus. Der. transverse-ly.

TRAP (1), an instrument or device for ensnaring animals. (E.) M. E. trappe, Chaucer, C. T. 145. — A. S. træppa, a trap; Ælfinc's Colloquy (Fowler). But the pronunciation has perhaps been affected by F. trappe, a trap, a word of Teut. origin. + O. Du. trappe, 'a trap to catch mice in;' Hexham. + O. H. G. træpa, a snare, trap (Graf); whence Low Lat. træpa, Ital. trappa, F. trappe, Span. trampa, a trap (Dier). β. The etymology is obviously from Teut. base TRAP, to tread on, for which see Tramp. The trap is that on which an animal steps, or puts its foot, or trips, and is so caught. Cf. Du. trappen, to tread, trap, a stair, step, kick, G. trappe, a flight of steps, Swed. trappa, a stair. The nasalized form trampa appears in Spaa. trampa, a trap. Der. trap, verb, spelt trappe in Falgrave; trap-door, a door falling and shutting with a catch; also en-trap, q. v. Also trap-ball or trap-bat, a game played with a ball, bat, and a trap which, when lightly tapped, throws the ball into the air. And see trap (3).

TRAP (2), to adorn, or ornament with gay dress or clothing. (F., = Teut.) The pp. trapped occurs in Chaucer: 'Upon a stede bay, trapped in stele.' C. T. 2159; and see l. 2892. This is formed from a sb. trappe, meaning the trappings or ornaments of a horse. 'Many trappe, many croper' = many a trapping, many a crupper; King Alisander, 1421. 'Upon a stede whyt so milke; His trappe was off tueli sylke;' Rich. Cœur de Lion, 1515; where tueli means 'scarlet.' From an O. F. trap, not recorded, but the same word as mod. F. drap, cloth. The spelling with t occurs in Span. and Port. trapa, a cloth, clout, rag. Low Lat. trapes, a cloth.

β. As Dies remarks, the variation in the initial letter tells us that the word is of Teut. origin, since the O. H. G. t would have a corresponding initial Low German d. This adds considerable weight to the suggestion already made under Drab (2), viz. that the word is derived from the Teut. base DRAP, to strike, noted under Drub. Cf. F. draper, 'to dress, or to full cloth; to heat, or thicken, as cloth, in the fulling; also . . . to mock, flout, deride, jeast at;' Cot. This is parallel to Swed. drip, murder, drip-ard, an abusive word, drabba, to hit = G. trapp. Der. trapping, a pl. ornaments for a horse, Shak. Venus, 286, hence, any ornaments, Hamlet, i. s. 86. Also rattle-traps, q. v.

TRAP (3), a kind of igneous rock. (Scand.) Modern. So called because such rocks often appear in large tabular masses, rising above each other like steps (Webster). = Swed. trappa, a stair, or flight of stairs, trapp, trap (rock); Dan. trappe, a stair, trapp, trap. † Du. trap, a stair, step. † G. trappe, a stair. β. All from Teut. base TRAP, to tread; see Trap (1) and Tramp.

TRAPEZIUM, a plane four-sided figure with unequal sides. (L., = Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. trapezium. = Gk. τραπεζιον, a small table or counter; a trapezium, because four-sided, like such a table. Dimin. of τραπεζα, a table, esp. a dining-table; a shortened form for τετρα-πεζα, i. e. a four-footed bench or table. Cf. ἀργυρο-πεζα, i. e. silver-footed, as an epithet of Thetis. = Gk. τετρα- prefix signifying 'four,' as in τετρα-γωνος, four-cornered, from τετραγωνος, Attic for τετραγωνος, four; and πεζα, a foot, put for πυξια, an allied word to πυξια (stem πυξ-), a foot, which is cognate with E. foot. See Tetragon and Foot. Der. trapezoid, lit. 'trapezium-like,' from τραπεζιον, put for τραπεζα, and ειδ- form; trapezoid-oid. Also trapeza, from F. trapeze, the name of a kind of swing for athletic exercise, so called from being sometimes made in the shape of a trapezium, as thus: Δ. The F. trapeze is from Lat. trapezium.

TRASH, refuse, worthless stuff. (Scand.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 223; Oth. iii. 3. 157; hence used of a worthless person, Oth. ii. 1. 312, v. 1. 85. The orig. sense is clippings of trees, as stated by Wedgwood, or (yet more exactly) the bits of broken sticks found under trees in a wood, and collected for fire-wood. Wedgwood quotes from Evelyn as follows, with a reference to Notes and Queries, June 11, 1853: 'Faggots to be every stick of three foot in length—this to prevent the abuse of filling the middle part and ends with trash and short sticks.' Hence it came to mean refuse generally; Cotgrave explains menestilles by 'small ware, small trash, small offals.' Of Scand. origin. = Icel. trasi, rubbish, leaves and twigs from a tree picked up and used for fuel, whence trassa, to become worn out, to split up as a seam does; cf. trassi, a slovenly fellow, trassa, to be slovenly. Norweg. trasi, fallen twigs, half-rotten branches easily broken, allied to trygja, to break into small pieces, to crackle. Swed. trasa, a rag, a tatter; Swed. dial. trasa, a rag; trå, a heap of sticks, a worthless fellow (which is one sense of Cleveland trash), old useless bits of fencing. β. Riets points out the true origin; he adduces Swed. dial. såd i trasi, to break in pieces, which is obviously the same phrase as Swed. såd i trasi, to break in pieces; the substitution of tr for br being a Scand. peculiarity, of which we have an undoubted example in Icel. trasi, Swed. trasa, Dan. trasa, all corruptions of the word which we spell trass; see Orans. Hence the etym. is from Swed. trasa, Dan. trasa, to crush, as a thing does when broken; see Crash. The Icel. form trasi answers to Swed. trassa, to bruise, crush, crash, a collateral form of trasa; cf. Orkney trasi, refuse, also prov. E. trass, the trimmings of a hedge (Halliwell). γ. We now see that trash means 'crashings,' i. e. bits crushed off, pieces that break off short with a snap or crash, dry twigs; hence also a bit of torn stuff, a rag, &c.

¶ This throws no light on trass, as in Shak. Temp. i. s. 81; which has prob. a different origin. Der. trashy.

TRAVAIL, toil, labour in child-birth. (F., = L.) M. E. travail (with v for v), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 130, l. 32. = F. travail, 'travell, toile, labour, business, pains-taking;' Cot. Cf. Ital. travaglio, Span. trabajo, Port. trabalho, Prov. trabaja (Bartach), toil, labour; orig. an obstacle or impediment, which is still a sense of Span. trabajo. We must also note that O. Ital. travaglio meant a pen for cattle, or 'ox-stall,' as Florio explains it; whilst F. travail meant a trave for horses; see below.

β. There can be little doubt that, as Dies says, the sb. was derived from a Low Lat. verb travare, to make or build with beams, to pen, shackle, put an obstacle in one's way, and so to cause embarrassment and trouble. [Our word to embarrass is formed, in just the same way, from bar, a beam, clog, impediment.] Traces of this Low Lat. verb abound; we find Low Lat. travata (F. travée), 'a bay of building, the space between the main beams of a room,' Cot.; O. Span. travar, 'to knit, to join, to cross or clinch one within another' (Minshew), certainly spoken of joining beams, as he also gives traves de pared, 'the joints of a wall,' traves de bestia, 'shackles for a horse,' travazas, 'the joining of timber-work in walls,' Span. trabar, to join, to fetter, de-trabar, to unfetter; Port. travar, to twine or twist one with another, trava, a transom or beam going overthwart a house; Ital. travata, 'any compact made of beams or timber, a hoell [hovel] of timber' (Florio), travaglio, 'an ox-stall,' as above; F. en-traver, 'to shackle or fetter the legs,' Cot., entravés, 'shackles, fetters, pasterns for the legs of unruly horses,' id., travail, a trave. See Trave.

γ. All these are derivatives from Lat. trabem, acc. of trabs, traber, a beam, hence anything built of timber, such as a ship or wooden roof; this is clearly shown by O. F. traf, Port. trava, a beam, piece of timber, O. Ital. trava, 'any kinde of beame, transome, rafter, or great peeces of timber;' Florio. β. Trave is allied to Gk. τραπεζα, τραπεζα, a beam to turn anything with; cf. τραπεζα, to turn, = TARK, to turn; see Torture. ¶ The W. travail, travail, appears to be borrowed from English. Der. travail, verb, M. E. travailen, King Alisander, 1612, Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 34, l. 3, from F. travailer, 'to travell, toile, also to harry, weary, vex, incite;' Cot. Doublet, travail.

TRAVE, a beam, a shackle. (F., = L.) 'Trave, a frame into which farriers put unruly horses;' Halliwell. 'Trave, Travise, a place enclosed with rails for shoeing an unruly horse;' Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. 'Trave, a trevis or little room made purposely to shoe unbroken horses in;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Traves, to shoe a wyde horse in, travys a shawl;' Palgrave. M. E. trava (with v for v); 'And she sprong as a colt doth in the trava;' Chaucer, C. T. 3282. = O. F. traf, a beam, given in the Supp. to Roquefort; later traf, 'the beam of a house;' Cot. Whence also travail, 'the frame whereinto farriers put unruly horses,' Cot. = Lat. trabem, acc. of trabs or trabs, a beam; see Travail. Der. trav-d, trav-all; archi-trava.

TRAVEL, to journey, walk. (F., = L.) Merely the same word as travail; the two forms are used indiscriminately in old editions of Shakespeare (Schmidt). The word forcibly recalls the toil of travel in former days. See Travail. Der. travel, verb; travel-er, L. L. L. iv. s. 308. Doublet, travail.

TRAVEVERSE, laid across; as sb., a cross, obstruction, a thing built across; as a verb, to cross, obstruct, deny an argument, also to pass over a country. (F., = L.) 'Trees . . . hewen downe, and laid travers, one over another;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 186 (R.). Gower has travers as a sb., meaning 'cross' or impediments, in the last line but 14 of his Conf. Amantus. = F. travers, m., traverse, f., 'crosse-wise, overthwart;' Cot. Hence the sb. traverse, 'a cross-way, also . . . a thwart, . . . let, bar, hindernace;' id.; also the verb traverse, 'to thwart or go overthwart to cross or passe over,' id. = Lat. transversus, turned across, laid athwart; pp. of transvertere, to turn across; see Transverse. Der. traverse, verb, from F. traverser; as above; traverse-er.

TRAVESTY, a parody. (F., = L.) 'Scarronides, or Virgile Travestis, being the first book of Virgils Eneis in English Burlesque; London, 1664;' by Charles Cotton. Probably travestis is here used in the lit. sense of 'disguised,' or as we should now say, travestied. It is properly a pp., being borrowed from F. travesti, pp. of se travestir, 'to disguise or shift his apparell, to play the counterfeit;' Cot. = F. tra- (= Lat. trans), prefix, ht. across, but implying change; and vestir, to clothe, apparel, from Lat. vestire, to clothe. The verb vestire is from the sb. vestis, clothing. See Trans and Vest, Der. travesty, verb.

TRAWL, to fish with a drag-net. (F., = Teut.) 'Trawler-men, a sort of fishermen that us'd unlawful arts and engines, to destroy the fish upon the river Thames; among whom some were styd'd hobber-men, others tincher-men, Peter-men, &c.;' Phillips, ed. 1706. = O. F. trawler, to go hither and thither (Roquefort); also spelt trailer, mod. F. trailer, to drag about; Hamilton. See Troll. ¶ Quite distinct from trawl, as shewn by the vowel-sound.

TRAY, a shallow vessel, a salver. (E.) 'A tray, or such hollow vessel . . . that laborers carrie mortar in to serve tilers or plasterers;' Baret, ed. 1580. M. E. tray; 'Bolles, trays, and platers, i. e. bowls, trays, and platters;' Rich. Cœur de Lion, l. 1490. = A. S. træg, a tray. This word is not in the Dictionaries, but I have little doubt that it is our modern tray, as shown by the M. E. spelling. The entry 'alucolum, trig' occurs in a set of glosses about things relating to the table, in company with amand-land, a napkin; see Wright's Voc. i. 390, col. 2. Here alucolum is clearly a misprint for alucolum, i. e. a tray. Prob. related to A. S. trig, a trough, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 340, l. 5; and to A. S. trah, a trough. See TROUGH.

TREACHERY, faithlessness, trickery of a gross kind. (F., = Teut.) M. E. trecherie, spelt trecherye, P. Plowman, B. i. 196; older spelling trecherie, id. A. i. 172, Ancrens Riwle, p. 302, l. 18. = F. trecherie, 'whence, as it seems, our treachery, counsage, deceit, a cheating, a beguiling'; Cot. = F. tricher, 'to cozen, cheat, beguile, deceive'; id. O. F. tricher, tricher; cf. Ital. truccare, to cheat; Prov. tricheria, treachery, trichaire, a traitor, tries or trigs, a trick (Bartsch). β. Of Teut. origin, as pointed out by Dies; from M. H. G. trahan, to push, also to draw, pull (hence, to entice); cf. Du. trecken, to draw, pull, tow, and Du. trek, a draught, and also a trick. Treachery and trechery are variants of the same word, although treachery has obtained the stronger sense. See further under TRICK, TRICK. Der. treacher-ous, Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 41, spelt trecherous, Pricks of Conscience, 4231, coined by adding the suffix -ous to the old word trecher, a traitor, spelt tricher in Rob. of Glouc. p. 455, l. 4, trechour in Wyclif's Works, ed. Matthew, p. 239, l. 6; trecher-ous-ly, -ness.

TREACLE, the syrup drained from sugar in making it. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. treacle, a sovereign remedy (very common), P. Plowman, C. ii. 147, B. i. 146; see my note on it, explaining the matter. It had some resemblance to the treacle which has inherited its name. = F. triacle, 'treacle,' Cot. The i is unoriginal; triacle is only another spelling of F. thriacus, 'treacle'; Cot. = Lat. thriacus, an antidote against the bite of serpents, or against poisons; also spelt thriaca. = Gk. thriakis, belonging to wild or venomous beasts; hence thriakon phlegmas, antidotes against the bite of venomous animals; and (no doubt) thriakon, sb. sing. fem., in the same sense, whence Lat. thriaca. = Gk. thriax, a wild animal, poisonous animal; dimin. of thra, a wild beast, cognate with E. deer, q. v.

TREAD, to set down the foot, tramp, walk. (E.) M. E. traden; pt. t. trad, Ormulum, 2561; pp. traden, traden, Chaucer, C. T. 12646. = A. S. tradan, pt. t. trad, pp. traden, Grein, ii. 550, † Du. traden. † G. traden, pt. t. trad, pp. traden. We find also Icel. træða, pt. t. træð, pp. træðinn; which accounts for our pp. tradden; Dan. træde; Swed. tråda; Goth. tradan, to tread, pt. t. traha. β. All from Teut. base TRAD, to tread; Fick, iii. 125. Cf. Teut. TRAP, to tread; for which see TRAMP. The comparison of these bases points back to an older base TRA, cognate with Aryan † DR, to run; cf. Gk. δρα-ειναι, δραειναι, to run, Skt. dra, dra, to run, dra, to run, Gk. δρα-ειναι; see DROMEDARY. Der. træde-er or træde-er, the same as M. E. træde-er, a step, A. S. træde; 'Bases, trædeles vel stapan,' Wright's Voc. i. 21, col. 2. Also træde-mill; træde, q. v.

TREASON, a betrayal of the government, or an attempt to overthrow it. (F., = L.) M. E. trason, trason; spelt trayson, Havelok, 444; trason, Ancrens Riwle, p. 56, l. 17. = O. F. trason, mod. F. trahison, treason, betrayal; answering to Lat. acc. traditionem. = O. F. traïr, mod. F. traïr, to betray. = Lat. tradere, to deliver, betray; see TRAITOR. Der. trason-able, trason-ably.

TREASURE, wealth stored up, a hoard. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. tresor, occurring very early, in the A. S. Chron. an. 1137. = O. F. tresor, mod. F. trésor, treasure. Cf. Ital. tesoro, Span. tesoro, Port. tesouro, spelt without r after t. = Lat. thesaurum, acc. of thesaurus, a treasure. = Gk. θησαυρός, a treasure, a store, hoard; formed (it is not very clear with what suffixes) from the base θη-, to lay up, as seen in θήκη, I place, lay up. = † DHA, to place. See THEME, THESIS. Der. treasure, verb, Shak. Sonnet 6; treasure-er, from F. trésorier, spelt thesorier in Cot., and explained by 'a treasurer'; treasure-y, M. E. treasoria, treasoria, Rob. of Glouc. p. 374, l. 1, contracted from O. F. treasoria, spelt thesoraria in Cotgrave, so that treasoria is short for treasoraria. Also treasure-true, i. e. treasure found; see TROVER. Doublet, thesaurus.

TREAT, to handle in a particular manner, to entertain, manage by applying remedies, discourse of. (F., = L.) In Wyclif, Mark, ix. 32; Chaucer, C. T. 12464. = F. traiter, to 'treat' = Lat. tractare, to handle; frequent. form of trahere (pp. tractus), to draw; see TRAHON. Der. treat-ment, from F. traitement; treat-ise, M. E. treitise, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. l. 8, from O. F. treitis, treitise, treitiseis (see TRICHSIS in Roquefort), meaning (a thing) well handled or nicely made, attractive, admirable, an adj. which was even applied by Chaucer to the Priores's nose, C. T. 152, and answering to a Low Lat. form tractitius?. Also treat-y, M. E. tretece, Chaucer, C. T. 1290, from F. traït (traït in Cotgrave), 'a treaty,' properly the pp. of traïre, to treat, and therefore 'a thing treated of.'

TREBLE, threefold; the highest part in music. (F., = L.) Why the highest part in music is called treble is not clear; still the fact is so, and the word, in that sense, is the same word as when it means triple. Indeed, we find triple used by Fairfax in the musical sense of triple. 'The humane voices sung a triple hue;' Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xvii. st. 24. Palsgrave has: 'Treble of a song, le desous; Treble string of an instrument, chantarelle.' M. E. treble, threefold, Gower, C. A. ut. 159, l. 14. = O. F. treble, treble, triple (Bargy). = Lat. tripulum, acc. of tripulus, triple. See TRIPLEX. For the change from p to b, cf. E. double, due to Lat. duplex. Der. treble, verb, Temp. iii. 1. 221; treble-y. Doublet, triple.

TREDDLE, the same as Treadle; see Tread. TREE, a woody plant, of a large size. (E.) M. E. tree, tre; also used in the sense of timber. 'Not onell vessels of gold and of silver, but also of tree and of erthe;' Wyclif, 1 Tim. ii. 20. = A. S. træ, træ, a tree, also dead wood or timber; Grein, ii. 551. † Icel. tré. † Dan. træ. † Swed. trä, timber; träd, a tree, a corruption of træit, lit. 'the wood,' with the post-positive article † Goth. triu (gen. triuwa), a tree, piece of wood. β. All from Teut. type TREWA, a tree, Fick, iii. 118; further allied to Russ. drvo, a tree, W. drvo, an oak, Irish darg, darg, an oak, Gk. δρῦς, an oak, δρῦς, a spear-shaft, Skt. dra, wood, dāru, wood, a species of pine. γ. Benfey connects Skt. dra and dāru with the verb drā, to tear, burst, from † DAR, to tear, whence E. tear; see TEAR (1); so also Fick, i. 615, 616. The explanation is that it meant a piece of peeled wood; cf. Gk. δρῦς, to flay; but this is very far-fetched. Curtius points out that the orig. sense of Aryan DRU seems to have been 'tree' rather than a piece of wood; and adds, 'on account of this meaning, preserved in so many languages, I cannot accept the derivation [above] suggested by Kuhn and others.' Der. tree-er, adj., made of wood, or belonging to a tree, Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 26, Curoor Mundi, 12399; with suffix -er as in gold-er, wood-er. Also tree-mat, a peg, a pin or nail made of wood, a naut. term. And see rhododendron, druid.

TREFOIL, a three-leaved plant such as the white and red clover. (F., = L.) Given by Cot. as the tr. of F. treffle. = O. F. trifol; in a Vocabulary pr. in Wright's Voc. i. 140, l. 14, we find F. trifol answering to Lat. trifolium and E. white clover [white clover]. = Lat. trifolium, a three-leaved plant, as Tri- = Lat. tri-, prefix allied to tres, three; and folium, a leaf; see TRI- and FOIL.

TRELLIS, a structure of lattice-work. (F., = L.) M. E. trellis. 'Trelys, of a wyndow or other lyke, Cancellus;' Prompt. Parv. = F. treillis, 'a trellis;' Cot. = F. trailer, to grate or lattice, to support or undernet by, or hold in with, crossed bars or latticed frames;' Cot. = F. treille, 'an arbor or walk set on both sides with vines, &c. twining about a latticed frame;' id. = Lat. trichula, trichia, trichea, tricia, a bower, arbour, or summer-house. Origin doubtful. ☞ Quite distinct from F. treillis, O. F. trellis, a kind of calico (from Lat. trilicem, acc. of trilica, triple-twilled; which from tri-, three times, and licium, a thread). Der. trellis-er.

TREMBLE, to shiver, shake, quiver. (F., = L.) M. E. tremblen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 235. = F. trembler, 'to tremble;' Cot. The b is excrement, as is common after m. = Low Lat. tremulus, to hesitate, lit. to tremble. = Lat. tremulus, trembling. = Lat. trem-ere, to tremble, with adj. suffix -er. † Lithuan. trim-iti, to tremble. † Gk. τρίμ-ειν, to tremble. = † TRAM, to tremble; Fick, i. 604. Der. trembl-er, trembl-ing-ly. From Lat. tremore are also trem-er, in Phillips, borrowed from Lat. tremor, a trembling; trem-ent-ous, also in Phillips, from Lat. tremendus, that ought to be feared, fut. pass. part. of tremere; trem-ent-ous-ly; trem-ent-ous, Englished from Lat. tremulus, as above; trem-ent-ous-ly, -ness.

TRENCH, a kind of ditch or furrow. (F., = L. ?) M. E. tranche, Chaucer, C. T. 10706. Shortened from F. tranchie, 'a trench,' Cot., lit. a thing cut. = F. trancher (now spelt trancher), 'to cut, carve, slice, hack, hew;' Cot. Cf. Span. trinchas, a trench, tranchar, to carve, trancar, to chop; Port. trincar, to carve, trancar, to crack asunder, break; Ital. trincare, a trench, trincare, to cut, carve. β. There is no satisfactory solution of this word; see Littré, Scheler, and Dies. Prob. Latin; the solutions truncare, truncare, and internare have been proposed. We may notice, in Florio, Ital. trincare, 'to trim or snug up,' trinci, 'gardings, fringes, lacings, gaggings, also cuts, lags, or mips in garments,' trine, 'cuts, lags, snips, pucks work in garments.' Also Minshew has O. Span. tranchas, a trench, tranchar, to part the hair of the head. The word still awaits solution. Der. tranch, verb, Mach. iii. 4. 27, from trancher, to cut; tranch-ant, cutting, Timon, iv. 3. 115, from F. tranchant, pres. part. of trancher; tranch-er, a wooden plate for cutting things on, M. E. tranchers, Wright's Voc. i. 173, l. 17, from F. tranchoir, 'a trencher,' Cot.

TREND, to turn or bend away, said of direction or course. (E.) See Nares. 'The shoare trended to the southwestward;' Hackluyt, Voyages, i. 276, § 7. 'By the trending of the land [you] come backe;' id. l. 383. M. E. trenden, to roll or turn about. 'Lat hym rollen and trenden,' &c.; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 21, l.

TRENTAL, a set of thirty masses for the dead. (F., = L.) See the poem of St. Gregory's Trental, in Polit. Relig. and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 83, and my note on P. Plowman, C. x. 320. See Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 453; and see Nares. — O. F. trintel, trintel, a trental, set of thirty masses; Roquefort. Cf. Low Lat. trentale, a trental, = F. trente, thirty. — Lat. triginta, thirty. — Lat. tri-, three, allied to tres, three; and ginta i. e. centa, short for decem = decem, tenth, from decem, ten. See Three and Ten.

TREPAN (1), a small cylindrical saw used in removing a piece of a fractured skull. (F., = L., = Gk.) Spelt trepane in Cot. = F. trepane, 'a trepane, an instrument having a round and indented edge,' &c.; Cot. = Low Lat. trepanum (put for trypanum?). — Gk. τρυπανον, a carpenter's tool, a borer, augur; also a surgical instrument, a trepan (Galen). — Gk. τρύβω, to bore. — Gk. τρύβω, τρύβω, a hole. — Gk. τρύβω, to turn (hence to bore). — TARK, to twist, turn round; see Torture.

TREPAN (2), TREPAN, to ensnare. (F., = Teut.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 617. Usually spelt trepan, as in Phillips, by a ridiculous confusion with the word above. Rightly spelt trepan in South's Sermons, vol. v. ser. 3. (R.), and in Anson's Voyages, b. i. c. 9 (R.). 'Forthwith alights the innocent trepan's'; Cotton, Wonders of the Peak, 1681, p. 38 (Todd). Not an old word. — O. F. trappan, a snare or trap for animals (Roquefort); he also gives trapan, trapan, a kind of trap-door. These are prob. rather dialectal words than O. F. Trappan or trapan perhaps stands for trappan, pres. part. of trapper, a verb formed from F. trappe, a trap; in any case the word is obviously an extension from F. trappe, a trap. — O. H. G. trapa, a trap; cognate with E. Trap, q. v. ¶ The E. word is now only used as a verb, but it must have come in as a sb. in the first instance, as it is used by South: 'It is indeed a real trepan,' i. e. stratagem, Serm. ii. 377; 'Nothing but gins, and snares, and traps for souls,' Serm. iii. 166 (Todd). The last quotation puts the matter in a very clear light. Cotgrave has the verb atrapper, and the sb. traps, traps, attraps.

TREPIDATION, terror, trembling, fright. (F., = L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 483, where it is used in an astronomical sense. 'A continual trepidation,' i. e. trembling motion, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 137. — F. trepidation, 'trembling, terror'; Cot. = Lat. trepidationem, acc. of trepidatio, alarm, a trembling. — Lat. trepidatus, pp. of trepidare, to tremble. — Lat. trepidus, agitated, disturbed, alarmed. — O. Lat. treperis, to turn round, only found in the 3 p. sing. trepi, explained by Festus, p. 367 (White), as meaning vertit; to which Festus adds, 'unde trepidus et trepidatio, quia turbatione mens vertitur.' That is, trepidus means in a state of disturbance, as if the mind is being continually turned about or agitated. This O. Lat. treperis is obviously cognate with Gk. τρύβω, to turn, allied also to Lat. torquere. — TARK, to twist, turn about; see Torture. Der. (from Lat. trepidus) in-trepid.

TRESPASS, a passing over a boundary, the act of entering another man's land unlawfully, a crime, sin, offence, injury. (F., = L.) M. E. trespas, Rob. of Glouc. p. 503, l. 18, where it means 'sin.' — O. F. trespas, a crime (Burguy); also 'a decess, departure out of this world, also a passage'; Cot. The lit. sense is 'a step beyond or across, so that it has direct reference to the mod. use of trespass in the sense of intrusion on another man's land. Cf. Span. trespasso, a conveyance across, also a trespass; Ital. traspas, a passage, digression. — Lat. trans, across; and passus, a step; see Trans- and Pass. Der. trespass, verb, M. E. trespassen, Wyclif, Acts, i. 25, from F. trespasser, 'to pass over,' Cot., also to trespass (Burguy); trespasser, M. E. trespassen, P. Plowman, ii. 93; also trespass-offring.

TRESS, a curl or lock of hair, a ringlet. (F., = Gk.) M. E. tresse, Chaucer, C. T. 1031; the pp. tressed, adorned with tresses, is in King Alisunder, l. 5409. — F. trasse, 'a tresse or lock of hair'; Cot. He also gives trasser, 'to plait, weave, or make into tresses.' Cf. Ital. tracca, a braid, knot, curl; pl. tracce, 'plaites, tresses, tramels, or roubles of womens haire'; Span. tranza, a braid of hair, plaited silk. β. The orig. sense is 'a plait'; and the etymology is (through Low Lat. trissa, variant of trisa, a plait) from Gk. τρίαινα, in three parts, threefold (Dies); from the usual method of plaiting the hair in three folds. — Gk. τρίαινα, neut. of τρίαινα, three, cognate with E. Three, q. v. γ. This is borne out by the Ital. trisa, a lace, loop, allied to trisa, threefold, from Lat. trissus, threefold; and perhaps Span. tranda, made of network, is also from the Lat. trissus. Der. trass-ed, as above. Also trass-ure, q. v.

TRESSURE, a kind of border, in heraldry. (F., = Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706, and in works on heraldry. — F. trassure, a heraldic F. word (not in the dict.) meaning 'border.' — F. trasser, 'to plait, weave'; Cot. = F. trasse, a tress or plait of hair; see Tress. ¶ I find 'Hoc tricatunum, Anglice, trassure,' Wright's Voc. i. 196. Here tricatunum is merely a Latinised form of the F. word, the F. trasser being Latinised as trica.

TRESTLE, TRESSLE, a moveable support for a table, frame for supporting. (F., = L.) 'Trustyl for a table, trastens,' Palgrave. 'Hic trastellus, Anglice, traste,' Wright's Voc. i. 107, col. 3, l. 3. 'Hic trastellus, a trastyle,' id. 332, col. 2, l. 1. The pl. trastylis, i. e. trestles, occurs in Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 23, l. 6, in a will dated 1463. — O. F. trastel, spelt trastens, trastens in Cot., and explained 'a tressle for a table, &c., also a kind of rack, or stretching torture.' Mod. F. trasteau (see Littre). β. The etymology is disputed, and the word presents difficulties on all sides. Littre derives it from the Bret. trastel, trastellid, a tressle, as to which Legonidec remarks that, though at first sight it looks as if borrowed from French, it may fairly be considered as a dimin. of Bret. trast, a beam, transom. Cf. W. trastyl, a tressle, which looks as if borrowed from E.; but we also find W. trast, a transom, rafter, transom, trast, a long slender pole. γ. At the same time, I suspect that Bret. trastel, W. trast, are nothing but forms of Lat. transstrum; and that trastel (in all its forms) is nothing but Lat. transstrillum, the regular dimin. of transstrum; this is an etymology which Dies recognizes as possible. δ. Dies suggests that trestle (appearing in French, by the way, in the 13th century) is borrowed from Du. drastel, explained by Sewel as 'a three-footed stool or trestle,' but I doubt whether this is good Dutch; for Herham does not notice it, and only explains stiel as 'a settle, a seat, or a chaire,' and it is absurd to suppose that drastel means 'a three-settle.' It is by no means unlikely that drastel was suggested by the F. or E. word. Blount explains E. trestle as 'a three-footed stools'; here again I suspect this to be a late sense, due to confusion with tripod and trivet; the true sense of trestle is a support for a table, and to be of any practical use, it should certainly have four legs, and is generally made with two diverging legs at each end. The chief object of a trestle is to go across under the table; and I feel inclined to hold fast by the derivation from Lat. transstrillum, a little cross-beam, Vitruvius, v. 12 (White). ε. We must by no means neglect Lowland Sc. traste, trast, a trestle, trast, a beam, North. E. trass, a trestle (Brockett), Lanc. trast, a strong large stool (Halliwell), and M. E. traste, a trestle, above. These are from O. F. traste, a cross beam (Roquefort), the same word as O. Ital. trasto, 'a bench of a galie, a transome or beam going cross a house,' which is obviously from Lat. transstrum. See Transom. Scheler takes the same view, proposing (as I should do) a Low Lat. transstrillum, as a parallel form to transstrillum, in order to give the exact O. F. form. Cotgrave's explanation of the word as meaning 'a rack' is much to the point; a rack requires two cross-beams (transstrilla) to work it, these beams being turned round with levers, thus pulling the victim by means of ropes wound round the beams.

TRET, an allowance to purchasers on consideration of waste. (F., = L.) 'Tret, an allowance made for the waste, . . . which is always 4 in every 104 pounds,' Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. It appears much earlier. 'For the tret of the same pepper,' i. e. pepper; Arnold's Chron. (1502), repr. 1811, p. 128. Mahn derives it from 'a Norman F. tratt,' as to which he tells us nothing; it is prob. from some word closely related to F. traste, 'a draught, . . . also, a transportation, vent outward, shipping over, and an imposition upon commodities'; Cot. Perhaps it meant an allowance for loss in transport. This F. traste answers to Lat. trastus, fem. of trastus, pp. of trastere, to draw; see Traco. In any case, it is almost certainly due to Lat. trastus; cf. Span. trato, trade; O. Ital. trasta, 'leave to transport merchandise, also a trade or trading'; Florio.

TREY, three, at cards or dice. (F., = L.) 'Two treys,' L. L. L. v. 2. 323. And in Chaucer, C. T. 12587. — O. F. trai, trai (mod. F. trais), three. — Lat. tres, three; see Three.

TRI, relating to three, threefold. (L. or Gk.; or F., = L. or Gk.) F. and L. tri-, three times, prefix related to Lat. tri-a, neut. of trius, three, cognate with E. Three, q. v. So also Gk. τρίαινα, allied to τρίαινα, neut. of τρίαινα, three.

TRIAD, the union of three. (F., = L., = Gk.) 'This is the famous Platonic triad,' Merc. Song of the Soul (1647), preface (Todd). — F. triade, 'three'; Cot. = Lat. triad-, stem of trius, a triad. — Gk. τρίαινα, a triad. — Gk. τρίαινα, related to τρίαινα, three; see Tri.

TRIAL, a test; see Try.

TRIANGLE, a plane, three-sided figure. (F., = L.) 'Tryangle, triangle,' Palgrave. — F. triangle, 'a triangle'; Cot. = Lat. triangulum, a triangle; neut. of triangulus, adj., having three angles. —

Lat. tri-, three; and angulus, an angle; see Tri- and Angle. Der. triangul-; *triangul-*ar, used by Spenser (Todd), from F. triangulaire, 'triangular,' Cot., from Lat. triangularis; *triangul-*ate, a coined word; *triangul-*ation.

TRIBE, a race, family, kindred. (F., = L.) Gower, C. A. iii. 230, 132, has the pl. tribus. This is the pl. of F. tribu, 'a tribe,' Cot. = Lat. tribus, a tribe.

β. A tribus is supposed to have been, in the first instance, one of the three families of people in Rome, their names being the Kamnes, Titus, and Lucres. The etymology is thought to be from Lat. tri- (akin to tres, three), and -bus, family, from √BHU, to be; cf. Gk. τρίβη, a tribe, family, from the same root. See Tri- and Be. Der. *trib-*use, q. v.; *trib-*ute, q. v.

TRIBRACH, a metrical foot consisting of three short syllables. (L., = Gk.) Written tribrachus or tribrachys in Phillips, ed. 1706; and tribrachus in Pattenham, Art of Poetry, b. ii. c. 3. = Lat. tribrachys. = Gk. τρίβραχος, a tribrach. = Gk. τρί, akin to τρίς, three; and βραχίς, short, cognate with Lat. bravis, short. See Tri- and Brief.

TRIBULATION, great affliction, distress. (F., = L.) M. E. tribulacionus, spelt tribulacionem, Ancien Rivie, p. 402, l. 24. = F. tribulation, 'tribulation;' Cot. = Lat. tribulationem, acc. of tribulatio, tribulation, affliction; lit. a rubbing out of corn by a sledge. = Lat. tribulatus, pp. of tribulare, to rub out corn, to oppress, afflict. = Lat. tribulum, a sledge for rubbing out corn, consisting of a wooden platform studded underneath with sharp flints or iron teeth. = Lat. tri-, base of *tri-*ui, *tri-*sum, pt. t. and pp. of terere, to rub; with suffix -ulum denoting the agent (as in sorti-bulum, that which turns about, a joint). See further under Tri-.

TRIBUNE, a Roman magistrate elected by the plebeians. (F., = L.) M. E. tribun; pl. tribunes, Wyclif, Mark, vi. 21. = Lat. tribunus, a tribune, properly the chief of (or elected by) a tribus; also a chief-tain, Mark, vi. 21. = Lat. tribun-, crude form of tribus, a tribe; with suffix -us (Aryan -us). See Tribe. Der. *tribun-*ship. Also *tribun-*al, Antony, iii. 6. 3, from Lat. tribunal, a raised platform on which the seats of tribunes, or magistrates, were placed.

TRIBUTE, homage, contribution paid to secure protection. (F., = L.) M. E. tribut, Wyclif, Luke, xxiii. 8; Gower, C. A. ii. 74, l. 7. = F. tribut, 'tribute;' Cot. = Lat. tributum, tribute; lit. a thing contributed or paid; neut. of tributus, pp. of tribuere, to assign, impart, allot, bestow, pay; orig. to allot or assign to a tribe. = Lat. tribus, crude form of tribus, a tribe; see Tribe. Der. *tribut-*ary. M. E. tributarius, Chaucer, C. T. 14894. from O. F. tributarius, later tributaire, 'tributary,' Cot., from Lat. tributarius, paying tribute. Also at-tribute, con-tribute, dis-tribute, re-tribute.

TRICE (1), a short space of time. (Span.) In the phrases in a trice, Twelfth Nt. iv. 2. 133; in a trice, Temp. v. 238; in this trice of time, K. Lear, i. 2. 219. 'And wasteth out a trice;' Turberville, To his Friend, &c., st. 5. Now only in the phr. in a trice, i. e. suddenly. 'Substantiv, swiftly, quickly, speedily, in a trice, out of hand;' Cot. The whole phrase is borrowed from Spanish. = Span. tris, noun made by the breaking of glass; also, a trice, a short time, an instant; swear on an tris, to come in an instant; star on an tris, to be on the verge of (Neuman). So also Port. tris, a word to express the sound of glass when it cracks; star for hum tris, to be within a hair's breadth, to have a narrow escape; on hum tris, in a trice. The word tris is imitative. ¶ Not to be confused with M. E. tris, which is of quite another origin. Gower has: 'Al sodeinlich, as who seith tris,' C. A. l. 142, l. 7. This means, quite suddenly, like one who counts tres; from O. F. tris, three; see Troy. There is no doubt about this, as Gower's tris rhimes with palais, shewing that the diphthong really was ai; and of course Gower did not borrow from Spanish. Besides, 'as who seith' is different from 'in a'; there is, in fact, no connection whatever. But Wedgwood well compares the Lowland Scotch in a crack (Jamieson) with the Span. phrase.

TRICE (2), TRISE, to haul up or hoist. (Scand.) 'Trise (sea-word), to hale up anything into the ship by hand with a dead rope, or one that does not run in a block or pulley;' Phillips, ed. 1706. M. E. trisen, to pull, haul; Chaucer, C. T. 14443. 'They trisen vps thaire sailles,' Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 832. A nautical term; of Scand. origin; and the sense noted by Phillips is unoriginal, as it must once have meant to haul by help of a pulley, not only without it. Cf. M. E. tryss, (and, with excrement tryssis, 'trocles,' Prompt. Parv. = Swed. trissa, a sheave, pulley, truckle, trise, a spritsail-brace; Dan. trise, a pulley, whence trise, verb, to haul by means of a pulley, to trice; Norweg. trisa, trisel, a pulley, or sheave in a block; Swed. dial. trissa, a roller, also a shoemaker's implement, a little round wheel with teeth on it. β. As the Dan. form shews, the orig. form was *trid-*sa, and the orig. sense was a little wheel; so named from its turning round and round, and allied to Swed. trind, round; see Trend, Trundle. The final -sa is the same as in E. *claus-*sa. Cf. also Low G. truel, a whirling round, dizziness, giddiness, Bremen Worterbuch; where also are cited O. G. tryum, to wind, and Hamburg dryum, up dryum, to wind up, drye-Mot, the block of a pulley, like Dan. trideblok.

TRICK (1), a stratagem, clever contrivance, fraud, parcel of cards won at once. (Du.) Not an old word, though common in Shakespeare. 'A trick, facinus;' Levinus, ed. 1570. 'It were but a schoole-trick,' Spenser, Mother Hubba:d's Tale, 512. It does not seem to be much older than about 1550; and it cannot well have been directly descended from M. E. trichem, to deceive, cozen, trick, occurring early in the 14th century, Polit. Songs, p. 69, l. 7. This M. E. trichem is from O. F. tricher, tracher, explained under Treachery; a verb which is due to Du. trah, as there shews. Our word trick was certainly re-imported directly from Dutch, as was clearly the case with Trick (3), q. v. (Hence Shakespeare has trick in the sense of lineament, K. John, i. 85; this is precisely the Du. trah. 'Do trikken van't gesicht, the lineaments of the face;' Sewel.) = Du. trah, a trick; 'om slimme trah, a cunning trick; *tenand omme trah spelen*, to play one a trick; *de hup *trahen, to play tricks, play the fool;' Sewel. [The change from e to i was easy, and may have been helped out by confusion with F. trichem, to trick, itself derived from Du. trah.] The Du. trah, a trick, is the same word as trah, a pull, draught, tug; from the verb trahen, to draw, pull. β. We find also O. Fries. trahen or tragga, North Fries. trache, trache (Outzen), Low G. trahen, Dan. trahis, M. H. G. trachen, to draw, drag, pull. The M. H. G. trachen is a causal form, from the strong verb loud as M. H. G. trachen, O. H. G. trahan, to push, shove, also to pull. γ. Further, the fact that the Du. and H. G. forms both begin with t points to a loss of initial s; cf. Du. streek, a track, a prank, G. streich, a stroke, also a trick; see Stroke. = Teut. base STRICK, to stroke; see Fick, iii. 349. Der. *trich-*er, *trich-*ster; *trich-*ary (doublet of trachery, q. v.); *trich-*ish, *trich-*ish-ly, *trich-*ish-ness; also *trich-*y, full of tricks (formed by adding -y to the pl. tricks), Temp. v. 216. And see trigger, trick (2), trick (3).

TRICK (2), to dress out, adorn. (Du.) 'Which they trick up with new-tuned oaths;' Hen. V. iii. 6. 80. 'To trick, or trim, Cozzimare;' Levinus, ed. 1570. Minshew also has the word, but it is not a little strange that Blount, Phillips, Coles, and Kersey ignore trick, in whatever sense. [It is remarkable that the word appears early as an adjective, synonymous with neat or trim. 'The same reason I finde true in two bowes that I have, wherof the one is quicke of caste, tricks, and trimme both for pleasure and profyite;' Ascham, Toxophilus, ed. Arber, p. 28. So also in Levinus.] The verb is a derivative from the sb. trich, above, which obtained many meanings, for which see Schmidt's Shak. Lexicon. For example, a trick meant a knack, neat contrivance, custom, particular habit, peculiarity, a trait of character or feature, a prank, also a toy or trife, as in 'a knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap,' Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 67. Hence to trick, to use a neat contrivance, to exhibit a trait of character, to have a habit in dress. β. There is absolutely no other assignable origin; any connection with W. trac, an implement, harness, gear, as suggested in Webster, is merely futile and explains nothing. Besides which see Trick (3), below. Der. *trich-*ing, ornament, Merry Wives, iv. 4. 79.

TRICK (3), to delineate arms, to blazon; an heraldic term. (Du.) This is the true sense in Hamlet, ii. 2. 479. It is much clearer in the following. 'There they are trick'd, they and their pedigrees; they need no other heralds;' Ben Jonson, The Poetaster, i. 1 (Tuca). = Du. trahen, formerly trachen, 'to delineate, to make a draught or model, to portray;' Hexham. Tricking is a kind of sketching. This is only a particular use of Du. trahen, to pull or draw; cf. our double use of draw. See Trick (1).

TRICKLE, to flow in drops or in a small stream. (E.) M. E. triklen. In Chaucer, C. T. 13603 (Group B, 1864), two MSS. have trikled, two have striked or stryked, and one has strikled; Tyrwhitt prints trikled. 'With teris trikled on hir chекes;' Ywain and Gawain, 1558; in Ritson, Met. Romances, l. 66. 'The teris triklen down;' Polit., Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 207, l. 47. In all these passages the word is preceded by the sb. teris, pronounced as a disyllable, and such must often have been the case; this caused a corruption of strikelen by the loss of initial s; the phrases the teris strikelen and the teris trikelen being confused by the hearer. Trickle is clearly a corruption of strikelen, to flow frequently or to keep on flowing, the frequent. of M. E. striken, to flow. 'Asc strem that strih stille' = as a stream that flows quietly; Specimens of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 44, l. 21. = A. S. stricem, to move or sweep along, to hold one's course, Grein, ii. 489. This is the same word as A. S. stricen, to strike; see Strike. Cf. mod. E. strink; to trickle or strickle is to flow in a course, leaving a strink behind; G. strichen, to move onward, rove, sweep on. The loss of s was facilitated by confusion with trill (Dan. trille), to roll. ¶ This simple solution, suggested by the various readings in Chaucer, explains a very difficult word. For the loss of s, see tried (1).

TRICOLOR, the national flag of France, having three colours, red, white, and blue. (F., =L.) The flag dates from 1789. = F. tricolor, short for drapen tricolore, the three-coloured flag. = F. tricolor, the three-coloured amaranth (Hamilton). = Lat. tri-, prefix, three; and colorum, acc. of color, colour. See Tri- and Colour. Der. tri-color-ad.

TRIDENT, a three-pronged spear. (F., =L.) In Temp. i. s. 106. = F. trident, 'Neptune's three-forked mace'; Cot. = Lat. tridentem, acc. of tridens, an implement with three teeth, esp. the three-pronged spear of Neptune. = Lat. tri-, three; and dens, a tooth, prong. See Tri- and Tooth.

TRIENNIAL, happening every third year, lasting for three years. (L.) A coined word, made by adding -al (Lat. -alis) to Lat. triennium, a period of three years. It supplanted the older word triennial, of F. origin, which occurs early, in P. Plowman, B. vii. 179; this is from F. triennal, 'triennial', Cot., formed by adding -al to Lat. adj. triennalis, lasting for three years. β. Both triennium and triennalis are from Lat. tri-, three; and annus, a year; see Tri- and Annual. Der. triennial-ly.

TRIFLE, anything of small value. (F., =L.) The spelling with i is remarkable, as the usual M. E. spelling was truffe. Spelt truffe, Rob. of Glouc. p. 417, l. 4; truffe (one MS. has truffe), P. Plowman, B. xii. 140; also id. B. xviii. 147 (other MSS. have truffe, truffe); also id. C. xv. 83 (other MSS. truffe, truffe). Spelt truffe (also truffe), P. Plowman's Crede, 352. There is the same variation of spelling in the verb; the proper M. E. form is truffen, spelt truffe, Aynalite of Inwyt, p. 214, l. 24, truffe, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2932, truffen, Prompt. Parv. The tr is the more orig. word; we find 'þous ant oðre truffen þet he bitruffeð moonic men mid' = these and other delusions that he beguiles many men with, Ancrén Riwle, p. 106, l. 7. The old sense was a delusion or trick, a sense still partly apparent in the phr. 'to truffe with.' = O. F. truffe, truffe, mockery, railery (Burguy, who refers us to Rutebeuf, l. 93); dimin. of truffe, 'a gibe, mock, float, yeast, gallery; also, a most dainty kind of round and russet root, which grows in forrests or dry and sandy grounds,' &c.; Cot. He refers to a truffe. That truffe and trifle are the same word, or rather that both senses of F. truffe arose from one form, is admitted by Burguy, Diez, and Littré. It is supposed that a truffe became a name for a small or worthless object, or a subject for jesting. Similarly, in English, the phrases not worth a straw, and not worth a bean, not worth a crone (now turned into crone) were proverbial; so also 'a fee for the phrase,' or 'a fig for it.' See further under Truffle. ¶ It is possible that the change from s to i may have been due to some influence of A. S. trifcan, to pound or bruise small, since this verb may be traced in prov. E. trifled corn, corn that has fallen down in single ears mixed with standing corn (Halliwell); this is not an E. word, but merely borrowed from Lat. tribulare, to bruise corn; see Tribulation. Der. trifls, verb, M. E. truffen, as above; triff-or, triff-ing, triff-ing-ly.

TRIFOLIATE, three-leaved. (L.) Modern. = Lat. tri-, three; and foliatus, leaved, from folium, a leaf; see Trefol.

TRIFORM, having a triple form. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 730. = Lat. triformis; often applied to the moon or Diana. = Lat. tri-, three; and forma, a form; see Tri- and Form.

TRIGGER, a catch which, when pulled, lets fall the hammer or cock of a gun. (Du.) A weakened form of tricker. In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 528, Bell's edition, we find: 'The trigger of his pistol draw.' Here the editor, without any hint and free from any conscience in the matter, has put trigger in the place of tricker; see the quotation as it stands in Richardson and Todd's Johnson. Todd also gives 'Pulling aside the tricker' from Boyle, without any reference. = Du. trikker, a trigger; formerly tricker, 'a drawer, a haler, or a puller,' Hexham. = Du. trikken, to pull, draw; see Triek (1). Der. trig, vb., to stud a wheel (Phillips).

TRIGLYPH, a three-grooved tablet. (L., =Gk.) A term in Doric architecture. In Bloom's Gloss, ed. 1674. = Lat. triglyphus; Vitruvius, iv. s (White). = Gk. τρίγλυφος, three-cloven; also, a triglyph, three-grooved tablet. = Gk. τρι-, three; and γλύφω, to carve, hollow out, groove, which is allied to γλάφω, to hew, and γράφω, to grave; see Tri- and Grave, verb. Der. triglyph-er.

TRIGONOMETRY, the measurement of triangles. (Gk.) Shak. has trigon, i. e. triangle, IV. ii. 4. 288. In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Gk. τρίγωνον, crude form of τρίγωνος, a triangle; and μετρον, measurement (as in geo-metry, &c.), from μετρον, a measure. β. τρίγωνος is properly neut. of τρίγωνος, three-cornered; from τρι-, three, and γωνία, an angle, akin to γωνία, a knee. See Tri-, Knee, and Metre. Der. trigonometri-cal, -ly.

TRIHEDRON, a figure having three equal bases or sides. (Gk.)

Formed like tetra-hedron; with tri-, three, in place of tetra-, four. See Tri- and Tetrahedron. Der. trihedr-al.

TRILATERAL, having three sides. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined with suffix -al (Lat. -alis) from Lat. trilaterus, three-sided. = Lat. tri-, three; and later, stem of latus, a side; see Tri- and Lateral.

TRILINGUAL, consisting of three languages. (L.) Coined with suffix -al (Lat. -alis) from Lat. trilinguus, triple-tongued, speaking three languages. = Lat. tri-, three; and lingua, a tongue. See Tri- and Lingual.

TRILITTEAL, consisting of three letters. (L.) A term applied to Hebrew roots. From Tri- and Litral.

TRILL (1), to shake, to quaver. (Ital.) 'The sober-suited songstress trills her lay,' Thomson, Summer, 746. 'His trills and quavers,' Tatler, no. 222, Sept. 9, 1710. Phillips, ed. 1706, gives: 'Trill, a quavering in music,' and rightly notes that it is an Ital. word, like many other musical terms. = Ital. trillare, to trill, shake, quaver; trillo, sb., a trill, shake. A word of imitative origin, meaning 'to say tri.' Cf. Span. trinar, to trill. Hence are derived E. trill, Da. trillen, G. trillern, &c. Der. trill, sb.

TRILL (2), to turn round and round. (Scand.) Perhaps obsolete, but once common. 'As fortune trills the ball;' Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 67. 'To trill, circumuere;' Livina. 'I trill a whirlygig round aboute,' Je pirouette; Palgrave. M. E. trillon, Chaucer, C. T. 10630. = Swed. trilla, to roll, whence trilla, a roller; Dan. trille, to roll, trundle, whence trille, a disc, trillebor, a wheel-barrow. The same word as Icel. þrilla, to whirl, and E. thrill, thirl, or drill. The orig. initial letter was th, answering to Icel. þ, Swed. and Dan. t, G. d, Du. d or t; hence we also find G. drillen, to turn, bore, also to drill soldiers, and Du. drillen or trillen, 'to wheele, to whirle, or to reele about, to exercise a company of soldiers, to pierce or bore in turning about,' Hexham. See Thrill, Doublets, thrill, drill.

TRILL (3), to trickle, to roll. (Scand.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 78; K. Lear, iv. 3. 13. This is merely a particular use of Trill (1). ¶ I doubt whether trilled occurs in Chaucer in this sense; it appears in Tyrwhitt's edition, C. T. 13601, but the 6 MSS. have trilled, strilled, strybed, strilled, and the Harl. MS. has striden; see further under Trickle.

TRILLION, a million raised to the third power. (F., =L.) A coined word, said in Todd's Johnson to have been invented by Locks. Composed of tri-, put for tri-, three; and -illion, the latter part of the word million. See Tri- and Million; and see Billion.

TRIM, to put in due order, to adjust, to deck, dress, arrange. (E.) 'I trimme, as a man doth his beard [hair];' Palgrave. M. E. trimmen, trimen, a rare word. 'Ich iese godd seolf mid his eadi engles bitrimen þe abeten' = I see God Himself with His blessed angels be-trim (surround) thus about; St. Marharete, p. 23, l. 3. 'Helle hundes habbet bitrimet me' = hounds of hell have surrounded me; id. p. 6, l. 4 from bottom. = A. S. trimman, trimman, to make firm, strengthen (a common word), Grein, ii. 554; also, to set in order, array, prepare, Buckling Homilies, p. 91, l. 31; p. 301, l. 35. The orig. sense is preserved in our phrase 'to trim a boat,' i. e. to make it steady, hence to put it in perfect order. Formed by the regular vowel-change from s to y, from A. S. trima, adj., firm, strong, Grein, ii. 553. + Low G. trim; only in the derivative betrimmed, betrimmed, decked, trimmed, adorned; trimmde, an affected or over-dressed person. Root uncertain. Der. trim, sb., Cor. l. 9. 61; trim, adj. (with the vowel i of the derived verb), Much Ado, iv. 1. 323; trim-ly, trim-ness; trimm-er, trimm-ing; also be-trim, verb, Temp. iv. 68.

TRIMETER, a division of a verse consisting of three measures. (L., =Gk.) In Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace, Art of Poetry. = Lat. trimeter, Horace, Art of Poetry, ll. 252, 259. = Gk. τρίμετρον, consisting of three measures. = Gk. τρι-, three; and μετρον, a measure, metre. See Tri- and Metre.

TRINE, a certain aspect of the planets. (L.) In Milton, P. L. 2. 659. 'Trine, belonging to the number three; as, a trine aspect, which is when a planets are distant from each other [by] a third part of the circle, i. e. 120 degrees. It is noted thus Δ, and accounted by astrologers an aspect of amity and friendship;' Phillips. = Lat. trinus, more common in pl. trini, three by three. = Lat. tri-, three; with suffix -us (Aryan -us). See Tri- and Three. Der. trine-al, Spenser, F. Q. l. 12. 39. Also trine-ly, q. v.

TRINITY, the union of Three in One Godhead. (F., =L.) M. E. trinite, Chaucer, C. T. 10904; Ancrén Riwle, p. 26, l. 10. = O. F. trinite, later trinité. = Lat. trinitatem, acc. of trinitas, a trad. = Lat. trinus, threefold; see Trine. Der. Trinity-Sunday; Trinitarian.

TRINKET (1), a small ornament. (F., =L.) No English dictionary gives a sufficient account of this word; nor has its history been traced. We find M. E. 'trinket, courtiers knyfe,' i. e. a shoemaker's knife, Prompt. Parv. 'Trinket, an instrument for a cordwayner, bottom & burner [solius];' Palsgrave. Way, in his note to Prompt. Parv., says: 'In a Nominal by Nich. de Minshull, Harl. MS. 1002, under partimonia allatarii, occur:—Assorium, a schavyng-knyfe; Galle, idem est, trynket; also, under partimonia rustico, occur:—Sarsonium, a wede-hoke; Sarpa, idem est, trynket.' This shows that a trynket was a general name for a sort of knife, whether for shoemaking or wedding. Palsgrave gives the spelling trynket as well as trinket. Now I think we may fairly assume that trinket was also used to denote a toy-knife, such as could be worn about the person, and that for three reasons. These are: (1) the sense of something worn about the person still clings to trinket at this day; (2) trinket, as used by old authors, means sometimes a tool or implement, perhaps a knife; and (3) toy-knives were very commonly given as presents to ladies, and were doubtless of an ornamental character, and worn on the person. As early as Chaucer's time, the friar had his tippet 'farned (stuffed) ful of busse And pannes, for to grasse ferre man.' A few examples of the use of the word may be added. 'The poorer sort of common souldiers have every man his leather bag or sachel well sowed together, wherin he packs up all his trinkets;' Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 62. Todd's Johnson cites from Tusser: 'What husbandie husbands, except they be fooles, But handson have store-homes for trinkets and tooles?' And from Arbuthnot: 'She was not long about with toys and trinkets, tweezer-cases, pocket-glasses.' More extracts would probably make this matter clearer. β. The etymology of trinket, formerly trynket, in the sense of 'knife,' is certainly from some O. F. form closely allied to O. F. trancher, since Cot. gives trancher de sordiformer in the precise sense of 'a shoemaker cutting-knife;' cf. Span. trincheta, a shoemaker's paring-knife, trancheta, a broad curved knife, used for pruning, a shoemaker's heel-knife. Thus the word is to be connected with F. trancher, formerly trancher, to cut, and Span. tranchar, to cut. Still, the occurrence of h for ch is remarkable, and points back to an O. F. form trinquere, to cut, not recorded. See further under Tremoh. γ. It is not improbable that the extension of the use of the word may have been due to some confusion with O. F. trinquere, 'trash, trifles, nishes, paltry stuff, things of no value,' Cot. This would have sounded in English like trinkets, and, if confused with the pl. of trinket, may account for the fact that we often find trinkets used in the plural number in later instances. δ. Perhaps I ought also to note O. Ital. trincare, 'to trim or smug up,' whence trincato, 'fine, neat, trim,' Florio. This seems allied to trinci, 'fringes, lacings, cuts, or snips in garments,' id.; and to trincare, to cut, allied to Span. trincar, as above.

TRINKET (2), TRINQUET, the highest sail of a ship. (F., = Span., = Du. F.) Spelt trinkette in Minshull, ed. 1617. 'Trinquet, is properly the top or top-gallant on any mast, the highest sail of a ship;' Bloom's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. trinquet, 'the top or top-gallant, &c. (as in Bloom);' Cot. Prob. borrowed from Span. trinquete, a trinket. [Cf. also Ital. trinchetta, trinchetta, a trinket.] Doubtless connected with Span. trincar, to keep close to the wind; cf. trincar las cables, to fasten the rope-ends. = Span. trince, a cord, rope for lashing or making fast. Minsheu mentions the phr. poner la vela a la trince, 'to put a ship that the edges of the sails may be to the wind.' β. The etymology of trince is difficult; Dicæ suggests a connection with Span. trince, a union of three things, a trinity. This word is not in Minshull, and I can see no connection, except trince be supposed to be a three-stranded rope. In that case, the word is of Lat. origin; see Trine. γ. But I offer the guess that the seamen was borrowed from O. Du. stricken, 'to tye running knots;' Hensham. The loss of initial s was easy. This verb stricken is from O. Du. strick, mod. Du. strick, a knot, snare, allied to E. stroke. The Du. strick might account for the sb. trince, and the verb stricken for trincare.

TRINOMIAL, in mathematics, an expression consisting of three terms. (L.) Not a good form; it should rather have been trinominal. Coined, in imitation of binominal, from tri-, three; and nomi-, put for nomina, crude form of nomen, a name. See Tri- and Nominal; and Binomial.

TRIO, in music, a piece for three performers. (Ital., = L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. = Ital. trio, a trio, three parts together. = Lat. tri-, three, neut. of tres, three; see Tri- and Three.

TRIP, to move with short, light steps, to stumble, err; also, to cause to stumble. (E.) M. E. trippin; 'This hors anon gas for to trippe and dance;' Chaucer, C. T. 10626. The word is prob. English, being a lighter form of the base TRAP, to tread, which appears in TRAMP, q. v. + Du. trippen or trappen, 'to tread under foot;' trippelen, 'to trip or to dance;' Hexham. Cf. Low G. trippeln, to trip. + Swed. trippa, to trip; Dan. trippa, to trip, trip, a short step. Cf. Icel. trippi, a young colt (from its tripping gait); also O. F. triper, 'to tread or stamp on,' Cot., a word of Tent. origin. Der. trip, sb., Tw. Nt. v. 170; tripp-ing-ly, Hamlet, iii. 2. 2.

TRIPARTITE, divided into three parts, having three corresponding parts, existing in three copies. (L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV. iii. 1. 80. 'Indentures tripartyte indented;' Bury Will, ed. Tymms, p. 57, in a will dated 1480. = Lat. tri-, three; and partit-, pp. of partire, to part, divide, from parti-, crude form of pars, a part. See Tri- and Part.

TRIPES, the stomach of ruminating animals, prepared for food. (C. F.) M. E. tripe, Prompt. Parv.; King Alissander, l. 1578. Perhaps Celtic, in common with several homely words. = Irish trípeas, a pl. trípeas, entrails; W. trípeas, the intestines; Bret. trípeas, trípeas, more commonly used in the pl. trípeas, trípeas, the intestines. We find also F. tripe, Span. and Port. trípa, Ital. trípea, trípe; words which may easily have been of Celtic origin. β. As the word is certainly not Teutonic, the Celtic origin is the more probable.

TRIPHTHONG, three letters sounded as one. (Gk.) Little used; coined in imitation of diphthong, with prefix tri- (Gk. tri-), three, instead of di- (Gk. di-), double. See Tri- and Diphthong. Der. tríphthong-ical.

TRIPLE, threefold, three times repeated. (F., = L.) In Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. v. 391. [Rich. refers us to Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. met. 7. l. 4266, but the reading there is triple, a much older form.] = F. triple, 'triple, threefold;' Cot. = Lat. triplex, triple. = Lat. tri-, three; and -plus, related to Lat. plenus, full, from the q PAR, to fill. See Tri- and Double. Der. trípl-y; trípl-ed, formed in imitation of double-ed. Doublet, triple.

TRIPPLICATE, threefold. (L.) In mathematics, a triplicate ratio is not the ratio of 3 to 1, but the ratio of two cubical numbers, just as the duplicate ratio is a ratio of squares. In Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. triplicatus, pp. of triplicare, to treble. = Lat. tri-, three; and plie-are, to fold, weave, from q PLAK, to weave. See Tri- and PLY. Der. tríplíc-at-ion, from Lat. acc. triplicationem. Also tríplíc, from Lat. triplex, threefold, Tw. Nt. v. 41; tríplíc-ity, Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 30.

TRIPOD, anything supported on three feet, as a stool. (L., = Gk.; or Gk.) In Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, b. vii. l. 127; where it was taken directly from Gk. Also in Holland, tr. of Plutarch, 1102, where we find 'trípods or three-footed table' (R.) = Lat. tripod, stem of tripus. = Gk. trípous (stem trípous), three-footed; or, as sb., a tripod, a three-footed brass kettle, a three-legged table. = Gk. trípous, three; and pod (stem pod), a foot, cognate with E. foot; see Tri- and Foot. Der. trípous (from nom. trípous, Gk. trípous), an honour examination at Cambridge, so called of præsent because the successful candidates are arranged in three classes; but we must not forget that a trípous sometimes meant an oracle (see Johnson), and that there was formerly a certain scholar who went by the name of trípous, being otherwise called prævaricator at Cambridge or terra filius at Oxford; he was a master of arts chosen at a commencement to make an ingenious satirical speech reflecting on the mediocrities of members of the university, a practice which no doubt gave rise to the so-called trípous-verse, i. e. facetious Latin verses printed on the back of the trípous-lata. See Phillips, ed. 1706. Doublet, trípous.

TRIREME, a galley with three ranks of oars. (L.) Thucydides writeth that Aminocles the Corinthian built the first triremes with three rows of oars to a side; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. vii. c. 56. = Lat. triremis, a trireme. = Lat. triremis, having three banks of oars. = Lat. tri-, three; and remus, an oar. β. The Lat. triremis corresponds to Gk. tríremis, a trireme; Thucydides, i. 13. γ. The Lat. triremis = O. Lat. triremis, put for an older triremis = Gk. tríremis, a rudder, orig. a paddle. The Gk. tríremis, like trípous in trípous, is derived from q AR, to row. See Row (1).

TRISE, the same as TRIO (2); q. v.

TRISECT, to divide into three equal parts. (L.) Coined (in imitation of di-esse) from Lat. tri-, three; and sect-, supine of secare, to cut. See Tri- and Section; also Bisect. Der. trísect-ion.

TRIST, the same as Tryst, q. v.

TRISYLLABLE, a word of three syllables. (F., = L., = Gk.) From Tri- and Syllable; see Disyllable. Cotgrave gives F. trísyllabe, adj., of three syllables. Der. trísyllab-ic, trísyllab-ical, -ly.

TRITE, worn out by use, hackneyed. (L.) In Bloom's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. tritus, worn, pp. of terere, to rub, to wear. + Rens. terere, to rub. + Lithuan. triti, trinti, to rub. = q TAR, to rub; an European root which is prob. identical with Skt. root TAR, to cross over, &c.; Fick, i. 595. Der. trítr-ly, -ness. Also trítr-er-ate, trítr-er-ous, q. v. And see try. From the same root, con-trítr, de-trítr-ment, dis-trítr-er, ter-dy, trútr-er.

TRITON, a marine demi-god. (L., = Gk.) In Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 80. = Lat. trítón. = Gk. trítón, a Triton. Prob. connected with Gk. trítón, third, and trítón, three. Cf. Skt. trítá, the name of a deity; perhaps connected with tritaya, tritva, a triad. The exact connection between trivium and trivium is hardly known.

TRITURATE, to rub or grind to powder. (L.) Blount, ed. 1674, has triturable and trituration. Perhaps the sb. trituration was first introduced from the F. sb. trituration, 'a crumming, crumbling.' Cot. = Lat. trituration, pp. of trituro, to thrash, hence to grind. = Lat. trivira, a rubbing, chafing; orig. fem. of sat. part. of triviro, to rub; see Trite. Der. trituration, triturable.

TRIUMPH, joy for success, rejoicing for victory. (F., = L.) M. E. trumphe, Chaucer, C. T. 14369. = O. F. trumphe, later trumphe, 'a triumph;' Cot. = Lat. triumphum, acc. of triumphus, a triumph, or public rejoicing for a victory. + Gk. θρίαμβος, a hymn to Bacchus, sung in festal processions to his honour; also used as a name for Bacchus. Root unknown. Der. triumph, verb, L. L. L. iv. 3. 35; triumph-er, Titus Andron. l. 170; triumph-ant, Rich. III. iii. 2. 84, from the stem of the pres. part. of Lat. triumphare, to triumph; triumph-ant-ly; also triumph-al, from Lat. triumphalis, belonging to a triumph. Doublet, trump (2).

TRIVIR, one of three men in the same office or government. (L.) Shak. has triviratus, Antony, lii. 6. 28; and even trivirary, L. L. L. iv. 3. 53. = Lat. trivir, one of three men associated in an office. A curious form, evolved from the pl. triviri, three men, which again was evolved from the gen. pl. trivium virorum, so that trivium is the gen. pl. of trivis, three; whilst vir, a man, is a nom. sing. See Three and Virile. Der. trivir-ate, from Lat. triviratus, the office of a trivir.

TRIVINE, the being Three in One. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Lat. tri-, three; and unus, one, cognate with E. one. See Tri- and One.

TRIVET, TRIVET, a three-legged support. (F., = L.) 'A trivette, tripod;' Levinz. In the Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 82, we find trivid under the date 1493; and the pl. trivettis at p. 100, under the date 1504. = F. triped, also triped, 'a trevet;' Cot. = Lat. tripedem, acc. of tripes, having three feet. = Lat. tri-, three; and pes, a foot, cognate with E. foot. Doublet, tripod, which is a Greek form.

TRIVIAL, common, slight, of small worth. (F., = L.) In Shak. All's Well, v. 3. 61. It also meant trite or well known; see Trench, Select Glossary. = F. trivial, 'triviall, common;' Cot. = Lat. trivialis, that which belongs to the cross-roads, that which may be picked up anywhere, ordinary, common-place. = Lat. trivis, a place where three roads meet. = Lat. tri-, three; and vis, a way; see Tri- and Voyage. Der. trivial-ly, nom.

TROCHEE, a metrical foot of two syllables, a long one followed by a short one. (L., = Gk.) Spelt trocheus in Pattenham, Art of Poetry, b. ii. c. 3; now shortened to trochee. = Lat. trocheus. = Gk. τροχαιος, running; also a trochee, from its tripping measure. = Gk. τροχος, a running. = Gk. τροχος, to run. The form of the root is TARGH. Der. troche-ic, from Gk. τροχαιος. And see troch (2).

TROGLODYTE, a dweller in a cave. (F., = Gk.) 'These savages . . . flew away at last into their caves, for they were troglodytes;' Howell, Foreign Travel, sect. x; ed. Arber, p. 51. = F. trogodyte, used by Montesquieu, and doubtless somewhat older than his time. = Gk. τρογλοδιτης, one who creeps into holes, a cave-dweller; Herod. iv. 183. = Gk. τρογλα- put for τρογλα, a hole, a cave; and δύω, to enter, creep into; with suffix -της, of the agent. β. τρογλα is from Gk. τρογγω-, to gnaw, to bite, hence to gnaw a hole; the root of τρογγω is TARG, to bite, extension of TAR, to bore; see Trite. The Gk. δύω is from DU, to go, advance; cf. Skt. du, to go, move.

TROLL, to roll, to sing a catch, to fish for pike with a rod of which the line runs on a reel. (F., = Teut.) M. E. trollen, to roll; Prompt. Parv. To troll the bowl, to send it round, circulate it; see Tread in Nares. To troll a catch is, probably, to sing it irregularly (see below); to troll, in fishing, is prob. rather to draw the line hither and thither than to use a reel; see Trawl. = O. F. trollier, which Cot. explains by 'hounds to troll, range, or hunt out of order;' to which he subjoins the sb. trollerie, 'a trowing or disordered ranging, a hunting out of order;' this shows it was a term of the chase. Roquefort gives O. F. trollier, trollier, to run hither and thither; cf. mod. F. trôler, to lead, drag about, also to stroll about, to ramble. = G. trollen, to roll, to troll; cognate with O. Da. trollen, 'to troole,' Hexham; Low G. trollen, to roll, troll, Bremen Wörterbuch. β. Cf. also W. trol, a cylinder, roll, trollo, to roll, to trundle, trolen, a roller. Also perhaps W. trollis, to whirl, trollit, a whirl, wheel, reel, pulley, windlass, screw; trollod, turning, revolving, rol, a turn. The W. words may be Celtic, and not borrowed from E., if the Aryan form of the root be TAR. The Teut. words may be from the Teut. base THWAR, to turn, to whirl; the Teut. is becoming d in Dutch, as usual. Cf. Thrill, Trill (2). Der. troll-er; also troll-up, a stroller, slattern, loitering person, where the suffix is obscure; can it be for troll-about? Phillips gives troll about, 'to ramble up and down in a careless or sluttish dress;' also trollup, 'an idle, nasty slut.' And see troll.

TROON, a weighing-machine. (F., = L.) See Riley, tr. of Liber Albus, pp. 124, 199, 548; hence tronage, pp. 199, 215. The tron was gen. used for weighing wool. The Tron Church in Edinburgh is so called from being situate near the site of the old weighing-machine. We read of 'Tronage and Poundage' in Arnold's Chronicle, ed. 1811, p. 100; where we also find: 'To tronage perteineth those things that shal be weyyn by the trons of the kyng.' = O. F. trons, a weighing-machine; sufficiently authorised by being Latinised as Low Lat. trons (in Ducange). = Lat. tronus, a pair of scales. Cf. Gk. τρονός, a tongue of a balance, a pair of scales. Der. tron-ago; with F. suffix -ago = Lat. -aticum.

TROOP, a company, especially of soldiers, a crew. (F., = L.?) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 220. = F. troupe, 'a troop, crew;' Cot. O. F. troupe, in use in the 13th cent., Littré; cf. Span. troupe, O. Ital. troupe, 'a troupe,' Florio, mod. Ital. troupe. = Low Lat. troupe, perhaps troupe, a troop. β. Origin doubtful, but most likely due to Lat. troupe, a crowd of men; whence (as Dies suggests) a Low Lat. form trupa or trupa might have been formed, with a subsequent change of gender to troupe. See Trouble. Der. troupe, verb, Romeo, l. 5. 50; hence trouper, trouper.

TROPE, a figure of speech. (L., = Gk.) In Levinz; and in Sir T. More, Works, p. 1340 (K.) = Lat. tropus, a figure of speech, a trope. = Gk. τροπος, a turning, a turn or figure of speech. = Gk. τροπος, to turn. = TARK, to turn; cf. Lat. torquere, to twist. See Torture and Throw. Der. trop-ic, q. v. Also trop-ic-al, i. e. figurative; tropo-log-ic-al, expressed in tropes, Tyndall, Works, p. 166, col. 1 (see Logic). Also hilo-tropo. And see tropy.

TROPHY, a memorial of the defeat of an enemy, something taken from an enemy. (F., = L., = Gk.) Formerly spelt trophet, as in Cotgrave, and in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 56. = F. trophée, 'a trophée, a sign or mark of victory;' Cot. = Lat. trophæum, a sign of victory. = Gk. τροφαίον, τροφαίον, a trophy, a monument of an enemy's defeat, consisting of shields, &c., displayed on a frame. Neut. of τροφαίος, adj., belonging to a defeat. = Gk. τροπή, a return, a putting to flight of an enemy by causing them to turn. = Gk. τροπή, to turn; see Trope. Der. troph-ic-al.

TROPIC, one of the two small circles on the celestial sphere, where the sun appears to turn, after reaching its greatest declination north or south; also one of two corresponding circles on the terrestrial sphere. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. tropik, Chaucer, On the Astrolobe, pt. i. c. 17, l. 2. = F. tropique, 'a tropick;' Cot. = Lat. tropicum, acc. of tropicus, tropical. = Gk. τροπικός, belonging to a turn; β. τροπικός κύκλος, the tropic circle. = Gk. τροπή, a turn; see Trope. Der. tropic, adj.; tropic-al, trop-ic-al-ly.

TROT, to move or walk fast, run as a horse when not going at full pace. (F., = L.) M. E. trouten, Chaucer, C. T. 9412; P. Plowman, B. ii. 164. = F. trotter, 'to trot;' Cot. O. F. trotter, 13th cent.; Littré. We also find O. F. trotier, a trotter, messenger, Low Lat. trotarius; and this answers so nearly to Lat. solitarius, going at a trot, that it is usual to suppose that O. F. trotter = Low Lat. solitarius, to trot, by the common change of l into r, and loss of s. β. Tol-tarius is derived from solutus, adv., at a trot, used of horses. The lit. sense is 'by a lifting up of the feet.' = Lat. solvo, to lift. = TAL, to lift; see Tolerate. γ. This etymology is accepted by Dies, Scheler, and Littré; and it is most likely that words like W. trotin, O. Da. tratten (Hexham), &c., are merely borrowed from E. or F. The H. G. trotten, to tread, is cognate with E. tread, from Teut. base TRAD, and is quite a different word. Der. trot, sb., trott-er.

TROTH, truth, fidelity. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 3. 36. Merely a variant of Truth, q. v. Der. trotch-ed, Much Ado, lii. 1. 38; trotch-pledge, a plighting of troth, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 278; trotch-pledge = trotch-pledged, Wint. Tale, v. 3. 151. Also to-trotch, q. v. Doublet, trotch.

TROUBADOUR, a Provençal poet. (Prov., = L., = Gk.) See Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, sect. iii. And see Littré, Roquefort, and Raynouard. Troubadour does not seem to be the right Prov. word, but a F. modification of it. The Prov. word is trubador (Littré), or (very commonly) trubaire; see Bartsch, Chrest. Provençale. The form trubaire furnishes the clue to this difficult word; it answers to a Low Lat. truperius, regularly formed from Lat. truper, which was used by Venantius Fortunatus (about A. D. 600) with the sense of 'a kind of singing, a song,' White; and see Ducange. This is only a peculiar use of Lat. truper, which usually means a trope; see TROPE. β. Dietz connects the word with Lat. turbare, but the sense of 'disturb' is far removed. We should rather suppose a Low Lat. troperus, which would have the exact sense 'to make or write, or sing a song' which is so conspicuous in O. F. trover (F. trouver). Prov. trobar, Port. and Span. trovar, Ital. trovare; for, though the mod. F. trouver means 'to find' in a general sense, this is merely generalised from the particular sense of 'to find out' or 'devise' poetry; cf. Port. trova, a rime, trovar, to make rimes, trovador, a rimer; Span. trova, verse, trovar, to versify, also to find; trovador, a versifier, hater; trovato, a poet; Ital. trovare, 'to find, to devise, to invent, to imagine, get, obtain, procure, seek out,' Florio. γ. Corresponding to a supposed Low Lat. troperus we should have a sb. troperus, of which the acc. case troperum would at once give Ital. trovatore, Span. and Port. trovador, Port. trobador; or we might form a sb. troparius, answering to Prov. trobaris, F. trovatois. It may be added that, even in Gk., τροπος was used with reference to music, to signify a particular mode, such as τροπος Ἀδύων, the Lydian mode, &c.

δ. As regards the letter-changes, a Lat. p rightly gives Ital. v and Prov. b, as in Ital. arrivare = Prov. arribar = Lat. adripere (see ARRIVE), whereas we should expect a Lat. b (as in turbare) to become v in Provençal, as in Ital. provare = Prov. provar (or proar) = Lat. probare.

ε. The above derivation of troubadour, if correct, gives us also the derivation of the difficult F. trouver, to find; and, as a consequence, accounts for E. trouver and en-trouver.

TROUBLE, to agitate, disturb, confuse, vex. (F., = L.) M. E. trouben, Wyclif, Mark, ix. 19; trublen, Ancien Riwle, p. 268, l. 10. = O. F. troubier, trubier, later troubler, 'to trouble, disturb;' Cot. Formed as if from a Low Lat. turbularis, a verb made from Lat. turbula, a disorderly group, a little crowd of people (White), dimin. of turba, a crowd. [From the Lat. turba we have also the verb turbare, to disturb, with much the same sense as F. troubler.] β. The Lat. turba, a crowd, confused mass of people, is cognate with Gk. τροπή, also written τροπή, disorder, throng, bustle; whence τροπή, to disturb. Allied to Skt. tuar, tar, to hasten, be swift. Der. trouble, sb., spelt trubie, trubie in Prompt. Parv., from O. F. truble, truble, later trumble, 'trouble,' Cot.; trouble-ous, Mer. Wives, i. r. 325; troubt-ous, s Hen. VI, l. 2. 22. Also trubt-ut, trubt-ut-ut, q. v. Also (from Lat. turbare) dis-trub, per-trub. Perhaps troupe.

TROUGH, a long hollow vessel for water. (E.) M. E. trough, Chaucer, C. T. 3677. = A. S. trōð or trōg (gen. trōges), a trough or hollow vessel; used by Ælfred in the sense of a little boat, tr. of Orosius, b. ii. c. 5. § 7, last line. 'Littoraria, trub-icp,' i. e. a little boat, Wright's Voc. l. 48, l. 2; 'Canthero, trug,' id. ii. 14. † Du. trug † Icel. trug † Dan. trug † Swed. tråg † G. trug, M. H. G. trube. We find also G. trude, O. H. G. trud, a chest or trunk. Root uncertain. Perhaps allied to tray.

TROUNCE, to beat, castigate. (F., = L.) 'But the Lord trounced Sinara and all his charettes;' Bible, 1551, Judges, iv. 15. = O. F. tranche, 'a great piece of timber,' Cot., allied to F. trunc, a trunk; cf. also F. truncion, mod. F. trunçon, 'a truncheon or little trunk, a thick slice,' id. The meaning plainly is, to beat with a large stick or cudgel. See TRUNcheon and TRUNK. Cf. also F. trancier, 'to cut or break off in two,' Cot.; Span. trunzar, to shatter.

TROUSERS, TROWERS, a garment worn by males on the lower limbs. (F., = L.) The form trousers does not seem to be old; Richardson quotes 'by laced stockings and trousers' from Wiseman's Surgery, b. i. c. 18; Wiseman died about 1766. In older books the word appears without the letter r, in the forms trousses, troussis, &c., and even trouze; cf. Lowland Sc. trous. We find, however, the curious and corrupt form troussers in Shak. Hen. V, iii. 7. 57, where most mod. editions have trousers, though the same form occurs also in Dekker and Middleton; see Dyce's Glossary to Shakespeare.

β. The word was particularly used of the nether garments of the Irish; Nares cites, from Ware's Antiquities of Ireland, 'their little coats, and strait breeches called trousses.' 'Their breeches, like the Irish trousses, have hose and stockings sewed together;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 297 (Todd); or p. 213, ed. 1665. Herbert also has the spelling trousses, p. 225, ed. 1665. 'The poor trousses' Irish there;' Drayton, Polyolbion, song 22. Cf. also: 'And leaving me to stalk here in my trousses,' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, l. 1 (Pennyboy junior). 'Four wild Irish in trousses;' Ford, Perkin Warbeck, iii. 2; stage direction. = F. trousses, a pl., trunk-hose, breeches (Hamilton; see also Littre). Trousses is the pl. of trousser, a bundle, formerly also a case, such as 'a quiver for arrows;' Cot. Hence trousses became a jocular term, used esp. of the breeches of a page (Littre), and was so applied by the English to the Irish garments. = F. trousser, 'to truss, pack, tuck, bind or girt in, pluck or twitch up;' Cot. These senses help to explain the sb. See further under TRUSS.

γ. Wedgwood suggests that the word is Celtic; we do indeed find Gael. trubhain, Irish trudhain, truss, trousses, trousers, but these seem to be nothing but the E. trousers, which was a difficult word for Gael or Irishman to spell. So also we find Gael. truan, Irish troussis, I truss up, clearly borrowed from E. truss; and it is remarkable that Spenser, in his View of the State of Ireland, after describing various Irish garments, adds: 'all these that I have rehearsed unto be not Irish garments, but English; for the quaked leather Jacke is old English,' &c.; Globe edition, p. 639, col. 1. I conclude that the word is French, and merely imported into Ireland and Scotland. The word has no Celtic root. Der. troussans, q. v.

TROUSSEAU, a package; esp. the lighter articles of a bride's outfit. (F., = L.) Modern; yet it is not a little remarkable that trousseau, i. e. packages, occurs in the Ancien Riwle, p. 168, l. 1. = F. trousseau, 'a little truss or bundle;' Cot. = O. F. troussat, dimin. of F. trousse, a truss, bundle; see TRUSS.

TROUT, a fresh-water fish. (L., = Gk.) M. E. troute, spelt troute in the Prompt. Parv. = A. S. trōt; 'Tracta, trōt,' Wright's Voc. i. 55. = Lat. trutta (whence also F. truite); also truttus. = Gk. τρούτος, a gnawer, lover of dainties; also a sea-fish with sharp teeth. = Gk. τρούτος, to gnaw; with suffix -τρούτος of the agent. As the sense is 'gnawer' or 'nibbler,' it was easily applied to fish of various kinds. = † TARG, to gnaw, extension of † TAR, to bore, for which see TRITE. From the same root are Gk. τρούτος, a goat, and E. trug-ody, trug-odyte.

β. Fick (i. 297) cites Skt. truti, a kind of fish, from trut, to tear asunder, which he explains as from a base TRUK, to burst, extension of TRU, a variant of † TAR, as above. It comes to the same sense, and brings us back to the same root; he appears to think that Lat. trutta was not borrowed from Gk.

TROVER, the gaining possession of goods, by finding or otherwise. (F., = L., = Gk.) 'Trover is the name of an action, which a man hath against one who, having found any of his goods, refuseth to deliver them upon demand;' Blount's Nomenclicon, ed. 1691. In Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 650. An old law-term, in early use, as shewn by the spelling. = O. F. trover, later trouver, to find. It appears to answer to a Low Lat. troperus, orig. used in the sense to find out poetry, to invent, devise, which was a sense of O. F. trover, and prob. the orig. one. See further under Troubadour. Der. Hence trousser-trove, treasure found, where trouss is now barbarously pronounced as a monosyllable, though it stands for O. F. trouss (trouss), pp. of trouver, to find; see Blackstone, Commentaries, b. i. c. 8.

TROW, to believe, think, suppose to be true. (E.) In Luke, xvii. 9 (A. V.) M. E. troum, Chaucer, C. T. 693. = A. S. trōwian, trōwian, occurring as ge-trōwian, ge-trōwian, ge-trōwian in Grein, i. 466, 466; the prefixed ge- making no difference; the sense is 'to have trust in.' Also trōwian, Grein, ii. 552. A weak verb, from A. S. trōwian, trōwian, trust, Mark, xi. 52. = A. S. trōwian, true; see TRU. † Du. trouwen, only in the sense 'to marry;' from trouwen, sb., trust, trouwen, adj., true. † Icel. trúa, to trow; from trúa, true. † Dan. trua, to believe; from trua, sb., truth, trua, adj., true. † Swed. trua, to trow, believe. † G. trouwen, to trust, marry; from trouwen, fidelity, trouwen, true.

TROWEL, a tool used in spreading mortar and in garlicking. (F., = L.) M. E. trouel; 'a trouel of [a] masoun;' Wyclif, Amos, vii. 7, earlier version; the later version has trulle. 'Hec troula, a trouelle;' Wright's Voc. i. 233, col. 1. Spelt trouell in Palgrave. = F. truelle, a trowel, spelt truelle in the 13th cent. (Littre). = Low Lat. trulla, a trowel, in use A. D. 1163 (Ducange); variant of Lat. trulla, a small ladle, scoop, fire-pan, trowel. Both are dimm. forms of Lat. truo, a stirring-spoon, skimmer, ladle. β. Allied to Gk. τρούτος, a stirring-spoon, ladle; cf. τρούτος, a borer, τρούτος, a borer. = † TAR, to turn round and round, also to bore; see TRITE.

TROWERS, the same as TROUSERS, q. v.

TROY-WEIGHT, the weight used by goldsmiths. (F.; and E.) Spelt trou-weight in Minshew, ed. 1627. 'The received opinion is that it took its name from a weight used at the fair of Troyes; this is likely enough; we have the pound of Cologne, of Toulouse, and perhaps also of Troyes. That there was a very old English pound of 120s. is a well-determined fact, and also that this pound existed long before the name Troy was given to it, [is] another. . . The trou-pound was mentioned as a known weight in s Hen. V. cap. 4 (1414), and s Hen. VI. cap. 13 (1421), &c.; Eng. Cyclopaedia. And see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. This explanation is verified by the expression 'a Paris pece of sylver weyng bes the weight of troye viij vancia;' Arnold's Chronicle, ed. 1811, p. 108; at p. 191, it appears simply as 'trou weight.' Troyes is a town in France, to the S.E. of Paris. Cotgrave, s. v. livre, mentions the pounds of Spain, Florence, Lyons, and Milan; and explains la livre des apothecaries as belonging to 'Troy weight.'

TRUANT, an idler, a boy who absents himself from school without leave. (F., = C.) M. E. truant, Gower, C. A. ii. 13. l. 6. The derived sb. trouandis occurs as early as in the Ancien Riwle, p. 320, l. 2. = F. trouand, 'a common beggar, vagabond, a rogue, a lais rascal;' Cot. He also gives the adj. trouand, 'beggary, rascally, roughish.' We find also Span. truhan, Port. truhão, a buffoon, jester. Of Celtic origin. = W. tru, truhan, wretched, truhan, a wretch; cf. truid, wretchedness, truim, pity, truger, compassionate, truonus, piteous. Corn. tru, interj. alas! woe! traw, wretched. Breton truss, truhra, pity, trussa, to pity; trussat, a vagabond, beggar, of which Legonidec says that, though this particular form is borrowed from French, it is none the less of Celtic origin, and that, in the dialect of Vannes, a beggar is called truh. Irish trugha, miserable, unhappy; trugha, grief; tru, lean, piteous; truidh, a poor, miserable creature; trugha, pity, also poor, lean, meagre; &c. Gael. trughan, a poor, distressed creature; trugha, lamentable; from trugha, wretched; cf. truait, pity, truair, mercy.

β. Thus the F. truand is formed, with excrement d, from the sb. which appears as W. truam, Gael. trughan, a wretched creature; which sb. was orig. an adj. extended from the shorter form seen in W. tru, Irish trugá, Gael. trugá, wretched.

TRUCE, a temporary cessation of hostilities, temporary agreement. (E.) The etymology is much obscured by the curious modern spelling; it is really a plural form, and might be spelt truces, i. e. pledges, pl. of truce, a pledge of truth, derived from the adj. truce. This comes out clearly in tracing the M. E. forms. M. E. truce, Rob. of Glouc. p. 488, l. 18; truceus, K. Alisaunder, 2808; truceus, Rich. Coer de Lion, 3207. 'Truceys, trucey, or truce of pees;' Prompt. Parv. All these are pl. forms; the sing. truce, a truce, pledge of reconciliation, occurs in P. Plowman, B. vi. 333, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 879. = A. S. trucea, usually written trucea, used in the sense of compact in Gen. xvii. 19; it also means faith, Mark, xi. 25 = A. S. truce, true; see TRUE.

TRUCK (1), to barter, exchange. (F., = Span., = Gk. γ) 'All goods, wares, and merchandises so trucked, bought, or otherwise dispanded;' Hackluyt's Voyages, l. 228. Just above, on the same page, we have: 'by way of merchandise, trucke, or any other respect.' M. E. trucken, Prompt. Parv.; and even in Aenon Rivie, p. 408, l. 15. = F. triquer, 'to truck, chop, swab, score, barter;' Cot. = Span. (and Port.) trocar, to barter. β. Origin unknown. Dies gives two conjectures: (1) from a supposed Low Lat. troucaris, 'to change, due to Lat. trouca, neut. pl., changes, a word of Gk. origin (see TROPE): (2) from a supposed Low Lat. troucaris, 'to traffic, which might have been shortened to troucaris' (see TRAFICO). Langensiepen supposes a transposition of a verb troucaris, due to troucaris, to twist, hence to turn; which is not satisfactory. Scheler notes that the F. word was borrowed from Spanish. Florio, ed. 1598, gives Ital. troucaris, 'to truck, barter,' also 'to skud away;' which suggests Gk. τροχία, a course; see TRUCK (2). Der. truck, sb., as above, from F. truy, 'a truck, or trucking;' Cot.; cf. Span. truero, truero, barter, Port. traco, the change of a piece of gold or silver, truck, barter. Also truck-egg.

TRUCK (2), a small wheel, a low-wheeled vehicle for heavy articles. (L., = Gk.) 'In gunnery, trucke are entire round pieces of wood like wheels fixed on the axle-trees of the carriages, to move the ordnance at sea;' Phillips, ed. 1706. He also gives: 'trucke, a wheel, a top for children to play with.' Truck is an English adaptation of Lat. truchus, now disused in its Lat. form. = Gk. τροχία, a runner, a wheel, disc. = Gk. τροχίον, to run; see TROCHOS. Der. truckle, a little wheel, answering to Lat. truchus; Phillips gives: 'truckle, a truckle or pulley, . . . which is one of the six mechanical powers or principles;' shewing that the Lat. form truchus was once in use. Cotgrave explains F. jabot by 'a truckle or pulley;' and the word occurs rather early, as shewn under TRUCKLE, verb. Hence truckle-bed, a bed that runs on small wheels and can be pushed under another bed, Romeo, ii. 1. 39; see NARA. And see truckle below.

TRUCKLE, to submit servilely to another. (L., = Gk.) 'Truckle, to submit, to yield or buckle to;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Not an old word; Todd's Johnson has: 'Shall our nation be in bondage thus Unto a nation that truckles under us?' Cleveland (no reference). Also: 'For which so many a legal cockhold Has been run down in courts and truckled;' Butler's Hudibras (no reference). To truckle under is a phrase having reference to the old truckle-bed, which could be pushed under another larger one; and the force of the phrase is in the fact that a pupil or scholar slept under his tutor on a truckle-bed. See Hall's Satire, b. ii. sat. 6, where he intentionally reverses the order of things, saying that a complaisant tutor would submit 'to lie upon the truckle-bed, Whiles his young maister lieth o'er his head.' Warton, in his Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, iii. 149, has a note upon this passage in which he proves that such was the usual practice both at Oxford and Cambridge, citing: 'When I was in Cambridge, and slept in a truckle-bed under my tutor,' Return from Parnassus (1606), Act ii. sc. 6 (Amoretto). He quotes from the statutes of Magdalen College, Oxford, 1459, the statute: 'Sint duo lecti principales, et duo lecti rotales, truckyll-beddys vulgariter nuncupati;' cap. xlv. He adds: 'And in the statutes of Trinity College, Oxford, gives [in] 1556, truckle-bed, the old spelling, ascertains the etymology from truchus, a wheel.' In fact, this shews how the words truckle and truck (2) came to be taken immediately from the Latin; they originated at the universities. ¶ No connection with A. S. trucian, to fail, which does not in any way explain the word or its use.

TRUCULENT, fierce, barbarous, cruel (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. truculent, 'truculent, cruel;' Cot. = Lat. truculentus, acc. of truculentus, cruel; extended from trux (gen. trucus), fierce, wild. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'threatening;' cf. G. dröhen, M. H. G. dröwen, O. H. G. dröwen, to threaten, A. S. þrögan, þrögan, to threaten. Der. truculently, truculency.

TRUDGE, to travel on foot slowly, march heavily. (Scand. F.) In Shak. it means to run heavily, trot along or away; Merry Wives, i. 3. 91; iii. 3. 13; Romeo, i. 2. 34; i. 3. 34. 'May from the prison trudge;' Turberville, That Lovers must not despair, st. 6. 'And let them trudge hence apace;' Bale, Apologie, fol. 6 (R.) [There is no doubt that the word is associated in the mod. E. mind with the verb to trudge, but there is no possible connection; the vowel is different and the spelling with d delusive, since dgo answers to an older gga, as in E. drudge from M. E. druggen.] I believe the word to be Scand., and to mean 'to walk in snow-shoes,' hence to trudge along with a heavy step. = Swed. dial. truga, a snow-shoe, also spelt truga, trudja, tröger (Riets); Norw. truga, truw, tryga, tryg, a snow-shoe (Aasen), whence the verb tryga, tryga, to provide with snow shoes; Icel. þruga, a snow-shoe, a large flat frame worn by men to prevent them from sinking in the snow. This is only given as a probability. ¶ The Swed. trug, Icel. trugr, slow, going with difficulty, does not correspond in the vowel-sound. Florio has Ital. truscere, 'to trudge, to skud, or pack away; see TRUCK (1).

TRUE, firm, established, certain, honest, faithful. (E.) M. E. trous (properly dissyllabic), P. Plowman, B. l. 88. = A. S. trūwe, true, also spelt trūwe, Grein, ii. 532. Cf. A. S. trūwe, trūwe, truth, preservation of a compact. + Du. trouw, true, faithful; trouw, fidelity. + Icel. trygg, trúv, true. + Dan. trú, true; trú, truth. + Swed. trogen, true; trú, fidelity. + G. trou, O. H. G. trūmi, true; trūwe, O. H. G. trūmi, fidelity. + Goth. triggwa, true; triggwa, a covenant; cf. trouan, to trust, be persuaded. β. The Test. type is TREWA, true, Fick, iii. 124; from a base TRAU, to believe. Fick cites O. Prussian drūwis, drūwi, belief, drūwis, to believe. Root unknown. Der. tru-ly, tru-ism (a coined word); also tru-th, M. E. trouthe, trouthe, Chaucer, C. T. 10877, from A. S. trūwþu, Exod. iux. 5, cognate with Icel. tryggþu; hence truthful, -ly, -ness. Also trū (doublet of truth), truw, tru-st.

TRUFFLE, a round underground edible fungus. (F., = L.) In Philippi, ed. 1706. = F. truffe, another spelling of truffe, 'a most dainty kind of round and russet root;' Cot. Cf. Span. trufa, a truffle; also a cheat (see TRIFLE). We also find F. truffe in the same sense; Ital. truffa, a truffle; truffi bianchi, white esculent roots, i. e. potatoes. β. The F. truffe, Span. trufa, is supposed to be derived from Lat. tuber, a tuber, esculent root, a truffle (Juv. v. 116); the neut. pl. tubera would give a nom. fem. trufa (whence truffe by shifting of r) as in other instances; e. g. the Lat. fem. sing. antiphrasa = Gk. neut. pl. ἀντιφράσα. γ. That this is the right explanation (for which see Dies and Scheler) is rendered almost certain by the Ital. form truffe (also truffola), where tr- stands for Lat. terra (of the earth), and truffola = terra tuber. Florio gives Ital. truffa, truffola, 'a kind of meate, fruits, or roots of the nature of potatoes called truffes [truffles?]; also, a kind of artichock.' δ. From the Ital. truffola is derived (by dissimilation of the double f) the curious G. hartoffel, a potato. See further under TUBER. Doublet, trife, q. v.

TRULL, a drab, worthless woman. (G.) In Shak. Antony, iii. 6. 95; and in Levens. 'The Governour [of Brill, in Holland] was all bedewed with drinke, His trulls and he were all layde downe to sleepe;' Gascoigne, Voyage into Holland, a. n. 1572; Works, ed. Hazlitt, l. 391. We should expect to find it a Du. word, but it is German, imported, perhaps, by way of Holland, though not in Hexham or Sewel's dictionaries. = G. trulle, trulle, a trull. It answers to O. Du. trul, 'a pleasant or a merry man, or a gester,' Hexham, and to Dan. truld, Swed. and Icel. trull, a merry elf; see DROLL. The orig. sense was merely a merry or droll companion.

TRUMP (1), a trumpet, kind of wind instrument. (F., = L.) M. E. trumps, trumps, Chaucer, C. T. 676 (or 674); Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 30, l. 13. = F. trump, 'a trump, or trumpet;' Cot. Cf. Span., Port., and Prov. trumpa, Ital. trumba. β. The Span. and Port. trumpa, as well as Ital. trumba, also mean an elephant's trunk, and Ital. trumba even means a pump; the F. trump had once all three senses; see Cotgrave. All the senses are included in that of 'tube,' which renders the explanation by Dies probable, viz. that these words are derived, by the insertion of r and m, from Lat. tuba, a tube, a trumpet. The insertion of m before t is common; that of r after t is also found, according to Diez. See Tube. y. But trubs may have been a true (vulgar) Latin form, since Russ. truba means both 'tube' and 'trumpet,' and Lith. truba means a horn. Cf. Gk. truba, a hole; from $\sqrt{\text{TARK}}$, to turn round; see Tropa. Der. trump-et, M. E. trumpet, Gower, C. A. iii. 217, l. 28, from F. trompette, 'a trumpet,' Cot., dimin. of F. trompe; trump-et-er, from F. trompateur, 'a trumpeter,' Cot. Also trumpet-fish; trumpet-tongued, Mach. i. 7. 19. And see trumpety.

TRUMP (a), one of the suit of cards that takes any other suit. (F., = L.) Well-known to be a corruption of trumpet; see Latimer's Sermons (Parker Society), i. 1, 8, 13, and Fox's remarks on them, id. vol. ii. p. xi. Triumph in Shak. Antony, iv. 14. 20, prob. means a trump-card; see Nares. = F. triumph, 'the card-game called ruffe, or trump; also the ruffe or trump at it;' Cot. See Triumph. Der. trump, verb; trump-card.

TRUMPERY, falsehood, idle talk, trash. (F., = L.) In Temp. iv. 186; and in Levina. The proper sense is deceit, or something deceptive, hence imposture, &c. = F. tromperie, 'a craft, wile, fraud;' Cot. = F. tromper, 'to consen, deceive,' id. β . Littré says that the orig. sense was to play on the trump or trumpet; thence arose the phrase se tromper de quelqu'un, to play with any one, to amuse oneself at his expense; hence the sense to beguile, cheat. This seems to be the right and simple solution; and Littré also quotes, a. v. trampette (1), the phrase me jouer de la trompette, are you playing the trumpet with me, i. e. are you playing with me, which confirms it. See further under Trump (1).

TRUMPET, the dimin. of Trump (1), q. v.

TRUNCATE, to cut off short. (L.) Phillips has 'truncated pyramid or cone.' = Lat. truncatus, pp. of truncare, to cut off, reduce to a trunk. = Lat. truncus, a trunk, stock; see Trunk. Der. truncat-ion, from F. truncation, 'a truncation, truncing, mutilation, cutting off,' Cot., from Lat. acc. truncationem.

TRUNCHEON, a cudgel, short staff. (F., = L.) M. E. trunchoun, Chaucer, C. T. 2617 (or 2618), where it means the shaft of a broken spear; so also trunchon, King Alimunder, 3745. = F. truncheon, 'a truncheon, or little trunk, a thick slice, luncheon, or piece cut off;' Cot. Also spelt tranchon in O. F., whence our spelling; mod. F. truncheon. Dimin. of F. tronc, 'trunk, stock, stem;' Cot.; see Trunk. Der. trunchoun-er, Hen. VIII. v. 4. 54.

TRUNDLE, a wheel, anything round; to roll. (E.) Now chiefly used only as a verb, to roll round; the sb. occurs in trundle-bed, a bed running on wheels, trundle-tail, a round tail of a dog, and was formerly spelt trindie, trindel, trindel. 'Trindyll, sb., tournoquer;' Palgrave. 'I trindyll, as a boale or a stone dothe, Je rouille;' id. M. E. trindil, sb., trindelen, verb. 'Trindyl, troclea;' 'Trindelen a round thing, Trocleo, volvo,' Prompt. Parv.; from A. S. trindel, a circle; see further under Trend. β . The change of vowel is curious; we find O. Friesic trund, round, as well as trind, round; the form trindis answers to A. S. trindyl, a circle (Bosworth), whose only reference for it is to the gloss: 'Circumtectum, trindylis roif' in Wright's Gloss., l. 40, col. 1, where Wright prints trindylid. However, I also find 'Anele, win-trindel, lytel scyld;' Wright's Voc. l. 35. Here win = battle, and win-trindel is a little round shield; this establishes A. S. trindyl, rightly corresponding to E. trundle. y. We find also Swed. and Dan. trind, round; and it is supposed that there may have been a lost A. S. strong verb trindan, to roll (pt. t. trindan, pp. trindan), whence the causal verb trindan, to cause to roll, make to bend (cf. E. trind), would be regularly formed. This seems highly probable, as it would account for trind, trindis (from trindan); for trindle (from trindan); and for trindie (from pp. trindan), as well as for O. Friesic trund. δ . If this be so, the Teut. base is TRAND, to turn, roll; quite independent of E. turn. Der. trundle-bed, see quotation a. v. truckle; trundle bedstead occurs in Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 220, l. 21, in a will dated 1649; trundle-tail, a cur, Beaum. and Fletcher, Love's Cure, iii. 3. 16, according to Richardson, but Darley's ed. has trindle-tail; see, however, K. Lear, iii. 6. 73.

TRUNK, the stem of a tree, proboscis of an elephant, shaft of a column, chest for clothes. (F., = L.) 'A chest, or trunk of clove syluer;' Fabyan. Chron. cap. 131, fol. lxxvii, ed. Ellis, p. 113. = F. tronc, 'the trunk, stock, stem, or body of a tree; also a trunk, or headless body; also, the poor man's box in churches' (whence E. trunk = box); Cot. = Lat. truncus, acc. of truncus, a trunk, stem, trunk of the body, piece cut off. Spelt truncus in Lucretius, l. 354. = Lat. truncus, adj., maimed, mutilated. β . Prob. from trypere, to twist, wrench, wrest (hence twist off, wrench off); cf. torquere, a press, which is certainly from trypere. See Torture. γ . The elephant's trunk is named from its thickness, resembling a tree-stem; it occurs in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 7. Der. trunk-off, having a trunk; trunk-line (of a railway); trunk-hair, trunk-breeches (see Nares), short wide breeches, reaching a little above or sometimes below the knee, and striped, meaning (I suppose) trunked hose, i. e. cut short (cf. trunked = truncated, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 5. 4). Also trunc-er, q. v., trunch-er, q. v., trunc-ion, q. v., trunc-er, q. v.

TRUNNION, one of the stumps or round projections on each side of a cannon, on which it rests in the carriage. (F., = L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. trognon, 'the stock, stump, or trunk of a branchless tree;' Cot. Dimin. of tron, 'a piece of anything, a trunk, stem,' &c.; Cot. This is a shortened form of truncus, due perhaps (as Diez suggests) to misdividing the derived word truncus as trun-pon; in any case tron and trunc meant the same thing, as Cotgrave tells us. Cf. Ital. truncione, from truncus. See Trunk.

TRUSS, to pack, bind up, fasten as in a package or in bundles. (F., = L.) M. E. trussen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 218; Ancien Riwe, p. 323, l. 6. [The sb. trusse, a package, is in the Prompt. Parv., p. 504.] = O. F. trusser, trasser (also trorer), later trousseur, 'to trusse, pack, bind or girt in;' Cot. The oldest spelling trorer answers to a Low Lat. form trorsarius (not found), to twist together, formed from trorsus, pp. of trorsare, to twist. Cf. Low Lat. trorsus, a torch, orig. a piece of twisted rope; and see Torch and Torture. Cf. Ital. trorsare, to twist, wrap, tie fast; trorsus, a torch. Der. truss, sb., M. E. trusse, as above. Also truss-er, q. v., truss-ess, q. v.

TRUST, confidence, belief, credit, ground of confidence. (Scand.) M. E. trust, Ancien Riwe, p. 323, l. 7. Not E., but Scand. = Icel. trust, trust, protection, firmness, confidence; Dan. and Swed. tröst, comfort, consolation. + G. tröst, consolation, help, protection. + Goth. trawist, a covenant; Eph. ii. 12. β . The Teut. type is TRAUSTA, Fick, iii. 125; formed with suffix -sta from the Teut. base TRAU, to believe; see True, Trow. Der. trust, verb, M. E. trusten, O. Eng. Homilies, l. 213, l. 7; trust-er, one who is trusted, a coined word, with the suffix -er = F. -ator (Lat. -ator); trust-ful, 1 Hen. IV, ii. q. 434, trust-ful-ly, trust-ful-ness; trust-less, Shak. Lucrece, 2; trust-ly, M. E. trusti, Ancien Riwe, p. 334, l. 21; trust-i-ly, trust-i-ness; trust-worthy (not in Todd's Johnson), trust-worthy-ly, trust-worthy-ness. Also mis-trust, q. v., tryst, q. v.

TRUTH, sb.; see True. Doublet, troth.

TRY, to test, sift, select, examine judicially, examine experimentally; also, to endeavour. (F., = L.) The old sense is usually to sift, select, pick out. M. E. tryen, tryen, P. Plowman, B. i. 205. 'Tryen, tryen, Eligo, preeligo, discerno;' Prompt. Parv. = F. trier, 'to pick, chuse, cull out from among others;' Cot. Cf. Prov. trier, to choose, tris, choice (Bartsch). = Low Lat. tritare, to triturate; cf. Ital. trivare, 'to bruise, to wear, . . . also, to grind or thresh come.' Florio. = Lat. tritus, pp. of trere, to rub, to thresh corn; see Trite. β . Diez explains it thus. Lat. trere granum is to thresh corn; the Prov. trier in gre de la palme is to separate the corn from the stalk; to which he adds other arguments. It would appear that the meaning passed over from the threshing of corn to the separation of the grain from the straw, and thence to the notion of selecting, culling, purifying. To try gold is to purify it; cf. 'tried gold,' Merch. Ven. ii. 7. 83; 'the first seven times tried this;' id. ii. q. 63. Der. try, sb., Timon, v. 1. 11. Also try-ing; try-sail, a small sail tried when the wind is very high. Also try-sail, a coined word, spelt trial in Frith's Works, p. 81, col. 1.

TRYST, TRYST, an appointment to meet, an appointed meeting. (Scand.) See Jameson's Scotch Dictionary. Properly a pledge. M. E. trist, tryst, a variant of trust. 'Lady, in you is all my tryst;' Erl of Tolous, 550, in Ritson, Met. Romances, vol. iii. Cf. Icel. trysta, to confirm, rely on; from troustr, trust, protection. See Trust.

TUB, a kind of vessel, a small caulk. (O. Low G.) M. E. tubbe, Chaucer, C. T. 3621. Not improbably a term introduced by Flemish brewers. = O. Du. tubbe, 'a tubbe;' Hexham; mod. Du. tubbe; Low G. tubbe, a tub, esp. a tub in which orange-trees are planted. Root unknown. β . The G. zuber, cognate with Low G. tuber, means a two handled-vessel, and is the same as O. H. G. zuper, zuber; this is derived from zusi, later zusi, two, and the suffix -bar (as in frucht-bar, fruit-bearing) from O. H. G. beran, peran, to bear. Thus G. zuber = Low G. tuber (= two-bearing), i. e. a vessel borne or carried by two handles. But this throws no light on tub, since tubbe and tuber are a long way apart. Der. tubby, tub-like.

TUBE, a pipe, long hollow cylinder. (F., = L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 590. = F. tube, 'a conduit-pipe;' Cot. = Lat. tubum, acc. of tubus, a pipe, tube; akin to tuba, a trumpet. Root uncertain. Der. tub-ing, a length of tube; tubul-er, from Lat. tubulus, dimin. of tubus; tubul-ot-ed, from Lat. tubulatus, formed like a pipe. And see trump (1).

TUBER, a knob on a root, a rounded root. (L.) 'Tuber, a truffe, a knot in a tree,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1617. = Lat. tuber, a bump, swelling, tumour, knob on plants, a truffe. To be divided as tu-ber (cf. Lat. pluvius, rain, with plu-it, it rains); allied to tu-er-er, to swell; so that tuber is lit. 'a swelling.' See Tumid. Der. tuber-cle, from F. tubercle, 'the small rising or swelling of a pimple,'

Cot., from Lat. tuber-cul-um, double dimin. of tuber; whence tuber-cul-or, tuber-cul-osa = F. tuberculosa, 'swelling.' Cot. Also tuber-osa (Phillips), from F. tuberosus, 'swelling, bunched.' Cot., from Lat. tuberosus, full of swellings; also tuber-osa (Phillips), directly from Lat. tuberosus. Also tuffa, q. v.; trifle, q. v.; pro-tuber-ant.

TUCK (1), to draw close together, fold or gather in a dress. (O. Low G.) M. E. tuckan. 'Tuckyn up, or stykkyt vp, truckyn vp or stakkyt vp. Suffarans.' Prompt. Parv. Chaucer has tucked, i. e. with the frock drawn up under the girdle. C. T. 623; also y-tucked, 7319. Not an E. word, but borrowed from abroad. = Low G. tucken, tucken, to pull up, draw up, tuck up; also to entice; allied to Low G. tucken, to rack up, lie in folds, as a badly made garment. The same word as O. Du. tucken, 'to entice,' Hexham. † G. tucken, to draw or twitch up, to shrug. β. This is a secondary verb, formed (like tug) from the pp. of the strong verb appearing as Goth. tukan, A. S. toca, G. ziehen, to draw. It is a mere variant of Tug, q. v.; and a doublet of Tug and Touch. The verb means 'to draw up with a tug or twitch,' to hitch up. Der. tuck, sb., a fold; tuck-or, a piece of cloth tucked in over the bosom. Doublets, tug, tuck, q. v. † M. E. tuckan, in Prompt. Parv. as above, is a Scand. word; Swed. trycka, Dan. trykke, to press, squeeze; cf. G. drücken.

TUCK (2), a rapier. (F., = Ital., = G.) 'Dismount thy tuck;' Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 244. A fencing term, and, like other such terms, an Ital. word, but borrowed through French. Just as E. ticket is from F. estiquet or estipet, so tuck is a corruption of F. sauc (perhaps sometimes stuc). = F. sauc, 'the stock of a tree; . . . also a rapier, or tack; also a thrust;' Cot. = Ital. stacca, 'a trancheon, a tack, a short sword;' Florio. = G. stuck, a stump, stock, stick, staff; cognate with E. Stock, q. v.

TUCKET, a flourish on a trumpet. (Ital., = Tent.) In Hen. V. iv. 2. 35. = Ital. tocatta, a prelude to a piece of music; Florio only gives tocatta, 'a touch, a touching;' but he notes tocco di campana, (lit. a touch of the bell), 'a knock, a stroke, a knell or peal, or tonie upon the bells.' Tocatta is properly the fem. of the pp. of toccare, to touch; of Teut. origin. See Touch. And compare Tocain.

TUESDAY, the third day of the week. (E.) M. E. Tuesday; spelt Tuesday in Wyclif's Select Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 73, l. 14. = A. S. Tiwes dag, Mark. xiv. 1, rubric. Lit. the day of Tiw, of which Tiw is the gen. case. † Icel. Týs dagr, the day of Týr; where Týr is the gen. of Týr, the god of war. † Dan. Tirsdag. † Swed. Tisdag. † G. Dienstag, M. H. G. Zistag, O. H. G. Ziu tag, the day of Ziu, god of war. β. The A. S. Tiw, Icel. Týr, O. H. G. Ziu, answers to the Lat. Mars as far as the sense goes; but the name itself answers to Lat. Ju in Jupiter, Gk. Zeús, Skt. Dyama, and means 'the shining one.' = † DIW, to shine; see Jovial.

TUFT (1), a small cluster or knot, crest. (F., = Teut.) 'With a knoppe, othir-wyze callyd a tuft;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 36, in a will dated 1463. 'A tuft (or tuft) of heres' = a tuft of hairs; Chaucer, C. T. 537 (or 555). The proper form should rather be tuft, as in prov. E. tuft, a lock of hair. (Halliwell), Lowland Sc. tuft, a tuft of feathers (Jamieson). The final t was due to confusion with TUFT (2), q. v.; or it may have been ecrecent; I do not find a supposed F. dimin. form tuftet. = F. touffe; 'touffe de cheveu, a tuft or lock of curled hair;' Cot. [He also gives touffe de bois, 'a hoalt, a tuft of trees growing near a house;'] which was easily confused with TUFT (3) below.] Of Teut. origin; cf. G. tuft, a tuft of hair, tuft, pigtail; O. Du. top, 'a tuft of haire, a top,' Hexham; Icel. toppr, a top, tuft or lock of hair, a horse's crest. See Top. In this sense, tuft is really a derivative of top. † Note W. tuft, a tuft, prob. borrowed from Middle English, and shewing the correct E. form.

TUFT (2), TOFT, a plantation, a green knoll. (Scand.) Halliwell gives M. E. tuft, a plantation; it is difficult to be quite sure whether this belongs to the present word or the word above. M. E. tuft, a knoll. 'A toere on a tuft' = a tower on a knoll; P. Plowman, B. prol. 14. = Icel. toft (pronounced tuft), also tuft, tuft, tuft, tuft, a green tuft or knoll, a toft, a space marked out for a building. So also dial. Swed. tuft, Swed. tuft, a toft, piece of ground; Norweg. tuft, also tuft, a clearing, piece of ground for a house or near a house. (The accent over o in the Swed. dial. tuft denotes that the o has the open sound.) The Icel. and Swed. tuft point to the orig. sense as being simply 'a clearing,' a space on which to build a house, which would often be a green knoll. From Icel. túft, Swed. tuft, neut. of Icel. munr, Swed. tom, empty, void (Möbius); see TOOM.

TUG, to pull, drag along. (O. Low G.) M. E. tuggon, Prompt. Parv.; Ancren Riwle, p. 424, last line but one, where it means to sport or dally. It is a mere doublet of tuck (1) and of tuck-a. = O. Du. tucken, tucken, 'to touch, to play, to sport, to allure, entice,' Hexham. The sense of 'allure' is due to an older sense 'to draw,' which is still the chief characteristic sense of the verb. It is a secondary verb, formed from the pp. of the strong verb which appears as A. S. toca, G. ziehen, Goth. tukan, to draw, whence a great number of derivatives have arisen. One of these derivatives, to zug, comes very near to tug in sense. See Tow (1), Tuck (1), Touch. Cf. the sb. following, viz. O. Du. toeg, 'a draught of beere,' Hexham; G. zug, a pull, tug, draught, Icel. tog, a tow-rope; also Icel. tuggja, to tug. Der. tug, sb. Doublets, tuck (1), tuck.

TUTORIAL, care and instruction of the young. (F., = L.) 'Tutorian and governance;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 6, § 4. = F. tutor, 'tutor, protection;' Cot. = Lat. tutorum, acc. of tutor, protection. = Lat. tut-us, pp. of tutari, to watch, protect. The base is TU, to see, watch, observe; occurring in Latin only. Der. in-tutor; and see tu-tel-ago, tu-tor.

TULIP, the name of a flower. (F., = Ital., = Turk., = Pers., = Hindustáni.) In Ben Jonson, Pan's Anniversary (Shepherd). = F. tulippe, also tulipan, 'the delicate flower called a tulipa, or tulipa, or Dalmatian Cap;' Cot. So called from its likeness to a turban. = Ital. tulipa, tulipana, a tulip. = Turk. tulband, vulgar pronunciation of duiband, a turban; Zenker's Turk. Dict. p. 433. = Pers. duiband, a turban; a word of Hindustáni origin. See TURBAN. Doublet, turban.

TUMBLE, to fall over, fall suddenly, roll over. (E.) M. E. tumbler, Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 6, in one MS. of the later version; tombler, King Alisaunder, 2465. Frequentative form (with the usual -for-er-) of tumben or tomben; in Trevisa, iv. 365, we have pe wonche pat tumbode (various reading tombode); Struttmann = A. S. tumben, to tumble, turn heels over head, Matt. xiv. 6; in some old pictures of this scene, Herodias' daughter is represented as standing on her head. † Du. tumbelen, to tumble; O. Du. tumbelen (Hexham), also tumbelen, tumbelen, id. † G. tumbeln, tumbeln, to reel, to stagger; O. H. G. tumbeln, to turn round and round, whence tumbiri, a tumbler, acrobat. † Dan. tumb, Swed. tumba, to tumble, toss about. The F. tumbler is of Teut. origin. β. It will be observed that, contrary to Grimm's law, the word begins with t both in German and English; this points to loss of initial s, and identifies the word with STUMBLE, q. v. Der. tumbler, sb.; tumbler, an acrobat, L. L. L. iii. 190, which took the place of A. S. tumbler; 'Saltator, tumbler,' Wright's Voc. i. 39, col. 2; cf. 'Saltator, a tumbler,' in a Nominale of the 15th century, id. 218, col. 1; also tumbler, a kind of drinking-glass, orig. without a foot, so that it could not be set down except upon its side when empty. Also tumbler-el (see Nares), spelt tumbrell-cart in Palgrave, (for which he gives tumbress as the F. equivalent), from O. F. tumbrel, tumbrel, later tumbrell, 'a tumbrell,' Cot., also spelt tombrel, tumbrellum (Cot.), lit. a tumbler-cart, or two-wheeled cart which could be tumbled over or upturned to deposit the measure with which it was usually laden; derived from F. tumbler, to fall, a word of Teut. origin, as above.

TUMEFY, to cause to swell, also to swell. (F., = L.) Spelt tumify in Phillips, who also has the sb. tumification. = F. tumefier, 'to make to swell, or puffe up;' Cot. = Low Lat. tumescere, put for Lat. tumescere, to tumefy, make to swell. = Lat. tumere, for tumura, to swell; and facere, to make; see TUMID and FACT. Der. tumefaction, as if from Lat. tumefactus (not used), from tumefactus, pp. of tumescere.

TUMID, inflated, bombastic. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 288. = Lat. tumidus, swelling. = Lat. tumere, to swell. = † TU, to swell, increase; whence also Gk. τι-αί, τι-αί, αί, a swelling. Cf. Skt. tu, to be powerful, to increase. Der. tumid-ly, -ness. Also (from tumere) tu-mentum, a swelling, Milton, Samson, 185, from F. tumeur, 'a tumor, swelling,' Cot., from Lat. acc. tumorum. And see tum-ant, tum-ant-um. From the same root are tu-ber, pro-tuber-ant, truffle, trifle, tu-tel, thund.

TUMULT, excitement, uproar, agitation. (F., = L.) In K. John, iv. 2. 247; tumulte in Levens. = F. tumulte, 'a tumult, uproar;' Cot. = Lat. tumultum, acc. of tumultus, a restless swelling or surging up, a tumult. = Lat. tum-ere, to swell; cf. tumulus, of which tumultus seems to be an extended form. See TUMULUS, TUMID. Der. tumult, verb, Milton, tr. of Ps. ii. 1; tumult-u-er-y, from F. tumultuaire, 'tumultuary,' Cot., from Lat. tumultuarius, hurried. Also tumult-u-osa, Rich. II. iv. 140, from F. tumultueuse, 'tumultuous,' Cot., from Lat. tumultuosa, full of tumult, which from tumultus, crude form of tumulus, with suffix -osa; tumultuous-ly, -ness.

TUMULUS, a mound of earth over a grave. (L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. = Lat. tumulus, a mound; lit. a swelling. = Lat. tum-ere, to swell; see TUMID. And see tumb.

TUN, a large caak; see TON.

TUNE, tone, sound, melody, a melodious air. (F., = L., = Gk.) 'With many a tone and many a note;' Gower, C. A. iii. 303, l. 8. = F. ton, 'a tune, or sound;' Cot. = Lat. tonum, acc. of tonus, a sound. = Gk. τόνος, a tone; see TONE. † The old word tone was afterwards modified to tone, which is a later form. Der. tone, verb, Two Gent. iv. 2. 25; tone-able, Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 184; tone-or, Romeo, ii. 4. 30; tone-ful, Spenser, Tears of the Muses, 27; tone-ful-ly; tone-ly, Spracer, Sonnet 44.

TUNGSTEN, a very heavy metal. (Swedish.) Also called wolfram, and schistum (from the discoverer). 'From tungstate of lead, Scheele in 1781; obtained tungstic acid, whence the brothers De Layart in 1786 obtained the metal; Hayda, Dict. of Dates. The name indicates heavy stone, in consequence of the high specific gravity of its Swedish ore.' Engl. Cycl. The word is Swedish. = Swed. tungsten, compounded of tung, heavy; and sten, a stone. Ferrall and Repp's Dan. Dict. gives the very word tungsten, tungsten, from similar Danish elements, viz. tung, heavy, and sten. β. Swed. sten, Dan. sten, are cognate with E. Stone. Swed. and Dan. tung are the same as Icel. þung, heavy; whence þungt, a load, þunga, to load. Perhaps from tu, to swell, be strong; cf. Lithuan. tumbu, I become fat, infra. tūti; see Tumid and Thumb.

TUNIC, an under-garment, loose frock. (L.) Introduced directly from the Latin, before the Norman conquest. A. S. tunica, tunice. 'Tunica, tunice;' also 'Tonica, tunice;' Wright's Voc. I 39, col. 2; 264, col. 3. = Lat. tunica, an under-garment of the Romans, worn by both sexes; whence also F. tunique (Cot.). Root unknown. Der. tunio-le, P. Plowman, B. xv. 163, from O. F. tunicle (Roquefort) = Lat. tunicula, dimin. of tunica. Also tunic-at-ed, a botanical term, from Lat. tunicatus, provided with a coating; from tunica in the sense of coating, membrane, or husk.

TUNNEL, a hollow vessel for conveying liquors into bottles, a funnel, a passage cut through a hill. (F., = L.) Formerly, when a chimney meant a fireplace, a tunnel often meant a chimney, or flue. 'Tunnel to fill wyne with, autonomy;' Palgrave. 'Tunnel of a chimney, tuyn;' id. Hence the sense of flue, shaft, railway-tunnel. = O. F. tunnel (Burguy), later tunneau, 'a tun, or (generally) any great vessel, or piece of cask for wine, &c., as a tun, hoghead, &c., also a tunnel for partridges;' Cot. The tunnel for partridges was a long tunnel or covered passage made of light wire, strengthened with hoops, into which partridges were decoyed, and from which they could not afterwards escape. Cf. prov. E. tunnel, a funnel, an arched drain. The word evidently once meant a sort of cask, then a hooped pipe or funnel, then a flue, shaft, &c. In the Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 20, we find (m 1463) 'my newe hous with the ij. tunneys of chemeneys'; Mr. Tymms remarks (p. 241): 'The passage of the chimney was called a tunnel till the beginning of the present century, and the chimney-shaft is still called a tun.' β. F. tunneau is the dimin. of F. tunne, 'a tun;' Cot. Ultimately of Lat. origin; see Ton. Der. tunnel, verb;

TUNNY, the name of a fish. (F., = L., = Gk.) 'A tunny fish, thunna;' Levin. Palgrave gives 'Tunny, fysh, without any F. equivalent. The final y is an E. addition. = F. thon, 'a tunny fish,' Cot. = Lat. thunnus, acc. of thunnus, a tunny; also spelt thynnus. = Gk. thynnus, a tunny; also spelt thynnus. Lit. 'the darter, the fish that darts about (cf. E. dart). = Gk. thynnus, allied to thynnus, to rush along. = tu, to shake, blow, rush; see Drum.

TURBAN, a head-covering worn in the East. (F., = Ital., = Turkish, = Pers., = Hindustani.) Spelt turban, Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xvii. st. 10 (R.); turban, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 28; turban, Cymb. iii. 3. 6. 'Nash, in his Lymbic Stufe (1598) has turban;' F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 178. [Todd remarks that it is spelt turban in Puttenham, Art of Poesie (1589), and turban repeatedly in Sir T. Herbert's Travels. As a fact, Puttenham has turban, Art of Poesie, b. iii. c. 24; ed. Arber, p. 291. These forms with r are really more correct, as will be seen, and answer to the occasional F. form turban, given in Cotgrave as equivalent to turban.] = F. turban (given by Cotgrave, s. v. turban), but usually turban, 'a turban, a Turkish hat;' Cot. = Ital. turban, 'a turban;' &c.; Florio. = Turkish turban, vulgar pronunciation of Turkish durban, a turban; a word borrowed from Persian; Zenker's Dict., p. 433, col. 3. = Pers. durban, a turban; Rich. Dict. p. 681. Vuller, in his Etym. Pers. Dict. i. 893, col. 2, says that durban seems to be of Hindustani origin. = Hind. durban, a turban; Shakespeare, Hind. Dict. p. 1059. See turban.

TURBID, disordered, muddy. (L.) 'Lees do make the liquor turbid;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 306. = Lat. turbidus, disturbed. = Lat. turbus, to disturb. = Lat. turba, a crowd, confused mass of people; see Trouble. Der. turbidly, ness.

TURBOT, a flat, round fish. (F., = L.) M. E. turbot, Prompt. Parv.; Havelok, 754; spelt turbote, Wright's Voc. i. 189. = F. turbot, 'the turbot-fish;' Cot. According to Dies, formed with suffix -ot from Lat. turba, a whipping top, a spindle, a reel; from its rhomboidal shape. This is verified by two facts: (1) the Lat. rhombus, a circle, a turbot, is merely borrowed from Gk. ῥόμβος, a top, wheel, spindle, having, in fact, just the same senses as Lat. turba; and (2) the Low Lat. turba was used to mean a turbot; thus we have: 'Turbot, turtur, turbo,' Prompt. Parv. We also find Irish turbit, a turbot, a rhomboid, Gael. turban, W. turban; but it does not appear to be a Celtic word. Nor is it Dutch.

TURBULENT, disorderly, restless as a crowd, producing commotion. (F., = L.) In Hamlet, iii. 1. 4. = F. turbulent, 'turbulent, blustering;' Cot. = Lat. turbulentus, full of commotion or disturbance. = Lat. turbare, to disturb. = Lat. turba, a crowd of people; see Trouble. Der. turbulently; turbulency, Troil. v. 3. 11, from F. turbulencia (which Cotgrave omits, but see Littré), which from Lat. turbulentia; also turbulency, from Lat. turbulentia.

TURF, the same as Terreen, q. v.

TURF, the surface of land matted with roots of grass, &c., sward, sod, peat. (E.) M. E. tuw, sometimes tuw; pl. tuwes (= tuwens), Havelok, 939; Chaucer, C. T. 10109. = A. S. tuw (dat. tuw), tuw, A. S. Chron. an. 189 (Lind MS.). So also: 'Gleba, tuw;' Wright's Voc. i. 37, col. 2; pl. tuw, id. ii. 40, col. 1. = Du. tuw, peat. = Icel. tuw, a turf, sod, peat. = Dan. tuw. = Swed. tuw, = O. H. G. tuw, tuw (cited by Fick and Strutzmann); the mod. G. tuw being borrowed from Low German. β. All from Teut. base TORBA, tuw, Fick, iii. 119. Prob. cognate with Skt. darbha, a kind of grass, Benfey, p. 388; so called from its being twined or matted together, from Skt. darbh, to string, to bind. = tu DARBH, to wind, twine, knit together, Fick, i. 107; cf. Lithuan. darbi, to hang on to anything, cleave to it, darbi, very fine lines. Der. tuw-y, Temp. iv. 62.

TURGID, swollen, pompous, bombastic. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. turgidus, swollen, extended. = Lat. turgere, to swell out. Root uncertain. Der. turgidly, ness, turgidly. Also turgidness, Sir T. Brown, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 7, part 5, formed as if from Lat. turgescens, swelling up, from turgere, inceptive form of turgere.

TURKEY, the name of a bird. (F., = Pers.) 'Turkey-cock, or cock of India, avis india dicta, quod ex Africa, et, et nonnulli volunt alii, ex India vel Arabia ad nos illata ut, Belg. Indische hen, Tent. Indische hen, Calcicutan hen, i. e. Gallina Indica seu Calcicutana, Ital. gallo, o gallina d'India, Hispan. pavon de las Indias, Gall. poulet d'Inde, &c.; Minshew, ed. 1627. 'A turke, or Ginnis hen, Belg. Indische hen, Tent. Indische hen, Ital. gallo d'India, Hispan. gallo Morisco, &c.; id. Turkey in Shak. means (1) the bird, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 29; (2) adj. Turkish, Tam. Shrew, ii. 355; hence he also says turkey-cock, Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 36. 'Meliagrides, Birds that we call Amour of Ginnis or Turkey hen;' Cooper's Thesaurus, ed. 1565. Turkeys were unknown in Europe until introduced from the New World; see Trench, Study of Words. The date of their introduction seems to be about 1530. As they were strange birds, they were hastily called Turkey-cocks and Turkey-hens, by which it was merely meant that they were foreign; it must be remembered that Turkey was at that time a vague term, and often meant Tartary. 'Turke, Tartaria;' Levin. Similarly, the French called the bird poulet d'Inde, whence mod. F. dinde, a turkey; Cotgrave gives: 'Dunder, Indar, a turkey-cock.' Minshew, in his Span. Dict., gives 'gallina Morisca, a hen of Guyne, gallina de India, a Turke hen;' whilst in his Eng. Dict. (as quoted above) he calls gallina Morisca, the turkey-hen; shewing that he was not in the least particular. The German Ostindische hahn, a turkey-cock, means 'a cock of Calcutta,' from Calcutta, Calcutta; a name extremely wide of the mark. β. The E. Turkey, though here used as an adj. (since turkey is short for turkey-cock or turkey-hen) was also used as a sb., to denote the name of the country. = F. Turquie, 'Turkie,' Cot. = F. Turc, m., Turque, f., 'Turkish,' id. [The word is not Turkish, but Persian; the Turkish word for Turk is turk.] = Pers. Turk, 'a Turk, comprehending likewise those numerous nations of Tartars... who claim descent from Turk, the son of Japhet.... Also, a Scythian, barbarian, robber, plunderer, villain, vagabond;' Richardson's Dict., p. 393. Hence Pers. Turk, 'Turkish, Turk-like;' id. p. 393. ¶ So also maize was called Turkey wheat, F. Blé de Turquie; Wedgwood. Der. turkey-cock, q. v.

TURMERIC, the root of an E. Indian plant, used as a yellow dye, and in curry-powder. (F., = L.) Spelt turmeric in Phillips, ed. 1706; also in Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 2 (Perfumer). A gross corruption of the F. name. = F. terre-marie, turmeric; not given in Littré under terre, but under Curcuma he says that the root is called in commerce 'safran des Indes, et curcuma, dite terre-marie, quand elle est reduite en poudre.' = Lat. terra maris; turmeric 'is likewise called by the French terre maris;' Curcuma, hec Gallia terre maris male dicitur,' see Royle, Antiquity of Hindoo Medicine, p. 87; Eng. Cycl. Division Arts and Sciences. I suppose it means 'excellent earth.' = Lat. terra, earth; and maris, fem. of maris, pp. of maris, to deserve. But terre maris is prob. a barbarous corruption; perhaps of Arab barban, barban, saffron or curcuma; Rich. Dict. p. 1181.

TURMOIL, excessive labour, tumult, bustle; as a verb, to harass. (F., = L.) 'The turmoyle of his mind being refrained;' Udal, on St. John, c. 11 (R.) The pp. turmoiled occurs in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 9. 39; and in Shak. 2 Hen. VI. iv. 18. The origin is somewhat doubtful; the form is prob. corrupt, the latter part of the word being assimilated to E. mail, q. v., and the former part to turn. It has been suggested that it may have something to do with O. F. troussille, 'the hopper of a mill,' id., also called troussin, and prob. so called from being in continual movement, from Lat. troussare, to tremble, shake. This is rendered more probable by observing that Cotgrave also gives the same word with the spelling troussin, which is sufficiently near to the E. form. It is also spelt troussin (Burguy), troussins (Roquefort); and Roquefort also gives the verb trousser, to disquiet, and the sb. troussure, agitation, also from Lat. troussare. Cf. Prov. E. troussin, to tremble. See Tremble.

TURN, to cause to revolve, transfer, convert, whirl round, change. (F., = L.) M. E. turnen, turnax, turnen; Ormulum, 169. = F. tourner, O. F. turner, turner, to turn. = Lat. turnare, to turn in a lathe, to turn. = Lat. turnas, a lathe, turner's wheel. β. The Lat. turnas is cognate with (rather than borrowed from) Gk. τρίτρον, a carpenter's tool to draw circles with, compasses, whence troussure, to turn, work with a lathe. Allied to Gk. τρῆσις, adj. piercing, τρῆσις, to pierce, Lat. trorsus, to rub. = of TAR, to rub, hence to bore a hole; see Trite. Der. turn, sb., turn-er; turn-er-y, from F. tournerie, 'a turning, turner's work; turn-ing, turn-ing-point; turn-coat, Much Ado, l. 1. 125; turn-key, one who turns a prison-key, a warder; turn-pike, q. v.; turn-spit, one who turns a spit; turn-stile, a stile that turns, Butler's Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 23; turn-table, a table that turns. Also (from turnare) tour, tour-na-ment, tour-na-ment.

TURNIP, TURNIP, a plant with a round root, used for food. (F., = L.; and L.) The pl. turneps is in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 13; spelt turnepes in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9. 1. The latter part of the word is sep or sepe. We find 'wild sepe, Cucurbita, bronia' in Prompt. Parv. p. 528. 'Hoc hanc, sepe;' Wright's Voc. i. 191, col. 2. 'As a sepe white' = as white as a turnip; Destruction of Troy, 3076. This is from A. S. teof, a turnip, borrowed from Lat. teipus, a kind of turnip. 'Napus, teof; Rapa, teof;' Wright's Voc. i. 31, col. 2. Hence the etymological spelling should rather be teofep than turnep, and we know that the latter part of the word is pure Latin. Cf. Irish and Gael. teip, a turnip, W. teipen (prob. for teipen). 2. The former part of the word is less obvious; but it is most likely F. tour in the sense of 'wheel,' to signify its round shape, as if it had been 'turned.' Cotgrave gives, among the senses of tour, these: 'also a spinning-wheel, a turn, or turner's wheel.' Or it might be the E. turn, used in a like sense; Cotgrave also gives: 'tourneur, a turn, turning-wheel, or turners wheel, called a lathe or lare.' It makes but little difference, since F. tour is the verbal sb. of tourner, to turn; see Tour, Turn. Cf. Ital. turna, 'a turn, a turner or spinner's wheel,' Florio; W. turn, a turn, also round.

TURNPIKE, a gate set across a road to stop those liable to toll. (Hybrid; F., = L.; and C.) The name was given to the toll-gate, because it took the place of the old-fashioned turnstile, which was made with four horizontal piques or arms revolving on the top of a post. The word occurs in this sense as early as in Cotgrave, who translates F. tour by 'a turn. . . also, a turn-pike or turning-stile.' So also: 'I move upon my axle like a turnpike;' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iii. 1 (Picklock); see Nares. The word turn-pike was also used in the sense of chevaux de Frise, as in Phillips, ed. 1706. From Turn and Pike. Der. turn-pike-gate, turn-pike-road.

TURPENTINE, the resinous juice of the terebinth tree, &c. (F., = L., = Gk.) In Levins, ed. 1570. = F. terebenthine, 'turpentine;' Cot. = Lat. terebinthinus, made from the terebinth-tree. = Gk. τερεβινθος, made from the tree called respiriberos; see Terebinth.

TURPIDUDE, baseness, depravity. (F., = L.) In Shak. Troil. v. 3. 112. = F. turpitude, 'turpitude;' Cot. = Lat. turpitude, baseness. = Lat. turpis, crude form of turpis, base; with suffix -tudo. β. The Lat. turpis is 'shameful,' that from which one turns away on account of shame, or one who turns away because he is ashamed; cf. Skt. trap, to be embarrassed, be ashamed, causal trāpaya; to make ashamed; when used with the prep. apa, Skt. trap means to turn away on account of shame. The Skt. trap is cognate with Gk. τρίτρον, to turn; see Trope. = of TARK, to turn.

TURQUOISE, TURQUOIS, TURKOIS, TURKIS, a precious stone. (F., = Ital., = Pers.) In Cotgrave; also Palsgrave has: 'Tourques, a precious stone, tourques.' Turcas, a turquoise, Bale's Works, p. 607 (Parker Soc.). = F. turquoise, 'a turquoise, or Turkish stone;' Cot. [Turquoise is the fem. of Turquois, 'Turkish,' id.] = Ital. Turchese, 'a blue precious stone called a Turkoise;' Florio. The sense is Turkas; the F. turquoise, Ital. turchese, answer to a Low Lat. turchesia, fem. of turchesius; and turchesius is found with the sense of turquoise in A. D. 1347 (Ducange). It is an adj. form, from Low Lat. Turcus, a Turk, which is from Pers. tark, a Turk; see Turkey.

TURRET, a small tower. (F., = L.) M. E. turret, Chaucer, C. T. 1909 (or 1911); torst, Prompt. Parv. = F. turrette, 'a turret or

TURTLE (1), a turtle-dove, kind of pigeon. (L.) M. E. turtla, Chaucer, C. T. 10013. A. S. turtla. 'Turtur, turtla;' Wright's Voc. i. 29, col. 2. = Lat. turtur, a turtle; with the common change from r to l. Hence also G. turtel-tauve, a turtle-dove; Ital. tortora, tortola, a turtle. β. The Lat. turtur is of imitative origin; due to a repetition of ur, imitative of the coo of a pigeon. Cf. Du. turru, to coo.

TURTLE (2), the sea-tortoise. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. This word is absolutely the same as the word above. It occurs, according to Richardson, in Dampier's Voyages, an. 1687. The English sailors having a difficulty with the Portuguese tartaruga, a tortoise or turtle, and the Span. terciaga, tortoise, turtle, overcame that difficulty by substituting the E. turtle, with a grand disregard of the difference between the two creatures. The Span. and Port. names did not readily suggest the E. tortoise; whereas tartaruga could easily become tartalinga, and then tortia for short.

TUSH, an exclamation of impatience. (E.) Common in Shak. Much. Ado, iii. 1. 130; &c. Holinshed (or Stanhurst) gives the form tush. 'There is a . . . disdainfull interjection used in Irish called bang, which is as much in English as tush;' Holinshed, Desc. of Ireland, c. 8. (R.) Tush is expressive of disgust; cf. push; also tut.

TUSK, a long pointed tooth. (E.) Shak. uses the pl. form tusks, Venus, 617, 624. M. E. tush, tusck, tusck; spelt tusche, Prompt. Parv.; we even find the pl. tusces in K. Alisunder, 6547. = A. S. tus, almost always spelt tus, esp. in the pl. tusce, just as A. S. flus is often spelt flis; here s = ss, by metathesis of ss. Spelt tus, translated 'grunder' by Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 95, § 49. 'Canini, vel colomelli, manus tusce;' Wright's Voc. i. 43, col. 1. = O. Fris. tush, tusck. β. Perhaps A. S. tus stands for tusce (like tush for tush, see Tush), with the notion of double tooth, or very strong tooth, from A. S. tuis, double, with adj. suffix -ce (Aryan -he). 'Twegen ge-tuisian' = two tuis, occurs in Gen. xxxviii. 27; and tuis is connected with tuis, tuis, just as Lat. bis (put for duis) is with Lat. duo. γ. This is rendered highly probable by the occurrence of M. H. G. tusar, O. H. G. tusik, double (whence mod. G. tusarben, between, is derived). This is from the old form of G. zwei, two; and exactly answers to an A. S. tuis. See Two. Der. tush-ed, tush-y.

TUSLE, to scuffle. (E.) The same as tusle, to disorder, frequent. of Touse, q. v.

TUT, an exclamation of impatience. (E.) Common in Shak. Merry Wives, l. 1. 117; &c. 'And that he said . . . Tut, tut, tut;' State Trials, Hen. VIII, an. 1536; Q. Anne Boleyn. (R.) Cf. F. tut, 'an interjection importing indignation, tush, tut, fy man;' Cot. 'Pitot, skornefull word, or tut;' Prompt. Parv., p. 415. And cf. Tush.

TUTELAGE, guardianship. (L.; with F. suffix.) 'The tutelage whereof;' &c.; Drayton, Polyolbion, song 3. Coined with F. suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum) from Lat. tutela, protection; see Tutelar.

TUTELAR, protecting, having in charge. (L.) 'Tutelar god of the place;' Ben Jonson, Love's Triumph through Callipolis, Introduction. = Lat. tutelaricus, tutelar. = Lat. tutela, protection; allied to tutor, a protector; see Tutor. Der. tutelar-y, from F. tutelaire, 'tutulary, guarding;' Cot.

TUTOR, an instructor, teacher, guardian. (F., = L.) Put for tutor, the older form. M. E. tutour, P. Plowman, B. i. 56. = F. tuteur, 'a tutor;' Cot. = Lat. tutorum, acc. of tutor, a guardian. = Lat. tut- (short for tutus), pp. of tueri, to look after, guard; see Tuition. Der. tutor, verb, L. L. L. iv. 2. 77; tutor-ship, tutor-age, tutor-st.

TWADDLE, to tattle, talk unmeaningly. (E.) Formerly twattle. 'No gloazing fable I twattle;' Stanhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii; ed. Arber, p. 46. 'Vaynelye toe twattle;' id. Æn. iv; p. 101. A collateral form of Tattle, q. v. So also twattle-twattle, sb., used by L'Estrange (Todd's Johnson) as equivalent to tattle-tattle. Cf. 'such fables twatted, such untrue reports twatted;' Stanhurst, Desc. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 48. Der. twaddie, sb., twaddie.

TWAIN, two; see under Two.

TWANG, to sound with a sharp noise. (E.) 'Sharply twanged off;' Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 198. 'To twang, to resound;' Levins. 'To twang, as the string of an instrument;' Minshew. A collateral form of twang, used with the same sense; see Tang (2), Tingle. It represents the ringing sound of a tense string. Der. twang, sb.

TWEAK, to twitch, pull sharply, pinch. (E.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 601. A better form is twick; cf. prov. E. twick, a sudden jerk (Halliwell). M. E. twicken, Prompt. Parv. p. 505. This should correspond to an A. S. twiccan, but both this form and that of twiccan (given by Somner) are unauthorised; still, it is certainly an E. word, and not borrowed, as is shown by the derivative twickle, A. S. twiccan. See Twinkle. Besides which, we find A. S. angul-twiccan = a hook-twitcher, the name of a worm used as bait for fishing; Wright's Voc. i. 24, col. 2; i. 78, col. 1. Twick is a weakened form of it; see Twitch. + Low G. twicken, to tweak n.p. + G. zwechen, to pinch, nip; whence zwech, a pinch, zwech an der Nase, to twitch by the nose; also G. zwechen, to pinch, to twitch. Cf. Twings. Der. twand, sb.

TWEEZERS, nippers, small pincers for pulling out hairs. (F. = Teut.; with E. suffix.) The history of this word is most remarkable; it exhibits an unusual development. A tweezer or tweezer is, properly, an instrument contained in a twess, or small case for instruments. And as the twess contained tweezers, it was also called a tweezer-case; hence it is that we find tweezer and tweezer-case used as synonymous terms. 'Tweezers, nippers or pincers, to pull hair up by the roots;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Then his tweezer-cases are incomparable; you shall have one not much bigger than your finger, with seventeen several instruments in it, all necessary every hour of the day;' Tatler, no. 149; March 7, 1709-10. This shows that a tweezer-case was a case containing a great number of small instruments, of which what are now specifically called tweezers was but one. See another quotation under Trinket (1).

B. Next, we observe that the proper name for such a case was a twess, or a pair of twesses; probably a pair of twesses means that the case was made double, folding up like a book, as some instrument cases are made still. 'Drawing a little penknife out of a pair of twesses I then chanced to have about me;' Boyle, Works, ii. 419 (R). 'I have sent you by Vacandary the post, the French bever [hat] and twesses you writ for;' Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. i. let. 17; May 1, 1630. 'A Surgeon's twess, or box of instruments, panneau de chirurgien;' Sherwood, index to Cotgrave.

G. Lastly, the word twess is certainly a corruption of O. F. estuy (mod. F. étui). 'Estuy, a sheath, case, or box to put things in, and more particularly, a case of little instruments, or sizers, bodkins, penknives, &c., now commonly termed an estuy;' Cot. And again: 'Panneau de Chirurgien, a chirurgian's case or estuy; the box wherein he carries his instruments;' id. Here we see that the F. estuy was pronounced est-ue; then the initial e (for st) was dropped, just as in the case of Ticket and Tuok (2); then est-ue became twess or twess, probably because the case was double; then it was called a pair of twesses, and a particular implement in it was called a tweezer or tweezers, prob. from some confusion with the obsolete twech, tweezers; see additions to Nares, by Halliwell and Wright. The most remarkable point is the double addition of the pl. form, so that twess-ue is from twess; this can be explained by the common use of the plural for certain implements, such as shears, scissors, pliers, snuffers, tongs, scissors, nippers, pincers, &c. So far, the history of the word is quite clear, and fully known. D. The etymology of O. F. estuy or estui is difficult; it is the same as Span. estucha, a scissors-case, also scissors (note this change of sense). Port. estejo, a case, a tweezers-case, Low Lat. estugiolum, a case, box, occurring A. D. 1331 (Ducange). We also find O. Ital. stucchio, stucchio, 'a little pocket-case with scissors, pen-knives, and such trifles in them,' Florio; whence (with prefix o = Lat. ad) Ital. estucchio, a small box, case, sheath. The form stucchio does not seem to have been observed before; I think it makes the etymology proposed by Dies the more certain, viz. that all the above words are of Teut. origin, from M. H. G. stuck, O. H. G. stūch, a cuff, a muff (prov. G. stuck, a short and narrow muff). Thus the orig. case for small instruments was a muff, or a cuff, or a part of the sleeve; which we can hardly doubt. ¶ Another proposed etymology of F. estui is from Lat. studium, with the supposed sense of 'place for objects of study;' see Scheler. This does not explain the Ital. form.

TWELVE, two and ten. (E.) M. E. twelf; whence also twelfs, twelf-ue (= twelf-ue), a pl. form and dissyllabic. It was not uncommon to use numerals in the pl. form of adjectives; cf. E. five (= β-od), from A. S. fiif. 'Twelve winter' = twelve years, P. Plowman, B. v. 196, where two MSS. have twelf. We have, in the Ormulum, the form twelf, 13069; but also twelfe (dissyllabic), 537. = A. S. twelf, also twelfe, Grein, ii. 556. + O. Fria. twelf, twelf, twelf, twelf. + Du. twelf. + Icel. twelf. + Dan. twelf. + Swed. twelf. + G. twelf. O. H. G. twelf. + Goth. twelf. β. All from the Teut. base TWALIF, Fick, iii. 126. Here TWA is two; see Two. The suffix -lif stands for high, by the common substitution of f for the guttural; and high or lith is the Teut. equivalent (with sound-shift) from h to lh or gh) to the Lithuan. lith occurring in duy-lith, twelve. Again, the Lithuan. lith = Lat. decem, Gk. deka, ten; by the change from d to l as in O. Lat. decimus = Lat. decimus; so that Lat. decimus = E. ten; Lith. lith = E. ten. That is, lif is but a corrupted form of ten (Goth. andhan). See Eleven; and see Ten. Der. twelf-ith, used instead of twelf (M. E. twelfe, A. S. twelfe, Grein, ii. 556) by analogy with seven-ith, eight-ith, nine-ith, &c.; hence twelf-ith-day, twelf-ith-night (often called twelf-day, twelf-night, as in Shakespeare's play of 'Twelfth Night'); twelf-month, M. E. twelfmonth, P. Plowman, C. vii. 80.

TWENTY, twice ten. (E.) M. E. twenty, Chaucer, C. T. 17118. = A. S. twentig, Grein, ii. 557. Prob. for twido-tig = twegen-tig, from

A. S. twegen, twain, and the suffix -tig, cognate with Goth. tigjan, from a Teut. base TEGU, ten, a modified form of TEHAN, ten. See Two and Ten. + Dn. twentig. + Icel. twentig. + Goth. twentig, Luke, xiv. 21. + G. zwanzig, M. H. G. zwanzic, O. H. G. zwanzic. All similarly formed. β. So also Lat. viginti, twenty; from vi- (put for duo), twice, related to duo, two), and -ginti (put for centi), short for decem, tenth, from decem, ten); whence F. vingt, twenty, &c. Der. twenti-ith, A. S. twentig-ith, twentig-ith, Erod. xii. 18.

TWIBBLE, TWYBILL, a two-edged bill or mattock. (E.) Still in use provincially; see Halliwell. In Becon's Works, ii. 449. Parker Society. M. E. twibill; spelt twybyl, Prompt. Parv. = A. S. twibille or twybill. 'Bipennis, twibille, vel stān-ax [stone-axe]; Falcastrum, twib;' Wright's Voc. i. 34, col. 2. = A. S. twi, double; and bill, a bill. See Twice and Bill.

TWICE, two times. (E.) Put for M. E. twā or twyā, formerly dissyllabic; the word has been reduced to a single syllable, and the final -w is a mere orthographical device for representing the fact that the final -s was voiceless or 'hard,' and not sounded as s. 'He twice was Jerusalem the citee;' Chaucer, C. T. 14153. = A. S. twigga, A. S. Chron. an. 1130 (Laud MS.). This is a genitive form, genitives being often used adverbially; the more common A. S. word is twā, Luke, xviii. 12, older form twāne, twice, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. v. c. 2, § 7. Both tw-ges and twi-ue are from the base twā, double, only used as a prefix, answering to Icel. tvá, Lat. bi- (for duo), Gk. bi-, Skt. dvā, and allied to twit, two; see Two. Cf. prov. E. twi-bill, a mattock (above), twi-fallow, to till ground a second time; and see Twilight.

TWIG (1), a thin branch, small shoot of a tree. (E.) M. E. twig, spelt twyg in Ayebite of Iawyt, p. 22, l. 5; pl. twiggas, Chaucer, Perceus Tale, De Superbia (1st sentence). = A. S. twig, pl. twiggas, Job, xv. 3. + Du. twyg. + G. zwig. β. From the A. S. base twā, double, because orig. applied to the fork of a branch, or the place where a small shoot branches off from a larger one. A similar explanation applies to M. E. twist, often used in the sense of twig or spray, as in Chaucer, C. T. 10223. Cf. G. zweisel, a forked branch; and see Twilight, Twice, Twist, Two.

TWIG (2), to comprehend. (C.) Modern slang. = Irish twigim, I understand, discern; Gael. twig, to understand.

TWILIGHT, the faint light after sunset or before sunrise. (E.) M. E. twilight, spelt twylyghte in Prompt. Parv. The A. S. twi- prefix, means 'double,' like Icel. tvá, Du. twā, G. zwei; but it is here used rather in the sense of 'doubtful' or 'half.' The ideas of double and half are liable to confusion; cf. A. S. twēda, doubt, from the hovering between two opinions; see Doubt and Between. β. Precisely the same confusion appears in German; we there find zweifelt, double, zweilicht, twilight, zweimal, a branch dividing into two ends, zweimacht, discord, all with the prefix zwei = A. S. twi-. The prefix is related to Two; cf. Twice, Twig. The word twi- = A. S. twi; see Light. By way of further illustration, I find O. Du. twelicht, twylycht, 'twilight,' Hexham; cf. Du. twā, two, twāmal, twice double, &c. ¶ Bosworth gives an A. S. twelicht, twilight, but it is unauthorized. It would only give a mod. E. form twelicht, and does not account for twilight.

TWILL, an appearance of diagonal lines in textile fabrics produced by causing the warp-threads to pass over one and under two weft-threads, instead of over one and under one. (Low G.) Added by Todd to Johnson; Lowland Sc. twail, twail, twail (Jamieson). The word is Low German, and has reference to the peculiar method of doubling the warp-threads, or taking two of them together; it was prob. introduced by Platt-deutsch workmen into the weaving trade, which connected us so much with the Low Countries. = Low G. twillen, to make double, also to fork into two branches as a tree; twill, twilla, twahl, sb., a forked branch, any forked thing; a tree that forked into three shoots was oddly called om dre-twille, i. e. a three-twill; Bremen Wörterbuch. Allied words appear in Da. twilling, Swed. and Dan. twilling, a twill, Swed. dial. twilla, to produce twine (said of sheep); G. zwilling, a twin. Note particularly G. zwillich, ticking, zwillichmacher, a ticking-weaver, as connecting it with the weaving-trade. Obviously formed, like twig, twine, twist, from the Teut. base TWI, double, appearing in A. S. twi, Du. twā, G. zwei, all allied to Two, q. v. We find: 'Twilless, jrylen hrügel,' i. e. a garment woven with three threads, corresponding to an E. form twill; Wright's Voc. i. 40. And see Twilight, Twice. Der. twill, verb. ¶ Twilled in Temp. iv. 64, is yet unexplained. Ray tells us that North E. twill means a spool, and he asserts that it is a corruption of quill. I doubt it; for Swed. dial. twill is to turn round like a spindle, to become entangled, as thread (Riets); Norweg. twilla is to stir milk round and round, also to twist into knots, as a thread; twilla, sb., is a twist or knot in a thread. Twist, twill, twine appear to be closely related words.

* Joseph gaf ilic here twinas scud' = Joseph gave each of them double raiment, 'changes of raiment,' cf. Gen. xiv. 22. 'Pise twinas scollje' = this double blessing, Ormulum, 8769. = A. S. gofwinnas, twine, in a gloss (Bosworth); also in Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 13, l. 14. † Icel. twinnar, twinnur, two and two, twin, in pairs; cf. twinnas, to twine, twinn together. We also find Dan. twilling, Swed. twilling, a twin, perhaps put for twinding, by assimilation; cf. M. E. twining. Allied to Icel. twinn, two; see TWO. † Lithuan. duvai, twins, sing. duvojis; from dui, two. The n seems to give a distributive force, as in Goth. twandans, two apiece, Luke, ix. 3; Lat. luni, two apiece, two at a time. Hence twinn, by two at a time, orig. an adj., as above. Der. twinn, verb, Wint. Tale, i. s. 67.

TWINE, to double or twist together; as sb., a twisted thread. (E.) M. E. twinnas, to twine; pp. twinned, P. Ploverman, B. xvii. 304. In Layamon, 14390, the later text has 'a twinned þred,' where the earlier text has 'a twinnas þred' = a thread of twine. The supposed A. S. twinnas is unauthorised, but the verb was early coined from the sb. twinn, a twisted thread, curiously used to translate Lat. lynus in Lake, vi. 19. It is a mere derivative of A. S. twit, prefix, double, discussed under TWICE, TWILIGHT, &c.; and see TWIN. The orig. sense was merely 'double'; hence a doubled thread. † Du. twijn, twine, twist; whence twijnen, to twine † Icel. twinn, twine; whence twinna, to twine; cf. twinnur, twin. † Dan. twinde (for twinnas), to twine; † Swed. twinnad, twine-thread; twinnas, to twine.

TWINGE, to affect with a sudden, sharp pain, to nip. (E.) M. E. twingen, orig. a strong verb, to pain, afflict. 'Whil þat twingen me the foe' = while the foe afflicts me; E. Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Pt. xli. 10. 'I am twingod,' where another MS. has 'I am meked and twingen meert,' id. Pt. xxvii. 9. Not found in A. S.; the A. S. form would have been twingjan; we have, however, the derived word THONG. For change of thw to tw, cf. twari below, q. v. It is preserved in O. Friesic. = O. Fries. thwinga, also twinga, thwinga, to constrain, pt. t. twang, twang, pp. twungen. † O. Sax. thwungen, in the pp. thwungen, oppressed. † Dan. twinge, to force, compel, constrain; Swed. twinga, to force, bridle, restrain, compel. The Icel. form is twinga, to oppress. † Du. twingen, to constrain; pt. t. twang, pp. twungen. † G. zwingen, pt. t. zwang, pp. zwungen.

β. All from the Tent. base THWANG, to constrain, compel; whence also the secondary verbs appearing in G. zwingen, to press tightly, constrain, and M. E. twingen, to press tightly, tweak, or twinge; the latter occurs in the Life of St. Dunstan, l. 81: 'he twingde and schok hi bi þe nose' = he twinged and shook her by the nose, Spec. of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 22. And, in fact, the mod. E. twinge answers rather to this secondary or causal form than to the strong verb; just as in the case of smage, due to the strong verb smag. See Fick, i. 142. γ. This Tent. base THWANG answers to Aryan TANK, from the √ TAK, to draw tightly together, contract; Fick, i. 87. Cf. Skt. tanca, to contract; Lithuan. tanca, thuck, tanca, to dam up. From the same root we have E. twomb, twomb, twomb. Der. twinge, sb. Also thang, q. v.

TWINKLE, to shine with a quivering light. M. E. twinklen, Chaucer, C. T. 369 (or 367) = A. S. twinculan, to twinkle, shine faintly, Ælfric, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxv. § 3; b. iii. pr. 12. Twinkle is a frequentative from a form twink, appearing in M. E. twinklen, to blink, wink; Prompt. Parv., p. 509. And again, twink is a unanalysed form of A. S. twinculan, to twinkle; see TWINK, TWITCH. The sense is to keep on twitching or quivering, hence to twinkle. Der. twinkles, sb.; twinkler. Also twinkling, sb., a twitch or wink with the eye. M. E. twinkling: 'And in the twinkling of a loke' (look, glance). Gover, C. A. l. 144; this is from M. E. twinkelen in the sense to wink, as: 'he twinkles with the eyen' = he winks with the eyes, Wyclif, Prov. vi. 13 (earlier version); see twink, sb., a twinkling, in Shak. Temp. iv. 43.

TWIRL, to whirl, turn round rapidly. (E.) Twirl stands for thwirl, as twinge (q. v.) for thwinge. 'Leaves twirling of your hat,' Beaumont and Fletcher, Act ii. sc. 3 (Altea). Twirl is a frequentative form, from A. S. þwira, to agitate, turn; it means 'to keep on turning,' and is used of rather violent motion. The A. S. þwira only occurs in the unauthorised compound þwira, to shake or agitate (Sommer), and in the pp. þwira (put for þwira), with uncertain sense; Grein, i. 474. We have, however, the derived sb. þwirl, supposed to mean the handle of a churn, which was rapidly turned round. We find: 'Lac, milk [milk]; Lac coagolatum, moiren [curdled milk]; Verberaturum, þwirl; Caseum, eye [cheese], &c.; Wright's Voc. i. 290, col. 1. Slight as these traces are, they are made quite certain by the cognate words; it may be necessary to observe that, in A. S. þwirl, the final -il denotes the implement, and is an agental suffix, quite distinct from the frequentative -i in þwirl. † Du. twirlen, to whirl; whence twirlend, a whirlwind (the Du. d = A. S. þ). That the i is frequentative, appears at once from the Low G. dwirwind, a whirlwind, as well as from M. H. G. dwir(e)n, O. H. G.

dwirren, twirren, strong verb, to turn round swiftly, to whirl, cognate with Lat. terere, to rub, bore. = √ TAR, to rub, bore; see THWART and TRITA. Hence the Tent. base THWAR, to whirl; Fick, iii. 142.

TWIST, to twine together, wreath, turn forcibly. (E.) M. E. twisten, Chaucer, C. T. 10880; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 513, l. 4. Not found in A. S., but regularly formed from a sb. twist, a rope, occurring in the comp. man-twist, a stay, a rope used to stay a mast. 'Parastata, man-twist,' Wright's Voc. i. 56, col. 2; one sense of Gk. παροστάτης is a stay. Again, twist is formed, with suffix -it, from A. S. twit, double, discussed under TWILIGHT, TWILION, &c. The suffix -it is not uncommon, as in blow-it from blow, loaf-it (a burden) from loaf. We should also notice M. E. twist, a twig, i. e. forked branch, branch dividing into two; see under TWIG. † Du. twisten, to quarrel; from twit, a quarrel. This is the same form, but used in quite a different sense, from the notion of two persons contending; cf. Du. twistpalt, discord, twistdragt, discord, twistrijd, a duel. † Dan. twiste, to strive, from twist, strife; the Dan. twist also means a twist. † Swed. twista, to strive; from twist, strife. † G. zwist, a twist also discord; whence zwistig, discordant. And cf. Icel. twita, the two or 'deuces' in card-playing, where the orig. sense is remarkably preserved. Der. twist, sb. (really an older word, as appears above); twist-er. Also obsol. twist-ol, a double fruit (Nares), put for twist-le, dimin. of twist, a twig.

TWIT, to remind of a fault, reproach. (E.) Put for twite; the i was certainly once long, which accounts for the extraordinary form twight (miswritten for twite, like delight for delite) in Spenser, F. Q. v. 6. 13, where it rhymes with light and plight. Palgrave has the queer spelling twihys, prob. a misprint for twiste, as it occurs immediately before twyne and under the heading 'T before W: I twihys one, I casto hym in the tetbe or in the nose, Je by reproche; this term is also northren.' The orig. length of the vowel leaves no doubt that twite is due to M. E. atwitan, to twit, reproach, by loss of initial a; this verb is used in much the same way as the mod. E. word, and was once common; Strattmann gives more than 12 examples. Spelt atwitan, Aenbite of Inwyt, p. 198, l. 16; whence atwyttingen, twyttingen, reproaches, id. p. 194, l. 6. 'Pat atwytale hym' = that twitted him, Rob. of Glouc. p. 33, l. 16. = A. S. atwitan, to twit, reproach; see Sweet, A. S. Reader, and Grein. [We also find A. S. atwitan with the same sense, but the prefix differs.] = A. S. at, at, prep. often used as a prefix; and witan, to blame, the more orig. sense being to behold, observe, hence to observe what is wrong, take notice of what is amiss; Grein, ii. 724. For the prefix, see AT. The A. S. witan is cognate with Goth. witjan, occurring in idwitan, to reproach (= A. S. atwitan), and in farwitanjan, to observe intently. A. S. witan, Goth. witjan, are derivatives from A. S. and Goth. witan, to know = √ WID, to see; see WIT and VISION.

TWITCH, to pluck, snatch, move suddenly. (E.) M. E. twitchen, a weakened form of twitken, to tweak. 'Twitken, twitken, or twitwhet drawyn, Tractulo;' Prompt. Parv. We find also the comp. verb to-twitche, to pull to pieces. O. Eng. Homilies, l. 53, l. 4; with the pt. t. to-twitche, spelt to-twyt, Will. of Palerne, 2097. Similarly the simple verb twitche makes the pt. t. twitche, and pp. twitche. This explains twitche = twitched, pulled, Chaucer, C. T. 7145. Twitche is but a weaker form of TWEAK, q. v. Der. twitche, sb.; twitcher.

TWITTER, to chirp as a bird, to feel a slight trembling of the nerves. (E.) M. E. twittras; whence 'pilke brid . . . twittr' = that bird twitters, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 2, l. 1875. Twitter is a frequentative from a base twit, and means 'to keep on saying twit;' and twit is a lighter or weakened form of twist, appearing in the old word twit-le, now twiddle; see TWADDLE. Again, twiddle is related to tattle; and as twitler : twattle : titter : tattle. All these words are of imitative origin. † G. zwitseren, to twitter. And cf. Du. twitseren, to twitter, warble, chatter; Dan. quidde, Swed. quitta, to chirp, twitter. Der. twitler, sb. ☞ The sense of trembling may follow from that of tremulous sound; but a twitter of the nerves is prob. due rather to the influence of twitche, and stands for twitche. See TWINKLE.

TWO, TWAIN, one and one. (E.) The difference between two and twain is one of gender only, as appears from the A. S. forms. Twain is masc., whilst two is fem. and neuter; but this distinction was early disregarded. M. E. twaines, twainis, twainis, twainis, twainis, &c.; also two, two, in which the w was pronounced; the pronunciation of two as tu being of rather late date. 'Us twaine' = us twain, as two, Chaucer, C. T. 1135. 'Sustren two' = sisters two, id. 1021. Our poets seem to use twain and two indifferently. = A. S. twogon, masc. nom. and acc.; twit, fem. nom. and acc.; twit, tu, neut. nom. and acc.; twogro, gen. (all genders); twoda, dat. (all genders). The neut. tu already shows an occasional loss of w; and even in A. S. twod was used instead of twogon when nouns of different genders were conjoined; see Grein, ii. 556. † Du. twen. † Icel. tvær, acc. tvá, tvá. †

Dan. to; also tunde. + Swed. tud, tu. + Goth. twei, masc., twon, fem., twa, neut.; gen. twindja, dat. twinim; acc. twanis, twonis, twa. + G. zwo; also zween, only in the masc. gender; also zwa, fem. (rare); O. H. G. zwind, zwe, zwo, zwei. + Irish do; Gael. da, do; W. dan, dwy. + Russ. dva. + Lithuan. dvi; also du. + Lat. duo (whence F. deux, Ital. due, Span. dos, Port. dois, E. dozen). + Gk. duo. + Skt. dva, dvi.

β. All from the Aryan base DUA or DWA, two. Root uncertain; see Fick, l. 111. γ. In composition, we find, as a prefix, A. S. twi- (E. two in two-eyes, two-lights), Icel. tvi-, Du. twe-, Dan. and Swed. twa-, G. zwei-, Lat. bi- (for dvi-), Gk. di- (for duo-), Skt. dvi-, dvi-. Der. two-edged; two-fold, a modern substitution for M. E. twifold, Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Ps. cviii. 30. A. S. twifold, spelt twifold in Gen. xliii. 15, so that two-fold should rather be twy-fold. Also a-two, M. E. a two, Chaucer, C. T. 3571 (or 3569), A. S. on tu, Grein, ii. 556, so that the prefix a- = on; see A- (2). Also twain (as above), two-hue, twain-ty, twi-bill, twi-ice, twi-light, twi-ill, twi-join, twi-ness, twi-ness; bi-, prefix; bi-, prefix, in bi-vestible; di-, prefix, die-, prefix, dis-, prefix. Also dmes (1).

TYMPANUM, the hollow part of the ear, &c. (L., = Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [He also gives: 'Tympan, the drum of the ear, a frame belonging to a printing-press covered with parchment, . . . pannel of a door,' &c.; this is from F. tympan, 'a tympan, or timbrel, also a taber; . . . also, a printer's tympane,' &c.; Cot.] = Lat. tympanum, a drum; area of a pediment (in architecture); panel of a door. = Gk. τύμπανον, a drum, roller, area of a pediment, panel of a door. Formed with excrement μ from the rarer τύμπανος, a drum. = Gk. τυμ-, base of τύμπανος, to strike, beat, beat a drum; see Typa. And see Timbrel. Der. tympan-y, a flatulent distension of the belly, Dryden, Mac-Flecknoe, 194, from Gk. τυμπανίσις, a kind of dropy in which the belly is stretched tight like a drum; the F. form tympanie is given in Sherwood's index to Cotgrave.

TYPM, a mark or figure, emblem, model, a raised letter in printing. (F., = L., = Gk.) In Shak. Rich. III. iv. 4. 344; and in Spenser, F. Q. Introd. to b. l. st. 4. = F. type, a type; in Sherwood's index to Cotgrave. = Lat. typum, acc. of typus, a figure, image, type. = Gk. τύπος, a blow, the mark of a blow, stamp, impress, mark, mould, outline, sketch, figure, type, character of a disease. = Gk. τυπ-, base of τύπος, to strike, beat. Allied to Skt. tip, tump, to hurt. β. We also find Skt. tud, Lat. tundere (pt. l. tu-tud-), to strike. These are from parallel bases TU-P, TU-D, to strike; and it is prob. that the orig. forms of these bases were STUP and STUD respectively; cf. Gk. τροπέλιον, to strike, smite, Goth. stuman, to strike; Fick, l. 826. Der. typic, from Gk. τυπικός, typical, figurative; typical, typical-ly; typify, a coined word, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5, § 1; typo-founder, typo-metal; also typo-graphy, orig. in the sense of 'figurative description,' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. l. c. 8, § 15, where the suffix is from Gk. γράφειν, to write; typo-graphic, typo-graphic-al, -ly; typo-graph-er. And see tympanum, thump, foot (2).

TYPHOON, a violent whirlwind or hurricane in the Chinese seas. (Chinese.) The word typhoon, as at present used, is really Chinese, as will appear hereafter. [But it has been confused with typhon, a word of different origin, but with almost identically the same sense, affording an instance of accidental similarity, like that between Gk. θεός and E. god.] Typhoon is quite modern; and when Thomson (Sammer, 984) speaks of 'the circling typhon,' he means the Gk. word, as we learn in a note. We find also typhon in Phillips, ed. 1706, and in Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1663, p. 41. It first occurs (I believe) in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. ii. c. 48, to represent typhon in Pliny; clearly shewing that it is merely Englished from the Latin form of the Gk. τύφωον (better τύφών), a whirlwind. The word, in this form, is properly typhon, as in Thomson.] β. To pass on to typhoon, I find that, in an article on Wind in the Eng. Cyclopaedia, Arts, vol. iii. col. 938, the writer first gives the wrong etymology, and then proceeds to give the right one. After first stating the astounding notion that 'it has been supposed that the Chinese designation for a cyclone, typhoon, was . . . originally derived from the Greek' (1), he adds: 'but Mr. Piddington has shewn, after the celebrated sinologist, Dr. Morrison, that it is indubitably a Chinese word. The latter [Dr. Morrison] relates that there are in China temples dedicated to the Typhoon, the god [or goddess] of which they call Kae wee, the typhoon-mother, in allusion to its producing a gale from every point of the compass, and this mother-gale, with her numerous offspring, or a union of gales from the four quarters of heaven, make conjointly a tsungfung or typhoon.' [Piddington's work is entitled 'The Sailor's Hora-book for the Law of Storms,' London, 1st ed. 1848, 2nd ed. 1851; it was in the first edit. of this work that the word cyclone was proposed, 'from the Gk. κύκλος, a circle;' see Cycle.] γ. When once the word is known to be Chinese, the etymology is simple. The word merely means 'great wind.' = Chinese ta, great; and fung (in Canton fung), the wind, a gust, a gale. ☞

Hence ts fung [or ts fung] a gale, a high wind; a typhoon, a word derived from the Cantonese sound of this phrase; Williams, Chinese Dict., p. 155, col. 1, and p. 839, col. 2. ☞ It would be much better to write tyfoos (with f); and to reserve the spelling typhos for the Greek word, which is now obsolete.

TYPHUS, a kind of continued fever. (L., = Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Todd says it is 'one of the modern names given to low fever.' = Lat. typhus; merely a Latinised form from the Gk. = Gk. τύφος, smoke, cloud, mist, stupor, esp. stupor arising from fever; so that 'typhus fever' = stupor-fever. = Gk. τύφωω, to raise a smoke, to smoke. Cognate with Skt. dhūp, to fumigate; whence dhūpa, smoke. From the base DHUP, to smoke, extended from √ DHU, to blow, fan a flame, shake; see Fume, Dust. Der. typhous, adj.; typhoid, resembling typhus, from Gk. τύφος, crude form of τύφωω, and ιδίος, resemblance, from εἶδωμαι, I seem; see Idol.

TYRANT, a despotic ruler, oppressive master. (F., = L., = Gk.) The word was not originally used in a bad sense; see Trench. Study of Words. The spelling with y is modern, and due to our knowledge of Gk.; the word was really derived from French, and might as well have t. M. E. tyrant, but spelt tyrant in Rob. of Glouc. p. 374, l. 13; tyrant in Chaucer, prol. to Legend of Good Women, l. 374. = O. F. tiran, often spelt tyrant, with excrement t after s; also spelt tyran, tyrant; see Littré. Cotgrave gives: 'Tyran, a tyrant.' = Lat. tyrannus, acc. of tyrannus. = Gk. τύραννος, a lord, master, an absolute sovereign; later, a tyrant, usurper. Prob. orig. an adj. signifying kingly, lordly; as in the tragedies. Root uncertain. Der. tyranny, M. E. tyrannus or tyranny, Chaucer, C. T. 943 (or 941); from F. tyrannie, 'tyranny,' Cot., Lat. tyrannus, Gk. τύραννία, sovereign sway; also tyrannus, F. tyrannique, Lat. tyrannicus, Gk. τυραννικός; tyrannical, Cor. iii. 3, 2; tyrannical-ly; tyrannous, Meas. for Meas. iv. 2. 87, a coined word; tyrannously; tyrannise, K. John, v. 7. 47, from F. tyrannizer, 'to tyrannize, to play the tyrant,' Cot., as if from Lat. tyrannizare = Gk. τύραννίζω, to take the part of a tyrant (hence to act as one).

TYRO, a gross misspelling of Tiro, q. v.

U.

UBIQUITY, omnipresence. (F., = L.) In Bacon's Works, iii. 450, 524 (Parker Soc.); and in Cotgrave. = F. ubiquité, 'an ubiquity;' Cot. It answers to Lat. ubiquitatem, acc. of ubiquitas, a coined word, not in White's Dict.; coined to signify 'a being everywhere,' i. e. omnipresence. = Lat. ubique, wherever, also, everywhere. = Lat. ubi, where; with suffix -que, answering to Gk. τι, and allied to Lat. quis, Gk. τίς, and E. who. β. Ubi is short for ubi, appearing in ubi-unde, anywhere, se-ubi, nowhere; and ubi certainly stands for quo-ubi, where -bi is a suffix as in ubi, there, due to an old case-ending. It is remarkable that both ubi (= quo-ubi) and the suffix -que are from the same Aryan base KA. See Who. Der. ubiquitous, ubiquity.

UDDER, the breast of a female mammal. (E.) M. E. udder (= udder); 'Iddyr, or uddy of a beeste;' Prompt. Parv. = A. S. uðer, in a Gloss to Prov. vii. (Bosworth); cf. Lat. uberibus in Prov. vii. 18 (Vulgate). + O. Du. uðer, uðer (Hexham); Du. uðer. + Icel. juðr (an abnormal form; put for juðr); Swed. juður, juð; Dan. yver; cf. North E. yars, a Scand. form. + G. uðer, O. H. G. uðer (cited by Fick). β. All from Teut. type ŪDRA, an udder, Fick, iii. 33. Further cognate with Gael. and Irish uð, Lat. uber (put for uðer), Gk. ὄβη (gen. ὄβηρος), Skt. uðhar, uðhan, an udder. The Aryan type is ŪDHAR. Root unknown. Der. (from Lat. uber) co-uber-ant.

UGLY, frightful, hateful. (Scand.) M. E. ugly, Chaucer, C. T. 8549; spelt uglihs, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2805. We also find ugrom, frightful, Destruction of Troy, 877. = Icel. ugligr, fearful, dreadful, to be feared. = Icel. ugg-er, fear; with suffix -gr = A. S. -ig = E. -ish, -ly. Cf. Icel. ugga, to fear. We find also þigligr, terrible, þigr, fierce; and æsk, to dread, fear, a reflexive form standing for an older form æga-sk, where -sk = sk, self; also æga, terror, æga, to threaten. These words are allied to Goth. agan, to fear, ogran, to terrify. β. All from a Teut. verb ŪGAN, to fear, Fick, iii. 12; which is a secondary verb from the Teut. base AG, to fear, appearing in Goth. aga, terror, Icel. agi, E. awe. From √ AGH, to choke. See Awe. ☞ The E. awe is rather Scand. than E.; it answers to Icel. agi, not to A. S. æga, which is, however, a related word. This correction of the account given under Awe should be observed. Der. ugliness, spelt uglyness, Fricke of Conscience, 917, where it is used to translate Lat. horror.

UHLAN, ULAN, a lancer. (G., = Polish, = Turkish?) Modern.

G. ulian, a lancer. — Pol. ulan, an ulian; which, according to Scheler and Littré, is from Polish ula, a lance (f). β. Bat, according to Maha (in Webster) an ulian is one of a kind of light cavalry of Tataric origin, first introduced into European armies in Poland; the word is not (he thinks) of Polish origin, the Polish ulan, a lancer, being only borrowed from Turkish eglan, a youth, lad. ¶ This seems right; I find no Polish ula, but only ul, a bee-hive; and the Polish for 'lance' is ulianica.

UKASE, an edict of the Czar. (F., = Russ.) Modern. = F. ukase. = Russ. ukaz, an ordinance, edict; cf. ukaznate, ukazats, to indicate, shew, order, prescribe. = Russ. у-, prefix; kazats, to shew.

ULCER, a dangerous sore. (F., = L.) In Hamlet, iv. 7. 114. = F. ulcère (Cot.), mod. F. ulcère, 'an ulcer, a raw soab.' = Lat. ulcus, stem of ulcra, a sore; cf. Span. and Ital. ulcera, an ulcer. + Gk. ulcus, a wound, sore, abscess. ¶ The orig. sense is prob. 'a laceration'; the Gk. ul-, Lat. ul-, can only come from a common base WALK, meaning 'to tear,' whence Lith. vilka, a wolf, Skt. urika, E. uric = WALK, to tear; cf. Skt. urika, to tear, cut, wound, Lat. lacera, to lacerate, Gk. ulais, a rent. See WOLF and LACERATE. Der. ulceration, from F. ulceration, 'an ulceration,' Cot., from Lat. acc. ulcerationis; ulcerate, from Lat. ulceratus, pp. of ulcerare, to make sore; ulcerous, Hamlet, iii. 4. 147, from Lat. adj. ulcerosus, full of sores.

ULLAGE, the unfilled part of a cask. (F., = L. ?) * Ullage of a Cask, is what a cask wants of being full; Phillips, ed. 1706. = O. F. ullage, a filling up, the act of filling up that which is not quite full (Roquefort). = O. F. ullier, to fill a cask up to the bung; id. I suppose it to be allied to O. F. ur, urs, ors, the border, brim of a thing, from Lat. urs, the brim. [F. ur is due to Lat. accented o; Brucher.] Cf. Span. and Ital. orla, a border, margin, Span. orilla, a border, margin, orillar, to leave a selvedge or border on cloth. β. The Lat. ur is allied to us (gen. usis), the mouth; see ORAL.

ULTERIOR, farther, more remote. (L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson. = Lat. ulterior, further; comp. of ultra, beyond, or that side, as old adj. only occurring in the abl. ultra (= ultra parte) and ultra, which are used as adverbs with the sense of beyond; ultra is also used as a preposition. β. Ultra is also a comparative form (ul-ter-ior being a double comparative, like ex-ter-ior from ex); cf. O. Lat. ultra, ultra, beyond, which are allied to O. Lat. ultra, that, ultra (= ultra), he. Hence ul-ter = more that way, more in that direction. γ. Prob. allied to inter and interior; cf. Skt. antara, interior. It is supposed that inter, interior, intimate are allied to ultra, ulterior, ultramare, from a common pronom. base ANA, that, he, this; cf. Skt. ana, this. Der. ultra-, prefix, q. v.; ultra-ate, q. v. Also outrage ulterieur (s).

ULTIMATE, furthest, last. (L.) *The ultimate end of his presence; Bp. Taylor, Of the Real Presence, s. 1. (R.) = Lat. ultimus, pp. of ultra, to come to an end, to be at the last. = Lat. ultimus, last. Ul-ti-mus is a superl. form (like ap-er-tus, in-ti-mus), formed with Aryan suffix -tus from the base ul- appearing in ultra, ul-ter-ior; see ULTERIOR. Der. ultimate-ly; also ul-ti-mus-um, from Lat. ultimum, neut. of ultimus. Der. post-ultimate, anti-post-ultimate.

ULTRA, beyond. (L.) Lat. ultra, prefix = Lat. ultra, beyond, adv. and prep., orig. abl. fem. of O. Lat. ultra, adj.; see ULTERIOR. ¶ The F. form is outra, Ital. oltra, Span. ultra.

ULTRAMARINE, beyond sea; as sb., sky-blue. (Span., = L.) * Ultramarine, that comes or is brought from beyond sea; also, the finest sort of blue colour used in painting; Phillips, ed. 1706. And used by Dryden, On Painting, § 34 (R.), who talks of 'ultramarine or azure.' The word is Spanish, the prefix ultra- becoming ultra in Ital. and outra in F.; besides which, only Spanish has the peculiar sense of 'sky-blue.' = Span. ultramarino, beyond sea, foreign; also as sb. 'ultramarine, the finest blue colour, produced by calcination from lapis lazuli;' Neuman. = Lat. ultra, beyond; mar-, sea; and suffix -inus. See ULTRA- and MARINE. ¶ So called because lapis lazuli was a foreign production; see AZURE; and see UMBER.

ULTRAMONTANE, beyond the Alps. (F., = Ital., = L.) * Ultramontane, a name given by the Italians to all people living on the hither side of the Alps, who, with respect to their country, are beyond those mountains; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'He is an ultramontane;' Bacon, Observations on a Libel (R.) = F. ultramontain, applied by the French to the Italians themselves, as being beyond the Alps from the French side, and in use as early as the 14th cent. (Littré). This is also the E. view of the word, which is used with reference to the Italians, esp. to those who hold extreme views as to the Pope's supremacy. = Ital. ultramontano, beyond the mountains; Low Lat. ultramontanus, coined in imitation of classical Lat. transmontanus. = Lat. ultra, beyond; and mons-, stem of mons, a mountain; with suffix -anus. See ULTRA- and MOUNTAIN. And see TRAMONTANE. Der. ultramontan-ist, -ism.

ULTRAMUNDANE, beyond the limits of our solar system, beyond the world. (L.) 'Imaginary ultramundane spaces;' Boyle's Works, vol. v. p. 140 (R.) And in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. = Lat. ultramundanus, beyond the world. = Lat. ultra, beyond; and mundanus worldly. See ULTRA- and MUNDANE.

UMBEL, a form of flower in which a number of stalks, each bearing a flower, radiate from a centre. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives it in the form umbella; it has since been shortened to umbel. So called from its likeness in form to an umbrella. = Lat. umbella, a parasol; Juvenal, ix. 30. Dimin. of umbra, a shade. See UMBRELLA. Der. umbelliferous, bearing umbels (Phillips), coined with suffix -ferous, as in cruciferous, from Lat. suffix -fer, bearing, and E. -ous (F. -ous, Lat. -osus). Doublet, umbrella.

UMBER, a species of brown ochre. (F., = Ital., = L.) In Shak. As You Like It, i. 3. 114. = F. umber, used shortly for terre d'umber, 'beyond sea azur' an earth found in silver mines, and used by painters for shadowings; Cot. [As 'beyond-sea azur' is certainly ultramarine, it must be a different preparation from the same material, viz. lapis lazuli; see Ultramarine.] = Ital. ombra, used shortly for terre d'ombra, umber (see Meadows, in the Ital.-Eng. part). Wedgwood cites from a late edition of Florio: 'terre d'ombra, a kind of earth found in silver-mines used by painters for shadowings.' Lat. 'earth of shadow,' i. e. earth used for shadowing; cf. Ital. ombreggiare, to shadow. The Ital. ombra is from Lat. umbra, shadow; see UMBRAGE.

¶ See Wedgwood (p. 740), who notes that 'the fable of the pigment taking its name from Umbria [which is only a guess by Malone] is completely disproved by the Span. name ombra (shade); ombra di Venezia, Venetian umber; ombra de Avena, bone-umber.' Some paintings of the Venetian school in the Fitzwilliam Museum are remarkable for their umbered or ombra appearance. Cf. also F. ombé, 'ambered or shadowed,' Cot.; and see BOMBRE.

UMBILICAL, pertaining to the navel. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. ombilical, 'umbilical, belonging to the navel;' Cot. = F. ombilic, 'the navel or middle of;' id. = Lat. umbilicium, acc. of umbilicus, the navel, middle, centre. Allied to Gk. ὀμφαλός, the navel; umbilicus being really an adjectival form, from a sb. umbilus = ὀμφαλός. Cf. Lat. umbra, a boss. β. 'While we are brought, for Greek and Latin, to a root AMBH [nasalised form of ABH], the corresponding words in the other languages come from a root NABH, which should probably be regarded as the older form;' Curtius, i. 367. Cf. Skt. nabhi, the navel; and see NAVE, NAVE (1). Thus Lat. umbilicus stands for ombilicus, and ὀμφαλός for ombafalós, by the common loss of initial o.

UMBRAGE, a shade or screen of trees, suspicion of injury, offence. (F., = L.) The proper sense is 'shadow,' as in Hamlet, v. 3. 125; thence it came to mean a shadow of suspicion cast upon a person, suspicion of injury, &c. 'It is also evident that St. Peter did not carry himself so as to give the least overture or umbrage to make any one suspect he had any such preeminence;' Bp. Taylor, A Dissuasive from Popery, p. i. § 8 (R.) = F. umbrage (also umbrage), 'an umbrage, shade, shadow; also jealousy, suspicion, an inciling of; whence donneur umbrage à, to discontent, make jealous of;' Cot. = F. umbrage, a shadow; with suffix -age (= Lat. -ationem); cf. Lat. umbraticus, belonging to shade. = Lat. umbra, a shadow. Root unknown. Der. umbrageous, shadowy, from F. umbrageous, 'shady, . . . umbragious;' Cot.; umbrageously, -ness. And see umb-ol, umb-ella, umbra.

UMBRELLA, a screen carried in the hand to protect from sunshine or rain. (Ital., = L.) Now used to protect from rain, in contradistinction to a parasol; but formerly used to protect from sunshine, and rather an old word. Cotgrave translates F. ombrière by 'an umbrella, or shadow,' and F. ombrelle by 'an umbrella.' 'Now you have got a shadow, an umbrella, To keep the searching world's opinion From your fair credit;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 1. 2. = Ital. ombrella (see below); better spelt ombrella, 'a fan, a canopy, . . . also a kind of round fan or shadowing that they use to ride with in summer in Italy, a little shade;' Florio, Dimin. of Ital. ombra, a shade. = Lat. umbra, a shade; see UMBRAGE. ¶ The true classical Lat. form is umbella; umbrella is an Ital. diminutive, regularly formed from umbra; the spelling with u is found even in Italian, Florio has umbella, umbrella, 'a little shadow, a little round thing that women bare in their hands to shadow them; also, a broad brimmed hat to keep off heats and rays; also, a kind of round thing like a round skreens that gentlemen use in Italie in time of summer.' This account of the word, in the edition of Florio of 1598, clearly implies that the word umbrella was not, in that year, much used in English; for he does not employ the word. Doublet, umbel.

UMPIRE, a third person called in to decide a dispute between two others. (F., = L.) This curious word has lost initial u, and stands for umpire, once a common form. See remarks under the letter N. Spelt unspire in L. L. L. i. 1. 170. M. E. unspire or unspire. 'N(e)unspire, or unspire, Arber; Prompt. Parv. Spelt unspire, unspire, unspier, P. Plowman, B. v. 337; unspier, id. C. vii. 388; unspire, id. A. v. 181. In Wyclif, Prologue to Romans, ed. Forshall and Madden, p. 302, l. 24, we have unspire, where six MSS. read unspier. It also occurs, spelt unspire, in the Testament of Love, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 287. Tyrwhitt shews (in his Glossary to Chaucer) that the Lat. impar was sometimes used in the sense of arbitrator, and rightly suggests a connection with mod. F. unspair, odd. β The M. E. unspire exactly represents the O. F. form unspier, as it would have been spelt in the 14th century. Later, it occurs in Cotgrave as unspier, 'peerless, also odd; and an earlier spelling unspir is given by Roquefort, with the sense of peerless. It is simply a compound of F. un, not, and O. F. spier, a peer, an equal; from Lat. unus, not, and par, equal; see NON- and PEAR (1).

γ The O. F. unspier became unspier as a matter of course, since a before β regularly becomes m, as in unspier = unspier; see HAMPER (2). It may also be noted that it is not the only M. E. word in which the same F. prefix occurs, since we also have M. E. unspower, i. e. lack of power, in P. Plowman, C. xx. 292, spelt unspower, unspower, and even unspower. The last form suggests that the loss of initial s was due to some confusion between the F. un and E. un, with much the same negative sense. Hence a unspire or an unspier was a non-peer or an un-peer, orig. the former. δ The sense is curious; but the use of Lat. impar, lit. odd, in the sense of arbitrator or unspier sufficiently explains it; the unspier is the odd man, the third man, called in to settle a dispute between two others. It may also be noted that pair and peer are doublets, as already shewn.

UN- (1), negative prefix. (E.) Prefixed to substantives, adjectives, and adverbs; distinct from the verbal prefix un- below. M. E. un- = A. S. un-; very common as a neg. prefix. \dagger Du. un- + Icel. u- or ö- (for un-, the long u being due to loss of n). \dagger Dan. un- + Swed. un- + Goth. un- + G. un- + W. un- (cf. Gael. un-). \dagger Lat. in- + Gk. dis-, \dagger ; orig. dis-; see CURTUS, l. 381. \dagger Zend. an- (Curtius); cf. Pers. an- + Skt. an-. β All from Aryan AN-, negative prefix, of which the oldest form was prob. ANA (Curtius); see FICK, l. 484.

γ If ANA is really the true orig. form, it is possible that Skt. na, not, is the same word; cf. Lat. ne, not, Gk. na, neg. prefix, Goth. ni, not, Russ. no, neg. prefix, Gael. na-, neg. prefix, Lithuan. ne, no.

δ It is unnecessary to give all the words in which this prefix occurs; it is used before words of various origins, both English and French. The following may be noted in particular. $\mathbf{1}$ It occurs in words purely English, and appears in many of these in Anglo-Saxon; Grein gives A. S. words, for example, answering to un-clean, un-even, un-fair, un-whole, un-smooth, un-soft, un-still, un-wis.

Some compounds are now disused, or nearly so; such as un-bold, un-bliþe, un-little, un-right, un-sad, un-slow (all in Grein). In the case of past participles, the prefix is ambiguous; thus un-bound may either mean 'not bound,' like A. S. unbounden; or it may mean 'opened,' being taken as the pp. of unbind, verb. $\mathbf{2}$ Un- is frequently prefixed to words of F. origin; examples such as un-forged (unforged) and un-stable occur in Chaucer; we even find un-famous in House of Fame, l. 56, where we should now say not famous. Palgrave has un-able, un-certain, un-certain (uncertain), un-gentyl, un-gracious, un-honest, un-marryed, un-parfyte (imperfect), un-prytable, un-reasonable (unreasonable). $\mathbf{3}$ In some cases, such as un-south, the simple word (without the prefix) is obsolete; such cases are discussed below.

UN- (2), verbal prefix, expressing the reversal of an action. (E.) In the verb to un-lock, we have an example of this; it expresses the reversal of the action expressed by lock; i. e. it means to open again that which was closed by locking. This is quite distinct from the mere negative prefix, with which many, no doubt, confound it. M. E. un-, A. S. un-; only used as a prefix in verbs. \dagger Du. un-; as in un-laden, to unload, from laden, to load. \dagger G. un-, as in un-laden, to unload; O. H. G. un-, as in un-laden, to unload. \dagger Goth. un-, as in un-binden, to unbind. β It is precisely the same prefix as that which appears as un- in E. un-stay, and as un- in A. S. un-starian; and it is cognate with Gk. dein-, used only in the not very different sense of 'in opposition to'; thus, whilst E. un-stay is to reverse what is said, to deny it, the Gk. dein- is used in un-stay or gain-say, to deny what is said by others. See ANSWER and ANTI-.

δ It is unnecessary to give all the words with this prefix; I may note that Grein gives the A. S. verb corresponding to E. un-de, viz. unden; also un-tyan to unfasten, open, now obsolete; Bosworth gives unbindan, to unbind, unfaldan, to unfold, unslutan, to unloose, and a few others, but verbs with this prefix are not very numerous in A. S. β However, it was so freely employed before verbs of French origin, that we have now many such words in use; Palgrave has un-arm, un-band, un-head, un-houell (unbuckle), un-bride, un-clasp, &c., with others that are obsolete, such as un-custome, to disuse a custom. γ The most common and remarkable of the mod. E. verbs with this prefix are: un-bar, un-band, un-bind, un-bill, un-burn, un-brace, un-buckle, un-burden, un-burton, un-cash, un-clasp, un-close, un-cloth, un-coil, un-compe, un-cover, un-curl, un-deceive, un-do, un-draw, un-earth, un-fetter, un-fix, un-fold, un-furl, un-gird, un-hand, un-harden, un-hinge, un-hood, un-horn, un-house, un-hound, un-hut, un-hut, un-lace, un-lade, un-lance, un-lumber, un-load, un-loose, un-make, un-man, un-mast, un-moor, un-muffle, un-muzzle, un-nurse, un-pack, un-people, un-ravel, un-rig, un-robe, un-roll, un-roof, un-root, un-saddle, un-say, un-screw, un-sail, un-sat, un-settle, un-son, un-stabbe, un-stop, un-string, un-thread, un-tie, un-tune, un-tune, un-tussit, un-warp, un-wave, un-wind, un-wrap, un-yoke. See further under the simple words. \dagger Note the ambiguity in the case of past participles; for which see under UN- (1).

UN- (3), prefix. (O. Low G.). See UNTO, UNTIL.

UNANIMOUS, of one mind. (L.) 'The universall and unanimous belief;' Camden, Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1588 (R.) Englished (by change of us to ous, as in arduous, &c.), from Lat. unanimus, of one mind. = Lat. un-, one; and animus, mind; see UNIT and ANIMOSITY. Der. unanimously; also unanimity, spelt unanimous in The Libell of Englishe Polycy (A. S. 1436), l. 1068, (quoted in Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 206), from F. unanimite, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th century (Littré), from Lat. acc. unanimis, due to the adj. unanimis, by-forms of unanimus.

UNANELED, without having received extreme unction. (E.; partly L. = Gk.) In Hamlet, l. 5. 77. Lat. 'not on oiled.' = A. S. un-, not; and an, upon, on; and an, to oil, an unauthorised verb regularly formed from ole, sb., oil. The A. S. ole is prob. not a Teut. word, but borrowed from Lat. oleum, oil, Gk. elaion. See UN- (1), ON, and OIL; and see note to ANNEAL.

UNCIAL, pertaining to a certain style of writing. (L.) 'Uncial, belonging to an ounce or inch;' Blount, ed. 1674. Applied to a particular form of letters in MSS. from the 4th to the 10th centuries. The letters are of large size, and the name was prob. applied at first to large initial letters, as the word signifies 'of the size of an inch.' Phillips gives uncial only in its other sense, viz. 'belonging to an ounce.' Cotgrave gives F. uncial, 'weighing as much as an ounce;' but he also gives lettres unciales, 'huge letters, great letters.' = Lat. uncialis, belonging to an inch, or to an ounce. = Lat. uncia, an inch, an ounce. See INCH and OUNCE (1).

UNCLE, the brother of one's father or mother. (F., = L.) M. E. uncle, uncle; Rob. of Glouc. p. 58, l. 5. = F. uncle, 'an uncle;' Cot. = Lat. avunculus, acc. of avunculus, a mother's brother; avunculus was contracted to avunculus, whence F. uncle. The lit. sense is 'little grandfather;' it is a double dimin. (with suffixes -u- and -le-) from avus, a grandfather. Orig. an expression of affectionate relationship, allied to Lat. avere, to be fortunate, used as a word of greeting; cf. Skt. av, to be pleased. See AVE. \dagger The G. uncle is also from Latin. The E. uncle, K. Lear, l. 4. 117, is due to the phr. my uncle, corrupted from mine uncle.

UNCOMEATABLE, unapproachable. (E.; w'ch F. suffix.) In the Tatler, no. 12. A strange compound, with prefix un- (1) and suffix -able, from COME and AT.

UNCOUTH, unfamiliar, odd, awkward, strange. (E.) The lit. sense is simply 'unknowns;' hence strange, &c. M. E. uncouth, strange, Chaucer, C. T. 10598. A common word; see STRATMANN. = A. S. un-cūth, unknown, strange (common); Grein, ii. 616. = A. S. un-, not; and cūth, known, pp. of cunthan, to know, but used as an adj.; Grein, l. 172. See further under CAN (1); and see UN- (1). \dagger The Lowland Sc. uncow is the same word; and, again, the prov. E. unbed or unbed (spelt unbed in Halliwell), strange, unusual, odd, also lonely, solitary, is the same word, but confused in form with M. E. unbed, not made known, where had (= A. S. efhad) is the pp. of the causal verb efhan, to make known, a derivative from red by vowel-change from h to f; Grein, l. 181.

UNCTION, an anointing, a salve; also, warmth of address, sanctifying grace. (F., = L.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 4. 145, iv. 7. 142. 'His inward unction wyl worke with our diligence;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 763 (R.) M. E. unction; spelt unction, unction, l. 112. = F. unction, 'unction, an anointing;' Cot. = Lat. unctionem, acc. of unctio, an anointing. = Lat. unctus, pp. of ungere, to anoint; see UNGUENT. Der. unctuous, Holmshead, Desc. of Britain, c. 24 (R.), also spelt unctuous, Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 195 (first folio), and even unctuous, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 12, p. 510, from F. unctuous, 'oily, fatty;' Cot., from Low Lat. unctuosus (Ducange); due to Lat. unctus, stem of unctus (gen. unctus), an anointing. Hence unctuous = unctuous, from F. unctuosité, 'unctuousité;' Cot.

UNDER, beneath, below. (E.) M. E. under, under, Chaucer, C. T. 1697. = A. S. under; Grein, ii. 617. \dagger Du. under. \dagger Icel. undir. \dagger Swed. and Dan. under. \dagger Goth. undar. \dagger G. unter; O. H. G. untar. β Further allied to Lat. inter (Ocean aster), within;

Skt. antere, interior; see Inter-. Curtius, i. 384. ¶ But Fick (iii. 38) connects it with Lat. inform. See Under- below. Der. under-a, q. v.

UNDER-, præfix, beneath. (E.) The same word as the above. Very common; the chief words with this prefix are under-bred, -current, -done, -gird (Acts, xxvii. 17), under-go (A. S. undergān, Bosworth), under-graduate, i. e. a student who is under a graduate, one who has not taken his degree, under-ground, -growth, under-hand, adv., secretly, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 34, also as adj., As You Like It, i. 1. 146, under-lay (A. S. underleggan, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 190, l. 5), under-lee (A. S. underleggas, Bosworth), under-lee. Also under-ling, Gower, C. A. iii. 80, l. 10, Layamon, 19116, with double dunn. suffix -ing. Also under-mass, Wyclif, Matt. vi. 30, early version; under-most, with double superl. suffix, as explained under Aftermost; under-mouth, M. E. undermup, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 5, l. 3074, compounded like Beneath, q. v. Also under-plot, sb., prop. vb., -rule, -sell; -set, Ancren Riwle, p. 254, l. 8; under-sign; under-stand, q. v.; under-stand; under-take, q. v.; under-tone, -value, -wood (Ben Jonson), -write, -worster.

UNDERN, a certain period of the day. (E.) The time denoted by unders differed at different periods. In Chaucer, C. T. 15128, it denotes some hour of the fore-noon, perhaps about 11 o'clock. 'At under and at midday,' O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 33; with reference to the parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard. 'Abeten unders desen' = about the under-tide of the day, Ancren Riwle, p. 24; where perhaps an earlier hour is meant, about 9 a. m. = A. S. undern; whence under-vid, under-tide, Matt. x. 3; here it means the third hour, i. e. 9 a. m. + Icel. undorn, mid-afternoon; also mid-forenoon. + M. H. G. undern, O. H. G. untarn, a time of the day. + Goth. undurnai; only in the compound undurnai-mata, a morning-meal, Luke, xiv. 12. β. The true sense is merely 'intervening period,' which accounts for its vagueness; the G. unter preserves the sense of amidst or between, though it is the same word as E. under; cf. also Lat. inter, between. The Teut. type is UNDURNI, Fick, iii. 34; extended from UNDAK, under; see Under. ¶ The word is by no means obsolete, but appears in various forms in prov. E., such as andorn, qunder, undornas, dumdrins, dondinns, all in Ray, under, in Halliwell, &c. (Here Nares is wrong).

UNDERSTAND, to comprehend. (E.) M. E. understanden, understanden, a strong verb; the pp. appears as understanden, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1681. The weak pp. understanden occurs in the Prayer-book. = A. S. understandan, lit. to stand under or among, hence to comprehend (cf. Lat. intel-ligere); Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 6, c. xxxix. § 8. = A. S. under, under; and standan, to stand; see Under and Stand. Der. understand-ing, spelt understandunge, Avenbite of Inwyrt, p. 24, l. 8.

UNDERTAKE, to take upon oneself, attempt. (Hybrid; E. and Scand.) M. E. undertaken, strong verb; pt. t. undertak, see Havelok, 377. It first appears in the Ormulum, l. 10314. The latter part of the word is of Scand. origin; see Under and Take. β. The word is a sort of translation of (and was suggested by) the A. S. underniman, to understand, receive, Matt. xix. 12, and A. S. underfian, to receive, Matt. x. 41, John, xviii. 3. Neither of these words have precisely the same sense, but both niman and fian have the exact sense of E. take (Icel. taka). The real A. S. word, with the same prefix and the exact sense, is underþigan (lit. to undergo), John, viii. 27, xii. 16. Der. undertak-ing, Haml. ii. 1. 104; undertak-er, orig. one who takes a business in hand, Oth. iv. 1. 224, Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 349.

UNDULATE, to wave, move in waves. (L.) In Thomson, Summer, 982. Phillips, ed. 1706, has undulate only as a pp. Blount, ed. 1674, gives undulated and undulation. = Lat. undulatus, undulated, wavy. = Lat. undula, a little wave; not used, but a regular dimin. of unda, a wave, properly 'water.' + A. S. und. + Icel. undr. β. Unda is a nasalised form allied to Gk. βῆρα, water, and to E. water. It is cognate with Skt. nda, water, Russ. voda, water; cf. Skt. vad, to wet, Lithuan. vandis, water. = √ WAD, to wet; see Water. Der. undulat-ion (Phillips); undulat-ory. Also (from unda) ab-undant, ab-undant, in-undant, red-undant, red-undant, super-ab-undant.

UNEARTH, scarcely, with difficulty. (E.) Obsolete; in Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 38; misused with the sense 'almost,' id. l. 12. 4. M. E. unearpe, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 134. = A. S. unearþe, with difficulty, Gen. xxvii. 30; adv. from adj. unearþe, difficult, Grein, ii. 620. = A. S. un-, not; and earþ, or eorþe, easy, commonly used in the adv. form eorþe, easily, Grein, i. 254; we also find eorþe, þe, easy, id. l. 230, ii. 767. + O. Sax. erbi, easy. + O. H. G. edi, desert, empty, also easy; G. ede, deserted, desolate. + Icel. unþr, empty. + Goth. unþra, desert, waste. β. All from Teut. type AUTHA, desert, waste; hence easy to occupy, free, easy; Fick, iii. 5. Cf. Lat. otium, leisure; Skt. as, to be pleased. Prob. from √ AW, to be satisfied with.

gainliche, used as an adv., awkwardly, horribly, St. Marharet, ed. Cockayne, p. 9, l. 14. Formed by adding -liche (-ly) to the adj. ungain, inconvenient, spelt ungayne in La Houe Florence, l. 1421, in Ritson, Met. Romances, iii. 60. = A. S. un-, not, see Un- (1); and Icel. gagn, ready, serviceable, convenient, allied to gagna, to meet, to suit, gagn, against, and E. again; see Again. Cf. Icel. óþegn (ungain), ungainly, ungentle. Der. ungainli-ness.

UNGUENT, ointment. (L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. = Lat. unguentum, ointment. = Lat. unguent-, stem of pres. part. of unguere, ungere, to anoint. + Skt. ang, to anoint, smear. = √ AG, ANG, to anoint; Fick, i. 479. Der. (from ungere, pp. unctus) unct-ion, q. v.; also unct-ment, an-oint.

UNICORN, a fabulous animal with one horn. (F., = L.) M. E. unicorn, Ancren Riwle, p. 120, l. 9. = F. unicorne, 'an unicorn'; Cot. = Lat. unicornus, acc. of unicornis, adj., one-horned. = Lat. uni- = uno-, crude form of unus, one; and corn-a, a horn, cognate with E. horn. See Unity and Horn.

UNIFORM, consistent, having throughout the same form or character. (F., = L.) Spelt uniforvus in Minshew, ed. 1617; uniforvus in Cotgrave. = F. uniforvus, 'uniform,' Cot. = Lat. uniformem, acc. of uniformis, having one form. = Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; and form-a, a form; see Unity and Form. Der. uniforvus, sb., a like dress for persons who belong to the same body; uniforvus-ly; uniforvus-ity, from F. uniformité, 'uniformity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. uniformitatem.

UNILITERAL, consisting of one letter. (L.) The only such words in E. are a, i, and o. Coined from Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; and liter-a, a letter; with suffix -al; cf. bi-literal, tri-literal.

UNION (1), concord, harmony, confederation in one. (F., = L.) Spelt unyon, Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 233 (R.) = F. union, 'an union'; Cot. = Lat. unionem, acc. of unio, oneness. = Lat. uni- = one, cognate with E. One, q. v. And see Unity.

UNION (2), a large pearl. (F., = L.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 283. Really the same word as the above; the Lat. unio means (1) oneness, (2) a single pearl of a large size. Unio is also the same word. See above; and see Onion. Doublet, unio.

UNIQUE, single, without a like. (F., = L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. = F. unique, 'single,' Cot. = Lat. unicum, acc. of unicus, single. = Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; with suffix -us (Aryan -ā). See Unity.

UNISON, concord, harmony. (F., = L.) 'In concord, discord, notes and cliftes in tunes of unison;' Gascoigne, Grene Knight's Farewell to Fansie, st. 7; Works, l. 413. = F. unisson, 'an unison'; Cot. [The spelling with is is remarkable, as it is not etymological.] = Lat. unisonem, acc. of unisonus, having the same sound as something else. = Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; and sonus, a sound. See Unity and Sound (3). Der. unison-ous; uni-son-ant (from sonant-, stem of pres. part. of sonare, to sound); uni-son-ance.

UNIT, a single thing, person, or number. (F., = L.) Not derived from Lat. unitum, which would mean 'united,' but a purely E. formation, made by dropping the final letter of unit-y. 'Unit, Unitis, or Unity, in arithmetic, the first significant figure or number 1; in Notation, if a number consist of 4 or 5 places, that which is outermost towards the right hand is called the Place of Units;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The number 1 is still called unity. See Unity.

UNITE, to make one, join. (L.) 'I unite, I bringe diverse thynges together in one;' Palgrave. = Lat. unit-em, pp. of unire, to unite. = Lat. uni- = one; see Unity.

UNITY, oneness, union in one, concord. (F., = L.) M. E. unite, unite, unite, Gower, C. A. iii. 181; F. Ploverman, C. vi. 10. = F. unite, 'an unity'; Cot. = Lat. unitatem, acc. of unitas, oneness. = Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; with suffix -itas. The Lat. unus is cognate with E. One, q. v. Der. unit-ari-um, a coined word, added by Todd to Johnson; hence unit-ari-ism. Doublet, unit, q. v. We also have (from Lat. uni-) un-ite, un-ion, un-ique, un-ion, un-icorn, un-icorn, un-icorn, un-literal, un-icornal; also un-unionem, dis-un-ion, dis-un-ion, re-un-ion, re-un-ion, tri-un-. Also un-, q. v.; un-ant, q. v.

UNIVERSAL, comprehending the whole, extending to the whole. (F., = L.) M. E. univarsal; spelt univarsall, Gower, C. A. iii. 91, l. 25. = F. univarsal (sometimes universal in the 14th century), 'universal,' Cot. = Lat. universalis, belonging to the whole. = Lat. universum, the whole; neut. of universus, turned into one, combined into a whole. = Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of unus, one; and versus, pp. of vertere, to turn; see Unity and Verse. Der. universal-ly, universal-ty, universal-ism. Also (from F. univarsal = Lat. universum) univarsal, Henry V, iv. chor. 3; also univarsal-ty, a school for universal knowledge, M. E. univarsite, used in the sense of 'world' in Wyclif, James, iii. 6, from F. univarsité, 'university, also an university,' Cot., from Lat. acc. universitatem.

UNIVOCAL, having one voice, having but one meaning. (L.) Now little used; it is the antithesis of am-vo-cal, i. e. having a variable meaning. In Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3 (R.) Cf. F. univoque, 'of one only sense'; Cot. = Lat. univocum, univocal; with suffix -alis. = Lat. uni-, for uno-, crude form of una, one; and vo-, stem of vox, voice, sound. See UNITY and VELOS.

UNKEMPT, not combed. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 10. 39; and Shep. Cal. November, 30; in both places in the metaphorical sense of rough or rude. A contr. form of uncombed. From un-, not; and M. E. hembod, hempt, combed, Chaucer, C. T. 3143 (or 3143). Kembod is the pp. of hemban, to comb, P. Plowman, B. v. 18. = A. S. combun, to comb; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 108, l. 6; formed (by vowel-change of e to o) from A. S. comb, a comb; see COMB.

UNLESS, if not, except. (E.) Formerly written unless, unlesse, with e; Horne Tooke remarks: 'I believe that William Tyndall . . . was one of the first who wrote this word with a u;' and he cites: 'The scripture was given, that we may applye the medicine of the scripture, every man to his own sores, unlesse then we extend to be idle disputers.' Tyndal, Prolog. to the 3 books of Moses. Horne Tooke gives 16 quotations with the spellings unles and unlesse; the earliest appears to be: 'It was not possible for them to make whole Cristes cote without seme, unlesse certeyn grete men were brought out of the way;' Trial of Sir John Oldcastle, an. 1413. We may also note: 'Charitie is not perfect unles that it be burninge.' T. Lapeet, Treatise of Charitie, p. 8. (But Horne Tooke's own explanation of the phrase is utterly wrong.) Falsgrave, in his list of conjunctions, gives unlesse and unlesse that.

β. The full phrase was, as above, on less that, but that was soon dropped and seldom retained. Here on is the ordinary preposition; and less is mod. E. less; see ON and LESS. The sense is 'in less than,' or 'on a less supposition.' Thus, if charity be (fully) burning, it is perfect; in a less case, it is imperfect. The use of on in the sense of in is extremely common in M. E., as in on lise = in life (see ALIVE), on sleep = in sleep (see ASLEEP); and see numerous examples in Stratmann. On less or in less is similar to at least, at most. γ. Matzner, and Mahn (in Webster) wrongly explain un- in unless as a negative prefix; this is contrary to all the evidence, and makes nonsense of the phrase. Morris (Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 332) rightly gives on less as the orig. form, but does not explain it. Chambers, Etym. Dict., correctly gives: 'unless, lit. on less, at or for less.'

UNBULY, disregarding restraint. (Hybrid; E. and F., = L.; with E. unbula.) In James, iii. 8, where Wyclif has unbulis; here the E. version translates the Gk. ἀνδραγαθία, i. e. that cannot be riled. Thus unbulis is for unbulisly; it does not seem to be a very old word, though going back nearly to A. D. 1500. 'Ye . . . unbulisly have ruled.' Sir J. Cheke, Hurt of Sedition (R.) From UN- and BULE; with suffix -ly. γ. It is remarkable that the M. E. unrest, might have produced a somewhat similar adj., viz. unrestly, unrestful, restless. But Stratmann gives no example of the word, and the vowel-sound does not quite accord; so that any idea of such a connection may be rejected. This M. E. unrest is from A. S. un-, not, and rest, rest (Grimm, ii. 384), cognate with Icel. rá, G. ruhe, rest, from the same root as REST; Fick, iii. 246. We must also note that unrested occurs as equivalent to unrestly, as in 'theyre unrested company,' Fabyan, Chron. an. 1380-1. Der. unrestly, -ness.

UNTELL, till to. (O. Low G. and Scand.) M. E. untel, P. Plowman, B. prol. 227; Pricke of Conscience, 555; spelt untel, Havelok, 761. A substituted form of untel, by the use of ti for to; the two latter words being equivalent in sense. M. E. til (E. till) is of Scand. origin, as distinguished from to (= A. S. tō). See TILL, and see further under UNTO.

UNTO, even to, to. (O. Low G.) Not found in A. S. M. E. unto, Chaucer, C. T. 490 (or 488); earlier in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 1, l. 7. It stands for und-to; where to is the usual E. prep. (A. S. tō), and und is the O. Fries. und (also ont), unto, O. Sax. und, unto (whence und, shortened for und-to, unto, where to = A. S. tō, as well as und, untun, unto, shortened for und-to, und-tun). 'Fórun folk und = folk went unto him; Heliland, 2814. So also Goth. und, unto, until, as far as, up to; 'und Bethlahaim' = unto Bethlehem, Luke, ii. 15; whence untis (= und to), until. It is remarkable that the word is common in A. S. in a different form, viz. ut; this form is due to loss of a, so that A. S. ut; Goth. und; : A. S. ut; Goth. untar (tooth). β. The origin of Goth. und is obscure; perhaps it is only another form of Goth. and-, prefix, cognate with Gk. anti, in which case un- in un-to is allied to the verbal prefix un-; see UN- (2). And see UNTELL.

UP, towards a higher place, aloft. (E.) M. E. up, up; common. = A. S. up, up, up, adv.; Grimm, ii. 630 + Du. op + Icel. upp + Dan. op + Swed. upp + Goth. up + G. auf; O. H. G. uf. β. All from the Teut. type UP, up; closely allied to Teut. UF, as seen in Goth. uf, under, uf-ar, over (comparative form), and in E. over; further allied to Lat. sub, under, Gk. hypo, under, Skt. upa, near, under.

See the full account under OVER. Der. up-or, M. E. upper, King Alisaunder, 5691; Chaucer uses over in the same sense, as in over lippe = upper lip, C. T. 133. Hence upper-moat (not an old form), as in 'even vpon the uppermost pinnacle of the temple,' Udall, On St. Luke, c. 4; this is not a correct form, but made on the model of AFTERMOST, q. v. Also up-moat, Jal. Cra. ii. t. 24, which appears to be simply a contraction for uppermost, though really a better form. And see UP- below, and UPON; also OPON.

UP-, prefix. (E.) The same word as the above. The chief words in which it occurs are: up-bear, up-land, up-braid, q. v.; up-beame, Shak. Venus, 422; up-bill; up-board, Hamlet, i. 1. 136; up-hold, up-holdier, q. v.; up-land, up-land-ub = M. E. uplandische in Prompt. Parv.; up-lyft, Temp. iii. 3. 68; up-right, A. S. uprīht, uprīht, Grimm, ii. 632; up-ru-ug, L. L. L. iv. 1. 2, with which cf. M. E. upruog, resurrection, Rob. of Glouc. p. 379, l. 17; up-rear, q. v.; up-root, Dryden, St. Cecilia's Day, 49; up-set = set up, Gower, C. A. l. 53, l. 15, also to overturn, id. lib. 283, l. 18; up-shot, Hamlet, v. 2. 395; up-shif; up-side-down, q. v.; up-stair, q. v.; up-stair, A. S. upstair, Grimm, ii. 632; up-ward, A. S. upward, adv., ibid.

UPAS, the poison-tree of Java. (Malay.) Not in Todd's Johnson; the deadly effects of the tree have been grossly exaggerated. = Malay upas, 'a milky juice extracted from certain vegetables, operating when mixed with the blood, as a most deadly poison, concerning the effects of which many exaggerated stories have been related; see Hist. of Sumatra, ed. 3, p. 110. Pusa upas, the poison-tree, arbor toxicaria Macassarensis;' Marsden, Malay Dict. p. 24. The Malay pada means 'tree'; id. p. 230.

UPBRAID, to reproach. (E.) M. E. upbrāid, to upbraid; we also find upbrād, sb., a reproach. 'The deuyis runne to me with grete scores and upbrāids;' and again, 'wyhyd angelles of the deuyle upbrāyde me;' Monk of Evesham, c. 27; ed. Arber, p. 67. Up-brāiding, sb., a reproach, occurs in Layamon, 19117; also upbrād, upbrād, sb., id. 26036. = A. S. up, up; and brādan, brādan, to braid, weave, also to lay hold of, pull, draw, med (like Icel. bræða) in a variety of senses; so that up-brād is simply compounded of UP and BRAD, q. v. The orig. sense of upbrād was prob. to lay hands on, lay hold of, hence to attack, lay to one's charge. Cf. Brigden, sonn leoude be þam feaxe = he shall soon seize the feax by the hair, Salomon and Saturn, ed. Grimm, 99; and see brigden in Grimm, i. 138. Cf. Dan. ubråide, to upbraid, which only differs in the prefix (Dan. u- = E. u-). Der. upbrāiding, sb., as above. ⚠ The alleged A. S. upbrādan (Somner) is unauthorised.

UPHOLSTERER, one who supplies beds and furniture. (E.) Formerly called an upholder. An equivalent form was upholder, used by Causton (see Prompt. Parv., p. 312, note 2), with suffix -er for -or; see -STER. Hence, by a needless addition of -or (as in post-er), was made upholder-or, whence the corrupt form upholsterer, by loss of d after l. 'Upholsterer or upholderer, a tradesman that deals in all sorts of chamber-furniture;' Phillips, ed. 1706. M. E. upholder, a broker, a tradesman, P. Plowman, B. v. 323; C. xiii. 218. At the latter reference we read: 'Upholders on the hill shall have hit to sell' = upholders on the hill [Cornhill] shall have it to sell. It is clear from this and from my note to P. Plowman, C. vii. 377, that the upholder was a broker or auctioneer; so that the name may have arisen from his holding up wares for inspection while trying to sell them. The derivation is from UP and HOLD. Cf. Vp-holders, þat sellythe smal thyngys; Prompt. Parv. Der. upholster-ry, a coined word, from the form upholder.

UPON, on, on the top of. (E.) M. E. upon, upon, prep., Chaucer, C. T. 111. = A. S. uppen, upon, Gen. xxii. 3; also oppun, Matt. xxi. 44. = A. S. upp, up, above, adv.; and on, on, on. See UP and ON. + Icel. up d, upp d, upon; where up = A. S. up, and d (for on) = A. S. on + Swed. på, upon, clearly a shortened form of upp d, where d = E. on; Dan. på, upon.

UPROAR, a tumult, clamour, disturbance. (Du.) In Acta, xvii. 5, xix. 40, xx. 1, xxi. 31, 38; in Shak. Lucrece, 457, we have: 'his eye . . . Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins;' where there is no notion of noise, but only of excitement or disturbance. 'To have all the world in an uproar, and suspirated with warres;' Udall, on St. Mark, preface (R.) Spelt uprora in Levins. It is a corrupt form, due to confusion with E. uproar, with which it has no real connection; it is not an E. word at all, but borrowed from Dutch. = Du. uproar, uproar, tumult, commotion, mutiny, or sedition; uproar makes, to make an uproar; uproarigh, seditious, or tumultuous; Hexham. = Du. op, up; and rueren, to stir, move, touch; so that uproar = a stirring up, commotion, excitement. [Formerly also spelt rueren (Hexham); the Du. er is pronounced as E. er; Du. roer = E. roar] + Swed. uproar, revolt, sedition; allied to upp, up, and ruera, to stir + Dan. uproar, revolt; opruera, to stir up; from op, up; and ruera, to stir. + G. aufröhren, tumult, aufröhren, to stir up; from G. auf, up, and ruhren, to stir. β. The verb appears as Du. rueren, Swed. ruera, UTMOST, outmost, most distant, extreme. (E.) M. E. utmost, orig. trisyllabic; spelt utmoste in Layamon, 11023; utmoste in Rich. Coer de Lion, 2931; utmoste, Trevia, vi. 359. — A. S. utmost also utmost, Grein, ii. 777. This word = ut-most, formed with double superl. suffix -most from ut, out, by means of the usual vowel-change from u to y; and is therefore a double of outmost; see OUT. On this double suffix, see AFTERMOST; utmost became utmost by confusion with most. We also find ut-er-most; see UTTER (1).

UTOPIAN, imaginary, chimerical. (Gk.) An adj. due to Sir T. More's description of Utopia, an imaginary island situate nowhere, as the name implies. Coined (by Sir T. More, A. D. 1516) from Gk. ou, not; and topos, a place; see TOPIC.

UTTER (1), outer, further out. (E.) M. E. utter, utter; whence was formed a superlative utter-est, used in the def. form utterests by Chaucer, C. T. 8663. — A. S. utor, utter, outer, utter; Grein, ii. 635. Comp. of ut, adv., out; see OUT. Thus utter is a doublet of outer. Der. utter-ly; utter-most (see UTMOST). And see utter (2).

UTTER (2), to put forth, send out, circulate. (E.) M. E. uttra, Chaucer, C. T. 16303, in Tyrwhitt's edition, but every one of the MSS. in the Six-text edition has outtra, Group G, l. 824; so also the Harl. MS. Hence there is really no authority for supposing that Chaucer used the word. The verb outtra, which he really uses, is to put out, to 'out with,' as we say. β. The verb utter, to utter, speak, occurs frequently in the Romance of Partenay, ll. 1024, 1437, 1563, 2816, 3156, &c. It is a regular frequentative form of M. E. outtra, as above; and means 'to keep on putting out.' The M. E. outtra = A. S. uttra, to put out, eject, Laws of the Northumb. Priests, § 22, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ll. 294. — A. S. ut, out; see OUT. Der. utter-able; utter-ance, Hamlet, iii. 2. 378.

UTTERANCE (1), from UTTER; as above.

UTTERANCE (2), extremity. (F., — L.) Only in the phrases to the utterance, Mech. iii. 1. 73; at utterance, Cymb. iii. 1. 73. — F. outrance, spelt outrance, 'extremity'; Cot. 'Combats à outrance, to fight it out, or to the uttermost'; id. — F. outra (outra in Cotgrave), beyond; with suffix -ance. — Lat. ultra, beyond; see OUTRAGE.

UVULA, the fleshy conical body suspended from the soft palate. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. uvule. — Late Lat. uvula, dimin. of uva, a cluster, grape, also the uvula. Supposed to be from the same root as HUMOUR.

UXORIOUS, excessively fond of a wife. (L.) In Ben Jonson, Silent Woman, iv. 1 (Otter). — Lat. uxorius, belonging to a wife; also, fond of a wife. — Lat. uxori, crude form of uxor, a wife. Allied to Skt. uxá, a wife, fem. of uxa, willing, subdued; from ux, to will. — \surd WAK, to will; cf. Skt. uxá, to will, Gk. lúw, willing. Der. uxoriously, uxor.

V.

V. In Middle-English, v is commonly written v in the MSS., though many editors needlessly falsify the spellings of the originals to suit a supposed popular taste. Conversely, v sometimes appears as v, most often at the beginnings of words, especially in the words us, vs, vp, vs-to, vnder, and vs- used as a prefix. The use of v for u, and conversely, is also found in early printed books, and occurs occasionally down to rather a late date. Cotgrave ranges all F. words beginning with v and u under the common symbol V. We may also note that a very large proportion of the words which begin with V are of French or Latin origin; only vane, vat, vintred, vawn, are English.

VACATION, leisure, cessation from labour. (F., — L.) In Palgrave, spelt vacacion; and prob. in use much earlier. = F. vacation, 'a vacation, vacancy, leisure'; Cot. = Lat. vacationem, acc. of vacatio, leisure. — Lat. vacatus, pp. of vacare, to be empty, to be free from, to be unoccupied. Root unknown. Der. vacant, in early use, in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 110, l. 15, from F. vacant, 'vacant,' Cot., from the stem of the pres. part. of Lat. vacare; hence vacancy, Hamlet, iii. 4. 217; vacate, vb., a late word, from vacatus, pp. of vacare. And see vacuum.

VACCINATE, to inoculate with the cow-pox. (L.) 'Of modern formation, from the inoculation of human beings with the variola vaccina, or cow-pox. . . . Dr. Jenner's Inquiry was first published in 1798.' Richardson. Coined, as if from the pp. of vaccinare, to inoculate, from Lat. vaccinus, belonging to cows = Lat. vaca, a cow. It prob. means 'the lowing animal'; cf. Skt. vá, to cry, to howl, to low. = \surd WAK, to cry, speak; see VOICES. Der. vaccinat-ion; also vaccine, from Lat. vaccinus.

VACILLATION, wavering, unsteadfastness. (F., — L.) 'No remainders of doubt, no vacillation'; Bp. Hall, The Peace-maker, § 15 (R.) And in Blount. = F. vacillation, 'a reeling, staggering, q wagging'; Cot. = Lat. vacillationem, acc. of vacillatio, a reeling, wavering. — Lat. vacillans, pp. of vacillare, to sway to and fro, waver, vacillate. Formed as if from an adj. vacillus, from a base vac-. = \surd WAK, to swerve, sway to one side; cf. Skt. vaná, to go tortuously, to be crooked, vakra, bent; and see WAG. Der. vacillate, from Lat. pp. vacillatus; a late word.

VACUUM, an empty space. (L.) It was supposed that Nature abhorred a vacuum; see Cramer's Works, i. 250, 330 (Park Society). — Lat. vacuum, an empty space; neut. of vacuus, empty. — Lat. vacare, to be empty; see VACATION. Der. vacuity, in Cotgrave, from F. vacuité, 'vacuity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. vacuitatem.

VADE, to wither. (F., — L.) In Shak. Pam. Pilgrim, 131, 170, 174, 176; Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 40; a weakened form of Vada, q. v.

VAGABOND, adj., wandering; as sb., a wandering, idle fellow. (F., — L.) Spelt vacabonds in Palgrave; he gives the F. form as vacabond; so also 'Vacabonds, vagabonds,' Cot. Rich. cites vacabonds from the Bible (1534), Gen. iv. 12; spelt vacabond in the edit. of 1551. — F. vagabond, 'a vagabond,' Cot. We also find F. vacabond, as above. — Lat. vagabundus, adj., strolling about. Formed, with suffix -us (a gerundive form), from vagari, to wander. — Lat. vagus, wandering; see VAGUE.

VAGABY, a wild freak, a whim. (L.) In The Two Noble Kinsmen, iv. 3. 73; also figuras, pl., Ford, Fancies Chaste and Noble, iii. 3. Also vagary, sing., a trisyllabic word, in Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. b. ii, ed. Arber, p. 44, l. 10. Perhaps orig. a verb; see below. Apparently borrowed directly from Lat. vagari, to wander; and, in any case, due to this verb. Cf. F. vaguer, 'to wander, vagary, gad, range, roam,' Cot.; also Ital. vagare, 'to wander, to vagare, or range,' Florio. We have instances of F. infinitives used as sbs. in attendant, reminder, leisure, pleasure. See VAGRANT, VAGUE.

VAGRANT, wandering, unsettled. (L.) 'A vagant and wilde kinde of life,' Hackluyt's Voyages, l. 490; quoted by Richardson, who alters vagant to vagrant; but vagant is, I think, quite right. I suppose vagant to be formed, with the F. pres. part. suffix -ant (by analogy with other words in -ant), from the verb vagary, as used by Cotgrave (see above), borrowed from Lat. vagari, to wander. This accounts for the r; whereas, if derived from F. vagant, it would have become vagant; cf. M. E. vagant, Wyclif, Gen. iv. 14. See VAGARY and VAGUE. Der. vagrant, sb., vagrancy.

VAGUE, unsettled, uncertain. (F., — L.) It seems to have been first in use as a verb, parallel in use to vagary, q. v. 'Doth vague and wander'; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 231 (R.); 'To vague and range abroad'; id. p. 630 (R.). As an adj. it is later. 'Vague and insignificant forms of speech'; Locke, Human Understanding, To the Reader (R.) = F. vague, 'to wander; vague, wandering'; Cot. = Lat. vagari, to wander; from vagus, adj., wandering. β. Connected by Fick, iii. 761, with A. S. uaccol, unsteady, Skt. vag, to go, to limp; from \surd WAG, a by-form of \surd WAK, to swerve, for which see VACILLATE. Der. vaguelly, vague; and see vag-abond, vag-ary, vag-ant. From the same Lat. vagari we have extra-vagant.

VAIL (1), the same as Vail, q. v.

VAIL (2), to lower. (F., — L.) In Merch. Ven. l. 1. 28, &c.; and not uncommon. A headless form of vail or vaille, in the same sense. 'I vaille, as the water dothe when it goeth downwards or ebbeh, Jenale'; Palgrave. = F. vailer (in Cot. vailer), 'to let, put, lay, cast, fell down,' Cot. See further under AVALANCHE. Der. vail, sb., Troil. v. 8. 7.

VAIL (3), a gift to a servant. (F., — L.) 'Vails, profits that arise to servants, besides their salary or wages'; Phillips, ed. 1706. A headless form of vail, sb., in the sense of profit, help. 'Vails, sb., profit'; Palgrave. 'Vails my preces' = let my prayers avail, Wyclif, Jer. xxxvii. 19, earlier version. See AVAIL.

VAIN, empty, fruitless, unavailing, worthless; also, conceited. (F., — L.) M. E. vain, vain, vayn, Chaucer, C. T. 15964. = F. vain, 'vain,' Cot. = Lat. vanus, acc. of vanus, empty, vain. Root unknown; perhaps allied to vanus, empty; if so, vanus is for van-us. See VACATION. Der. vain-ly, vain; also the phr. in vain, a translation of F. en vain (Cot.) Also vain-glory, M. E. veingloire, Gower, C. A. i. 132, l. 9; vain-glory-ous, -ly, -ness. Also vain-ly, q. v.; vain-ly, q. v.; vain-ly, q. v.

VAIR, a kind of fur. (F., — L.) A common term in heraldry; whence the adj. vairy or verry, given in Phillips, ed. 1706, and spelt verry in Blount. M. E. verry, Reliquie Antiques, l. 121; Rob. Manning, ed. Furnivall [not published], l. 615; Stratmann. = F. voir, 'a rich fur of ermines,' &c.; Cot. = L. varius, variegated. See MINEVER and VARIOUS. Der. var-y, adj., from F. voir, 'verry, diversified with argent and azure'; Cot. Also mine-ver.

bed-hangings. (F., = L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 336; he also has valenced = fringed, Hamlet, ii. 2. 442. 'Rich cloth of tissue, and valence of black silk;' Strype, Eccles. Mem. Funeral Solemnities of Henry VIII. Cf. 'A litel kercheff of Valence;' Chaucer, Assembly of Foules, 372. Prob. named from Valence in France, not far to the S. of Lyons, where silk is made even to this day; Lyons silks are well-known. Sir Aymer de Valence, whose widow founded Pembroke College, Cambridge, may have taken his name from the same place. Valence = Lat. Valentia, a name given to more towns than one, and clearly a derivative of valere (pres. part. valens), to be strong; whence also the names Valens and Valentian; see Valiant. ¶ See Todd; Johnson derives Valence from Valencia in Spain; but, though this is a sea-port, we have yet to learn that it is, or was, famous for silk. Mahn (in Webster) derives valence (without evidence) from a supposed Norm. F. valant, answering to F. valant, pres. part. of valere, to let fall; for which see Avalanche.

VALÉ, a valley. (F., = L.) M. E. val, as a various reading for valois (valley), in Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 22, l. 95. = F. val, 'a vale;' Cot. = Lat. vallem, acc. of valis, a vale. Perhaps allied to Gk. βάσις, wet, low ground; and named from its being surrounded by hills, and easily covered with water. = √ WAR, to cover; cf. Skt. vr, to cover, surround, vrīti, an enclosure, also val, to cover, val, an enclosure. Der. valley, q. v.; also a-val-ance, val (2).

VALEDICTION, a farewell. (L.) 'He always took this solemn valediction of the fellows;' Fuller, Worthies; Shropshire (R.) Englished from a supposed Lat. *valēdictio, coined from valēdictus, pp. of valēdicere, to say farewell. = Lat. vale, farewell; and dicere, to say. β. Lat. valē, lit. 'be strong, be of good health,' is the 3 pers. sing. imp. of valere, to be strong. See Valiant and Diction. Der. valēdictory.

VALENTINE, a sweetheart; also a love-letter sent on Feb. 14. (F., = L.) See Hamlet, iv. 5. 48, 51. Named from St. Valentine's day, when birds were supposed to pair; see Chaucer, Assembly of Foules, 309, 322, 682; Spenser, F. Q. vi. 7. 32. = F. Valentia. = Lat. Valentinus. = Lat. valenti, crude form of pres. part. of valere, to be strong; see Valiant.

VALERIAN, the name of a flower. (F., = L.) 'Valerian, an herbe;' Palgrave. = F. valeriana, 'garden valerian;' Cot. = Late Lat. valeriana, valerian. β. Orig. unknown; valeriana is the fem. of Valerianus, which must mean either 'belonging to Valerius' or 'belonging to Valeria,' a province of Pannonia. Both names are doubtless due to Lat. valere, to be strong, whence many names were derived; see Valance, Valentine, and Valiant.

VALET, a man-servant. (F., = C.) In Blount. 'The king made him his valet;' Fuller, Worthies, Yorkshire. Valet-de-chambre occurs in Vanbrugh, The Provoked Wife, Act v (R.). = F. valet, 'a groom, yeoman,' &c., Cot.; valet de chambre, 'a chamberlain,' id. The same word as Varlet, q. v.

VALETUDINARY, sickly, in weak health. (F., = L.) In Sir T. Brown, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 12. § 26. = F. valetudinarius, 'sickly;' Cot. = Lat. valetudinarius, sickly. = Lat. valetudo, stem of valetudo, health, whether good or bad, but esp. bad health, feebleness; with suffix -arius. = Lat. valere, to be in good health; with suffix -udo. See Valiant. Der. valetudinarian, adj. and sb.; as sb. in Spectator, no. 25; valetudinarianism.

VALHALLA, the hall of the slain. (Scand.) In Scand. mythology, the place of immortality for the souls of heroes slain in battle. The spelling Valhalla is hardly correct; it is probably due to Bp. Percy, who translated M. Mallet's work on Northern Antiquities; see chap. v of the translation. = Icel. valhöll (gen. valhöllar), lit. the hall of the slain. = Icel. valr, the slain, slaughter; and höll or hall, a hall, cognate with E. Hall. β. The Icel. valr is cognate with A. S. wæl, slaughter, the slain, also a single corpse. The lit. sense is 'a choice;' hence the set or number of the chosen ones, selected from the field of battle by the deities called in Icelandic Falkynur and in A. S. Wælcyrgas, lit. 'choosers of the slain' or 'choosers of the selection,' i. e. of the select ones. Thus Icel. valr (A. S. wæl) is closely allied to Icel. val (G. walf), a choice, and to Skt. vāra, adj. better, best, excellent, precious, vāra, sb. a selecting, from vri, to select, choose; see Weal.

VALIANT, brave. (F., = L.) M. E. valiant, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 9, l. 4; p. 177, l. 3. = F. valiant, 'valiant;' Cot. Also spelt valant in O. F., and the pres. part. of the verb valoir, 'to profit, serve, be good for;' id. = Lat. valens, to be strong, to be worth. Allied to Lithuan. vala, strength; and cf. Skt. balā, strength. Prob. from √ WAR, to protect; Fick, i. 777. Der. valiantly, -ness; and see valadiction, Val-en-ian, val-to-din-ary, val-id, val-our, val-er; also a-val, counter-val, pro-val, con-val-ance; qua-val-ant, pro-val-ant, in-val-ant.

VALID, having force, well-founded, conclusive. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. valide, 'valid, strong, weighty;' Cot. = Lat. validus, strong. = Lat. valere, to be strong; see Valiant. Der. validly; valid-ity, Hamlet, iii. 2. 199, from F. validité, 'validity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. validitatem.

VALISE, a travelling-bag, small portmanteau. (F.) 'Scal'd up in the valises of my trust, lock'd close for ever;' Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, A. ii. sc. 1 (Metaphor). = F. valise, 'a male, cloak-bag, budget, wallet;' Cot. The same word as Span. valija, Ital. valigia (Florio), with the same sense. Corrupted in G. into felleisen (Dies). β. Etym. unknown. Dies imagines a Low Lat. form *indul-sia, made from Lat. indulus, a leathern travelling-trunk; which at any rate gives the right sense. Devic (Suppl. to Littre) suggests Pers. valichak, 'a large sack,' or Arab. valichak, 'a corn-sack;' Rich. Dict. p. 1637.

VALLEY, a vale, dale. (F., = L.) M. E. vale, Assumption of St. Mary, ed. Lumby, l. 390; valus, Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 22, l. 95. = O. F. vallee (F. vallée), a valley; Burguy. This is parallel to Ital. vallata, a valley, and appears to mean, literally, 'formed like a vale,' or 'vale-like.' Formed, with suffix -ee (= Lat. -ēta), from F. val, a vale; see Vale.

VALOUR, courage, bravery. (F., = L.) Spelt valoure, King Alisaunder, 2330. = O. F. valor, valour, 'value, worth, worthiness;' Cot. = Lat. valorum, acc. of valor, worth; hence, worthiness, courage. = Lat. valere, to be strong, to be worth; see Valiant. Der. valorous, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 2. 236, from F. valorosus, 'valorous, valiant;' Cot.; valorously.

VALUE, worth. (F., = L.) 'All is to him of o [one] value;' Gower, C. A. iii. 346, l. 9. = F. valoir, fem., 'value;' Cot. Fem. of valoir, pp. of valere, to be worth. = Lat. valere, to be worth. Der. valuable, verb, in Palgrave; value-able; value-less, K. John, iii. 1. 101; value-at-ion, a coined word.

VALVE, one of the leaves of a folding-door, a lid which opens only one way, one of the pieces of a (bivalve) shell. (F., = L.) 'Valves, folding-doors or windows;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. valve, 'a folding, or two-leaved door, or window;' Cot. = Lat. valva, sing. of valvae, the leaves of a folding-door. Allied to Lat. valvere, to roll, turn round about; from the revolving of the leaves on their hinges. See Voluble. Der. valve-ed.

VAMP, the fore-part or upper leather of a boot or shoe. (F., = L.) M. E. vamppe. 'Hosen widuten vamppe' = hose without vamps; Ancrer Riwle, p. 420, l. 3. 'Vampe, or vamppe of an house, Pedana;' Prompt. Parv. 'Hoc antepedale, Anglice vamppe [for vamp]; Wright's Voc. i. 197, col. 1. 'Hec pedana, Anglice vamppe,' id. 201, col. 2. = F. avant-pied, 'the part of the foot that's next to the toes, and consisteth of five bones;' Cot. (Hence E. vampe, vamp; by loss of initial a, change of mp to mp, and suppression of the unaccented termination.) = F. avant, before; and pied, the foot. For F. avant, see Advance or Van (1). The F. pied = Lat. pedem, acc. of pes, a foot; see Foot. ¶ This etymology is verified by the fact, that the word also appears as vamppe. 'Vamppe of a hose, vamppe;' Palgrave (where the final d is dropped, as well as the initial a, in the F. form). So also M. E. vamppey, above, and later vampy (Phillips). Der. vamp, verb, to mend with a new vamp, 'Beason and Fletcher, Bonduca, Act I. sc. 2 (Petallus); hence vamp up = to patch up.

VAMPIRE, a ghost which sucks the blood of men, a blood-sucker. (F., = G., = Servian.) In Todd's Johnson. 'Of these beings many imaginary stories are told in Hungary; Ricaut, in his State of the Greek and Armenian Churches (1679), gives a curious account of this superstitious persuasion, p. 278; Todd. Todd also cites: 'These are the vampires of the publick, and riflers of the kingdom;' Forman, Obs. on the Revolution in 1688 (1741), p. 11. = F. vampire. = G. vampyr (Flugel). = Servian vampir, vampira (Mahn; in Webster). Der. vampire-dar; so named by Linnaeus.

VAN (1), the front of an army. (F., = L.) In Shak. Antony, iv. 6. 9. An abbreviated form of van-guard, vant-guard, or vant-garde, also spelt van-ward, vant-wards. 'And when our vant-guard was passed the towe;' Holinshed, Chron. Edw. III, an. 1346. 'And her vantwards was to-broke;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 362, l. 13; the pl. vantwards occurs, id. p. 437, l. 7. Spelt vant-wards, vant-wards, vant-wards, P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 95. = O. F. vant-wards, later vant-garde, 'the vanguard of an army;' Cot. Here vant = Lat. ab ante, from in front; see Advance. And see Guard, Ward.

VAN (2), a fan for winnowing, &c. (F., = L.) 'His sail-broad vans,' i. e. wings; Milton, P. L. ii. 937. = F. van, a vane, or winnowing sieve;' Cot. = Lat. annuus, acc. of annuus, a fan; see Fan. Der. van, v., to winnow, spelt vans in Levin, from F. vaner, 'to vane;' Cot. Doublet, fan.

VAN (3), a caravan or large covered wagon for goods. (F., = Span., = Pers.) A modern abbreviation for caravan, just as we now use bus for omnibus, and wig for periwig. See Caravan. 'The little man will now walk three times round the caravan;' Dickens, Going into Society. 'Carry me into the van;' ibid.

VANDAL, a barbarian. (L., = G.) See Vandalisch and Vandalism in Todd's Johnson. = Lat. Undulus, a Vandal, one of the tribe of the Unduli, whose name means, literally, the wanderers. = G. wandeln, to wander; a frequentative verb cognate with E. Wander, q. v. Der. Vandal, adj; Vandalic, Vandalism.

VANE, a weather-cock. (E.) Also spelt fan (cf. vat, vet); it formerly meant a small flag, pennon, or streamer; hence applied to the weather-cock, from its likeness to a small pennon. 'Fane of a stepyll'; Prompt. Parv. p. 148; and see Way's note. 'Chaungynge as a vane,' (other MSS. fan); Chaucer, C. T., Group E, 996; in the Ellesmere and Hengwrt MSS. = A. S. fana, a small flag; Gress, i. 263. + Du. van. + Icel. fana. + Dan. fane. + Swed. fana. + G. fane, M. H. G. fano. β. All from Teut. type FANA; Fick, iii. 173. Cognate with Lat. pannus, a cloth, piece of cloth; which is allied to Lat. pānus, the thread wound upon a bobbin in a shuttle, and Gk. πῆνος, the wool; see PANES. Perhaps even allied to E. spin; cf. Lithuan. pinai, to weave. Der. gan-fan-on or gan-fal-on, q. v. Doublet, fane.

VANGUARD; see under Van (1).

VANILLA, the name of a plant. (Span., = L.) In Todd's Johnson; Johnson says: 'the fruit of those plants is used to scent chocolate.' Misspelt for vanilla, by confusion with F. vanille, which is merely borrowed from Spanish, like the E. word. = Span. vanilla, a small pod, husk, or capsule; which is the true sense of the word. Dimin. of vana, a scabbard, case, pod, sheath. = Lat. vagina, a scabbard, sheath, husk, pod. Root doubtful.

VANISH, to disappear. (F., = L.) M. E. vanissen, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 4. l. 2017. The pt. t. appears as vanishide, vanished, vanched, vanchede, in P. Plowman, C. xv. 217. Certainly derived from O. French, but the F. word is not recorded. The form of the word (as compared with vanish, vanish, vanish, &c.) clearly shows that the O. F. verb was vanir, with pres. part. vanissant; we find the corresponding verb in Ital. vanire, pres. vanisco. = Lat. vanescere, to vanish; lit. to become empty. = Lat. vanus, empty; see Vain. Der. o-van-ise-out.

VANQUISH, to conquer, defeat. (F., = L.) M. E. vanishen, P. Plowman, C. xxi. 106; vanishen, Wyclif, 1 Kings, xiv. 47, earlier version; vanquishen, Chaucer, C. T. 4711 (Group B. 291). = O. F. vanquar (whence the stem vanquis-), occurring in the 14th century as a collateral form of O. F. vaincre (mod. F. vaincre); cf. F. vanquis, still used as the pt. t. of vaincre, and the form que je vanquiss. = Lat. vancere, to conquer; pt. t. vici, pp. victus (stem vic-). = √ WIK, to fight, strive; whence also Goth. weshan, wergan (pp. wig-an), O. H. G. and A. S. wigan, to strive, fight, contend; Fick, iii. 783. Der. vanquish-er; and see victor.

VANTAGE, advantage. (F., = L.) Common in Shak.; in K. John, ii. 350, &c.; spelt vantage in Palgrave; who also gives: 'I vantage one, I profite him, je vantage; What dothe it vantage you, quest or quill vous vantage, or advantage.' = F. avantage, 'an advantage; avantager, to advantage;' Cot. See Advantage. Thus vantage is a headless form of F. avantage; and it is clear from Palgrave (as above) that the loss of initial v occurred in F. as well as in E.

VAPID, spiritless, flat, insipid. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Prob. directly from Lat. vapidus, vapid, spoiled, flat, rather than from F. vapide, 'that sends up an ill fume,' marked by Cotgrave as a scarce or old word. = Lat. vappa, wine that has emitted its vapour, vapid or palled wine; closely allied to Lat. vapor, vapour. β. The Lat. vapor stands for vapor (= vapor), as is rendered almost certain by comparison with Gk. νεφίς, smoke, νεφίω, to breathe forth; Lithuan. kvėpas, breath, fragrance, evaporation, kvėpti, to breathe, smell, kvėpasas, perfume; Russ. kopos, fine soot, hopitis, to smoke-dry; Curtius, l. 174. = √ KWAP, to reek, breathe out; Fick, i. 142. Der. vapid-ly, -ness. And see vapor, fade.

VAPOUR, water in the atmosphere, steam, fume, fine mist, gas. (F., = L.) M. E. vapour, Chaucer, C. T. 10707. = F. vapeur, 'a vapor, fume;' Cot. = Lat. vaporum, acc. of vapor, vapour; see Vapid. Der. vapor, verb; vapor-ous, Mach. iii. g. 24; vapor-y; vapor-ise, a coined word; vapor-ise-ment.

VARICOSE, permanently dilated, as a vein. (L.) A late word. [Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Varix, a crooked vein.'] = Lat. varicosus, varicose. = Lat. varic-, stem of varus, a dilated vein; named from its crooked appearance. = Lat. var-us, bent, stretched outwards, straddling; cf. varius, straddling. Prob. allied to G. quer, Low G. querer, transverse; see Queer. Der. (from Lat. varicus), pro-varic-ate; di-varic-ate.

VARIEGATE, to diversify. (L.) 'Variegated tulips;' Pope, q.

Moral Essays, ll. 41. = Lat. variegatus, pp. of variegare, to make of various colours. = Lat. varis, adv., with divers colours; and -g-, due to agere, to drive, cause, make; agere being used to form verbs expressive of an object (see Agant). = Lat. varius, adj., various; see Various. Der. variegat-ion, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

VARIETY, difference, diversification, change, diversity. (F., = L.) In Shak. Antony, ii. s. 241. = F. variété, 'variety;' Cot. = Lat. varietatem, acc. of varietas, variety. = Lat. varis, adv., variously; with suffix -us. = Lat. varius, various; see Various.

VARIOUS, different, several. (L.) 'A man so various;' Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel, 545. Englished from Lat. varius, variegated, diverse, manifold. Root uncertain. Der. various-ly; variegate, varie-ty; also, vary, q. v.

VARIET, a groom, footman, low fellow, scoundrel. (F., = C.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 40. 'Not spying maisters nor varlettis;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 16 (R.). = O. F. varlet, 'a groom; also, a yokner, stripling, youth;' Cot. He notes that 'in old time it was a more honourable title; for all young gentlemen, until they come to be 18 years of age, were tearmed so.' β. An older spelling was vasslet (Burguy), which became varlet, vallit, vadet. We also find the spelling vadlet in the Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 40, where d stands for an older s, as in medlar, medley; which again proves that vadet was the orig. form. γ. Vasslet is for vassulet, the regular diminutive of O. F. vassal, a vassal; so that a vasslet was orig. a young vassal, a youth, stripling; hence, a servant, &c.; and finally a vasslet, and a varlet as a term of reproach. See Vassal. Doublet, vasslet.

VARNISH, a kind of aise or glass, a liquid employed to give a glossy surface. (F., = L.) M. E. varnish. 'Varnysche, Vernicum;' Prompt. Parv. In P. Plowman, A. v. 70, the Vernon MS. wrongly reads varnish for varnysche (vernice); still, this shows that the word was already known before A. D. 1400. = F. varnis, 'varnish, made of linseed oyle and the gumme of the juniper-tree;' Cot. Hence the verb varnisier, 'to sleek or glass over with varnish;' Cot. Cf. Span. borniz, borniz, varnish, lacquer; bornizar, to varnish, lacquer; Ital. varnace, varnish; varnicare, varnicare, to varnish. β. The simplest form appears in O. F. varnis, pp. varni, whence the adj. varnis, as in 'tescu d'or varnis,' the polished shield of gold, cited by Dies. This O. F. varnis corresponds to a Low Lat. form vitruvius, to glass, from Low Lat. vitruus, glassy, occurring A. D. 1376 (Ducange); to which Dies adds that Low Lat. vitruus accounts for the Prov. vernis, glassy. Cf. F. verre = Lat. vitrum. Scheler remarks that in O. F. poetry the epithets varni and varnis are often applied to a shield, the former being the pp. of varnis, whilst the latter is equivalent to a Low Lat. adj. varnicus. β. Hence F. varnis is allied to varni, pp. of varnis = Low Lat. vitruvius; from Low Lat. vitruus, formed from Lat. vitrum, glass. See Vitreous. Der. varnish, verb; Palgrave has: 'I varnyshes a sparre, or any yroon with vernysche, je varnis;' which exemplifies the O. F. verb varnis. The above etymology, proposed by Menage, is approved by Dies and Scheler. Wedgwood says: 'It seems to me more probable that it is from Gk. Βερνίση, Βερνίση, amber, applied by Agapias to sandarach, a gum resin similar in appearance to amber, of which varnish was made; Gk. Βερνίση, varnish; to varnish; Ducange, Greek Glossary. Cf. mod. Gk. Βερνίση, varnish.' The connection may be real; but I suggest that the derivation runs the other way; the Gk. Βερνίση looks very like the Ital. varnice, varnish (also sandarach), written in Gk. letters. It is clearly not a Greek word.

VARY, to alter, change. (F., = L.) M. E. varie, Prompt. Parv.; pres. part. variaunde, Fricke of Conscience, 1447. = F. varier, 'to vary;' Cot. = Lat. variare, to diversify, vary. = Lat. varius, various; see Various. Der. vari-able, spelt variable in Palgrave, from F. variable, 'variable;' Cot., from Lat. variabilis; variable-ness, vari-abil-ity; vari-ation, M. E. variatus, Chaucer, C. T. 2590 (or 2588), from F. variation, 'a variation,' from Lat. acc. variatus; vari-ance, Chaucer, C. T. 8583, as if from Lat. variantia. And see var, var-ous.

VASCULAR, consisting of vessels, as arteries, veins, &c. (L.) In Todd's Johnson. Formed, with suffix -ar = Lat. -aria = Lat. vasculum, a small vessel; formed with the double dimin. suffix -u-lu-, from vas, a vessel; see Vase. Der. vascular-i-ty.

VASE, a vessel, particularly an ornamented one. (F., = L.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, l. 122. = F. vasse, 'a vessel;' Cot. = Lat. vasum, a vase, vessel; a collateral form of vas (gen. vas-is), a vessel; the pl. vasa is common, though the sing. vasum is hardly used. β. Lat. vasum is cognate with Skt. vāsanā, a receptacle, box, basket, water-jar; also, an envelope, cover, cloth; the orig. sense being 'case' or protecting cover. Curtius, l. 478. = √ WAS, to protect by a cover; cf. Skt. vas, to wear clothes. See Vest and Wear. Der. vas-ular; vassal.

VASSAL, a dependent. (F., = C.) In Spenser, Daphniaida, 181. Certainly in early use; the M. E. vassal, however, is extremely rare, though the derivative vaselage (vasalage) is in Chaucer, C. T. 3096, & where it means 'good service' or prowess in arms; it has the same sense in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 86, l. 21, and in Gower (as cited in Richardson). [The word vasseyl, cited by Richardson from Rob. of Glouc., means vasseil.] = F. vasseil, 'a vassal subject, tenant'; Cot. (Cotgrave well explains the word.) The orig. sense is 'servant'; and the word is of Celtic origin, Latinised (in Low Latin) as vasallus, in which form it is extremely common. We also find the shorter form vasus or vasan, a servant; which occurs in the Lex Salica, ed. Hessels and Kern, coll. 55, 56. = Bret. gwas, a servant, vassal; W. and Cora. gwas, a youth, servant. Cf. Bret. gwas, a man, a male. β . The orig. sense was prob. 'a growing youth' (just as E. maid is connected with Goth. magus, a growing lad, and the Teut. base MAG, to have power). Cf. Irish fas, growing, growth, increase, and E. was, to grow; see WAX (1). (On W. gw = Irish f = E. w, see RHYM.) Der. vaselage; also vaslet, vaslet.

VAST, great, of great extent. (F., = L.) We possess this word in two forms, viz. vast and vast, both being from French; the latter being much the older. They are generally used with different senses, but in the Owl and Nightingale, l. 17, we have: 'in ore vasts pikke begge' = in a vast thick hedge, in a great thick hedge. We may, however, consider vast as belonging to the 16th century; it does not seem to be much older than the latter part of that century. 'That mightie and vaste sea'; Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. iii, p. 822 (R.) = F. vaste, 'vast'; Cot. = Lat. vastus, soc. of vastus, vast, of large extent. See further under Waste. Der. vast, sb., Temp. i. 2, 327, Wint. Tale, l. 1, 33; vastly, vastness; also vastly, adj., Merch. Ven. ii. 7, 41. Also de-vast-ate.

VAT, a large vessel for liquors. (E.) M. E. fat. 'Fate, vessel'; Prompt. Parv. Palgrave has fatis; and the A. V. of the Bible has fats (Joel, ii. 24) and vinefat (Mark, xii. 1). The difference between the words fat and vat is one of dialect; vat is Southern English, prob. Kentish. The use of v for f is common in Devonshire, Somersetshire, and in old Kentish; the connection of the word with Kent is obvious, viz. through the brewing trade; cf. vase, vata = A. S. fat (pl. fatw), a vessel, cask; Mark, iv. 27. β Du. vat. γ Icel. fat. δ Dan. fat. ϵ Swed. fat. ζ G. fass; M. H. G. vaz. η . All from the Teut. type FATA, a vat, barrel; Fick, iii. 171. From the Teut. base FAT, to catch, take, seize, comprehend, contain; cf. Du. vatten, to catch, take, contain, G. fassen, to seize, also to contain; so that the sense is 'that which contains.' Cognate with Lithuan. paties, a pot. = \sqrt{PAD} , to go; also to seize; see Patch, and Fit (1). Der. vine-fat or vine-vat.

VAUDEVILLE, VAUDEVIL, a lively satirical song; a kind of drama. (F.) Spelt vaudevil in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. vaudeville, 'a country ballad, or song; so named of Vandevire, a Norman town, wherein Olivier Bassel [or Baselin], the first inventor of them, lived'; Cot. Olivier de Baselin was a Norman poet of the 15th century, and his songs were called after his native valley, the Vau (or Val, i. e. valley) de Vire; see Val. Vire is a town in Normandy, to the S. of Bayeux.

VAULT (1), an arched roof, a chamber with an arched roof, esp. one underground, a cellar. (F., = L.) The spelling with v is comparatively modern; it has been inserted, precisely as in vaunt, from pedantic and ignorant notions concerning 'etymological' spelling. The M. E. form is vante, also vante; in King Alisaunder, 7210, it is spelt vante. 'Vant under the ground, vante'; Palgrave. 'Vante, lacunar; Vontyd, arculatus; Vontya, or make a vante, arcuo'; Prompt. Parv. = F. vante (also vante, with inserted i as in English), 'a vault, or arch, also, a vaulted or embowed roof'; Cot. O. F. volte, vante, vante, a vault, cavern; Burguy (mod. F. vante); where volte is a fem. form, from O. F. volt, vaulted, lit. bent or bowed. Volte is the same word as Ital. volta, 'a time, a turn or course; a circuit, or a compass; also, a vault, cellar, an arch, bow'; Florio. β . The O. F. volt answers to Lat. volutus, and the O. F. voltis, Ital. voltis, to Lat. volutus; these are abbreviated forms of volutus (fem. voluta), pp. of volvere, to roll, turn round; whence the later sense of bend round, bow, or arch. Similarly we have volute, in the sense of a spiral scroll. γ . Thus a vault means an arch, an arched roof; hence, a chamber with an arched roof, and finally a cellar, because it often has an arched roof, for the sake of strength. See Volubia. Der. vault, verb, to overarch. M. E. vouten, as above; vault-ed, Cynth. l. 6, 33; vault-y, concave, Romeo, iii. 2, 22; vault-age, a vaulted room, Hen. V. ii. 4, 124.

VAULT (2), to bound, leap. (F., = Ital., = L.) 'Vaulting ambition'; Mach. l. 7, 27. = F. vulter, 'to vault'; Cot. = F. vole, 'a round or turn; and thence, the bounding turn which cunning riders teach their horses; also a tumbler's gamboll'; id. = Ital. volla, 'the turn that cunning riders teach their horses'; Florio. The same word as Ital. volla, a vault; both from the orig. sense of 'turn'; see further under Vault (1). Der. vault, sb.; vault-er, vault-ing-horse.

VAUNT, to boast. (F., = L.) 'I vaunte, I boste, or crahe, Je me vanta'; Palgrave. It is remarkable that the M. E. form was vauntien or vauntien, with a prefixed (nonoriginal) v, not found (I think) in French, and perhaps due to confusion with F. vant before, and vauntier, to advance. This M. E. vauntien occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 5985, and at least twice in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. met. 1, l. 26, b. 1, pr. 4, l. 416; and hence the sb. vaunt, vaunt, vaunt, in Chaucer, C. T. 27, which Dr. Stratmann enters under vant, apparently under the impression that it is a misprint (six times repeated) in the Six-text edition. However, the prefix v is to be neglected. Cf. vauntier, a vaunter, Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 724. = F. vantier; 'as vantier, to vaunt, brag, boast, glory, crack'; Cot. = Low Lat. vauntius, to speak vanity, flatter (Ducange); so that as vantier = to speak vainly of oneself. Dies remarks that vauntiers, to boast, occurs in S. Augustine, Opp. l. 437, 761. This verb is a frequentative, formed from Lat. vaneus, vain. See Vain; and cf. Lat. vanitas, vanity. Der. vaunt, sb., M. E. vauntis; vaunt-er, formerly vauntier, Court of Love, 1219.

VAWARD, another spelling of oastward or vauguard. (F., = L. and G.) In Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 209; and in Drayton, Battle of Agincourt (R.) See Van (1).

VEAL, the flesh of a calf. (F., = L.) M. E. veel, Chaucer, C. T. 9394. = O. F. veal, later, veau, 'a calf, or veale'; Cot. = L. vitellus, soc. of vitellus, a little calf, allied to vitulus, a calf. β Gk. ivadol, the same (little veal). Allied to Skt. vasa, a calf, vatatara, a steer, vatatara, a cow anxious for her calf, vatatara, affectionate. γ . All from a base WAT-AS, WET-AS, a year; cf. Skt. vasa, which also means 'a year,' Gk. free, a year. Hence the sense of Skt. vasa was really (1) a year, (2) a yearling calf; and the same sense of 'yearling' was the orig. one of Lat. vitulus. δ . From the same sense of 'year,' differently applied, we have Lat. vetus, old in years, aged, vetulus, a little old man. See Veteran. Der. veil-um, q. v.

VEDA, knowledge; one of the ancient sacred books written in Skt. (Skt.) Skt. veda, 'knowledge; the generic name for the sacred writings of the Hindus, esp. the 4 collections called rig-veda, yajur-veda, sama-veda, and atharva-veda'; Benfey, p. 900. Formed (by regular vowel-change from i to e) from vid, to know, cognate with E. wit, q. v.

VEDETTE, VIOLETTE, a cavalry sentinel. (F., = Ital., = L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. = F. vedette, 'a sentry; any high place from which one may see afar off'; Cot. = Ital. vedetta, a horse-sentry; also a sentry-box; formerly a watch-tower (Florio). An Ital. corruption of voletta, a sentry-box, formerly a watch-tower (Florio); due to confusion with vedere, to see (pp. veduto), from which voletta cannot possibly be derived. Voletta is a dimin. of veglia, a watch, watching, vigil; just as Span. velta, a weather-cock (lit. a watcher), is a dimin. of Span. vale, a watching, vigil (Dies). = Lat. vigilia; see Vigil.

VEER, to turn round, change direction, swerve. (F., = L.) 'Vere the main shete'; Spenser, F. Q. i. 12, 1; 'and veerth his main sheat,' id. v. 12, 18. [The spelling with e or ee is hard to explain; but it proves a confusion between the sound of ee in Elizabeth's time and that of f. Sir P. Sidney writes veer; see Nares.] = F. veer, 'to veer, turn round, wheel or whirle about'; Cot. β . The F. veer is the same word as Span. veer, veer, to wind, twist, tack, or veer, Port. veer, to turn, change, Prov. veer, to turn, to change (Bartsch). Allied words are Port. veerula, a circular motion, Ital. veolare, 'to scree,' i. e. twist round (Florio); &c. The orig. sense is to turn round, and it appears as Low Lat. veeris, which is rather an old word (Dies); it appears also in F. veer-ee, round about, in a circle (whence E. veerous), in F. veer-ale (whence E. ferrule), and in F. veer-ol-ee, 'a boy's windmill,' Cot. γ . The key to this difficult word lies in the sense of 'ring' or 'circle' as appearing in veerous and ferrule; the Low Lat. veeris, a ring to bind anything, answers to Lat. virula, a bracelet, dimin. of viris, an armlet, large ring, gen. used in the pl. form viris. = WI, to twist, wind round; see Ferrule, Withy. δ . The Du. veer, to veer, is merely borrowed (like our own word) from F. veer. The old derivation of veer from Lat. gyrus cannot possibly be sustained. Der. (from Lat. vir-ee), veer-ee, ferrule.

VEGETABLE, a plant for the table. (F., = L.) Properly an adj., as used by Milton, P. L. iv. 220. [Instead of vegetables, Shak. has vegetious, Pericles, iii. 2, 36; and Ben Jonson has vegetal, Alchemist, l. 1, 40.] = F. vegetable, 'vegetable, fit or able to live'; Cot. = Lat. vegetabilis, animating; hence, full of life. Formed, with suffix -bilis, from Lat. vegeta-re, to enliven, quicken. = Lat. vegetus, lively. = Lat. vegere, to excite, quicken, arouse; allied to veg-ii, wakeful, and veg-ere, to flourish. = \sqrt{WAG} , to be strong and lively (Fick, l. 762); whence Skt. agra, very strong, Gk. byzō, sound, Goth. wakō, to wake. See Vigil, Vigorous, and Waka. Der. (from vegetare) veget-ate; veget-ee, from F. vegetation, 'a giving with F. vent, the wind, as if it were a hole to let wind or air in; but the senses of 'aperture' and 'wind' are widely different. The older spelling was font or fonte, used in the sense of slit in a garment, whence the notion of button-hole. The Prompt. Parv. gives: 'Fons of a clothe, sibilatorium,' on which Way notes that 'the font or vent, in the 13th cent., appears at the collar of the robe, . . . being a short slit closed by a brooch, which served for greater convenience in putting on a dress so fashioned as to fit closely round the throat;' see the whole note. 'The collar and the vents;' Assemblee of Ladies, st. 76. 'Fons of a gowne, fontes;' Palgrave. The sense was easily extended to slits and apertures of all kinds, esp. as the F. original was unrestricted. = F. fontis, 'a cleft, rift, chinke, slit, cranny;' Cot. A participial sb. from the verb fundra, to cleave. = Lat. fundere, to cleave; see Fissura. Der. vent, verb, to emit from an orifice, as in 'can he vent [emit] Trincalos?' Temp. ii. s. 111; but it is tolerably certain that the use of this verb was influenced by F. vent, wind; see Vent (3). And see Vent (1).

VENT (2), sale, utterance of commodities, and hence, generally, utterance, outlet, publication. (F., = L.) 'The merchant-adventurer likewise . . . did hold out bravely; taking off the commodities . . . though they lay dead upon their hands for want of vent;' Bacon, Life of Henry VII., ed. Lumby, p. 146, l. 6. 'Vent of utterance of the same,' viz. of 'spices, drugges, and other commodities;' Hackluyt's Voyages, l. 347. 'Find the messes to have a vent to make sales;' id. l. 356. = F. vende, 'a sale, or selling, an alienation, or passing away for money,' &c.; Cot. Vente is a participial sb. from the F. vende, 'to sell,' Cot. = Lat. vendere, to sell; see Vend. Der. vent, to utter, as in: 'when he found ill money had been put into his hands, he would never suffer it to be vented again,' Burnet, Life of Hale (R.); but it is tolerably certain that the use of vent as a verb has been largely influenced by confusion with Vent (1) and Vent (3), and it is extremely difficult to determine its complete history without very numerous examples of its use.

VENT (3), to snuff up air, breathe, or puff out, to expose to air. (F., = L.) 'See how he [a bullock] venteth into the wynd;' Spenser, Sheph. Kal. Feb. 75. Explained by 'snuffeth in the wind' in the Gloss, but it more likely means to puff out or exhale. In Spenser, F. Q. iii. l. 42, we are told that Britomart 'vented up her umbriers, And so did let her goodly visage to appear.' Here the poet was probably thinking of F. vent, the wind, and of the part of the helmet called the ventail or aventail, which was the lower half of the moveable front of a helmet as distinct from the upper half or wind, with which it is often confused; see my note on aventails in Chaucer, C. T. Group E, 1204. If we had a large collection of quotations illustrative of the use of vent as a verb, I suspect it would appear that the connection with the F. vent, wind, was due solely to a misunderstanding and misuse of the word, and that it is etymologically due to Vent (1) or Vent (2), or to confusion of both; and, in particular, to inability to account for Vent (1), shewn above to be used in place of M. E. fonte. That writers used the word with reference to air is certain; we have: 'there's some [air] so wholesome as that you vent;' Cymb. l. 2, s. 1; also: 'which have poisoned the very air of our church wherein they were vented;' Bp. Hall, Ser. Ecl. iii. 4 (R.); and hence the sb. ventage, venting-hole (see below). = F. venter, '(the wind) to blow or puff,' Cot. = F. vent, the wind. = Lat. ventum, acc. of ventus, wind, cognate with E. Wind, q. v. Der. vent-eye, the air-hole of a flute (app. a coined word), Hamlet, iii. s. 373; vent-eye-hole, an outlet for vapour, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxi. c. 3. And see ventail, vent-il-ate.

VENTAIL, the lower half of the moveable part of the front of a helmet. (F., = L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. s. 24, iv. 6, 10. M. E. aventail, Chaucer, C. T. 9080; which is the same word with the F. prefix a- (= Lat. ad-) = F. ventaille, 'the breathing-part of a helmet.' = F. venter, 'to blow or puff,' Cot.; with suffix -ail = Lat. -o-cul-um. = F. vent, wind. = Lat. ventum, acc. of ventus, wind; see Vent (3), Ventilate, and Wind.

VENTILATE, to fan with wind, to open to air, expose to air or to the public view. (L.) Spelt ventilate in Palgrave. Ventilate is used as a pp. by Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 25, § 4. = Lat. ventilatus, pp. of ventilare, to blow, winnow, ventilate. From an adj. ventilus (not used), from ventus, wind, cognate with E. Wind. Der. ventilator, from Lat. ventilator, a winnower; ventilat-ion, 'a ventilation, breathing,' Cot., from Lat. acc. ventilationem.

VENTRAL, belonging to the belly. (L.) Added by Todd to Johnson. = Lat. ventralis, belonging to the belly. = Lat. venter, stem of venter, the belly; perhaps allied to Gk. γαστήρ; see Gastric. Der. ventricle, q. v.; ventri-quist, q. v.

VENTRICLE, the stomach; a part of the heart. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. ventricule, 'the ventricle, the place wherein the meat sent from the stomach is digested, some call so the stomach itself;' Cot. = Lat. ventriculus, acc. of ventriculus, the stomach, also a ventricle of the heart. A double dimin. (with suffix -ulus) from ventri-, crude form of venter, the belly; see Ventral. Der. ventricul ar.

VENTRILQUIST, one who speaks so that the voice seems to come from a distance or from some one else. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; but Phillips has ventri-quist, 'a person that speaks inwardly;' this is the true Lat. word, whence ventri-quist has since been formed, by adding the suffix -ist (Lat. -ista, Gk. -ιστης). = Lat. ventri-quistus, a ventriloquist, lit. one who speaks from (or in) the belly. = Lat. ventri-, crude form of venter, the belly; and -quistus, to speak; see Ventral and Loquacious. Der. ventri-quistism.

VENTURE, chance, luck, hazard. (F., = L.) Common in Shaks. both as sb. and vb.; as sb., Merch. Ven. i. s. 99; as a verb, id. iii. s. 10. It is a headless form of M. E. aventure or aventure, which also took the form Adventure, q. v. Der. venture-ous, Mida, Nt. Dr. iv. s. 39, short for M. E. aventureus, later adventureus; venture-ous-ly, ventus. Also venture-ous, in Strype, Eccles. Mem. Henry VIII, an. 1546, where the suffix -ous is English.

VENUE, the name as Venue, q. v. (F., = L.) As a law-term, it is the place where the jury are summoned to come; from F. venue, 'a coming, arrival, approach, a passage, access,' Cotgrave; which is merely another sense of venire, as above. β. Blackstone has: 'a change of the venue, or venue (that is, the vicinia or neighbourhood in which the injury is declared to be done;)' Comment. b. iii. c. 30. His interpretation of venue as being = Lat. vicinia is probably right; but that has nothing to do with the etymology of venue, which is, of course, a different word. Der. venue-ous.

VENUS, the goddess of love. (L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 1338. = Lat. Venus; see Venerable.

VERACIOUS, truthful. (L.) A late word; Phillips, ed. 1706, has only the sb. veracity. Coined from Lat. verax, crude form of verax, truthful; with suffix -ous. = Lat. verax, true. β. The orig. sense is 'credible;' see Very. Der. verax-ity, Englished from Lat. veracitas, truthfulness.

VERANDA, VERANDAH, a kind of covered balcony. (Port., = Peru). Modern; added by Todd to Johnson; it should be spelt veranda. = Port. varanda, a balcony. Marsden, in his Malay Dict., 1812, p. 39, has: 'varandah (Portuguese), a varanda, balcony, or open gallery to a house;' but the Malay word, like the Portuguese, is borrowed from Persian (not, as Marsden supposed, from Portuguese, for it has the right initial letter). = Pers. bar-amadāh, 'a porch, a terrace, a balcony;' Rich. Dict. p. 255. So called from its projecting or 'coming forward.' = Pers. bar-amadan, 'to ascend, arise, come forth, appear, emerge, grow out;' ibid. = Pers. bar, up, id. p. 253; and amadan, to come, arrive; id. p. 166. ¶ I here suppose that the Skt. varanda, a portico, is adapted from the Persian. Otherwise, the E. verandah is from this Skt. word, which can be explained as being from vri, to cover.

VERB, the word; in grammar, the chief word of a sentence. (F., = L.) Palgrave gives a 'Table of Verbes.' = F. verbe, 'a verbe;' Cot. = Lat. verbum, a word, a verb. β. Here the Lat. β represents an Aryan dh (= Teut. d); and verbum is cognate with E. Word, q. v. = WAR, to speak; cf. Gk. εἰπ-ων (= εἰπ-ων), to speak; Vich. i. 772. Der. verb-al (Palgrave), from F. verbal, 'verball,' Cot., from Lat. verbalis, belonging to a word; verbal-ly; verbal-ize, to turn into a verb, a coined word; verbal-ism; verb-4-age, wordiness, not in Johnson's Dict., but used by him on April 9, 1778 (Boswell), from F. verbeage, a late F. word, coined (according to Littré) from O. F. verbeoir, to talk; verb-ous, wordy (Phillips), from Lat. verbosus; verb-ous-ly, verb-ous-ness, verb-ous-ty.

VERBENA, vervain. (L.) See Vervain.

VERDANT, green, flourishing. (F., = L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 9, 12. = F. verdant, used as a pres. part. of verdir, 'to flourish, to wax green;' Cot. = F. verd, green. = Lat. veridum, acc. of veridus, green. Root uncertain. Der. verdant-ly, verdant-ry; also verd-ure, Temp. i. s. 27, from F. verdura, 'verdure,' Cot.; also verd-ure-ous (Nares). And see farthingale, verdigris, verjuice.

VERDICT, the decision of a jury, decision. (F., = L.) Lit. 'a true saying.' The true word is verdit, pedantically altered to the mongrel form verdict, to bring the latter half of it nearer to the Lat. spelling. M. E. verdit, Chaucer, C. T. 787 (or 789). = O. F. verdit, a verdict; see verdict in Littré, the mod. F. form being borrowed again from English. = Lat. verus dictum, truly said, which passed into Low Lat. verdictum, with the sense of true saying or verdict, occurring A. D. 1257 (Ducange). Formed similarly to homo-diction, male-diction. = Lat. verus, truly, adv., from verus, true; and dictum, a saying, orig. neut. of pp. of dicere, to say; see Very and Diction.

VERDIGRIS, the rust of bronze, copper, or brass. (F., = L.) Spelt verdigris in Arnold's Chronicle (1502), repr. 1811, p. 74; verdigris, Chaucer, C. T. 16258. = F. verd de gris, 'verdigris,' Spanish green. Cot. Spelt veris gras in the 13th cent. (Littré). Littré supposes it to be possibly a corruption of veris agris, green produced by sigro, i. e. acid (see Eager, Vinegar); cf. 'Syrup sigret, syrup of vinegar,' Cot. This is very forced; viridis græci is lit. 'green grit,' a substitution (as I think) for O. F. verdigris, 'verdigris,' Cotgrave. — Low Lat. viride ævri, verdigris, the usual term in alchemy; see my note to Ch. Chan. Yeom. Tale, 790. Lit. 'green of brass.' — Lat. viridis, neut. of viridis, green; viris, gen. of vir, brass. See Verdant and Orn.

VERGE (1), a wand of office, extent of jurisdiction, edge, brink. (F., — L.) In the sense of edge or brink it is quite a different word from verge, to incline (see below), though some late writers may have confused the words, as indeed is done in Johnson's Dict. The sense of 'edge' follows at once from the use of verge as a law-term, to mean a limit or circuit, hence a circle, Rich. II. ii. 1. 102; cf. l. 1. 93. In the sense of 'wand,' it is best known by the derivative verger, a wand-bearer. M. E. verge. 'Verge, is a wrytys (wright's) werke, Vergate;' Prompt. Parv. Here it must mean a yard (in length). [Verge in the Rom. of the Rose, 3124, is clearly an error for verger, a garden; see ll. 3618, 3831; this is F. verger (Cot.), from Lat. veridarius, a gardener.] = F. verge, 'a rod, wand, stick; also, a sergeant's verge or mace; also, a yard; . . . a plume hoop, or gimmel, ring; also, a rod of land;' Cot. = Lat. verge, a twig, rod, wand. (Of doubtful origin; perhaps allied to vergere, for which see Verge (2). Der. verger, a wand-bearer, 'that beareth a rodde in the churche' (Palsgrave), from F. verger, 'one that beares a verge before a magistrate, a verger,' Cot., from Low Lat. virgerius, an apparitor, occurring A. D. 1370 (Ducange).

VERGE (2), to tend towards, tend, slope, border on. (L.) 'Vergens more and more westward;' Fuller, Worthies, Somersetshire (N.). — Lat. vergere, to bend, turn, incline, verge towards, incline. Allied to vergens, bent, wry, Skt. vrjama, crooked, vrij, to exclude (of which the orig. sense seems to be to bend, Benfey). — √ WARG, to bend, turn, force; Fick, l. 772. ¶ The phrase 'to be on the verge of' is prob. closely connected with this verb by many writers; but verge, as a sb., is properly a different word; see Verge (1). Der. non-verge, di-verge.

VERIFY, to show to be true, confirm by evidence. (F., — L.) 'I verify, is verifie;' Palsgrave. — F. verifier, 'to verifie;' Cot. — Lat. verificare, to make true. — Lat. veri, for vero, crude form of verus, true; and facere, for facere, to make; see Very and Fact. Der. verify-er, verify-able, verify-ation, from F. verification, 'a verification, verifying,' Cot.

VERILY, adv.; see Very.
VERISIMILITUDE, likelihood. (F., — L.) In Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 845 (R.). — F. verisimilitudo, 'likelihood;' Cot. — Lat. verisimilitudo, likelihood. — Lat. veri similia, likely, like the truth. — Lat. veri, gen. of verus, the truth, orig. neut. of verus, true; and similia, like; see Very and Similar.

VERITY, truth, a true assertion. (F., — L.) Spelt veritas in Levins. — F. verité, 'a verity;' Cot. — Lat. veritatem, acc. of veritas, truth. — Lat. verus, true; see Very. Der. verit-able, spelt veritable in Palsgrave, from F. veritable, 'true,' Cot., a coined word.

VERJUICE, a kind of vinegar. (F., — L.) M. E. verjuice, verjuice, P. Plowman, A. v. 70 (footnote). = F. verjus, 'verjuice, esp. that which is made of sowre, and wripe grapes;' Cot. Lit. 'green juice.' — F. vert (spelt vert in Cotgrave), green; and jus, juice; see Verdant and Jules.

VERMICELLI, dough of wheat flour formed into thin worm-like rolls. (Ital., — L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = Ital. vermicelli, lit. 'little worms;' from the shape. It is the pl. of vermicello, a little worm, which is the dimia. of verme, a worm. = Lat. vermem, acc. of vermis, a worm, cognate with E. Worm.

VERMICULAR, pertaining to a worm. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Vermicularis, certain muscles, &c.; Vermicularis, worm-grass, lesser house-leek; Vermiculated, inlaid, wrought with checker-work; Vermiculation, worm-eating;' &c. All are derivatives from Lat. vermiculus, a little worm, double dimia. of vermes, a worm; see Worm.

Der. So also vermi-form, worm-shaped; from vermi-, crude form of vermis, and form; also vermi-fuge, a remedy that expels a worm, from Lat. fugere, putting to flight, from fugere, to put to flight; see Fugitive. And see vermilion, verruca, vermicelli.

VERMILION, a scarlet coloring substance obtained from cochineal, &c. (F., — L.) 'Vermilion, minium;' Prompt. Parv.; spelt vermylon, Wyclif, Exod. xxxix. 1 (later version). = F. vermillon, 'vermillion;' . . . also, a little worm; Cot. = F. vermeil, 'vermillion;' id. = Lat. vermiculus, a little worm; double dimia. of vermis, a worm; see Vermicular and Worm. ¶ For the reason of the name, see Crimson and Cochineal; but vermillon is now generally made of red lead, or various mineral substances, and must have been so made at an early date; it was perhaps named merely from its resemblance to verruca.

VERMIN, any small obnoxious insect or animal. (F., — L.) M. E. vermine, Chaucer, C. T. 8971. = F. vermine, 'vermine; also little beasts ingendred of corruption and filth, as lice, fleas, ticks, mice, rats;' Cot. As if from a Lat. adj. vermicinus?, formed from vermi-, crude form of vermis, a worm; see Vermicular and Worm.

VERNACULAR, native. (L.) 'In the vernacular dialect;' Fuller, Worthies, General (R.); and in Phillips, ed. 1706. Blount has vernaculosa. Formed with suffix -ar (Lat. -arius) from Lat. vernaculus, belonging to home-born slaves, domestic, native, indigenous; double dimia. of Lat. verna, a home-born slave. β. Verna is for us-ne, dwelling in one's house, from √ WAS, to dwell, live, be; see Was. Der. vernacular-ly.

VERNAL, belonging to spring. (L.) Spelt vernall in Minshew, ed. 1637. = Lat. vernalis, vernal; extended from Lat. vernus, belonging to spring. = Lat. ver, the spring. + Gk. φωσ, the spring. + Irish verrack, the spring. + Russ. vesna, the spring. + Lithuan. vasara, summer. + Icel. vár, var; Dan. var; Swed. vár. β. All from an Aryan type WASRA, spring, the time of increasing brightness. = √ WAS, to brighten, dawn; cf. Skt. vasata, spring, vas, to burn, Lat. verora, dawn, &c.; Fick, l. 780.

VERNIER, a short scale made to slide along a graduated instrument for measuring intervals between its divisions. (F.) So named from its inventor. 'Peter Vernier, of François Comté; inventor of scale, born 1580, died Sept. 14, 1637;' Hoie, Brief Biographical Dictionary.

VERSATILE, turning easily from one thing to another. (F., — L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. versatil, 'quickly turning;' Cot. = Lat. versatilis, that turns round, moveable, versatile. = Lat. versare, pp. of vertere, to turn often, frequentative of vertere, to turn (pp. versus); see Verse. Der. versatil-ty.

VERSE, a line of poetry, poetry, a stanza, short portion of the Bible or of a hymn. (L.) In very early use, and borrowed from Latin directly, not through the F. vers. 'Versus, versus, Versus;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt fers in the Ormulum, 11943. = A. S. fers, a verse, a line of poetry; 'há man tóddárl þá fers on rádrúge' = how one divides the verse in reading; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 191, l. 3. = Lat. versus (late Lat. versus), a turning, a line, row; so named from the turning to begin a new line. [Vanicek separates versus, a furrow, which he connects with versura, to sweep.] = Lat. versus, pp. of vertere, to turn. = √ WART, to turn; whence also E. worth, verb, to become; see Worth (1). Der. vers-ad, Milton, P. R. iv. 327, only in the phr. versed in = conversant with, and used (instead of versate) as a translation of Lat. versatus, pp. of versari, to keep turning oneself about, passive form of the frequentative of vertere; and see vers-ify, vers-ion, &c. Also (from vertere), ad-vert, ad-verse, ad-vert-ise, anim-ad-vert, anti-vert-ary, a-vert, a-verse, con-vert, con-vert, con-verse, di-vert, di-vert, di-verse, di-vert-ify, di-verse, e-vert, in-ad-vertent, in-vert, in-vert, in-vert, mal-vert-ation, ob-verse, par-vert, par-verse, re-vert, re-verse, sub-vert, sub-vert-ation, tergi-vert-ation, trans-verse, tra-verse, uni-verse, vers-at-ile, vert-ebra, vert-ice, vert-ice.

VERSIFY, to make verses. (F., √ L.) M. E. versifien, P. Plowman, B. xv. 367. = F. versifier, 'to versifie;' Cot. = Lat. versificare, to versify. = Lat. veri, for verus, crude form of verus, a verse; and facere, for facere, to make; see Verse and Fact. Der. versify-ation, in Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 977 (R.), from F. versification (omitted by Cotgrave), from Lat. acc. versificationem; versif-er, Sidney, Apology for Poetrie, ed. Arber, p. 49.

VERSION, a translation, statement. (F., — L.) Formerly used in the sense of turning or change; Bacon's Essays, Ess. 58 (Of Vicissitude). = F. version, a version, translation (not given in Cotgrave). = Low Lat. versionem, acc. of versio, regularly formed from versus, pp. of vertere.

VERST, a Russian measure of length. (Russ.) In Hackluyt's Voyages, l. 388, l. 30. = Russ. verst, a verst, 3500 Eng. feet, a verst-post; also equality; cf. verstate, to compare, to range.

VERT, green, in heraldry. (F., — L.) In Blount, ed. 1674. From F. vert, green; formerly verd, Cot. = Lat. viridem, acc. of viridis, green; see Verdant.

VERTEBRA, one of the small bones of the spine. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. vertebra, a joint, a vertebra. = Lat. vert-ere, to turn; see Verse. Der. vertebr-ate, a coined word: vertebr-ate, vertebr-ate, from Lat. vertebratus, jointed.

VERTEX, the top, summit. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; the adj. vertical is in Cotgrave. = Lat. vertex, the top, properly the turning-point, esp. the pole of the sky (which is the turning-point of the stars), but afterwards applied to the zenith. = Lat. vertere, to turn; see Verse. Der. vertic-ate, from F. vertical, 'vertical;' Cot., from Lat. vertic-alis, vertical, from vertic-, stem of vertere. Hence vertical-ly, Doublet, vertice.

VERTIGO, giddiness. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. vertigo (gen. vertiginis), a turning or whirling round, giddiness. = Lat. vertere, to turn; see Verse.

VERVAIN, a plant of the genus verbena. (F., -L.) M. E. vervain; Gower, C. A. ii. 262, l. 19. = F. vervaine, 'vervaine'; Cot. = Lat. vervaina, used in pl. vervaina, sacred boughs, usually of olive, laurel, or myrtle. Allied to verber, a rod, properly a twig, shoot. The radical sense is perhaps 'a shoot,' a growing twig or branch; from \checkmark WARDH, to grow.

VERVY, true, real, actual. (F., -L.) M. E. verrai, verrai; 'verrai charity' = true charity, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 289; 'verrai man' = true man, id. C. xii. 153. It first occurs (I think) as verrai in An Old. Eng. Miscellany, p. 27, l. 26, in the O. Kentish Sermons (about A. D. 1240). = O. F. verrai, later vrai (in Cotgrave verrai), true. Cf. Prov. verrai, true. It answers to a Low Lat. type *vervius, not found; similarly, Scheler notes the Prov. verrai, drunken, due to a Low Latin *vervius, derivative of vervius; and compares F. Cambrai, Devrai from Lat. Comvraus, Devraus. This *vervius is a by-form of Lat. verus (stem verde-), truthful, extended from verus, true (represented in O. F. by ver, ver, ver, true). β . The orig. sense of verus is 'credible' = \checkmark WAR, to believe, prob. identical with \checkmark WAR, to choose. Cf. Zend var, to believe (Fick, l. 211), Russ. vera, faith, belief, verite, to believe, G. weh, true; also Lat. velle, to will, choose, G. weh, choice. Der. verry, adv., as in 'verry well,' i. e. truly well, Sir T. More, Works, p. 108 (R.); verry-ly, adv., M. E. verryly, verryly, Chaucer, C. T. 13590. Also (from Lat. verus) verry-ly, verry-similar, verry-ty, verry-ous; ver-dict; o-ver.

VESICLE, a small tumour, bladder-like cell. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Vesicula, a vesicle, or little bladder.' Englished from Lat. vesicula, a little bladder; dimin. of vesica, a bladder. Allied to Skt. vasi, the bladder. Der. vesicul-ar, adj.; also vesiculation, the raising of blisters on the skin.

VESPER, the evening star; the evening; pl. vespers, even-song. (L.) In the ecclesiastical sense, the word does not seem to be old, as the E. name for the service was even-song or evening-song. Vesper occurs in Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. ser. 7 (R.); and see the Index to Parker Soc. Publications. But we already find vesper, in the sense of evening-star, in Gower, C. A. ii. 209, l. 13. = Lat. vesper, the evening star, the evening; cf. vespera, even-tide. Hence O. F. vespre (F. vespre), 'the evening,' Cot., and vespre, 'even-song,' id. \dagger Gk. vespera, adj. and sb., evening, vesperos derisus, the evening-star; vespera, even-tide. β . All from an Aryan form was-heras (Curtius, l. 471); allied to Skt. vasati, aught; perhaps from \checkmark WAS, to dwell; see Wast.

VESSEL, a stensil for holding liquids, &c., a ship. (F., -L.) M. E. vesel, Chaucer, C. T. 682. = O. F. vesuel, vesuel, vesuel, a vessel, a ship (Burguy); later vaisseau, 'a vessel, of what kind soever.' Cot. = Lat. vasellum, a small vase or urn; dimin. of vas, a vase, whence also the dimin. vasculum; see Vascular, Vase.

VEST, a garment, waistcoat. (L.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 247. = Lat. vestis, a garment; lit. a cloth or covering. Formed (with Aryan suffix -ta) from \checkmark WAS, to cover over, clothe, protect; cf. Skt. vas, to put on (clothes), Gk. vestis (= vestis), I clothe, vestis, clothing, Goth. gwasjan, to clothe, wasu, clothes; Curtius, l. 470. Der. vest, vb., formerly used in such phrases as vest one with supreme power, and (less properly) to vest supreme power in one; see Phillips, ed. 1706; hence vest-ed, fully possessed. And see vest-ment, vest-ry, vest-ure. Also di-vest, in-vest, re-vest.

VESTAL, chaste, pure. (F., -L.) As adj. in Shak. Romeo, iii. 2. 38; as sb., a Vestal virgin, priestess of Vesta, Antony, iii. 13. 31. = F. vestal, a Vestal virgin; see Cotgrave. = Lat. Vestalis, belonging to a Vestal, also (for Vestalis ergo), a priestess of Vesta. = Lat. Vesta, a Roman goddess; goddess of fire and of purity (from the purifying effects of fire). \dagger Gk. Estia, daughter of Chronos and Rhea, goddess of the domestic hearth. = \checkmark WAS, to shine, burn; cf. Skt. vasara, day, ask, to shine; see East. Curtius, l. 496.

VESTIBULE, a porch. (L.) In Swinburne, Travels in Spain, p. 216. Phillips has only the Lat. form vestibulum. Englished from Lat. vestibulum, a fore-court, entrance-court, entrance. Lit. 'that which is separated from the abode.' = Lat. vest-, separated from, apart from; and vestibulum, an abode (which becomes -stibulum in composition, as in vestibulum, lit. a place for a ship, but applied to denote a vessel shaped like a ship). β . The Lat. vest- is prob. connected with dis, two; as the Skt. vi-, apart, certainly is with Skt. divi, two. For vestibulum, see Stable.

VESTIGE, a foot-print, a trace. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. vestige, 'a step, foot step, track, trace'; Cot. = Lat. vestigium, a foot-step, track. β . The most likely explanation of this difficult word is perhaps 'a separate stepping,' with reference to the double track left from the pair of feet, each mark being regularly separated from the other. This would derive it from vest-, apart; and *-stigmum, a going, marching, walk, from a base stig- allied to Gk. stigein, to go, march, from the \checkmark STIGH, to climb, stride. See Vestibule and Stille (1).

VESTMENT, a garment, long robe. (F., -L.) M. E. vestment; pl. vestments, Ancren Riwle, p. 418. This form occurs as late as in Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 29; whilst the Prompt. Parv. has both vestment and vestments. = O. F. *vestment, vestment, 'a vesture.' Cot. (Mod. F. vêtement). = Lat. vestmentum, a garment. = Lat. vesti-ere, to clothe = Lat. vesti-, crude form of vestis; see Vest.

VESTRY, a place for keeping vestments. (F., -L.) M. E. vestry, Prompt. Parv. Slightly altered from O. F. vestiaire, 'the vestry in a church'; Cot. = Lat. vestiarium, a wardrobe; orig. neut. of vestiarius, adj., belonging to a vest. = Lat. vesti-, crude form of vestis; see Vest.

VESTURE, dress, a robe. (F., -L.) In P. Plowman, B. l. 23. = O. F. vesture, 'a clothing, arraying'; Cot. = Low Lat. vestitura, clothing. = Lat. vesti-ere, pp. of vestire, to clothe. = Lat. vesti-, crude form of vestis; see Vest. Cf. E. in-vestiture.

VETCH, a genus of plants. (F., -L.) The same as fitch; pl. fitches, Isaiah xxviii. 25. Ezech. iv. 9 (A. V.). In the earlier of Wyclif's versions of Isaiah xxviii. 25, the word is written fiche, and in the later fiches. Baret (Altears) gives: 'Fiches, VICIA . . . Plin. Bones; A conuendo, vi Varroni placet.' Libbie Word-book, ed. Eastwood and Wright. For the variation of the initial letter, cf. fang and fang, fat and fat, E. vers with A. S. fers; the variation is dialectal, and in the present case the right form is that with initial v. The correct M. E. spelling would be vetche; we actually find 'Hec alia, Anglice fiche' in Wright's Gloss. l. 301, col. 2, in a vocabulary strongly marked by Northern forms; fiche being the Northern form corresponding to the Southern vetche. = O. F. vetche, vetche, later vetche; of these forms, the older ones are given by Palgrave, who has: 'Fetche, a lytell pease, vetche, vetche, vetche;' whilst Cotgrave has: 'Vetche, the pulse called fitch or vitch.' = Lat. vicia, a vetch. β . As the vetch has tendrils, Varro's derivation is to be accepted; viz. from the base WIK, to bind, as appearing in manire, to bind, manis, a plant (orig. a climbing one); and still more clearly in \checkmark WI, to wind, whence Lat. vitis, a vine, vit-mou, a pliant twig. See Withy.

VETERAN, experienced, long exercised in military life. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. veteranus, old, veteran, experienced; as sb., a veteran. = Lat. veter-, stem of vetus, old, aged; lit. 'advanced in years.' β . From the base WAT-AS, WET-AS, a year; cf. Gk. etres (= etres), a year, Skt. vetasa, a year; also Lithuan. vetetas, old, Russ. vetkhi, old, vetkhat, to grow old. Fick, l. 765. See Veal. Der. veteran, sb. From the same base are veter-in-ary, in-veter-ate, veal, wither.

VETERINARY, pertaining to the art of treating diseases of domestic animals. (L.) 'Veterinarian, he that lets horses or mules to hire, a hackney-man, also a horse-leech or farrier;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Sir T. Browne has veterinarian as a sb., Valg. Errors, b. iiii. c. 2, § 1. = Lat. veterinarius, of or belonging to beasts of burden; as sb., a cattle-doctor. = Lat. veterinus, belonging to beasts of burden; pl. veterina (sc. bestia), beasts of burden. β . The Lat. veterinus probably meant, originally, an animal at least a year old, one that had passed its first year, from the same base (WET-AS, a year) as occurs in vetus (gen. vetus-i), old; see Veteran and Veal. And see Wether. Der. veterinari-um, as above.

VETO, a prohibition. (L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. = Lat. veto, I forbid; hence the saying of 'I forbid,' i. e. a prohibition. β . The orig. sense of vetare is 'to leave in the old state,' hence to vote against change; allied to vetus, old; cf. E. immature. Der. vote, verb.

VEK, to harass, torment, irritate. (F., -L.) M. E. veken. Prompt. Parv. = F. veker, 'to vex'; Cot. = Lat. veker, to vex, lit. to keep on carrying or moving a thing about; an intensive form of vehere, to carry (pt. t. vehi). See Vehicle. Der. vehi-ment, from F. vehement, 'vehement,' Cot., from Lat. acc. vehementem; vehi-ment, vehi-ment-ly, vehi-ment.

VIADUCT, a road or railway carried across a valley or river. (L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Englished from Lat. via ducta, a way conducted across; from Lat. via, a way, and ductus, fem. of ducere, pp. of ducere, to lead, conduct; see Duot, Duke. β . Lat. via was formerly written veia, and is most likely put for *veia, answering to Skt. veha, a road, a way, from veh, to carry = Lat. vehere. It is also cognate with E. Way; Fick, iii. 281. = \checkmark WAGH, to carry; see Vehicle. γ . It is remarkable that Fick should also give (l. 762) an unsatisfactory etymology connecting via with Skt. vi, to go. Der. viatorum, a doublet of viage, q. v.; also con-vey, con-vey, de-vice, de-vice, con-vey, im-per-vice, in-vice, ob-vice, ob-vice, per-vice, pre-vice, tri-vice.

VIAL, PHIAL, a small glass vessel or bottle. (F., -L. = Gk.) Phial is a pedantic spelling; the spelling vial is historically more correct, as we took the word from French; a still better spelling would be viol. 'Viola, a glass, fialle, viale;' Palgrave. M. E. viale; pl. viale, Wyclif, Rev. v. 8, where the A. V. has viale. = O. F. viale, fiale, fiale (for which forms see Palgrave above), later phiale,

'a violl, a small glass bottle;' Cot. Mod. F. viola. = Lat. phiala, a maucer, a shallow drinking-vessel (the form of which must have been altered) = Gk. φιάλα, a shallow cup or bowl. Root unknown.

VIAND, food, provision. (F., = L.) Usually in pl. viands. (F., = L.) 'Dainty sounds;' Sur T. More, Works, p. 6 (R.) = F. vande, 'meat, food, substance;' Cot. The same as Ital. vivanda, victuals, food, eatables. = Lat. vivanda, neut. pl., things to live on, provisions; considered as a fem. sing., by a change common in Low Latin. = Lat. vivendus, fut. pass. of vivere, to live; see VICTUALS.

VIBRATE, to swing, move backwards and forwards. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has vibration; the verb is perhaps a little later. = Lat. vibrans, pp. of vibrare, to shake, swing, brandish. = \sqrt{WIP} , to shake, agitate; cf. Skt. vip, to throw, Iscl. vo/va, to vibrate, wave. See Waive. Der. vibrat-ion, vibrat-ory.

VICAR, lit. a deputy; the incumbent of a benefice. (F., = L.) M. E. vicar, a deputy, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 379; also vicary, a vicar, id. C. T. 17333. = F. vicar, 'a vicar, or vice-gerent, also the tenant or incumbent who, in the right of a corporation or church, is to pay duties, or do services, unto the lord of the land;' Cot. = Lat. vicarium, acc. of vicarius, a substitute, deputy; orig. an adj., substituted, deputed, said of one who supplies the turn or place of another. = Lat. vic-, stem of vicis (gen.), a turn, change, succession. = \sqrt{WIK} , to yield, give way; hence to succeed in another's turn; cf. Gk. εἰς-εως, to yield, G. vach-est, a turn. Fick, l. 784. Der. vicar-ago, spelt vicary in Palsgrave (prob. a misprint for vicary); vicar-i-al; vicar-i-ate, sb., from F. vicariat, 'a vicarship;' Cot. Also vicar-i-ous, Englished from Lat. vicarius, substituted, delegated, vicarious (as above); vicar-i-ous-ly. And see vicar-gerent, vicar-i-ous-ty.

VICIN (1), a blemish, fault, depravity. (F., = L.) M. E. vice, vice, Rob. of Glouc., p. 193, l. 7 = F. vice, 'a vice, fault;' Cot. = Lat. vitium, a vice, fault. Root uncertain. Der. vic-i-ous, from F. vicioux, 'vicious;' Cot., from Lat. vitiosus, faulty; vic-i-ous-ly; vic-i-ous-ness, spelt viciousness in Palsgrave; vic-i-ous, spelt vicioux in Cot. (to translate F. vicier), from Lat. vitiosus, pp. of vitare, to injure; vic-i-ation.

VICIN (2), an instrument, tightened by a screw, for holding anything firmly. (F., = L.) M. E. vice, vice, in Wyclif, 3 Kings, vi. 8, where it means 'a winding-stair,' (see the A. V.), the orig. sense being 'a screw.' A vice is so called because tightened by a verrou. = F. vice, 'the vice, or spindle of a press, also a winding-stair;' Cot. O. F. vice; Burguy. = Lat. visus, a vine, bryony, the lit. sense being 'that which winds or twines;' hence the O. F. vice (= vis), where the suffix -us represents the termination -us of the Lat. nom. = \sqrt{W} to wind, bud, or twine about; cf. E. with, withy, Lat. vis-men, a plant twig, &c. Cf. Ital. vice, 'the vine, also a vice or a screw;' Florio.

VIC-GERENT, having delegated authority, acting in place of another. (F., = L.) In Shak. L. L. l. i. 222. = F. vicgerent, 'a vice-gerent, or deputy;' Cot. = Lat. vic-, stem of vicis; and gerens, stem of pres. part. of gerere, to carry on, perform, conduct, act, rule. Here vic- is the abl. from the gen. vicis, a turn, change, stand (the word not being used); see Vicior. For gerens, see Gesture. With the same prefix vic- (F. vic, Lat. vicis, in place of) we have vic-admiral, vic-chancellor; also vic-roy. Temp. iii. 2. 106, where roy = F. roi, Lat. regem, acc. of rex, a king; vic-regal; and see vic-roy.

VICINAGE, neighbourhood. (F., = L.) Vicinage is a pedantic spelling of vicinage, due to an attempt to reduce the F. word to a Lat. spelling; but forms are given in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Bp. Taylor has the spelling vicinage more than once, in Episcopacy Asserted, § 21 (R.), and Rule of Conscience, b. l. c. 4 (R.) = F. vicinage, 'neighbourhood;' Cot. = F. vicin, 'neighbouring;' id. = Lat. vicinum, acc. of vicinus, neighbouring, near, lit. belonging to the same street. = Lat. vic-us, a village, street (whence the A. S. vic, E. wick, a town, is borrowed). + Gk. oikos, a house, dwelling-place. + Russ. vesa, a village. + Skt. vapa, a house, entrance. = \sqrt{WIK} , to come to, enter, enter into; Skt. vap, to enter. Der. vic-i-ty, from F. vicinité, 'vicinity;' Cot., from Lat. acc. vicinitatem, neighbourhood. Der. (from Gk. vicior, vicior-ia, vicior-ia).

VICISSITUDE, change. (L.) In Bacon, Essay On Vicissitudes of Things. = Lat. vicissitudo, change. Allied to vicissim, by turns; where the suffix -sim may be compared with par-sim, recursim, &c. = Lat. vicis (gen.), a change; see Vicior.

VICTIM, a living being offered as a sacrifice, one who is persecuted. (F., = L.) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Æn. xii. l. 319. = F. victim (not in Cotgrave). = Lat. victima, a victim. Root uncertain and disputed. Der. victim-ise, a coined word.

VICTOR, a conqueror. (L.) In K. Joba, ii. 324. = Lat. victor, a conqueror; see below.

VICTORY, success in a contest. (F., = L.) M. E. victorie. In King Alisunder, 7663. = O. F. victoria (Burguy), later victoria, 'victory;' Cot. = Lat. victoria, conquest. = Lat. victor, a conquest. = Lat. vict-us, pp. of vincere, to conquer (pt. l. vici-). = \sqrt{WIK} , to fight; whence also Goth. vigan, vigan (pp. vigana), to strive, contend; §

A. S. vig, war. Fick, l. 783. Der. victori-ous (Palsgrave), from F. victoriosa, Lat. victoriosa, full of victory; victori-ous-ly. Also (from vincere) victor, as above; victorish, victor-able; victor-ance, victor-ance, victor-ous, victor-ous-ly, victor-ous-ness.

VICTUALS, provisions, meat. (F., = L.) The sing. victual is little used now, but occurs in Exod. xii. 39 (A. V.), and in Much Ado, i. 1. 50. The word is grossly misspelt, by a blind pedantry which ignores the F. origin; yet the true orthography is fairly represented by the pronunciation as vittles, still commonly used by the best speakers. M. E. vittails, Chaucer, C. T. 248. = O. F. vittaille (Burguy), later vittailles (with inserted s, due to pedantry); Cot. gives 'vittailles, victuals,' but Palsgrave has 'Vittails, vittaille, vittues; Vytvailles, mete and drinke, touts maniere de vittailles' = Lat. victualia, neut. pl., provisions, victuals. = Lat. victualis, belonging to nourishment. = Lat. victus, crude form of victus, food, nourishment; with suffix -alis. = Lat. vict-us, pp. of vincere, to live; allied to vincis, living. = \sqrt{GIW} , to live; cf. Skt. jit, to live, Gk. βίω, life, Russ. jit, to live; and see Quick. Fick, l. 571. Der. victual, verb. As You Like It, v. 4. 198; victual-er, spelt vittailor in Palsgrave. Also (from the same root) vi-and, vi-tal, vi-van-i-ous, vi-vid, vi-vi-ty, vi-vi-ous, vi-vacious; con-vi-tal, re-vivis, sur-vivis; also bio-graphy, bio-logy; quack; viper, viverra.

VIDELICET, namely. (L.) In Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 330. In old MSS. and books, the abbreviation for Lat. videlicet (final) closely resembled a z. Hence the abbreviation vic- = vicit, short for videlicet. = Lat. videlicet, put for videre licet (like videlicet = videre licet), it is easy to see, it is manifest, hence plainly, to wit, namely. = Lat. videre, to see; and licet, it is allowable, hence, it is easy. See Vision and Idiosync.

VIDETTE, another spelling of Vedette, q. v.

VIE, to contend, strive for superiority. (F., = L.) M. E. vie, a contracted form of M. E. vision, due to the loss of the initial syllable, as in story for history, fores for defores, &c. In Chaucer, Death of Blaunche, l. 173, we have: 'To vye who might slepe best,' ed. Thynne (1832), and so also in the Tanner MS. 346; but MS. Fairfax 16 has: 'To vise who myght slepe best,' where To vise = To vye in pronunciation, just as Chaucer has taboden = to aboden, &c. β. This M. E. vision is quite a different word from vision, to envy; it is really a doublet of visite, and is a term formerly used in gambling. = O. F. visier (vis ion), to vie; Cot. = Lat. vincere, to invite; see Invite. γ. This is proved by the Span. and Ital. forms; cf. Span. avudar, 'among gamblers, to invite or to open the game by staking a certain sum,' Neuman; Ital. invitare (al gioco), 'to vie or to reuse at any game, to drop vie; avere, a vie at play, a vie at any game; also, an inviting, proffer, or bidding;' Florio. See plentiful examples of vie, to wager, and vise, sb., a wager, in Nares; and remember that the true sense of vish is against, as in vish-stand, fight vish, &c., so that to vie with = to stake against, wager against, which fully explains the word. Much more might be added; Scheler's excellent explanation of F. à l'essai is strictly to the point; so also Wedgwood's remarks on E. vie. In particular, the latter shows that the O. F. visier also meant 'to invite,' and he adds: 'From the verb was formed the adv. expression à l'essai, E. à-vis, as if for a wager: "They that write of these toads strive à-vis who shall write most wonders of them," Holland, tr. of Play; [b. xxii c. 4.] Doublet, visite.

VIEW, a sight, reach of the sight, a scene, mental survey. (F., = L.) Very common in Shak.; see Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. l. 144, iii. 2. 177, &c. Lewis has the verb visus = F. visé, 'the sense, act, or instrument of seeing, the eyes, a glance, a view, look, sight,' &c.; Cot. Properly the fem. of visus, 'viewed, seen,' pp. of viser (mod. F. voir), 'to view, see;' id. = Lat. videre, to see; see Vision. Der. vis-ion, verb; vis-er; re-visit; vis-less, invisible, Meas. for Mens. iii. 1. 124.

VIGIL, the eve before a feast or fast-day. (F., = L.) Lit. 'a watching;' so named because orig. kept by watching through the night. M. E. vigils, Ancren Riwle, p. 413, l. 13; Chaucer, C. T. 379. = F. vigile, 'a vigile, the eve of a holy or solemn day;' Cot. = Lat. vigilia, a watch, watching. = Lat. vigil, awake, lively, vigilant, watchful. = Lat. vigere, to be lively or vigorous, flourish, thrive. = \sqrt{WAG} , to be strong, to wake; see Vegetable. Der. vigil-ant, l. Hen. IV. iv. 2. 64, from F. vigilant, 'vigilant,' Cot., from Lat. vigilans, stem of pres. part. of vigilare, to watch; vigil-ance, Temp. iii. 3. 16, from F. vigilance, 'vigilance;' Cot., from Lat. vigilantia. From the same root are vig-etable, vig-our, in-vig-er-ate, well-ate (for well-ate), re-villit, sur-villit-ant; also vake, watch, vait; abe, vean, &c.

VIGNETTE, a small engraving with ornamented borders. (F., = L.) So called because orig. applied to ornamented borders in which vine-leaves and tendrils were freely introduced. In the edition of Cotgrave's Dict. published in 1660, the English Index (by Sherwood) has a title-page with such a border, in which two pillars are represented on each side, wreathed with vines bearing leaved tendrils, and bunches of grapes. = F. vignette, 'a little vine; vignettes, vignets, branches, or branchlike borders or flourishes, in painting or engraving: Cot. Dimin. of F. vigne, a vine; see VINE.

VIGOUR, vital strength, force, energy. (F., = L.) M. E. vigour; spelt vigor, King Alisaunder, l. 1431. = O. F. vigor, vigor, later vigour, 'vigor': Cot. = Lat. vigorem, acc. of vigor, liveliness, activity, force. = Lat. vigere, to be lively or vigorous; see Vigilant. Der. vigor, spelt vigorosus in Paisgrave, from F. vigorosus, 'vigorous'; Cot.; vigorously, vigorouslyness.

VIKING, a Northern pirate. (Scand.) The form viking occurs in A. S., but the word is borrowed from Scandinavian. = Icel. vikingr, a freebooter, rover, pirate, used in the Icel. Sagas esp. of the bands of Scand. warriors who, during the 9th and 10th centuries, harried the British Isles and Normandy. The lit. sense is 'a creek-dweller,' one of the men who haunted the bays, creeks, and fjords. = Icel. vík, a creek, inlet, bay; with suffix -ingr (A. S. -ing) in the sense of 'son of' or belonging to. = So also Swed. vik, Dan. vig, a creek, cove. The orig. sense of vík is 'a bend' or 'recess' = Icel. vitha (strong verb, pt. i. vith, vath), to turn, veer, trend, recede; Swed. vika, to give way, recede; Dan. vigs. See Weak.

VILE, abject, base, worthless, wicked. (F., = L.) M. E. vil, Rob. of Glouc. p. 48, l. 16. = F. vil (fem. vile), 'vile, abject, base, low, mean, . . . good cheap, of small price': Cot. = Lat. vilem, acc. of vilis, of small price, cheap, worthless, base, vile. Root uncertain. Der. vilely, vileness; vile-ness, a coined word, to account vile, defame, properly to make vile, as in Milton, P. L. xi. 516; vile-ness, vile-ness.

VILLA, a country residence or seat, a house. (L.) In Dryden, tr. of Lucretius, b. iii. l. 283. = Lat. villa, a farm-house; lit. 'a small village.' Dimin. of vicus, a village; whence vicula = vicula = villa. See Vicinage. Der. village, Chaucer, C. T. 12621, from F. village, 'a village,' Cot., from Lat. adj. villatus, belonging to a villa; village-er, Jul. Caesar, l. 2. 173; village-ry, a collection of villages, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 35. And see villain.

VILLAIN, a clownish or depraved person, a scoundrel. (F., = L.) M. E. villain, villain, Avenbite of Lawty, p. 18, l. 7. 'For villain maketh villain;' Rom. of the Rose, 2181. = O. F. villain, 'servile, base, vile'; Cot. He also gives villain, 'a villain, slave, bondman, servile tenant.' = Low Lat. villanus, a farm-servant, serf; the degradation by which it passed into a term of reproach is well stated by Cotgrave, who further explains villain as meaning 'a farmer, yeoman, churl, carle, boore, clown, knave, rascal, varlet, filthy fellow.' = Lat. villa, a farm; see Villa. Der. villainous, Merry Wives, ii. 2. 308; villainously; also villainy, M. E. villainie, Chaucer, C. T. 70, Ancren Riwle, p. 216, from O. F. villainie (or villainie), 'villainy,' Cot.

VINCIBLE, that can be conquered. (L.) Rare. In Bp. Taylor, Of Repentance, c. 3. § 3 (R.) = Lat. vincibilis, easily overcome. = Lat. vincere, to conquer; see Victor. Der. vincibility; vincibility.

VINCULUM, a link. (L.) Modern; chiefly used as a math. term. = Lat. vinculum, a bond, fetter, link. = Lat. vincere, to bind, fetter. A nasalized form from the base VIK, to bind, extension of \sqrt{VI} , to bind, twine; see Vine, Withy.

VINDICATE, to lay claim to, defend, maintain by force. (L.) In Milton, P. R. ii. 47. = Lat. vindicatus, pp. of vindicare, to lay legal claim to, arrogate, avenge. = Lat. vindicat, stem of vindex, a claimant, maintainer. Orig. 'one who expresses a desire' or states a claim. = Lat. vire, i. e. a desire or wish, allied to vis, favour, permission, from \sqrt{WAN} , to wish (see Venerate); and the base DIK, to show, appearing in de-are, to appoint, de-are, to say, and in the suffix -dus as seen in in-dus (see Indicate). Der. vindicat-er, vindicable, vindicat-ion; vindicat-ive, i. e. vindictive, Troil. iv. §. 107; vindicat-ory; and see vindic-tive, vengance.

VINDICTIVE, revengeful. (F., = L.) Vindictive is merely a shortened form of vindicatus, obviously due to confusion with the related Lat. vindicta, revenge. Bp. Taylor, in his Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 3, speaks of 'vindicative justice,' but in the same work, b. ii. c. 3, of 'vindicative justice;' if Richardson's quotations be correct. Shak. has vindicative = vindicative, Troil. iv. §. 107. = F. vindicatif, 'vindicative, revenging,' Cot. Formed with suffix $\sqrt{(-ius)}$ from vindicat-us, pp. of vindicare, (1) to claim, (2) to avenge; see Vindicate. Der. vindicatively, -ness.

VINE, the plant from which wine is made. (F., = L.) M. E. vine, vine; Wyclif, John, xv. 1. = F. vigne, 'a vine'; Cot. = Lat. vinum, a vineyard, which in late Lat. seems to have taken the sense of 'vine,' for which the true Lat. word is vitis. Vinum is properly the fem. of adj. vinosus, of or belonging to wine. = Lat. vinum, wine. $\sqrt{Gk.}$ αἶνος, wine; allied to αἶνος, the vine, αἶνος, the vine, grape, wine. Cf. Lat. vitis, the vine. = \sqrt{WI} , to twine; as seen in Lat. vincere, to twist together, vincere, a plant twig, vincere, the vine, &c., Fick, i. 782. And see Curtius, i. 487, who notes that the Gk. words were used 'by no means exclusively of the drink, but just as much of the vine. Pott very appropriately compares the Lithuan. ap-vy-aji, a hop tendril. . . .

The fact is therefore that the Indo-Germans had indeed a common root for the idea of winding, twining, and hence derived the names of various plant twining plants, but that it is only among the Græco-Italians that we find a common name for the grape and its juice. The Northern names (Goth. vina, &c.) are undoubtedly to be regarded (with Jac. Grimm, Gramm. iii. 466) as borrowed. See the whole passage. To which we may add that the Lat. vinum also means 'grapes,' and the E. vine-yard = A. S. win-gard = wine-yard, which identified wine with the vine itself. Der. vine-dresser; vine-ry, occurring in 'the vinory of Ramer,' in Fabyan's Chronicle, John of France, an. 8 (ed. Ellis, p. 511), a word coined on the model of butt-ry, pantry, brew-ry; wine-yard, A. S. win-gard, Matt. xx. 1; vine-ous, a late word, from Lat. vinosus, belonging to wine. Also vine-gar, vine-ry, vine-ry, which see below. From the same root are with or withy, winis, ferrous, parivincible (1), seer, vinculum.

VINEGAR, an acid liquor made from fermented liquors. (F., = L.) M. E. vinegre, vinegre, Wyclif, Mark, xv. 36. Lit. 'sour wine.' = F. vinigre, 'vineger'; Cot. = F. vin, wine; and agre, sharp, sour; see Vine or Wine, and Eager.

VINEWED, mouldy. (S.) In mod. edd. of Shak. Troil. ii. 1. 15, we generally find vinewed, where the folios have winwed. Munthe, ed. 1627, has vinewed, as equivalent to 'mustie;' and also the sb. vinewedness; and see vinewed, vinewed, vinewed in Nares. Cf. prov. E. vinewed (West), Halliwell. The form vinewed answers to the pp. of A. S. vinigian, vinigian, to become mouldy or musty, occurring in the Canons of Ælfric, § 36; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, ii. 360, l. 7. It is a verb formed from an adj. vinig or vinig, mouldy, occurring in the same passage. We also find the pl. vinig (for vinig) in Josh. ix. 5, where it is used of mouldy loaves. Ettmüller refers it to the form vinig, as if allied to Icel. vinig, rottenness, which does not account for the n. The right form seems to be vinig or vinig (as in Leo), answering to M. E. vinig, used in the sense of dirty, vile, in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1113; so also vinig, i. e. musty, dirty, in Sandys' Travels, ed. 1632, p. 160, l. 4. This is nothing but the adj. from A. S. vinig, mire, John ix. 6, which is the same as mod. E. vinig, q. v. Cf. A. S. vinig, muddy, Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 242, l. 30. The form vinewed can only be made from the pp. of the verb, not from the adj., as Nares wrongly imagined.

VINTAGE, the gathering or produce of grapes, time of grape-gathering. (F., = L.) 'Tyll they had ineed [gathered in] all their come and vinage;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 22 (R.) Vintage is a corruption of M. E. vinage, Wyclif, Levit. xxv. 3, or vinage, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 367, which was also pronounced as vinage, as shown by the various readings in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 414. And again, M. E. vinage is for vinage, the unfamiliar ending -age being turned into the common suffix -age; it is clear that the word was confused with vin-er, vin-ry; see Vintner. = F. vendange (also vendange in Cotgrave), 'a vintage;' Cot. = Lat. vindemia, a vintage. = Lat. vin-um, (1) wine, (2) grapes; and dem-ere, to take away; so that vin-demia = a taking away of grapes, grape-gathering. β . For Lat. vinum, see Vine, Wine. The Lat. demere is for de-icare, to take away; from de, prep., off, away, and icare, to take; see De and Redeem.

VINTNER, a wine-dealer, tavern-keeper. (F., = L.) 'Vintner, Vinarius;' Prompt. Parv. Thus vintner is short for vintner; and again, vintner is an altered form of vinetor or vinitor, which is the older form. It occurs, spelt vinitor, in Rob. of Glouc., p. 542, in a passage where we also find vinitorie, now shortened to vintry, and occurring as the name of a house in London (Stow, Survey of London, ed. Thoma, p. 90). = F. vinetor, 'a vintner, taverner, wine-seller;' Cot. = Low Lat. vinetarius, a wine-seller (occurring A. N. 1226). Really derived from Lat. vinetum, a vineyard, but used with the sense of Lat. vinarius, a wineseller. = Lat. vinum, wine; see Vine or Wine.

VIOL, a kind of fiddle, a musical instrument. (F., = L.) In Shak. Rich. II. i. 3. 162. = F. viola (also viole), 'a (musical) viol, or violin;' Cot. Cf. Ital. Span. and Port. viola, Prov. viola, viole (Dies). Dies takes the Prov. viola (a trisyllabic word) to be the oldest form, derived from Low Lat. vitula, vitula, a viol, which was first transposed into the form vutla, vutla, cf. Prov. vutla from Lat. vitula, vitula (from Lat. vitula), and then became vutla, vutla, viole. 'Vidulatores dicuntur a vitula, Gallice viole;' John de Garlande, in Wright's Voc. l. 137, l. 4 from bottom. Dies also remarks that it was sometimes called vitula iocosa, the merry viol; and he derives it from Lat. vitulari, to celebrate a festival, keep holiday. β . The Lat. vitulari prob. meant orig. to sacrifice a calf; it is plainly formed from Lat. vitulum, a calf; see Veal. γ . The A. S. viol, O. H. G. viola, E. fiddle appear to be borrowed from Low Lat. vitula; see Fiddle, which is thus seen to be a doublet. Der. viol-in, Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, l. 103, from Ital. violino, dimin. of viola, a viol; viol-inist, a player on the violin; viol-on-cell-o, a bass violin, from VISUAL, used in sight or for seeing. (F., = L.) 'Visual, belonging to, or carried by the sight; extending as far as the eye can carry it; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. visual, 'visual,' Cot. = Lat. visualis, belonging to the sight. = Lat. visus, crude form of visus, the sight; with suffix -alis. = Lat. visus, pp. of videre, to see; see VISION.

VITAL, containing life, essential. (F., = L.) M. E. vital, Chaucer, C. T. 2804. = F. vital, 'vital'; Cot. = Lat. vitalis, belonging to life. = Lat. vita, life. Apparently short for vitalis; allied to vivere, to live; cf. Bios, life. = \sqrt{GIW} , to live; see VICTUAL. Der. vital-ly; vital-ly, in Blount, Englished from Lat. vitalitas, vital force; vitalis, to give life to, a coined word. Also vital-s, parts essential to life, coined in imitation of Lat. vitalis, parts essential to life, neut. pl. of vitalis.

VITIATE, see under VICE.

VITREOUS, pertaining to glass, glasslike. (L.) In Ray, O: the Creation, pt. ii. § 11, where he speaks of 'the vitreous hum or' of the eye (R.) Englished (by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c.) from Lat. vitreus (also vitrius), glassy. = Lat. vitro- (or vitri-), for vitro-, crude form of vitrum, glass. β . The i of vitrum is short in Horace (Odes, iii. 13. 1), but was orig. long, as in Propertius, v. 8. 3; and vitrum stands for vitrum, i.e. an instrument or material for seeing with. = Lat. videre, to see; see VISION. Der. (from Lat. vitrum), vitri-fy, from F. vitri-fier, 'to turn or make into glass,' formed as if from a Lat. verb vitri-ficari; hence also vitri-fic-at-ed, Bacon, New Atlantis, ed. 1631, p. 34; vitri-fic-at-ion, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5, pt. 2; vitri-fic-able; also vitri-ol, q. v.

VITRIOL, the popular name of sulphuric acid. (F., = L.) M. E. vitriole, Chaucer, C. T. 16270. = F. vitriole, 'vitriol, copperose'; Cot. Cf. O. Ital. vitriolo, 'vitriol or copperase,' Florio. Said to be so called from its transparent glassy colour. = Low Lat. vitriolus, answering to Lat. vitreolus, glassy, made of glass. = Lat. vitrum, glassy. = Lat. vitrum, glass; see VITREOUS. \S It is not improbable that vitriol was supposed to be made from glass; from the popular belief that glass was poisonous; see Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5. Der. vitri-ol.

VITUPERATION, blame, censure, abuse. (F., = L.) Spelt vituperationem in The Boke of Tulle of Old Age, c. 8 (Caxton); cited in the Appendix to Richardson's Dict. Also in Cotgrave. = F. vituperation, 'a vituperation, or dispraising'; Cot. = Lat. vituperatus, pp. of vituperare, to censure, abuse. The orig. sense is 'to get ready a blemish,' i.e. to find fault. = Lat. vitio-, for vitio-, base of vitium, a vice, fault, blemish; and parare, to get ready, furnish, provide. See VICE and PARADE. Der. vituper-ate, from Lat. pp. vituperatus, used by Cot. to translate F. vituperer; vituperat-ion, -ly.

VIVACITY, liveliness. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. vivacit , 'vivacity, liveliness'; Cot. = Lat. vivacitas, acc. of vivacitas, natural vigour. = Lat. vivaci-, crude form of vivax, tenacious of life, vigorous. = Lat. vivax, lively; see VIVID. Der. (from Lat. vivaci-), vivac-ity, -ous.

VIVID, life-like, having the appearance of life, very clear to the imagination. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. vividus, animated, true to life, lively. = Lat. vivus, living; allied to vivere, to live; see VICTUAL, and QUICK. Der. vivid-ly, -ness.

VIVIFY, to quicken, endue with life. (F., = L.) Bacon has vivify and vivification, Nat. Hist. § 696. = F. vivifier, 'to quicken'; Cot. = Lat. vivificare, to vivify, make alive. = Lat. vivif-, for vivo-, crude form of vivus, living; and ficare, for facere, to make; see VIVID and FACT. Der. vivif-ic-at-ion.

VIVIPAROUS, producing young alive. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 21, part 2. Englished from Lat. viviparus, producing living young. = Lat. viv-, for vivo-, crude form of vivus, alive; and parare, to produce, bring forth. See VIVID or VICTUAL, and PARENT. Der. vivip-arous.

VIVISECTION, dissection of a living animal. (L.) Modern. From vivi-, as seen in VIVIPAROUS; and SECTION.

VIXEN, a she-fox, an ill-tempered woman. (E.) Vixen is the same as fox, occurring as a proper name (spelt Vixen) in the Clergy List, 1873. Spelt vixen, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 324. Not found in M. E., nor in A. S. The alleged A. S. foxen, given by Sommer, is not a correct form, and is unauthorised. It is the fem. form of fox; and by the ordinary laws of vowel-change, the fem. form is fyren, made by changing the vowel from e to y, and adding the fem. suffix -en, precisely as in A. S. gode-m, a goddess, from god, a god. The A. S. foxen would become M. E. foxen, by the usual change from A. S. y to M. E. i, as in M. E. biggon (to buy) from A. S. byrgan, and in scores of other instances. [Versteegan's form foxen is a sheer invention, and only shows his ignorance.] The use of vixen for fox is common, as in Ancren Riwle, p. 128, l. 5; so also vixen for fox, and vix for fox. Cf. G. fuchs, fem. of fuchs, a fox; similarly formed. The fem. suffix occurs again in G. henschen, a queen, &c. Cf. Lat. reg-na, Fe-mi-na, &c.

VIZ, an abbreviation for VICTALLET, q. v.

VIZARD, a mask; see VISOR.

VIZIER, VISIER, an oriental minister or councillor of state. (Arab.) 'The Grand Vizier'; Howell, Foreign Travel, Appendix; ed. Arber, p. 85. = Amb. vazir, 'a vazir, councillor of state, minister, a vicegerent, or lieutenant of a king; also, a porter'; Rich. Dict. p. 1642. The sense of 'porter' is the orig. one; hence it meant, the bearer of the burden of state affairs. = Arab. root vazara, to bear a burden, support, sustain; id. p. 1641. Doublet, al-guzal, q. v.

VOCABLE, a term, word. (F., = L.) 'This worde angell is a vocable or worde signifying a ministre'; Udall, on Hebrews, c. 1 (R.) = F. vocable, 'a word, a term'; Cot. = Lat. vocabulum, an appellation, designation, name. = Lat. voce-re, to call. = Lat. vo-, stem of voce, voice; see VOICE. Der. vocabul-ar-y, from F. vocabulaire, 'a vocabulary, dictionary, world of words,' Cot., from Low Lat. vocabularium.

VOCAL, belonging to the voice, uttering sound. (F., = L.) 'They'll sing like Memnon's statue, and be vocal'; Ben Jonson, Staple of News, Act iii. sc. 1 (Lickingfinger). = F. vocal, 'vocal'; Cot. = Lat. vocalis, sonorous, vocal. = Lat. voce-, stem of voce, the voice; see VOICE. Der. vocal-ize, from F. vocaliser; Cotgrave has vocaliz , 'vowelled, made a vowel'; vocal-iz-at-ion, vocal-ist.

VOCATION, a calling, occupation. (F., = L.) In Lewis, ed. 1570. = F. vocation, 'a vocation,' Cot. = Lat. vocationem, acc. of vocatio, a bidding, invitation. = Lat. vocatus, pp. of vocare, to call, bid. = Lat. vo-, stem of voce, voice; see VOICE. Der. vocat-ion, Merry Wives, iv. 1. 53, lit. the calling case, from Lat. vocatus, the voc. case, from Lat. pp. vocatus.

VOCIFERATION, a loud calling, noisy outcry. (F., = L.) 'Of Vociferation'; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 35 (misprinted 25 in ed. 1561). = F. vociferation, 'vociferation'; Cot. = Lat. vociferationem, acc. of vociferatio, a loud outcry. = Lat. vociferatus, pp. of vociferare, commonly vociferari, to lift up the voice; lit. 'to bear the voice afar.' = Lat. voce-, crude form of voce, the voice; and fer-re, to bear, cognate with E. Bear. See VOICE. Der. vocifer-ate, from L. pp. vociferatus; vocifer-ous, -ly.

VOGUE, mode, fashion, practice. (F., = Ital., = Teut.) We now say to be in vogue, i.e. in fashion. Formerly vogues meant sway, currency, prevalent use, power, or authority. 'The predominant constellations, which have the vogues'; Howell, Foreign Travel, sect. 6, ed. Arber, p. 34. 'Considering these sermons bore so great a vogues among the papists'; Strype, Ecc. Mem. 1 Mary, an. 1553. = F. vogues, 'vogue, sway, swindge, authority, power; a clear passage, as of a ship in a broad sea'; Cot. β . The orig. sense is 'the swaying motion of a ship,' hence its sway, swing, drift, or course; or else the sway or stroke of an oar. It is the verbal sb. of F. voguer, 'to saule forth, set saile'; Cot. = Ital. voga, 'the stroke of an oare in the water when one roweth,' Florio; verbal sb. of vogare, 'to rowe in a gallie or any bote,' id. (So also Span. voga, the act of rowing; vogar en voga, to be in vogue.) Of Teut. orig. = G. wagen, to fluctuate, be in motion; O. H. G. wagda. = O. H. G. waga, a wave. See WAG. \S Thus the idea of vogue goes back to that of wagging, as exhibited in the swaying of the sea.

VOICE, sound from the mouth, utterance, language. (F., = L.) The spelling with oe (for o) is adopted to keep the hard sound of a M. E. vois, voys, King Alisander, 3864. = O. F. vois (Barguy), later vok, 'a voice, sound'; Cot. = Lat. voce-m, acc. of voce, a voice. = \sqrt{WAK} , to resound, speak; cf. Skt. vach, to speak, whence vachas, speech, cognate with Gk. pho, a word. Der. voic-e, verb, Timon, iv. 3. 81; voic-les. From Lat. voce (stem vo-) we also have voce-able, voce-ation, voce-fer-at-ion, ad-voce-ate, a-voce-ation, ad-voce-ous, a-voce-ous-ness, voce-ous-ness, voce-ous-ly, voce-ous-ness, voce-ous-ly, voce-ous-ness, voce-ous-ly, voce-ous-ness. And see voce-ous, a-voce.

VOID, empty, unoccupied, unsubstantial. (F., = L.) M. E. void, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. g. l. 1316. = O. F. void (Barguy), later void, 'void, empty,' Cot. Mod. F. void. = Lat. voidum, acc. of voidus, deprived, bereft; hence waste, empty. Allied to Skt. vidhad, a widow, and E. widow; see WIDOW. Der. void, verb, M. E. voiden, to empty, King Alisander, 373, from O. F. voider, later vonder, 'to void,' Cot. Also void-able, void-ance (cf. F. voidance, 'a voidness,' Cot.); void-ness; a-void.

VOLANT, flying, nimble. (F., = L.) Rare. 'In manner of a star volant in the air'; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 525 (R.) = F. volant, pres. part. of voler, 'to fly,' Cot. = Lat. volans, to fly. Formed from the adj. volus, flying, occurring only in voli-volus, flying on sails. Allied to Skt. vat, to hasten, move to and fro. Der. vol-at-ile, Ben Jonson, Alchemist, Act ii. sc. 1 (R.), from F. volatil, 'flying,' Cot., from Lat. volatilis, flying, from volare, flight, which from volatus, pp. of volare. Hence volatilis-ness, volat-il-ty, volat-il-ize, volat-il-iz-at-ion. Also volley, q. v.; volerity, q. v.

VOLCANO, a burning mountain. (Ital., = L.) 'A volcano or volcano'; Skinner, ed. 1691. Borrowed from Italian, because the chief burning mountain known to sailors was that of Ætna. = Ital. volcano, 'a hill that continually burneth'; Florio. = Lat. Vulcanus, Vulcanum, acc. of Vulcanus or Vulcanus, Vulcan, the god of fire, hence fire. β. The true form is Vulcanus (with o), and the stem is volc- = vult (not vult). Allied to Skt. vild (for vildh), a firebrand, fire falling from heaven, a meteor. γ. The base is WAL (rather than vol, as in Benfey), from WAR, to be warm; with Aryan suffixes -ho and -na. See Fick, l. 772; and see Warm. Cf. G. wullen, to boil. Der. volcanus; and see vulcanus.

VOLITION, the exercise of the will. (F., = L.) 'Consequent to the mere internal volition'; Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1. = F. volition (Littre), which must be rather an old word, though Littre gives no early example; we find cognate terms in Span. volición, Ital. volitione, volition. All these answer to a Low Lat. volitionem, acc. of volitio°, volition; a word not recorded by DuCange, but prob. a term of the schools. It is a pure coinage, from Lat. vol-o, I wish; of which the infinitive is volo; see Voluntary.

VOLLEY, a flight of shot, the discharge of many fire-arms at once. (F., = L.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 363. = F. voulo, 'a flight, or flying, also a whole flight of birds.' Cot. Cf. Ital. volaio, a flight, volkey. = Lat. volata, orig. fem. of volatus, pp. of volare, to fly; see Volant. See Nares.

VOLT, a bound; the same as Vault (2), q. v.

VOLTAIC, originated by Volta. (Ital.) Applied to Voltaic electricity, or galvanism; the Voltaic pile or battery, first set up about 1800, was discovered by Alessandro Volta, of Como, an experimental philosopher, born 1745, died March 6, 1826; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates, and Hoie, Brief Biography, Dict.

VOLUBLE, flowing smoothly, fluent in speech. (F., = L.) In Shak. Comedy of Errors, ii. 1. 92. = F. voluble, 'voluble, easily rolled, turned, or tumbled; hence, fickle, . . . glib.' Cot. = Lat. volubilis, acc. of volubilis, easily turned about; formed with suffix -ilis from volvo, as seen in volutus, pp. of volvare, to roll, turn about. + Goth. valujan, to roll. + Gk. valwos, to roll. β. 'The final letter present in Gk. lav, Lat. volo, Goth. vater, is, as Buttman saw, a shortened reduplication.' Curtius, l. 448. That is, the base WALW is short for WAL-WAL, to keep on turning, and so to roll round and round. γ. The shorter base WAL occurs in Lithuan. waliti, to roll, Russ. valito, to roll, Skt. val, to move to and fro; further, the older v (for l) occurs in Skt. vara, a circle (cited by Curtius), which may be compared with Skt. valaya, a circle. = WAL = WAR, to turn round; Fick, l. 776. Der. volubly, volubility; also (from Lat. volvare), voluit (2), vol-uma, vol-ute, circum-volvo, con-volvo, con-volvo, con-volvo, de-volve, o-volve, o-volve, in-volve, in-volve, in-volve, re-volve, re-volve, re-volve. From the same root are valve, gallop, goal, vale, pot-wall-aper, halis, halo.

VOLUME, a roll, a book, tome. (F., = L.) M. E. volume, Chaucer, C. T. 6263. = F. volume, 'a volume, tome, book.' Cot. = Lat. volumentum, a roll, scroll; hence, a book written on a parchment roll. = Lat. volvo, as seen in volutus, pp. of volvare, to roll. See Voluble. Der. volume, volume, Milton, P. R. iv. 384, from Lat. volumentum, full of rolls or folds, from volvare, stem of volvare; volumentum.

VOLUNTARY, willing, acting by choice. (F., = L.) Spelt voluntarie in Levins, ed. 1570. = F. volontaire, also spelt volontaire, 'voluntary, willing, free, of his own accord.' Cot. = Lat. voluntarius, voluntary. = Lat. voluntas, free will. Formed, with suffix -arius, from a present participial form volens°, a variant of volens, willing, from volo, I will. infra. volo. + Gk. voluntas (= βόλ-ουμα), I will. + Skt. vol, to select, choose. = WAR, to believe, choose, will (Fick, iii. 771); orig. the same as WAR, to guard, take care (id. 770). See Will, Wary. Der. voluntarily, voluntarily; also voluntar, Drayton, Miseries of Qu. Margaret, st. 177, from F. volontaire (used as a sb.), a voluntary, one that serves without pay or compulsion. Cot.; hence voluntar, verb. And see vol-uptu-ous, vol-ition; hence volunt, volo-volunt.

VOLUPTUOUS, sensual, given up to pleasure. (F., = L.) M. E. voluptuous, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1573. [Gower has voluptuous, sb., C. A. iii. 280. l. 90.] = F. voluptueux, 'voluptuous.' Cot. = Lat. voluptuosus, full of pleasure. = Lat. voluptus, akin to voluptas, pleasure. = Lat. volupte, adv., agreeably. = Lat. vol-o, I wish; volo, to wish; see Voluntary. Der. voluptuously, voluptuous; voluptuous-ly, from Lat. voluptuosus, voluptuosus, devoted to pleasure.

VOLUTE, a spiral scroll on a capital. (F., = L.) Spelt volute in Phillips, which is the Lat. form. = F. volute, 'the rolling shell of a snail; also, the written circle that hangs over the chapter of a pillar.' Cot. = Lat. voluta, a volute (Vitruvius). Orig. fem. of volvare, pp. of volvare, to roll; see Voluble. Der. voluted.

VOMIT, matter rejected by, and thrown up from the stomach. (L.) M. E. vomit, vomyte, sb.; Prompt. Parv. Palsgrave has vomyt, verb. = Lat. vomitus, a vomiting, vomit; whence vomitare, to vomit often. = Lat. vomitus, pp. of vomere, to vomit. + Gk. ispiv, to vomit. + Skt. vam, to vomit, spit out. + Lithuan. vomti. = WAM, to spit out; Fick, l. 769. Der. vomit, vb.; vomit-ary, causing to vomit. And see em-it-is.

VORACITY, eagerness to devour. (F., = L.) In Cotgrave. = F. voracité, 'voracity.' Cot. = Lat. voracitatem, acc. of voracitas, hungriness. = Lat. voraci, crude form of vorax, greedy to devour. = Lat. vorax, to devour. = Lat. vorax, adj., devouring; only in compounds, such as canini-vorax, flesh-devouring. β. The Lat. vorax stands for gaurus°, from an older gauris°, as shewn by the allied Skt. -gaur, devouring, as seen in gaur-gara, a box constrictor, lit. 'goat-devouring,' from gaur, a goat, and gri, to devour. Cf. also Gk. βόρῃς, gluttonous, βόρῃς, meat, βιβλίωσις, to devour. = GAR, to swallow down; Fick, l. 562. Der. voraci-ous, from Lat. voraci-, crude form of vorax, greedy to devour; voraci-ous-ly. From the same root are gargle, gorge, gullet, gules, gully, gurgle. Also gramini-vorax, cani-vorax, omni-vorax, &c., also de-vor.

VORTEX, a whirlpool, whirlwind. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. vortex (also vortex), a whirlpool, whirl, eddy. = Lat. vortex, to turn, whirl; see Verse. The pl. is vortexes, as in Latin.

VOTE, an ardent wish, the expression of a decided wish or opinion, expressed decision. (L.) In Selden, Table-talk, Bishops in the Parliament, § 4. = Lat. votum, a wish; orig. a vow. = Lat. votum, neut. of votus, pp. of vovare, to vow; see Vow. Der. vot-ive, from Lat. votum, promised by a vow; votiv-ly. Also vot-ary, a coined word, L. L. L. ii. 37; vot-ary-ess, Pericles, iv. prol. 4; vot-ress, Mida. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 123; vot-er-ist, Timon, iv. 3. 27.

VOUCH, to warrant, attest, affirm strongly. (F., = L.) M. E. vouchen, Gower, C. A. ii. 34, l. 6. = O. F. voucher, 'to vouch, cite, pray in aid or call unto aid, in a suit.' Cot. Marked by Cotgrave as a Norman word. = Lat. vocare, to call, call upon, summon. = Lat. vor-, stem of vovare, the voice; see Voices. Der. vouch-er; vouch-er-ly, q. v.

VOUCHSAFE, to vouch or warrant safe, sanction or allow without danger, condescend to grant. (F., = L.) Merely due to the plur. vouch safe, i. e. vouch or warrant as safe, guarantee, grant. The two words were run together into one. M. E. vouchen safe, or vouch. 'The kyng vouchen it safe.' Rob. of Brunne, tr of Langtoft, p. 260. 'Vouchen safe' has some hire wedde; Will. of Palerne, 1449; 'safe wol I fonde.' id. 4152. See Vouch and Safe.

VOW, a solemn promise. (F., = L.) M. E. vow, vow; pl. vowes, P. Plowman, B. prol. 69. [The M. E. vow is commoner; it is a compound word, with prefix v- (= Lat. ad), but is frequently misprinted vow; Tyrwhitt rightly has 'mna vowes.' Chaucer, C. T. 2329; 'this vowes.' id. 2416.] = O. F. vow, vow, vow (mod. F. vow), a vow. = Lat. votum, a vow, lit. 'a thing vowed; neut. of votus, pp. of vovare, to promise, to vow. Root uncertain. Der. vow, verb, M. E. vowen, Prompt. Parv.; vow-er, q. v. Also (from Lat. votum), vot.

VOWEL, a simple vocal sound; the letter representing it. (F., = L.) Spelt vowel in Levins, ed. 1570; and in Palsgrave, b. l. c. 2. = F. voyelle, 'a vowel.' Cot. = Lat. vocalis, acc. of vocalis (acc. vocalis), a vowel. Fem. of vocalis, adj. sounding, vocal. = Lat. vor-, stem of vovare, a voice; see Voices.

VOYAGE, a journey, passage by water. (F., = L.) M. E. viage, Chaucer, C. T. 4679, 4720; voyage, Kob. of Glouc. p. 300, l. 16. The later form voyage answers to the 16th cent. spelling of the F. word. = O. F. voyage (Burguy), later voyage, 'voyage.' Cot. = Lat. viaticum, provisions for a journey, money or other requisites for a journey; whence also Ital. viaggio, Span. viage, Prov. viage; see DuCange. = Lat. viaticum, belonging to a journey. = Lat. via, a way, journey, cognate with E. way; see Viaduct and Way. Der. voyage, verb, from F. voyager, 'to travel, goe a voyage.' Cot.; voyager. Also (from Lat. via), via-duct, and related words given under Viaduct.

VULCANISE, to combine caustic with sulphur, by heat. (L.; with F. vulsa.) Modern. Formed with suffix -ise (F. -iser), from Gk. -ισα from Vulcan, god of fire, hence fire; see Volcano. Der. vulcan-ite, vulcanised caustic.

VULGAR, used by the common people, native, common, mean, rude. (F., = L.) In Cor. i. 1. 319. = F. vulgaire, 'vulgar, common.' Cot. = Lat. vulgare, vulgar. = Lat. vulgus, the common people; also spelt vulgas. The lit. sense is 'a throng, a crowd;' allied to Skt. varga, a troop, varga, a flock, herd, multitude, from vri, to exclude. = WARG, to press; Fick, l. 773. Allied to Verge (2) and Urga. Der. vulgar, sb., L. L. L. i. 2. 51, from F. vulgaire, sb., Cot.; vulgar-ly, vulgar-ous, vulgar-ism, vulgar-ty. Also vulg-ate, the E. name for the Latin version of the Bible known as the Edith vulgate (see publications of the Parker Society, &c.); where vulgata is the fem. of vulgatus, pp. of vulgare, to make public, to publish.

VULNERABLE, liable to injury. (L.) In Mach. v. 8. 11. = Lat. vulnerabilis, wounding, likely to injure; but also (taken in the pass. sense) vulnerable (in late Latin). = Lat. vulnerare, to wound. =

Lat. vulnus, stem of vulnus, a wound. Allied to vellere (pt. t. vul-s), to pluck, pull, tear. + Skt. vroma, a wound, fracture. = $\sqrt{\text{WAR}}$, to tear, break; Fick, i. 772; whence, by extension, Skt. vardā, to cut, also Gk. ψύωμι, I break. Der. vulnus-er-y, from F. vulnereuse, 'vulnerary, healing wounds,' Cot., from Lat. vulnerearius, suitable for wounds. And see vul-ture.

VULPINE, fox-like, cunning. (F., = L.) 'The slyness of a vulpine craft;' Feltham, pt. i. Res. s (R.) Blount, ed. 1674. has: 'Vulpinate, to play the fox.' = F. vulpin, 'fox-like.' Cot. = Lat. vulpinus, fox-like. = Lat. vulpis, crude form of vulpes, a fox; with suffix -inus. Root unknown; we cannot fairly compare it with E. wolf, for that word is represented in Latin by lupus; nor is it certainly the same as Gk. λύωμι, a fox; see Curtius, i. 466. Perhaps allied to vulture, q. v.

VULTURE, a large bird of prey. (L.) In Mach. iv. 3. 74. M. E. vultur, Wyclif, Job, xxviii. 7, later version. = Lat. vultur, a vulture; lit. 'a plucker' or 'tearer.' = Lat. vul-, as seen in vul-s, pt. t. of vellere, to pluck; with suffix -tur (= Aryan -tar) denoting the agent. See Vulnerable. Der. vultur-ine, from Lat. vulturinus, vulture-like.

WA-WE.

WABBLE, WOBBLE, to reel, move unsteadily. (E.) 'Wabble, to vacillate, reel, waver;' Brockett. A weakened form of wabble, equivalent to prov. E. wapper, 'to move tremulously, Somerus;' Halliwell. Both wabble and wapper are derivatives of wap in the sense 'to flutter, beat the wings' (Halliwell), whence also wapping, quaking, used by Batman, 1581 (id.) There are several verbs which take the form wap, but the one now under consideration is properly wap, a by-form of M. E. waspan, to palpitate; see QUAVER. Cf. quabble, a bog, quagmire (Halliwell). So also Low G. wabbeln or quabbeln, to wobble. See Whap.

WACKE, a kind of soft rock. (G.) Modern; geological = G. wacke, 'a sort of stone, consisting of quartz, sand, and mica;' Flügel. M. H. G. wacke, a large stone.

WAD, a small bundle of stuff, a little mass of tow, &c. (Scand.) Nares cites 'a wadde of hay,' a bundle of hay, from the poet Taylor's Works, 1630. 'Make it [rapines] into wads or bottles;' Holland, tr. of Plaut, b. xvii. c. 9; cf. the phrase 'a bottle of hay.' = Swed. wadd, wadding; O. Swed. wad, clothing, cloth, stuff (Ihre); Icel. wadr, stuff, only in the comp. wadmal, a plain woollen stuff, wadmal; Dan. wad, wadding. + G. watte, wadding, wad, a large fishing-net; cf. watten, to dress cloth, to wad; also wad, cloth (Flügel). β. The stuff called wadmal was formerly well known in England; in Arnold's Chronicle (repr. 1811), p. 236, we find, among imports, notice of 'Rollyn of wadmal' and 'course [course] wadmal.' Halliwell gives: 'Wadmal, a very thick coarse kind of woollen cloth; coarse tow used by doctors for cattle is also so called.' It is highly probable that our wad is nothing but a shortened form of wadmal in the sense of coarse tow, or coarse stuff, instead of being borrowed from the O. Swed. wad. It brings us, however, ultimately, to the same result. The Icel. wadr properly means 'a fishing-line,' such as the G. watte means a fishing-net. The Icel. wadmal is certainly allied to Icel. wad, wad, a piece of stuff, cloth as it leaves the loom, which is again allied to E. wad, a garment, as used in the phr. 'a widow's wads.'

γ. Thus, whilst it is obviously impossible to derive wad from A. S. wadd, a garment (which became E. wadd), it is certain that we may refer both wad and E. wad to the same root, viz. the Teut. base WAD, to bind, wind together (Fick, iii. 284). This base accounts for the various senses, viz. wad, stuff wound together, Icel. wad, stuff bound or woven together, G. watte, a fishing-net (because twined together), and Icel. wadr, a fishing-line (because twisted together). See further under Wood (2). 8. The Russ. wata, F. watte, wadding, Span. hacha, Ital. ovatta, are all of Teut. origin, the last form being due to an attempt to give it a sense from Ital. ova, an egg. It is quite unnecessary to suppose (as Diez, not very confidently, suggests) that the whole set of words allied to wad are derived from the Lat. ovum, an egg. His difficulty was due to the difficulty of connecting Ital. ovata with O. H. G. wat, a weed, or garment, from which it appears (at first sight) to differ widely in sense. But the solution is, to derive ovata from G. watte, not from wat itself. Der. wadd-ug; wad-mal, as above. And see wallet and wattle.

WADDLE, to walk with short steps and unwieldy gait. (E.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 3. 37. The frequentative of Wade, q. v. The A. S. wadlian, to beg (Lake, xvi. 3), is the same word; the orig. sense being to rove about, to go on the tramp. Der. waddler.

WADE, to walk slowly, esp. through water. (E.) M. E. waden, Chaucer, C. T. 9558. = A. S. wadan, pt. t. wad, to wade, trudge, go;

'wadan ofer wealdas,' to trudge over the woods, Genesis, ed. Grein, 2886; see Grein, ii. 636. + Du. waden, to wade, ford. + Icel. wada, strong verb, pt. t. wad, to wade, to rush through; whence wad, sb., a ford. + Dan. wade. + Swed. wada. + O. H. G. watan, pt. t. wat; the mod. G. waten is only a weak verb, derived from the sb. wat, a ford; Fick, iii. 285.

β. All from the Teut. base WAD, to go, press through, make one's way; Fick (as above). As the Teut. verbs are strong, we are quite sure they are not merely borrowed from Lat. wadere, to go; neither is Icel. wad, G. wat, a ford, merely borrowed from Lat. wadum.

γ. At the same time, the Lat. wadere is clearly an allied word, where d prob. stands for an orig. da. 'Since the Lat. d can . . . be the representative of a da = Gk. θ, and since, moreover, wadum corresponds in sound to the Skt. gadhām of precisely equivalent meaning, which in the St. Petersburg Dict. is derived from the root gadhā, to stand fast, get a firm footing, it will be better to regard it as one of the numerous dh expansions of the root ga, to go. This is also Cornen's opinion (Beitrage, 59);' Curtius, ii. 74. Cf. Skt. gadhā, adj. shallow, prop. wherein one may get a footing; sb. the bottom; Bentley.

δ. If this be right, the base is GADH (whence GWADH, WADH), an extension of $\sqrt{\text{GA}}$, to go. See Coma, from the base GAM (whence GWAM), extended from the same root. Der. wadd-le, q. v.; wad-er; and compare (from Lat. wadere) s-wade, is-wade, per-wade.

(F., = O. Low G.) M. E. wafre, pl. wafres, Chaucer, C. T. 3379; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 271. We find Low Lat. gafros glossed by wafros, in John de Garlande; Wright's Voc. i. 126, l. 14. = O. F. wafre, mod. F. gaufre, a wafer. The form wafre occurs in a quotation, dated 1433, given by Roquefort in his Supplement, s. v. Audier. The more usual O. F. form was gafre, or goffre, in which g is substituted for the orig. w. In this quotation we have mention of un fer a wafres, an iron on which to bake wafers.

β. The word is of Low G. origin; Hexham gives O. Du. wafel, 'a wafer;' wafel-ijzer, 'a wafer-iron to bake wafers in,' of which fer a wafres is a translation; mod. Du. wafel, a wafer, wafel-ijzer, a wafer-iron. So also Low G. wafels, pl. wafers; wafel-ijzen, a wafer-iron. Webster's Dict. actually gives wafels and wafel-ijzen as E. words; they are obviously borrowed from Dutch immediately; no authority for them is offered. Cf. also G. wafel, a wafer, wafel-mann, a wafer-iron, honey-comb-cockle or checkered Venus-shell (Flügel); Dan. waffel, Swed. waffla.

γ. The wafel (often, I believe, flavoured with honey) was named from its resemblance to a piece of honey-comb or cake of wax in a bee-hive; from a Low G. form cognate with G. wabe, a honey-comb, cake of wax, a derivative from the Teut. base WAB, to weave, Fick, iii. 289; the comb constructed by the bees being, as it were, woven together. The f appears in Icel. waf, a wafer, Swed. waf, a web, A. S. wafan, to weave; see Weave. This accounts for the spelling with af (in Hexham) of the O. Du. word; the form wafel is a dimin. (with the usual suffix -el, and with a modified vowel) from an older form waffe or wafle, cognate with G. wabe.

Der. wafel-er, verb; wafel-er, a wafer-seller, Chaucer, C. T. 12413; M. E. wafel-estre, a female wafer-seller, P. Plowman, B. v. 641.

WAFT, to bear along through air or water. (E.) 'Neither was it thought that they should get any passage at all, till the ships at Middleborough were returned, . . . by the force wherof they might be the more strongly wafed over;' Hackluy's Voyages, l. 175. Shak. has it in several senses; (1) to beckon, as by a wave of the hand, Merch. Ven. v. 11; Timon, i. 1. 70; (2) to turn quickly, Wint. Tale, i. 3. 372; (3) to carry or send over the sea, K. John, ii. 73, 3 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 114, 116; 3 Hen. VI, iii. 3. 253; v. 7. 41. He also has wafstags, passage by water, Com. Errors, iv. 1. 95; wafstare (old edd. wafster), the waving of the hand, a gesture, Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 246. We must also note, that Shak. has wafst both for the pt. t. and pp.; see Merch. Ven. v. 11; K. John, ii. 73. [Rich. cites wafst as a pt. t., occurring in Gamelyn, 785, but the best MSS. have fast; so that this is nothing to the point.] β. The word wafst is not old, and does not occur in M. E.; it seems to be nothing but a variant of wave, used as a verb, formed by taking the pt. t. waved (corrupted to wafst by rapid pronunciation), as the infinitive mood of a new verb. This is by no means an isolated case; by precisely the same process we have mod. E. hoast, due to hoast, pt. t. of Tudor Eng. hoise, and mod. E. grast, due to grast, pt. t. of Tudor Eng. graff; while Spencer actually writes wafst and wafst instead of Wafst, q. v. By way of proof, we should notice the exact equivalence of waved and wafst in the following passages. 'Yet towards night a great sort [number of people] came downe to the water-side, and waved us on shoars [beckoned as ashore] with a white flag;' Hackluy's Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 34 (also on p. 33). 'And wafst [beckoned] her love To come againe to Carthage;' Merch. Ven. v. 11. And again, we must particularly note Lowland Sc. waf, to wave, shake, fluctuate, and as a sb., a hasty motion, the act of waving, a signal made by waving (Jamieson); this is merely the Northern form of wave. In Gawain Douglas's translation of Virgil (Æneid, l. 319), we have, in the edition of 1839, 'With wynd waving his hairis lowsit of trees,' where another edition (cited by Wedgwood) has waving. So also, in Barbour's Bruce, ix. 245, xi. 193, 513, we have the forms wafand, wafand, wawand, all meaning 'waving,' with reference to banners waving in the wind.

γ. We thus see that waf is due to waf or wawed, pt. t. of waf or waw; cf. Icel. wafa, to swing, vibrate, and see further under Wave. ¶ This is the right explanation; the reference to Swed. wafa, which only means to fan, to winnow, is unnecessary, though this word is certainly allied, being a secondary formation from the base waf, to wave, as seen in Icel. wifa (above), and in wafa, wafa, to waver. Der. waf-aga, waf-ara, as above; waf, sb., waf-er.

WAG, to move from side to side, shake to and fro. (Scand.) M. E. waggen, introduced (probably) as a Northern word as Chaucer, C. T. 4037; but also in P. Plowman, B. viii. 31, xvi. 41. Earlier, in Havelok, 89. = O. Swed. wagga, to wag, fluctuate; whence wagga, a cradle, wagga, to rock a cradle (Ihre); Swed. wagga, a cradle, or as verb, to rock a cradle. Cf. Icel. wagga, a cradle; Dan. wagge, a cradle, also, to rock a cradle. Closely allied to A. S. wagian, to move, vacillate, rock (Grein, ii. 637), which became M. E. wawen, and could not have given the mod. form wag. In Wyclif, Luke, vii. 25, the later version has 'waggid with the wynd,' where the earlier version has wawid.

β. The A. S. wagian is a secondary weak verb, from the strong verb wagan (pt. t. wag, pp. wagen), to bear, move, carry (waiþa). Grein, ii. 658; and similarly the O. Swed. wagga is from the Teut. base WAG (Aryan WAGH), to carry; see Wedge, Waggon. Der. wag, sb., a droll fellow, L. L. L. v. 2. 108, as to which Wedgwood plausibly suggests that it is an abbreviation for wag-baller, once a common term for a roguish or galloway-bird, one who is likely to wag in a baller; see Nares; and cf. 'little young wags... these are lackies;' Holinshed, Descrip. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 68. Hence waggi-ish, waggi-ly, waggi-er (formed like hoo-er). Also waggi-ly, q. v.; wag-tail, q. v.; wag-moira, a quarrel, Spenser, Shep. Kal. Sept. 130. And see wedge, wing.

WAGE, a gage, pledge, stake, pay for service; pl. Wages, pay for service. (F., - Teut.) M. E. wage, usually in the sense of pay, Rob. of Brunne, p. 319, l. 17; for which the pl. wages occurs only two lines above. 'Wage, or byre. Stipendium, salarium;' Prompt. Parv. We now usually employ the word in the plural. = O. F. wage, also gage, a gage, pledge, guarantee (Burguy); hence it came to mean a stipulated payment. The change from initial w to g (and even, as here, to g) is not uncommon in O. F. A verbal sb. from O. F. wage, gager, gagier, to pledge. = Low Lat. wadhans, to pledge. = Low Lat. wadhans, or wadhans, a pledge = Goth. wadi, a pledge; whence gawadjan, to pledge. β. The Low Lat. wadhans may be almost equally well derived from Lat. wad (gen. wadus), a pledge; but the O. F. w answers rather to Teut. w than to Lat. w, which usually became v. γ. However, it makes no ultimate difference, since the Lat. wad (crude form wadh-) and Goth. wadi are cognate words; neither being borrowed from the other. The similarity of spelling is due to the fact that the Lat. w, in the middle of a word, often stands for dh, and the true crude form of wad is wadh-; see Curtius, l. 309. And see Wed. Der. wage, verb, M. E. wagen, to engage or go bail, P. Plowman, B. iv. 97, from O. F. wager, verb, as above. Also wag-er, q. v.; wag-er, q. v. Doublet, gag (1). ¶ To wage war was formerly to declare war, engage in it, not merely to carry it on, as now; cf. the phr. 'wager of battle;' see Wedgwood.

WAGER, a pledge, bet, something staked upon a chance. (F., - Teut.) M. E. wager, Assembly of Ladies, st. 35, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 259; spelt wagour, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 219, l. 19, in a song dated 1306. = O. F. wagours, orig. form of O. F. gagours, 'a wager,' Cot. = Low Lat. wadhans, sb. formed from the pp. of wadhans, to pledge, also to wager (as shown by Wedgwood); see Wage. Der. wagor, verb, Haml. iv. 7. 135; wagour.

WAGGLE, to wag frequently. (Scand.) Shak. has wagging, Much Ado, ii. 1. 119. The frequentative of Wag, q. v. Another frequentative form (with -er instead of -al or -le) appears in M. E. waggon, to tremble, in Wyclif, Eccles. xii. 3, early version; the later version has tremble.

WAGON, WAGGON, a wain, a vehicle for goods. (Da.) The spelling with double g merely serves to show that the vowel a is short. We find the spelling waggon in Romeo, l. 4. 59 (ed. 1623); wagun, Spenser, F. Q. l. 5. 28. The word is not very old, and not E., being borrowed from Dutch. (The E. form is wain.) The earliest quotation is probably the following: 'they tressed all their harness in wagons;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 62 (R.) = Da. wagun, 'a wagon, or a wain,' Hexham. † A. S. wagon, a wain; see Wain.

¶ The mod. F. wagen is borrowed from English. Doublet, wain. Der. waggon-er, Romeo, l. 4. 64.

WAGTAIL, the name of a bird. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) In King Lear, ii. 2. 73; and in Palgrave. Formerly called a wag-wart (wart meaning tail); M. E. wagstert, Wright's Voc. l. 253, col. 1. From Wag and Tail. Cf. Swed. wipstjert, a wagstert or wagtail; from wippa, to wag.

WAIF, anything found astray without an owner. (F., - Scand.) M. E. wais, wais; the pl. is waynes or waynes (with s = v), P. Plowman, B. prol. 94; C. l. 92. A Norman-French law-term. = O. F. wais, later gais, pl. waynes, gaynes. Roquefort gives gais, a thing lost and not claimed; chass gaires, things lost and not claimed; also wayne, a waif, which is not a true form, but evolved from a pl. form waynes, of which the sing would be wais or wais. Cotgrave has: 'Chass gaires, weifes, things forsaken, miscarried, or lost,' &c. Wais is an old Norman-French term, and of Norse origin. = Icel. waf, anything flapping about, applied, e. g. to the fin of a seal; wafas, a moving about uncertainly, whence wafasars-ord, 'a word of wafting,' a rumour; wafa, to vibrate, move about, whence waf-shaft, a spendthrift, lit. one who squanders coin. β. It is quite clear that the O. Icel. s was sounded as E. s, and the Icel. wafa is the source of E. wais; but it is not clear whether wais is due to the verb wafas, or whether, conversely, wais was formed (at second-hand) from waf instead of from Icel. wafa directly. It makes little ultimate difference.

γ. It would appear, however, that the Icel. wafa had once a more extended use than is recorded in Cleasby and Vigfusson's Dictionary; Egilsson assigns to it the senses of uttering or scattering words, and of publishing or making poems public. The orig. sense seems to have been merely to vibrate or toss about; thence it seems to have acquired a sense of free movement or loose tossing; cf. Norw. wais, to swing about. A wais is a thing tossed loosely about, and then abandoned. See further under Waive. δ. We may also note that Spenser writes wais, F. Q. iv. 12. 31; wais, id. v. 3. 17, where the t is an original (just as in wais), and due to the pp. waised. ¶ The E. wais (from wais) is a different word. So also is wais, though constantly confused with wais, when used as a verb.

WAIL, to lament. (Scand.) M. E. wailen, wailen, Chaucer, C. T. 1297; Wyclif, Matt. xxiv. 30. = Icel. waila (formerly waila), to wail; also spelt wala, mod. Icel. wala. Orig. 'to cry woe'; from wa, wai, woe! used as an interjection; cf. the curious M. E. waymouthe, to lament, Prompt. Parv., formed from the same interjection with the F. suffix -mouthe, and apparently imitated from Lat. lammor. † Ital. gugliata, gugliata, to wail, cry woe; from gugli, woe! a word of Teut. origin; cf. Goth. wai, woe! See Wo. Der. wail-er.

WAIN, a waggon, vehicle for goods. (E.) M. E. wain; written wain, Rob. of Glouc. p. 416, l. 9. = A. S. wagon, a wain; also used in the contracted form wain, Grein, ii. 644. † Du. wagon (whence E. wagon was borrowed in the 15th or 16th century); O. Sax. wagan. † Icel. wagn. † Dan. wagn. † Swed. wagn. † G. wagen, O. H. G. wagan. β. The A. S. wagon soon passed into the form wain by the loss of g, just as A. S. wegan became we, mod. E. we; cf. hail, wait, tail, in which g similarly disappears; so also E. day from A. S. dag, &c. Hence it is quite impossible to consider wagon as a true E. word. γ. All the above forms are from Teut. WAG-NA, a wain, carriage; Fick, iii. 283; from Teut. base WAG, to carry = Aryan WAGH, to carry, whence E. vehicle. From the same root we have Lat. wag-inum, Skt. wag-va, Gk. εγ-ωα, a car, Russ. wag, a load. See Vehicle. Doublet, wagon or waggon.

WAINSCOT, panelled boards on the walls of rooms. (Da.) In Shak. As You Like It, iii. 3. 88. Applied to any kind of panelled work. I find: 'a tabyll of wainscot with [two] joynd trussellis;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 115, in a will dated 1522; also 'a rownde tabyll of wainscot with lok and key,' id. p. 116; also 'a brode chest of wainscot,' id. p. 117. Still earlier, I find wainscot in what appears to be a list of imports; Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 236, l. 4. Hackluyt even retains something of the Da. spelling, where he speaks of 'boards [boards] called wagwain;' Voyages, i. 173. = Du. wagyn-schot, 'waincot'; Hexham. Low G. wagwain, the best kind of oak-wood, well-grained and without knots. Cf. Low G. béwain, the best kind of beech-wood, without knots (in which the former part of the word is Low G. béw, beech, adj. formed from béw, a beech. (We must here remark that E. wainscot, in the building trade, is applied to the best kind of oak-timber only, used for panelling because it would not 'cast' or warp; see Wainscot in Trench, Select Glossary.) β. We must, before proceeding, keep clear of the notion, so often insisted on, that the word is connected with A. S. wad, a wall. The use of wain was not, originally, for walls, as may easily appear on investigation; and, phonetically, the A. S. wad became wage or wais in M. E., in which the resemblance to wainscot does not extend beyond the letter w. Besides, the word is Dutch, in which language the old equivalent of A. S. weð was O. Du. wegh (E. Müller) γ. A glance at Hexham's Da. Dict. will show 24 compounds beginning with wegon, in which wegon = E. wein; so also Low G. wegon means 'a waif or wagon'. The Da. weð (like E. weð) has numerous senses, of which one is 'a closure of boards,' Hexham. It also meant 'a shot, a cast, or a throw, the flosse, revenue or rent, gain or money, a shot or score to pay for any things,' id. Sewel also explains weð by 'a wainscot, partition, a stop put to anything, the pace (of a ship), a hog-sty.' We may also remember that Da. wegon means a carriage or coach as well as a wagon. β. The orig. sense would appear to be wood used for a board or partition in a coach or wagon, which seems to have been selected of the best quality; thence it came to mean boards for panel-work, and lastly, panelling for walls, esp. oak-panelling, once so much in vogue. α. As to the etymology, there can be no doubt; the Da. wegon is cognate with E. wein; and the Da. weð is cognate with E. weð, used in many senses. Thus wein-weð is exactly composed of the Da. equivalents of E. wein and E. weð. See WAIN and SHOT. ¶ Sewel does indeed explain Da. weeg by 'wainscot,' but this is an equivalent meaning, not an etymology; he also explains weg by 'houe wand,' i. e. wooden wall, without meaning that weg is the same word as wand. The O. Frisian word for 'wall' is wand (Richtofen). Der. weiner-t, verb.

WAIST, the middle part of the human body, or of a ship. (E.) Spelt waist in Palgrave. M. E. waist, called waiste of a manys wyddel or waist of the medyl in Prompt. Parv. The dat. waiste is in Gower, C. A. ii. 373, l. 13. The right sense is 'growth,' hence the thick part or middle of the body, where the size of a man is developed; we find the spelling waiste (dat. case) with the sense of 'strength,' in O. Eng. Homilies, l. 77, l. 3. It answers to a A. S. form waist or waist, not found, though the nearly related waesta, growth, also fruct. produce, is a very common word; see Grein, ii. 650. Indeed, the A. S. waesta became waesta, waesta in later English, and it is by no means improbable that the mod. E. waist is really the same word, with loss of the latter syllable, which may have been mistaken for a mere inflection. In Genesis and Exodus, 1910, Joseph is described as being 'bricest of waesta,' certainly miswritten (in the MS.) for 'bricest of waesta,' i. e. fairest of form or shape, 'well-waisted.' = A. S. waesta, to grow, to wax; whence A. S. waest like E. waist from A. S. waesta, to blow, and A. S. waesta like Waesta (E. Waesta) from Waesta, to flourish. See WAX (1). So also Goth. waista, growth, increase, stature, from waistjan, to grow; Icel. waista, stature, also shape, from wasa, to grow; Dan. waist, Swed. wäst, growth, size. Der. waist-band; waist-coat, spelt waist-coats in Brownie, Britannia's Pastorals, h. l. a. g. l. 106 from the end.

WAIT, to watch, stay in expectation, abide, lie in ambush. (F. = O. H. G.) M. E. waiten, P. Plowman, B. v. 303; Havelok, 512. = O. F. waiter, waiter (Roquefort, with a quotation), also waiter, waiter (Burguy), later waiter, 'to watch, ward, mark, heed, note, dog, stalk after, lie in wait for;' Cot. A denominative verb. = O. F. waiter, waiter (Burguy), a guard, sentinel, watchman or spy; later wait, 'watch, ward, heed, also the watch, or company appointed to watch;' Cot. = O. H. G. waita, M. H. G. waita, G. waita, a guard, watch; whence was formed G. waiter, a watchman. (The Icel. waita, to watch, is merely borrowed from G., not a true Scand. word.) β. The sb. waiter is lit. 'a watching,' or 'a being awake;' formed with suffix -er, as in O. H. G. and Goth. waiter, rest. = O. H. G. waita, G. waita, to be brisk, to be awake; cognate with A. S. waesta, weak verb, to watch, and closely allied to A. S. waesta, to wake; see WATCH and WAKE. Der. wait-er, M. E. waiter, a watchman, Wyclif, 4 Kings, lx. 17 (one MS. of later version). Also wait, sb., chiefly in the phr. 'to lie in wait,' Acts, xiii. 31; the M. E. waite properly signifies a watchman or spy, as in Cursor Mundi, 12541, from O. F. waiter, as above, and is really an older word than the verb, as above shown; it only remains to us in the phrase 'the Christmas waite,' where a waite is 'one who is awake,' for the purpose of playing music at night; cf. 'Wayte, a spy; Wayte, waker, Vigil,' Prompt. Parv. 'Assunt etiam exebat vigiles [glossed by O. F. waites volubiles], cornibus suis strpitam et clangorem et sonitum facientes;' Wright's Voc. l. 106, l. 1. Also wait-ing, wait-ing-woman, K. Lear, iv. 1. 65.

WAIVE, to relinquish, abandon a claim. (F. = Scand.) Chiefly in the phr. 'to waive a claim,' as in Cotgrave (see below). M. E. waiven, waiven (with v = w), a difficult and rather vague word, chiefly in the sense 'to act aside' or 'shun,' also 'to remove' or 'push aside;' see P. Plowman, B. v. 611 (where the MS. may be read waive); id. B. ix. 167; Chaucer, C. T. 4728, 9357, 10298, 17127, 17344, Troil. ii. 284; Gower, C. A. i. 276, l. 5. = O. F. waiver, not recorded, though it must have been common in old statutes; later waiver, 'to waive, refuse, abandon, give over, surrender, resign;' Cot. The O. F. waif, sb., is given by Roquefort in the form waive, though he probably really met with it in the pl. form waives; since he also records the form waif, pl. waives, where g stands for an older w. Ducange gives Low Lat. waivare, to waive, abandon, waivare, a waif, or a beast without an owner, waivare, adj., abandoned as a waif, which are merely Latinised forms of the F. words; and he remarks that these words are of common occurrence.

β. It is not quite clear whether waif is from waivare, or waivare from waif, but they are closely allied, and of Norman, i. e. Norse origin. = Icel. waifa, to vibrate, swing about, move to and fro in a loose way; Norw. waive, to swing about. Hence the sense 'to go loose;' much as in the mod. E. slang phrase to hang about, and in E. Asser. ¶ O. H. G. waiba, M. H. G. waiben, waiben, to fluctuate, swing about. γ. The Teut. type is WAIBYAN, to fluctuate, hover (Fick, iii. 302); from the Teut. WIB, to vibrate, answering to Aryan WIP, to vibrate, swing about; see VIBRATE. And see WAIF. Distinct from waive, despite some similarity in the sense; but the words have been confused.

WAKE (1), to cease from sleep, be brisk. (E.) M. E. waken, strong verb, pt. t. wakod, Chaucer, C. T. Group A, 1393 (Six-text); where Tyrwhitt, l. 1395, prints wakod; also waken, weak verb, to keep awake, pp. wakod, Havelok, 2999. Corresponding to these verbs, we should now say 'he woke,' and 'he was waked.' [They are both distinct from M. E. wakam, to waken; which see under WAKEN.] = A. S. wason, to arise, come to life, be born, pt. t. wode, pp. wason; also wacian, to wake, watch, pt. t. wacode, wacode; Grein, ii. 635. ¶ Goth. wakam, pt. t. wak, pp. wakans, to wake, watch; whence wakjan, weak verb, only in comp. wakjanam, to wake from sleep. ¶ Du. waken (weak verb). ¶ Icel. waka (weak). ¶ Dan. wagne. ¶ Swed. waka. ¶ G. wakam. β. All from Teut. base WAK, to be brisk, be awake, answering to Aryan WAG, to be vigorous, whence Vigil, Vegetable, q. v. Fick, iii. 280; l. 762. Der. wake (weak verb), to rouse, answering to A. S. wacian, as above; wake, sb., a vigil, M. E. wake, Ancren Riwle, p. 314, l. 13 from bottom, from A. S. wac, occurring in the comp. wak-wacu, a night-wake, Grein, ii. 286, l. 5. Also wake-ful, Spenser, F. Q. iii. g. 7, substituted for A. S. wacod or wacod (the exact cognate of Lat. vigil), Wright's Voc. l. 46, l. 2; hence wake-ful-ly, wake-ful-ness. Also wake-er, q. v., wake, q. v.

WAKE (2), the track of a ship. (Scand.) 'Is the wake of the ship (as 'tis called), or the smoothness which the ship's passing has made on the sea;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1699 (R). 'Wake, (among seamen) is taken for that smooth water which a ship leaves astern when under sail, and is also called the ship's way;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'In Norfolk, when the broads [large farms] are mostly frozen over, the spaces of open water are called wakes;' Wedgwood. Like many other E. Anglian words, wake is of Scand. origin. It was originally applied to an open space in half-frozen water, and esp. to the passage cut for a ship in a frozen lake or sea; thence it was easily transferred to denote the smooth watery track left behind a ship (that had made its way through ice, and at last (by a complete forgetfulness of its true use) was applied to the smooth track left behind a vessel when there is no ice at all. And even, in prov. E., rows of green damp grass are called wakes (Hallwell). = Icel. wak (stem wak, gen. sing. and nom. pl. wakar), a hole, opening in ice; dragu þeir skiptu milli wakanna = to drag their ship between (or along) wakes (Vigfusson); Swed. wak, an opening in ice; Norw. wak, the same, whence wakja, to cut a hole in ice, 'especially to hew out a passage for ships in frozen water' (Aasen); Dan. wagne, the same. The mod. Da. wak (like E. wake) is merely borrowed from Scandinavian. The orig. sense is a 'moist' or wet place; and it is allied to Icel. vaik, moist, vaikva, to moisten, to water, vaikva, moisture, juice, whence Lowland Sc. wak, moist, watery; so also Da. wak, moist. = Teut. base WAK, to wet, answering to Aryan root WAG, to wet, whence Gk. βη-βη, Lat. β-βη, wet; see further under HUMID. β. The F. ouache, formerly also ouage, now usually amache, the wake of a ship, is clearly borrowed from English, as Littre says, though he strangely mistakes the sense of the E. word when he derives it from the verb wake, to arouse from sleep! We cannot admit, with Dies and Scheier, that the E. word is borrowed from French (!), and that the F. word is from Span. aguage, a current of water, answering to Low Lat. aquegium, from Lat. aque, water! The Span. word for wake is not aguage, but astia. γ. The connection between wake, a wet track through ice, and prov. E. wake, a row of damp grass, is now sufficiently clear. Cf. Homer's βηηη αλωδου, Od. iii. 71.

WAKEN, to awake. (E.) This verb is of considerable grammatical importance, and should be carefully studied, being one of a class not very common in mod. E., and peculiarly liable to be misunderstood. The point is, that it was orig. intransitive, whereas in Shak. it is transitive only, 3 Hen. VI. iv. 3. 19, Romeo, iii. 1. 28, iv. 4. 24, Oth. ii. 1. 188; &c. In mod. English, verbs in -en, by a singular change, are mostly transitive, such as strengthen, embolden, &c.; but this is just contrary to the usage, not only in M. E. and A. S., but in the Teut. languages generally. The subject is discussed in Grimm's Grammar, ed. 1837, iv. 23, where he shows that Goth.

wald-e, I eke, or increase, answers to Gk. αἰδάνω, whereas walden (= I eke-n) answers to Gk. αἰδάρω, in the middle voice; and there was even in Gothic a third form waldade = Gk. αἰδάρω in the passive voice. See note on AWAKEN, where a similar account is rendered. β. The M. E. form is waldan or waldmen, intransitive. 'So þat he bigan to waldan' = so that he began to waken (or be aroused from sleep), Havelok, 2164. = A. S. waldan, to arise, be aroused, be born; Grein, ii. 642. Allied to A. S. waldan, to wake; see WAKE. † Icel. walda, to become awake; allied to wada, to wake. † Swed. waldas, allied to walds. † Dan. waldes, allied to walds. † Goth. waldman, allied to waldan; whence pres. part. pl. waldmandans = becoming awake, Luke, ix. 32. Der. e-walden.

WALE, WEAL, the mark of a stroke of a rod or whip upon the flesh, a streak, a ridge, a plank along a ship's side. (E.) Sometimes spelt wahol, but a wahol is properly a blister; see WHEEL (1). 'The wales, marks, scars, and ecchymoses;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 459 (R.). 'The wales or marks of stripes and lashes;' id. p. 547 (R.). M. E. wale. 'Wale, or strype;' Prompt. Parv. 'Wyghtly on the wale [gunwale] they wye vp their ankers;' Morte Arthure, 740. = A. S. wale (pl. walds), a wail, mark of a blow, occurring 4 times in glosses (Leo). Leo accents it wald, which cannot be right, as it would then have become wald in mod. E., just as A. S. wail became wale; see MOLE (1). We also find A. S. wyrwale, properly the spreading out or stump of a root, as when the root of a tree projects from the ground, hence used for 'root' simply; cf. 'ðá plantudest wyrtrumas hys' = thou plantest his roots, Fa. lxxx. 10, ed. Spelman, where the Trinity MS. has 'ðá wyrwalodes (sic) wyrwaloda', the last word being corruptly written for wyrtruma. The orig. sense was 'rod,' hence the rounded half-buried side-shoot of a root (as above), or the raised strip or ridge caused by the blow of a rod or whip. Hence also the sense of ridge or plank along the edge of a ship, as in the comp. gun-wale, q. v. † O. Fries. wale, a rod, wand; only in the comp. waldere, waldere, a rod-bearer, a pilgrim; North Frisian wale, a staff (Ottzen). † Icel. wald (gen. waldar), a round stick, a staff. † Swed. dial. wal, a round stick, cudgel, fist-handle (Rietz). † Goth. walds, a staff; Luke, ix. 3. β. All from the Teut. type WALU, a round stick, so named from its roundness; the sense of 'rounded ridge' still lingers in mod. E. wale; cf. Russ. wal, a cylinder, waliate, to roll. = Teut. base WAL, to turn round, hence to make round; see WALK. Der. gun-wale. Doublot, gun, q. v.

WALK, to move along on foot without running. (E.) M. E. walchen, formerly a strong verb, pt. t. walk, pp. walchen. The pt. t. wald occurs in the Pricke of Conscience, ll. 4148, 4390; the pp. is spelt walche, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 923. = A. S. waldan, pt. wald, pp. waldan, to roll, to toss oneself about, rove about, Grein, i. 669. Thus the orig. sense was 'to roll,' much as in the proverb 'a rolling [moving] stone gathers no moss.' Hence the M. E. walchen, Wyclif, Mark, ix. 3 (earlier version), lit. a roller, a term applied to a fuller of cloth (from his stamping on or pressing it); A. S. waldere = Lat. fullo, Wright's Voc. ii. 38, col. 1; still common as a proper name. † Du. walchen, to work or make a hat. O. Du. walchen, 'to press, to squeeze, or to strain;' walcher, 'a fuller;' Herzam. † Icel. walka, walka, to roll, to stamp, to roll oneself, to wallow; walk, a tossing about. † Swed. walka, to roll, to fall, to work. † Dan. walka, to fall, to mill. † G. walden, to fall, O. H. G. waldhen, to fall, also to roll or turn oneself round, to move about; hence G. walcher, a fuller. β. All from Teut. base WALK, to roll about, answering to Aryan WALG, WARG, to bend round, whence Lat. walvus, bent, wargere, to bend, turn, incline, Skt. (Vedic) virji, to bend, virjana, crooked, curved; Fick, iii. 308. This WARG is an extension from WAK, to turn round, roll round, whence Skt. wal, to move to and fro, Russ. waliate, to roll, as well as the extended base WALW, as seen in Lat. walvors, to roll. See Voluble. Der. walk, sb., Tw. Nt. i. 3. 138; walk-ung-staff, Rich. II, iii. 2. 151; walk-ung-stick. Also walk-er, a fuller, P. Plowman, C. i. 222. And see wallow.

WALL, a stone fence, a fence of stone or brick, a rampart. (L.) M. E. wal, appearing as walle, Chaucer, C. T. 8923. = A. S. wald, wald, a rampart of earth, a wall of stone; Grein, ii. 671. Not by any means a Teut. word, but borrowed from the famous Lat. wallum, a rampart, whence also W. wual, a rampart, as well as Du. wal, Swed. wall, G. wall, &c. β. The Lat. wallum is a collective sb., signifying a row or line of stakes. = Lat. wallus, a stake, pale, palisade; lit. a protection. † Gk. φάρος, a nail, knob. = WARG, to protect; cf. Skt. vir, to screen, cover, surround, awarana, a protection, a lock, wal, to cover; Fick, i. 212. † The true A. S. word for 'wall' was walg, walg, or wala, Grein, ii. 643 (where the accent is wrongly omitted), whence M. E. wawle, P. Plowman, B. iii. 61 (obsolete). Der. wall, verb, M. E. wallum, Rob. of Glouce. p. 51, l. 3; wall-flower, wall-fruit; also wall-wort, K. Lear, iii. 4. 135. † No connection with wall-eyed.

WALLET, a bag for carrying necessaries, a budget. (E.) M. E. wales (with one l), Chaucer, C. T. 683; P. Plowman, C. xi. 269, where for 'bag-full' some MS. have wald-fal and others have wald-fel. In the latter passage we have the solution of the word; the M. E. wald being a corruption of wallet. In precisely the same way, walrus, used by Shakespeare for bags of flesh upon the neck (Temp. iii. 3. 46), is the same word as walrus, 'test-like excrescences that hang from the cheeks of swine,' Brockett. [For want of perceiving this fact, no one has ever been able to give the etymology of wallet; Mahn, in Webster, actually makes it the dimin. of wald (as seen in wald-bag, as if initial w and m were all one!) That wallet should turn into wald is not very surprising, for l is near akin to r, and a similar shifting of r is a common phenomenon in English, as in A. S. rieman = rimman, to run, M. E. bird = a bird, M. E. bird = a bride, &c.; so also wald, a needle, wald = wald. At any rate, the very special use of wallets = walrus = fleshy bags, proves the matter beyond question, as well as the equivalent use of wallet and wald in the MSS. of P. Plowman. β. The E. wallet commonly means 'hurdle,' but the orig. sense was merely 'something wound or woven together,' so that it might just as well mean a piece of cloth, and hence a bag. All doubt is removed by observing the use of the simple word wald (without the suffix -el or -le) in other languages; thus we have O. Du. waldschak, or waldschak (= wald-sack), 'a budget [budget] or a mallet,' Herzam; where waldschak is the identical diminutive form of wald (F. wald) which Mahn imagines could have been turned into wallet. So also G. wald, cloth (Flügel), whence waldschak, also waldschak, 'a wallet,' id. y. But again, this G. wald, cloth, is allied to O. Swed. wald, cloth, whence E. wald, a piece of stuff, a bundle, was borrowed; so that wald is equivalent to the dimin. of wald, and naturally took up the sense of 'bundle' in which wald was not uncommonly used. β. This can be proved by yet another test; for of course the natural dimin. form of wald would be waldle; and accordingly, Halliwell gives: 'waldle, the wattle of a hog; also, to fold up, to entwine;' not to mention walding, 'a wattled fence, Wald;' id. See further under Wattle, which is a pure E. word; and see Wald. α. It is perhaps worth while to add that we find, in Wright's Voc. i. 197, col. 1, the entry 'He pero, walding,' which Mr. Wright explains as 'a leathern sack.' Thus M. E. walding, having no obvious etymology, is prob. a contraction of walding (the dimin. of wald), by loss of l.

WALL-EYED, with glaring eyes, diseased eyes. (Scand.) In Shak, K. John, iv. 3. 49, Titus, v. 1. 44. Spenser has wally eyes, F. Q. i. 4. 24. 'Glauciois, An horse with a wally eye;' Cooper's Thesaurus, ed. 1565. Nares writes it wally, and explains it from walrus or walsh, the disease of the eyes called glaucoma; and cites: 'Glaucoma, a disease in the eye; some think it to be a wally eye;' A. Fleming's Nomenclator, p. 428. Cotgrave has: 'Oeil de chevre, a wally, or over-white eye; an eye full of white spots, or whose apple seems divided by a streak of white.' But the spelling with h is wrong. = Icel. wald-eygr, a corrupted form of wald-eygr, wall-eyed, said of a horse. = Icel. wald, a beam, also a beam in the eye, a disease of the eye (as in wald á auga, a wall in the eye); and eygr, eygr, eyed, an adj. formed from auga, the eye, which is cognate with E. eye. β. The Icel. wald is the same as Swed. wald, a roost, a perch, also a sty in the eye; wald jð sget, 'a tumor on the eyelid, a sty on the eyelid,' Widegren. Cf. Norweg. wald, a hen-roost, Aasen. The lit. sense is 'a perch,' or 'a small support;' closely allied to Icel. wald, a wain. = WAGH, to carry, as in Skt. wah, Lat. wahere; see Wain.

WALLOP, to boil; see Potwalloper and Gallop. WALLOW, to roll oneself about, as in mire. (E.) M. E. walden, Chaucer, C. T. 6684. = A. S. waldian, to roll round, Alfred, tr. of Boethius, c. 6 (b. l. met. 7). † Goth. waldian, to roll, in comp. awaldian, afwaldian, forwaldian. † Lat. waldere, to roll. β. All from a base WALW (short for reduplicated form WAL-WAL), extended from WAL, to roll, as in Russ. waliate, to roll. = WARG, to turn about; see Walk and Voluble.

WALNUT, lit. a foreign nut. (E.) M. E. waldnut, spelt waldnut, P. Plowman, B. xi. 251. We may call the word E., because its component parts are E., but it was not improbably borrowed from O. Du. I find no trace of it earlier than the 14th century; the alleged A. S. waldnut was doubtless coined by Somner (who is the only authority for it), as we see by his misspelling; it ought, of course, to be waldnut or waldnut. = A. S. wald, foreign; and nut, a nut. The pl. Walnuts means 'strangers,' i. e. the Walds; but in mod. E. it has become Walrus. † Du. waldnut, O. Du. waldnut (Herzham). † Icel. waldnut, † Dan. waldnut. † Swed. waldnut. † G. waldnut; also Waldnut nut, i. e. foreign nut. β. For the latter element, see Nut. The former element is A. S. wald, foreign, O. H. G. wald, a foreigner, such as a Frenchman or Italian, answering to a Teut. type WALHA, a stranger, a name given by Teutonic tribes to their Celtic and Roman neighbours; Fick, iii. 299.

WALRUS, a kind of large seal. (Du., = Scand.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1773. = Du. walrus, 'a kind of great fish with tusks;' Sewal, ed.

1754. Not a Du. word, but borrowed from Scand. = Swed. vallross, a walrus; Dan. havslua. The name is very old, since the word ross (for hross) is no longer in use in Swedish and Danish, which languages now employ hval, hval in its stead; but we find the word, in an inverted form, in Icel. Arus-hvalr, a walrus, lit. a horse-whale; the name being given (it is suggested) from the noise made by the animal, somewhat resembling a neigh. β . At any rate, there is no doubt about the sense, whatever may have been the reason for it; the notion referred to by E. Müller, that the word was orig. Norwegian, and meant 'Russian whale,' is disproved at once by the Icelandic word; and to make it doubly sure, we have the A. S. hross-hvalr, a horse-whale, a walrus, in Ælfred's translation of Orosius; see Sweet, A. S. Reader. γ . The Swed. vall, Dan. hval, Icel. hvalr, are cognate with E. Whale. The Swed. ross, Dan. ross, Icel. Arus or hross, are cognate with A. S. hross (the r in which has shifted); see HORSE.

WALTZ, the name of a dance. (G.) Introduced in 1813; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. A shortened form of G. walzer (with z sounded as ts, whence the E. spelling), 'a jig, a waltz'; Flügel. = G. walzen, 'to roll, revolve, dance round about, waltz'; id. \dagger A. S. walstan, to roll, twist; see further under WALTER. Der. waltz, verb.

WAMPUM, small beads, used as money. (N. American Indian.) * Wampum, small beads made of shells, used by the N. American Indians as money, and also wrought into belts, &c. as an ornament; Webster. Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. = Indian wampum, wampum, from the Massachusetts wamp, Delaware wipi, white (Mahn).

WAN, colourless, languid, pale. (E.) M. E. wan, Chaucer, C. T. 2458. = A. S. wana, wana, dark, black, Grein, ii. 638. It occurs as an epithet of a raven, and of night; so that the sense of the word appears to have suffered a remarkable change; the sense, however, was probably 'dead' or 'colourless,' which is applicable to black and pallid alike. There is no cognate word in other languages, and nothing to connect it clearly with A. S. wana, deficient. Hence Ettmüller derives it from A. S. wanan (also wana), the pt. t. of wanan, to strive, contend, toil (whence E. win); so that the orig. sense would have been 'worn out with toil, tired out,' from which we easily pass to the sense of 'worn out' or 'pallid with sleeplessness' in the mod. E. word. The sense of the A. S. word may be accounted for by supposing that it was orig. used (as it often is) as an epithet of night, so that wan night would mean over-toiled night, just as the very word night itself signifies 'dead;' with reference to the common myth of the death of the sun. This etymology is accepted by Maho and E. Müller; if right, the word is distinct from WANE, confusion with which has affected its sense. See further under WIN. Der. wan-ly, wan-ness.

WAND, a long slender rod. (Scand.) M. E. wand, Fricks of Conscience, 580; Ormulum, 1678. = Icel. vandr (gen. vandur), a wand, a switch, whence wandstake, a wicker-house; O. Swed. wand (Ihre); Dan. wand. \dagger Goth. wandus, a rod, \dagger Cor. xi. 25. β . The Teut. type is WANDU, Fick, iii. 285. It is named from its pliancy and use in wicker-work, the orig. sense being a lithe twig, that could be wound into wicker-work. = O. Scand. wand, wand, pt. t. of the verb to wind; this pt. t. is still written wand in Danish, though in Icelandic it has become vand. The verb is O. Swed. winda, Icel. vinda, Dan. vande, cognate with E. Wind (\dagger), q. v.

WANDER, to ramble, rove. (E.) M. E. wandrian, wandrom, P. Plowman, B. vi. 304. = A. S. wandrian, to wander, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. iv. met. 1 (cap. xxxvi. § 2). The frequentative form of wand, to go; hence it means 'to keep going about.' See Wand. \dagger Du. wandelen, 'to walke,' Hexham. \dagger G. wandeln, to wander, travel, walk. Der. wander-er. Also Vandal, q. v.

WANE, to decrease (as the moon), to fail. (E.) M. E. wanien, wanien, Chaucer, C. T. 2080. = A. S. wanian, wanian, to decrease, grow less; Grein, ii. 639. = A. S. wana, wana, deficient, id. 638. \dagger Icel. wana, to diminish, from wanr, lacking, wanting; also wana, in composition. \dagger O. H. G. and M. H. G. wandian, wandian, to wane, from wan, deficient, appearing in mod. G. compounds as wand. So also Du. wan-, prefix, in wandooop, despair (lit. lacking hope); Dan. wan-in wandid, insanity (want of wits); Swed. wan-in wandigt, the same. \dagger Goth. wana, lacking. β . All from Teut. WA-NA, adj., deficient, Fick, iii. 279. From \surd WA, to fail; only found in the derived adj., which appears not only as above, but also in the Gk. awan, bereaved, Skt. awa, wanting, leanness, inferior. Der. wan, wan-ness; and prob. wan-ness, q. v.

WANION, in the phrase with a wanion. (E.) In Shak. Per. ii. 1. 17; the phr. with a wanion means 'with a curse on you,' or 'with bad luck to you,' or 'to him,' as the case may be. The word has never been explained, but the connection with the verb to wane is obvious, and has been pointed out by Nares. I have little doubt (1) that it stands for wanioned, and (2) that wanioned was taken to be a sb., instead of a pres. part. Rich. quotes from Sir T. More: 'He would of lykelyhood bynde them to cartes and beat them, and make them wed in the wanioned,' Works, p. 306; which means, I suppose, he would flog them at the cart's tail (a common expression), and make them marry in the waning moon, i. e. at an unlucky time. Halliwell gives wanioned, the wane of the moon, without any authority; still, it is doubtless right. β . Wanioned is the Northern form of the pres. part. of M. E. wanien, to wane, also used actively in the sense to lessen, deprive (see below). The confusion of the pres. part. with the sb. in -ing is so common in English that many people cannot parse a word ending in -ing. Thus in the wanioned came to mean 'in the waning,' and with a wanion means with a diminution, detriment, ill luck. On 'the fatal influence of the waning moon,' general in Scotland, see Brand's Popular Antiquities, chapter on The Moon. The Icel. wana, to wane, is commonly transitive, with the senses 'to make to wane, disable, spoil, destroy,' which may have influenced the superstition in the North, though it is doubtless widely spread. Cf. 'warreð upp churche, oðer *wanion*ð hire ríðta, oðer letter' = war upon churches, or lessen their rights, or hinder them; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 177, l. 6. See WANE.

WANT, lack, deficiency, indigence, need. (Scand.) M. E. want, first in the Ormulum, 14398, where it is spelt want, and has the adj. sense of 'deficient'; spelt wante, and used as a sb., Ancræn Riwle, p. 284, l. 2. = Icel. want, neuter of wanr, adj., lacking, deficient. This neuter form was used with a gen. case following; as, our þinn outþing want = there was lacking to them of nothing, i. e. they wanted nothing. [The Icel. sb. for want is wanti.] β . Thus the final t was orig. merely the termination of the neut. gender (as in E. it, that, there, is, of); but the word want was in common use, and even the verb wante, to want, to lack, was formed from it, which is the origin of E. want as a verb. γ . The Icel. wanr, adj., is explained under WANE, q. v. Der. want, verb, M. E. wanton, spelt wanten in Ancræn Riwle, p. 344, l. 14; from Icel. wanta, verb, as above. Also want-ine, pres. part., sometimes used as adj.

WANTON, playful, sportive, unrestrained. (E.) The true sense is unrestrained, uneducated, not taken in hand by a master; hence, licentious. M. E. wan-ton, contracted form of wan-tonen; spelt wan-ton, Chaucer, C. T. 208; spelt wan-tonen, wan-tonen, wan-ton, P. Plowman, C. iv. 143, where it is applied to women. Compounded of wan-, prefix, and tonen, pp.

β . The prefix wan- signifies 'lacking, wanting,' and is explained under WANE. In composition it has sometimes the force of un- (to which it is not related), but also gives an ill sense, almost like Gk. du-.

γ . The pp. tonen stands for A. S. toġan, pp. of toġan, to draw, to educate, bring up, Grein, ii. 527. The change from A. S. g to M. E. w (between 2 vowels) is seen again in A. S. toġan = M. E. toġan, to be able, and is quite regular. The A. S. toġan is cognate with G. toġan, so that E. wanton, ill-bred, corresponds very nearly to G. un-erzogen, 'ill-bred, unmannerly, rude, uncivil,' Flügel. For an account of A. S. toġan, see Tug. Mr. Wedgwood well cites un-erzogen, well educated, modest, Ancræn Riwle, p. 204, l. 17; wan-tonen, licentious, id. p. 342, l. 16. Examples abound. Der. wanton-ly; wanton-ness, M. E. wantonness, Chaucer, C. T. 266. Also wanton, sb.

WAPENTAKE, an old name for a hundred or district. (Scand.) 'Franchises, hundredia, wapentakes,' Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 181. 'Centred . . . is a contrary but contenev an hundred townes, and is also in Engliche i-called wapentake;' Trevisa, ii. 87; spelt wapentake, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 145, l. 16. The word occurs in the A. S. Laws, but was merely borrowed from Norse; the A. S. idæm does not mean 'to teach,' but 'to teach,' and is altogether removed from the word under discussion. It is remarkable that various explanations of this word have been given, seeing that all the while the Laws of Edward the Confessor fully explain the orig. sense. = A. S. wapentake, dat. case, a district, wapentake, Secular Laws of Edgar, § vi, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, vol. i. p. 272; we also find wapentake (so accented in the MS.), dat. case, id. p. 292.

The nom. is wapentake or wapentake, Latinised as wapentac or wapentacium, Laws of Edw. Conf. § xxx, in Thorpe, l. 455, where we also read: 'Quod alii vocant hundredum, supradicti comitatus vocant wapentacium, et hoc non sine causa; cum enim aliquis accipiebat prefecturam wapentacii, die constituto, conveniebant omnes majores contra eum in loco ubi soliti erant congregari, et descendente eo de equo suo, omnes assurgebant contra eum, et ipse erigebat lanceam suam in altum, et omnes de lanceis suis tangebant hastam ejus, et sic confirmabant se sibi. Et de armis, qui arma vocant wapen, et lanceas, quod est confirmare.' To which another MS. adds: 'Anglice vero arma vocantur wapen, et lanceas confirmare, quasi armorum confirmacio, vel ut magis expresse, secundum linguam Anglicam, dicimus wapentac, i. e. armorum factus; wapen enim arma sonat, lac factus est. Quamobrem potest cognosci quod hac de causa totus ille conventus dicitur wapentac, eo quod per factum armorum suorum ad invicem confederate (sic) sunt.' We may then dismiss other explanations, and accept the above explicit one, that when a new chief of a wapentake was elected, he used to raise his wapen (a spear), and his men warded it with theirs in token of fealty. However the word (as above said) is Norse.—Icel. vápnatök, lit. a weapon-taking or weapon-touching; hence, a vote of consent so expressed, and lastly, a subdivision of a shire in the Danish part of England, answering to the hundred in other parts; the reason for this being as above given.—Icel. vápn, gen. pl. of vápn, a weapon, cognate with E. weapon; and tök, a taking hold, a grasp, esp. a grasp in wrestling (here used of the contact of weapons), from taka, to take, seize, grasp, also to touch. See Weapon and Take. ¶ As the Icel. tök means to touch as well as to take, it will be seen that the explanation 'weapon-grasping' in the Icel. Dict. is insufficient; it means more than that, viz. the slashing of one spear against another. 'Si placuit [accentia], framas concutiam; honoratissimum avensum genus est armis laudari,' Tacitus, Germania, chap. 11; &c. Cf. Lowland Sc. vepna-show (weapon-show), an exhibition of arms made at certain times in every district; Jamieson.

WAR, hostility, a contest between states by force of arms. (E.) M. E. warre (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 47. It occurs in the A. S. Chron. an. 1119, where it is spelt warre, but a little further on, an. 1140, it is spelt warre (= warre). But it occurs much earlier; we find 'armorum oneribus, quod Angli war-wat dicunt' in the Laws of Cnut, De Foresta, § 9; Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 427. Thus the word is English; though the usual A. S. word is weg; we also find hid, wina, gis, &c. But the derivatives warrior and warroye (to make war on, Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 48), respecting which see below, are of F. origin. Cf. O. F. warre, war (Burguy, Roquefort), whence mod. F. guerre; from O. H. G. warra, vexation, strife, confusion, broil; cf. mod. G. verwirrung, confusion, disturbance, broil, from the same root; O. H. G. wirren, to bring into confusion, entangle, embroil; cf. mod. G. verwirren. + O. Du. warre, 'warre, or hostility,' Hexham; from warren, also warrenen, 'to embroil, to entangle, to bring into confusion or disorder;' id. β. The form of the base is WARS, later form WARR; and the word is closely allied to Worse, q. v. Der. war, verb, late A. S. warrian, A. S. Chron. an. 1135, formed from the sb. warra. Also war-fare, properly 'a warlike expedition;' 'he was set in good poynt to ride a warfare,' i. e. on a warlike expedition, Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron. vol. ii. c. 11 (R.); see Fare. Also war-like, K. John, v. 1. 71; warrior, M. E. warrior, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 166, l. 4, from O. F. warrior, not recorded, old spelling of O. F. guerrier (Burguy), a warrior, one who makes war, formed with suffix -er from O. F. warrier, guerrier, to make war, borrowed by E. and appearing as M. E. warrior or warroye, Chaucer, C. T. 1346, 10324, and in Spenser as warroy or warroye, F. Q. i. 5. 48, ll. 10, 21; so that warrior is really a familiar form of warroyer; cf. guerrayer, 'a martialist, or warrior,' Cot., from guerrayer, 'to warre,' id.

WARBLE, to sing as a bird, chirp, carol. (F.—M. H. G.) M. E. warblan, spelt warblan, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 3004; the sb. warble occurs in the same, 119.—O. F. warbler, to quaver with the voice, speak in a high tone (Burguy, Roquefort).—M. H. G. warbelen, not given in Wackernagel, yet merely the old spelling of mod. G. wirbeln, to whirl, to run round, to warble, frequentative form of M. H. G. wirben. O. H. G. warben, to be busy, to set in movement, urge on (whence mod. G. be-wirben, to sue for, er-wirben, to acquire), the orig. sense being to whirl oneself about, to whirl or whirl. See Whirl, which is, practically, a doublet. Der. warble, sb., M. E. warble, as above; warbl-er.

WARD, a guard, a watch, means of guarding, one who is under a guardian, &c. (E.) 1. M. E. ward, dat. wards, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 320; pl. wardes, guards, King Absander, 1977.—A. S. ward, a guard, watchman, Grein, ii. 673. This is a masc. sb. (gen. wardes); we also find A. S. ward, fem. (gen. wardes), a guarding, watching, protection; id. Both senses are still retained. Both sbs. are formed from the Teut. base WAR, to defend; see Wary. Thus the orig. sense of the masc. sb. is 'a defender,' and of the fem. sb. is 'a defence.' + Icel. varðr, gen. varðar, (1) a warder or watchman, (2) a watch. + G. wart, a warder. + Goth. wards, masc. sb., a keeper, only in the comp. dwarswards, a door-keeper. All these are extensions from the same root. β. From this sb. was formed the verb to ward, A. S. wardian, to keep, to watch, Grein, ii. 674; cognate with which are Icel. varða, to warrant, and G. warten, M. H. G. warden, to watch, from the latter of which is derived (through the French) E. guard. Der. ward-er, Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 21; ward-room, ward-ship. Also ward-en, q. v., ward-robe, q. v. Also dear-ward, dear-ward, key-ward (= hedge-ward, from F. haie, a hedge); ste-ward, q. v.; warth, q. v. Doublet, guard, sb. and verb.

-WARD, suffix. (E.) A common suffix, expressing the direction towards which one tends. A S. -ward, as in to-ward, toward; see Toward, where the suffix is fully explained. It occurs also as Icel. -varðr, Goth. -wartin, O. H. G. -wart, -wart; and cf. Lat. versus, towards, from the same root. We also have -wards, A. S. -wardes, q.

WARDEN, (1) a guardian, keeper, (2) a kind of pear. (F.—M. H. G.) Though the verb to ward is English, and so is its derivative warder, the sb. warden is F., as shewn by the suffix. 1. M. E. warden, Ancren Riwle, p. 372, l. 4.—O. F. warden, not given in Burguy, but necessarily the old spelling of O. F. gardien, gardian, a warden, guardian; since warder is given as the old spelling of garder. Cf. Low Lat. guardianus, a guardian; shewing that O. F. warden was formed from ward-er by help of the Lat. suffix -ianus. See Ward. β. A warden was 'a large coarse pear used for baking,' Wright's Voc. i. 229, note 1, where we also find it spelt warden, in a Nominative of the 15th century; it is spelt warden in Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 48. It meant a keeping pear; Cotgrave has 'paire de garde, a warden, or winter pear, a pear which may be kept very long;' also the adj. gardien, 'keeping, warding, guarding,' answering to Low Lat. guardianus (for wardianus), used as an adjective.

WARDROBE, a place to keep clothes in. (F.—G.) M. E. wardrobes; 'Jupiter hath in his wardrobes bothe garments of ioye and of sorrow,' Test. of Love, b. ii, pt. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 303, col. 2.—O. F. wardroble, old spelling of gardroble; this is shewn by the fact that Roquefort gives ward-ours as the old spelling of F. garde-corps. The spelling gardroble is in Palgrave, s. v. ward-rope. Cotgrave spells it gardroble, 'a wardrobe, also a house of office' (see wardrobe in Halliwell).—O. F. warder, to ward, keep, preserve; and robe, a robe; both words being of G. origin. See Ward and Robe.

WARE (1), merchandise. (E.) M. E. ware (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 4560.—A. S. ware, pl. ware, ware, according to Bosworth; but the reference to § 1 of the Council of Enham (Eynsham) seems to be wrong, and I wholly fail to find the word in A. S., and suspect it to have been borrowed from Scand. We find, however, A. S. wara, protection, guard, care, custody, which is tolerably common, Grein, ii. 641; according to Leo, it has also the sense of 'contract-money,' for which he refers us to a gloss printed in Haupt's Zeitschrift, ix. 439. These words are doubtless related; the sense of ware appears to have been 'things kept,' or 'things of value;' there being also no doubt that worth is a related word, from the same root. We can explain wares as 'valuables' or 'goods;' just as Icel. varnabli means (1) protection, (2) wares. The word is much plainer in the cognate languages. + Du. waar, a ware, commodity; pl. waren, wares. Cf. O. Du. waren, 'to keep or to garde,' Hexham. + Icel. vara, pl. varar, wares. + Dan. ware, pl. ware; cf. ware, care. + Swed. ware, pl. ware; cf. ware, care. + G. waren, pl. waren; cf. make, care, waren, to guard. β. All from Teut. WARA, a commodity, valuable; allied to WERTHA, worth.—✓ WAR, to guard; Fick, iii. 290. See Wary. Der. ware-house (Palgrave).

WARE (2), aware. (E.) 'They were ware of it,' Acta, iv. 16; so also in Romeo, i. 1. 131, ii. 2. 103, &c. See further under Wary.

WARE (3), pt. t. of Wear, q. v.

WARFAR, WARLIKE; see under War.

WARILY, WARINESS; see under Wary.

WARISON, protection, reward. (F.—Teut.) M. E. warisson, protection, Rob. of Brunne, p. 198, l. 1. This is the true sense; but it is much more common in the sense of help or 'reward;' see Will. of Palerne, 2259, 2379, Barbour, Bruce, ii. 206, 2. 236, xx. 544. The usual sense of mod. F. guérison is 'recovery from illness,' which is yet a third sense of what is really the same word. Cf. M. E. warisson, to cure, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 105.—O. F. warisson, guérison, surety, safety, provision, also healing. Cot. has guérison, 'health, curing, recovery.'—O. F. warir, garir, to keep, protect, also to heal; mod. F. guérir. β. Of Teut. origin; from the verb appearing as Goth. warjan, to bid to beware, forbid, keep off from, whence the sense 'protect;' and in O. H. G. waryan, to protect (whence G. warren, to defend, restrain); cf. O. Du. waren, 'to keep or garde,' Hexham. This answers to the Teut. type WARYAN, to defend, from the adj. WAR, wary; see Wary. γ. We may note that the O. F. guérison just corresponds to the mod. E. guarison in form; but the sense of guarison is such as to link it more closely with O. F. garison, another sb. from the same root. It makes little ultimate difference. See Garrison. ¶ Sur W. Scott, Lay of the Last Minstrel, iv. 24, uses warisson in the sense of 'note of assault,' as if it were a warry (warlike) missive. This is a singular blunder.

WARLOCK, a wizard. (E.) In Jamieson's Scot. Dict. 'Æneas was no warlock, as the Scots commonly call such men, who they say are iron-fre or lead-free;' Dryden, Dedication to tr. of Virgil's Æneid (R). The final eb stands for an orig. guttural sound, just as most Englishmen say loch for the Scottish loch; the suffix was prob. confused with that of ham-loch or wood-loch. M. E. warloghe, a wicked one, a name for the devil, Destruction of Troy, 4439. Spelt warlawe, a deceiver, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 783. = A. S. warloga, a traitor, deceiver, liar, truth-breaker, Grein, ii. 650. Lit. 'one who lies against the truth.' = A. S. wadr, truth (as in wadrled, false, lit. 'truthless,' Grein), cognate with Lat. verum, truth; and loga, a liar, from logon (pp. log-on), to lie, Grein, ii. 176, 194. See Variety and Idle (1).

WARM, moderately hot. (E.) M. E. warm, Chaucer, C. T. 7409. = A. S. warm, Grein, ii. 673. + Du. warm. + Icel. varma. + Dan. and Swed. warm. + G. warm. Cf. Goth. warmjan, to warm; the adj. warm does not occur. β. The Teut. type is WAR-MA, warm, Fick, iii. 293. It is usual to connect this with Lat. fermus, Gk. θερμῆς, hot, Skt. gharma, heat, from the GHAR, to glow, with which E. glow is connected; see Glow. See Cartius, ii. 99. γ. But this interchange of so with Skt. gh is against all rules, and constitutes a considerable objection to this theory. On this account, Fick (ii. 465) connects warm with Russ. warits, to boil, brew, scorch, burn, Lithuan. warū, I cook, seethe, boil (infm. warū), and hence infers a WAR, to cook or boil, common to Teutonic and Slavonic. δ. This seems a more likely solution; and we can also derive from the same root the Skt. nihā, a fire-brand, Lat. volcanus, fire. See Volcano. Der. warm-by, warm-ness; also warm, verb, A. S. warmian, Grein, ii. 675, whence warm-er, warm-ing-pan; also warm-ith, sb., M. E. warmje, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 37, l. 33 (not found in A. S.).

WARN, to caution against, put on one's guard. (E.) M. E. warnen, warnen, Chaucer, C. T. 3535. = A. S. warnian, warnian, (1) to take heed, which is the usual sense, Luke, xi. 35; (2) to warn, Gen. vi. 6; cf. warning, a warning, Gen. xli. 32. Formed from the sb. warna, a refusal, denial (Grein), an obstacle, impediment (Boo-worth); the orig. sense being a guarding of oneself, a defence of a person on trial, as in Icel. varn, a defence. = WAR, to defend, guard; see Wary. + Icel. varna, to warn off, refuse, abstain from; from varn, a defence. + Swed. warna, to warn. + G. warnen. Der. warning. And see garn-ish, garr-ison (for garn-ison). Also fore-warn, pre-warn.

WARP, the thread stretched lengthwise in a loom, to be crossed by the woof; a rope used in towing. (E.) Lit. 'that which is thrown across.' M. E. warp; 'Warp, thrade for webbyng'; Prompt. Parv. = A. S. warp, a warp; 'Stamen, warp,' Wright's Voc. l. 66, col. 1. = A. S. warp, pt. t. of worpan, to throw, cast, a strong verb; Grein, ii. 683. + Icel. warp, a casting, throwing, also the warping of anything; from warp, pt. t. of werpa (pp. werpan), to throw. + Dan. warp, only as a naut. term. + Swed. warp, a warp. + O. H. G. warp (mod. G. werfen); from warpf, pt. t. of worfan, to throw. β. All from the Teut. base WARP, to throw, Fick, iii. 295, whence also Goth. warpan, to throw; answering to Aryan WARP, to throw, as seen in Lithuan. worpioti, to spin, Gk. horan, to incline downwards, hōr-ur, to throw. ¶ The M. E. worpan, to throw, pt. t. warp, pp. werpan, occurring in Havelok, 1061, &c., is obsolete. Der. warp, verb, to pervert, twist out of shape (cf. was in the sense of to twist timber out of shape); this is not the M. E. worpan (as above), but the derivative weak verb, and is of Scand. origin; M. E. worpan, Prompt. Parv., from Icel. werpa, to throw, cast, which from warp, sb., a casting, also a warping. Cf. Swed. werpa, Dan. werpa, to warp a ship, from Swed. warp, the draught of a net, Dan. warp, a warp; cf. Dan. warpstok, a warp-anchor or kedge. And see warp.

WARRANT, a voucher, guarantee, commission giving authority. (F., = O. H. G.) M. E. warrant, Havelok, 2067, St. Marharet, ed. Cockayne, p. 2, l. 10. = O. F. warrant, garant (Burguy), later garant, 'a vouchee, warrant; also, a supporter, defender, maintainer, protector.' Cot. Cotgrave also gives the spelling garant, 'a warranter.' In the Laws of Will. I, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, l. 476, 477, the F. spelling is garant, and the Low Lat. warrantum and warrantum. The suffix -ant is clearly due to the Lat. -ant used as the suffix of a present participle; so that the orig. sense of O. F. war-ant was 'defending' or 'protecting.' = O. H. G. warjan, warjan, M. H. G. warn, warn, G. wahren, to protect, lit. 'to give heed.' = O. H. G. wara, M. H. G. war, heed, care. = WAR, to heed; see Wary. Der. warrant, verb, M. E. warranten, K. Aisaxander, 2133; warrant-er, warrant-or, warrant-able, warrant-able-y, warrant-able-ness. Also warrant-ly, from O. F. warrantie, later garantie, 'garrantie, warrantie, or warrantie.' Cot., orig. fem. of pp. of warrantir, later garantir, to warrant, guarantee. Also garrant-ee (error for garant-ee), q. v. And see warrant, warrant-on, garr-er.

WARREN, a preserved piece of ground, now only used of a place where rabbits abound, not always a preserved place. (F., = Low Lat., = O. H. G.) M. E. warrene, P. Plowman, B. prol. 163. =

O. F. warrene, warrene, warrene (Roquefort); later garrene, 'a warren of conies [conies], also a certain, or limited fishing in a river;' Cot. This shows that the sense was 'a preserve.' = Low Lat. warrena, a preserve for rabbits, hares, or fish, occurring A. D. 1186 (Ducange). Formed (with Low Lat. suffix -enna) from O. H. G. warjan, to protect, keep, preserve; see Warrant. Cf. Du. warrende, a park; borrowed from O. French. Der. warren-er, contracted to warner, P. Plowman, B. v. 316; which explains the name Warner.

WART, a small hard excrescence, on the skin, or on trees. (E.) M. E. warte (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. Group A, l. 455 (Six-text edition, where one MS. has warte); spelt wort in Tyrwhitt, l. 557. = A. S. wearte, pl. weartan, Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, l. 200, l. 10. 'Papula, wearie;' Wright's Voc. l. 289, col. 2. + Du. wart; O. Du. warte, warte (Hexham). + Icel. varm. + Dan. wort. + Swed. värta. + G. warte. β. All from Teut. type WARTAN or WARTA, Fick, iii. 294. The orig. sense is 'growth,' hence outgrowth or overgrowth; and it is closely allied to Wort (1), q. v. Der. wart-y.

WARY, WARE, guarding against deception or danger, cautious. (E.) The M. E. form is war; war-y is a comparatively late formation, perhaps due to misreading the adv. warly as war-y; or the -y was subjoined as in warby from M. E. warbe, warbe. In Meas. for Meas. iv. 1. 38. M. E. war, Chaucer, C. T. Group A, l. 309 (Six-text ed.), misspelt were in Tyrwhitt, l. 311. = A. S. war, cautious, Grein, ii. 649. + Icel. warr. + Dan. and Swed. war. + Goth. wara. Cf. O. H. G. wara, heed, caution; G. warer, aware. β. All from Teut. type WARA, cautious, Fick, iii. 290. = WAR, to defend, take heed; whence also Skt. ari, to screen, cover, surround, war-ma, armour, Gk. ἀρμα, a watchman, guard, ἀρμα, I perceive, look out for, observe, Lat. warari, to regard, respect, esteem, dread, Russ. wara, a door, gate (lit. defence). Der. wart-y, wart-ness; war-er, be-ware. And see ward, guard; war-a, gar-a-ish, garr-ison; war-ant, gar-ant-ee; wars (1); war; re-wars, war-y; war-er-a-ma, di-er-a-ma.

WAS, WAST, WERE, WERT, used as parts of the verb to be. (E.) M. E. pt. t. sing. was, wasst, was; pl. were or were. = A. S. wasan, infm. to be; whence pt. t. indic. sing. was, wara, was; pl. wara, waras, or waras; pt. t. subj. sing. wære (for all persons), pl. wæron or wæras (for all persons). See Grein, ii. 664. β. As to the use of was in the 1st and 3rd persons, there is no difficulty. γ. As to the 2nd person, the A. S. form was wære, whence M. E. were, as in 'thou were betrayed,' Chaucer, C. T. 12690. In Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 67, where 7 MSS. read were, one MS. has was, and another has wasst; no doubt was-st was formed (by analogy with was) from the dialectal was, which was prob. Northern. When you came to be used for thou, the phrase you was took the place of thou was, and is very common in writings of the 18th century. Cf. I was, Barbour, Bruce, xii. 652; I is, ye is (Northern dialect), Chaucer, C. T. 4043; thou is, id. 4087. In the subj. mood, the true form is wære; hence was was formed wer-er (by analogy with wasst), K. John, iii. 1. 43, ed. 1623.

δ. In the first and third persons singular of the subjunctive, and in the plural, the true form is wære; but the use of were in the singular is gradually becoming obsolete, except when the conjunction if precedes. The forms if I were, if he were, if I be, if he be, if he have, exhibit the clearest surviving traces of a (grammatically marked) subj. mood in mod. English; and of these, if he have is almost gone. Some careful writers employ if he do, if it make, and the like; but it is not improbable that the subjunctive mood will disappear from the language; the particular phrase if I were will probably linger the longest. + Du. infm. wazn; indic. sing. was, wasst, was; pl. warn, wart, warn; subj. sing. ware, wart, ware; pl. warn, wart, warn. + Icel. infm. was; indic. sing. var, wart, was, pl. varn, wart, varn; subj. sing. wara, wartir, wari; pl. varn, wartir, wari. + Dan. infm. wars; indic. sing. and pl. var; subj. sing. and pl. were. + Swed. infm. was; indic. sing. var; pl. vara, varn, ware; subj. sing. ware; pl. ware, ware. + Goth. wassan, to be, dwell, remain; pt. t. indic. sing. was, was, was; dual. wass, wass; pl. wassan, wassan, wassan; subj. sing. weyan, weyan, wass; dual. wassan, wassan; pl. wassan, wassan, wassan. + G. pt. t. sing. war, wart or wart, war; pl. waren, wart, waren; subj. sing. wäre, wäret or wäret, wäre; pl. wären, wäret, wären. β. All from Teut. base WAS, to be, orig. to dwell. = WAS, to dwell; cf. Skt. was, to dwell, remain, live; Gk. ἀσ-νυ, a dwelling place, city; Lat. was-ns (for was-ns), a household slave, Fick, iii. 300. Der. was-er, q. v. And see was-er-er.

WASH, to cleanse with water, overflow. (E.) Formerly a strong verb; hence was-washen, Mark, vii. 2. M. E. waschen, waschen, pt. t. wash, wash, pp. waschen. The pt. t. is wash in Chaucer, C. T. 2185, misprinted washe by Tyrwhitt. = A. S. wassan, Grein, ii. 641. Just as we find wasen (= wasen) as well as wasen, so also wasen appears as wasen; the pt. t. is wäre or wäre; the pp. is wassan or wassan. 'Hig hira reif wæron' = they washed their robes, Exod. xix. 14. + Du. waschen. + Icel. and Swed. wasla. + Dan. vaske. + G. waschen, pt. t.

wash, pp. waschen. β . The Teut. type is WASKAN, to wash, Fick, iii. 301. Fick compares Skt. wasch, to collect the gleanings in harvest, whence pro-wasch, to wipe out; this is far-fetched and unlikely. If we only remember that the Teut. ab often stands for ba, and that a (as in E. clean-se, rise-se) is used as an extension of a root, giving it an active force, we shall be disposed to take WAK-S as the form of the base, which may very well belong to the Teut. base WAK- \sqrt WAG, to moisten; see Wako (2). Corresponding with WAKS, we have Skt. wasā, to sprinkle, to wet, which comes much nearer not only in form, but also in sense. The orig. sense was prob. 'to wet,' hence to flood with water. Der. wash, sb., as in The Wash (place-name); wash-or, wash-or-woman, wash-y.

WASP, a stinging insect. (E.) M. E. waspe, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 648. Cf. prov. E. wasps, wasps.—A. S. waspa. 'Vespa, wasps'; Wright's Voc. i. 23, col. 2. In a very old A. S. glossary of the 8th century, we find: 'Vespa, waspa/m'; Wright's Voc. ii. 123, col. 1. ϕ O. H. G. wasif, wasif; G. waspe. ψ Lat. waspa. χ Lithuan. waspil, a gad-fly, horse-fly, stinging fly. γ Russ. was, a wasp. β . All from an Aryan form WAPSA, Fick, i. 769; the true E. form is wasps, but it has become wasp under the influence of the Lat. waspa, which is really a modified form, for ease in pronunciation. γ . To suppose WAP-SA to mean 'weaver,' which is what Fick suggests, is surely nonsense; esp. as the root of 'weave' is not WAP, but WABH.

δ . It more likely means 'stinger,' from a root WAP, to sting, now lost, unless we may adduce E. wasp, to strike. ϵ . I cannot believe it to be connected with Gk. wasps; rather, the Gk. wasps is the same as Gael. wasch, a wasp, a venomous creature, also a sting; cf. Gael. wasch, a thrust, blow, wasch-air, one who strikes, a waspish fellow, Irish wasch, a kick. Der. wasp-ish, As You Like It, iv. 3. 9; wasp-ish-ly, -ness.

WASSAIL, a festive occasion, a merry carouse. (E.) See Brand's Popular Antiquities, vol. i. p. 2, where also Verstegan's 'etymology' (from was hale) and Selden's (from was-hal) and other curiosities may be found. In Mach. i. 7. 64; Hamlet, i. 4. 9, &c. M. E. wassail, wassyl, Rob. of Glouc. p. 117, l. 4; 118, l. 3; and see Hearne's Glossary, p. 731. The story is well known, viz. that Rowena presented a cup to Vortigern with the words was hale, and that Vortigern, who knew no English, was told to reply by saying drinc hale. Whatever truth there be in this, we can at any rate admit that was hale and drinc hale were phrases used at a drinking-bout. The former phrase is a salutation, meaning 'be of good health,' lit. 'be hale'; the latter phrase is almost untranslatable, meaning literally 'drink, hale!' i. e. 'drink, and good luck be with you.'

β . These forms are not Anglo-Saxon, but belong to another dialect, probably Northumbrian, if indeed they be not altogether Scandinavian. The A. S. (Wessex) form of salutation was was hale, occurring in Beowulf, l. 808 (or l. 407, ed. Grein). It occurs in the plural in Matt. xviii. 9; 'hale was ge' = whole be ye, or peace be unto you.—A. S. was, be thou, imperative sing. 2d person, of wasan, to be; and hal, whole. See Was and Whole. γ . The form hal is just the Icel. heill, mod. E. hale, a cognate word with A. S. hal (= E. whole). In the Icel. Dict. we find similar phrases, such as kom heill, welcome, hail! (lit. come, hale!); far heill, farewell! (lit. fare, hale!); sit heill, sit, hail! (lit. sit, hale!); the last of these fully explains drinc hale. We may also notice Icel. heill, sb., good luck; and we even find A. S. hal (but only as a sb.), good luck, Luke, xix. 9. See Hale, Hail (2).

WASTE, desert, desolate, unused. (F.,—O. H. G.,—L.) M. E. wast, Rob. of Glouc. p. 373, l. 10.—O. F. wast, in the phr. fairs wast, to make waste (preserved in E. as lay waste), Roquefort; later form gast. He also gives waster, to waste. Burguy gives gast, gast, sb. devastation, gast, gaste, adj. waste; gaster (mod. F. gâter), to lay waste, despoil, spoil, ravage; also gastur, to ravage.—O. H. G. waste, sb., a waste; wastur, to lay waste; and there was prob. a form wastjan, corresponding to O. F. gastir. Not a Teut. word; but simply borrowed from Lat. wastus, waste, desolate, also vast, whence the verb wastare, to waste, lay waste. Root unknown; some imagine a connection with wastus, empty. β . It is most remarkable that we should have adopted this word from French, since we had the word already in an A. S. form as waste; but it is quite certain that we did so, since waste would have been wast in mod. E.; besides which, there are two M. E. forms, viz. wast (from F.) and waste (from A. S.), of which the latter soon died out, the latest example noted by Stratmann being from the Owl and Nightingale, l. 1528. And the result is remarkably confirmed by the M. E. wastour for waster (see below).

γ . The history of the word in G. is equally curious. There also the O. H. G. has wastet, adj., empty, wastet, sb., a waste, and waston, to waste; yet, in addition to these, we also find waste, sb., wastes, verb, borrowed from Latin, as shown above. But in G. the native form prevailed, as shown by mod. G. wast, waste, waste, a waste, wasten, to waste. δ . We thus not only find Lat. wastus, but also the purely Teutonic words following, viz. A. S. waste (Grein, ii. 668), O. Sax. wastet, O. H. G. wastet, waste; A. S. waston, O. Sax. waston, O. H. G. wastet, a desert; A. S. waston, O. H. G. waston, to waste. All are from an Aryan type WASTA, waste, Fick, i. 781; of which the root is unknown. Der. waste, sb., M. E. waste, Gairain and the Grene Knight, 2098; waste, verb, M. E. wasten, Layamon, 2375, from O. F. waster = O. H. G. waston, from Lat. wastare; wast-or, M. E. wastour, P. Plowman, B. prol. 22, vi. 29, where the suffix -or is French. Also waste-ful, K. John, iv. 2. 16; waste-ful-ly, -ness; waste-ness, Zeph. i. 25. (A. V.) Doublet, wast.

WATCH, a keeping guard, observation. (E.) M. E. wasche, P. Plowman, B. ix. 17.—A. S. wacces, a watch, Grein, ii. 641.—A. S. wacian, to watch; Matt. xxvi. 40.—A. S. wacan, to wake; see Wako. Der. watch, verb, M. E. waschen, Gower, C. A. l. 163, l. 6; watch-or; watch-ful, Two Gent. i. 1. 31; watch-ful-ly, -ness; watch-ness, a sentry-box, 3 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 17; watch-dog, Temp. i. 3. 383; watch-man (Palgrave); watch-word, 3 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 231.

WATER, the fluid in seas and rivers. (E.) M. E. weter, Chaucer, C. T. 402.—A. S. watar, Grein, ii. 651. ϕ Du. water. ψ G. wasser, O. H. G. wassar, wassar. β . From the Teut. type WATRA, water, Fick, iii. 284. There is also a Teut. type WATAN, water, appearing in Icel. wata, Dan. wand, Swed. vatten, Goth. wato (pl. watans), water. Allied words are Russ. woda, Gk. hops, Lat. unda, Lithuan. wandis, Skt. watan, water. All from the \sqrt WAD, to wet, perhaps orig. to well up; see Wet. Der. water, verb, A. S. watran, Gen. ii. 6, 10; water-ish, K. Lear, i. 1. 261; water-y, A. S. watrig, Wright's Voc. i. 37, col. 2, l. 26. Also water-carriage, -clock, -slout, -colour, 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 80; -wars; -wars, M. E. water-lyre, Wright's Voc. i. 190, col. 2; -fowl; -gall, a rainbow, Shak. Lucrece, 1588; -lout; -lily, M. E. water-lily, Wright's Voc. i. 190, col. 2; -liss, -loggud, -man, -mard, -mill (Palgrave), -sips; -foi, Chaucer, C. T. 1160; -pawer, -proof, -shed (modern), -spout, -light, -wheel, -work; &c., &c.

WATTLE, a twig, flexible rod, usually a hurdle; the fleshy part under the throat of a cock or turkey. (E.) In all senses, it is the same word. The orig. sense is something twined or woven together; hence it came to mean a hurdle, woven with twigs, or a bag of woven stuff; hence the baggy flesh on a bird's neck. It also appears in the corrupt form wallet; see Wallet. M. E. wattel, a bag, P. Plowman, C. xi. 269; see further under Wallet. Hence M. E. watlian, verb, to wattle, twist together or strengthen with hurdles, P. Plowman, B. xix. 323.—A. S. watol, a hurdle, covering; also watol. 'Tegea, watol;' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 52, l. 12. Wattles, pl., coverings of a roof, tiles, Luke, v. 19; also in the sense of twigs or hurdles, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. iii. c. 16. Lit. 'a thing woven or wound together;' moreover, it is a dimin. form, with suffix -el, from a base WAT, to bind, a variant of Teut. base WAD, to bind, both being from \sqrt WA, to bind; see Withy, Wood (2), Weave. Der. wattle, verb, M. E. watlian, as above. Doublet, wallet.

WAVE (1), to fluctuate, to move or be moved about with an undulating motion or up and down. (E.) M. E. wouen, Lidgate, Minor Poems, p. 256 (Stratmann). The pres. part. is split wavand, woffand, Barbour, Bruce, ix. 245, xl. 193, 513; the scribe constantly writes v for w.—A. S. wafjan, only in the sense to wonder at a thing, to waver in mind; I cannot trace it in the lit. sense. Cf. 'Spectaculum, wafō, vel wafar-jan, vel wafang,' Wright's Voc. i. 55. Grein writes wafjan (ii. 630), which would have given a mod. E. wow; the accent is unnecessary. The sense comes out in the derived adj. wafre, wavering, restless, Grein, ii. 642; see Waver. ϕ O. Icel. wafa, cited by E. Müller and Stratmann, but they do not tell us where to find it; however, the Dict. gives the derivatives wafra, wafra, to waver, waf, hesitation (which presuppose an orig. verb wafa); also wifa, wifa, wafa, to swing, vibrate. E. Müller cites M. H. G. waben, to waver; and Fick, iii. 289, cites M. H. G. wabren, wablen, to fluctuate; cf. G. waben, to move, wave, fluctuate. β . Fick suggests a connection with wawer; if so, the sense of 'weave' is only secondary, and due to the motion of the hand; the primary sense of the Teut. base WAB being that of movement to and fro, as in G. waben, to fluctuate. The form of the root is, however, the same as that of wawe, q. v.

Der. wawe, sb., a late word, occurring in the Bible of 1551, James, l. 6; it is due to the verb, and took the place of M. E. wow, a wave, Wyclif, James, i. 6, which is not the same word, but allied to E. Wag, q. v. (cf. Icel. edgr, Dan. wag, G. wage, a wave). Also wawer; wawer-let, a coined word, with double dimia. suffix; wawer-ffring, Exod. xxix. 24; wawer-worn, Temp. ii. 1. 120; waw-y. Also waw-or, q. v.; and perhaps waf, wawer-it. γ . Distinct from wawe, waf.

WAVER (2), the same as Waive, q. v.

WAVER, to vacillate. (E.) M. E. waweren (= waweren), Prompt. Parv. p. 518. Barbour has wawerand, wandering about; Bruce, vii. 112, xiii. 517, cf. vii. 41. 'Wawerand wynd' = a changeable wind, Wallace, iv. 140.—A. S. wafre, adj., wandering, restless, Grein, ii.

643. † Icel. vafrá, to hover about; Norw. sværa, to flap about. † It is the frequentative form of WAVE, q. v. Der. waaver-er.

WAX (1), to grow, increase, become. (E.) M. E. waxen, waxom, a strong verb, pt. t. wax, wax, pp. waxen, waxom, waxen; Wyclif, Matt. 214. 30; Luke, ii. 40, xxiii. 33; Matt. xiii. 31. — A. S. waxan, pt. t. wax, pp. gewaxan, Grein, ii. 676. † Du. waxen, pt. t. wax, pp. gewaxen. † Icel. waxa, pt. t. wax; pp. waxinn. † Dan. wax. † Swed. wäxa. † G. wachsen, pt. t. wach, pp. gewachsen. † Goth. waxjan, pt. t. wax, pp. waxans. † All from Teut. base WAHS, to grow (Fick, iii. 381); answering to an Aryan type WAKS appearing in Gk. akáwos, to wax. Skt. wahá, to wax, grow. This Aryan base is extended from WAG, to be strong, be lively and vigorous; cf. Skt. waj, to strengthen, Lat. augere, to increase, sigura, to flourish, &c. When extended by the addition of s, the form wags became wax, since wags (with voiceless s) is not pronounceable. See Eke(1), Vigour, Vegetable, Augment, Autocrat. Der. waxit, q. v.

WAX (2), a substance made by bees; and other substances resembling it. (E.) M. E. wax, Chaucer, C. T. 677. — A. S. waxan, Grein, ii. 676. † Du. was. † Icel. and Swed. was. † Dan. was. † G. wachs. † Russ. vos'. † Lithuan. waxžan. Root unknown. Possibly related to Lat. wasum, mistletoe, birdlime; see Viscid; but this is very uncertain. Der. was, verb; was-clath, was-work; was-on, Rich. II. l. 3. 73; was-y.

WAY, a road, path, distance, direction, means, manner, will. (E.) M. E. wey, way, Chaucer, C. T. 34. — A. S. weg, Grein, ii. 655. † Du. weg. † Icel. vegr. † Dan. vej. † Swed. wäg. † G. weg. † O. H. G. was. † Goth. wega. † All from Teut. type WEGA, a way; Fick, iii. 382. Further allied to Lithuan. wieka, the track of a cart, from wiekti, to drive, or draw, a wagon; Lat. via, a way; Skt. weka, a road, way, from wat, to carry. All from WAGH, to carry; see WALK, Vladuet, Vehicle. Der. al-way, al-ways, q. v.; length-ways, side-ways, &c.; also way-faring, i. e. faring on the way, A. S. weg-feread, Matt. xvii. 30, where feread is the pres. part. of ferean, to fare, travel, Grein, l. 285, a derivative of the more primitive verb faran, to go (see Fare); way-farer; way-lay, Tw. Night, iii. 4. 176; way-mark, Jer. xxi. 31 (A. V.); wayward. Also way-word, q. v.

WAYWARD, perverse. (E.) M. E. weyward; 'if thin ipe be weyward [Lat. iniquum], al thi bodi schal be derk', Wyclif, Matt. vi. 23; used as an adj., but orig. a headless form of weyward, adv. Owl and Nightingale, 376 (Stratmann), Layamon, 8878, 21464; cf. weyward, in a direction away from, Layamon, 22352, Will. of Palerne, 2188. Thus weyward is wey-word, i. e. turned away, perverse. † This is the simple solution of a word that has given much trouble. It is a parallel formation to freward, q. v. It is now often made to mean hard on one's way. Cf. 'ouerthwartlie weywarded' = perversely turned away, Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 274. Der. weyward-ness, M. E. weywardnes, Wyclif, Rom. i. 39.

WE, pl. of the 1st pers. pronoun. (E.) M. E. we, Chaucer, C. T. 29. — A. S. we, Grein, ii. 653; but Grein omits the accent; of course it had a long vowel. † Du. wij. † Icel. viðr, viðr. † Dan. and Swed. vi. † G. wir. † Goth. wea. Origin unknown.

WEAK, yielding, soft, feeble. (Scand.) [The Scand. form has replaced the A. S. weac, which became M. E. wech, spelt wace in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1874; and would have given a mod. E. weak, like we from A. S. de. We also find M. E. wach, wach, whence the pl. wachs, for which Tyrwhitt prints wach, Chaucer, C. T. 889; but see Sax-text ed., A. 887; the pl. is spelt wach, Havelok, l. 1012. — Icel. vegr, vegr, weak; rarely vegr; Swed. vet; Dan. weg, pliant. † A. S. wiac, pliant, weak, easily bent; Grein, ii. 635. † Du. wach, tender, weak. † G. wach, pliant, soft. † All from Teut. type WAIKA, weak; Fick, iii. 303. — Teut. base WIK, to give way or yield; appearing in Icel. veika, pt. t. veik (whence adj. veikr), pp. veikinn, to turn, turn aside, veer; A. S. wican, pt. t. wic (whence adj. wic), pp. wican, to give way, Grein, ii. 689; G. wiechen, pt. t. wich, pp. gewichen, to give way. † All from Aryan base WIG, to give way, a by-form of WIK, of which the orig. meaning seems to have been 'to separate'; hence Gk. klew (for feisw), to yield, give way, Skt. wiek, to separate, to deprive; and prob. Lat. uicere (for uicere), to shun, avoid. See Curtius, l. 166. Prob. the bases WIK and WIG are extensions from WIL, to bend, twine, weave; see Withy.

Der. wach-ly, wach-ness. Also wach-on, in which the suffix is added as in length-on, &c.; cf. M. E. wachen, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1144. A. S. wican, wician, Grein, ii. 641, 636. Icel. veipja-sá, to grow ill. Also wach-ly, adj., used by Raleigh (Todd's Johnson, no reference); wach-ling, 3 Hen. VI. v. 1. 37, with double dimin. suffix, as in wand-ling. And see wich-ing, wich, wich-er.

WEAL, prosperity, welfare. (E.) M. E. wale, Chaucer, C. T. 303, 4595. — A. S. wala, wala, wala, weal, opulence, prosperity; Grein, ii. 626. † Dan. wal, weal, welfare. † Swed. wal. † O. H. G. wald, wala, wala, G. wald, welfare. † The orig. sense is a 'well-being,' welfare, and (like the words well-being, welfare, wal-comes, fare-well) it is a derivative from A. S. wal, well, adv., the notion of condition being expressed by the nominal suffix -a. So also Dan. wal, from wal, adv.; Swed. wäl, from wäl, adv.; G. wald, from wald, adv. See Well (1). And see Wealth.

WEALD, a wooded region, an open country. (E.) The peculiar spelling of this word is not improbably due to Verstegan, who was anxious to spell it so as to connect it at once with the A. S. form, forgetting that the diphthong eo was scarcely ever employed in the 13th and 14th centuries. Munshu, in his Dict., ed. 1627, has: 'Weald of Kent, is the woodie part of the country. Verstegan saith that wald, would, and wold signifie a wood or Forrest, a Teut. Wald, i. sylva, a wood.' This fashion, once set, has prevailed ever since. † It is also quite certain that two words have been confused, viz. wald and wald. Wald (now also wald) was sometimes spelt wald, as in Layamon, 21339; hence it passed into wald or wald. Caxton, in the preface to his Recuyell of the Histories of Troye, tells us that he was born in Kent, 'in the wald.' In the reprint of this book by Copland, this phrase appears as 'in the walde.' Lyly, in his Euphues and his England, says: 'I was borne in the walde of Kent;' ed. Arber, p. 368. Shak. has 'wilde of Kent;' Hen. IV. ii. 1. 60, ed. 1623. † For the further explanation of M. E. wald, see Wold. For the further explanation of wild, see Wild. Both words are English. Der. wald-on, adj., belonging to the woods of the S. of England; a term in geology. For the suffix -on, cf. gold-on. WEALTH, prosperity, riches. (E.) M. E. welthe (disyllabic), P. Plowman, B. l. 55. Spelt welthe, Genesis and Exodus, l. 796. Not in A. S. An extended form of wald (M. E. wald), by help of the suffix -th, denoting condition or state; cf. beal-th from beal, dear-th from dear, &c. See Weal. † Du. weldde, luxury; from wäl, adv., well. Der. welth-y, spelt welthy in Fabyan, Chron. c. 56; welth-i-ness, spelt welthinis in Fabyan, in the same passage.

WEAN, to accustom a child to bread, &c., to reconcile to a new custom. (E.) The proper sense is to 'accustom to;' we also use it, less properly, in the sense of to 'disaccustom to.' These opposite senses are easily reconciled; the child who is being accustomed to bread, &c. is at the same time disaccustomed to, or weaned from, the breast. Cf. G. entwöhnen, lit. to disaccustom, also to wean; where ent- is equivalent to E. un- as a verbal prefix; so that ent-wöhnen = un-wean. M. E. wenan. 'Wen chylde for sokyng [sucking], Ab-lacto, elacto,' Prompt. Parv. — A. S. wanian, to accustom, Grein, ii. 660. Hence wenan, answering to G. entwöhnen; 'der jonne jil accanede barn fram melcum dremmed si' = before the child that is born be weaned from milk; Edifred, tr. of Bede, l. i. c. 27, ed. Wheloc, p. 88. † Du. wennen, to accustom, inure; afwenen, to wean. † Icel. wenja, to accustom. † Dan. wenan, to accustom; wenja fra Brystel, to wean. † Swed. wenja, to accustom; wenja af, to wean. † G. wenian, to accustom, O. H. G. wenjan, wenan, M. H. G. wonen; whence ent-wöhnen, to wean. † All from a Teut. weak verb WANYAN, to make accustomed, accustom; from the ab. WANA, custom, use, wont, appearing in Icel. wani, O. H. G. gi-wana, custom. And this ab. is again due to an adj. WANA, wont, accustomed, used to, appearing in O. H. G. gi-won, accustomed. See further under Wont.

WEAPON, an instrument for offence or defence. (E.) M. E. wepon, Chaucer, C. T. 1591. — A. S. wæpan, a weapon, shield, or sword; Grein, ii. 648. † Du. wapen. † Icel. vepa. † Dan. vebna. † Swed. wepan. † G. waffe, O. H. G. wafan (also wappan, borrowed from Dutch or Low G.) † Goth. wepna, neut. pl., John, xviii. 3. † All from the Teut. type WAPNA, a weapon; Fick, iii. 388. [Not allied to Gk. βλαστρον, an implement, weapon, which stands for βλάστρον; see Curtius, ii. 58.] Fick does not assign the root. But Benfey gives Skt. wep (properly causal of we), to sow, to procreate, which he connects with E. weapon. He is certainly right. This appears from A. S. wæp-man, a man of full growth, a husband. 'Ver, wer, oððe [or] wæp-man;' Wright's Voc. l. 73, col. 1. 'Veretrum, wæpan, goynd;' id. l. 44. Hence wæp-man, a male; Grein, ii. 648; and see Grein's remarks on wæpan, and Skt. wepans in Benfey. A weapon is so named from the warrior or grown man who wields it. The root is WAP, Skt. wep. Der. wæpan-ed, Oth. v. 2. 266; wæpan-les.

WEAR (1), to carry on the body, as clothes; to consume by use, rub away. (E.) The pt. t. wore, now in use, is due to analogy with born, pt. t. of bear; the word is not really a strong one, the M. E. pt. t. being worod. We also find pt. t. wore, Luke, viii. 27. (A. V.) M. E. woren, pt. t. wored, Chaucer, C. T. 75. — A. S. worian (pt. t. worode), Exod. xix. 29. (Quite distinct from A. S. worian, to defend; Grein.) † Icel. worja, to wear (quite distinct from worja, to defend). † O. H. G. worian. † Goth. weyan, to clothe; pp. wesids, Matt. xi. 5. † From the Teut. base WAS, to clothe; the r standing for s, as shown by the Gothic form; Fick, iii. 300. = WAS, to clothe; Fick, l. 779. See Wost. Der. wore, sb., As You Like It, ii. 7. 34; wore-able; wore-er, Antony, ii. 2. 7. † All the senses of wear can be deduced from the carrying of clothes on the body; it hence means to bear, to carry; also to consume or use up by wear, destroy, tire, efface; also, to become old by wearing, to be wasted, pass away (as time); to wear well = to bear wear and tear, hence to last out, endure. There is no connection with the sense of A. S. wearian, to defend, from WAR.

WEAR (2), the same as Weir, q. v.

WEAR (3), in phr. 'to wear a ship': the same as Veer, q. v.

WEARY, exhausted, tired, causing exhaustion. (E.) M. E. weard, wery, Chaucer, C. T. 4330. (The e is long, as in mod. E.) = A. S. wearig, tired; Grein, ii. 663. + O. Sax. wearig, weary; in the comp. at-wearig, fatigued with a journey; Heliland, 660, 670, 678, 698, 2338. + O. H. G. wearig, weary; cited by E. Müller. β . The long e is (as usual) due to a mutation of long a, as shews by the cognate O. Saxon form. It is, consequently, connected with A. S. wearian, to wander, travel, Gen. iv. 14; Numb. xiv. 33; Grein, ii. 736. γ . This verb is a weak one, formed from the sh. wear, which probably meant a moor or swampy place; so that wearian was orig. 'to tramp over wet ground,' the most likely thing to cause weariness. Hence A. S. wear-bana, explained by 'fascianus,' i. e. phasianus, in Wright's Gloss, ii. 34, col. 2; it prob. meant a moor-cock (from bana, a cock). We actually find the expression 'weary so water in weare,' of which perhaps the sense is tired as water in a pool, like the modern 'as dull as ditch-water;' see Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 44, l. 37.

8. And, considering the frequent interchange of s and r, I have little doubt that A. S. wear is identical with A. S. wær (also wæra, Wright's Voc. ii. 18, col. 2), weare, weare, so that wearig is equivalent to wær-g, lit. bedaubed with mire, 'draggled with wet;' and wearig is, in fact, a doublet of weary. This appears more clearly from Icel. wæra (the same word as E. weare), explained to mean 'wetness, toil, fatigue, from storm, sea, frost, weather, or the like,' whence the compounds wæra-wæra, toil, fatigue, wæra-wæra, a wet journey, &c. This at once explains O. Saxon at-wearig, lit. wet with journeying in bad weather, weary of the way. To this day E. wearig is mostly applied to travel; the lit. sense is 'exhausted with wet,' because wet and rain are the most wearig conditions to the traveller. Cf. also Icel. wæra, to bustle, derived from wæra, toil, which again exhibits the right vowel-change.

α . By way of further illustration, we may note Icel. wæra, worn out by wet or toil, wæra, to bustle, wæra, to wade in water. The last word occurs in M. E. 'This whit wæra in the fen almost to the ankle' = this wight waded in the mire, almost up to his ankle; P. Plowman's Crede, 430. See further under Wade.

β . Lastly, the identity of wear with wær is verified by the use of wæra in the sense of sea-wood (Webster), which is plainly the same word as the Kentish wæra, sea-wood (Hallwell).

γ . Der. wæra-ly, wæra; wæra, verb, Temp. iii. 1. 19; wæra-ness, Two Gent. ii. 7. 8; wæra-some-ly, wæra.

WEASAND, WESAND, the wind pipe. (E.) Spelt wesand in Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 14; he also has wesand-pipe, id. iv. 3. 28. M. E. wesand; spelt wesand, Wright's Voc. i. 107, col. 2, l. 7; wesand, id. 185, col. 2, last line. = A. S. wesand, Wright's Voc. i. 43, col. 2; 64, col. 2; used to translate Lat. rosna, the gullet. The mod. E. wesand answers rather to a by-form wesand; whilst the A. S. wesand answers to prov. E. wesand, the wind-pipe (Hallwell). + O. Fries. wesand, wesand. Cf. prov. G. wesand, wesand, the gullet of animals that chew the cud, cited by Leo, A. S. Glossar, col. 494, l. 40; M. H. G. wesand, O. H. G. wesand, wesand, cited by E. Müller.

β . The form is evidently that of a pres. part. Perhaps an initial h has been lost, so that wesand is lit. 'the wesand thing,' the wind-pipe. This suggestion is due to Wedgwood, and is adopted by A. S. Cook, in American Journal of Philology, vol. i. no. 1, p. 180; and is well supported. See further under Whose.

WEABELL, a small slender-bodied animal. (E.) M. E. weasle, weasle, Chaucer, C. T. 3214. = A. S. wæsla, Wright's Voc. i. 78, col. 1. + Du. wesal + Icel. wæsla (given in the comp. weasla-wæsla). + Dan. wesal + Swed. wesla. + G. wesal; O. H. G. wesla, wesla. β . The Test. type is I suppose, WISALA; evidently a dimin. form. Root unknown; but, as the characteristic of the animal is its slenderness, I would propose to translate it by 'the little thin creature,' and to connect it with Wilson, q. v. Perhaps it is worth while to compare Icel. wesal, poor, destitute, wesal, to grow poor, to pick away, weslingr, a poor, puny person.

WEATHER, the condition of the air, &c. as to sunshine or rain. (E.) M. E. weater, P. Plowman, B. vi. 326; Chaucer, C. T. 10366, where Tyrwhitt prints weater, but the MSS. mostly have weader, as in all the six MSS. in the Six-text edition, Group B, l. 52. The mod. E. weather occurs again in M. E. weater, weater, and is prob. due to Scand. influence; cf. Icel. veðr, and see Wether. = A. S. wæder, Grein, ii. 654. + Du. wæder. + Icel. veðr. + Dan. veir (a contracted form) + Swed. veader, wind, air, weather. + G. wetter; O. H. G. wetar; cf. G. gewitter, a storm. β . All from the Test. base WEDRA, weather, storm, wind, Fick, iii. 307; allied words appear in G. gewitter, as above, and in Icel. land-veðri, a land-wind, land-veðri, bright weather. Further allied to Lithuan. weira, a storm, stormy weather; Russ. sieter, sieter, wind, breeze. γ . To be divided, probably, as WE-DRA, where the suffix (as in fother, mother) answers to Aryan -tar, denoting the agent; and the base in WI, to blow, which occurs in a strengthened form in Gothic wisan, to blow, Skt. ud, to blow; from WA, to blow, whence also E. wind; see Wind (1).

8. Thus weater and wind mean much the same, viz. 'that which blows,' and they are constantly associated in the E. phrase 'wind and weather.' 'Wind ligeð, wæder hið farer,' Phœnix, ed. Grein, l. 182. A weather-cock means a wind-cock. Der. weater, verb, Spenser, F. Q. v. 4. 43; weather-board, cf. Icel. veðr-borð, the windward side; weater-board; weather-cock, M. E. wædercock, Apenbite of Inwytt, p. 160, l. 27, so called because formerly often in the shape of a cock, as some are still made (cf. Du. wædercock = wæderhoen, from hæn, a cock); weather-fund, i. e. to defend from the weather, Temp. v. 10, where fund is a clipped form of defend (see Fence); weather-guy, weather-rod; weather-vane, M. E. wæder-van, P. Plowman, B. xv. 350. And see weather-beaten, weater.

WEATHER-BEATEN, WEATHER-BITTEN, harassed by the weather. (E. or Scand.) Weather-beaten, lit. beaten by the weather, or beaten upon by the weather, makes such good sense that I do not know that we can disallow it as being a genuine phrase; it occurs in 1 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 67, in Spenser (Todd's Johnson, no reference), and in Nick. Breton, ed. Grosart (see the Index). At the same time there can be little doubt that, at least in some cases, the right word is weather-bitten, i. e. bitten by the weather, as in Shak. Wint. Tale, v. 2. 60. The latter is a true Scand. idiom. We find Swed. weaterbiten, lit. weather-bitten, but explained as Widregren as 'weather beaten'; so also Norweg. weaterbiten, which Aasen explains by Daas. weater, also as 'tanned in the face by exposure to the weather,' and of a man; he also gives the expressive Norw. weaterbiten, weather-worn (lit. weather-shit).

β . In connection with this word, we may note that when a ship is said 'to beat up against the wind,' the word beat really represents Icel. bita, to tack (said of a ship), of which the lit. sense is 'to bait;' and, as shews under Bait, this is a derivative of Bitu. Even Icel. bita, to bite, also means to sail, cruise, said of a ship. Hence, from a nautical point of view, there is a strong suspicion that beat (in such a case) is an error for beat, and that weather-beaten should be weather-biten.

WEAVE, to twist threads together, work into a fabric. (E.) M. E. weave (for wave), pt. t. waf, Gower, C. A. ii. 320, l. 24. pp. wave (= wave), spelt wave, Wyclif, John, i. 23. = A. S. wæfan, pt. t. waf, pp. wafan; Grein, ii. 654. + Du. waven. + Icel. wafa, pt. t. waf, pp. wafan. + Dan. wæve. + Swed. wæfa. + G. wæven, to weave, pt. t. waf, pp. wafen; also as a weak verb.

β . All from Test. base WAB, to weave, Fick, iii. 189, answering to Aryan WABH, to weave (Fick, l. 769), which further appears in Gk. βῆψ, βῆψ (for βῆψ, βῆψ), a web, βῆψ-ov, to weave, and Skt. brāma-odhita, a spider (lit. a wool-weaver), cited by Curtius, l. 369. γ . Further, it is tolerably certain (Curtius, l. 76) that WABH is an extension from WA, to weave, appearing in Skt. ud, to weave, Bothlingk and Roth's Skt. Dict. vi. 878, and in Lithuan. wawu, a spider (lit. a spinner); cf. also Skt. aw, to weave, aw, to weave (Benfey). And see Withy, Hymn.

δ . The connection with wave, wæver, suggested by Fick, is somewhat doubtful; see Wave. Der. wæver, wæving; also wæb, q. v., wæf, q. v., wæf, q. v., wæf, q. v.

WEB, that which is woven; a film over the eye, the skin between the toes of water-birds. (E.) M. E. wæb, Wyclif, Job, vii. 6; also wæbe, P. Plowman, B. v. 111. = A. S. wæbb, gen. written wæb, Wright's Voc. i. 59, col. 2, l. 26, col. 2, l. 3; 66, l. 9. + Du. wæb, wæbe. + Icel. wæf (gen. wæfar). + Dan. wæb. + Swed. wæf. + G. wæbe, O. H. G. wæpp, wæpp.

β . All from the Test. type WABYA, a web; from WABH, to weave; see Weave. Der. wæb-ing, wæb-ed, wæb-foot-ed. Also M. E. wæbbe, Chaucer, C. T. 364; A. S. wæbbe, a weaver, Wright's Voc. i. 59, col. 2, where the suffix -a denotes the agent (obsolete, except in the name Webb); M. E. wæbber, Wyclif, Job, vii. 6, A. S. wæbbæra, a female weaver, used to translate Lat. textrix, Wright's Voc. i. 59, col. 2 (obsolete, except in the name Webster); for the suffix -ter, see Spinstar.

WED, to engage by a pledge, to marry. (E.) M. E. wedden, Chaucer, C. T. 870. = A. S. wæddan, lit. to pledge, engage, Lake, xiii. 5. = A. S. wæd, sb., a pledge, Grein, ii. 653. + Du. wedden, to lay a wager; from O. Du. wæde, 'a pledge, a pawn,' Hezham. + Icel. wæda, to wager; from wæd, a pledge. + Dan. wædde, to wager. + Swed. wæda, to appeal; from wæd, a bet, an appeal. + G. wæden, to wager, from wæde, a wager. + Goth. ga-wædan, to pledge, betroth; from wæd, a pledge.

β . All from the Test. base WADYA, sb., a pledge; Fick, iii. 385. Further allied to Lithuan. wadati, to redeem a pledge; Lat. was (gen. was), a pledge; Gk. δ-ωδ-ω (for δ-ωδ-ω), the prize of a contest, gen. contr. to δ-ωδ-ω. = WADH, to carry home (hence to bear off a prize or pledge), to marry, Fick, l. 767, cf. Lithuan. was, pres. tense was, to marry, take home a bride, wedder, a conductor, guide, leader by the hand, Russ. wedi, to lead, conduct, Zend widhayati, he leads home, widhrye, marriageable (cited by Fick, l. 767), Skt. widhā, a bride. Dor. wedd-ut; wedd-ing, A. S. weddung, Gospel of Nicodemus, c. 7; also wedd-tach, q.v. Also see weggr, weggr, page (1), wegge.

WEDGE, a piece of metal or wood, thick at one end and sloping to a thin edge at the other. (E.) Also used to denote simply a mass of metal, as in Rich. III, l. 4. 26. M. E. wegge, Chaucer. On the Astrolabe, pt. I § 14. l. 3. = A. S. weg, a mass of metal; Sweet, A. S. Reader. 'Cuncus, weg;' Wright's Voc. ii. 13, col. 3. + Du. weg, wegge, a wedge. + Icel. weggr. + Dan. wegge. + Swed. weggr. + O. H. G. wizzi, weggi, M. H. G. wiche, a wedge; G. wache, a kind of loaf, from its shape (cf. prov. E. wig, a kind of cake). β. All from Teut. type WAG-YA, a wedge, Fick, iii. 283; from Teut. base WAG, to move, wag, shake, &c.; see Wag. Thus the sense seems to be 'a mover,' from its effect in splitting trees. Cf. Lithuan. wegre, a bent wooden peg for hanging things upon, also a spigot for a cask, also a wedge. Dor. wedge, verb.

WEDLOCK, marriage. (E.) M. E. wedlob (with long e), written wedloke, P. Plowman, B. ix. 113, 119; where some MSS. have wedlob. = A. S. wedde, in the sense of pledge; 'Arrabo, wedde,' Wright's Voc. l. 50, col. 1 = A. S. wed, a pledge; and lde, a sport, also a gift, in token of pleasure. Thus the sense is 'a gift given as a pledge, and in token of pleasure;' hence, the gift given to a bride. It was usual to make a present to the bride on the morning after marriage; cf. G. morngabe, a nuptial (lit. morning) gift. See Wed and Lark (3). And see Knowledge, which has a like suffix.

WEDNESDAY, the fourth day of the week. (E.) M. E. wednesday, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 154, where one MS. has wednesday. = A. S. Wōdenes dæg, rubric to Matt. v. 25. The change from ō to e is the usual vowel-change, when the vowel i follows; this vowel appears in the Icel. form. Wōdenes dag means 'day of Wōden,' after whom it was named; see Day. Cognate words are Du. woensdag, Icel. ōðinudagr, Swed. and Dan. onsdag (short for ednesday). The G. name is simply mittwoch (mid-week). β. The A. S. Wōden is cognate with Icel. Óðinn, O. H. G. Wōtan, Wōtan. The name signifies 'the furious,' i.e. the mighty warrior; from A. S. wid, raging, mad (cognate with Icel. óðr, Goth. wōds), whence M. E. wod, mad, a word which occurs as late as in Shakespeare, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 193; see Wood (3). ¶ It is remarkable that the Romans, whilst looking upon Wōden as the chief divinity of the Teutonic races, nevertheless identified him with Mercury; hence des Mercurii was translated into A. S. by Wōdenesdag. Cf. 'kollešu þeir Pál Óðin, en Barnabas fór' = they called Paul Óðinn, but Barnabas Thor; Icel. Bible, Acta, xiv. 12.

WEE, small, tiny. (Scand.?) 'A little wee face;' Merry Wives, l. 4. 22. M. E. wee, only as a sb., a bit. 'A little we,' a little bit, for a short space; Barbour, Bruce, vii. 182, xiii. 217. 'And behyrd hir a litill we It fell' = and it fell a little way behind her; id. xvii. 677. In all three passages it occurs in the same phrase, viz. 'a little we;' and in the last case we should now say 'a little way.' And as it is a sb., I believe (as Junius did) that it is nothing but the Scand. form of E. wey, derived from Dan. we, Swed. weg, Icel. wegr, a way. The loss of the guttural is seen in Danish. See Way. ¶ That the constant association of little with we (= way) should lead to the supposition that the words little and we are synonymous, seems natural enough; and we have the evidence of Barbour that the word is Northern. The above solution seems to me greatly preferable to the usual supposed connection with G. waug, little, which utterly fails to explain the three passages in Barbour, and further assumes an unaccountable loss of the letter w. And further, the above solution is strongly corroborated by the fact that wey-bit is still in use, in the North, in the sense of wee bit or little bit; see Halliwell.

WEED (1), any useless and troublesome plant. (E.) M. E. weed, Prompt. Parv. p. 519. = A. S. wēad, wēad; Grein, ii. 676. + O. Sax. wēad. Allied to Low G. wēden, pl. sb., the green stalks and leaves of turnips, &c.; Brem. Wörterbuch. Root unknown. Dor. wēad, verb. M. E. wēden, Palladius on Husbandry, i. 289; cf. Du. wēden, Low G. wēden (for wēden), to weed. Dor. wēad-y, Hamlet, iv. 7. 175.

WEED (2), a garment. (E.) Chiefly in the phr. 'a widow's weeds,' i.e. a widow's mourning apparel. Common in Shak. as a sug. sb., in the sense of garment, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 256, &c. M. E. wēde (disyllabic), Havelok, l. 94 = A. S. wēde, neut., also wēd, fem., a garment; Grein, ii. 642. + O. Fricic wēde, wēd. + O. Sax. wēdi; O. Du. wēde, 'a garment, a habit, or a vesture.' Hexham. + Icel. wēd, a piece of stuff, cloth; also, a garment. + O. H. G. wēit, wēit, clothing, armour. β. All from the Teut. type WAD1, a garment, lit. something which is wound or wrapped round, exactly as in 'wound wide enough to wrap a fairy in,' Shak. (as above). From Teut. base WAD, to bind, wind round; cf. Goth. ga-wadan, pt. 1. gawadā Mark, x. 9. O. H. G. wētan, to bind, yoke together; Fick, iii. 284. This Teut. base answers to Aryan WADH, appearing in Zend wadh, to clothe, cited by Fick;

cf. Lithuan. wadmi, I weave. γ. Again, the Aryan WADH, to wind round, clothe, is an extension from √WA, to bind, weave; just as WABH, to weave, is from the same root; Fick, l. 209, 203. See Weave, Withy, Wind (3), Wad, Wattle.

WEEK, a period of seven days. (E.) The vowel, in M. E., is very variable; we find wete, wite, on the one hand, and wede, wode, wede, on the other. In Chaucer, Six-text, Group A, 1539, we have wete, wite, as well as wode; Tyrwhitt, C. T. 1541, prints wete. 1. The forms wete, wite (together with mod. E. week) answer to A. S. wio or wio, of which the gen. wio occurs in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, l. 438, l. 23 (Eccl. Institutes, § 41). 2. The forms wede, wode, answer to A. S. wēde, wēde, Grein, ii. 744. We find the same change in A. S. widu, later form, wode, wood. + Du. wed. + Icel. wika. + Swed. woda. + O. H. G. woda, woda; but the M. H. G. form is wede, which is also the mod. G. form. Cf. Dan. weg (= weg), a week.

β. The prevalent Teut. type is WIKI, Fick, iii. 203. The Goth. wōd occurs only once, in Luke, l. 8, where the Gk. ἡ ῥῆξις ῥῆξις ἰσχυροῦς ἀβραῖμ (Lat. in ordine sicis sue) appears in Gothic as in wōden hūjis wōdis—in the order of his course. It is by no means clear what is the precise force of this Goth. wōd (which exactly answers in form to E. wed), and some have supposed that, after all, it was merely borrowed from Lat. wicis, which is, however, equivalent in this passage to hūjis, not to wōd. γ. It seems best to consider wed as a true Teut. word; perhaps it meant 'succession' or 'change,' and is related to Icel. wifa, to turn, return; see Week. Dor. wed-day, Icel. widudagr; wed-by.

WEEK, to suppose, imagine, think. (E.) M. E. wēen, Chaucer, C. T. 1655. = A. S. wēnan, to imagine, hope, expect; Grein, ii. 658. = A. S. wēn, expectation, supposition, hope; id. + Du. wēnen, to fancy; from wēn, conjecture. + Icel. wēna, to hope; from wēn, expectation. + G. wēnen; from wēn, O. H. G. wēn, sb. + Goth. wēnan, to expect, from wēn, expectation. β. From the sb. of which the Teut. type is WANI, expectation, hope; Fick, iii. 287. = Teut. base WAN, to strive after, try to get; id. 286. Hence A. S. wēn meant orig. 'a striving after,' and hence an expectation of obtaining. See Win.

WEEP, to wail, lament, shed tears. (E.) M. E. wēpen, orig. a strong verb, pt. 1. wēp, wēp, Chaucer, C. T. Six-text ed., Group D, l. 158, where only one MS. has wēp (disyllabic), for which Tyrwhitt erroneously prints wēp, C. T. 6170. = A. S. wēpan, pt. 1. wēp; Grein, ii. 661. The lit. sense is to cry aloud, raise an outcry, lament loudly; wēpan (for wēpian) is regularly formed, by the usual vowel-change, from wēp, a clamour, outcry, lament, Grein, ii. 732. + O. Sax. wēpan, to raise an outcry; from wēp, sb. + Goth. wēpan, to cry out. + O. H. G. wēpan, to lament, weep; from wēp, wēp, an outcry. + Icel. wēpa, to shout, cry; from wēp, a shout. β. All from the Teut. base WŌPA, an outcry, loud lament. = √WĀP, to cry aloud, as seen in Russ. wopite, to sob, lament, wail, a parallel form to √WĀK, as in Skt. wop, to cry, howl; allied to WAK, to cry out; see Voloc. ¶ This A. S. wēp, &c. is quite distinct from E. wēp, in which the initial w is unoriginal, but the ē essential. Dor. wēper, wēping.

WEET, to know; the same as Wit (1), q.v.

WEEVIL, a small kind of beetle very destructive to grain. (E.) M. E. wēvel, wēvel (with u=v), spelt wēvel, wēvel in Prompt. Parv., pp. 523, 531. = A. S. wēvel, to translate Lat. scarabæus (sic), Wright's Gloss. l. 281, col. 2; spelt wēvil in a very early gloss of the 8th century, where it translates Lat. cantharis, i.e. cantharis, a beetle; Wright's Voc. ii. 103, col. 1. We even find the orig. form wēvle; 'Scarabæus, wēvle-wēvle,' Wright's Voc. l. 77; where wēvle means wēvle. + Icel. wēvil, in comp. wēvill, a dung-beetle. + O. Du. wēvil, 'a little worme eating corne or beanes, or a weevil;' Hexham. + O. H. G. wēvil, M. H. G. wēvil; cited by Fick and E. Müller. β. The Teut. type is WEBILA, a beetle, Fick, iii. 289; a dimin. form of WEB-YA, i.e. A. S. wēvle. From the Teut. base WAB, in the sense 'to move to and fro;' cf. G. wāben, to move, wave, float. The A. S. wēvle prob. meant 'wiggler;' see Wave. γ. Further allied to Lithuan. wēvėles, a chaffer, winged insect; in this case, we may explain it as 'flatterer.'

WEFT, the threads woven into and crossing the warp. (E.) M. E. wēft, Wyclif, Exod. xxxix. 3, earlier version, where the later version has wēp. = A. S. wēft, wēfte; 'Deponile, wēft, vel wēfte;' Wright's Voc. l. 59, col. 2; and again 'Deponile, wēfte' in a gloss of the 8th century, id. ii. 106, col. 1. + Icel. wēft; also wēfta, wēfta. β. The Teut. type is WEF-TA, Fick, iii. 289, lit. 'a thing woven;' formed with participial suffix -ta from wēf-an, to weave; see Weave.

WEIGH, to balance, ponder, to have weight, be heavy. (E.) M. E. wēghen, wēghen, wēghen, wēghen, Chaucer, C. T. 456. = A. S. wēgan, to carry, bear; also, intrans. to move; Grein, ii. 655. From the sense of 'carry' we pass to that of 'raise' or 'lift,' as when we say 'to weigh anchor;' so also Cowper says: 'Weigh the vessel up,' Loss of the Royal George, st. 7. From the sense of raising or lifting, we pass to that of weighing + Du. wegen, to weigh + Icel. vega, to move, carry, lift, weigh. + Dan. væge, to weigh. + Swed. væga, to weigh: væga upp, to weigh up, to lift. + G. wegen, to move, wegen, to move gently, rock; wægan, to weigh; O. H. G. wegan, to move, bear, weigh. Cf. Goth. gawegan, to shake about. β. The A. S. wegan is a strong verb; pt. t. wæg, pp. wegen; so also is the Icel. vega; pt. t. veð, pp. vegan. All from the Teut. base WAG, to carry, move, weigh, answering to Aryan WAGH, to carry, as in Skt. vah, Lat. vahere; see Vehicle. Der. weigh-t, M. E. weight, F. Plowman, B. xiv. 292, also spelt wight. Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1285. A. S. ge wæht, Gen. xxiii. 16, cognate with O. Da. wæht, gewæht (Hætham), Du. gewicht, G. gewicht, Icel. vægt, Dan. wægt, Swed. vægt; whence wight-y, spelt wyghty in Palgrave; wight-i-ly, -ness. Also wag, q. v.; wagg-on, wain, wain-trail, way, wight, whit.

WEIR, WEAR, a dam in a river. (E.) M. E. weir; dat. were, Chaucer, Parliament of Foules, 128. = A. S. weor, a weir, dam, Atlied, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 38, ed. Sweet, p. 278. l. 16; the pp. geweorð, dammed up, occurs in the line above. The lit. sense is 'defence,' hence a fence, dam; closely allied to A. S. wearian, to defend, protect, also (as above) to dam up, Grein, ii. 662; allied to A. S. weor, vary. = WAR, to defend; see Wary. + Icel. wirr, a fenced in landing-place, vor, a fishing-station. + G. wehr, a defence; cf. wehren, to defend, also to check, constrain, control; müß-wehr, a mill-dam.

WEIRD, fate, destiny. (E.) As an adj. in Shak. Mach. i. 3. 32; i. 3. 8; ii. 1. 20; iii. 4. 133; iv. 1. 136, where it means 'subservient to destiny.' But it is properly a sb. M. E. wirde, wyrde; 'And out of wo into wele your wyrdes shal change' = and out of wo into weal your destinies shall change; P. Plowman, C. xiii. 209. = A. S. weyrd, also weord, weord, fate, destiny, also one of the 'Norms' or Fates, an extremely common word in poetry, Grein, ii. 760. Formed, by vowel-change from w to y (or, in the form wærd, without vowel-change), from wærd, stem of the pt. t. pl. of wæran, to be, become, take place, become, come to pass; see Worth (3). The lit. sense is 'that which happens,' or 'that which comes to pass;' hence fate, destiny. + Icel. wærd, fate, one of the three Norms or Fates; from wærd, stem of pt. t. pl. of wæra to become. + M. H. G. wærd, fate, death; from wærd, stem of pt. t. of wæren, to become.

WELCOME, received gladly, causing gladness by coming. (E.; or perhaps Scand.) Now used as an adj., and derived, in popular etymology, from the pp. comes of the verb to come; but, as a fact, it was orig. a sb., and derived from the infia. mood of the verb, as will appear. Again, the former part of the verb was not at first the adv. well, but related rather to well; the lit. sense was 'will-comer,' i. e. one who comes so as to please another's will. It makes no great difference as regards the etymology, but it is best to be correct. Moreover, we can explain how the word came by its new meaning, viz. through Scand. influence; see below. M. E. welcom, welcome, Ancren Riwe, p. 204. l. 17; later welcomes, P. Plowman, ii. 232. = A. S. welcama, masc. sb., one who comes so as to please another, Grein, ii. 705. = A. S. wel-, prefix, allied to willa, will, pleasure; and coma, a comer, one who comes, formed with suffix -a of the agent, from coman, to come; Grein, ii. 706; l. 169. See Will and Coma. + G. wilkommen, welcome, a less correct form of O. H. G. wilkommo, from wiljo, will, pleasure, and kommo (G. kommen), to come. Der. welcomes, vb., M. E. welcomen, Layamon, 10957, from A. S. wilcomian, to welcome, make welcome, Matt. v. 47. β. The above account shows the true origin of the E. word; but the change in meaning was due to the Scand. word, which is really composed of the adv. well and the pp. come; cf. Icel. welkominn, welcome, from wel, well, and kominn, pp. of kom, to come. So also Dan. wilkommen, welcome, Swed. wilkommen. Perhaps it would be as well to take the Scand. word as the true source of the modern word welcome, and to sever its connection with the A. S. usage.

WELD (1), to beat metal together. (Scand.) The final d is extraneous, like d after l in elder, a tree, sider, a tree, and Shakespeare's elder-buffet for alder-buffet, 3 Hen. VI, l. 1. 28. It is only a particular use of the word well, verb, to spring up as a fountain, lit. to boil up. It meant (1) to boil, (2) to heat to a high degree, (3) to beat heated iron. We find this particular use in Wyclif, Isaiah, ii. 4: where the earlier version has 'thel shal bete togidere their swerdes into shares,' the later version has 'thel schulen wellie togidere her swerdes in-to scharris.' See further under Well (1). The word is certainly Scand., not E.; for (1) the Swed. wälla (lit. to well) is only used in the sense 'to weld,' as in välja järn, to weld iron (Widgren); the sense 'to well' appearing in the comp. vppvälla, to boil up. (2) The extraneous d actually occurs in Danish, in which language it is not uncommon; cf. Dan. væld, a spring, vælde, to well up. (3) Sweden exports large quantities of iron and steel. β. The process of welding iron is named, in many languages, from the word for boiling; cf. Illyrian variti, to boil, weld iron, Lettish värīt, to boil, värītīt, to weld, &c.; Wedgwood. These words are from the same root.

WELD (2), dyer's weed; Ranula laterala. (E.) M. E. welde; 'Madyr, welde, or woad' = madder, weld, or woad; Chaucer, Ætas Prima, l. 17; pr. in App. to tr. of Boethius, ed. Morris, p. 180. 'Welde, or wolds;' Prompt. Parv. pp. 320, 322. According to Cockayne, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 249, it is spelt walde in MS. Harl. 3288. In Lowland Scotch, it is wald; see Jamieson. It appears to be an E. word; perhaps allied to Wall (2), from the notion of boiling (for dyeing). It is the G. wam, Du. woum, Swed., Dan. wau; also Span. gualda, F. gualde (of Teut. orig.). ¶ Mabu (in Webster) identifies it with woad; I can see no connection. See Woad.

WELFARE, prosperity (E.) Lit. a state of farung or going on well. M. E. welfare, Chaucer, C. T. 11150; compounded of wel, adv. well, and fare = A. S. faru, sb., lit. a journey, from faran, to fare, go. See Wall (1) and Fare. Cf. Icel. veiferð, a well-doing.

WELKIN, the sky, the region of clouds. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, l. 2. 101, &c. M. E. welkin, as printed in Tyrwhitt's edition of Chaucer, C. T. 9000, where the MSS. have welke, welken, welkyn, Welkyn, Sax-text, Group E. 2124. In P. Plowman, B. xvii. 160, we have welke, welken, we welken, welken in the various MSS. It thus appears that welke = welken, which is an older spelling; in Layamon, 4575, 23947, we have welken, welken, welken, prob. a pl. form, and signifying 'the clouds' = A. S. welcun, clouds, pl. of welcun, a cloud, Grein, ii. 731. + O. Sax. welka, a cloud, + G. wölke, O. H. G. welchan, a cloud. β. Of uncertain origin. Some have connected it with A. S. gewelle, a rolling about, as in þu gewelle, the rolling of the waves, Grein, i. 477; from welcan, to roll, walk; see Walk. There is no proof of this; if it were true, welken would mean 'that which rolls about.' γ. But Fick, iii. 298, connects it with G. welk, which (though it now means dried) formerly meant moist, damp, soft; and these he further compares with Lithuan. wilgyti, to moisten, Russ. vlaga, moisture, vlaziti (vlaziti), to moisten. If this be right, then welken meant orig. 'a mist.' This seems the more probable solution. ¶ Fick also cites A. S. welan, tepid; it is uncertain whether there is any connection.

WELL (1), in a good state, excellently. (E.) M. E. wel, Chaucer, C. T. 4728. = A. S. wel, Grein, ii. 656; also spelt well. + Du. wel. + Icel. wel, sometimes wal. + Dan. wal. + Swed. wäl. + Goth. wella. + G. well, wäl; O. H. G. wella, wäl. β. The Goth. wella is abnormal; the other forms answer to a Teut. type WELA or WALA, well; Fick, iii. 296. The orig. sense is 'agreeably,' or suitably to one's will or wish; from the Teut. base WAL, to wish (whence numerous Teut. derivatives proceed), answering to Aryan WAR or WAL, to wish, will, choose, appearing in Lat. wel-s, I wish, wel-s, to wish, Rum. wal-in, sb., will, Gk. βούλωμαι, I wish, Gk. βούλωμαι, comp. adj., better, Skt. wra, better, wra, a wish, wri, to choose; see Will. Der. wel-behaved, Merry Wives, ii. 1. 59; -beloved, Jul. Cæs. iii. 2. 180; -born, -bred, -disposed; -favoured, Two Gent. ii. 1. 54; -meaning, Rich. II. ii. 1. 128; -most, 3 Hen. VI. iii. 3. 67; -right; -spoken, Rich. III. i. 1. 29; -ness, Merch. Ven. i. 2. 51; and numerous other compounds. And see wel-come, wel-fare; also well, wel-ld.

WELL (2), a spring, fountain of water. (E.) M. E. welle (dusyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 2689. = A. S. wella, also well, Grein, ii. 657; also spelt wylla, wylla, wyll, id. 726. = A. S. wellan (strong verb, pt. t. well, pp. wellan), to well up, boil, id. 672; the mod. E. verb well being derived, not from this strong verb, but from its derivative welian or wyllian, which is a secondary or weak verb, so that the pt. t. in mod. E. is welled. + Icel. well, ebullition; from wella, to well, boil, pt. t. well, pp. wellan (strong verb); whence also wella, weak verb, to make to boil. + Du. wel, a spring. + Dan. wäl (for well), a spring. + G. welle, a wave, surge; from wellan, to undulate, boil, babble up, of which the O. H. G. pt. t. was wäl; Fick, iii. 300. β. All from Teut. base WAL, to turn round, WALL, to boil up, undulate; from the Aryan WAR, to turn round, roll, as in Skt. wal, to move to and fro, Russ. wäliti, to roll. See further under Walk. Der. well, verb, M. E. wollen, verb, in P. Plowman, B. xix. 373, from A. S. wollan, wyllan; we find 'Ferneo, is welle,' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupatza, p. 256. l. 14, in the Royal MS. (see the footnote), though most MSS. have is welle. Der. well-spring, M. E. wellespring; Genesis and Ezodus, l. 1243. And see wald (1).

WELLAWAY, an exclamation of great sorrow. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 8. 46. M. E. welaway, Chaucer, C. T. 13048 (Group B, 1308); the MSS. have welaway, welawen, and (corruptly) well away. wel away, showing that some scribes mistook it to mean 'weal [is] away,' i. e. prosperity is over! 'Welawen, and welawen' = alas! and alas! Ancren Riwe, p. 88. l. 7; welawel, id. p. 274. l. 2. 'We is us þat we weren born! Welawen!' Havelok, 462; cf. l. 570. Written welawen wri, Lavaucon, 8031; welawen, 7971; also welawen, we la (without wel or we following), 3456. It stands for wel is we or we la (we la we) = A. S. wé lá wé, written wald wé, alas!

lit. 'woe! lo! woe!' Elfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxix. § 1 (b. iv. met. 4).) we also find weld, Mark, xv. 29, and simply wel, Mark, xiv. 21. — A. S. wel, woe; ld, lo; wel, woe. See Woe and Lo.

¶ The expression was early misunderstood; and was even turned into wellday, Merry Wives, iii. 2. 106; in which unmeaning expression, though intended as an exclamation of sorrow, we seem to have wel in place of wel, and day introduced without any sense; probably atlat the day also owed its existence to this unmeaning corruption.

WELSH, pertaining to Wales. (E.) Welsh properly means 'foreign.' M. E. welsh, P. Plowman, B. v. 324; Welsh is still in use as a proper name. — A. S. welisc, welisc; 'þa welisc menn' — the foreigners, i. e. Normans, A. S. Chron. an. 1048; see Earle's edition, p. 178, l. 15; 'þa welisc menn,' ibid., l. 24; and see the note. Formed, with suffix -isc (= E. -ish) and vowel-change, from A. S. weld, a foreigner. See Walnut. Der. Welsh-rabbit, a Welsh dainty, i. e. not a rabbit, but fennel cheese; this is a mild joke, just as a Norfolk-sheep is not a capon at all, but a red-herring (Halliwell). Those who cannot see the joke pretend that rabbit is a corruption of rare bit, which is as pointless and stupid as it is incapable of proof.

WELT, a narrow strip of leather round a shoe. (C.) The old sense seems to be hem or fringe. Cotgrave explains F. ortel by 'a little hemme, scridge, welt, border;' and the verb ortier by 'to hemme, scridge, border, welt the edges or sides of.' 'Hane a care of the skurt, kringes, and weltis of their garments,' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. vii. c. 51. 'Welt of a garment, ortel [F. ortel]; Weltis of a shoe, ortelours;' Palgrave. M. E. welta. 'Weltis of a schoo, In cucium, vel intercurium;' Prompt. Parv. 'Hoc pedaso, Anglice wampy [a vamp]; Hoc intercurium, Anglice weltis;' Wright's Voc. l. 201. Palgrave also has the verb; 'I welta, as a garment in, je curle. This kyrtell is well welted, es curat icy est bien world. In a very obscure line in P. Plowman, B. v. 199 (C. vii. 205), two MSS. have welte, with the double meaning of welt or hem of a garment. A Celtic word; not found in other Test. languages. — W. gweld, a hem, welt, gwelta, the welt of a shoe; gweldu, to welt, hem; gweltais, to form a welt; Gael. belt, a welt of a shoe, a border, a belt, baltach, a welt, belt, border; Irish belt, a belt, welt, border; baltach, welted, striped, baltach, a welt, border, the welt of a shoe. It appears to be much the same as Belt, q. v. Der. welt, verb. ¶ I do not see how to connect it with M. E. welten, which does not mean to turn over, as seems to have been supposed, but to overturn, upset, overthrow, roll over; the E. word really connected with M. E. welten being weltter, q. v.

WELTER, to wallow, roll about. (E.) Surrey has 'wallring tongue,' i. e. rolling or lolling tongues of snakes, tr. of Virgil's 2nd book of the Æneid, l. 267. 'I walter, I tumble, je me voyure; Hye you, your horse is walteringe yonder, haster vous, vostre cheval se voyure la;' Palgrave. 'I walter, je wure; Thou walterest in the myer, as thou were a sowe;' Palgrave. Walter and walter are frequentative forms, with the usual suffix -er, from M. E. walten, to roll over, overturn, hence to totter, fall, throw, rouse, rush, &c. Destruction of Troy, 1956, 3810, 4627, 4633, 4891, pt. 1. walt, id. 4418, 4891, &c. We even find the sb. walter, a waltering, id. 3699. — A. S. walten, a strong verb, of which the pp. gewalten (for gewalten) occurs in the Lindisfarne MS., in the O. Northumb. translation of Matt. xvii. 14, where omnes gewalten occurs as a gloss on percutiamus; hence the secondary verb walten, to roll round, Grein, ii. 757, also the adj. wunant, steady, lit. 'not tottering.' A. S. Chron. an. 897, ed. Earle, p. 95, l. 14, and the note. — Teut. base WALT, a parallel form to WALK, to roll about; see Walk. ¶ Icel. waltast, to rotate, to roll over, as a horse does; causal of walta, pt. t. walt, to roll. ¶ Dan. walte, to roll, overturn. ¶ Swed. wältra, to roll, wallow, walter; frequentative of wälta, to roll. ¶ G. wälzen, to roll, wallow, walter; from wälzen, to roll. ¶ Goth. us-wäljan, to subvert. See Waltz.

WEN, a fleshy tumour. (E.) M. E. wenne; 'Wenne, wenne, gubbe;' Prompt. Parv. — A. S. wenn; acc. pl. wennas, A. S. Læchdoms, ii. 12, l. 23; nom. pl. wennas, id. 46, l. 21. ¶ Du. wen. ¶ Low G. wenn; wenn-bulen (wen-bulls); prov. G. wenne, wenne, wenne, cited by E. Muller. ¶ The orig. sense was prob. 'pain,' or painful swelling; it is perhaps allied to Goth. wennan, to suffer, as in agnus wunnans — to suffer afflictions, 1 Tim. v. 70; cf. wunne, affliction, suffering, 2 Tim. iii. 11. So also Icel. winn, though cognate with E. wen, means not only to work, labour, toil, but also to suffer, and wenna it is to do bodily harm to another. See Win.

WENCH, a young girl, vulgar woman. (E.) Common in prov. E. without any depreciatory intention; as, 'a fine young wench.' 'Temperance was a delicate wench,' Temp. ii. f. 43. M. E. wenche, Chaucer, C. T. 3254; P. Plowman, B. v. 364. We also find the form wenche, Ancren Riwle, p. 334, note 4. ¶ It is to be particularly noted that wenche is the earlier form; Stratmann gives no references for wenche earlier than Will. of Palerne, l. 1901, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 24, and Poems and Lives of the Saints, ed. Furnivall, xvi.

98, where, however, the form printed is wenche. But wenche (spelt wenche) occurs in the Ormulum, 3356, where it is used of a male infant, viz. in the account of the annunciation of Christ's birth to the shepherds. The orig. sense was simply 'infant,' without respect of sex, but, as the word also implies 'weak' or 'tender,' it was naturally soon restricted to the weaker sex. The M. E. wenche resulted from wenche by loss of l, which was doubtless thought to be a dimin. suffix; yet in this particular instance, it is not so. The sb. wenche, an infant, is closely allied to the M. E. adj. wenche, tottery, unsteady, Reliquie Antiquæ, l. 221. — A. S. wenche, a maid, a daughter (Somner); unauthorised. But we find the pl. wenche, children (of either sex), Eoed. xxi. 4. Allied to wenche, wenche, weak, Grein, ii. 659; wenche, wenche, unstable, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. vii. § 2 (b. ii. pr. 1). ¶ The lit. sense of wenche is 'tottery,' whence the senses unstable, weak, infantine, easily followed. Formed, with A. S. suffix -e (due to Aryan suffix -a, March, A. S. Grammar, § 228), from Teut. base WANK, to bend sideways, nod, totter, as in G. wanken, to totter, reel, stagger, waddle, flinch, shrink, M. H. G. wanken (causal form), to render unsteady. ¶ M. H. G. wenche, O. H. G. wenche, unstable; mod. G. (provincial) wenche, 'tottering, unsteady,' Flügel. See further under Wink.

WEND, to go, take one's way. (E.) Now little used, except in the pt. t. went, which is used in place of the pt. t. of go. When used, it is gen. in the phr. 'to wend one's way;' but Shak. twice has simply wend, Com. of Errors, i. 1. 158, Mida. Nt. Dr. ii. 2. 372. M. E. wenden, Chaucer, C. T. 16. — A. S. wenden, (1) trans. to turn; (2) intrans. to turn oneself, proceed, go; common in both senses, Grein, ii. 659. The pt. t. was wende, which became wente in M. E., and is now went. The lit. sense was orig. 'to make to wind,' and it is the causal of wand; formed, by vowel-change of a to e, from A. S. wand, pt. t. of wenden, to wind. ¶ Du. wenden, to turn, to tack; causal of wenden. ¶ Icel. wenda, to wend, turn, change; causal of winda. ¶ Dan. wende, caus. of wende. ¶ Swed. wanda, caus. of wanda. ¶ Goth. wandjan, caus. of wendan. ¶ G. wenden, caus. of wenden. See Wind (2).

WERE, pl. of was; also as subj. sing. and pl. See Was.

WERWOLF, a man-wolf. (E.) On the subject of werwolves, i. e. men supposed to be metamorphosed into wolves, see pref. to William of Palerne, otherwise called William and the Werwolf, p. xxvi; where the etymology is discussed. Cf. Gk. λύτροποιος, i. e. wolf-man. M. E. werwolf, Will. of Palerne, 80, &c. — A. S. wer-wolf, a werwolf; as an epithet of the devil (meaning fierce despoiler), Laws of Cant., § 26, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, l. 374. Better spelt wer-wulf. — A. S. wer, a man; and wulf, a wolf. ¶ G. würwolf, a werwolf; M. H. G. werwolf (cited by E. Muller); from M. H. G. wer, a man; and wulf, a wolf. This was Latinised as garulphus or gorulphus, whence O. F. garul (Burguy), mod. F. leop-garul, i. e. wolf-man-wolf, the word leop being prefixed because the sense of the final -u had been lost. B. For the latter syllable, see Wolf. The former syllable occurs also in Icel. wer, a man, Goth. wair, which is further related to Lat. uir, Lithuan. uiras, Irish fiar, Skt. viru, Gk. viru; see Hero and Virile.

WEST, the quarter where the sun sets. (E.) M. E. west, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 113. — A. S. west, Grein, ii. 667, where it occurs as an adv., with the senses 'westward'; we also find westan, adv., from the west, id. 668; west-dæl, the west part, west-ende, the west end, west-mot, most in the west. ¶ Du. west, adj. and adv. ¶ Icel. west, sb., the west. ¶ Dan. and Swed. west, sb. ¶ G. west (whence F. ouest). B. All from Teut. type WESTA, west, orig. an adv., as in A. S.; Fick, iii. 30. Allied to Gk. westra, a house; wastu, a dwelling-place, a house, night. The allusion is to the apparent resting-place or abiding-place of the sun at night; from WAS, to dwell, whence Skt. was, to dwell, to pass the night. From the same root we have Icel. wes, an abode, dwelling, esp. a lodging-place, whence weste, to lodge; also Gk. westra, a city; also Gk. westra, Lat. vesper, evening. See Was and Vesper. Der. west-ward, A. S. weste-ward, adj., Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xvi. § 4 (b. ii. met. 6); west-orn (see the suffix -orn explained under North); west-orn-ly (short for west-orn-ly).

WET, very moist, rainy. (E.) M. E. wet (with long e), spelt wete in The Castle of Love, l. 1433 (Stratmann); whence pl. wete (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1282, rhyming with grate, pl. of grate, great. — A. S. wet, Grein, ii. 651. ¶ Icel. wettr. ¶ Dan. wedd. ¶ Swed. wet. B. All from Teut. base WATA, wet, Fick, iii. 284; from the same source as Teut. WATRA, water. — WAD, to wet, or spring up (as water). See Water. Der. wet, verb, A. S. wetian (Grein); wet, sb., A. S. wetia (Grein); wet-ash, wet-ow; wet-hod, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 161. From the same root are ett-er, wet-ah-ate, hydr-a, hyd-rant-ic, hyd-ro-gm, &c.

WETHER, a castrated ram. (E.) M. E. wether, Chaucer, C. T. 3249. — A. S. wether, Pa. xviii. 1, ed. Spelman (marginal reading). ¶ O. Sax. wether, wether; Kleinere Altiederdeutsche Denkmäler, ed. Heyne, p. 186. ¶ Icel. esttr. ¶ Dan. wæder, wæder. ¶ Swed.

wider. † G. widder, O. H. G. widar. † Goth. witarus, a lamb, John. i. 29. † All from Teut. base WETHRU or WETHRA, a lamb, Fick, iii. 307. The orig. sense was doubtless 'a yearling,' as the word corresponds very closely to Lat. witulus, a calf, Skt. wetas, a calf, allied to Skt. wisara, Gk. ivos, a year. See Veterinary and Veal. ¶ We may note the distinction between weather and wether by observing that the former is wea-ther (with Aryan suffix -ter), whilst the latter is weth-er (with suffix -er), the th answering to the s in wit-ulus.

WEY, a heavy weight. (E.) The weight varies considerably, from 2 cwt. to 3 cwt. M. E. weye, P. Plowman, B. v. 93. The lit. sense is merely 'weight.'—A. S. wéga; 'Pondus, by Gen. 38. 26. wéga, i. e. burden or weight; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 58, l. 17.—A. S. wéga, stem of pl. of pt. t. of wegan, to bear, carry, weigh. See Wegh.

WH.

WH. This is distinct from w, just as th is from t. The mod. E. wh is represented by hw in A. S., and by hv in Icelandic; it answers to Lat. qu, and Aryan kw or k.

WHACK, to beat; see Thwack.

WHALE, the largest of sea-animals. (E.) M. E. whal, Chaucer, C. T. 7519; qual, Havelok, 753.—A. S. hwæl, Wright's Voc. i. 58. † Du. walvisch, i. e. whale-fish. † Icel. hvalr. † Dan. and Swed. hval. † G. wal, walvisch. † The Teut. type is HWALA, Fick, iii. 93. The name was orig. applied to any large fish, including the walrus, grampus, porpoise, &c. Thus Ælfric explains hwæl by 'balena, vel cete, vel pistrix;' the sense is 'roller,' and it is closely allied to whale. The rolling of porpoises must have been early noticed. Cf. also E. cylinder; see Wheel and Cylinder. ¶ Whale and balena have nothing in common but the letter l, and cannot be compared. Der. whale-bone, formerly whales bone, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 1. 15, where the reference is to the ivory of the walrus' tusk, M. E. whale bon, Layamon, 3363; whaling, whaler. Also whal-run, q. v.

WHAP, to beat, flutter. (E.) Sometimes spelt whop; and, less correctly, wap. Halliwell has wap, 'to beat; to flutter, to beat the wings, to move in any violent manner;' also wapping (for whopping), 'quaking, used by Batman, 1382.' M. E. whappen, to palpitate, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 57. Legend of Good Women, 865; Wyclif, Tobit, vi. 4, earlier version. From a base WAP, to throb; see Quaver. Allied to Low G. quabbeln, to palpitate, with which cf. E. wobble. Note also W. chwapp, a sudden stroke, chwappio, to strike, to slap. Der. wobble. And see wap.

WHARF (1), a place on the shore for lading and unlading goods. (E.) Spelt warf in Fabyan's Chron. an. 1543, where we read that 'the maior waste to the wende-warfe, and sold to the poore people billet and faggot,' because of the severe frost. It is not easy to find an earlier instance; but Palsgrave has wharfs. Blount, ed. 1694, explains wharf as meaning, not only a landing-place, but also 'a working-place for shipwrights;' see below.—A. S. hwarf, a dam or bank to keep out water; 'ja gyrnde hé þat hé monte macian foras getu Midryþe eker anns hwarf við þon wodaþa to werranie,' which Thorpe translates by 'then desired he that he might make a wharf over against Mildred's field as a protection against the ford,' where 'ford' is a conjectural translation of wodaþa; Diplomatarium Ævi Anglo-Saxonici (A. S. 1038), p. 381; and again, 'þat land and þane hwarf þarto' = the land and the wharf thereto; id. (an. 1042), p. 361. The orig. sense seems to have been a bank of earth, used at first as a dam against a flood; the present use is prob. of Dutch or Scand. origin. The lit. sense is 'a turning,' whence it came to mean a dam, from its turning the course of water; the allied A. S. hwarf not only means 'a turning,' but also 'a change,' and even 'a space or distance,' as in the O. Northumb. tr. of Luke, xxiv. 13; also 'a crowd,' Grein, ii. 118; cf. hwarfian, to turn about. The best example is seen in the comp. wea-hwarf, the sea-shore, Grein, ii. 333.—A. S. hwarf, pt. of hwarfian, to turn, turn about, Grein, ii. 119. † Du. warf, a wharf, yard; also a turn, time; Hexham has warf, 'a wharf, or a working-place for shipwrights or otherwise.' † Icel. hwarf, a turning away; also, a shelter; from hwarf, pt. t. of hwarfia, to turn. † Dan. warf, a wharf, a dock-yard. † Swed. warf, a shipbuilder's yard; O. Swed. hwarf, ships-hwarf (ship's wharf), the same (Ihre). The O. Swed. hwarf also meant a turn or time, order, stratum, or layer; Ihre, i. 945; from hwarfian, to turn, return. B. It thus appears that, even in A. S., this difficult word, with a great range of senses, meant not only a turning, reversion, but also space, distance, turning-place, dam, or shore. Cf. prov. E. wharfstead, a ford in a river (Halliwell). In Swedish and Dutch it had a yet narrower sense, that of 'ship-builder's yard,' so called from its being situate on a shore. And from this sense to that of 'landing-place' the step is not a long one. C. The A. S. strong verb hwarfian, answering to Goth. hwairban, to turn oneself about (hence to walk), and to Icel. hwarfia, is from the Teut. base HWARB, to turn, turn about, Fick, i. 93. This is an extension of HWAR=KWAR, as seen in Lat. curvus, curved; see Curve. Another form of HWAR is HWAL, as seen in Whale, Wheel. ¶ There is no reason for introducing confusion by comparing G. wurfen, to throw, which is allied to E. warp, and therefore bears no resemblance to hwarf either initially or finally. Such confusion is natural in High German, where the words wurf, a wharf, dock-yard, wurf, a bank, a wharf, probably borrowed from Dutch and Danish, bear a striking resemblance to wurfen, to throw, cast, or fling. But in E., Da., and Scand. there is no such confusion; though I regret to say I have connected Goth. hwairban with G. wurfen in my Gothic Dict., by an oversight, though in another place I rightly connect G. wurfen with Goth. hwairpan. Der. wharf-aga, Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 135; wharf-ing-or, which occurs (according to Blount, ed. 1674) anno 7 Edw. VI, cap. 7, a corruption of wharfager, just as messager is of messager.

WHARF (2), the bank of a river. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 5. 33; Antony, ii. 2. 218. I once proposed to identify this with the Herefordshire worth, a flat meadow close to a stream, from A. S. worth, a shore, bank, Matt. xiii. 2, allied to A. S. wea, Icel. we, the sea. In this case we should suppose wharf to stand for worth. B. But the occurrence of wea-hworf, the sea-shore (for which see Grein, ii. 333), justifies Shakespeare's spelling, and shows that the present word is only a peculiar sense of WHARF (1), q. v.

WHAT, neuter of Who, q. v. Der. what-aver, what-so-ever; what-not, a piece of furniture for holding anything, whence the name.

WHEAL (1), a pimple. (E.) Not to be confused with weal, another spelling of wale, the mark caused by a stripe; for which see Wale. A whéal is a swelling, pimple, caused by ill-health. It occurs frequently in Holland, tr. of Piny, b. xxii. c. 25, where is mention of 'pushes, whéals, and blains,' and of 'pushes and angry whéals, &c.; a push being a pustule, still in use in Cornish. M. E. whéale; 'Whale, whéalle, whéol, or whéalle, quáls, sores, Pustula;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. pl. whéalle, Chaucer, C. T. 634.—A. S. hwéala, a wheal; an unauthorized word, due to Sommer. Eitmtiller cites A. S. hwéal, with a reference to Ælfric's Glossary; but Wright prints it hwéol; 'Lotium, hwéol,' Wright's Voc. i. 46, l. 7; and the word is very doubtful. There is also a verb hwéalian, to wither, or pine away, respecting which all that is known is that it occurs in sect. 15 of the Liber Scintillarum (unprinted), as follows: 'Unde bonus proficit, inde invidus contabescit,' glossed by 'þanon se goda framaf, þanon se andiga hwéalef.' Cf. Icel. hwéala, 'the skin of a cyclopterus (sucking-fish) or whale;' which is a curious definition. Also W. chwéaler, a maggot, wheal, pimple. More light is desired. The M. E. whéalle, a pimple, is clearly a dimin. form; hence whéall, Hen. V. iii. 6. 108.

WHEAL (2), a mine. (C.) Still common in Cornwall.—Corn. hwéol, a work, a mine; also written whéol, whéol, whéol; Williams, Corn. Dict. Williams compares it with W. chwéol, a turn, a course, a while, chwéol, to turn, revolve, run a course, bustle; cf. also W. chwéol, a course, turn. Perhaps related to E. whéol.

WHEAT, the name of a grain used for making bread. (E.) M. E. whéate, Chaucer, C. T. 3986.—A. S. hwéat; Grein, ii. 117. † Du. wente, went. † Icel. hwéiti. † Dan. hwéat. † Swed. hwéat. † G. waisen. † Goth. hwéitans. (The Lithuan. hwétya, wheat, is borrowed from Teutonic.) B. All from a Teut. type HWAITYA, wheat (Fick, iii. 94); lit. 'that which is white;' so named from the whiteness of the meal. See White. Der. whéat-an, A. S. hwéatan, John, xii. 24; whéat-fy; hæc-whéat. Perhaps whéat-er, the name of a small bird (Phillips), unless it be a corruption; Halliwell gives whéat-er, to complain, whéat-erich, a young partridge; it is just possible that whéat-er is for whéat-er=whéat-er; cf. tuttler, whéatle; if so, the word is of imitative origin.

WHEELDE, to cajole, flatter. (G.?) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1, l. 760. In Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act i. sc. 1, we find: 'I must wheelde her.' Blount, ed. 1674, notes it as a new word, saying: 'Wheald in the British tongue signifies a story, whence probably our late word of fancy, and signifies to draw one in by fair words or subtil insinuation, &c. He is referring to W. chwéald, a mying, sentence, fable, story, tale, chwéald, to gossip, chwéald, to tell a fable; but this is not a satisfactory explanation, nor does it account for the long e. It seems more likely that the word should be wéald, and that it is from G. wéaldin, to wag the tail, to fan; whence the notion of flattering or paying attention may have arisen. Wéaldin is from the sb. wéald, a fan, tail, brush, M. H. G. wéald, O. H. G. wéald, a tail. B. The orig. sense of wéald is perhaps a winnowing-fan; it may be allied to wéald, to blow, from wa, to blow; see Wind. By way of illustration, Wedgwood compares Dan. logre, to wag the tail, to fawn upon one; also Icel. flætra to wag the tail, fawn upon one (but the Oxford Dict. does not give the former of these senses). Der. wærdl-or.

WHEEL, a circular frame turning on an axle. (E.) M. E. wheel, Wyclif, James, iii. 6. — A. S. hwæll, Grein, ii. 119. Hwæll is a shortened form of hwæwoll, Pt. LXXIII. 13, ed. Spelman; it is also spelt hwæll, Elfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxix. § 7 (b. iv. p. 6). † Du. wiel. † Icel. hvel. † Dan. hwæl. † Swed. hwæl. † Fick collects these under a supposed Teut. type HWEHWLA (HWEHULA), related to a shorter type HWEWA which appears in Icel. hwel, also meaning 'a wheel.' These Fick connects with Gk. κύκλος, a circle, wheel (l. 516); but perhaps we may connect them with W KAR, to run, move round (Fick, l. 531), and its related form KAL, to drive (l. 527). Cf. Russ. kolos, a wheel; and see Calash. Der. wheel, verb; wheel-or; wheel-barrow, spelt wædelarow in Le Bone Florence, l. 2031, pr. in Ritson's Met. Romances, iii. 86; wheel-wright (see Wright).

WHEEZE, to breathe audibly and with difficulty. (E.) M. E. whezen, Towneley Mysteries, 153 (Stratmann); rare. — A. S. hwætan, to wheeze, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 365 (glossary). The 3rd pers. pres. sing. hwætes occurs in the same volume, p. 126, l. 9, according to Cockayne; but hwætes is here really put for hwætes, from hwætan, to cough, which is perhaps a related word, but not quite the same thing. The only sure trace of the verb is in Ælfric's Homilies, l. 86, where we find the strong pt. t. hwætes = wheezed (mistranslated by Thorpe, but rightly explained by Cockayne). See the same passage in Sweet, A. S. Reader, p. 92, l. 150. Sweet gives the infn. mood as hwætan, but does not give any authority. Cf. Icel. hwæta, to hiss, Dan. hwæta, to hiss, to wheeze. And cf. E. whisper, whistle. † Fick, iii. 94, gives the base as HWAES, answering to Aryan W KWAS, to sigh pant, as seen in Skt. was, to breathe hard, sigh, Lat. quæri (pt. t. quærit), to complain. † The A. S. hwætan, to cough, is from W KAS, to cough; cf. Skt. ka, to cough, Lithuan. kwasi, G. kwasi, to cough. Der. (perhaps) wheez-and, q.v.; and cf. whisper, whistle. From the same root is quærit-of-was.

WHELLK (1), a mollusc with a spiral shell. (E.) The h is unoriginal, and due to confusion with the word below; the right (etymological) spelling is welk or wilk. Spencer has 'wholly pearls' = shelly pearls, pearls in the shell; Virgil's Conat, l. 105. M. E. wilk; spelt wylike, Prompt. Parv.; and in Wright's Voc. l. 189. — A. S. welc (8th cent.), Wright's Voc. ii. 104, col. 1; later welc, welc, id. l. 36, 65. Named from its convoluted shell; allied to A. S. wætan, to roll, walk; see Walk. Der. Hence prob. wheel-walk, K. Lear, iv. 6. 7; spelt welld, i. e. convoluted, in the first folio.

WHELLM, to overturn, cover over by something that is turned over, overwhelm, submerge. (Scand.) 'Ocean wælm them all;' Merry Wives, ii. 2. 143. M. E. wælm, to turn over; Chaucer, Troilus, l. 139. 'Wælmys a vessel, Suppino, Prompt. Parv.; on which Way cites Palsgrave: 'I wælm an holowe thyng over an other thyng, Je mets de sus.' Whelme a platter upon it, to save it from flies.' He adds: 'in the E. Anglian dialect, to wælm signifies to turn a tub or other vessel upside down, whether to cover anything with it or not; see Forby.' 'Wælm, to turn over, sink, depress; Halliwell; which see. The Lowland Sc. form is gwelme or wæmmel, also wæmda, to turn upside down; swir gwæmda = did overturn, occurs in Bellenden's Chron., prol. st. 2 (Jamieson). Jamieson gives Sibbald's opinion (which is correct) that the Lowl. Sc. wæmda is due to E. wælm, the letters being transposed to make the word easier of utterance; but he afterwards assumes the Lowl. Sc. word as the older form, in order to deduce its etymology from O. Swed. hwælm, to swarm (= G. swimmen), which he explains quite wrongly. This opinion must be dismissed, as the notion of 'swarming' is entirely alien to E. wælm. † The word presents some difficulty; but it is obvious that wælm and overwælm must be very closely related to M. E. wælm (wælm) and overwælm (overwælm), which are used in almost precisely the same sense. Wælm is also spelt wælm; 'He wælmde at þare sepulchre-dure enne grete ston' = he rolled (or turned) over a great stone at the door of the sepulchre; O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 51, l. 513. 'And perchance the overwælm' = and perchance overwhelm thee; Palladius on Husbandry, b. i. l. 161. † The only difficulty is to explain the final -m; this is due to the fact that wælm, verb, is really formed from a substantivized wælm; and the sb. wælm stands for wælm-m, which was simply unpronounceable, so that the f was perforce dropped. This appears from O. Swedish; here gives the verb wælm, to cock hay, derived from wælm, a bay-cock; and he rightly connects wælm with wælm, to arch over, make into a rounded shape, and wælm, an arch, a vault. The mod. Swed. words are welma, to cock hay, welm, a bay-cock (which have lost the h); wælm, to arch, wælm, an arch. Cf. Dan. wælm, to arch, vault over. Thus the orig. sense of wælm was to arch over, vault, make of a convex form; hence, to turn a hollow dish over, which would then present such a form; hence, to upset, overturn, which is now the prevailing idea. † We conclude that wælm (for wælm-m) is from the strong verb appearing only in M.H.G. wælm (pt. t. wælm), to distend oneself into a round form, swell out, become convex, answering to the Teut. base HWAELB, to become convex; see Fick, iii. 94. The derivatives are seen clearly enough in A. S. wælm, adj. convex, sb. a vault (Grein, ii. 118); Icel. wælm, wælm, a vault, wælm, to 'whelve' or turn upside down, overwhelm or capsize a ship, wælm, to arch, vault, to turn upside down, &c.; mod. G. wælm, to arch over. † Further, it is quite clear that the base HWAELB is a by-form of HWARB, to turn about; for which see Wharf and Whirl. Der. over-wælm.

WHELP, a puppy, young of the dog or lion. (E.) M. E. welp, Chaucer, C. T. 10805. — A. S. hwelp, Matt. xv. 27. † Du. welp. † Icel. hwelp. † Dan. hwelp. † Swed. welp; O. Du. wæn (Hexham). † Goth. hwæn. † G. wann; O. H. G. wænna. † Evidently orig. a case of the interrogative pronoun; cf. Goth. hwænna, acc. masc. of hwæn, who; see Who. So also Lat. quæ, when, from quæ, who; Gk. whén, when, put for whén, from the same pronom. base. Der. wæn-over, wæn-en-over; and see wæn-or.

WHENCE, from what place. (E.) M. E. wænnas (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 12769. This form wænnas-es, in which the suffix imitates the adverbial -es (as in twé-es, twice, nat-es, of necessity), was substituted for the older form wænnes, written wænnes in Layamon, l. 16. The suffix -es was orig. a genitive case-ending, as in dag-es, of a day. † The form wænnas is from A. S. hwænna, also hwænna, hwænna, whence, Grein, ii. 114. This is closely connected with A. S. hwænna, when; the suffix -es being used to express direction, as in A. S. súð-es, from the south. See When. † G. wann, whence; allied to wann, when. † Compare hæn-or, similarly formed from M. E. hæn-es, put for A. S. hwænna, hence; see Hanon. Also Thence. Der. wænnes-over.

WHEREBY, a shallow, light boat. (Scand.) 'A wherry, boats, poate.' Lopus, ed. 1570. The pl. is wherries in Hackluyt, Voyages, iii. 645 (R.) in use on the Thames is particular; not E., but probably of Danish origin. The word in Scandinavian dialects signifies lightly built, crank, swift, and the like. — Icel. hwærfr, shifty, crank (said of a ship); Norweg. hwær, crank, unsteady, also swift of motion (Aasen). — Icel. hwærfa (pt. t. hwærfr), to turn; see Wharf, Whirl. The lit. sense is 'turning easily.' The Scand. word would become wherry in E., whence wherry; like jolly from M. E. holif. † Gen. said to be a corruption of ferry, which is impossible.

WHET, to sharpen, make keen. (E.) M. E. wættan, Prompt. Parv. — A. S. hwættan, to sharpen, Grein, ii. 118. — A. S. hwæt, keen, bold, brave; ibid. † Du. wetten, to sharpen; from O. WHETHER, which of two. (E.) 'Whether of the twin; ' Matt. xxvii. 31. M. E. whæther, Chaucer, C. T. 1858. — A. S. hwæther, which of two; Grein, ii. 114. † Icel. hwætr (a contracted form). † M.H.G. wæder, O.H.G. hwæder, adj., which of two. † Goth. hwæther, adj. † All from Teut. type HWATHARA, which of two; †

Fick, iii. 91. Formed, with comparative suffix -thara (Aryan -ara), from HWA, who; see WHO. Cognate words occur in Lithuan. katras, which of two, Russ. katarni, which, Lat. uter, Gk. uteros, uteros, Skt. katara. Der. whether, conq., A. S. hwæter, Grein, ii. 113. Also whether, neuter.

WHEY, the watery part of milk, separated from the curd. (E.) Lowland Sc. wieg, see Jamieson; and see Nares. M. E. whey, Prompt. Parv. = A. S. hwæg; 'Serum, hwæg,' Wright's Gloss., l. 27, col. 2. † Du. huy, wei. Cf. W. chwæg, 'whey fermented with sour herbs'; chwæg, adj. fermented, sour. † In the Bremen Wörterbuch, v. 161, we find various Low G. words for whey, which are not all related; the related forms are the Dithmarsh hwi, hwi, and perhaps Holstein weg; but the Bremen watke, waddh, whey, seem to be allied to E. water, which is obviously from another source. Root unknown. Der. wherry, wherry-ship; whey-face, Mach. v. 3. 17.

WHICH, a relative and interrogative pronoun. (E.) M. E. which formerly used with relation to persons, as in Chaucer, C. T. 1648; spelt quith in Barbour, Bruce, l. 77 = A. S. hwitlic, hwitlic, hwitlic, Grein, ii. 131. A contracted form of hwitlic, lit. 'why-like' = A. S. hwit, hwit, why, on what account, instr. case of hwit, who; and hwit, like. See WHY, WHO, and LIKE. † O. Sax. hwitlic; from hwit, instr. case of hwit, who, and hwit, like. † O. Frisian hwitlic, hwitlic, hwit, † Du. wit, † Icel. hwitlic, of what kind; from hwit, instr. of hwit, who, and hwit, like. † Dan. hwit-om, hwit-om, neut. † Swed. hwit-om, hwit-om. † G. welcher; O.H.G. hwitlic, from hwit (mod. G. wie), how, and hwit, like. † Goth. hwitlic; from hwit, instr. of hwit, who, and hwit, like. Further allied to Lat. quæ-quæ, of what sort, lit. 'what-like.' Der. which-ever, which-or-which; also (from Lat. quæ-quæ) quæ-quæ, q. v.

WHIFF, a puff of wind or smoke. (E.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 498. M. E. wuff, vapour; Prompt. Parv. An imitative word; cf. wuff, wuff, wuff † W. chwuff, a whiff, puff; chwuff, to puff; chwuff, a gust. † Dan. wift, a puff, gust. Cf. G. wuff-puff, to denote a sudden explosive sound; also Icel. hwitla, a puff; A. S. hwitla, a breeze; Wright's Voc. l. 52, col. 2, 76, col. 1. Der. wuff, verb, wuffle, q. v.

WHIFFLE, to blow in gusts, veer about as the wind does. (E.) 'But if the winds whiffle about to the south;' Dampier, Discourses of Winds, c. 6 (R.) Whiffle is the frequentative of whiff, to puff, and was specially used of puffing in various directions (perhaps by confusion with Du. waiselen, to waver); hence it came to mean to trifle, to trick (Phillips). See WHIFF. Der. whiff-er, Henry V, v. chor. 12, orig. a piper or fifer, as explained by Phillips, who says that 'it is also taken for a paper that plays on a lute in a company of foot-soldiers;' hence it meant one who goes first in a procession; see Whiffler in Nares, whose account is sufficient.

WHIG, the name of a political party. (E. 7) 'Wit and fool are consequents of Whig and Tory;' Dryden, Pref. to Absalom and Achitophel (1681). See the full account in Todd's Johnson and Nares. The standard passage on the word is in h. l. of Burnet's Own Times, fully cited by Johnson; it is to the effect that whig is a shortened form of whiggamor, applied to certain Scotchmen who came from the west in the summer to buy corn at Leith; and that the term was given them from a word whiggam, which was employed by those men in driving their horses. A march to Edinburgh made by the Marquis of Argyll and 6000 men was called 'the whiggamor's inroad,' and afterwards those who opposed the court came in contempt to be called whigs. [There seems no reason to doubt this account, nor does there seem to be the slightest foundation for an assertion made by Woodrow that Whigs were named from whig, sour whey, which is obviously a mere guess, and has to be bolstered up by far-fetched (and varying) explanations.] † The Glossary to Sir W. Scott's novels has whiggamor, a great whig; also whiggling, jogging rudely, urging forward; Jamieson has 'whig, to go quickly; whig aw, to move at an easy and steady pace, to jog (Liddesdale); to whig aw with a cart, remarks Sir W. Scott, signifies to drive it briskly on.' I suspect that the h is intrusive, and that these words are connected with Lowland Sc. wiggle, to wriggle (or rather to keep moving about) and with A. S. wuggan, to move, agitate, also to move along (intransitive). See WAG. Der. whiggish, whiggy, whiggy.

WHILE, a time, space of time. (E.) M. E. whil, while, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 46. = A. S. hwil, sb. a time, Grein, ii. 120. † Icel. hwila, only in the special sense of a place of rest, a bed. † Dan. hwile, rest. † Swed. hwila, rest. † G. weile, O.H.G. hwila. † Goth. hwila, a time, season. † The Teut type is HWILA, a time, rest, pause, time of repose; Fick, iii. 75. Prob. allied to Lat. quies, rest; see QUIET. Der. while, adv., from some case of the sb., prob. from the acc. or dat. hwile; whil-er, Matt. v. 25, M. E. whiler, Chaucer, C. T. 35 (in the Harleian MS.), where whiler is the gen. case used adverbially, as in whil-er, twice, whil-er, seeds, &c. [but note that the A. S. genitive is hwiles, the sb. being feminine]; hence whil-er, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 16, with added excrement t after s (as in amongst, amids). Also whil-om, spelt whylome in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 13, from A. S. hwilom, instr. or dat. pl. of hwil, signifying 'at times.' Also in whil-om, see MORN (3); whil-ere, Temp. iii. 2. 137. Also whiling-ere, the 'wanting a little before dinner,' Spectator, no. 448, Aug. 4. 1713; whence 'to while away time;' prob. with some thought of confusion with while.

WHIM, a sudden fancy, a crotchet. (Scand.) 'With a whim Kayt with a trym-tram Upon her brayne-pas;' Skelton, Elmore Rummyng, 75. = Icel. hwim, to wander with the eyes, as a silly person; Norweg. hwim, to whak or flatter about, to trifle, play the fool (Aasen); cf. Swed. dial. hwimma-hwim, dizzy, giddy in the head; Icel. hwim, giddiness, folly. † This etymology is verified at once by the derived word whimsey, a whim, pl. whimses, Beauclerk and Fletcher, Women Pleas'd, iii. 2, last line; this is from the allied Norweg. hwimma, Dan. hwim, to skip, whisk, jump from one thing to another, Swed. dial. hwimma, to be unsteady, giddy, dizzy. Cf. W. chwimma, to be in motion, chwimma, to move briskly. † All from a base HWIM, to move briskly, allied to Whip, q. v. Der. whim-whim, a reduplicated word, as above; whim-ey, as above; whim-er-er, whim-is-it-by; whim-ing (Nares). Also whim-ble (2), q. v.

WHIMPER, to cry in a low, whining voice. (E.) 'Line in pining and whimpering and heuines of hert;' Sir T. More, p. 90 (R.) And in Palgrave. A frequentative form, from whimper. 'There shall be whimpering, that will whimper and whine;' Latimer, Seven Sermons (March 22, 1549), ed. Arber, p. 77, last line. In both words, the p is excrement, as is so common after m; whimper and whimpe stand for whimmar and whim; cf. Scotch whimmar, to whimper. And further, whim is but another form of whim, so that Latimer joins the words naturally enough. See WHINA. † Low G. wimmern, to whimper. † G. wimmern. Der. whimper-er.

WHIN, gorse, furze. (C.) 'Whynnes or hette, brunne;' Palgrave. 'Whynnes, Salicines;' Prompt. Parv. 'With thornes, berres, and moni a peyn;' Yvain and Gawain, 159; in Ritson, Met. Romances, l. 8. = W. chwyn, woods; also, a weed; cf. Bret. chwynnes (with guttural ch), to weed.

WHINE, to utter a plaintive cry. (E.) M. E. whinen, said of a horse, Chaucer, C. T. 5968. = A. S. hwina, to whine, Grein, ii. 122. † Icel. hwina, to whiz, whir, † Dan. hwina, to whistle, to whine. † Swed. hwina, to whistle. † All from the Teut. base HWIN, to make a discordant noise, to make a creaking or whizzing sound; Fick, iii. 95. Cf. Skt. hwina, to buzz; also Icel. hwina, to wail; Goth. hwina, to mourn. And see WHIR, WHIN, WHIACK, WHISPER, WHOOSH, WHIMPER. Der. whining, sb. whin-er, whin-ing; also whin-er, Drayton, The Moon-calf, l. 121 from end (R.), which is a sort of frequentative. And see whimper-er.

WHIP, to move suddenly and quickly, to flog. (E.) 'I whipped me behind the arras,' Much Ado, l. 3. 6; 'Whips out his rapier,' Hamlet, iv. 1. 10. This seems to be the orig. sense, whence the notion of flogging (with a quick sudden stroke) seems to have been evolved. [The alleged A. S. hwip, a whip, and hwipian, to whip, scourge, are solely due to Somner, and unauthorised; the A. S. word for 'scourge being hwipa, John, ii. 13.] Another sense of whip is to overlay a cord by rapidly banding this twice or silk thread round it, and this is the only sense of M. E. whippen noticed in the Prompt. Parv., which has: 'Whippen, or cloven threds in sylke, as sylk-women (do), Obsoleta.' The sb. whippe, a scourge, occurs in Chaucer, 5757, 9545; it is spelt quippe in Wright's Voc. l. 154. All from the notion of rapid movement. The word is presumably English, and is preserved in the nearest cognate languages. Cf. Du. wippen, to skip, to hasten, also to give the strappado, formerly 'to shake, to wagge,' Hexham; Du. wip, a moment, a swipe, the strappado. O. Du. wippe, 'a whip or a scourge,' Hexham. † Low G. wippen, wippen, to go up and down, as on a see-saw; wip / quickly. † Dan. wippe, to see-saw, rock, hob, wip / popl wipster, a wag-tail, lit. 'whip-start,' where start = tail. † Swed. wippe, to wag, to jerk or give the strappado; wippga, a gibbet, lit. 'whip gullows,' wip / quick. † G. wippen, to move up and down, balance, see-saw, rock, to draw up a malefactor at a gibbet, and drop him again, to give the strappado; wipp-galgen, a gibbet. † I had so surly authority for the h; it may have been added for emphasis. The root is almost certainly /WIP, to tremble, vibrate; see VIBRATE. † If so, the Gael. chwip, a whip. W. chwip, a quick turn, chwippen, to move briskly or nimbly, are borrowed from the English, and have taken up different senses of the E. word. And see WHIP. Der. whip, sb., as above; whip-rod, whip-lash; whipper; whipp-er-in, one who keeps the hounds from wandering, and whips them in to the line of chase; whipping, whip-ping; also whip-er, Oth. v. 2. 244; whip-rod, l. e. whip-handle, Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 28, and in Palgrave; and see whipp-er-in. And see whip, wipe.

WHIPPLE-TREE, a swing-bar, to which traces are fastened for drawing a carriage, &c. (E.) In Forby's Norfolk Glossary (1830). Spelt whipple-tree in Palgrave, where it is left unexplained. M. E. whippeltree, whippeltre, Chaucer, C. T. 2925, in a list of trees; but whether Chaucer here speaks seriously, or whether there was a special tree whence whipple-trees were made and which was named from them, we cannot certainly say. We know, however, that (like swingle-tree) the word means 'piece of swivling wood,' and is composed of tree in the sense of timber (as in ash-tree, &c.) and the verb whipple, frequentative of whip, to move about quickly, to see-saw. See Whip and Tree; and see Swingletree.

WHIR, to buzz, whirl round with a noise. (Scand.) In Shak. Pericles, iv. 1. 21. Not an old word, and prob. to some extent imitative, like whiz. — Dan. svirre, to whirl, twirl; Swed. dial. svirra, to whirl (Riets). We may connect it with Whirl. And see Whin.

WHIRL, to swing rapidly round, to cause to revolve rapidly, to rotate quickly. (Scand.) M. E. whirlen, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 80. In Wyclif, Wisdom, v. 24, the earlier version has 'whirlen-puff of wind,' and the later version 'whirling of wind.' This word is not a mere extension of whir (which is not found till a later date), but is a contraction for whirl-fer, frequentative of the verb equivalent to M. E. wherfen, to turn (Stratmann); and it is of Scand. origin rather than directly from A. S. wherfan. — Icel. svirfa, to whirl, frequent. of svirfa (pt. l. svirf), to turn round. — Teut. base HWARE, to turn, Fick, iii. 93; see Wharf. — Dan. svirle, to whirl. — Swed. svirfa, to whirl; cf. svirf, a turn. — O. Du. swirvelen, 'to whirl,' Hezham. — G. wirbeln, to whirl; also, to warble. Der. whirl, sb.; whirl-wind, spelt whirle-winde, Prompt. Parv., from Icel. svirflindr, a whirl-wind, Dan. svirvelind, Swed. svirfveind; whirl-pool, spelt whirtpole in Palgrave, and applied to a large fish, from the commotion which it makes. Also whirl-gig, spelt whirlygigge (to play with) in Palgrave; see Gig. Doublet, whirle.

WHISK, to sweep round rapidly, to brush, sweep quickly, move quickly. (Scand.) The proper sense is merely 'to brush or sweep,' esp. with a quick motion, then to flourish about as when using a light brush; then (as in our phrases to brush along, to sweep along) to whisk is to move quickly, esp. with a kind of flourish. The sk is intrusive, and probably due to confusion with whiz, whirl, &c. It should rather be swisk, as it is, etymologically, related to swish. 'He winched (winced) still always, and whisked with his tail;' Gascoigne, Complaint of the Grene Knight, Works, ed. Hazlitt, l. 403. 'The whiskynge rod;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courts, l. 1161. 'Whisking his riding-rod;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Noble Gentleman, Act ii (Gentleman). 'As she whisked it' (her tail); Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 897. Cf. prov. E. whisk, to switch, beat, whisk, to switch, move rapidly (Halliwell). The sk (as in many words) indicates a Scand. origin. — Dan. viske, to wipe, rub, sponge; from visk, sb., a wisp, a rubber; Swed. viska, to wipe, to sponge, also to wag (the tail), from viska, a whisk. Widgren's Swed. Dict. gives viske, 'a small broom, whisk;' and the example hunden viskar med snusom, 'the dog wags his tail, which precisely shews the sense of the E. word in old authors. [The verb is, in fact, formed from the sb., which appears further in Icel. visk, a wisp of hay or the like, lit. something to wipe or wash off with. The E. sb. whisk, a small besom or brush, is used by Boyle and Swift; see Todd's Johnson.] — G. wischen, 'to wipe, whisk, rub,' Flügel; from the sb. wisch, 'a whisk, clout, wisp, malkin,' id. β. The sb. which thus appears as Icel. and Dan. visk, Swed. viska, G. wisch, is a weakened form, derived from the Teut. base WASK, to wash; Fick, iii. 301. See Wash. Der. whisk, sb. (as above, really a more orig. word). Hence whisk-er, sb., from its likeness to a small brush; 'old Nestor put aside his gray beard and brand'd her with his whiskers,' Dryden, Troilus and Cressida, Act iv. sc. 2 (R.); whisker-er. Also whisk-y, a kind of light gg. from its being easily whisked along; it occurs in Crabbe, Tales of the Hall, b. viii (R.).

WHISKEY, WHISKY, a spirit distilled from grain, &c. (Gaelic.) In Johnson's Dict. — Gael. uisge-beatha, water of life, whisky; the equivalent of F. eau de vie. We have dropped the latter element, retaining only uisge, water. See Uisgebaugh.

WHISPER, to speak very softly, or under the breath. (E.) M. E. whisperen; 'Whisperen, munitio;' Prompt. Parv. In Wyclif, Eccles xii. 19, 'whispering' is expressed by whisperens or whisstrunge. — O. Northumbrian whisperen; the Lat. murmurabant is glossed by whisperen in the Rushworth MS., and by whisstrunon in the Lindisfarne MS.; Luke, xii. 7. Again, the Lat. murmur is glossed by whisstrunge in the Rushworth MS., and by whisstrung in the Lind. MS.; John, vii. 25. We see, then, that whisperen and whisstrunon were parallel forms, and whisstrunon is evidently closely allied to A. S. whistlian, to whistle. Whisper and whistle are allied words, both of an imitative character; farther, they are frequentatives, from the bases whisp- and whist- respectively; and these are extended from an imitative Teut. base HWIS, allied to the Teut. base HWAS, to breathe hard; see Whame. — O. Du. whisperen, whispelen, to whisper; Hezham. — G. whispern. So also (from the base whisk or whisk) we have Icel. svirra, Swed. svirra, Dan. svirra, to whisper. Der. whisper, sb., whisper-er.

WHIST, hush, silence; a game at cards. (E.) The game at cards is named from the silence requisite to play it attentively. The old verb whist, to keep silence, also to silence, has whistled for its past tense, but whist for its pp. 'So was the Titaneus put down and whist,' i. e. silenced; Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 59. 'All the companies must be whist,' i. e. silent; Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 67. 'They whistled all' — they all kept silence, Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 1. M. E. whist, interj., be silent! Wyclif, Judges, xvii. 19 (earlier version), where the later version has Be thou stille, and the Vulgate has hace. It is thus seen to have been orig. an interjection, commanding silence. See Hist and Hush. Cf. Lat. st! hist! G! st! hist! st! hist, hush, stop! 'The orig. intention of the utterance is to represent a slight sound, such as that of something stirring, or the breathing or whispering of some one approaching. Something stirs; listen; be still;' Wedgwood. By way of further illustration may be quoted: 'I . . . made a countenance [gesture] with my hands in manner to been whist,' i. e. to enjoin silence; Test. of Love, b. ii, in Chaucer's Workes, ed. 1561, fol. 301, col. 2.

WHISTLE, to make a shrill sound by forcing the breath through the contracted lips. (E.) M. E. whistlen, P. Plowman, B. xv. 467. — A. S. whistlian, or whistlian, to whistle, only found in derivatives; we find whistlers, a whistler, piper, Matt. ix. 23; 'Sibilatio, whistling,' Wright's Voc. i. p. 46, col. 1; 'Fistula, whistle, id. ii. 37, col. 1. A frequentative verb, from a base HWIS, meant to imitate the hissing sound of whistling, and allied to the Teut. base HWAS, to breathe hard; see Whame. And see Whisper. — Icel. svirra, to whisper; from svirra, whew! to imitate the sound of whistling. — Dan. svirra, to whistle, also to hiss. — Swed. svirra, to whistle. Der. whistle, sb.; whistler, A. S. whistlers, as above.

WHIT, a thing, a particle, a bit. (E.) The h is in the wrong place; whit stands for whit = wight, and is the same word as wight, a person. M. E. wight, a person; also a thing, a bit. 'For she was falle asleepe a little wight' — for she had fallen asleep a little whet; Chaucer, C. T. 4181. 'A whit' = a little bit, for a short time, Ancren Riwle, p. 72, l. 24. — A. S. whit, (1) a wight, person, (2) a whet, bit; see abundant examples in Green, ii. 704. The latter sense is particularly conspicuous in whit = ought, i. e. a whit, and adwhit = ought, i. e. no whit. See further under Wight (1). Der. ought, q. v.; wright, q. v.

WHITE, of the colour of snow, very pale. (E.) M. E. whit (with long i), whyt; pl. white, Chaucer, C. T. 90. — A. S. whit; Grein, ii. 121. — Du. wit. — Icel. hvít. — Dan. hvid. — Swed. hvít. — Goth. hwita. — G. weiss; O. H. G. hwita. β. All from Teut. base HWITA, white, shining; further allied to Skt. gwita, white, from gwit, to be white, to shine. The Teut. words are from kwid, to shine (Fick, i. 355); the Skt. gwita is from kwit, to shine, whence also Rus. svietiti, light, bright, svietiti, to shine, give light, O. Lithuan. svietiti, later form svietiti, I make white, I cleanse. Both are from an earlier kwit, to shine, not found. Cf. SKI, to shine, whence E. shine. Der. whitely; white-ness, spelt whytynesse in Prompt. Parv. Also white, verb, M. E. whiten, used intransitively, to become white, Ancren Riwle, p. 150, l. 7; whit-on, M. E. whitenon, to make white, Early Eng. Psalter, Ps. l. 9, but properly intransitive, from Icel. hvita, to become white (see note on Waken). Also whit-ting, a fish with delicate white flesh, spelt whytynge in Prompt. Parv.; it also means ground chalk. Also whit-salt, whit-salt-stone; whit-bait, a fish; whit-faced, K. John, ii. 23; whit-head, whit-head, spelt whyt head in Prompt. Parv.; whit-lined, spelt whytlymed, P. Plowman, B. xv. 211; whit-livered, i. e. cowardly, Hen. V. iii. 2. 34; whit-wash. And see whent, whit-ster, Whit-sunday, whit-to (3). whit But not whit-son.

WHITHER, to what place. (E.) M. E. whider; spelt whidir, Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 22, whidir, id. xiv. 24. (Cf. M. E. fadur for fader, moder for mother.) — A. S. hwider, hwider, Grein, ii. 120. — Goth. hwadre, whither, John, vii. 35. Closely allied to Whether, and formed from the Teut. base HWA, who, with a compar. suffix answering to Aryan -ter; see Whether. And see Hither, a more widely spread word; prob. whither was coined to accompany it. Der. whither-ward, M. E. whiderward, Chaucer, C. T. 11814; whither- WHITLOW, a painful swelling on the fingers. (Scand.) Nothing but a careful tracing of the history of the word will explain it; it is an extraordinary corruption of quick-flaw, i. e. a flaw or flaking off of the skin in the neighbourhood of the quick, or sensitive part of the finger round the nail. The word is properly Northern, and of Scand. origin. It is still preserved, in an uncorrupted form, in the North. E. whickflaw, a whitlow (Halliwell). Here whick is the well-known (and very common) Northern form of quick, in the sense of 'alive' and 'quick' part of the finger. This is why the sore was called paronychia. 'Paronychia, a preternatural swelling or sore, under the root of the nail, in one's finger, a felon or whitlow;' Phillips, ed. 1706. [Der. from Gk. par-, for para, beside, and onyx, crude form of onyx, the nail.] And this is also why horses were subject to whitlows; in farriery, it is a disease of the feet, of an inflammatory kind, occurring round the hoof, where an acrid matter is collected (Webster); the hoof of the horse answering to the nail of a man. 'Cf. Quack-sore, a distemper in horses,' Bailey, vol. i (1735). β. The only real difficulty is with the former syllable; that the latter syllable is properly low, is easily established. Cotgrave explains poil de chat by 'whitlow'; but Palgrave has: 'Whitlow in ones Icygra, poil de chat.' The spelling whitlow is commoner still; it occurs repeatedly in Holland's tr. of Pliny (see the index), and is once spelt whitlow, shewing that the former syllable was already confused with the adj. white. 'Whitlows about the root of the nails,' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiii. c. 4. § 1; &c., &c. 'Paronychia . . . by the vulgar people amongst us it is generally called a whitlow;' Wiseman, Surgery, b. i. c. 11 (R.) Both parts of the word are properly Scandinavian.—Icel. hvíta, 'the quick under the nail or under a horse's hoof;' otherwise hvíta, 'the flesh under the nail, and in animals under the hoofs;' and Swed. faga, a flaw, crack, breach, also a flake. Icel. flagna, 'to flake off, as skin or slough.' See QUICK and FLAW. ¶ Whit easily turned to whit, which was naturally interpreted as white from the words whit-tower, whitler, the more so as the swelling is often of a white colour; the true sense of the word was thus lost, and a whitlow was applied to any similar sore on the finger, whether near the quick or not.

WHITSUNDAY, the seventh Sunday after Easter, commemorating the day of Pentecost. (E.) Lit. white Sunday, as will appear. The word is old. In the Ancien Ritua, p. 413, l. 13, we have mention of hvitsondagur immediately after a mention of hellig þorsdagi. Again, we find: 'þu heil gaste, þu þu on hvíta sunu dæ sendast'—the Holy Ghost, whom thou didst send on Whit-sunday; O. Eng. Homilies, l. 509, l. 16. [In Layamon, l. 3134, we already have mention of white sunu tide, i. e. Whitson-tide, which in the later version appears in the form Whitson-tide, shewing that even at that early period the word White was beginning to be confused with whit; hence the spelling whitsondagur in Wycliffe's Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 158, 159, &c., is not at all surprising. In the same, p. 161, we already find whitson-week, i. e. Whitson week.]—A. S. hwítan Suman-dæg; only in the dat. case hwítan sunnan dæg, A. S. Chron. an. 1067. However, the A. S. name is certified, beyond all question, by the fact that it was early transplanted into the Icelandic language, and appears there as hvitannu-dagr. In Icelandic we also find hvíta-daga, lit. 'white days,' as a name for Whitson week, which was also called hvítadaga-vika = white-days-week, and hvitannudaga-vika = Whitson-day's week.

β. All these names are unmistakable, and it is also tolerably certain that the E. name White Sunday is not older than the Norman conquest; for, before that time, the name was always Pentecoste (see Pentecost). We are therefore quite sure that, for some reason or other, the name Pentecost was then exchanged for that of White Sunday, which came into common use, and was early corrupted into Whit-Sunday, proving that white was soon misunderstood, and was wrongly supposed to refer to the wis or wisdom conferred by the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, on which theme it was easy for the preacher (to whom etymology was no object) to expatiate. Nevertheless, the true spelling has been preserved to this day, not only in English and in modern Icelandic, but in the very plainly marked modern Norwegian dialects, wherein it is called hvítsondag, whilst Whitson-week is called hvítannu-veka, obviously from hvít, white, and from nothing else (Aasen). See, therefore, White and Sunday. γ. But when we come to consider why this name was given to the day, room is at least opened for conjecture. Perhaps the best explanation is Mr. Vigfússon's, in the Icel. Dict., who very pertinently remarks that even Bingham gives no reference whatever to Icelandic writers, though, from the nature of the case, they know most about it, the word having been borrowed by Icelandic whilst it was still but new to English. He says: 'The great festivals, Yule, Easter, and Pentecost, but esp. the two latter, were the great seasons for christening: in the Roman Catholic church especially Easter, whence in Roman usage the Sunday after Easter was called Dominica in Albis; but in the Northern churches, perhaps owing to the cold weather at Easter-time, Pentecost, as the birth-day of the church, seems to have been esp. appointed for christening and for ordination; hence the following week was called the Holy Week (Helligs Vika). Hence, Pentecost derived its name from the white garments,' &c. See the whole passage, and the authorities cited. ¶ It is not likely that this account will be accepted by such as prefer their own guess-work, made without investigation, to any evidence, however clear. It deserves to be recorded, as a specimen of English popular etymology, that many still prefer to consider A. S. hwíta sunnan (occurring in the A. S. Chronicle) as a corruption of the mod. G. phageten (which is acknowledged to be from the Gk. phagos). Seeing that phageten is a modern form, and is an old dative case turned into a nominative, the M. H. G. word being phagete, we are asked to believe that phagete became hwíta sun, and that sun was afterwards luckily added! This involves the change of ff (really a þ) into hw, and of te into sun, together with a simultaneous loss of aga. Comment is needless. Der. Whitson-week, a shortened form for Whitson-day's week (as shewn by Icel. hvitannudaga-veka); and similarly, Whitson tide. Also Whit-Monday, Whit-Tuesday, names coined to match Whit-Sunday; formerly called Munday in Whitan-week, &c.; Wycliffe, Works, ii. 161.

WHITTLE (1), to pare or cut with a knife. (E.) In Johnson's Dict. A mere derivative from the sb. whittle, a knife, Timon, v. r. 183. Again, whittle is the same as M. E. hwitil, hwitil, a knife, Chaucer, C. T. 3931. Lit. 'a cutter;' formed, with suffix -el of the agent (Aryan -er), from A. S. hwitan, to thrive, to cut, to pare; whence the verb which is spelt by Palgrave both hwitese and hwite. See Rotm. of the Rose, l. 933. ¶ The alleged A. S. hwitel, a knife, is a mere myth; see Whittle (3).

WHITTLE (2), to sharpen. (E.) Used as a slang term; 'well whittled and thoroughly drunk;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 387 (R.) 'Thoroughly whittled' = thoroughly drunk; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiv. c. 32. The lit. sense is, sharpened like a whittle or knife; see Whittle (1). It has obviously been confused with whet, the frequentative of which, however, could only have been whistle, and does not occur.

WHITTLE (3), a blanket. (E.) M. E. hwitel, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 76.—A. S. hwitel, a blanket. Gen. ix. 23. Lit. 'a small white thing.'—A. S. hwit, white. See White. † Icel. hwitill, a whittle; from hwit, white; Norweg. hwitil, from hwit, white (Aasen). Cf. E. blanket, from F. blanc, white. ¶ Sommer, not understanding this, gave 'knife' as one sense of A. S. hwitel; he was clearly thinking of whittle, which happens to be a corruption of hwitil; see Whittle (1). His mistake has been carefully preserved in many dictionaries.

WHILE, to make a hissing sound. (E.) 'The woods do whiz;' Surrey, tr. of Æneid, b. ii. l. 536. An imitative word, allied to Whistle, q. v. Cf. Icel. hwisa, to hiss, to run with a hissing sound, said, e. g., of a stream; and cf. E. whizz.

WHO, an interrogative and relative pronoun. (E.) 'Formerly who, whom, which, were not relative, but interrogative pronouns; whæc, whær, whom occur as relatives (misprinted interrogatives) as early as the end of the twelfth century, but who not until the 14th century, and was not in common use before the 16th century;' Morris, Hist. Outlines of E. Accidence, § 184.—A. S. hwá, who (interrogatively), masc. and fem.; hwær, neuter; gen. hwæs, for all genders; dat. hwæm (not hwæm), also hwæm, for all genders; acc. masc. hwone, fem. hwone, neut. hwæt; instrumental hwá, hwý (mod. E. why); Green, ii. 113; Sweet, A. S. Reader. We now have who = A. S. hwá; whom = hwær; whence = hwær, with a lengthening of the vowel, to agree with the vowel of other cases (seldom used in the neuter, though there is nothing against it); whom = dat. hwæm, but also used for the accusative, the old acc. hwone being lost; why = inst. hwá; see Why. † Du. wie, who; wat, what; wien, whose; wien, whom (dat. and acc.) † Icel. hvar, hver, who; hvar, what; hvar, whose; hvarjum (masc.), whom; pl. hverir, &c. † Dan. hv, who; hvad, what; hv, whose; hvem, whom (dat. and acc.) † Swed. hv, who, whom (nom. dat. and acc.); hvad, what; hvans, hvans, whose. † G. wer, who; was, what; wann, wann, whose; wem, to whom; wem, whom (acc.) † Goth. nom. hwesa, hwu, hwu (or hwato); gen. hwis, hwison, hwis; dat. hwamma, hwani, hwamma; acc. hwana, hwu, hwu (or hwato); instr. hwu; pl. hwai, &c. † Irish and Gael. eo, † W. py. † Lat. quis, quid. † Russ. hto, chtó, who, what. † Lithuan. kas, who. † Skt. has, who (masc.), hi, what; ham, whom (acc.) β. All from the interrogative base KA (Test. HWA), who? The neuter has the characteristic neut. suffix -d (Lat. quod), Teut. -d (E. what, Goth. hwato), as in the words i-t, tha-t. Der. who-er, whoso, whoso-er. Also wha-n, wha-er, wha-ther, whi-ch, whi-ther, whi. Also quid-i-ty, quid-i-ty, quid-i-ty.

WHOLE, hale, sound, entire, complete. (E.) The orig. sense is 'hale,' or in sound health; hence the senses entire, complete, &c., have been deduced. The spelling with initial w is curious, and points back to a period when a w-sound was initially prefixed in some dialect and afterwards became general; this pronunciation is now again lost. We have other examples in whal = hal, Spencer, F. Q. ii. r. 58, 9. 30, &c.; in whore = hore; in whorep = M. E. whorep, where the w is still sounded; and in mod. E. was as the pronunciation of was, where the w is never written. I believe the spelling with w is not older than about A. S. 1500; Palgrave, in 1530, still writes hale. 'A whale man;' Golden Books, c. 39; first printed in 1534. Richardson cites the adv. wholly from Gower; but of course Paul's edition (vol. ii. p. 4, l. 21) has holy (for holly). M. E. hol, hol, Wyclif, John, v. 6. — A. S. hol, whole; whence M. E. hol by the usual change from A. S. h to M. E. h, as in A. S. stan = M. E. stone, a stone; Grein, ii. 6. — Du. hol. — Icel. hol (whence E. hole, q. v.) — Dan. hol. — Swed. hol. — G. hol. — Goth. hol. — All from Teut. type HAILA, hale, whole, Fick iii. 57. Further allied to Gk. hale, excellent, good, hale, and to Skt. halya, healthy, hale. The Skt. halya is allied to halyand, prosperous, blessed, where the lingual s proves that the orig. form was haryina (Benfey). Consequently, the root is h KAR, but whether in the sense 'to make,' whence whole would be 'well-made,' or in the sense 'to sound, call, praise,' whence whole would be 'praiseworthy,' is uncertain. Fick, i. 520, 529, 530. Der. whol-ly, M. E. holly, holy, in Gower, as above, Chaucer, C. T. 601; whole-ness (modern). Also whole-some, M. E. holsum, holsum, Chaucer, Troilus, i. 947, spelt holsum in the Ormulum, 2915, not in A. S., but suggested by Icel. holsum, salutary, formed from hol, whole, with suffix -sum corresponding to E. -some; hence whole-some, whole-some-ness. Also whole-sale, used by Addison (Todd), from the phr. 'by whole sale,' as opposed to retail. Also hol, q. v.; hol-y, q. v. Doublet, hole. — If we write whole for hol, we ought to write wholy for holy: 'For their wholy conversation; Roy, Rede Me and be not Wroth, ed. Arber, p. 75, l. 34.

WHOOOP, to shout clearly and loudly. (F. = Teut.) Here, as in the case of whole, whot for hot (Spenser), and a few other words, the initial w is unoriginal, and the spelling should rather be hoop. The spelling with w dates from about A. D. 1500. Palsgrave, in 1530, has: 'I whooops, I call, je hooppe;' yet Shakespeare (ed. 1623) has hooping, As You Like It, iii. 2. 203. [Oddly enough the derivative whooosh is, conversely, now spelt whooosh; see Hubbub.] M. E. hoopum, to call, shout, P. Plowman, B. vi. 174; Chaucer, C. T. 15406. — F. hooper, 'to hoop unto, or call afar off'; Cot. Of Teut. origin; cf. Goth. hoopjan, to boast, Romans, xi. 8. Der. whoop, sb.; whoop-ing-cough or hoop-ing-cough; whoo-ah. Doublet, hoop (2), which is a mere variation of spelling, and exactly the same word.

WHORE, a harlot. (Scand.) As in the case of whole, q. v., the initial w is not older than about A. D. 1500. Palsgrave, in 1530, still has hoore. In Bale's Kyng Johan, ed. Collier, p. 26, l. 21, we find hooren, but on p. 76, l. 12, it is whorenen. [It is remarkable that the word hoar, white, as applied to hair, also occurs with initial w at about the same period. 'The hære of his hedd was whore' = the hair of his head was hoar; Monk of Evesham, c. 12; ed. Arber, p. 33.] M. E. hoore, King Alisaunder, l. 1000; P. Plowman, B. iv. 166. The word is certainly not A. S., as Sommer would have us believe, but Scandinavian. [The A. S. word was milteiru, Matt. xxi. 31, founded on the verb to mil.] In the Laws of Canute (Secular), § 4, we find hær-wæn, an adulteress, where the Danish word has the A. S. ewen (a queen) added to it, by way of explanation; Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 378. — Icel. hæra, an adulteress, fem. of hær, an adulterer (we also find hær, neut. sb., adultery); Dan. hoer; Swed. hoer. — Du. hoer. — G. hoer, O. H. G. hoera. — Goth. hoer, masc., an adulterer, Luke, xviii. 11. — h. The Teut. type is HÖRA, orig. an adulterer, a masc. sb.; Fick, iii. 80. Allied to Church-Slavonic hæruwa, an adulteress (cited by Fick), Polish hæruwa in Schmidt, Polish Dict. h. This difficult word is traced further by Fick (ii. 315); he associates it with Lat. carus, dear, orig. 'loving'; Irish carann, I love, Skt. chäru, agreeable, beautiful, &c.; all from h KA, to love (i. 34), whence also Skt. ham to love, to be satisfied, ham, to love, hama, love, desire, hämia, desiring, having sexual intercourse, a lover, hämaga, a lascivious woman, &c. — h. If this be right, the word prob. meant at first no more than 'lover,' and afterwards descended in the scale, as so often happens; this would account for its use in Gothic and Icelandic with reference to the male sex. — h. In any case, we can tell, by phonetic laws, that it is not derived from, nor in any way connected with, the verb to hoir, as is usually asserted by a specious but impossible guess. Der. whore-dam, M. E. hoordam, Ancren Riwle, p. 204, l. 20, from Icel. hærdam, Swed. hoordam, whor-isk, Troil. iv. 1. 63, whor-isk-ly, -ness; -master, K. Lear, i. 2. 137, spelt hoer-master in Palsgrave; -manager, Mens. for Mens. iii. 1. 57; -son, in Bale, Kyng Johan (as above).

WHORL, a number of leaves disposed in a circle round the stem of a plant. (E.) It is the same word as whorl, which is the name for a piece of wood or bone placed on a spindle to twist it by. This is also called a wharrow, a picture of which will be found in Guillim, Display of Heraldry, 1664, p. 289; 'The round ball [disc] at the lower end serveth to the fast twisting of the thread, and is called a wharrow.' The likeness between a whorl on a spindle and a whorl of leaves is sufficiently close. Palsgrave has: 'Wharls for a spondell, panon.' Wharl, whari are contr. forms for wharwel, whorwel. 'Whorl-wyl, whorwhil, whorls of a spondyl, Vertebrium, Prompt. Parv.; where whorwhyl is clearly an error for whorwyl (= whorwil). The A. S. name was whorwyl; we find 'Vertelum [sic], hweorfa' in a list of spinning-implements, Wright's Voc. i. 281; this is clearly an allied word, but without the suffix -el, and the etymology is from the strong verb whorfan, to turn; see Whirl and Wharf. — h. The particular form whorl may have been borrowed from O. Du., and introduced by the Flemish weavers; cf. O. Du. werwel, 'a spinning-whirl,' Hexham; also werwelen, 'to turn, to reel, to twine,' id.; these words are from the same root, and help to account for the vowel e.

WHORTLE-BERRY, a bilberry. (E.) 'Airolles, whortle-berries'; Cot. From A. S. wyrtil, a small shrub, dimin. of wyrt, a wort; see Wort (1). 'Biscop-wyrtil,' Wright's Voc. i. 31. — h. Not from heart-berrie = hart-berry, as Lye carelessly asserts.

WHY, on what account. (E.) Why is properly the instrumental case of who, and was, accordingly, frequently preceded by the prep. for, which (in A. S.) sometimes governed that case. M. E. whi, why, Wyclif, Matt. xxi. 26; for whi = on which account, because, id. vii. 9. — A. S. hwil, hwil, instr. case of hwil, who; for hwil, why; Grein, ii. 113. See Who. — Icel. hvil, why; allied to horr, who, hwat, what — Dan. hvil. — Swed. hwil. — O. H. G. hwil, hwil, instr. case of hwer (G. wer), who. — Goth. hwil, instr. case of hwil, who. — h. The word how is either a variation of why, or at the least very closely related; March identifies them, considering A. S. hæ as an outcome of A. S. hwil. See How.

WI-WY.

WICK (1), the cluster of threads of cotton in a lamp or candle. (E.) Spelt wicke, in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 30. 30. M. E. wicke, P. Plowman, C. xx. 204; wyche, id. B. xvii. 239; wicke, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 47, l. 30. — A. S. wicca. 'Funalia, vel funes, candel-wicca;' Wright's Gloss., i. 41, col. 2; pl. candel-wiccas, id. ii. 26, col. 1. It is said to be also spelt wicca, in a gloss (Bosworth). — O. Du. wicke, 'a wicke of a lampe, a tent to put into a wounde;' Hexham. — Low G. wicke, lint, to put to a wound. — Dan. wige, a wick. — Swed. wika, a wick; Widegren. — Bavarian wichungarn, wick-yarn, Schmeller, 835; he also gives various G. forms, viz. O. H. G. wicche, wicke, with a reference to Graff, i. 728. — h. The orig. sense is simply, 'the plant or soft part,' and it is closely allied to E. wick. This will appear, in every Teutonic language, if the word be carefully examined. The A. S. wic, weak, and wicca, a wick, are both from the same base wic-, appearing in wic-en, pp. of wican, to give way; see Weak. The O. Du. wicke is allied to O. Du. wicst, soft. The Low G. wic is allied to Low G. wick, soft, whence wicmen, to soften, also to thaw. The Dan. wige is allied to wig, pliant, wige, to yield; this appears more clearly in the Norweg. wit, a skin of thread, the same word as wit, a brood, from wita, to bend, yield. The Swed. wika, a wick, is from the adj. wik, weak, soft; cf. wikna, to soften. The Bavarian wichungarn is rightly connected by Schmeller with G. wick, soft, pliant. — h. The present is a case where attention to the vowel-sounds is particularly useful; by ordinary phonetic laws, the A. S. wic is for *wice, and the A. S. wic is for *wice, strengthened form of wic; and similarly in other languages. The application of soft, pliant, &c., to a piece of lint, to a wic of thread for a wick, or (as in Norwegian) to a skin of thread, is obvious enough. — h. The dimin. form appears in Bavar. wichel, a bunch of flax, as much as is put on the distaff at once; hence the G. verb wicheln, to wind up, wrap up, roll round, which is a mere derivative. See Wicker. — h. The Icelandic word bears only a casual resemblance, and is really unconnected. It is hwylr, lit. 'that which is kindled,' from hwylra, to quicken, kindle, allied to E. quick; see Quick. It is just possible that the word has been corrupted, in Icelandic, by a mistaken notion as to the orig. sense. But it must not mislead us.

WICK (2), a town. (L.) A. S. wic, a village, town; Grein, ii. 688. Not E., but borrowed. — Lat. wicus, a village; see Vicinity.

WICK (3), WICH, a creek, bay. (Scand.) Is some place-names, as in Green-wick, &c. — Icel. wik, a small creek, inlet, bay; see Viking. — h. It is not easy, in all cases, to distinguish between this and the word above. Ray, in his Account of Salt-making (E. D. S., Gloss. B. 15, p. 20), mentions Nant-wick, North-wick, Middle-wick, Droit-wick; here wick = brine-pit, merely a peculiar use of Icel. wik above.

WICKED, evil, bad, sinful. (E.) The word wicked was orig. a past participle, with the sense 'rendered evil,' formed as if from a verb *wicken, to make evil, from the obsolete adj. wikka (dissyllabic), evil, once common. Again, the adj. wikka was orig. a sb., viz. A. S. wicca, masc., a wizard, wicca, fem., a witch. Hence the adj. wikka meant, literally, 'witch-like,' and wicked is precisely a doublet of the mod. E. he-wicked, without the prefix, and used in the sense of 'abandoned to evil' rather than 'controlled by witch-craft.' M. E.

wicked, as in the adv. wickedly, Chaucer, C. T. 8599; spelt wicked, def. form of wicked, Layamon, later text, 14983, where it takes the place of wicfulle (deceitful) in the earlier text. This is prob. the earliest instance of the word. β . The shorter form wick is common; it occurs in Havelok, 688; P. Flowman, B. v. 229; Chaucer, C. T. 1089, 2448, 15429, &c. It became obsolete in the 15th century as an adj., but the sb. is still in use in the form wick. See further under Witch. Der. wickedly; wickedness, M. E. wickedness, P. Flowman, B. v. 290.

WICKER, made of twigs. (E. or Scand.) 'A wicker bottle,' Oth. ii. 1. 153 (folia, tunggen bottle). Wicker is properly a sb. meaning a pliant twig. M. E. wiker, wikir; 'Wybyr, to make wythe basketry, or to bynde wythe thyngys (i. e. to make baskets with, or bind things with), Vimen, vituligo;' Prompt. Parv. 'Wycker, osier;' Palgrave. The A. S. form does not appear; but was prob. of the form wicor, with suffix -or as in aid-or, an elder, Alenst-or, laughter, sg-or, victory, sig-or, a twig (= prov. E. teller, tiller), &c. The derivation is clear enough; it is formed with suffix -or, = (Aryan -ra) from wic, base of gwin-er, pp. of wican, to give way, bend, ply; see Weak.

β . This is certified by cognate words in the Scand. dialects; and perhaps E. wicker may even have been borrowed from Scandinavian. We find O. Swed. wika, to bend, whence wick, a fold, wickla, to fold, wrap round (Ihre); also Swed. dial. wikars, wikher, wikher (which is our very word), various names for the sweet bay-leaved willow, Salix pentandra, lit. 'the bender,' from wika, to bend, to soften, allied to Swed. wika, to fold, to double, to plait (Widgren). Wicker-work means, accordingly, 'plaited work,' esp. such as is made with pliant twigs, according to the common usage of the word. The word is closely allied, in the same way, to Dan wig, pliant (with g for k, as usual in Danish), in connection with which Wedgwood cites, from various Danish dialects, wige, wigger, wigra, a pliant rod, a withy (lit. a wicker), wigrobrun, wigrobrun, a wicker-basket, wiger, wigger, a willow (= Swed. dial. wikars above). γ . To go further, we find a form parallel to wicker in the Bavarian wichel, a bunch of tow on a distaff, G. wichel, a roll, whence wicheln, to wind up, roll up, wrap up; all from the fundamental notion of 'soft,' or 'bending,' or 'yielding'; see Wick. And see Witoh-elm.

WICKET, a small gate. (F., = Scand.) M. E. wiket, P. Flowman, B. v. 611; Ross, of the Ross, 328. = O. F. wiket ρ , which is certainly the correct form, though Littré's quotations only give us the forms wiket (with intrusive s) and wiquet; mod. F. wicket, a wicket. Littré also cites the Walloon wiket, Norman wiquet, Prov. guisquet, all of them deduced from the common form wiket ρ . A dimin. sb. formed from Icel. wik-ian, pp. of the strong verb wika, to move, turn, veer; so that wiket is, literally, 'a small turning thing,' which easily gives way. It was esp. used of a small door made within a large gate, easily opened and shut. Cf. Swed. wika, to wag; Swed. dial. wikla, wikla, to totter, see-saw, go backwards and forwards (Riets); Swed. wika, to give way, wika åt sidan, to turn aside.

β . Littré and Scheler (following Diez) derive the F. word from Icel. wik, said to mean 'a lurking place'; the Icel. Dict. only gives wik, the corner of the mouth, wik, a bay, creek, inlet; but it makes no ultimate difference, since all these are from the same strong verb wika, and it is just as well to go back to it at once. The Icel. wika is cognate with A. S. wican (pp. gwinen), to give way; see further under Weak. Cf. O. Du. wicket, a wicket, from wichan, 'to shake or to wagge,' Hexham; also wicket, 'a wicket,' id., from the nasalized form of the same root; see Wink. γ . In the game of cricket, the wicket was at first (A. N. 1700) lit. 'a small gate,' being 3 feet wide by 1 foot high; but the shape has so greatly altered that there is no longer any resemblance. See the diagrams in the Eng. Cyclop. div. Arts and Sciences, Supplement; a. v. Cricket.

WIDE, broad, far extended. (E.) M. E. wid (with long i); pl. wide (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 28. = A. S. wid, wide; Grein, ii. 690. β . Du. wijd. γ . Icel. widr. δ . Swed. and Dan. wid. ϵ . G. weit, O. H. G. wit. β . All from Teut. type WIDA, wide, Fick, iii. 103. Perhaps the orig. sense is 'separated' or 'set apart'; from the \surd WIDH, to separate (Fick, i. 786). This is not a well-marked root, but we find Skt. widhā, to pierce (answering to a base wid); cf. widha, piercing, breaking through. It is remarkable that the Skt. widhāna, lit. a piercing or perforation, also means deplā, which is extension downwards instead of sideways. Der. wide-ly, wide; wid-en, verb, Coe. i. 4. 44, with which cf. M. E. widen, Prompt. Parv., imperative wide, Palladius on Husbandry, iii. 933, though the mod. suffix -en is not the same as the ending of the M. E. infin. widen (see this explained under Waken). Also wid-ā, not an old word, used in Drayton's Battle of Agincourt, st. 143, as equivalent to the older sb. widness; formed by analogy with lang-ā, broad-ā, &c.; cf. Icel. widd, width.

WIDGEON, the name of a kind of duck. (F., = Teut.) 'A widgeon, bird, glaucon;' Lewis, ed. 1570. The suffix and form of the word shows that it is certainly French; and it is clear that the E.

word has preserved an older form (presumably wigwan ρ or wigwan ρ) than can be found in French. Littré gives the three forms wigwan, wigwan, gingwan, as names of the 'whistling duck' (anas sibilans). The variation of the initial letter, which is either w or g, can only be accounted for by assuming an O. F. initial w, as above, and this is confirmed, past all doubt, by the E. form. β . And we can further assume that the O. F. word was of Teut. origin, as is the case with nearly all words commencing with w. It was also prob. a Norman word, and of Scand. origin; probably from Dan. and Swed. winga, a wing; cf. Norweg. wingla, to flutter, flap about. γ . I will here note the curious O. F. wigwan, 'a dace, or dare-fish,' Cot. A connection is just possible.

WIDOW, a woman whose husband is dead. (E.) M. E. widow, widow, Chaucer, C. T. 255, 1173. = A. S. widow, widow; also widow, widow, widow, Grein, ii. 692. β . Du. widuw. γ . G. witwe, O. H. G. witwa, witwa, witwa. δ . Goth. widwa, widwa. β . The Teut. type is WIDUWA (WIDUWAN), fem. sb., a widow, Fick, iii. 304. Further cognate with Lat. uidua, fem. of uiduus, deprived of, bereft of (whence E. void), which gave rise to Ital. widua, Span. widua, F. widua, a widow; also with W. gweddwr, Russ. widow, Skt. widhā, a widow. γ . Here the Lat. d, as in other cases, answers to Skt. dh, and the root is \surd WIDH, to lack, want, hence, to be bereft of. This root is preserved in the Skt. widhā, to lack (not in Benfey), for which see the St. Petersburg Dict. vol. vi. 3070. See Fick, as above. δ . The etymology of Skt. widhā in Benfey (from wi, separate from, and dhā, a husband) is unsatisfactory, as it entirely isolates the Skt. word from the rest of the series. See Curtius, ii. 46; Max Müller, Selected Essays, i. 333. The corresponding Teut. base would be WID, to lack; as in Goth. wid-wairn, orphaned, comfortless, John, xiv. 18; from wair, a man, a husband. Der. widow, verb, Cor. v. 6. 153; widow-hood, M. E. widowhood, Holl. Meidenhad, p. 23. l. 20; widow-or, M. E. widowor, widowor, P. Flowman, A. 10. 194, B. 9. 174, formed by adding -or; cf. G. witwör. And see void.

WIELD, to manage, to use. (E.) M. E. wielden, to govern, also to have power over, to possess, Wyclif, Matt. v. 4. Luke, xi. 20. xviii. 18. = A. S. gewaldan, gewaldan, to have power over, Gen. iii. 16; Mark, v. 4. This is a weak verb, answering to M. E. wielden, and mod. E. wield, which are also weak verbs; all are derivatives from the strong verb waldan (pt. t. waldid, pp. walden), to have power over, govern, rule, possess. β . Icel. valda, to wield. γ . Dan. valde, commonly forvalde, to occasion. δ . Swed. valda (for valda), to occasion. ϵ . G. walten, O. H. G. waltan, to dispose, manage, rule. ζ . Goth. waldan, to govern.

β . All from Teut. base WALD, to govern, rule; Fick, iii. 399. Further cognate with Russ. waliditi, to reign, rule, possess, make use of, Lithuan. waldyti, to rule, govern, possess. The Aryan base is WALDH, to rule, an extension of \surd WAL, to be strong; see Valid. Der. wald-or, wald-or.

WIFE, a woman, a married woman. (E.) M. E. wif (with long i), wyf, Chaucer, C. T. 447, 1173; pl. wyves (wyven), id. 234. = A. S. wif, a woman, wife, remarkable as being a neuter sb., with pl. wif like the singular. β . Du. wif, woman, wife; fem. β . Icel. wif, neut. a woman; only used in poetry. γ . Dan. wif, fem. β . G. wief, neut. a woman; O. H. G. wif. δ . Fick (iii. 305) gives the Teut. type as WIFA. The form of the root is WIF=Aryan WIP; in accordance with which we find O. H. G. walken, walken, to waver, be irresolute, Lat. wibrare, to quiver, Skt. wip, to tremble; so that the orig. sense of wife would appear to be 'trembling'; cf. Skt. wipin, a trembling, which is a neuter sb. We might perhaps interpret this as an epithet of 'a bride'; but the real origin of the word remains obscure. ϵ . It is usual to explain the word as 'weaver,' but this cannot be reconciled with its form. The A. S. for 'to weave' is wefan; a male weaver was called wofa, and a female weaver wofestru; and to equate wif with wofestru is to give up all regard for facts. Der. wife-like, Cymb. iii. 2. 8, fið wif, i. e. fish-woman; mid-wif, q. v.; house-wife (see HOUSE); wife, v., A. S. wifian, Luke, xx. 34. Also wife-man, q. v.

WIG, a peruke. (Du., = F., = Ital., = L.) Wig occurs frequently in Pope; Moral Essays, iii. 68, 293, &c., and is merely a shortened form of periwig, which is much older, and occurs in Shakespeare. Cf. bus for comibus. See further under Periwig and Peruke. Der. wigg-ed.

WIGHT (1), a person, creature. (E.) M. E. wif, wight, Chaucer, C. T. 848. = A. S. wiht (very common), a creature, animal, person, thing; also spelt wiht, wiht, and used both as fem. and neut.; Grein, ii. 703. β . Du. wicht, a child. γ . Icel. witr, a wight; warta, a whif. δ . Dan. wifft, an elf. ϵ . G. wicht. ζ . Goth. wihts, fem., wiht, neut., a whif, a thing. β . It is probable that the fem. and neut. sbs. were orig. distinct, but they were early confused. Fick gives the Teut. type as WEHTL fem. sb., a wight, being, elf. The orig. sense is 'something moving,' a moving object, an extremely convenient word for pointing to something indistinctly seen at a distance, which might be a man, child, animal, or (in the imagination of the Aryans) an elf or demon. From the Teut. base WAG (A. S. wagan), to move, also to carry, represented by mod. E. wag; see Weigh. Cf. E. wag, from the same root. The word wight is a later formation from the name A. S. verb. Wit is nothing but another spelling of wight. Doublet, wit.

WIGHT (s), nimble, active, strong. (Scand.) 'He was so wimble and so wight'; Spenser, Shep. Kal. March, 91. M. E. wight, wip, valiant. P. Flowers, B. li. 21; Layamon, 20488. = Icel. vigr, in fighting condition, serviceable for war; the final t seems to have been caught up, in a mistaken manner, from the neut. vigt, which was used in certain phrases; 'þeir drápn karla þá er vigt var at' — they smote the men that might be slain, i. e. the men who were serviceable for war; referring to the rule not to slay women, children, or helpless men. See Icel. Dict. For a similar instance of final t from Icelandic, see Want, Thwart, Tuft (s). The same word as Swed. wig, nimble, agile, active (whence vigt, nimbly), allied to A. S. wegian, warlike. β. From the sb. which appears as Icel. vig, A. S. wig, war. The Icel. wig, war, is derived from Icel. vaga, to fight, smite (quite distinct from vaga, to move, weigh), allied to Goth. wigan, waldan (pt. t. wunā, pp. wunōs), to fight, strive, contend. = Teut. base WIH, to fight; Fick, iii. 203. Allied to Lat. vincere, to fight, conquer; see Victor.

WIGWAM, an Indian hut or cabin. (N. American Indian.) In books relating to N. America. = 'Algonquin (or Massachusetts) wah, his house, or dwelling-place; this word, with possessive and locative affixes, becomes wah-wah-wah, in his (or their) house; contracted by the English to wigwam and wigwago;' Webster.

WILD, self-willed, violent, untamed, uncivilized, savage, desert. (E.) In Barbour's Bruce, we find wild of red = wild of redde or counsel, at a loss what to do, l. 348, iii. 494, xiii. 477; wild of wame = wild of waning or thought, at a loss, l. 323, ii. 471, vii. 225. The form will, here used as an adj., is simply due to the fact that the Icel. form for 'wild' is wilr, which stands for wildr by the assimilation so common in Icelandic. By themselves, these passages would not by any means prove any connection between wild and will; nevertheless, the connection is real, as appears from a consideration of the words cognate with wild. (See further below.) M. E. wilde, very rarely wilde, though we find 'a wilde olynne tre' in Wyclif, Rom. xi. 17; spelt wyld, Rob. of Glouc. p. 57, l. 14 = A. S. wild, Grein, ii. 703. He gives the examples: is wilde fugol = the wild bird; wilde deor = wild deer or animals. β. Du. wild, proud, savage. β. Icel. wilr (for wilr), wild; also astray, bewildered, confused. β. Dan. and Swed. wild. β. G. wild, O. H. G. wildi. β. Goth. wilthais, wild, uncultivated, Mark, i. 6; Rom. xi. 17. β. All from Teut. type WEL-THA, astray, wild; the Goth. form wil-thais is important, because the Goth. -th answers to Lat. -t, used as a suffix with pp. force; cf. Lat. verus, right, orig. a pp. form. The orig. sense is, doubtless, that which is indicated by the Icel. wilr and by the common E. use of the word, viz. 'actuated by wil,' and by that only. A wild animal wanders at its own 'sweet wil;' to act wildly is to act wilfully. Though we cannot deduce A. S. wild from A. S. willa, sb., will, we can refer them to the same verb to wil, once a strong verb and of great antiquity, as shown by the A. S. ic wæl, I will. Similarly, the W. gwyllt, wild, savage, and gwylltys, the will, are from the same root. See further under Will (1). Der. wild, sb., Merch. Ven. n. 7. 41. M. E. wilde, Rob. of Glouc., p. 553, l. 10; wild-by; wild-ness, spelt wyldness in the Prompt. Parv.; wild-fre, M. E. wylde fur, Rob. of Glouc. p. 410, l. 12; wild-ing, a wild or crab-apple, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 17. Also be-wild-er, q. v.; wild-er-ness, q. v.

WILDERNESS, a wild or waste place. (E.) M. E. wilderness, Ancren Riwe, p. 158, l. 18. [Not found in A. S.; Sommer's suggestion of an adj. wildernis is not authorized.] Wilderness first appears in Layamon, 30333; and stands for wildern-ness. It is formed by adding the M. E. suffix -ness to the shorter word wildern, which was used in the same sense. Thus, in the Ancren Riwe, p. 160, l. 7, one MS. has wildern in place of wilderness. So also in Layamon, l. 1238: 'þar is wode, þar is water, þar is wildern machel' = there is wood, there is water, there is a great desert. This M. E. wildern, a desert, clearly answers to an A. S. wildern, adj. (not found), regularly formed with the common suffix -ness (= -ness, cf. silver-ness, gold-ness) from the A. S. wilder, a wild animal; so that wildern = of or belonging to wild animals, hence, substantively, a desert or wild place. β. The A. S. wilder, a wild animal, is given in Grein, ii. 705, and occurs in the gen. sing. wildra, nom. pl. wildra, gen. pl. wildra. It is certainly a shortened form of wild deor, a wild animal (lit. wild deer), which is also written wilddeor; see examples in Grein of wild-deor or wilddeor. It follows that wilderness is short for wild-deor-ness, -ness being added to wild-deorn, adj., of or belonging to wild deor. See Wild and Deer. And see be-wilder.

WILL, a trick, a sly artifice. (E.) M. E. wille (disyllabic), Chaucer, 1403 = A. S. wil, or willa, a will, A. S. Chron. an. 1128; also in the comp. fyge-wil, lit. a flying will, an arrow of Satan, Grein, l. 206. β. Icel. wil, wal, an artifice, craft, device, fraud, trick, contrivance. Root unknown. Perhaps we may compare Lithuan. wilna, deceit; wilni, to deceive. Der. wil-y, M. E. willy, wily, Curtis Mundi, 11807; wil-ness. Doublet, guile; whence be-guile.

WILLFUL, obstinate, self-willed. (E.) M. E. wilful, Life of Becket, ed. Black, l. 1309 (Stratmann). Formed with suffix -ful (= -full) from A. S. wil, will; see Will (s). Der. wilful-ty, M. E. wilfulness, in the sense 'willingly,' O. Eng. Homilies, l. 279, l. 8; wilful-ness, M. E. wilfulness, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 71.

WILL (s), to desire, be willing. (E.) M. E. willen, infra; pres. t. wel, Chaucer, C. T. 43; pt. t. wilde (whence mod. E. would), id. 257. = A. S. willa, wyllan, Grein, ii. 708. Pres. sing. 1 and 3 p. wile, wyle (whence M. E. wild, wild, wille, wylle; 3 p. wilt; pl. willað, wyllað; pt. t. wilde, 3 p. wildast, pl. woldan, waldan, or waldan. β. Du. willen. β. Icel. wilja; pt. t. wilde. β. Dan. wille. β. Swed. vilja. β. G. wollen; pt. t. will, pl. t. willte. β. Goth. wiljan, pt. t. wilda. β. Lithuan. wili. β. Lat. uelle; pt. t. uolo, pt. t. uolui. β. Gk. βούλομαι, I will, I wish. β. Skt. ori, to choose, select, prefer. β. All from WAR, to choose; Fick, l. 311; iii. 296; whence also G. wähl, choice, E. wahl, adv., will, sb., &c. Der. will-ing, orig. a pres. part; will-ing-ty; will-ing-ness. Also will (s), q. v. Also will-y-will-y, answering either to will I, will I, i. e. whether I will or whether I will not, or to will he, will he, i. e. whether he will or whether he will not, as in Hamlet, v. 1. 18; we also find will we, will we, Udall, on 1 St. John, cap. 2 (R.); will you, will you, Tam. Shrew, ii. 1. 273; cf. A. S. willa (short for no willa), not to wish, Grein, ii. 206, cognate with Lat. uolle (short for no uolle); and see Hobnob. From the same root are will (t), wilful, wast, wild, wat-ant-er-y, wat-ant-er-ness.

WILL (s), sb., desire, wish. (E.) M. E. wille, Wyclif, Luke, ii. 14. = A. S. willa, will, Grein, ii. 706. = A. S. willa, verb, to wish; see Will (1). β. Du. wil. β. Icel. wili. β. Dan. wille. β. Swed. vilja. β. G. wille. β. Russ. volia. Cf. Lat. uoluntas. Der. wil-ful, q. v.

WILLOW, a tree, with plant branches. (E.) M. E. wilow, Chaucer, C. T. 2924. = A. S. wilig; 'Salix, wilig;' Wright's Voc. l. 285, col. 2. β. Du. wilg; O. Du. wilge (Hexham). β. Low G. wilge (another Low G. name is wichel). β. The Low G. wichel is clearly allied to E. wicker and to A. S. wiccan, to give way, bend; the tree being named from the pliancy of its boughs. The name wilow has a similar origin, as is commemorated in the fact that the prov. E. willy not only means a willow, but also a wicker-basket, like the wicker or fish-basket of which an illustration is given in Guillim, Display of Heraldry (1664), p. 316. The A. S. wilig is from the Teut. base WAL, to turn, wind, roll, appearing in G. welle, a wave (lit. that which rolls), but chiefly in various extended forms, such as E. wal-b, wal-b-in, wal-t-er, Goth. walt-wagon, to roll, &c. The exact equivalent occurs in Lithuanian, which has wal-ti, to fall cloth, wal-ti, to mat hair together. Thus a wilow is a tree, the twigs of which can be planted into baskets. γ. A much commoner name for the tree in A. S. is wilg, mod. E. willy, with just the same orig. sense. See Withy. And cf. Wicker.

WIMBERRY, the name of Winberry, q. v.

WIMBLE (1), a gimlet, an instrument for boring holes. (Scand.) M. E. wimble, spelt wymbel in the Prompt. Parv., where we also find the verb wymbeljan, or wymbeljan, to bore. = Dan. wimmel, an augur, tool for boring. The traces of the word are but slight, because wimmel (standing for wimpe) is a parallel form to, or a familiar pronunciation of windel, anything of spiral shape, as in Dan. windel-trappe, Swed. windeltrappa, a spiral staircase. This is shown by G. windeltrappe, a spiral staircase, windelbohrer, a spiral borer, a wimble or augur. Thus the real verb on which the word depends is Dan. wimle, Swed. wanda, G. wanden, to turn, wind, twist; see Wind (s). β. A wimble is simply a 'winder' or 'turner.' The peculiar form (with mb for nd) is also preserved in E. gimblet or gimist, which reached us through the French, and is, practically, merely the dimin. of wimble. See Oimlet. γ. Hexham gives O. Du. wimelen, 'to peacer or bore with a wimble,' whence the sb. wimlen, 'a peacer or a wimble,' seems to have been formed, rather than vice versa. I suppose this to be similarly corrupted from windel, as appearing in windel-trap, winding-stairs, and in other compounds, prob. by confusion with wanslen, to skip about, for which see below. ¶ The prov. E. wimlas, a windlass (Ysk., Halliwell), is a mere corruption of wimel; and prov. E. wim, an engine for drawing ore (Halliwell), is perhaps short for wimlas, or else for winder, an engine used for raising stones; see Windlass (1). Der. gimlet.

WIMBLE (s), active, nimble. (Scand.) 'He was so wimble and so wight'; Spenser, Shep. Kal. March, 91. The true sense is full of motion, skipping about. Spenser perhaps picked up the word in the North of England. The ð (as often after m) is crescent, and due to stress. = Swed. wimmel, in comp. wimmelbeting, giddy, whimsical;

Swed. dial. wimla, to be giddy or skittish; cf. Swed. dial. wimra, the name, whence wimrig, skittish, said of horses. The verbs wimla, wimra, are frequentatives of Swed. dial. wim, to be giddy, allied to Icel. wim, giddiness, whence E. wim, wimpelt wim; see Whim. So also Dan. wim, to skip about, wims, brisk, quick. † Du. wimlen, to move about, or 'to remove often,' Hexham; a frequentative verb from the same base.

WIMPLE, a covering for the neck. (E.) In Spenser, F. O. I. 12. 25; hence wimpled, id. i. 1. 4; Shak. L. L. L. iii. 181. M. E. wimple, Chaucer, C. T. 151; Rob. of Glouc. p. 338, l. 4; hence wimpled, Chaucer, C. T. 473. = A. S. wimpe, the same. 'Ricinum, wimpe, vel ori,' Wright's Voc. I. 17, l. 1; 'Anabala, wimpe,' id. i. 26, l. 1. † Du. wimpe, a streamer, a pendant. † Icel. wimpel. † Dan. and Swed. wimpe, a pennon, pendant, streamer. † G. wimpe, a pennon (whence F. gump, E. gump). β. The Teut. wimpe or wimpe is 'that which binds round,' hence a veil or covering for the head; they are nasalised forms (with suffix -el = Aryan -re) from the Teut. base WIP, to twist or bind round; see Wisp. And see Gimp.

WIN, to gain by labour or contest, earn, obtain. (E.) The orig. sense was to endure, fight, struggle; hence to struggle for gain by struggling. M. E. winnen, pt. t. wan, wan, Chaucer, C. T. 444; pp. winnen, id. 879. = A. S. winnan, to fight, labour, endure, suffer; pt. t. wana, pp. wunnes, Grein, ii. 715. † Du. winnen, pt. t. wan, pp. gewonnen. † Icel. winn, pt. t. wann, pp. winnin, to work, toil, win. † Dan. wind (for winn). † Swed. winn. † G. gewinnen, O. H. G. winnan, to fight, strive, earn, suffer. † Goth. winnan, pt. t. wana, pp. wunnan, to suffer.

β. All from Teut. base WAN, to work, suffer, strive; Fick, iii. 286. = \sqrt{WAN} , to desire, hence to strive for; whence Skt. wan, to ask, beg for, also to honour, Lat. Uanus, desire, love, wan-er-ari, to honour; Fick, i. 768. Der. winn-er, winn-ing; also wan-some, q. v. From the same root are wana, wana, wan-er, wan-er-er, wan-er-er, winn-er-er.

WINBERRY, WIMBERRY, a whortleberry. (E.) Whortleberries are called, in some parts, wimberries or wimberries. The latter form, in Halliwell, is the more correct. = A. S. wimberris, wimberris, a grape; lit. a wine-berry, Matt. vii. 16; Luke, vi. 44. See Wine and Berry.

WINCH, WINCH, to shrink or start back. (F., = M. H. G.) M. E. wincen, wincen, wincen. 'It is the wone of wil to wincen and to kyke' = it is the wont of Will (wilfulness) to wince and to kick, P. Plowman, C. v. 22. 'Wynen, Calcitro;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt wynche, Allit. Morte Arthure, 2104. = O. F. winchir, not found, but necessarily the older form of guinchir, 'to wriggle, writhe, winche a top-side' [i. e. on the one side, aside]; Cot. Roquefort gives guincher, guincher, to wince; also guencher, guencher, guencher, guencher (p. 664, misprinted guencher elsewhere), the same; Burgay gives guencher, guencher, guencher. = M. H. G. wuncken, wuncken, to wince, start aside; cf. also wuncken, O. H. G. wuncken, weak verb, the same. = M. H. G. wun, a start aside, side or back movement. = M. H. G. wun, pt. t. of wuncken, to move aside, to nod; the same as G. wuncken, to nod; cognate with E. Wink, q. v. Wince is, in fact, merely the secondary verb formed from wink. Cf. G. wuncken, to totter, waver, stir, budge, flinch, shrink back.

WINCH, the crank of a wheel or axle. (E.) M. E. wincen; spelt wynche, Palladius on Husbandry, b. i. l. 426. Cf. prov. E. wink, a periwinkle, also a winch; Halliwell. E. Cornwall wink, 'the wheel by which straw-ropes is made;' E. D. S. = A. S. wince. 'Girgilla, wince,' Wright's Voc. ii. 47, col. 1; here Girgilla is an error for girgilla, a winch; see Ducange. The connection with wuncken is obvious; and both wink and wuncken are plainly derivatives from Teut. base WANK, to bend sideways, nod, totter, &c.; see farther under Wink. A winch was simply 'a bend,' hence a bent handle; cf. A. S. wince, a corner (Somner); M. H. G. wuncke, a bending or crooking, cited by Fick, iii. 288; Lithuan. winga, a bend or turn of a river or road. And see Winkle, Wenoh.

WIND (1), air in motion, breath. (E.) M. E. wind, wynd, Wych. Matt. xiv. 24. = A. S. wind, Grein, ii. 712. † Du. wind. † Icel. windr. † Dan. and Swed. wind. † G. wind, O. H. G. wint. † Goth. winda, winda. β. All from the Teut. type WENDA, or WENTHA, wind, Fick, iii. 279. Cognate with Lat. uenus, W. gwynt, wind; orig. a pres. part., signifying 'blowing,' and answering to the Gk. pres. part. dein (stem aferr-), blowing. The Gk. dein, from dein, to blow, dein, to breathe, is from Aryan \sqrt{AW} , to blow, which also appears in the form WA, to blow. From the latter form we have Skt. wa, to blow, edra, wind, Goth. windan, to blow; Russ. wiata, to blow, wiater', wind, Lithuan. wijas, wind; as well as Lat. uentus and E. wind. See Curtius, l. 484. From the form AW we have E. air, q. v. And see Weather. Der. wind, to blow a horn, pp. winded, Much Ado, i. 1. 243, oddly corrupted to wound (by confusion with the verb to wind). Scott's Lady of the Lake, i. 1. 17; id.: wind-ago, a coined word; wind-bound, Milton, Hist. of Britain, b. ii., ed. 1695, p. 44; wind-fall, that which falls from trees, &c., being blown down by the wind, hence, a piece of good fortune that costs nothing, Ben Jonson, and Fletcher, The Captain, ii. 1 (Fabritio), also used in a bad sense (like down-fall), Bacon, Essay 99, Of Kingdoms; wind-mill, M. E. wind-mulle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 847, l. 23; wind-pipe, spelt wyndpype in Palgrave; wind-row, a row of cut grass exposed to the wind, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xviii. c. 28; wind-ward; wind-ward, A. S. windg, Grein, ii. 713; wind-ward. And see wind-ward, wind-ward, wind-ward.

WIND (2), to turn round, coil, encircle, twist round. (E.) M. E. winden, pt. t. wand, wand, pl. wonden, P. Plowman, B. ii. 230, pp. wonden, spelt wonden, Havelok, 546. = A. S. wendan, pt. t. wand, wand, pp. wunden; Grein, ii. 713. † Du. winden. † Icel. winda, pt. t. watt (for wand), pp. windan. † Dan. winde. † Swed. winda, to squirt. † G. winden, pt. t. wand, pp. gewunden; O. H. G. windan. † Goth. windan, only in compounds such as brindan, dagwindan, wundand; pt. t. wand; pp. wundana. β. All from Teut. base WAND, to wind or bind round, hence to turn; Fick, iii. 285. This is a nasalised form of the base WAD, to bind, swathe; see Wood (2). Der. wind-ing, sb.; also wind-less, q. v.; wand, q. v.; wand-er, q. v.; wand-er, q. v.; wand, q. v.

WINDLASS (1), a machine with an axle, for raising heavy weights. (Scand.) The spelling windlass is a corruption, due to popular etymology (as if the word were from wind, verb, and lass), and to confusion with the word below. [It is worth noting that there was also a word windla, a wheel on which yarn is wound (see Halliwell), whence the pl. windlas, wheels, axles, in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxvii. c. 15; this is from A. S. windol, of which the usual sense was a woven basket, Exod. ii. 3, though it could also mean something to wind on, a reel, from windan, to wind.] But the true M. E. form was windlas, Chaucer, C. T. 10498; Rich. Coer de Lion, l. 71; Allit. Poema, ed. Morris, C. 103. 'Wyndlass for an engyn, gyndlas;' Palgrave = Icel. windlas, a windlass; lit. a winding-pole, i. e. a rounded pole (like an axle) which can be wound round. = Icel. wind-a, to wind; and das, a pole, main rafter, yard of a sail, &c. β. Here winda is cognate with E. wand; see Wind (1). The Icel. das is cognate with Goth. asa, a beam, Lake, vi. 41 (the long a being due to loss of o); so that the Teut. type is ANSA, a beam, Fick, iii. 28. The root of das is not known; the suggested connection with Lat. ansula is very doubtful. In any case, the Icel. das has nothing to do with axis or axle, as some suggest. † Du. windlas, a windlass; O. Du. windlas, 'a windlass or an engine,' Hexham; where asa (= Icel. das a beam) is quite distinct from O. Du. asa (mod. Du. as), an axle.

WINDLASS (2), a circuit, circuitous way. (Hybrid; E. and F. = L.) Shak. has windlasses, Hamlet, ii. 2. 65. 'Bidding them fetch a windlass a great way about;' Golding, tr. of Caesar, fol. 206 (R.) 'And fetched a windlass round about;' Golding, tr. of Ovid (see Wright's note on Hamlet). 'I now fetching a windlass,' Lyly, Epithes, ed. Arber, p. 270. Apparently compounded of wind (verb) and lass; it must be remembered that the old sense of lass was a snare or bit of twisted string, so that the use of it in the sense of 'bend' is not remarkable. Thus windlass prob. = wind-lass, a winding bend, circuitous track. [Wedgwood's suggestion that windlass stands for an older form windla (with the usual A. S. suffix -la, for which see Riddle) would be satisfactory; only, unfortunately, no trace of windla has as yet been detected; the A. S. windol means 'a woven basket;' Exod. ii. 3; see Windlass (1).] See Wind (1) and Lace.

WINDOW, an opening for light and air. (Scand.) The orig. sense = 'wind-eye,' i. e. eye or hole for the wind to enter at an opening for air and light. [The A. S. word was eyþyril (= ey-thrill), Joshua, ii. 18; also eyþyril (= eye-door), according to Bosworth.] M. E. windowe, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 602. windowe, Ancrer Rivle, p. 50, note 5; windowe, P. Plowman, B. iii. 48; Wych. Acta, xx. 9. = Icel. windouga, a window; lit. 'wind-eye.' = Icel. windr, wind; and auga, an eye, cognate with A. S. auga, an eye. † Dan. window, a window; cf. wind, wind, and auga, an eye; but Dan. windus is directly from the O. Norse form. See Wind (1) and Eye. † Butler has windore, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2. l. 214, as if from wind and door; but this is not probable but a corruption.

WINE, the fermented juice of the vine. (L.) M. E. wine (with long i), Chaucer, C. T. 637. = A. S. wina, Grein, ii. 712. = Lat. uinum, wine (whence also Goth. wina, G. wain, O. H. G. win, Du. wijn, Icel. vin, Swed. vin, Dan. vin), † Gk. oinos, wine, allied to oinos, the vine. = \sqrt{WI} , to twine; see Withy. β. 'The Northern names, Goth. wina, G. wain, &c. are undoubtedly to be regarded (with Jac. Grimm, Gramm. iii. 466) as borrowed; so also O. Irish fa, wine, &c. P-er very appropriately compares the Lith. spwynys, hop-tendrils, pl. spwynys, hops. The Skt. wina, a braid of hair, also belongs here. We cannot see why the fruit of the twining plant should not itself have been called originally 'twiner.' The Lith. word offers the most striking analogy. The fact is, therefore, that the Indo-Germans [Aryans] had indeed a common root for the idea of winding, twining, and hence derived the names of various twining plants, but that it is only among the Græco-Italians that we find a common name for the grape and its juice; Curtius, l. 487; which see. Der. wine-bibber, Matt. xi. 19; see Bib.

WING, the limb by which a bird flies, any side-piece, flank. (Scand.) M. E. winge (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1966; the pl. appears as wingges, Ancræn Kirke, p. 130, last line, Layamon, 2936; we also find wenge, wunge, (dat. case) P. Plowman, B. xii. 263; 'wenge of a fowle. Ala,' Prompt. Parv.; pl. winges, Ormulum, 8034. It is quite certain that the form wenge is Scand.; and, as there does not seem to be any authority for an alleged A. S. wenge, it is simplest to suppose winge to be also a Scand. form. [The A. S. word for 'wing' is feþer.] = Icel. vinga, a wing; Dan. and Swed. vinga. β. The sense is 'wagger' or 'flapper'; from the fluttering movement of the wing. The form is nasalised from the base WIG, as seen in Goth. gwigjan (pt. t. gwigjan, pp. gwigjans), to shake up, whence also wagjan, to wag, shake. See Wag. Der. wag, verb, to fly, Cymb. iii. 2. 28; wing-ed, Chaucer, C. T. 1387; wing-les. And see widgwan.

WINK, to move the eyelids quickly. (E.) L. M. E. winkan, pt. t. winked, P. Plowman, B. iv. 154. = A. S. wincian, to wink. 'Conniveo, is wincige;' Wright's Voc. l. 34, col. 7. β. But winkan also occurs as a strong verb, pt. t. wand, Ancient Met. Tales, ed. Hartshorne, p. 79 (Stratmann); also wand, Lancret of the Lark, ed. Skeat, l. 1058; and we may certainly conclude that there was also a strong verb, viz. A. S. *wincan, with pt. t. *wanc, pp. *wancan; so that the true base is not WINK, but WANK. This is verified by A. S. wancol, wavering, and E. wanch, q. v.; as well as by the cognate forms. † O. Du. wanchen (Hexham); also wanchen, 'to wink, or to give a sign or token with the eyes;' id. Allied to O. Du. wanch, a moment, an instant; id. (lit. the twinkling of an eye); wanchel, unsteady. † Icel. wanka, to wink; to rove. † Dan. wank, to beckon; cf. wank, to rove, stroll. † Swed. wanka, to beckon, wink; cf. wanka, to rove, wankadag, fickle minded. † G. wanken, to nod, make a sign; M. H. G. wanken, not only in the same sense as mod. winken, but also in the same sense as mod. G. wanken, to totter, stagger, wince, &c. β. All from Teut. base WANK, to go or move from side to side, hence to totter, bend aside, also to nod, beckon; Fick, iii. 288. Further allied to Lithuan. wangti, to shun, wange, a bend. WANK is a nasalised form of Teut. WAK, answering to Aryan WAG to move aside, which is nothing but a variant of WAK, to vacillate, go or move aside, waver, &c.; see Fick, l. 761. Cf. Skt. wāch, to go, pass over; the causal form means 'to avoid,' lit. to cause to go astray (Benfey). γ. The orig. sense is simply to move aside; thence to totter, nod, beckon, wink; also to flinch or wince, &c. [There certainly seems to be some ultimate connection with wand; see Weak.] From the sense of 'tottering' we have that of wank, i. e. baby, which was the orig. sense of that word. Der. wank, sb., Temp. ii. 1. 285. Also (from the same root) wack, wance, wanch, wankle, per-wankle (the fish). Also we-ill-ate; and cf. wag, wich-at.

WINKLE, a kind of shell-fish. (E.) Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. ix. c. 33, uses winkles to denote shell-fish and also snails. = A. S. wincle, according to Lye; the compound pl. sinuaculan, periwinkles, occurs as a gloss to terniculi in Ælfric's Colloquy; Wright's Voc. l. 6. Named from the convoluted shell; allied to Wincob, q. v., and to Wink. Der. per-winkle (s), q. v.

WINNOWER, to fan grain, so as to separate the chaff from it. (E.) Winnower stands for windower, if we may so write it; we being put for nd (but without reference to the sb. windower). M. E. windower, Wyclif, Jer. xlix. 36, to translate Lat. wentilare; some MSS. have winnower, shewing that the d was being lost just at this time. = A. S. windowan, less correctly windwan, Pa. xlii. 7, ed. Spelman; to translate Lat. wentilare. = A. S. wind, wind; with formative suffix -er. See Wind. Cf. Goth. wentri-sheara, a winnowing fan; dinnathyan, to disperse, grind to powder; from *wintke, collateral form of wind, wind. So also Icel. winna, to winnow, from windr, wind; Lat. wentilare from wentur; see Ventilate. Der. winnower, winnower-ing-fan.

WINSOME, pleasant, lovely. (E.) M. E. winsome, with the sense 'propitious,' Northumb. Psalter, Pa. lxxvii. 9; also 'pleasant,' id. Pa. lxxx. 3. = A. S. winsum, delightful, Grein, ii. 759; formed with suffix -sum (E. -some) from wyn, joy, id. ii. 757. Wyn is formed (by vowel-change from u to y), from wun-, stem of pp. of winnan, to desire, win; see Win. Cf. G. wonne, joy (from wunnen); Icel. wandr, joy, wandsumr, winsome.

WINTER, the cold season, fourth season of the year. (E.) M. E. winter, orig unchanged in the plural; 'a thousand winter' = a thousand winters, i. e. years; Chaucer, C. T. 7233. = A. S. winter, a winter, also a year; pl. wintar, or wintur. † Du. winter † Icel. witr; O. Icel. veitr, veitr, assumed form of witr † Dan. and Swed. winter. † G. winter, O. H. G. winter. † Goth. wintara. β. All from Teut. type WINTRU or WENTRU, winter, Fick, iii. 284; where -tr is evidently a suffix (Aryan -tr). Origin doubtful, but the suggestion in Fick is a good one, viz. that it meant 'wet season,' and is a nasalized form allied to E. wet, from WAD, to well (as water does). This is made more probable by the fact that we actually find nasalized forms of this root in Lat. wada, a wave, Lithuan. wandk, water, Skt. wad, to wet, moisten; whilst, on the other hand, we find E. water with a similar suffix, but without the nasal sound. See Wet, Water. Der. winter, verb, to pass the winter; wintur-g (for wintur-g); wintur-ly, Cymb. iii. 4. 13; wintur-quarters.

WIPE, verb, to cleanse by rubbing, to rub. (E.) M. E. wipen, Chaucer, C. T. 133. = A. S. wipian, to wipe; Ælfric's Homilies, l. 426, l. 30; 'Tergo, is wipige,' Ælfric's Gram. ed. Zupitza, p. 172, l. 8. This is a weak verb, meaning to rub over with a wipe, or to use a wipe of straw; formed, with the usual casual suffix -ian, from a sb. *wip, a wipe of straw, which does not occur in A. S. But it is preserved in Low G. wiep, a wipe of straw, or a rag to wipe anything with; Bremen Wörterbuch, v. 269; and the common E. wipe is nothing but an extended form of the same. See Wisp. Der. wipe, sb., sometimes in the sense of sarcasm or taunt, Shak. Lucrece, 337; wipe-or.

WIRE, a thread of metal. (E.) M. E. wire, wyr (with long i); dat. wyrs, P. Plowman, B. ii. 11. = A. S. wir, a wire, Grein, ii. 717. † Icel. wirr, wire; hence Swed. wir, to wind, twist. Cf. O. H. G. wara, M. H. G. wara, an ornament of refined gold. = Teut. type WIRA, wire, a thread of metal, properly a 'twisted' thread or an ornament of twisted metal-wire; cf. Icel. wirwir, flag-stave-work, lit. 'wire-work'; Lat. wiria, armlets of metal; Lithuan. wala, iron-wire. The Rom. wir, a whirl-pool, is related; from the same notion of twisting. Formed with suffix -re from W, to twist, twine; see Withy. Der. wire-draw, verb, to draw into wire; wire-drawing; wire-rod; wiry. And see ferrous.

WIS; for this fictitious verb, see Ywis.
WIS (1), having knowledge, discreet, learned. (E.) M. E. wis (with long i), wys, Chaucer, C. T. 68. = A. S. wis, wise; Grein, ii. 718. Du. wijs. † Icel. vis. † Dan. wis. † Swed. wis. † G. weise, O. H. G. wiet. † Goth. wes, in comp. wesans, wesias. β. All from Teut. type WISA, wise; Fick, iii. 306. The connection with the word wit, to know, cannot be doubted; the orig. sense must have been 'knowing,' or 'full of knowledge.' But, if so, t has been dropped, and wis = witas; the loss of t being accounted for by the length of the vowel. At the same time, a formative s has been added to the root; see Ywis. γ. Precisely the same phenomena occur in the Lat. wisere, to go to see, standing for *wid-ere, from the same root, and in its derivative wisitare, to visit. Thus the root is WID, to know; see Wit; and see Wit. Der. wisely; wis-dom, A. S. wisdom, Grein, ii. 719 (where dom = E. doom, i. e. judgment); wisdom (one word), As You Like It, l. 1. 93, &c.; wis-ness, Hamlet, v. 1. 286. Also wis (2). (But hardly wisens, q. v.)

WIS (2), way, manner, guise. (E.) M. E. wis (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1448. = A. S. wis, Grein, ii. 719. † Du. wys. † Icel. -vis, in the comp. odrovis, otherwise. † Dan. wis. † Swed. wis. † G. wis; O. H. G. wiso; whence, through French, E. guise. β. All from Teut. type WISA, lit. 'wiseness,' i. e. skill, hence the way or mode of doing a thing; from the adj. wis. See Wise (1). Der. like-wis, after-wis. Doublet, guise.

WISEACRE, a wise fellow (ironically), a fool. (Du. = G.) In Blount's Glom., ed. 1674. = O. Du. wys-sagger, as if 'a wise-sayer,' whence wys-saggen (Hexham), a verb wrongly used as if equivalent to the more usual O. Du. wys-saggen, 'to sooth-say,' id., whence wys-sagger, 'a diviner, or a soothsayer,' id. (from O. Du. wys, true). But the O. Du. word is merely borrowed from G. wys-sager, a sooth-sayer, as if it meant 'a wise-sayer;' cf. wys-sagen, to foretell, prophecy, soothsay. β. Oddly enough, not only is the E. form a strange travesty of the G. word, but the latter has itself suffered from the manipulation of popular etymology, and is a very corrupt form, having originally nothing to do with the verb to say, nor even precisely containing the word wis! This appears from the older forms; the G. wisaggen is the M. H. G. wisagen, afterwards corrupted to wisagen or wisagen by confusion with sagen, to say. And this M. H. G. verb was unoriginal, being formed from the sb. wisaga, a prophet, which was itself afterwards corrupted into wisager. γ. Now wis-ago is exactly parallel to A. S. wit-aga or wit-iga, a prophet (Grein, ii. 726); both words are formed (with suffixes denoting the agent) from the verb which appears as O. H. G. wisem, A. S. witan (= Lat. videre), to see; all from W, to know; see Wit.

β. It follows that the s is for G. z, the equivalent of E. z; whilst the unmeaning suffix -acre is less objectionable than the corrupt G. suffix -sager. Moreover, the sense 'wise-sayer' is merely an erroneous popular interpretation; the true sense is simply wis (= wis-er).

WISH, to have a desire, be inclined. (E.) M. E. wisshen, wisshen; P. Plowman, B. v. 111. = A. S. wysshian, to wish; Grein, ii. 766; less correctly wisem, id. The long y is due to loss of a, which appears in most cognate forms. + Du. wisem. + Icel. wisja, with the usual loss of initial v, and written for wisja. + Dan. wisde. + Swed. wisde. + G. wisachen; O. H. G. wisem.

β. All these are verbs formed from the corresponding sb., which is really the more orig. word. But the mod. E. word has the wis of the verb, so that it was best to consider that first; otherwise, the mod. E. word would have been wish. The A. S. sb. is wise, a wish, very rare, in Elfréd, tr. of Bede, b. v. c. 19, ed. Smith, p. 638, l. 40, where it is misprinted wiss; whence wissem, vb., by the usual change from s to z. Cognate words to the sb. are found in O. Du. wisem (Hezham); Icel. wis; G. wisack; O. H. G. wisem; the Teut. type being WONSKA, a wish, Fick, il. 307. All from WANSK, to wish (Fick, l. 769); whence also Skt. wishā, to wish (Benfey). Fick also cites Skt. wischā, to wish, edischā, a wish; he supposes the form WANSK to be a desiderative form (with the desiderative suffix -sh as in E. a-sh) from WAN, to desire, strive after, appearing in Skt. wan, to ask, and in E. wis; see Win. Der. wish, sb., merely from the verb, and not the same as the more orig. M. E. wisch, Prompt. Parv. p. 535, which answers to A. S. wisem, as above. Also wish-er, wish-er-er; wish-er-er, Men, for Men, il. 4. 27; wish-ful, il. longw. 3 Hen. VI. iii. 1. 14; wish-ful-ly, wish-ful-ness. And see wish-ful.

WISP, a small bundle of straw or hay. (E.) M. E. wisp, wips; spelt wisp, wips, P. Flowerman, B. v. 351; wisp, wips, wips, id. A. v. 195; the Vernon MS. has 'Wispet with a wisp' = wisp with a wisp. As in other cases where sp and ps are interchanged, the spelling with ps is the older; cf. asp, clasp, &c. The A. S. form would be wips, but it does not occur; and the final s is formative, wips being closely connected with the verb to wipe. We find also Low G. wisp, a wisp; Norweg. wippe, a thing that skips about, a wisp to sprinkle or dash with, also a swape, or machine for raising water; Swed. dial. wipp, an ear of rye, also a little sheaf or bundle; Goth. wipsa, also wipsa, a crown, orig. a twisted wreath.

β. Thus the Teut. base is certainly WIP, of which the orig. sense was to jerk or 'move briskly to and fro', hence to wipe or rub, and a wisp (or wipe) is a rubber. The sense of the verb plainly appears in O. Du. wippen, 'to shake, to wagge'; Low G. wippen, to go up and down as on a see-saw, Dan. wippe, to see-saw, rock, bob, Swed. wippe, to wag, jerk, G. wippen, to move up and down, see-saw, rock, jerk. = WIP, to tremble, vibrate; see Whip (in which the h is unoriginal). It has probably been confused with wish, as in Dan. wispe, a wisp, a rubber; but the two words are from different roots; see Whisk.

WIST, knew, or known; see Wit (1).

WISTFUL, eager, earnest, attentive, pensive. (E.) The word appears to be quite modern, and it has almost supplanted the word wiseful, which was once common. It is a reasonable inference that it is nothing but a corruption of that word. The usual explanation, that it is derived from wis, I knew, or from wis, knows, is stark nonsense, since 'knew-ful' or 'knows-ful' gives no sense, nor do we generally add -ful to past tenses or past participles. The most that can be said is that wistful is clearly founded on wistly, attentively, earnestly, used 4 times by Shakespeare, and apparently by no one else.

β. Now wistly cannot be fairly elucidated by wisfully, since the latter word does not occur till long afterwards; nor can we suppose that wistly has any connection with wis, since 'knew-ly' or 'knows-ly' again gives no sense. It follows that wistly is itself a corrupt form.

γ. Two solutions are possible; (1) that wistly stands for wistly, i. e. in a desired manner, which is not particularly good sense, though supported by the fact that the quartos read wistly for wistly in Rich. II. v. 4. 7; but, on the other hand, this sense does not suit in the other passages, viz. Venus and Adonis, 343, Locece, 1355, Pilgrim, 52; and (2) that wistly is put (with the usual ecrecent i after s) for M. E. wisly (with short i), certainly, verily, exactly, whence the senses of 'attentively,' &c. may have arisen; see Chaucer, C. T. 1865, 3992; Havelok, 374, Ormulum, 928. This M. E. word is from Icel. wis, certain (distinct from wis, wise), which is allied to wita, to know, and E. wit, to know.

8. My belief is, then, that wistful stands for wisful, the change in form being due to confusion with wistly, which was itself a corruption of M. E. wisly. The history of the word bears this out: we find wisful in 3 Hen. VI. iii. 1. 14; 'I sat looking wisfully at the clock,' Idler, no. 67 (R.); 'We looked at the fruit very wisfully,' Cook, First Voyage, b. iii. c. 7; 'I was weary of this day, and began to think wisfully of being in motion,' Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides, p. 98 (Todd); 'I looked at them wisfully,' Boswell, Life of Johnson, Sept. 1, 1773. The earliest quotations for wisful appear to be these: 'Lifting up one of my nashes, I cast many a wisful melancholy glance towards the sea,' Swift (in Todd); 'Wby, Grabbinal, dost thou so wisful seem? There's sorrow in thy look,' Gay, Pastorals, Friday, l. 1. It is remarkable that wisly (= wisfully) occurs in the Mirror for Magistrates, p. 863 (Todd). Der. wisful-ly.

WIT (1), to know. (E.) This verb is ill understood and has suffered much at the hands of grammarians and compilers of dictionaries. Wit is the infn. mood; we wit (as in 'we do you to wit') is the gerund; wit is the 1st and 3 pers. of the present indicative, the 3rd person being often corruptly written witeth; wit (later form witeth) is the 2nd pers. sing. of the same tense; wite, later wit, is the pt. 1; and wit is the pp. [The adv. wit or witte, certainly, was often misunderstood, and the verb wit, to know, was evolved, which is wholly unanctioned by grammar; see Ywila.] M. E. witen, infn.; pres. t. wit, wite, wit, pl. witen; pt. t. wite, pp. wit; see Chaucer, C. T. 1142, 1152, 1165, 1669, 9614, &c. [There was also M. E. witan, to see (with long i); see Stratmann, who puts wit under this latter verb, as if I have seen = I know. It makes little difference, since A. S. witan, to know, and witan, to see, are closely connected; I follow the arrangement in Green.] = A. S. witan, to know; pres. t. it wite, he wite, we wite, pl. witan; subj. sing. wite, pl. witan, pt. t. wite (sometimes wite), 2 p. witan, pl. witan; pp. wit; Green, ii. 722. Allied to A. S. witan, to see; pt. t. wite, pl. witan; id. ii. 724. It is clear that it wite is really an old past tense (prob. of witan) used as a present; causing the necessity of creating a new past tense wite or wite, which is, however, of great antiquity. Similar anomalous verbs are found in E., viz. see, any, shall, &c. The gerund is it witan, whence mod. E. to wit. The form wit, in Spenser, F. Q. l. 3. 6, is nothing but a corruption of wit. + Du. wisten, pt. t. wist, pp. wisten. + Icel. wita, pt. t. wit, pt. t. wista, pp. wittr. + Dan. wide, pt. t. wod, pt. t. wodit, pp. wodit. + Swed. wita, pt. t. wit, pt. t. wiste, pp. witan. + G. wissem, pt. t. wiss, pt. t. wissete, pp. wissit. + Goth. wisum, pt. t. wist, pt. t. wissan, pp. wist (?). β. All from Teut. type WITAN, to know, pt. t. WAIT, pt. t. WISSA; Fick, il. 304; the base being WIT, orig. 'to see.' Further allied to Lithuan. wizditi, to see, Russ. wideti, to see, Lat. widere, to see, Gk. videin, to see, wid, I know (= E. wit), Skt. wid, to perceive, know, orig. to see = WID, to see, perceive, know. Der. wit (2), q. v., wit-ness, q. v., it-wit (for at-wit); wit-ting-ly, knowingly, Haml. v. 1. 11. Also, from the same root, wis, wise; wis-ion, vis-ible, &c. (see Vision); id-er, id-ol, and the suffix -id in rhomboid, &c.; pod-u. And see witch, wisdom, wit-ol, wizard.

WIT (2), understanding, knowledge, the power of combining ideas with a happy or ludicrous effect. (E.) M. E. wit, Chaucer, C. T. 748 = A. S. wit, knowledge, Green, ii. 722 = A. S. witan, to know; see Wit (1). + Icel. wit. + Dan. wid. + Swed. wist. + G. wiss; O. H. G. wissan. Der. wit-ten, wit-ten-ly, wit-ten-ness; wit-ting, a pretender to wit, with double dimin. suffix -ing; wit-ol, as in blat-wit-ol, 3 Hen. VI. iii. 2. 310; wit-ty, A. S. witig or witing, Green, ii. 726; wit-ty-ly, wit-ty-ness. Also wit-ty-ness, used by Dryden in his pref. to the State of Innocence, with the remark that he asks 'pardon for a new word' (R.); evidently put for witty-ness, the s being introduced to avoid the hiatus, and being suggested by Gallinism, &c.

WITCH, a woman regarded as having magical power. (E.) Formerly used also of a man, Comedy of Errors, iv. 4. 160, Antony, l. 2. 40; but this is unusual. M. E. wichte, applied to a man, P. Flowerman, B. xviii. 69; also to a woman, Sir Percival, l. 236 (in the Thornton Romances). = A. S. wicca, masc. a wizard; wicce, fem. a witch. 'Arvola, wicca;' Wright's Voc. i. 60, col. 2. 'Phytonoma, wicca;' Wright's Voc. i. 74, col. 2. The pl. wiccen, occurring in the Laws of Edward and Guthrum, § 11, and Laws of Cant, secular, § 4 (Thorpe, Anc. Laws, l. 172, 378), may refer to either gender. β. Wise is merely the fem. of wis; and wicca is a corruption of A. S. witga, a common abbreviated form of witiga or witiga, a prophet, soothsayer, wizard; the pl. witiga is used in the sense of magicians, or sorcerers, and we even meet with deaf-witiga, a devil's prophet or wizard, shewing how completely the worse sense of the word prevailed; see Green, ii. 727, l. 191. The corruption from witga to wicca is not difficult; but we could not be sure of it were it not for the cognate Icel. form, which is the real clue to the word. This is Icel. witki, a wizard; whence witka, verb, to bewitch. Now this Icel. witki is plainly from wita, to know; just as A. S. witga, orig. a seer, is from witan, to see, allied to witan, to know. The same word occurs in O. H. G. witiga, a seer, explained under Wissacora. It follows that witka and wiccare are mere variants from the same base; and that wizard is likewise from the same root. γ. There are two other circumstances that help to confirm the above etymology; these are (1) that A. S. wicca does not appear to be in very early use; and (2) that there is no cognate form in other languages, except mod. Fries. witke, a witch (cited by the author of the Bremen Wörterbuch, which was prob. borrowed, and the Low G. wisken, to predict (which is formed from Fries. witke), with its derived sb. witker, a soothsayer. ¶ In the Laws of Guthrum and Edward (cited above) we find mention of wiccen oððe witigum, witches or diviners. The latter word, witigum, is plainly connected with A. S. wig, a temple (Green), also spelt wā, and with Goth.

wich, holy, from a Teut. base WIH (Fick, iii. 303). I do not see how we can possibly attribute wices to the same root, as some propose to do. By way of further illustrating the change from wilga to wicca, I may remark that Swed. widga, to widen, is pronounced widde in Norwegian (Aasen). Der. witch-craft, A. S. wicerecraft, Levit. xx. 27, from wices, a witch, and craft, craft, art. Also witch, verb, A. S. wicnian, Thorpe, Ancient Laws, ii. 274, sect. 39; hence witch-er-y, a coined word, Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1, l. 412. Also be-witch, q. v.

WITCH-ELM, WYCH-ELM, a kind of elm. (E.) Spelt werech-elm, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 475. There is also a witch-hazel. M. E. wyche, wyche; 'Wyche, tre, Ulmus'; Prompt. Parv. = A. S. wice, occurring in a list of trees. 'Virecta, wice; Caricosa, wice'; Wright's Voc. i. 285, col. 2. The sense is 'drooping' or 'beeding'; and it is derived from A. S. wice-æn, pp. of wicean, to bend; see Wicker. The t in the word is quite superfluous, and due to confusion with the word witch above. 'Some varieties of the wyche-elm have the branches quite pendulous, like the weeping-willow, thus producing a most graceful effect'; Our Woodlands, by W. S. Coleman.

WITH, by, near, among. (E.) M. E. wiða, Chaucer, C. T. 1. = A. S. wið, governing gen., dat., and acc.; Gram. ii. 692. It often has the sense of 'against,' which is still preserved in to fight with = to fight against, and in with-stand. † Icel. við, against, by, at, with. † Dan. med, by, at. † Swed. vid, near, at, by. β. From Teut. type WITH, against; Fick, iii. 304. Fick suggests a connection with Skt. vi, ascend, a common prefix. And see Withers.

¶ We must observe that with has to a great extent taken the place of A. S. and M. E. mid, with, which is now obsolete. Der. with-æd, with it, with, Temp. iii. 1. 93, M. E. withalls, Chaucer, C. T. 12130, compounded of with, prep., and alle, dat. case of al, all, and used in place of A. S. mid ælles, with all, wholly, Grein, l. 238, l. 12. Also with-in, M. E. with-inne, Wyclif, Matt. ii. 16, A. S. wiðinnan, on the inside, Matt. xxiii. 26; with-out, M. E. with-outen, with-outen, Chaucer, C. T. 463, A. S. wiðutan, on the outside of, Matt. xxiii. 25; and note that A. S. innan and utan are properly adverbial formations, extended from in and ut respectively. And see with-draw, with-hold, with-stand; also with-are.

WITHDRAW, to draw back or away, to recall. (E.) M. E. withdrawen, to draw back, take away, Ancræn Riwe, p. 230, last line. Not found in A. S. From With and Draw; where with has the old sense of 'towards,' hence towards oneself, and away from another. Der. with-draw-al, with-drawment, late and coined words. Also withdrawing-room, a retiring-room, esp. for ladies (see example in Todd's Johnson, and in Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, ch. ix.), now corrupted to drawing-room!

WITHE, WITH, a flexible twig; see Withy. WITHEB, to fade. (E.) M. E. witrem, not an old form. 'Now gone as life, now witred and ago'; Tent. of Cressida, st. 34. This M. E. witrem is nothing but a variant of M. E. wideren, to expose to the weather, so that witred = widered, exposed to weather. 'Wideren, or leyri or heagyn yn the weder, Auro'; Prompt. Parv. And the verb wideren is from M. E. weder, weather; see Weather. ¶ It follows that wither is properly transitive, as in 'Age cannot wither her,' Antony, ii. 2. 240; but the intrans. use is much more common.

WITHERS, the ridge between the shoulder-blades of a horse. (E.) In Hamlet, iii. 2. 233. So called because it is the part which the horse opposes to his load, or on which the stress of the collar comes in drawing. Cf. Cleveland withers, the bars of an arrow-head, which oppose its being drawn backwards (Atkinson). The lit. sense is 'things which resist'; formed from M. E. wiðer, resistance. 'Wider com to-geues' = resistance (or an adverse wind) came against me; Layamon, 4678. Hence wiðerful, full of resistance, hostile, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 51, l. 19; wiðeren, wiðerism, to resist. id. ii. 252, last line; and see Stralman. = A. S. wiðer, resistance; Grein, ii. 692. = A. S. wiðer, against, id. ii. 697; common in composition. An extended form of wið, against, also used in the sense of with; see With. The A. S. wiðer is cognate with Du. weder, Icel. viðr, Dan. and Swed. weder, G. weder, Goth. wiðra, signifying against, or again; Fick gives the Teut. type as WITRA, extended from WITH. This very prefix is represented by gwi- in Guardian, q. v. β. The above etymology is verified by the similar word found in G. widerrist, the withers of a horse, from wider, old spelling of wiðer, against, and rist, which not only means wrist or instep, but also an elevated part, the withers of a horse.

WITHHOLD, to hold back, keep back. (E.) M. E. withholden, pp. withhold, Chaucer, C. T. 513; and see Ancræn Riwe, p. 248, l. 22. From With, in the sense of 'back,' or 'towards' the agent, and Hold. Cf. with-draw.

WITHIN, WITHOUT; see under With. WITHSAY, to contradict. (E.) M. E. witshies, Chaucer, C. T. 807; witshagen, Ancræn Riwe, p. 86, l. 7. = A. S. wið, against; and sayen, to say; see With and Say.

WITHY, WITHE, a flexible twig, esp. of willow. (E.) Spelt witthe or withe, pl., Judg. xvi. 7. M. E. wiðe, wiðe, &c.; spelt wyche, witthe, wyche, Prompt. Parv. p. 531; witthe, K. Al. wonder, 4714; wiði, Ancræn Riwe, p. 86, l. 15 = A. S. wiðig, a willow, also a twig of a willow. 'Salix, wiðig'; Wright's Voc. i. 23. † O. Da. wiede, 'a hoppe,' Hexham; i. e. the hop-plant, from its twining. † Icel. viða, a withy; við, a with (showing the different forms); viður, a willow. † Dan. wiða, a willow, osier. † Swed. wide, a willow; wiða, a willow twig. † G. wiede, a willow; O. H. G. widd. β. Fick gives two Teut. types, viz. WITHYA, a willow (including Icel. viður, G. wiede); and WITHI, a twig or tendril (including Icel. við, M. H. G. wit, a withie); which are, of course, closely related. Moreover, we find allied words in Lithuan. liw-witla, the gray willow (used for basket-work), Gk. trifa, a willow, a wicker-shield; also in Russ. wisa, a withie, Lat. wisa, a vine. The application is to plants that twine or are very flexible; and all these words are from the W, to twine, plait, as in Russ. wie, to twine, plait, Lat. wire, whence also Lat. wire, a twig, wire, a vine, wire, wine (orig. grape). From the same root we have wich, were, ferrole (for ferule), wine, vine; also wi-rod (2), wi-rod, wi-cher, wyche-elm, wi-widie, &c.

WITNESS, testimony; also, one who testifies. (E.) Properly an abstract sb., like all other sbs. in -ness. M. E. witnesse, Ancræn Riwe, p. 68, l. 3. = A. S. witnes, testimony, Luke, ix. 5; also ge-witnes, Mark. i. 44. [The use of the word in the sense of 'witnesser' is marginal, and prob. not early; it occurs in Wyclif, Matt. xvi. 60.] = A. S. wit-an, to know; with suffix -nes; see Wit (1); thus the orig. sense is 'knowledge' or 'consciousness.' Cf. M. E. witnes, to testify, Ancræn Riwe, p. 30; Icel. witna, Dan. witne, to testify. Der. witnesse, vb. M. E. witnesse, P. Plowman, B. prol. 191.

WITTOL, a cockold. (E.) In Merry Wives, ii. 1. 3. Not an old word in this sense. It occurs also in Ben Jonson, The Fox, Act v. sc. 1 (Mosca); and in Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of Malta, iii. 2 (Gomers). 'Jauma, a wittall, one that knows and bears with, or winks at, his wife's dishonesty,' Cotgrave. This explanation of Cotgrave's seems to resolve the word at once into wit-all, one who knows all, but this would hardly be grammatical; it should rather be wit-all. It is commonly explained as equivalent to M. E. witels, knowing, a very rare word, occurring once in Layamon, 18547. And this again is supposed to be from the A. S. witel, adj., wise, sapient; formed with suffix -el (as in spring-el, talkative), from wit-an, to know. In this case, the word would mean wise or knowing; or, ironically, a simpleton, a gull. β. But all this is very suspicious; the A. S. witel is unauthorised, and only known to Sommer, who may have invented it; it is surprising that we have no trace of the word for nearly 4 centuries, from about 1200 to 1600. On this account, Wedgwood's suggestion is worth notice; viz. that a wittol is the bird commonly called in olden times a wittall. Florio explains Ital. godano by 'the bird called a wittol or woodwall'; ed. 1598. In a later edition, according to Wedgwood, this appears as: 'Godano, a wittal or wood-wale'; and Torriano has 'Wittal, becco contento,' i. e. a cockold. The corruption from wittall to wittol is easy and natural. γ. Wittol itself is the same word as wittol, an old name for various birds, one of which may be supposed to answer to the Low Latin curruca. 'Curruca est avis, vel ille qui, cum credit nutrire filios suos, nutrit aliosos'; Sapp. to Ducange, by Diefenbach. On which Wedgwood remarks: 'the origin of this name [wittol] is undoubtedly from the fact that the bird known under the name of curruca is one of those in the nest of which the cuckoo drops its egg.' See further under Woodwale. Cf. gull, (1) a bird, (2) one who is deceived.

WIVERN; see Wyvern. WIZARD, WISARD, one who practises magic, a magician. (F. = Teut.) M. E. wizard; spelt wyward, wywar, Prompt. Parv. It should rather have been wisard, and I suspect this form is really preserved in the proper names Wishart, Wishart, Winst (all in Bohn's Lowndes' Bibliographer's Manual). = O. F. *wizard, not recorded, but necessarily the older spelling of O. F. guisard, also guisard, adj., prudent, sagacious, cunning (Burguy). [In like manner the O. F. guisard, guisard, was at first spelt wisard, as recorded by Roquefort.] Hence Wishard as a surname or epithet. = Icel. wið-r, clever, knowing; with F. suffix -ard, due to O. H. G. suffix -hart, which is merely G. hart (= E. hard) in composition, as in numerous other words. The Icel. wið-r is a contracted form of wið-ard, formed from wið-a, to know, with suffix -ar (= E. -ish, A. S. -ise). Hence wið-ard is equivalent to wit-ard.

WIZEN, to shrivel or dry up. (E.) Added by Todd to Johnson. M. E. wizen, to become shrivelled; see quotation in Halliwell, s. v. wizen. = A. S. wisian, to become dry, John, xv. 6 (only in the Lindisfarne and Rushworth MSS., both Northumbrian); the word appears to be Northern. We find, however, A. S. for-winnan, to form is wifman, a woman, Grein, li. 700. By assimilation, this form became winnan in the 10th century. In Judges, iv. 17, we have the dat. sing. wifman, but in the very next verse (and in verse 22) jael is called is wifman = the woman. [Similarly, the A. S. hiefmann (loaf-man) became leoman; see Leoman.] By way of further illustration, see Mark, x. 6, where the various MSS. have wifman, wifman, winnan.

β. The pl. of wifman was wifman, which was similarly reduced to winnan, as in Gen. xx. 17, and this form has held its ground, in the spoken language, to the present day; which is the strongest possible proof of the etymology. γ. But the sing. form suffered further alteration; we still find wifman (later text winnan) in Layamon, l. 1860, winnan, Havelok, l. 1168, wifman, Aycbite of Lawyt, p. 11, l. 1 [as late as A. S. 1340; the pl. being both wifman, p. 20, last line but one, and winnan, according to Morris]; but we also find winnan, Ancron Riwe, p. 12, l. 11, winnan, Rich. Cœur de Lion, 3863; winnan, Rob. of Glouc. p. 9, last line, P. Plowman, B. l. 71, li. 8; so also in Chaucer, C. T. Group D. 66 [l. 5648], where 8 MSS. have winnan, but one has winnan; after which the spelling winnan is common. Thus the successive spellings are wifman, wifman, winnan, winnan, winnan or winnan, winnan; and lastly winnan, as at present. In some dialects, the pronunciation winnan (glouss winnan) is still heard. 8. The successive corruptions are probably merely due to the loss of the u of the word; when once wifman had become winnan, there was nothing to keep the pronunciation stable. Some have thought that popular fancy connected the word with winn, as if the word were winn-man; but the change of vowel was due to the preceding w, just as in A. S. winn, later form winn, a wood; see Wood. For further discussion, see Wife and Man.

γ. Fick gives the Teut. type WISNA, dry, shrivelled; to which may also be referred O. H. G. wisnān, to dry (cited by Fick), G. wissen (put for wissmann), to petrify, corrupt, moulder. The last sense links these words with Icel. visna, a stagnant pool, cess-pool; and (probably, as Fick suggests) with Lat. visna, Gk. lō, Skt. wisā, poison. The Skt. wisā, poison, water, may be derived from Skt. wisā, to sprinkle; but this verb is unauthorised. The form of the root certainly seems to be WIS, whatever may be the sense. ¶ Wedgwood connects Icel. visnān with Goth. wisnans, pp. of wisan, to be, remain, dwell; but the Icel. word for 'been' is worit; again, the O. H. G. wisnān, to dry, seems distinct from O. H. G. wisnān, to be; see Was. This would refer wisnān to WAS, to dwell. It is remarkable that we find Skt. was, dry; and wasita, that which has dwelt, stale, pp. of was, to dwell; but this will not explain the Scand. forms.

¶ WO, WOE, grief, misery. (E.) M. E. wo, Chaucer, C. T. 353, 1458. = A. S. wa, wo, used as interj. and adv., sometimes with dat. case, Grein, li. 633; wa, wo, sb., id. 668. † Du. wa, interj. and sb. † Icel. wa, interj., used with dat. case. † Dan. wa, interj. and sb. † Swed. wa, interj. † G. wa, interj. and sb. † Goth. wa, interj. β. The Teut. type is WAL, wo orig. an interjection. Further allied to Lat. wa, wo Fick, iii. 379. The A. S. sb. wa is derived from the interjection. Der. wo-wa, M. E. woful, Chaucer, C. T. 2058; woful-ly, ness. Also wo-begun, spelt wo-begun, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 20, i. e. surrounded with wo, from M. E. wo begun, Chaucer, C. T. 5318, where begun is the pp. of M. E. begin, to go about, surround, equivalent to A. S. begin, compounded of be, prep. (E. by) and gan, to go; see further in Stratmann, s. v. begin, p. 61. Also see wo, wo to be; for which phrase see Worth (1). Also wo-l, q. v.

¶ WOAD, a plant used as a blue dye-stuff. (E.) M. E. woad (with long o), Chaucer, Reis Prima, l. 17, pr. in Appendix to tr. of Boethius, ed. Morris, p. 180. = A. S. wād, woad. 'Sandix, wad; Fucus, wad;' Wright's Voc. l. 32, col. 1. The O. F. name is spelt woad in a Vocab. of the 13th century; id. 159, col. 3. † Du. woad. † Dan. wad, wad. † Swed. wad. † G. wad, wad, M. H. G. wad, wad (E. Müller); whence O. F. woad, woad, goad, mod. F. goad. Root unknown; allied to Lat. vitrum, wad. ¶ Distinct from wad (2).

¶ WOLD, a down, plain open country. (E.) Spelt old in Shak. K. Lear, iii. 4. 123; wold, wolds in Minshew, ed. 1627. M. E. wold, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 938; the dat. case is spelt wold in one text of Layamon, 20841, but wold in the other; it is thus seen to be the same word as M. E. wald, a wood, which was, however, more commonly used in the sense of waste ground, wide open country (as in Norse); in Layamon, 21339, where one text has wald, the other has feld, field, in the sense of open country. = A. S. wald, wald, a wood, forest, Grein, li. 669. † O. Saz. and O. Fries. wald, a wood. † G. wald, O. H. G. wald. † Icel. völlr, gen. völlr (= wald), a field, plain. β. All from Teut. type WALDU or WALDA, a wood; Fick, iii. 399. The connection, in form, with A. S. gewald, Icel. wald, dominion, is so obvious that it is difficult to assign any other origin than Teut. WALD, to rule, possess, for which see Wield. The orig. sense may have been 'hunting-ground,' considered as the possession of a tribe. Doublet, wald, q. v.

¶ WOLF, a rapacious beast of prey. (E.) M. E. wolf; pl. wulves (= wolves), Wyclif, Matt. x. 16. = A. S. wulf, pl. wulfus, Grein, li. 750. † Du. and G. wolf. † Icel. vulfr (for vulfr). † Dan. vulf. † Swed. vulf. † Goth. wulfs. β. All from Teut. type WOLFA, a wolf; Fick, iii. 307. Further allied to Lith. wilbas, Russ. wolf, Gk. lykos, Lat. lupus, Skt. wilba, a wolf; the common European form being WALKA (Fick, l. 773), answering to Aryan walba (id. l. 313). The form WALKA was variously altered to walbs, walps, walpa, producing Gk. lykos, Lat. lupus, A. S. wulf, &c. γ. The sense is 'tearer,' or 'render,' from his ravenous nature. = WARK, to tear; whence Skt. warka, to tear. Gk. lykos, I break, Lithuan. wilkti, to pull, &c. ¶ The suggested connection with Lat. vulpes, a fox, is not generally accepted. Der. wolf-red, wolf-ub-ly; wolf-dog. Also wolw-or-ans, or wolw-or-ins, a coined word, a name given to an American animal resembling the glutton, a name sometimes incorrectly given to the wolverene also.

¶ WOMAN, a grown female. (E.) That woman is a corruption of A. S. wifman, lit. wife-man, is certain; and it must be remembered that the A. S. man (like Lat. homo) is of both genders, masc. and fem. To show this, it is best to trace the word downwards. The A. S.

form is wifman, a woman, Grein, li. 700. By assimilation, this form became winnan in the 10th century. In Judges, iv. 17, we have the dat. sing. wifman, but in the very next verse (and in verse 22) jael is called is wifman = the woman. [Similarly, the A. S. hiefmann (loaf-man) became leoman; see Leoman.] By way of further illustration, see Mark, x. 6, where the various MSS. have wifman, wifman, winnan.

β. The pl. of wifman was wifman, which was similarly reduced to winnan, as in Gen. xx. 17, and this form has held its ground, in the spoken language, to the present day; which is the strongest possible proof of the etymology. γ. But the sing. form suffered further alteration; we still find wifman (later text winnan) in Layamon, l. 1860, winnan, Havelok, l. 1168, wifman, Aycbite of Lawyt, p. 11, l. 1 [as late as A. S. 1340; the pl. being both wifman, p. 20, last line but one, and winnan, according to Morris]; but we also find winnan, Ancron Riwe, p. 12, l. 11, winnan, Rich. Cœur de Lion, 3863; winnan, Rob. of Glouc. p. 9, last line, P. Plowman, B. l. 71, li. 8; so also in Chaucer, C. T. Group D. 66 [l. 5648], where 8 MSS. have winnan, but one has winnan; after which the spelling winnan is common. Thus the successive spellings are wifman, wifman, winnan, winnan, winnan or winnan, winnan; and lastly winnan, as at present. In some dialects, the pronunciation winnan (glouss winnan) is still heard. 8. The successive corruptions are probably merely due to the loss of the u of the word; when once wifman had become winnan, there was nothing to keep the pronunciation stable. Some have thought that popular fancy connected the word with winn, as if the word were winn-man; but the change of vowel was due to the preceding w, just as in A. S. winn, later form winn, a wood; see Wood. For further discussion, see Wife and Man. ¶ Note also the word leoman, which was successively loaf man, leoman, leoman; here we have a similar assimilation of fu to u, and a considerable change in sense; see Leoman. Wife, woman-head, M. E. womandede, womandede, Chaucer, C. T. 1710, the corresponding A. S. word being wifhead, Gen. i. 27; woman-sak, K. John, l. 4. 56; woman-sak-ly, ness; woman-head, Tam. Shrew, iv. 2. 14; woman-head, Pericles, iv. 6. 159; woman-like, woman-ly, M. E. womandede, Ancron Riwe, p. 274, l. 9; woman-li-ness.

¶ WOMB, the belly, the place of conception. (E.) Lowl. Sc. wombe, the belly; Burns, Scotch Drink, st. 5. M. E. wombe, Wyclif, Matt. xv. 17; wombe, Fricke of Conscience, 4161. = A. S. womb, womb, the belly, Grein, li. 637. 'Venter, womb;' Wright's Voc. l. 71, col. 1. † Du. wom, the belly of a fish. † Icel. womb, the belly, esp. of a boat. † Dan. wom. † Swed. womb, womb, womb, womb, O. H. G. wompa. † Goth. womba. β. The Teut. type is WAMBA, the belly, paunch; Fick, iii. 390. Root unknown. ¶ Quite distinct from Lat. wombus.

¶ WOMBAT, a marsupial mammal, found in Australia. (Australian) In Webster. A corruption of the native Australian name wombach or wombach. 'The wombach, or, as it is called by the natives of Port Jackson, the wombach;' Collins, New South Wales (1802), quoted in the Penny Cyclopaedia. 'The mountain natives call it wombach;' letter from Governor Hunter, dated Sydney, 1798; in Bewick's Quadrupeds.

¶ WONDER, a strange thing, a prodigy, portent, admiration. (E.) M. E. wonder; pl. wondria, Wyclif, Mark, xiii. 22. = A. S. wonder, a portent, Grein, li. 751. † Du. wonder. † Icel. wondr (for wondr); † Dan. and Swed. wonder. † G. wunder, O. H. G. wunder. β. The Teut. type is WOND-RA or WUND-RA, a wonderful thing; Fick, iii. 306. The orig. sense is 'awe,' lit. that from which one turns aside, or 'that which is turned from,' from Teut. base WAND, to wind, turn; see Wind (1), and cf. A. S. wundran, pp. of windan, to wind. The connection between wind and wonder, not very apparent at first sight, is explained by A. S. γ. Thus, from A. S. wendan, to wind, we not only have wunden, to turn (see Wind), but also the verb wendian, lit. to turn aside from, but usually to turn from through a feeling of fear or awe, to respect, to revere. 'Pū se wendian for nānum man' = thou respectest, or darest, no man; Matt. xxiii. 16; Luke, xx. 21. Grein explains wendian by 'pū se meta sive alicujus reverentia omittere, cunctari;' li. 638. Hence M. E. wenden, to conceal through fear, to falter, &c.; Will. of Palerns, 4071; Gower, C. A. l. 323, l. 7; Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 1185. The suffix answers to Aryan -ra. Der. wonder, verb, A. S. wundrian, Grein, li. 753; wonder-ful, M. E. wonderful, Layamon, l. 280, later text, used in place of A. S. wunderfelle, lit. wonder-like, Grein, li. 753; wonder-ful-ly, ness. Also wonder-ous, q. v.

¶ WONDROUS, wonderful. (E.) Spelt wonderous in Palgrave, and prob. not found much earlier; it is a corrupt form (like righteous for rightwise), and took the place of the older word wonder, properly an adv., but also used as an adj. 'Ye be wonders men' = ye are wondrous men; Skelton, Magnificence, 90. 'Where such a colompee yerely myracle is wrought so wondrously in the fete of the world;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 134 (R.). Earlier as an adv., as 'wondrous dere,' i. e. wonderfully dear, Test. of Love, b. ii; pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1652, fol. 297, col. 2, l. 1.

β. Wonders is formed by adding s (an adv. suffix, as in need-s) to wonder used as an adv. or adj.; Chaucer has 'wonder diligent,' C. T. 455; Gower has 'such a wonder night,' C. A. I. 121, l. 9. Wonder became an adj. through the misprint of the A. S. wunderlic, adj., wonderful, as an adverb; thus Chaucer has 'wonderly deliver,' C. T. 84; so also 'so wonderly sore,' Tale of Gamelyn, 166 (late editions, wonderously). γ. Hence the history of the word is clear; the A. S. wunderlic, adj., became M. E. wonderly, adv., whence M. E. wonder, adj. and adv., lengthened to wonders, adv. and adj., and to wonderly, adv.; the double use of -ly, both as an adjectival and adverbial suffix, being a lasting cause of confusion. ¶ The spurious poem called Chaucer's Dream has the word wondrous, l. 1898, but it was not printed till a. a. 1597. Hence wondrously, wondrousness.

WONT, used or accustomed. (E.) Properly the pp. of won, to dwell, to be used to. When the fact that it was a pp. was forgotten, it came to be used as a sb.; and then, by way of distinction, a new form wont-ed was evolved, to keep up the pp. use. Hence wont-ed (= won-ed-ed) has the suffix -ed twice over! [For wont, sb., and wont-ed, see the end of the article.] 'As they were wont' [accustomed] to doze;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1195. 'She never was to swiche gestes wonted' = she was never accustomed to such guests, Chaucer, C. T. 8215. 'Thou wert aye wonted ech lover reprehend' = thou wert ever wont to reprehend each lover, Chaucer, Troilus, l. 511. Wonted is the pp. of M. E. wonnen, wonnen, to dwell, be accustomed to; in Chaucer, C. T. 7745, it means simply 'to dwell,' but the sense 'to be accustomed' was easily (in A. S. times) introduced from the related sb. wonnes, a custom, Chaucer, C. T. 337. = A. S. wonnan, to dwell, remain, continue in, Grein, ii. 753; also gewonnan, to dwell, to be accustomed to. 'Swá swá he gewonnan' = as he was accustomed (lit. as he won), Mark, x. 1; cf. 'whom we wont to fear,' 1 Hen. VI. l. 2. 14. A weak verb, allied to the sb. wonnes, custom, use, wont, commonly spelt gewonnes, Luke, l. 9, ii. 27. Allied to A. S. wonnan, pp. of wonnan, to strive after; see Win. Wont is 'a thing won,' i. e. the custom or habit due to continual endeavour. β. Similarly, from the Teut. base WAN, to strive after, we have Icel. wonnr, adj., accustomed, used (to a thing), wonni, a usage, whence wonni (for wonnr), a custom, habit, wonnr, to accustom (pt. t. wonni, wonni, pp. wonnr, wonnr) = E. won; see Wear. So also (in connection with M. H. G. gewonnes) we find M. H. G. gewon, O. H. G. gewon, adj., accustomed to, M. H. G. gewon, O. H. G. gewon, usage, M. H. G. gewonnes, to be used to, gewonlich, customary; G. gewonnes, to be used to, pp. gewonni, wont, wonnes, to dwell. See Fick, iii. 287. Der. wont, sb., Hamlet, l. 4. 6, put for M. E. wonnes, sb., by confusion with wont above. Also wont-ed, used as a pt. t. by Surrey instead of wont; 'Of me, that wonted to rejoice,' Complaint of the Absence of her Lover, l. 5, in Tottell's Misc., ed. Arber, p. 18; so also Palgrave gives wont as a verb. 'I wons or use; it is no wysdome to wons a thing that is not honest;' and hence wonsted as a pp. or adj., Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 2. 113, ll. 3. 369.

WOO, to sue, court, ask in order to marriage. (E.) Spelt wo in Palgrave; but Spenser retains the old spelling wonnes, F. Q. vi. 11. 4. M. E. wonnes, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 546; later wonnes (by change of o to u), P. Plowman, B. iv. 74. = A. S. wiguan, to woo, occurring in the comp. dwiguan, to woo, Alfrie's Homilies, 3rd Series, vii. 14 (E. E. T. S.). Hence the sb. wigere, a wooer; 'Proca, wigere,' Wright's Voc. l. 50, col. 8. The lit. sense is simply to bend, incline; hence to incline another towards oneself. = A. S. wō (stem wīg, pl. wīge), bent, curved, crooked; Grein, i. 731. Cf. wāt, sb., a bending aside, turning aside, inquiry; wāt-bogum, bowed in a curve, bent; id. β. The A. S. wō, bent, is cognate with Goth. wāt, bent, only occurring in un-wāt, straight, blameless. Lake, i. 6. = WAK, to go tortuously, be crooked; whence also Skt. wā, to go tortuously, be crooked, wāra, crooked, Lat. univulvata, to vacillate, unvata, crooked, &c. Fick, l. 205. See Vacillate, Variouse. Der. won-wr, M. E. wonnes, P. Plowman, B. xl. 71, A. S. wigere, as above.

WOOD (t), a collection of growing trees, timber. (E.) M. E. wode, Chaucer, C. T. 1424, 1524. = A. S. wudu, Grein, ii. 745; but the orig. form was wudu; id. 693 + Icel. wōr, a tree, wood. + Dan. wod. + Swed. wod. + M. H. G. wita, O. H. G. wita. β. The Teut. type is WIDU, wood, Fick, iii. 305. Cf. also Irish fóidh, a wood, a tree; fóidhain, shrubs, underwood; Gael. fóidh, timber, wood, a wilderness, fóidhach, shrubs, W. gwydd, trees, gwyddeli, bushes, brakes. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'twig,' or a mass of twigs, a bush; I suspect a connection with E. witly. Cf. M. H. G. witem, O. H. G. witan, to bind, fasten together. The O. H. G. wite and E. witly may both, perhaps, be referred to W, to twine; whence Lat. u-mu, u-tu, &c.; see Witly. Der. wood-bine or wood-bund, spelt wudbynde in Palgrave, wodbynde in Chaucer, C. T. Six-text, 1508 (1510 in Tyrwhitt), A. S. wodebinde, used to translate hætere sigra in Wright's Voc. l. 33, col. 2; so called because it binds or winds round trees; cf. A. S. wodwinda, lit. wood-wind, used to tr. swirra, id. l. 206, l. 1. Also wod-coal; wod-cut, A. S. wudwar, id. l. 280, l. 3; wod-craft, M. E. wudcraft, Chaucer, C. T. 110; wod-cut; wod-dow, M. E. wode-dow, Chaucer, C. T. 13700; wod-ingraving; wod-land, M. E. wode-land, Layamon, 1699; wod-lark; wod-man, Cymb. iii. 6. 28, spelt wodman in Palgrave; wod-nymph; wod-packer, Palgrave; wod-pigeon; wod-ruff, q. v. Also wod-ed; wod-en, i. e. made of wood, K. Lear, ii. 3. 16; wod-y, Spenser, F. Q. l. 6. 18.

WOOD (2), mad, furious. (E.) In Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 193. M. E. wof (with long o), Chaucer, C. T. 184. = A. S. wōd, mad, raging, Grein, i. 730; whence wodan (= wōdan), to be mad, 613 + Icel. wōr, raging, frantic. + Goth. wōd, mad. And cf. Du. wōde, G. wōh, M. H. G. wōt, madness. β. The Teut. type is WODA, wood, frantic. Doubtless allied, as Fick suggests (iii. 308), to Lat. wates, a prophet, poet, one who is filled with divine frenzy; hence the same Wodes, applied to the highest of the Scand. divinities. Root uncertain. Der. Wod-er-day, q. v.

WOODRUFF, the name of a plant. (E.) Spelt wodruff in Palgrave. M. E. wodruff, Wright's Glom. i. 226, col. 2. = A. S. wodruff, id. 30, col. 2; also wodruff. See Cockayne's Lacchodoma, ii. 418, where it is shown that it was not only applied to the Asperula odorata (as at present), but also to Aspidosium ramosum; and it is also called astula (hastula) regia in glosses. The former part of the word is A. S. wudu, a wood; the sense of ruff is uncertain, but it is usual to connect it with Ruff (1), q. v. Certainly, the A. S. ruff may very well be from rufan, pp. of rufan, to break, cleave, as suggested under that word. Supposed to be named from the ruff or whorl of leaves round the stem.

WOODWALE, the name of a bird. (E.) Also called witwall and even wittal; see Wittol. Cotgrave explains F. oriole or oriole as 'a heighaw or witwall.' [The form witwall was not borrowed from G., but stands for widwall; the old form of A. S. wudu being wudu.] M. E. wodwale, the same as wodwale (i. e. wood-hatch or wood-hack, a woodpecker), Prompt. Parv.; Rom. of the Rose, 658; used to translate O. F. oriole, Wright's Voc. l. 166 (13th century); Owl and Nightingale, 1659. Not found in A. S. + O. Du. wodwale, 'a kind of a yellow bird;' Hexham. + G. wittwall, a yellow thrush, Flugel; M. H. G. wittwall, an oriole (Stratzmann). β. The former element is certainly A. S. wudu, wudu, M. E. wode, a wood; just as M. H. G. wittwall is from M. H. G. wita, a wood. Cf. M. E. wodwale, above, and E. wod-packer. [Kilian's strange error in connecting it with wod was due, probably, to the loss of the cognate word to wod in Dutch.] But the sense of the latter element has not been explained; it might mean 'stranger,' from A. S. witla. Cf. Wales, lit. 'the strangers,' but now used as the name of a country. Doubtless, wittol, q. v.

WOOF, the weft, the threads crossing the warp in woven cloth. (E.) In Shak. Troil. v. 2. 152. A corruption of M. E. wof, due to a supposed connection (which happens to be right, but not in the way which popular etymology would assign) with the vb. to wove and the sb. wef. 'Oof, threde for webbyng, Trama, stamen, subtegmēn.' Prompt. Parv. So also in Wyclif, Levit. xiii. 47, earlier version (cited in Way's note). = A. S. wōf, a woof. 'Cladica, wof, vel wōf;' Wright's Voc. ii. 104 (8th century). Cladica is the dimin. of Low Lat. clada, a woven hurdle, and wof is clearly a variant of wef; so that there can be no doubt as to the sense of wōf. Somewhat commoner is the parallel form dwōf or dūwōf, frequently contracted to dō; and this word has precisely the same sense. 'Subtinen, dōwōf' immediately follows 'Stamen, wōwōf,' i. e. the warp, in Wright's Voc. l. 382, l. 5; 'Trama, vel subtessen, dōwōf, vel dō;' id. l. 59, col. 2; 'Luoctema, lino wōwōf, vel wōwōf [woollen] dō,' id. l. 40, l. 8; where Mr. Wright adds the note: 'the yarn of a weaver's warp in I believe, still called an dō.' [For wōwōf we should doubtless read wōwōf.] β. The words wōf, and dwōf or dūwōf are compounds, both containing the prefix d or dw, shortened form of on, preposition. Also wof and wōf are both sb., meaning 'web,' from wōfan, to weave. Thus the word wōf, put for wōf, is short for on-wōf, i. e. on-wōf, the web that is laid on or thrown across the first set of threads or warp. See On and Weave. ¶ Most dictionaries 'explain' wōf as derived from wove, but care not a jot about the on, which they do not deign to notice. Yet they do not dream of deriving wōf from hove, nor wōf from rove.

WOOL, the short thick hair of sheep and other animals. (E.) M. E. wolle, P. Plowman, B. vi. 13. = A. S. woll, wol. 'Lana, wul;' Wright's Voc. l. 66, col. 1. + Du. wol. + Icel. woll (for woll). + Dan. wid (for woll or woll). + Swed. woll. + G. wolle, O. H. G. wolla. + Goth. wolla. β. The Teut. type is WOLLA (Fick, iii. 298), which is certainly as assimilated form for WOL-NA, with Aryan suffix -na, as shown by the cognate words, viz. Lithuan. volna, Russ. volna, Skt. śrind, wool. The same assimilation appears in Lat. millus, shaggy hair, vellus, a fleece. γ. The Aryan form is WAR-NA, lit. 'a covering,' hence a fleece; cf. Skt. vri, to cover, whence śrind, wool. From the name of WAR, to cover, we have also Gk. ῥα-ω, wool, ῥα-ω, wool; and prob. ῥα-ω, in the sense of woolly, shaggy, thick, Homer, Odys. iv. 50, vi. 231, Iliad, xvi. 224, x. 134. Der. wool-son, M. E. woolen, P. Plowman, B. v. 215, A. S. woles (with the usual vowel-change from o to y), Wright's Voc. i. 40, l. 7; wooly, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 84; wool-monger, M. E. woolmonger, Rob. of Glouc. p. 539, l. 20; wool-pack, M. E. woolpak, same page, l. 18; wool-sack, Hen. IV. ii. 4. 140, M. E. wool-sack, Gower, C. A. l. 99, l. 6. Also wool-gathering (Halliwell), idly roving (said of the thoughts), as if gathering scattered wool on the downs. Also woolward, q. v.

WOOLWARD, clothed in wool only. (E.) 'I have no shirt, I go woolward for penance.' L. L. L. v. 2. 717; on which Dr. Schmidt says: 'Woolward, in wool only, without linen, a dress often enjoyed as a penance by the church of Rome.' M. E. woolward, woolward, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 1; Pricks of Conscience, 3514; P. Plowman's Crede, 788. See four more examples in Nares, and his note upon the word. 'To go woolward and barfott;' Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 150. Palgrave has, in his list of adverbs: 'Woolward, without any linen next one's body. sensu chemyce.' I have elsewhere explained this as 'with the wool next one's skin; I should rather have said 'with the skin against the wool,' though the result is practically much the same. This is Stratzmann's explanation; he gives: 'woolward, cutis lanam nersus.' Cf. homo-ward, homo-ward. See WOOL and WARD. ¶ To the above explanation, viz. that wool-ward is against the wool, with reference to the skin, which agrees with all that has been said by Nares and others, I adhere. In an edition of books iii and iv of Bede's Eccl. History, by Mayor and Lumby, Cambridge, 1878, p. 247, is a long note on this phrase, with references to Bp. Fisher's Works, ed. Mayor, pt. i. p. 181, l. 73; Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, pt. iii. sect. 4. memb. 1. subsect. 2, and subsect. 3; Christ's Own Complaint, ed. Furnivall (E. E. T. S.), l. 903; Myroure of Our Lady (E. E. T. S.), p. lii, where we read of St. Bridget that 'she neuer used any lynen clothe though it wear in tyme of sykemes but only vpon hir hed, and next hir skyn she wear euer rough and sharpe wolm cloth.' The note further corrects my explanation 'with the wool towards the skin,' because this 'would only suit with a clothing made of the fleece as it came from the sheep's back;' and I have amended my explanation accordingly. It then goes on: 'ward is wored, the pp. of A. S. worran, to wear, and woolward means "wool-clad," just as in Beowulf, 606, swegthwored means "clad in brightness;" swegthwored and swegthwored may be cited as other examples of this pp. in composition. It has fared with woolward, when it became a solitary example of this compound, as it did with rightward under similar circumstances. The love for uniform orthography made this latter word into rightous, and woolward into woolward to conform to the shape of forward, &c. The use of go in the name as in to go bare, naked, cold, &c. This is ingenious, but by no means proven, and I beg leave to reject it. The suffix -ward is extremely rare; swegthwored and swegthwored each occur only once, and only in poetry, and even Grein can only guess at the sense of them; whilst swegthwored has nothing to do with the matter, as it means 'worn out by old age,' Ettmüller, p. 4. There is no such word as woolward in A. S., nor is the spelling woolward ever found in M. E.; and it is a long jump of many centuries from these doubtful compounds with -ward in A. S. poetry to the first appearance of woolward (always so spelt) in the 14th century. I can only regret that my too loose explanation gave occasion for this curious theory. The M. E. ward-mod. E. ward; and I fail to see that wool-ward is an intelligible compound.

WORD, an oral utterance or written sign, expressing thought; talk, message, promise. (E.) M. E. word, pl. wordes, Chaucer, C. T. 313.—A. S. word, neut. sb., pl. word, Grein, ii. 732. + Du. woord. + Icel. ord (for ord). + Dan. and Swed. ord. + G. wort. + Goth. worod. β. The Teut. type is WORDA, Fick, iii. 307. Cognate with Lithuan. wordas, a name, Lat. uoribus (base uor), a word, a verb; the Aryan type being WARDHA, Fick, i. 772.—√ WAR, to speak; whence Gk. ῥα-ω, to speak; so that the lit. sense is 'a thing spoken.' Cf. Gk. ῥα-ω, a speaker, from the same root. Der. word, vb., to speak, Cymb. iv. 2. 240, M. E. worden, P. Plowman, B. iv. 46; word-les, Lucrece, 113; word-ing, word-y, M. WORK, a labour, effort, thing done or written. (E.) M. E. work, Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 6; Chaucer, C. T. 481.—A. S. weorc, weorc, Grein, ii. 677. + Du. worck. + Icel. work. + Dan. work. + Swed.

† G. werk, O. H. G. werk, werk. β. All from Teut. type WERKA, work, Fick, iii. 292; which from Teut. base WAKK = Aryan √ WARG, to work, id. l. 774. Hence also Gk. ῥα-ω, I have wrought, ῥα-ω (= ῥα-ω), to do, work; Zend warana, a working, warana, a making (cited by Fick); cf. Pers. wara, gain, profit, acquisition, habit, warazad, he studies or labours, wara-šar, a ploughman (lit. work-doer), wara-gaw, an ox for ploughing (lit. work-ox); warah, agriculture; Rich. Dict. p. 1638. Der. work, verb, M. E. worken, worken, Chaucer, C. T. 2761, pt. t. wroughte, id. 499, pp. wrought, id. 16800, from A. S. weorc (with the usual vowel change from o or o to y), also weoran, weoran, pt. t. workte, pp. geworht, Grein, ii. 739. Also work-able (from the verb); and (from the sb.) work-day, M. E. workedei (trasyllabic), Ancren Riwle, p. 20, l. 7, A. S. weorc-dag, Wright's Voc. i. 37; work-ans, A. S. weorc-ans (Lat. effluens), Wright's Voc. i. 58, col. 1; work-man, O. Northumb. weorcman, Matt. x. 10 (Lindisfarne MS.); work-man-šar; work-man-šap, M. E. workmanship, P. Plowman, x. 288; work-ship. Also work, q. v. And see we-erg-y, hi-erg-y, metall-erg-y, che-erg-um, we-erg-um, erg-um.

WORLD, the earth and its inhabitants, the system of things, present state of existence, a planet, society. (E.) M. E. world, Genes and Ezodus, l. 42, world, world, P. Plowman, B. prol. 19; also spelt world, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 7, l. 10; world, Havelok, 1290; world, Laucelot of the Laik, 3184.—A. S. weorold, weorold, weorold, weorold, Grein, ii. 684. + Du. wereld. + Icel. veröld gen. veröldar. + Dan. verden (for veriden, where o is really the post posed def. article). + Swed. värld. + G. welt, M. H. G. welt, O. H. G. weralt, weralt. β. The cognate forms show clearly that the word is a composite one. It is composed of Icel. verr, O. H. G. wer, A. S. wer, Goth. wair, a man, cognate with Lat. uir, a man; and of Icel. öld, A. S. yld, an age, M. E. olds, old age; see VIRILE and EILD. Thus the right sense is 'age of man' or 'course of man's life,' whence it came to mean lifetime, course of life, experience of life, usages of life, &c.; its sense being largely extended. The sb. öld is a derivative from the adj. öld, as shown a. v.; and is well exhibited also in the curious Dan. Andersöld, the heathen age, heathen times, from hæden, a heathen. γ. Strictly, we have A. S. weorold from wer and yld; Icel. veröld from verr and öld, O. H. G. weralt from wer and alt, formed from alt, old; but the corrupt form of the word in A. S. proves that the word is a very old one, formed in times previous to all record of any Teutonic speech. Der. world-ly, A. S. weoroldlic, Grein, ii. 687; world-li-ness; world-by-mind-ed, world-ly-mind-ed-ness; world-ling, with double dimin. suffix, As You Like It, ii. 1. 48.

WORM, a small creeping animal. (E.) Formerly applied to a snake of the largest size; cf. blind-worm. M. E. worm; pl. wormes, Chaucer, C. T. 10931.—A. S. weorm, a worm, snake, dragon; Grein, ii. 763. + Du. worm. + Icel. ormur (for orm). + Dan. and Swed. orm (for orm). + G. wurm. + Goth. wourms. β. The Teut. type is WORMI, a worm, snake, Fick, iii. 307. The Gk. ῥα-ω, an intestinal worm, is prob. not related, see Curtius, ii. 173. But the relation of the Teut. words to Lat. wormis, a worm, cannot be doubted; and as we further find Skt. birni, a worm (whence E. crinoid and serpense), Lithuan. birnis, a worm, O. Irish crain, a worm (cited by Curtius, cf. Irish crainn, a maggot, W. prof. a worm), Rom. arvora, a worm, we can hardly doubt that the Teut. WORMI has lost an initial h (= Aryan h), and stands for HWORMI, and that an initial s has been lost in Lat. wormis (for swormis). 'All the forms may be explained from a primitive KARMI, by supposing that from this KWARMI was first developed, then, in Lat. and Teutonic, WARMI; Curtius, as above. Fick (i. 525) gives KARMI as the orig. form whence the Skt., Lat., and Lithuan. forms are derived, but pronounces no opinion as to the Teut. words, as the loss of initial h is not proved; still, as he includes Lat. wormis, we may feel little hesitation. He further compares Lat. curvus, curved, crooked, which takes us back to √ KAR, to move (esp. used of circular motion); see CURVE and CIRCLE. There is even a suspicion that the orig. form of the root was √ SKAR, to move hither and thither, Fick, i. 810; which seems to be remarkably represented in English by the prov. E. squirm, to wriggle as an eel or snake; cf. prov. E. spair, to whirl round (Halliwell), unless, indeed, we are rather to connect these with E. worm. Der. worm, verb; worm-y. Allied words are worm-in, worm-ocular, worm-itch; also (probably) crin-osa, crin-ine. (But not wormwood.)

WORMWOOD, a very bitter plant. (E.) The suffix -wood is corrupt due to confusion with wood, in order to make it sound more intelligible. We find the spelling wormwood as early as the 15th century. 'Hoc absinthium, wormwood;' Wright's Voc. i. 226, col. 1. But only a little earlier (early 14th century), we find wormwood, id. i. 191, col. 2.—A. S. weorod; 'Absinthium, weorod;' in a glossary of the 8th century; Wright's Voc. ii. 98, col. 1. + Du. wormwood, 'warg-

β. It is thus evident that the word is doubly corrupt, and has no more to do with worm than it has with wood; the G. forms show clearly that the division of the A. S. word is worm-st. [It is quite distinct from A. S. wormwyr, worm-wort, Sedum album or villanum; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 411.] Mr. Cockayne, Leechdoms, i. 217, supposes A. S. wormst to mean 'worm-moth,' i. e. that which keeps off moths: this shows the right division of the word, but st bears no resemblance to the A. S. for st.

γ. Of course, the only way to recover the etymology is to consider the A. S., Du., and G. forms all at once. Now A. S. mod, O. Du. moed, G. moeth, M. H. G. moet, moete, O. H. G. moet, all mean the same thing, and answer to mod. E. mood, meaning formerly 'mind, courage, wrath.' The A. S. werian, O. Du. weren, werean, M. H. G. worren, all alike mean to protect or defend; cf. G. wahren, to check, control, defend. Thus the comp. wormst unquestionably means worm-mood or 'mind-preserver,' and points back to some primitive belief as to the curative properties of the plant in mental affections. Any one who will examine the A. S. Leechdoms will see that our ancestors had great trust in very nauseous remedies, and the bitterness of the plant was doubtless a great recommendation, and invested it with special virtue.

δ. This orig. sense was no doubt early lost, as we find no mention of the plant being used in the way indicated. I may add that both parts of the word appear in other compounds. Thus we have G. wider-heit, able to defend, wider-los, defenceless (so also O. Du. wierles); and, on the other hand, the latter element terminates G. wit-muth, sadness, de-muth, humility. See Wary and Mood. A curious confirmation of this etymology occurs in the A. S. name for hellebore, viz. wide-borge, i. e. preservative against madness, Wright's Voc. ii. 32, note 2.

WORRY, to harass, tease. (E.) The old sense was to seize by the throat, or strangle, as when a dog worrys a rat or sheep. M. E. worouss, wiriss; spelt wirry, Rom. of the Rose, 6267; also wyryss or worouss, and explained by 'strangle, suffoco,' Prompt. Parv.; worou, used of lions and wolves that worry men, Pricke of Conscience, 1299; pp. woroued, woroued, Havcloh, 1915, 1921. The theoretical M. E. form is worjan (Stratmann), which passed, as usual, into worren, woroum, or worouen, and other varieties; the w is always due (in such a position) to an older s, and answers to A. S. g. The various vowels point back to A. S. y, so that the A. S. form must have been wyrjan = A. S. wyrjan, only found in the comp. wyrjan, to harm, Grein, i. 49 (not a well-known word in this sense). † Du. worgien, to strangle; whence werg, quincy. † O. Fries. wergie, wergie, to strangle. † G. wargen, O. H. G. wargen, to strangle, suffocate, choke; as in Wolfe wargen die Schafe, wolves worry the sheep, Flugel.

β. These verbs are closely allied to the sb. which appears as A. S. worg, worh, werg, a wolf, an outlaw, Grein, ii. 675; the vowel change from o to y being well exhibited in the derivative wyrjan, a female wolf, occurring in the comp. grind-wyrjan, a female wolf dwelling in a cave, Grein, i. 531. Cognate words are Icel. worgr, a wolf, an outlaw, an accursed person, M. H. G. warr, the same; from the Teut. type WARGA, a wolf, accursed person; Fick, iii. 504.

γ. The root appears in the M. H. G. strong verb wirgen, only occurring in the comp. ir-wirgen (= ir-wirgen), to choke, throttle, strangle. pt. t. wirg. Thus the Teut. base is WARG, to choke; whence WARGA, a strangler, a wolf, an outlaw, an accursed person; also the secondary A. S. verb wyrjan, to choke, whence E. worry.

δ. It will now be seen that the much commoner A. S. wyrjan, wyrjan, to curse (Grein, ii. 763), is equally a derivative from A. S. worg in the sense of 'accursed person'; so also A. S. wergian, wergian, to curse (id. ii. 662), is a mere variant. The latter of these became M. E. worisan, to curse, Chaucer, C. T. 4792. Hence probably the mod. use of worry in the sense 'to tease, vex'; but whether this be so or not is immaterial to the etymology, since M. E. worisan, to worry, and worisan, to curse, are thus seen to belong to the same base. = † WARGH, to choke (Fick, i. 774); whence also Gh. Spilgen, a noose, slip-knot (for hanging), Lithuan. worasti, to strangle. And prob. the † WARGH is extended from † WAR, to turn, twist; for which see Walk. And cf. Wrong, Wrench, Wrangle.

WORSE, comp. adj. and adv. more bad; WORST, superl. adj. and adv. most bad. (E.) L. M. E. wors, wors, wors, adv.; wors, wors, wors (properly dissyllabic), adj. 'Now is my prison wors than before,' Chaucer, C. T. 1226. [Hence perhaps the suggestion of the double comp. wors-w, Temp. iv. 27.] 'Me is the wors = it is the worse for me; Owl and Nightingale, l. 34. We find also M. E. wors, wors, spelt also wors, Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 1588; this is a Scand. form, due to assimilation. = A. S. wyr, adv.; wyr, wyr, adj.; Grein, ii. 765. † O. Sax. wars, adv.; waria, adj. † O. Fries. warra, warra, adj. (for wors, wors, by assimilation). † Icel. warr, adv.; warr, adj. (for wors, wors). † Dan. warre, adj. † Swed. warra, adj. † M. H. G. wars, adv.; warr, adj. † Goth. wars, adv.; warsa, adj.

β. Fick (iii. 296) gives the Teut. type of the adv. as WERSIS, and that of the adj. as WERSISA; he thinks the Goth. wars is short for warsa, the full form being preserved only in the Goth. adj. warsa. Similarly, from the Goth. adj. minnia, smaller, was formed the adv. min of minis, short for minnis or minis. In Gothic, -isa is a common suffix in comparatives, as in hard-isa, hard-er, from hard, hard; and it answers to mod. E. -er (Aryan -yasa, explained in Schlicherer, Compendium, p. 463, § 232). Hence, in the forms WERS-IS, WERS-ISA, when the comp. suffix is removed, and vowel-change is allowed for (cf. A. S. langra, longer, from lang, long), we are led to the Teut. base WARS, to twist, entangle, bring into a confused state, whence Icel. warr, a pall (lit. twist) of the oar in a boat, orig. the turn of the paddle, and O. H. G. warrus (G. wirren), to twist, entangle, confuse, O. H. G. warr, confusion, broil, war; see War.

γ. The same base WARS (assimilated to WARR) occurs perhaps in Lat. warrus, pt. t. warr, pp. warrum, to whirl, toss about, drive, sweep along, sweep; cf. Lucretius, v. 1226. See Fick, i. 776. δ. The superl. form presents no difficulty. M. E. worst, worst, adv.; worst, worst, adj., Gower, C. A. i. 25, l. 17. = A. S. wyrst, adv., wyrsta, adj. (Grein); this is a contracted form of wyrstisa, which appears as wyrstisa (by assimilation) in Matt. xii. 45. † O. Sax. warsista, adj. † Icel. warr, adv., warr, adj. † Dan. warr. † Swed. warr. † O. H. G. wirist, wirist, contracted form wirist. The Teut. type is WERSISTA. ¶ It is now seen that the s is part of the base or root; wars really does duty for wars-w, which was in actual use in the 16th century; and worst is short for worst-w. Der. wors, verb, Milton, P. L. vi. 440, M. E. worsen, Ancren Riwle, p. 326, A. S. wyrssian, properly intrans., to grow worse, A. S. Chron. an. 1085; wors-w, verb, to make worse, Milton, Of Reformation in England, b. i (R); wors-en, to grow worse (Craven dialect). Also worst, verb, to defeat, Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2. l. 878; this answers to M. E. worsian, above (A. S. wyrssian), and is a form due to the usual excrement t after s (as in assag-t, whit-t, &c.) rather than formed from the superlative.

WORSHIP, honour, respect, adoration. (E.) Short for worth-skip; the sk was not lost till the 14th century. Spelt worship, P. Plowman, B. iii. 332; but worþ-skip (= worþskip), Aynbite of Lawyt, p. 8, l. 9 (A. N. 1340) = A. S. worþskip, worþskip, honour; Grein, ii. 683. Formed with suffix -skip (E. -ship) from A. S. worþ, worþ, adj. worthy, honourable; just as Lat. dignitas is from the adj. dignus. See Worth (1). Der. worship, verb, M. E. worþskipen, spelt worþskipen in St. Katharine, l. 55 (so in the MS., but printed worþ-skipen); not found in A. S. Also worship-ful, spelt worþ-skipful, Aynbite of Lawyt, p. 8, l. 22; worship-ful-ly.

WORST, adj and verb; see under Worse.

WORSTED, twisted yarn spun out of long, combed wool. (E.) M. E. worsted, Chaucer, C. T. 264. So named from the town of Worsted, now Worstead, not far to the N. of Norwich, in Norfolk. Probably not older than the time of Edward III, who invited over Flemish weavers to improve our woollen manufactures. Chaucer is perhaps the earliest author who mentions it. 'Worsted: these first took their name from Worsted, a village in this county;' Fuller, Worthies; Norfolk (R). β. Worsted stands for Worsted; this we know from Charter no. 783 in Kemble, Codex Diplomaticus, iv. 211, where the name appears as Wrosted, and w = wo, as in other instances. The A. S. worþ, worþ, word, value, was also used in the sense of 'estate' or 'manor,' and appears in place-names, such as Sawbridge-worth, Richmans-worth; however, in the sense of 'estate,' the usual form is worþig, and this may equally well suit the form Wrosted, the first e representing an earlier -g. The A. S. stede = mod. E. stead, or place. Hence Worsted means 'the place of an estate;' see Worth and Stead.

WORT (1), a plant. (E.) Orig. the general E. name for plant; plant being a Latin word. M. E. wort; pl. wortes, Chaucer, C. T. 1527. = A. S. wyr, a wort; Grein, ii. 763. † O. Sax. wort. † Icel. wort (for wort), also spelt wort, perhaps borrowed. † Dan. wrt. † Swed. wrt. † G. wurz. † Goth. wurra. β. All from Teut. type WORTI, a plant, herb, Fick, iii. 294. Closely allied to Wart and Root; see further under Root (1). Der. wort-wort, and other plant-names in which wort is suffixed; also wortard (= wort-yard); also wort (2). Allied to radix, liquaria, &c.

WORT (2), an infusion of malt, new beer unfermented or while being fermented. (E.) M. E. wort or worte, Chaucer, C. T. 16281. 'Hoc idromellum, Anglice worts;' Wright's Voc. i. 257, col. 2. Not found in A. S.; Sommer gives a form wort, which is unauthorised, and can hardly be right, being inconsistent with the M. E. spelling. It does not seem to be an old word in this sense, and is prob. only a particular application of wort (1), meaning an infusion like that of herbs when boiled. † O. Du. wort, 'wort, or new beer before it be clarified;' Hexham; cf. worta, 'a root or a wort,' id. † Low G. wort. † Icel. wirt. † Norweg. wirt, wort, Asica. † Swed. wirt. † G. bier- würs, beer-wort; cf. wurz, a wort, herb, whence würze, seasoning, spice, wurzsuppe, spiced soup, &c. See WORT (1).

WORTH (1), equal in value to, deserving of; as sb., desert, price. (E.) M. E. worth, worþ, worþ, worþ, adj., worthy, honourable, Will. of Palerne, 2522, 2990; Rob. of Glouc. p. 364, last line. Also worþ, worþ, ill-spelt worþis in P. Plowman, B. iv. 170; but worþ in Rob. of Glouc. p. 273, l. 3. — A. S. worþ, worþ, adj., honourable; worþ, worþ, value; Grein, ii. 678. + Du. worþ, adj.; worþ, sb. + Icel. worþ, adj.; worþ, sb. + Dan. worþ, adj. and sb. + Swed. worþ, adj.; worþ, sb. + G. worþ, M. H. G. wort, adj. and sb. + Goth. worþis, adj. and sb. β . All from Teut. type WERTHA, as adj., valuable; as sb., value; Fick, iii. 290. This word is probably to be divided as WERTHA, and is allied to A. S. wura, wares, orig. 'valuables'; from \surd WAR, to guard, protect, keep (in store); see WARE (1) and WARY. As to the suffix, cf. bir-ith from beor, til-ith from till, bro-ith from brun. Der. worþ-ig, spelt worþig, Ormulum, 2705, worþig, id. 4200, suggested by Icel. worþig, worthy (the A. S. worþig only occurring as a sb. meaning an estate or farm); hence worþi-ly, worþi-ness; worþ-less, worþ-less-ly, -ness.

WORTH (2), to become, to be. (E.) Now only in the phr. we worth the day = evil be to the day. M. E. worþen, to become; formerly common. In P. Plowman's Crede, a short poem of 855 (long) lines, it occurs 8 times; as 'schent mote I worþen' = I must be blamed, l. 9; 'I wo mote you worþen' = may evil be (or happen) to you; and (see P. Plowman, B. prol. 187, l. 186, ii. 43, iii. 33, v. 160, vi. 165, vii. 81. — A. S. worþan, to become, also spelt worþan, worþan; pt. t. worþ, pl. worþas; Grein, ii. 678. + Du. worþen, pt. t. worþ, pp. gourden. + Icel. worþ, pt. t. worþ, pp. orðan, to become, happen, come to pass. + Dan. worþe. + Swed. worþa. + G. worþen, O. H. G. worþen. + Goth. worþisan, pt. t. worþ, pp. worþisan. β . All from Teut. base WARTH, to become, turn to; allied to Lat. uortu, to turn, uerti, to turn to. = \surd WART, to turn; Fick, l. 774, iii. 294; see VERBE. Der. worþ, q. v.

WOT, I know, or he knows; see WIT (1). Der. not (2).

WOULD; see WILL (1).

WOUND, a hurt, injury, cut, bruise. (E.) M. E. wounde, Chaucer, C. T. 1012. — A. S. wund, Grein, ii. 720. + Du. wound, or wunde. + Icel. wund (for wund). + Dan. wunde. + G. wunde; O. H. G. wunda. β . All from Teut. type WONDA, a wound; Fick, iii. 288. We find also the same form WONDA, wounded, appearing in G. wund, O. H. G. wunt, Goth. wunds, wounded. Formed from the pp. of the strong verb signifying 'to fight' or 'suffer', represented in A. S. by wunan, to strive, fight, suffer, pp. wunnen. So also Icel. wund is from wunna, pp. of winn; and similarly in other Teut. languages. = \surd WAN, to strive, fight; see WIN. Cf. Lithuan. woniu, a sore; also Skt. wun, occurring in the sense 'to hurt, kill,' as well as 'to ask, desire.' Der. wound, verb, A. S. wundian, Grein, ii. 751.

WRACK, a kind of sea-weed; shipwreck, ruin. (E.) Wrack as a name for sea-weed, merely means 'that which is cast ashore,' like things from a wrecked ship. This is well shown by mod. F. varack, which has both senses, (1) sea-weed cast on shore, and (2) pieces of a wrecked ship cast on shore; this F. word being merely borrowed from English, and pronounced as nearly like the original as F. pronunciation will admit. Cotgrave has F. varack, 'a sea-wrack or wreck, all that is cast ashore by chance or tempest.' Shak. has wrack, shipwreck, destruction, ruin, Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 110; Macb. i. 3. 114, &c. M. E. wrak, a wreck, Chaucer, C. T. (Six-text edition), Group B, l. 813; where Tyrwhitt prints wrache, l. 4933. Merely a peculiar sense of A. S. wrac, banishment, exile, misery, Grein, ii. 738. The sense is immediately due to the orig. verb, viz. A. S. wracan (pt. t. wrac), to drive, expel, cast forth; so that wrac is here to be taken in the sense of 'that which is driven ashore.' The A. S. wracan also means to wreck, punish; see WRECK. And see WRECK. + Du. wrak, sb., a wreck; adj., cracked, broken; cf. wraken, to reject. + Icel. wrak (for wrak), also wrak, anything drifted or driven ashore; from wra (for wra), to drive. + Dan. wrag, wreck; cf. wraga, to reject. + Swed. wrak, wreck, refuse, trash. Doublets, wrak, wrak (4).

WRATH, an apparition. (Scand.) 'Wrath, an apparition in the likeness of a person, supposed to be seen soon before, or soon after death. The apparition called a wraith was supposed to be that of one's guardian angel;' Jamieson. He adds that the word is used by King James. Also spelt wraith, as in Ayrshire (id.) = Icel. œtr (gen. œtr), a warden, guardian; from œtra, to guard, cognate with E. WARD, q. v. Cf. Icel. warð, warð, a bescon, a pile of stones to warn a wayfarer (whence the notion may have arisen that the wraith gives warning of death). Note also Norweg. warde, a bescon, pile of stones, and the curious word wardylis (= ward-evil?), a guardian or attendant spirit, a fairy or sprite said to go before or follow a man, also considered as an omen or a boding spirit (Aasen); which is precisely the description of a wraith.

WRANGLE, to dispute, argue noisily. (E.) M. E. wrangling, a various reading for wraules (to wrestle), in P. Plowman, C. xvii. 80. The sb. wrangling is in P. Plowman, B. iv. 34. The frequentative of wring, to press, to strain; formed from A. S. wringan, pt. t. of wringan, to press. Thus the orig. sense was to keep on pressing, to urge; hence to argue vehemently. Cf. Dan. wring, to twist, entangle. See WRING. Der. wrang, sb.; wrang-er, a disputant in the schools (at Cambridge), now applied to a first-class man in the mathematical tripos; wrangling.

WRAP, to fold, infold, cover by folding round. (E.) M. E. wrappen, Chaucer, C. T. 10950; Will. of Palerne, 745. We also find wlappen (with l for r), Wyclif, Luke, ii. 7, John, xx. 7, now spelt lap; see LAP (3). Cf. Prov. E. wrap, to wrap up, Somersetshire (Halliwell), also to weave. Not found in A. S. Cf. North Frisian wrapp, to press into, to stop up. The form of the word is such that it can be no other than a derivative from the sb. WARP, q. v. Perhaps the sense was due to the folding together of a fishing-net; cf. Icel. warp, the cast of a net, warpa, a cast, also the net itself; abowarp, lit. 'a shoe-warp,' the binding of a shoe; Swed. dial. warpa, a fine herring-net (Riets). Der. wrapper, sb. Doublet, lap (3). Cf. wolop, de-wolop.

WRATH, anger, indignation. (E.) M. E. wraþe, wraþe, P. Plowman, B. iv. 34; wraþe, Wyclif, Eph. iv. 31. Properly dissyllabic. — O. Northumbrian wraþe, wraþe, Mark, iii. 21; Luke, xxi. 23; John, iii. 36 (both in the Lindisfarne and Rushworth MSS.). The sb. does not occur in the A. S. texts, but the adj. wraþ, wroth, from which it is formed, is common; see WROTH. + Icel. wrað (for wrað), wrað; from wrað, adj., wroth. + Dan. and Swed. wrað; from wrað, adj. Der. wraþ-ful, King John, ii. 87; wraþ-ful-ly, -ness.

WREAK, to revenge, inflict (vengeance) on. (E.) M. E. wreken, Chaucer, C. T. 963; formerly a strong verb; pt. t. wreke, Tale of Gamelyn, l. 303; pp. wrekes, wrekes, wreken, P. Plowman, A. ii. 169, B. ii. 194. — A. S. wreccan, to wreak, revenge, punish, orig. to drive, urge, impel, Grein, ii. 741; pt. t. wrac, pp. wracan. + Du. wreken, to avenge. + Icel. wra (for wra), pt. t. wra, pp. wra, to drive, thrust, repel, toss; also, to wreak vengeance. + Swed. wra, to reject, refuse, throw (not a primary verb). + G. wra, to avenge; O. H. G. wra. + Goth. wra, to wreak anger on, to persecute. β . All from Teut. base WRAK, orig. to press, urge, drive; Fick, iii. 208.

Further allied to Lithuan. wraga, to suffer affliction, warga, affliction; Russ. wrag, an enemy, foe (persecutor); Lat. wergere, to bend, turn, incline, wergere, to press, urge on, Gk. wergere, to repel, Skt. wri, to exclude, orig. to bend. All from \surd WARG, to press, urge, repel; Fick, l. 773. Prob. identical with \surd WARG, to work; the sense of 'drive on' being common to both. See WORK. Der. wreck, q. v.; wreck, q. v.

WREATH, a garland. (E.) M. E. wraite, Chaucer, C. T. 2147. — A. S. wraeth, a twisted band, a bandage; geowitan mid wraeth = bound with a bandage, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. Sweet, cap. xvii p. 122, l. 14. Formed (with vowel-change from d to æ) from A. S. wraeth, pt. t. of wraethan, to writh, twist; see WRITHE. Der. wraith, verb; 'together wreathed care,' Surrey Paraph. of Ecclesiastes, c. iv. l. 34.

WRECK, destruction, ruin, remains of what is wrecked. (E.) Formerly wreck, as in Shak. Temp. i. 3. 26. M. E. wrak, Chaucer, C. T. 4923 (Group B, l. 813), where Tyrwhitt prints wrache. — A. S. wrac, expulsion, banishment, misery; Grein, ii. 738. The peculiar use is due to Scand. influence; see WRACK. — A. S. wrac, pt. t. wracan, to drive, wreck; see WRECK. + Du. wrak, wreck; cf. wrak, adj., broken. + Icel. wrak (for wrak), also wrak, anything drifted or driven ashore; from wra, to drive. + Dan. wrag, wreck. + Swed. wrak, refuse, trash, wreck. β . The lit. sense 'that which is drifted or driven ashore;' hence it properly meant pieces of ships drifted ashore, also wreck or sea-weed. Secondly, as the pieces thus driven ashore were from ships broken up by tempests, it came to mean fragments, refuse, also destruction, or ruin caused by any kind of violence, as in Shakespeare and Milton. The orig. sense of A. S. wracan was to impel, drive, persecute, expel, wrac; hence wrac in A. S. poetry commonly means banishment or misery such as is endured by an exile; but in all the various senses the word remains the same. Der. wreck, verb; also wreck, Temp. i. 3. 236; wreck-ful, Shak. Sonnet 63; wreck-ful, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 26; wreck-er, one who plunders wrecks. And see wreck.

WREN, a small bird. (E.) M. E. wrenne, Gower, C. A. iii. 249, l. 25. — A. S. wrenna, wrenna; Wright's Voc. i. 29, col. 2; 62, col. 2. The lit. sense is 'the lascivious bird.' — A. S. wrenna, lascivious; Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 12, § 1. Allied to Dan. wra, proud, Swed. wra, not castrated (said of horses), Widgeon; where at answers to E. it; M. H. G. wrenna, wrenna, O. H. G. wrenna, a stallion. Hence the Swed. wra, to neigh as a stallion. The form of the root is WRIN, to neigh (as a horse), to squeal (as a pig), used of various animals; and, as applied to the wren, it may be taken to to twist. † G. rist, instep, wrist. ¶ Fick (iii. 255) makes the curious mistake of deriving the Icel. rist from the verb to rist: he happened only to observe the Icel. and G. forms, which have lost the initial w. Der. wrist-band, the band of the sleeve at the wrist.

WRITE, to form letters with a pen or pencil, engrave, express in writing, compose, communicate a letter. (E.) The orig. sense was 'to score,' i. e. to cut slightly, as when one scores letters or marks on a piece of bark or soft wood with a knife; it also meant to engrave runes on stone. M. E. writen, pt. t. wroet, Chaucer, C. T. 5310; pp. writen (with short i). = A. S. writan, pt. t. wrot, pp. writen, to write, inscribe (orig. to score, engrave), Grein, ii. 743. † O. Sax. writan, to cut, injure; also to write. † Du. wyten, to tear, split. † Icel. rita, pt. t. ritit, pp. ritiana, to scratch, cut, write. † Swed. rita, to draw, delineate. † G. reiben, pt. t. rieb, pp. gerieben, O. H. G. rieman, to cut, tear, split, draw or delineate. Cf. Goth. writa, a stroke made with a pen.

β. All from the Teut. base WRIT, to cut, scratch, hence to engrave, write; Fick, iii. 309. Cf. Skt. wridh, to cut, wrana, a wound, fracture, wruph, to tear, cut, wrika, a wolf (lit. 'tearer'); all pointing back to a primitive √WAR, to cut, tear. See Fick, i. 213. Der. writ, sb., A. S. ge-writ, also writ, a writing, Grein, l. 486, ii. 743, from writ-an, pp. of writan, to write. Also writ-er, A. S. writere, Matt. ii. 4; writ-er-ship, writ-ing.

WRITHE, to twist to and fro. (E.) Spelt writhe in Palgrave. M. E. writen, spelt wrythen in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 3, l. 445; pt. t. wroth (with long o), Gawain and the Green Knight, l. 1200; pp. writen (with short i), P. Plowman, B. xvii. 174. Cf. wriþung in Chaucer, C. T. 10441. = A. S. wriþan, to twist, writ about, pt. t. wroþ, pp. wriþan, Grein, ii. 743. † Icel. riða (for wriða), pt. t. rið, pp. riðna. † Dan. wride. † Swed. wrida, to wring, twist, turn, wrest. † O. H. G. riðan, M. H. G. riðen; a strong verb, now lost.

β. All from Teut. base WRITH, from WARTH = Aryan √WART, to turn, as in Lat. vertens; see Verbe. And see WORTH (1). Der. wroth, wroth, wroth, wroth, wroth.

WRONG, perverted, unjust, bad; also as sb., that which is wrong or unjust. (E.) M. E. wrong, adj., Will of Palerne, 706; sb., P. Plowman, B. iii. 175. = A. S. wrang (a passing into e before n), occurring as a sb. in the A. S. Chron. an. 1124. Properly an adj. signifying perverted or wrong aside; as is curiously shown by the use of wrong nose, for 'crooked nose,' in Wyclif, Levit. xxi. 19 (later version). = A. S. wrōng, pt. t. of wringan, to wring; see Wring. (Cf. Lat. torus from torquere.) † Du. wrang, sour, harsh (because acids wring the mouth); from wringan. † Icel. wrangr, awry; metaphorically, wrong, unjust. † Dan. wrong, wrong, adj. † Swed. wrdag, perverse. Der. wrong, verb, to injure, as in 'to wrong the wronger,' Shak. Locrine, 819; wrong- (as above); wrong-ly; wrong-ful, Wyclif, Luke, xii. 58 (earlier version); wrong-ful-ly, wrong-ful-ness, i. e. perverse. Also wrong-ness, M. E. wrongnes, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 175, l. 256 (Swed. wrdagis, iniquitous), now obsolete, but remarkable as being the converse of E. rightness, formerly right-ness; Palgrave actually spells it wrongness!

WROTH, full of wrath, angry. (E.) M. E. wroth, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 504. = A. S. wroþ, wroth, Grein, ii. 737. = A. S. wroþ, pt. t. of wriþan, to writhe; so that the orig. sense was 'wry,' i. e. twisted or perverted in one's temper. † Du. wroed, cruel. † Icel. wroðr. † Dan. wrod. † Swed. wrod. † M. H. G. wrið, wrið, only in the sense of twisted or curled. See Writhe and Wrath.

WRY, twisted or turned to one side. (E.) 'With visage wry,' Court of Love, l. 1162 (a late poem, perhaps 16th century). But the verb wrion, to twist, bend, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 17221; and answers to A. S. wringan, to drive, impel, also to tend or bend towards. 'Hláford min [me] . . . wriþeð on wonge' = my lord drives me [i. e. a plough] along the field; Codex Exoniensis, ed. Thorpe, p. 403 (Riddle xxii, l. 9). Of a bough bent down, and then let go, it is said: 'wriþeð wip his gecyðnes' = it moves towards its end, i. e. as it is naturally inclined; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 3 (cap. xxv). This A. S. verb is still preserved in the frequentative WRIGGLE, q. v. And cf. Goth. wriþan, crooked, Skt. wrij, orig. to bend, Lat. wrigere. See further under AWRY. Der. wry, q. v.; wry-neck, a small bird, allied to the woodpecker, so called from 'the writhing snake-like motion which it can impart to its neck without moving the rest of its body'; Engl. Cycl. Also wry-ness.

WYCH-ELM; see under WITCH-ELM.

WYVERN, WIVERN, in heraldry, a kind of flying serpent or two-legged dragon. (F. = L.) The final n is excrement after r, as in heller-n, q. v. M. E. wiwers, a serpent, Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1012. = O. F. wivre, a serpent, viper, esp. in blazon; see Roquefort and Burguy; mod. F. guivre, a viper. By some strange confusion between the Lat. v and the G. w, this word was improperly spelt with w, somewhat like prov. E. wiper, a viper. Burguy says it was also formerly spelt wivre, and that it is still spelt wivre in some F. dialects. = Lat. vipera, a viper; see VIPER. Doublet, wiper.

ZEBOC, a small three-masted vessel used in the Mediterranean. (Span. = Turk.) In Ash's Dict. ed. 1773. = Span. zabuco, a zebooc. So also Port. zabuco, F. zaboc. = Turk. zambak, 'a kind of Asiatic ship;' Rich. Dict. p. 851. He also gives Pers. zambak, a small ship; Arab. zambak, a small boat, a pinnace; on the same page. See Devic, Suppl. to Littré, a. v. zaboc, which is the F. form; he gives also Port. zabuco, Ital. zambuco, the latter form retaining the nasal m, which is lost in the other languages. He adds that the word zambak is given in the first ed. of Meninski's Thesaurus (1680); and that the mod. Arab. word is zabak; see Dozy, Glossaire, p. 332.

Y-, prefix. (E.) This prefix is nearly obsolete, being only retained in the archaic words y-accept, y-ess. The M. E. forms are y-, r-; the latter being frequently written l (as a capital). = A. S. ge-, an extremely common prefix, both of adn. and verbs. (In verbs it was prefixed, not only to the pp. (as in mod. G. and in Middle-English), but also to the past tense, to the infinitive, or indeed occasionally to any part of the verb, without appreciably affecting the sense. In the word y-ess, certainly, many editors have ignorantly mistaken it for the pronoun l; see YVIE. It appears as e- in the word e-nough; and as o- in the word o-were.) † Du. ge-, prefix. † G. ge-; O. H. G. ge-, he-. † Goth. ge-. Perhaps the same as the Gk. enclitic -yē, and Skt. an (Vedic gān), a particle laying a stress on the preceding word (as ya), or without a distinct signification; Benfey, p. 1101; Fick, iii. 95.

YACHT, a swift pleasure-boat. (Du.) From yacht. In Phillips, ed. 1706; also in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, where it is badly spelt yacht (perhaps by a misprint). = Du. yacht, formerly spelt yacht; 'em lacht, qste [or] San-reovers Schip, a pleasure, or a pirate's ship.' Hexham. 'Yacht, a yacht;' Sewel. Named from its speed. = Du. yagten (formerly yachten), to speed, to hunt; yagt (formerly yacht), a hunting. = Du. yagen, 'to hunt or to chase durre; hare, &c.:' Hexham. † G. yagen, to hunt; prob. allied to G. jāhe, O. H. G. gāhi, quick, sudden, rash, and so to G. gāhen, to go, Du. gaan, formerly gaan (Hexham), to go. See Gay and Go. Der. yacht-er, yacht-ing.

YAM, a large esculent tuber, resembling the potato. (Port.) Mentioned in Cook's Voyages (Todd; no reference). = Port. inhame, a yam; not given in Vieyra, but noted in Webster and in Littré. Littré gives the F. form as ignome, which he says is borrowed from the Port. inhame; and adds: 'it was the Portuguese who first found the yam used as an object of culture, first on the coast of Africa, afterwards in India and Malacca, and gave it its name; but the language whence it was taken is unknown. Webster gives the West-Indian form as ihame, but (if Littré be right) this is merely the Port. word with a dropped. It would seem that the orig. word must be sought for in some African language. The Malay name is bat; Marsden, Malay Dict. p. 21.

YANKEE, a citizen of New England, or of the United States. (Unknown.) The word occurs as early as 1765. Webster cites: 'From meanness first this Portsmouth Yankee rose, And still to meanness all his conduct flows,' Oppression, A Poem by an American, Boston, 1765. We also find in the same: 'Commonly supposed to be a corrupt pronunciation of the word English, or of the F. word Anglais, by the native Indians of America. According to Thierry, a corruption of Yanaka, a dimin. of Yaka, a nickname given to the English colonists of Connecticut by the Dutch settlers of New York [which looks very like a pure invention]. Dr. Wm. Gordon, in his Hist. of the American War, ed. 1789, vol. i. pp. 324, 325, says it was a favourite cant word in Cambridge, Mass., as early as 1713, and that it meant "excellent;" as, a yankee good horse, yankee good cider, &c. He supposes that it was adopted by the students there as a by-word, and, being carried by them from the college, obtained currency in the other New England colonies, until at length it was taken up in other parts of the country, and applied to New Englanders generally as a term of slight reproach.' Cf. Lowland Sc. yanhie, a sharp, clever, forward woman; yanber, an agile girl, an impatient speaker; yanber, a smart stroke, a great falsehood; yanb, a sudden and severe blow, a sharp stroke; yanbing, active, pushing (Jamieson). Without the nasal, there is also Lowland Sc. yach, to talk precipitately and indistinctly, yach, a stroke or blow. β. If Dr. Gordon's view be right, the word yankee may be identified with the Sc. yanhie, as above; and all the Scotch words appear to be of Scand. origin, due, ultimately, to Icel. yaga, to move about, whence (reflexively) yagast, to altercate; cf. Swed. yaga, to hunt, whence Swed. dial. yakka, to rove about (cf. Nassau yackon, to drive horses quickly, cited by Rietz). The fundamental idea is that of 'quick motion;' see Yacht. But the word cannot be said to be solved.

YAP, to yelp, bark. (Scand.) 'The yapping of a car;' L'Estrange, tr. of Quevedo, p. 243 (Todd). Yap is the same as yup, the Lowland Sc. equivalent of yelp (Jamieson). The Lowland Sc. yup also occurs, which is a corruption of yap. = Icel. gjalpa, to yelp; allied to E. yelp; see Yelp. The F. yapper, 'to bark, to yawl,' Cot., is of similar origin.

YARD (1), an enclosed space. (E.) M. E. yord, Chaucer, C. T. 15181. = A. S. gærd, an enclosure, court; Grein, i. 493. + Du. gaard, a yard, garden. + Icel. garðr (whence prov. E. garth). + Dan. gaard. + Swed. gård. + O. H. G. garta, M. H. G. garte, G. garten. + Kuss. gorod, a town. + Lat. hortus. + Gk. χῆρος, a court-yard, enclosure. β. From the Teut. base GARDA = Aryan GHARTA, a yard, court, enclosure, lit. 'a place surrounded.' = CHAR, to seize, hence to enclose; cf. Skt. āri, to take, seize, ārona, the hand; Gk. χῆρ, the hand. Der. court-yard, orchard (for wort-yard). From the same root are garden, gird (1), girdle; horticulture; as well as charmaney, char-organ, urgan; sohari, court, court-ain, &c. Doublets, garden, prov. E. garth.

YARD (2), a rod, an E. measure of 36 inches, a cross-beam on a mast for spreading square sails. (E.) M. E. yards, yorde, a stick, Chaucer, C. T. 140; also a yard in length, id. 1052. = A. S. gord, gord, a stick, rod; Grein, i. 536. + Du. garde, a twig, rod. + G. garte, a rod, switch; O. H. G. garta, beria. Allied to O. H. G. gart, a goad; Icel. gaurdr (for gaurdr), a goad, spike, sting; A. S. gād (for gād), a goad; Goth. gards, a goad, prick, sting; see Goad, Gad (1). Der. yard-arm, the arm (i. e. the half) of a ship's yard, from the mast to the end of it. Also gird (2), girdle.

YARE, ready. (E.) As adj. in Temp. v. 224; as adv., readily, quickly, Temp. i. 1. 7. M. E. yars, Will. of Palerne, 895, 1963, 3265; yore, Koh. of Glouc. p. 81, l. 25. = A. S. gæra, gæra, ready, quick, prompt; Grein, ii. 493. + Du. gear, doce, dressed (as meat); gear, adv., wholly. + Icel. gerr, adj., perfect; gærva, gærva, gærva, adv., quite, wholly. + M. H. G. gar, gare, O. H. G. gare, hara, prepared, ready; G. gar, adv., wholly. β. All from Teut. type GARWA, adj., ready (Fick, iii. 102). Root unknown; perhaps from GHAR, to seize; for which see Yard (1). Der. yare-ys, adv., Temp. i. 1. 4; also gear, garð (1), gar (2). Also yare-ow, q. v.

YARN, spun thread, the thread of a rope. (E.) M. E. yarn, yare; yarne, threde, Filum; Prompt. Parv. p. 836. = A. S. garn, yarn, Wright's Voc. i. 59, col. 2; spelt garn, id. 282, l. 2. + Du. garn. + Icel. Dann and Swed. garn. + G. gare. β. All from the Teut. type GARNA, yarn, string, Fick, iii. 101. Further allied to Gk. γάρη, a string, orig. a string of gut; cf. Icel. gæra, or gærvir, guts (i. e. strings or cords). From GHAR, to seize, hence to enclose, bind; see Yard (1) and Cord. From the same root are our-d, cord, as well as cord, yard, garden, &c.

YARROW, the plant milfoil. (E.) M. E. yarrow, yarrow; Prompt. Parv. p. 836. = A. S. gærowas, gærowas, explained by 'millefolium'; Wright's Gloss. i. 30, col. 2; i. 67, col. 2; spelt gærowas, id. i. 89, col. 1. + G. garbe; M. H. G. garbe, garus, O. H. G. garbe, harpa. β. The lit. sense of A. S. gærowas is 'that which prepares or sets in order,' from gærowian, to prepare, gærowan, to dress; we must here translate it by 'healer.' The reference is to the old belief in the curative properties of the yarrow, which was supposed to be a great remedy for wounds; in Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 195, we are told that Achilles was the first person who applied it to the cure of sword-wounds; hence, indeed, its botanical name of Achillea millefolium. γ. Again, the verb gærowas is a derivative from the adj. gæra, ready, yare; see Yare. Thus yarrow = that which makes yare. The G. garbe may be explained in a precisely similar way; cf. G. garbe, to tan, dress leather.

YAW, to go unsteadily, bend out of its course, said of a ship. (Scand.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 130. The sense is to go aside, swerve, bend out of the course; see Phillips. = Norweg. yaga, to bend backwards, esp. used of the neck of a bird; yag, adj., bent backwards, not straight, used of a knife that is not set straight in the haft; Icel. yagr, bent back. + Bavarian yagum, to move unsteadily; Schmeller, 877. Prob. a reduplicated form of ga; hence 'to keep going about.'

YAWL (1), a small boat. (Da.) In Anson's Voyages, b. ii. c. 3 (R.) 'Barges or yaws of different kinds;' Drummond's Travels (Letter, dated 1744), p. 87 (Todd). The word is common at Lowestoft. = Du. jol, a yawl, skiff; Sewel explains jol as 'a Jutland boat.' + Dan. jolle; Swed. julle, a yawl. Origin unknown. The Dan. jolle has been corrupted into E. jolly-boat; see Jolly-boat. Hexham records O. Da. iolleken, 'a small barge or boate.' The mod. Icel. form is jula.

YAWL (2), to howl. (Scand.) 'There howling Scyllas, yowling round about;' Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. iv. st. 5. Also spelt yolt, yowl (Halliwell). M. E. yowlan, Havelok, 164; yowlan, Chaucer, C. T. Group A, 1278 (Six-text ed.), Wyclif, Micah, l. 8; yowlan, Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 1453. = Icel. gaula, to low, bellow; Norweg. gaula, to bellow, low, roar (Aasen). Allied to yoll, and to E. -yole in nightingale. See Yoll.

YAWN, to gape. (E.) Spelt yawn in Palgrave. M. E. gawian, Chaucer, Six-text ed., Group H, l. 35; where Tyrwhitt (l. 16084) has gawpeth. = A. S. gāwian, to yawn; Grein, i. 370. By the usual change from A. S. ā to long a, this became gawian, or gawian, of which gawian, gawian was a variant; accordingly, in Wright's Voc. i. 452, we have gawye as a various reading for gawes. + O. H. G. gawian, to yawn; mod. G. gähnen. β. These are weak verbs, answering to a Teut. type GAINYAN (Fick, iii. 106) from the strong verb (base GIN) appearing in A. S. gīnan (in the comp. ā-gīnan, to gape widely, Grein, ii. 544), pt. t. gōn; also in Icel. gīna, to gape, yawn, pt. t. gōn. These verbs further answer to Gk. χῆνω, to gape. γ. The base is GIN = Aryan GHIN, an extension from GILL, weakened form of GH, to gape, whence Gk. χῆνω, a yawning gulf, Lat. h-ere, to gape, Kuss. zə-er, to yawn, &c. Der. yawning. From the same root, cha-er, cha-er, hi-at-er.

YE, the nom. pl. of the 2nd personal pronoun. (E.) The nom. pl. is properly ye, whilst the dat. and acc. pl. is you; the gen. pl. is properly your, now only used as a possessive pronoun. But in mod. E. ye is almost disused, and you is constantly used in the nominative, not only in the plural, but in the singular, as a substitute for thou. 'Ye in me, and I in you,' John, xiv. 20; this shows the correct use. M. E. ye, ye, nom.; your, your, gen.; you, you, you, dat. and acc. = A. S. ge, nom.; eower, gen.; eow, dat. and acc.; Grein, i. 263, 375. + Du. gij, ye; u, you. + Icel. ér, er, ye; yér, your; yér, you. + Dan. and Swed. i, ye (also you). + G. ir; O. H. G. ir, ye, irer, irer, your, ir, you. + Goth. im, ye; imara, your; imaz, you. β. The common Teut. types are: nom. YUS, gen. YUSWARA, dat. and acc. YUSWIS, whence the various forms can be deduced; Fick, iii. 245. We also have the A. S. dual form gī, ye two, answering to a Goth. form gīz, which does not, however, occur. Thus the common Aryan base is YU, whence also Lithuan. ju, ye, Gk. ἡμεῖς, ye, Skt. yū-yam, ye; Fick, i. 732.

YEA, an affirmative adverb; verily. (E.) The distinction between M. E. ye, yes, and yis, yes, yes, yes, is commonly well marked; the former is the simple affirmative, giving assent, whilst the latter is a strong asseveration, often accompanied by an oath; see Will. of Palerne, &c. Spelt ye, Chaucer, C. T. 9219, &c. = A. S. gēa, yes; John, xxi. 15. + Du., Dan., Swed., and G. ja. + Icel. ja. + Goth. ja. β. The common base is YĀ, yes; Fick, iii. 243, allied to Goth. jah, O. Sax. gīa, ja, A. S. gē, also, and; and to the Aryan pronominal base YA, that, that one, whence Skt. ya, who (in Benfey, p. 733, a. v. yad), Gk. ἦ, who, which were orig. demonstratives. The orig. sense was 'in that way,' or 'just so.' Der. ye-s, q. v.

YEAN, YEAN, to bring forth young. (E.) The new-yean's lamb; Beaun. and Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, iii. 1. Spelt ean in Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 88; M. E. ean; 'Eyan, or bryng forthe kyndelyngys, Feto;' Prompt. Parv. p. 140. The difference between ean and yean is easily explained; in the latter, the prefixed y represents the very common A. S. prefix ge-, readily added to any verb without affecting the sense; see Y-, prefix, above. = A. S. ge-eanian, to ean; ge-eanian, to yean; of which the only clear trace appears to be in the expression ge-eanian eowas = the ewes great with young, Gen. xxxiii. 13. There can be little doubt that ge-ean is here a contracted form of ge-eanian or ge-eanian, where ge- is a mere prefix, = is the pl. ending, and eanian signifies 'pregnant;' Grein, i. 351. Hence the verb ge-eanian, to be pregnant, Luke, l. 24, which would be contracted to ge-eanian, as above. β. Moreover, eanian is the pp. of the lost strong verb eanian, to increase, augment; the weak derivative of which was A. S. ean = mod. E. eb. The strong form appears in Icel. auka (pt. t. auk, pp. aukinn), and in Goth. aukan (pt. t. auk, pp. aukan), to increase. From Teut. base AUK = WAG, to be vigorous, grow; Fick, iii. 6, l. 763. See Eka (1). Thus the orig. sense of yean was merely 'to be pregnant.' Der. yean-ling, a newborn lamb; with double dimin. suffix -ling.

YEAR, the time of the earth's revolution round the sun. (E.) M. E. year, yere, yer, yer; Chaucer, C. T. 601, where it appears as a plural. This sb. was formerly unaltered in the plural, like sheep, deer; hence the mod. phrase 'a new-year old colt.' The pl. yere is common in Shak. Temp. i. 3. 83, &c. = A. S. gēar, gēr, a year; pl. gēar; Grein, i. 406. + Du. jaar. + Icel. ár. + Dan. aar, pl. aar. + Swed. år. + G. jahr; O. H. G. jar. + Goth. jer. β. All from Teut. type YĀRA, a year, Fick, iii. 243. Further allied to Gk. ἔτος, a season, a year; ἔτη, a season, an hour. = YĀ, to go, pass. = extension from YĀ, to go; whence also Skt. yāta, time. See Hour. Der.

YEARN (1), to desire strongly, be eager for. (E.) M. E. yearn, Chaucer, C. T. 1168, 1172. Also spelt year, yearn, &c.; Stratmann = A. S. yearn, yearn (acc. form yearn). Grimm, I. 497; + Du. yearn + G. yearn, O. H. G. yearn, yearn. β. The Teut. type is GELWA, Fick, I. 103. Further allied to Gk. χλω, the young verdure of trees; Lat. helvus, light yellow; the Aryan type being GHELLWA, yellow = GHAL, for GHAH, to be green, to be yellow. Fick, I. 579; whence also Green, Gall (1), and Gold. Dor. yellow-ness; yellow fever, a malignant fever that often turns the skin yellow; yellow-ish, spelt yellowish in Palgrave; yellow-ism. Also yellow-hammer, q. v.

YEARN (2), to grieve. (E.) This verb, not well explained in the Dictionaries, occurs several times in Shak.; and it is remarkable that Shak. never uses yearn in the sense 'to long for,' i. e. he never uses the verb yearn (1) above. It is often spelt earn or ern in old editions. The proper sense is intransitive, to grieve, mourn, Hen. V. II. 3. 3. ii. 3. 6; Jul. Cæ. II. 2. 129; it is also transitive, to grieve, vex, Merry Wives, III. 3. 45; Rich. II, v. 7. 56; Hen. V, iv. 3. 26. Other authors use it besides Shakespeare; as in the following examples. 'I must do that my heart-strings yearn [mourn] to do'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Bonduca, II. 4 (Judas); and see Richardson. Nares gives yearnful, grievous, melancholy; so also prov. E. yearnful (Halliwell, Yearn). β. The distinction between yearn (as it should be spelt) and earn (as it should be spelt) is precisely the same as the difference between yearn and earn; see YEARN. In other words, earn is the true word, whilst yearn is a form due to the A. S. prefix ge-. γ. Again, earn is certainly a corruption of M. E. earn, to grieve, occurring in Chaucer, C. T. 11246. A later instance is in the following: 'Thenne departed he fro the kynge so heuily that many of them earn, i. e. mourned; Keynard the box, tr. by Caxton; ed. Arber, p. 48, l. 6. = A. S. earn, to grieve, vex, Grimm, II. 775; also ge-earn, to grieve, vex, id. I. 40; which exhibits the prefix ge- = later E. y-. Formed (by the usual vowel-change from ea to y) from A. S. earn, adj., miserable, wretched, poor, a common word; Grein, I. 248. + Du. earn, poor, indigent. + Icel. earnr, wretched. + Dan. and Swed. earn. + G. earn. + Goth. earn. δ. All from the Teut. type ARMA, wretched, poor, indigent (Fick, III. 34); perhaps allied to Gk. ἀρμος, desolate (Fick, I. 496), but this is doubtful. We may, however, compare Skt. rita, wanting, except, of which the orig. sense was 'in deficiency'; Benfey = AR, to separate; Fick, I. 46.

YEAST, the froth of malt liquors in fermentation, a preparation which raises dough. (E.) M. E. yeast. 'Yeast, herms, Spuma; Prompt. Parv., p. 537. = A. S. gast; spelt gast, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, I. 118, l. 10 + Du. gast. + Icel. gast, gast. + Swed. gast. + Dan. gast. + G. gast, gast, M. H. G. gast (cited by Fick). β. The Teut. type is VESTA, formed (with suffix -ta) from the base YAS, to ferment, appearing in O. H. G. jeran, M. H. G. jeran, geran, geran, mod. G. geran, to ferment. = YAS, to foam, ferment; whence Skt. ay-yaas, exudations of trees, Gk. ἴσος, to boil, seethe, (σώρος, ferment. Dor. yoast-y, spelt yoasty in Shak. Mach. IV. 1. 53, Hamlet, v. 2. 199, just as yeast is also written yoast, West. Tale, III. 3. 94; the sense is 'frothy.' [Not allied to A. S. fast, a storm.] And see YEAST.

YEDD, went. (E.) Obsolete. Also spelt yede, Spenser, F. Q. II. 7. 2. Spenser, unaware that yede and yode are varying forms of the same past tense, and that the verb is only used in the past tense, wrongly uses yede or yode as an infinitive mood (1); F. Q. I. 11. 3; II. 4. 2. M. E. yede, yode, Chaucer, C. T. 13249; yode Sir Eglamour (Thornton Romances), 531; yode, yode, King Horn, ed. Lamb, 381, 1024; yode, yode, Rob. of Glouc. pp. 53, 79. The proper form is yode (Stratmann); it is probable that the forms yede, yode answer rather to A. S. ge-ode, with prefixed ge-, as in the case of yeom and ose, see YEOMAN, and yearn and ern, see YEARN (2). = A. S. ode, went, only in the past tense; pl. odon; Grimm, I. 256. Here eo corresponds (as usual) to original i; and -de is the usual ending of the weak preterite; so that it is formed from the common iel, to go, which appears also in Skt. i, to go, Lat. ire, to go. So also Goth. i-idda, went, from the same root. γ. Yede or yode has nothing to do with an imaginary ge-od, supposed pl. I. of ge! Go (= A. S. gân) is from a totally different root.

YELK, the name as Yolk, q. v.

YELL, to utter a loud noise, to howl. (E.) M. E. yllen, yellen, Chaucer, C. T. 2674, 15395. = A. S. gellan, gellan, gyllan, to yell, cry out, resound; Grein, I. 413; + Du. gellan. + Icel. gella; also galla (pt. I. gall) + Dan. gælle, gælde (for galle). + Swed. gälla, to ring, resound. + G. yellen, to resound. β. All from the Teut. base GALL, to resound (Fick, III. 105); allied to GAL, to sing, as seen in Icel. gala, to sing (pt. I. gal, pp. galinn), A. S. galan (pt. I. gal).

O. H. G. galan, galan, to sing; see Nightingale. = GHAH, to sound; as in Skt. gharghara, a gurgling, ghar, to sound; Fick, I. 581. Dor. yell, sb., Oth. I. 1. 75.

YELLOW, of a bright golden colour. (E.) M. E. yellow, Chaucer, C. T. 2168, 2172. Also spelt yele, yeleth, &c.; Stratmann = A. S. gæla, gæla (acc. form gælow). Grimm, I. 497; + Du. geel + G. gelb, O. H. G. gelb, gelb. β. The Teut. type is GELWA, Fick, I. 103. Further allied to Gk. χλω, the young verdure of trees; Lat. helvus, light yellow; the Aryan type being GHELLWA, yellow = GHAL, for GHAH, to be green, to be yellow. Fick, I. 579; whence also Green, Gall (1), and Gold. Dor. yellow-ness; yellow fever, a malignant fever that often turns the skin yellow; yellow-ish, spelt yellowish in Palgrave; yellow-ism. Also yellow-hammer, q. v.

YELLOW-HAMMER, YELLOW-AMMER, a song-bird, named from its yellow colour. (E.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. Beyond doubt, the h is an ignorant insertion, due to substitution of a known for an unknown word, irrespective of the sense. Yet the name is E., and very old. The former part of the word (yellow) is explained above; the latter part is the A. S. ammer. In a list of birds, we find: 'Scorellus amers,' Wright's Voc. I. 281, col. 1. Cognate words occur both in Du. and G. + O. Du. ammerich, ammerlich, 'a kind of merlin or a hawk,' Hexham. + Low G. gel-ammer, a yellow-ammer. + G. gel-ammer, gold-ammer, yellow-ammer, gold-ammer; also ammerling, a yellow-ammer. β. The A. S. ammer (for amers, like O. Du. ammer and G. ammer) denotes an agent, and is formed from the base AM. The most likely sense is 'chirper'; since there are several traces of the AM, to sound, make a noise; e. g. Skt. am, to sound, Icel. mya, to howl, O. H. G. amir, G. jammer, lamentation. γ. It is probable that ammer may be similarly explained; the O. H. G. for ammer is written both amir and amir, where -ir, -id, are mere suffixes, denoting the agent. Hence A. S. amers and amir (= am-ir) contain precisely the same base AM, probably used in both words in the same sense.

YELP, to bark, bark shrilly. (E.) M. E. yelpen, gelpen, only in the sense to boast, boast noisily; but it is the same word. 'I kep not of armes for to yelp'; Chaucer, C. T. 2240. = A. S. gelpen, gelpen, gelpen, to boast, exult; orig. to talk noisily; Grein, I. 509. A strong verb; pt. gelp, pp. gelpen; whence gelp, gelp, gelp, gelp, boasting, arrogance, id. + Icel. gelpa, to yelp; cf. gelfra, to roar as the sea; gelfr, the din of the sea. β. From a base GALP, to make a loud noise, allied to GALL, to yell, GAL, to sing; see Yell. Dor. yelp, sb. Doublet, yep.

YEOMAN, a man of small estate, an officer of the royal household. (E.) M. E. yeoman, yeoman, yeoman; in Chaucer, C. T. 101, the Lansdowne MS. has yeoman, whilst the rest have yeoman or yeoman. In Sir Amadas (pt. in Weber's Met. Rom. vol. III), l. 347, it is written yeoman; but the usual spelling is yeoman, as above, and as in Alln. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 534 (or 535). In Will. of Palerne, l. 3649, however, we have yeoman, pl.; which is one of the earliest examples of the word; I know not where to find an example earlier than the 14th century. β. The variation of the vowel in the M. E. forms is curious, but we find other examples almost as remarkable; thus M. E. her (hair) answers to A. S. her, but we also find har (Havelok, 235) as if from an A. S. form har; again, we have mod. E. deal, from A. S. dæl, but also dole, from the A. S. variant dæl; again, ere (before) from A. S. er, often appears as or, as if from A. S. er; and, once more, the mod. E. same, from A. S. sæma, also appears in M. E. as sema or seama; see TOAM. γ. The word does not appear in A. S.; but it would (judging by the foregoing examples) take the form ge-man, with a variant ge-man; the change from g to y, even before e, presents no difficulty, for we still have the remarkable form ewe where M. E. has yef or yaf, as well as mod. E. yeom from A. S. gæman. The sense of ge is 'district' or 'village'; Kemble, Saxons in England, b l. c. 3, treats of the ge or district, though he gives no reference to show where the word occurs; Leo (A. S. Glossar) gives ge, a district, as in Okra-ge, Neuga-ge, but he adds no references. δ. However, the word is cleared up by cognate languages. Cf. O. Frisic ga, ge (nom. pl. gæ), a district, village; whence gaman, a village; gafell, people of a village. Also Du. geum, geum, a province; O. Du. geum, 'a hamlet where houses stand scattered, a countree village, or a field; gegrone or gegronef, a field-judge; geylen or gey-mannen, arbitrators, or men appointed to take up a business between man and man; Hexham. Also Low G. ge, ge, a tract of country; ge-gröve, a judge in one of the 4 districts of Bremen; Brem. Wörterbuch. Cf. also G. gau, a province, O. H. G. gaut, gaut, Goth. gauti. Prob. allied to Gk. χώρα, χώρα, an open space, country, district, land. γ. This seems better than Stratmann's derivation from the A. S. ieoman, from ge or is, formerly; the sense of which is totally unsuitable. Ieoman means a forefather, ancestor, or 'one who lived long ago,' which no yeoman can possibly be during his life-time. Unsuccessful attempts have also been made to derive yoman from young man; or from A. S. guma, a man; or from A. S. gymas, to take care, &c. The worst of all is Verstegan's, from A. S. gombas, common, which could only become yoman in mod. E., and is, in fact, represented by the adj. mons; only one who was regardless of English names could have dreamt of such a thing. Der. yoman-ry, where -ry is used as a collective suffix.

YERK, in Shak. Hen. V. iv. 7. 83; the same as Jerk, q. v.
YES, a word denoting affirmation. (E.) A much stronger form than yea, and often accompanied, in old authors, by an oath. M. E. yes, ye, P. Ploverman, B. v. 115; 'ye, be marie,' Will. of Palerne, 1567; 'ye, bi crist' id. 5149. A. S. gise, gese; 'gise, la gese' = yea, O. yes; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. met. 6; cap. xvi. § 4. Probably contracted from geaf = yea, let it be so = yea, verily; where geaf = E. yes, and af = let it be, is the imperative from the AS, to be. See Yea and Ara. See Grimm, Gram. iii. 764.

YESTERDAY, the day last past. (E.) M. E. yesterday, Wyclif, John, iv. 52. = A. S. gestra, giestra, gestra (yester-), Grein, i. 501; and dag, a day; commonly in the acc. gestran dag, yesterday. + Du. gisteren dag von gister. + G. gestern. + Goth. gestro-dagis. β. From a Teut. type GES-TRA, Fick, iii. 108. The same word appears with the suffix -tra in Lat. astrum, adj.; but without it in Icel. gar, Dan. gar, Swed. gar, Lat. hori, Gk. χθρ, Skt. ahya, yesterday. All from the Aryan type GHYAS, yesterday (Fick, i. 525). The suffix -TRA is a comparative form, as in in-ter-ior, ex-ter-ior, &c. The orig. sense of GHYAS appears to have been 'morning' (Fick); and, of GHYAS-TRA, 'the morning beyond.' Der. Similarly, yester-night.

YET, moreover, besides, hitherto, still, nevertheless. (E.) M. E. yet, yet, Chaucer, C. T. 165. = A. S. yet, get, yet, yet; Grein, i. 511. + O. Fries. iet, iet, iet, iet; mod. Fries. ietto (Richtofen). + N. H. G. iet, iet; whence G. jetzt, now. β. The M. H. G. iet, as, answers to A. S. it, too, and to O. Fries. it, it (of which an older form would be ait). It is accordingly probable that A. S. get is a contraction of the compound ge-it = and too, i. e. moreover. For the latter of these words, see Too, To. For the former, see Yea, section β.

YEW, an evergreen tree. (E.) Spelt yew in Palgrave. M. E. yew, Chaucer, C. T. 2935. = A. S. iw; to translate Lat. taxus; Wright's Voc. i. 32, 79, 285; spelt iw, id. ii. 121. + Du. yf. + Icel. if. + G. ah; O. H. G. ihwa. β. The Teut. type is WA, Fick, i. 31. Perhaps the word is of Celtic origin; we find Irish ibhar, a yew; Gael. ibhar, ibhar, a yew-tree, also a bow; W. yew, yew; Corn. hwin; Breton win, win; so that it is found in all Celtic languages. γ. According to Fick, the Lithuan. iwis is not the yew, but a kind of alder (Faulbaum), and is borrowed from a Gk. iwis; it may therefore be set aside. ¶ Totally distinct from ivy.

YEW, to hiccough. (E.) Prov. E. yew (Halliwell); spelt yew in Palgrave. M. E. yew, yew, yew, Chaucer, C. T. 4149 (Group A, 4151, Six-text edition). 'yew, yew, Singulcio, Singulto;' Prompt. Parv. p. 539. = A. S. gucian, to sob, sigh; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. i. met. 1. c. 2. Probably an extension from the base GI (Aryan GHI), to gape; just as Lat. hiare, hiare, to yawn, gape, is extended from Lat. hiare. Cf. A. S. gja, a wide space, Grein, i. 510; O. H. G. gja, to yawn. See Yawn, Hiatu.

YIELD, to resign, grant, produce, submit, give way. (E.) The orig. sense was 'to pay.' M. E. gilden, gilden, gilden; a strong verb; pt. t. yild, pp. yolden. Chaucer has un-yolden, C. T. 1644. In P. Ploverman, B. iii. 193, we have both yild (strong) and yold (weak), as forms of the pt. t. = A. S. gildan, gildan, to pay, restore, give up; pt. t. gild, pl. gildan, pp. gildan, Grein, i. 508. + Du. gelden. + Icel. gilda, pt. t. gild, pp. gildan. + Dan. gælde. + Swed. gälla (for gilda), to be of consequence, be worth. + G. galtan, to be worth; pt. t. galt, pp. galtan. + Goth. gildan, only in the compounds fr-gildan, un-gildan, to pay back. β. All from Teut. base GALD, to be worth, to pay for, repay; Fick, i. 104. Prob. allied to Lithuan. galeti, W. gallu, to be able, have power. Der. yild, sb., yild-ing, -ly; also gild or gild; also gilt.

YOLK, the frame of wood joining oxen for drawing, a similar frame for carrying loads, a mark of servitude, a pair. (E.) M. E. yoik, yoik, Chaucer, C. T. 7089. = A. S. gosc, gosc, ins, a yoke; Grein, i. 497. + Du. joik. + Icel. ok. + Dan. og. + Swed. ok. + Goth. joik. + G. joik. O. H. G. joik. + W. ins. + Lat. jugum (whence Ital. giogo, Span. yogo, F. jug). + Russ. iga. + Lithuan. jugus. + Gk. (yoik). + Skt. yuga, a yoke, pair, couple. β. All from the Aryan type YUGA (Teut. YUKA), a yoke; lit. 'that which joins' = YUG (Teut. YUK), to join; see Join. Der. yoik, verb, Two Gent. i. 1. 40; yoik-fellow, companion, K. Lear, iii. 6. 39.

YOLK, YELK, the yellow part of an egg. (E.) Spelt yoik in Palgrave. M. E. yoik, Morris Arthure, 3283; yoik, Prompt. Parv. p. 537. = A. S. goleca, goleca, the yolk; Grein, i. 497. Lit. 'the yellow part' = A. S. gula, yellow; see Yellow.

YON, at a distance. (E.) Properly an adj., as in prov. E., in which such phrases as 'yon house' and 'yon field' are common. Common in Shak., Mids. Nr. Dr. iii. 2. 188, &c. M. E. yon, P. Ploverman, C. xii. 149 (also yon, and even yon, yon, see the footnote). = A. S. gwan, yon; '16 gwan byrg' = to yon city; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past Care, ed. Sweet, p. 443. l. 25; where gwan is the dat. form. + Icel. ann, the (orig. that), used as the def. art., and often miswritten ann; see Vigfusson's remarks on Ann. + Goth. jons, yon, that + G. jon, M. H. G. jon, yon, that. β. The Teut. type is YENA, Fick, iii. 243; extended (with Aryan suffix -no) from the Aryan pronoun base YA, that; cf. Skt. pronoun base ya, who (orig. that), Gk. ho (for yo). From the same base are yon, yo, yo. Der. yon, adv. Temp. i. 2. 409 (also incorrectly used instead of yon, Temp. ii. 2. 20), from A. S. gwan, adv., but often used as a prep., Grein, i. 497; cf. Goth. jonad, adv., there, John, xl. 8. Hence yo-yon, q. v. Also yon (not in A. S.), M. E. yon, adv., Chaucer, C. T. 5438; cf. Goth. jonada, adv., yonder, there, Luke, xi. 37.

YON, in old times, long ago. (E.) M. E. yon, yon, Chaucer, C. T. 4594. = A. S. goda, formerly (with the usual change from o to long o, as in etan = etow); Grein, i. 496. Orig. gen. pl. of godr, a year, so that the sense was 'of years,' i. e. in years past; the phrase being often used to express the time when, as in degas = by day, &c. See Year.

YOUNG, not long born, new to life. (E.) M. E. young, young, young. In Chaucer, C. T. 79, we have the indef. form young (misprinted young in Tyrwhitt); whilst in l. 7 we have the def. form young (disyllabic). = A. S. young, young, young (and even young, young), young; Grein, i. 499. + Du. jong. + Icel. ungur, jungur. + Dan. and Swed. ung. + G. jung; O. H. G. jung. + Goth. juggu (written for jugga); of which the alleged (but unauthorised) comparative form is jugga. β. All from a Teut. type YUNGA, a contracted form of YUWANGA or YUWANHA, answering precisely to the cognate W. innaw, young, and to the Lat. form iuvenis, an extension (with Aryan suffix -na) from iuvenis, young. γ. The base YUWAN, young, occurs in Lat. iuvenis, young, Skt. yuvan, young, Russ. iuveni, young, Lithuan. juunas, young. The lit. sense is perhaps 'protected,' from YU, to guard; cf. Skt. yu, to keep back, Lat. iuare, to aid, help; Fick, i. 732. But Curtius (l. 285) derives it from YU, to play; Der. young, sb.; young-rob; young-lug, Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 57. M. E. youngling, Wyclif, Mark, xvi. 8, with double dim. suffix -ling; youngster, as to which see Spinster. Also young-her, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 1. 11, borrowed from Du. jonker, also written jonker, compounded of jong, young, and her, a lord, sir, gentleman; Hexham has O. Du. jonck-her or joncker, 'a young gentleman or a joncker' (sic). Also young-her, q. v.

YOUR, possess. pron. of 2nd person. (E.) Properly the possess. pron. of the 2nd person plural, but commonly used instead of thy, which was considered too familiar, and has almost passed out of use in speech. M. E. your, your, Chaucer, C. T. 2937. Orig. the gen. pl. of the 2nd pers. pronoun; a use which occurs even in M. E., as: 'ich am yours aller held' = I am head of you all, P. Ploverman, C. xiii. 473; where aller = A. S. alra, gen. pl. of all, all = A. S. edwer, your; orig. gen. of ge, ye; see Ye. Der. your, M. E. yours, Chaucer, C. T. 13204. from A. S. edwara, gen. sing. masc. and neut. of edwer, poss. pronoun; Grein, i. 163. Also your-self (see Self).

YOUTH, early life. (E.) M. E. youthe, Chaucer, C. T. 463; older forms juwthe, Ancien Riwle, p. 156, l. 22; juwthe, Layamon, 6366; juwthe, id. 19837. = A. S. gugub, gugub, youth, Grein, i. 502. [The middle g first turned to w, and then disappeared.] + O. Sax. jugub. + Du. jugub. + G. jugub, O. H. G. jugub; we also find M. H. G. jugub. Cf. Goth. junda, youth. β. The A. S. gugub stands for gugub, a being lost, as in ist, tooth (Goth. tusthan), gub, gocum (G. gum); accordingly, we actually find M. E. juwthe, youth, Prompt. Parv., p. 539, juwthe, Wyclif, Mark, x. 20; hence youth = young-ih, formed from A. S. gocung, young, by means of the suffix -ih (= Aryan -ih). Similarly the O. Sax. jugub is for jugub, and O. H. G. jugub for jugub; but the Goth. junda is different, standing for juwun-da, directly from the Aryan base YUWAN, young. Der. youth-ful, -ly, youth-ful-ness.

YULE, Christmas. (E.) 'Yule-batch, Christmas batch; yule-bloch or yule-bloch, Christmas block; yule-gum or yule-gum, Christmas games;' Ray's Gloss. of N. Country Words. Here yu is short for yule, M. E. yule; 'the feste of yule,' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 65, l. 6; whence yule-stok, a yule-stock or yule-log, Wright's Voc. i. 197, col. 2. = A. S. iwla, iwla, Spelt iwla, Grein, i. 148. Spelt iwla in the following: 'So mōna is nenned on Leden Decembris, and on dre gethōde se lēra iwla, forþan þā monas twegen syndon nenned ānum naman, oðer se drea iwla, oðer se æfter, forþan þe hynn oðer gunges beforan þāra [read þāra] sunnan ærþon þe heo cyrre hig tō þes dages lenga, oðer æfter,' i. e. This month is named December in Latin, and in our tongue the former Yule, because two months are named with one name; one is the former Yule, the other the after Yule, because one of them comes before the sun, viz. before it turns itself about [at the winter solstice] to the lengthening of day, whilst the other [January] comes after; MS. Cotton, Tib. B. 1, quoted in Hicke, Theobrus, i. 313. Bede, De Temporum Ratione, cap. 13, has the same account (but in Latin), and calls the Yule-months Menses Guli; i. e. he Latinizes Yule as Gulus. Spelt gof, gabdel, gabdel, Laws of Ælfred, § 5, and § 43; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 64, note 54; l. 93, note 4. + Icel. jól; Dan. jul; Swed. jul. We may also note that, in a fragment of a Gothic calendar (pr. in Mannmann's Ulfilas, p. 390) November appears to be called fruma Yulais, which seems to mean 'the first Yule'; a name not necessarily inconsistent with the A. S. use, since November may once have also been reckoned as a Yule-month.

β. The best solution of this difficult word is that given by Fick (iii. 245). He explains yule as meaning 'noise,' or 'outcry,' esp. the loud sound of revelry and rejoicing. Cf. M. E. joles, joles, to lament loudly. Chaucer, C. T. Group A. 1278 (Six-text ed.), mod. E. joles; see Yawl (2). We also find, as derived verbs, the A. S. gylan, to make merry, keep festival, Grein, l. 537, and (perhaps) Icel. jla, to howl, make a noise, though this is chiefly used of dogs and wolves; also G. jolm, jollen, jodeln, to sing in a high-pitched voice. Perhaps we may compare O. Du. jos, 'a hue, or a hooting; am jos groen, to make a noise, or to hoot at one,' Hexham; Low G. joseln, to shrill, scold of cats; G. juchzen, to shout in triumph; Gk. brōphō, brōphō, an outcry. γ. The usual attempt to connect this word with E. whist, A. S. hwist, Icel. hvið, with the far-fetched explanation that the sun whist at the winter solstice, cannot be admitted, since an initial h or hw makes all the difference. Besides Yule did not denote the shortest day, but a season. Der. jolly.

YWIS, certainly. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 19. M. E. ywis, Chaucer, C. T. 3277; wis, Ancren Riwle, p. 170, l. 11. = A. S. gwis, adj. certain, gwislice, adv. certainly, Grein, l. 483. The adj. came to be used adverbially. + Du. gwis, adj. and adv., certain, certainly. + Icel. wis, certain. + Dan. wis, certain; wis, certainly. + Swed. wis, certain; wis, certainly. + G. gwis, certainly. β. The g is a mere prefix; see Y-. The adj. is from the Teut. type WISA, certain, Fick, iii. 306. Related to Wise and Wit, verb. Cf. Goth. wiss, I knew. ¶ It is particularly to be noted that the commonest form in MSS. is wis, in which the prefix (like most other prefixes) is frequently written apert from the rest of the word, and not infrequently the i is represented by a capital letter, so that it appears as I wis. Hence, by an extraordinary error, the i has often been mistaken for the 1st pers. pron., and the verb wis to know, has been thus created, and is given in many dictionaries! But it is a pure fiction, and the more remarkable because there actually exists a M. E. causal verb wisimen or wisera, but it means to teach, shew, instruct. The easiest test by which to gauge any one's knowledge of Middle-English is to ask him to explain clearly and to parse the words wit, wat, wisid, wis, I wisid, and i-wis. If he fails, his opinion is valueless.

Z.

ZANY, a buffoon, a mimic. (Ital., = Gk., = Heb.) In L. L. L. v. 2. 463; and in Beaumont and Fletcher, Cupid's Revenge, ii. 6 (Bacha). = Ital. Zano, 'the name of Iohn, also a sillie Iohn, a gull, a noddie; used also for a simple vice, clowne, foole, or simple fellowe in a plaie;' Florio. Mod. Ital. Zanni. Zano and Zanni are familiar forms of Zanani, Iohn. = Gk. Zanōnos; John, l. 6. = Heb. Yehōnān, i. e. the Lord sheweth mercy. = Heb. Jā, put for Yehōwah, the Lord; and Adōnān, to shew mercy. Der. zany, verb, Beaumont and Fletcher, Qu. of Corinth, l. 2 (Crates).

ZEAR, fervour, ardour. (F., = L., = Gk.) Spelt zale in Palgrave. = F. zale, 'zeale,' Cot. Mod. F. zile. = Lat. zelum, acc. of zelus, zeal. = Gk. zēlos, zeal, ardour, fervour; lit. 'heat.' Zēlos stands for ζε-λος; cf. zēion (for ζε-γιον), poetic form of zēion, to boil, seethe, zēion, a boiling. = √ YAS, to seethe, ferment, whence also E. yeast; see Yeast. Der. zēlous, L. L. L. v. 2. 116; zēlous-ly. Also zēl-of, Seldén's Table-Talk, s. v. Zēlous, from F. zēlos, 'jealous, or zealous,' Cot. from Lat. zēlos, Gk. zēlos. And see jealous.

ZEBRA, a striped animal of the horse kind. (Port., = Ethiopian?) Added by Todd to Johnson. = Port. zebra. (Also Span. zebra, zebra.) The animal is a native of S. Africa, and the word is from some African language. According to Littré, it is Ethiopian; he cites: 'Pecora, compendibus zebra dicta,' Ludolf, Hist. Ethiop. l. 40.

ZEDOARY, an East-Indian root resembling ginger. (F., = Low Lat., = Pers.) Zedoary, a spicy root, very like ginger, but of a sweeter scent, and nothing near so biting; it is a hot and dry plant, growing in the woods of Malabar in the E. Indies; Phillips, ed. 1706. [In old F., the name was corrupted to zital, zitalon, zitalon (Roquefort); whence the M. E. zetalons, Chaucer, C. T. 13691 (Group B, 1951), on which see my note.] = F. zédouire, 'an East-Indian root which resembleth ginger;' Cot. = Low Lat. zedoaria. =

Pers. zadwair, zidwair, zedoary; Rich. Dict. p. 771; or jadwair, zedoary, id. p. 794. The initial letter is sometimes the 13th, sometimes the 14th letter of the Pers. alphabet; see Palmer, Pers. Dict., col. 314.

ZENITH, the point of the heavens directly overhead. (F., = Span., = Arab.) M. E. zenith, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, l. 18. 4. = O. F. zenith (Littré); mod. F. zenith. = Span. zenit, formerly written zenith, as in Musset's Span. Dict. = Arab. zenit, a way, road, path, tract, quarter; whence zenit-ur-ras, the zenith, vertical point of the heavens, also az-zenit, an azimuth; Rich. Dict. p. 848. Zenit was pronounced zenit, of which Span. zenith or zenit is a corruption; in the sense of zenith, it is an abbreviation for zenit-ur-ras or zenit-ur-ras, lit. the way overhead, from ras, the head, Rich. Dict. p. 715. The word azimuth, q. v., is from the same source. See Devic. Supp. to Littré.

ZEPHYR, a soft gentle breeze. (F., = L., = Gk.) In Shak. Cymb. iv. 2. 175. Chaucer has the form Zephyrus, directly from the Latin, C. T. 5. = F. zephyre, 'the west wind;' Cot. = Lat. zephyrus, acc. of zephyrus, the west wind. = Gk. zēphos, the west wind. Allied to zōphos, darkness, gloom, the dark or evening quarter, the west.

ZERO, a cipher, nothing, denoted by 0. (F., = Ital., = Arab.) A late word, added by Todd to Johnson. = F. zero, 'a cypher in arithmetic, a thing that stands for nothing;' Cot. = Ital. zero, 'a figure of nought in arithmetic;' Florio. A contracted form of zifiro or zifro, parallel form to zifro, 'a cifre,' i. e. cipher; Florio = Arab. zif (with initial zaf), a cipher; Rich. Dict. p. 937. See Cipher. See Devic. Supp. to Littré; he explains that the old Latin treatises on arithmetic wrote zephyrus for Arab. zif, which became, in Italian, zifro, and (by contraction) zero. Doublet, cypher.

ZEST, something that gives a relish or a flavour. (F., = L., = Gk.) In Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. Phillips explains zest as a chip of orange or lemon-peel, used for flavouring drinks. = F. zest, 'the thick skinn or flims wherby the kernell of a wallout is divided;' Cot. Mod. F. zeste, a piece of the skin of a citron or lemon, whence zester, 'to cut up lemon rind;' Hamilton. The E. sense is due to the use of lemon or citron-peel for flavouring. = Lat. zestus (zestus), cleft, divided, used by Pliny; according to Dietz, who notes that Lat. scholula became, similarly, F. schule; there must have been a transference of sense from 'divided' to 'division.' = Gk. zēstos, divided, = Gk. zēstos, to cleave. See Bohém.

ZIGZAG, having short, sharp turns. (F., = G.) In Pope, Dunciad, l. 124. = F. zigzag. = G. zickzack, a zigzag; zickzack segeln, to tack, in sailing. We also find Swed. zickzack, zigzag (Widegren, 1788). Origin obscure; cf. Swed. sack, Dan. sakke, to have stern-way; said of a ship.

ZINC, a whitish metal. (G.) In Locke, Elements of Nat. Philosophy, c. 8 (R.). = G. zink, zinc; whence also F. zinc, &c. Origin uncertain; perhaps formed from zinn, tin, from the likeness between the metals. See Tin.

ZODIAC, an imaginary belt in the heavens, containing the twelve constellations called signs. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. zodiac, zodiac, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. 63. = F. zodiacus, 'the zodiac.' Cot. = Lat. zodiacus. = Gk. zōdiakos, adj., of or belonging to animals, whence zōdiakos, the zodiac circle; so called from containing the twelve constellations represented by animals. = Gk. zōon, a small animal; dimin. of zōon, a living creature, an animal; where zōon is neut. of zōon, living; allied to zōō, life, and zōon, zōō (Ionic zōon), to live. Curtius, ii. 96, says that zōon 'stands for zōon, and its most natural derivation is from the √ GI (Zend jō), to live.' See Victuals. Der. zodiacal, adj.

ZONE, a belt, one of the great belts in which the earth is divided. (F., = L., = Gk.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 303. = F. zone, 'a girdle, zone;' Cot. = Lat. zona, a girdle, belt, zone. = Gk. zōnē, a girdle. Put for zōnē = Gk. zōnē (= zōnē), I gird. = √ YAS, to gird, Fick, l. 731; whence also Lithuan. jūta, a girdle, jūti, to gird (Newellmann). Der. zonal.

ZOOLOGY, the natural history of animals. (Gk.) See Pennant's British Zoology, London, 1766. Coined from Gk. zōon, crude form of zōon, a living creature; and -λογία, allied to λόγος, a discourse, from λόγος, to speak. See Zodiac and Logic. Der. zoology-ist, zoology-ist. ¶ Pronounced zō-zō, the o's being separate.

ZOOPHYTE, an animal plant, a term now applied to corals, &c. (F., = Gk.) In Johnson's Dict. = F. zoophyte, pl. zoophytes, 'such things as be partly plants, and partly living creatures, as sponges, &c.;' Cot. = Gk. zōophyton, a living being; an animal-plant, the lowest of the animal tribe, Aristotle, Hist. Anim. xviii. 1. 6. = Gk. zōon, crude form of zōon, living; and phytos, a plant, that which has grown, from phōō, to produce, also to grow, from √ BHU, to grow, exist, be. See Zodiac and Bo.

ZYMOTIC, a term applied to diseases, in which a poison works through the body like a ferment. (Gk.) Modern. = Gk. zōmōtikos, causing to ferment. = Gk. zōmō, I leaven, cause to ferment. = Gk. zōmō, I leaven. Allied to Lat. zū, broth; see Julus.

APPENDIX.

I. LIST OF PREFIXES.

A. The following prefixes are all carefully explained, each in its due place, in the Dictionary, so that it is sufficient to enumerate them.

A- (with several values), ab-, abs- (see Abscond), ad-, ambi- or amb- (see Ambidextrous), amphi-, an-, ana-, ante-, anti- or ant-, aph- or apo-, be-, cata-, circum-, co-, com-, con-, contra-, counter-, de-, di-, dia-, dis-, dys- (see Dysentery), e-, em- (see Embark), en-, epi-, ex-, extra-, for- (2), for- (3), fore-.

Gain- (see Gainsay), hyper-, hypo-, i-, il- (1), il- (2), im- (1), im- (2), im- (3), in- (1), in- (2), in- (3), inter-, intro- (see Introduce), ir- (1), ir- (2), juxta- (see Joust).

Meta-, mis- (1), mis- (2), no- (see No (1)), non-, ob-, on-, or- (see Ordeal, Ort), out-, over-, palin- (see Palindrome), para-, per-, peri-, pol- or po- (see Pollute, Position), por- (see Portend), pos- (see Possess), post-, pre-, preter-, pro-, pros-, pur-, re-, red-, retro-.

Se-, sine- (see Sinecure), sub-, sus-, super-, supra-, sur- (1), sur- (2), syn-, to- (1), to- (2), trans-, ultra-, un- (1), un- (2), un- (3), under-, up-, with-, y-.

There are other words often considered as prefixes, which are not mere prepositions, but true words, such as al- in al-mighty, poly- in poly-gon, and the like. It is much the best way to regard such words as mere compounds. I therefore omit them from the list.

B. Some of these prefixes assume various shapes in accordance with phonetic laws. Of these, the most important are the following:—

(a) The Lat. prep. ad appears as a-, ab-, ac-, ad-, af-, ag-, al-, an-, ap-, ar-, as-, at-.

(b) The Lat. prep. cum appears as co-, col-, com-, comb-, com-, cor-.

(c) The Lat. prefix dis appears as de-, dis-, di-, dif-, dis-, and even s-.

(d) The Lat. prep. ex appears as a-, e-, ef-, et-, em-, and even iss- and s-.

(e) The Lat. prep. in appears as am-, an-, em-, en-, il- (1), im- (1, 2), in- (2), ir- (1).

(f) The Lat. negative prefix in- appears as em-, i-, il- (1), im- (3), in- (3), ir- (2).

(g) The Lat. prep. ob appears as ob-, oc-, of-, o-, op-; we even find os-.

(h) The Lat. prep. sub appears as s- (in S-ombre), so- (in So-journ), sub-, suc-, suf-, sug-, sum-, sup-, sur-.

(i) The Greek prefix apo- (dro) also appears as aph-; cata- (ward), also as cath-; en- (iv), also as em-; epi- (ist), also as eph-; hypo- (dro), also as hyp-; syn- (div), also as sy-, syl-, sym-.

These very common variations should be observed and learnt. For this purpose, I suggest a study of the following words:—

(a) A-chieve, ab-breviate, ac-cede, ad-mire, af-fix, ag-gress, al-lude, an-nex, ap-pend, ar-rogate, as-sign, at-tract.

(b) Co-agulate, col-lect, com-mute, comb-ustion, con-nect, cor-rose.

(c) De-feat, de-cant, di-verge, dif-fuse, dis-pel, s-pend.

(d) A-mend, e-normous, ef-fect, es-cape, ex-tend, iss-ue, s-ample.

(e) Am-bush, an-oint, em-bellish, en-close, il-lude, im-mure, im-merge, in-clude, ir-ritate.

(f) En-emy, i-gnoble, il-legal, im-mortal, in-firm, ir-regular.

(g) Ob-long, oc-cur, of-fer, o-mit, op-press, os-tensible.

(h) S-ombre, so-journ, sub-mit, suc-ceed, suf-fuse, sug-gest, sum-mon, sup-press, sur-rogate.

(i) Apo-logy, aph-eresis; cata-logue, cath-olic; en-ergy, em-phasis; epi-logue, eph-emera; hypo-thesis, hyph-en; syn-onymous, sy-stem, syl-logism, sym-metry.

It may be noted here that more than one prefix may be placed at the beginning of a word, as in re-im-burse, ram-part (= re-em-part), in-ex-act, &c.

C. Some prefixes exhibit such unusual forms in certain words that they can only be understood upon a perusal of the etymology of the word as given in the Dictionary. I note here a few curious examples.

A- replaces e- (Lat. e, for en) in a-mend.

Al-, the Arabic definite article, appears at the beginning of al-cohol, a-price, ar-tichoke, as-segay (explained s. v. Lancegay), al-imit, l-ute. But the al- in al-ligator is the Span. el, Lat. ille.

The Latin ab has actually become adv- in the word adv-antage; whilst in v-an-guard it appears as v-. But, in ab-breviate, the prefix is ad-. The Latin cum appears in co-st, co-uch, cur-ry (1), cu-stom.

The d in daffodil represents the Lat. da.

The da- in daa-con represents the Greek δά; so also de- in de-vil.

The e- in e-lops represents the Dutch en-.

The e- in e-squire is purely phonetic, as explained.

The ev- in ev-angelist is for Gk. eu-, as in eu-logy.

The l- in lower represents the Latin ille; but in l-one it is the A. S. coll.

The or- in or-deal and or-t is a Teutonic prefix.

The our- in our-age represents the Latin ultra; so also in utter-ance (2).

Re-but = re-a-but (prefixes re-, ad-).

The s- in s-ure (Lat. se-curus) represents the Latin se-.

The t- in t-wit represents the A. S. æt; but in t-awdry it is the last letter of saisus.

D. The best way of understanding prefixes is by observing their original forms. The following is a list of these (perhaps not exhaustive); the forms within marks of parenthesis shewing how they appear in modern English. See Morris, Outlines of English Accidence, p. 224.

CLASS I. Prefixes of English origin, in Anglo-Saxon spelling. Forms not followed by a hyphen can also be used as separate words.

a- (a-rise); d (see either); after (after); at (a-do, t-wit); and- (a-long, an-swer) [an (one, a-pace, on-ly, n-ewt, and see aught) not a true prefix, but a numeral]; be, bi (be-, by); for- (for-give); fore (fore-bode); forð (forth); from (fro-); ge- (e-luch, e-nough, y-wis); gagn- (gain-); in (in, im-, em-, en-); mis- (mis-); ne, whence n-, negative prefix (n-o, n-one, n-aught, &c.); nether (nether); of (of, off, a-down); ofer (over); on (on, ann-eal, [un]-an-eled, a-foot); or- (or-deal); þurk (through, thorough); tó (to-brake); tó (to-ward, to); un-, before abs. and ads. (un-true, un-truth); un-, before verbs (un-do); under (under); up (up); ut (out, att-er); wið (with).

β. To this class belong Gothic and, whence am-bassador, em-bassy; Dutch ant-, whence e-lops; Dutch oor-, whence or-lop; Gothic, O. Friesic, and O. Saxon and, whence un-to.

CLASS II. Prefixes of Latin and French origin, in Latin spelling. Forms not followed by a hyphen can also be used as separate words.

a- (a-vert); ab (ab-jure, a-bate, adv-ance, as-soil, av-aunt, v-an-guard); abs- (abs-ent); ad (a-chieve, ab-breviate, ac-cede, ad-mire, af-fix, ag-gress, al-lude, an-nex, ap-pend, ar-rogate, as-sets, as-sign, at-tract); amb- (amb-ient, am-putate); ante, anti- (ante-cedent, anticipate, anti-ent, an-cestor); circum (circum-, circu-it); contra, contro- (contra-, contro-vert, contr-ol, counter-feit); cum, com- (co-agulate, col-lect, com-mute, comb-ustion, con-nect, cor-rode, coun-cil, co-unt, co-uch, co-st, cu-stom, cur-ry); de (de-, di-stil, d-affodil); dis- (de-feat, de-luge, de-cant, di-verge, dif-fuse, dis-pel, s-pend); ex, e (a-mend, e-normous, ef-fect, es-cape, ex-tend, iss-ue, s-ample); extra (extra-, stra-ge); in, prep. (am-bush, an-oint, em-bellish, en-close, il-lude, im-mure, im-merge, in-clude, ir-ritate); in-, negative (en-emy, i-gnoble, il-legal, im-mortal, in-firm, ir-regular); O. Lat. indo (ind-igent); inter, intro- (inter-, intro-, enter-tain, entr-ails); iuxta (juxta-, joust); minus (O. F. mes-, mis-chief); ne (n-ill, ne-ter, ne-farious), neg, short for ne-que (neg-lect); non, short for ne-natum (non-age, um-pire); ob (ob-long, oc-cur, of-fer, o-mit, op-press, os-tensible); per (per-, par-son, pel-lucid, pil-grim); O. Lat. post (pol-lute, po-sition, por tend, possess); post (post, pu-ny); prae (pre-, pro-vost); præter (preter-); pro (pro-, prof-fer, pour tray or por-tray, pur-vey, pr-udent); re-, red- (re-, red-, r-ally, ren-der); retro (retro-, rear-guard, re-ward); se-, sed- (se-, sed-ition, s-ober); sine, for si-ne (sine-, sans); sub, for sub (s-ombre, so-journ, sub-mit, suc-ceed, suf-fuse, sug-gest, sum mon, sup-press, sur-rogate); subter- (subter-); sub-, for sub- (sub-); super (super-, sur-, sopr-ano, sover-eign); supra, for supra (supra-); trans- (trans-, tran-scend, tra-duce, tres-pass, tre-ason); ultra (ultra-, outr-age, utter-ance, as in Shake-speare).

β. Numerals are peculiarly liable to sink into apparent prefixes; such are Lat. unus, duo (adverbially, bis), tres, &c.; hence un-an-imo-us, du-et, bin-ary, bi-sect, bis-cuit, ba-lance, dou-ble, tre-ble, tri-ple, &c. Other note-worthy Latin words are dimidium, males, pars, semi, vices; whence demi-, mal-treat, mau gre, pen-insula, semi-circle, vice-admiral, vis-count.

γ. The prefix a- in a-tas is the French interjection ad.

The prefix for- in for-fait and for-close (usually fore-close), is also French; and due to Lat. foris, out of doors.

The Latin ille accounts for Spanish el, whence E. al-ligator; for French le, whence E. l-ower or l-oover; and for Portuguese o, as in O-porto, whence E. port (4).

CLASS III. Prefixes of Greek origin, in Greek spelling. Forms not followed by a hyphen can also be used as separate words.

ἀμφί (amphi-); ἀν-, ἀ-, negative prefix (an-odyne, a-byss, am-brosial); ἀνά (ana-, an-erism); ἀντί (anti-, ant-agonist), ἀπό (apo-, aph-eresis); κατά (cata-, cath-olic); διά (dia-, di-eresis, dia-con, de-vil); δύσ- (dys-); ἐκ (ec-logue, el-lipse, ex-odus); ἐν (en-ergy, em-piric); ἐνδο- (endo-); ἐπι (epi-, eph-emer, ep-och); ἐξω, from εἶς (eso-teric); εὐ- (eu-, ev-angelist); ἕνω (exo-); ὑπέρ (hyper-); ὑπό (hypo-, hyp-er); μέτα (meta-, meth-od, met-eor); πάλιν (palin-drome, palin-psest); παρά (para-, par-ody, pa-ly); περί (peri-); πρό (pro-phet); πρὸς (pros-); σύν (syn-, sy-stem, syl-logism, sym-metry).

β. As in Latin numerals are peculiarly liable to sink into apparent prefixes; hence di-cotyledon, from dis, twice; tri-gonometry, tetra-hedron, pentagon, hexagon, &c. Other note-worthy Greek words are ἀρχι-, chief (archi-pelago, arche-type, arch-bishop); αὐτός, self (auto-graph, auth-entic, eff-endi); ἡμι-, half (hemi-); ἕτερος, other (hetero-); ὅλος, entire (holo-); ὁμός, same (homo-); μόνος, single (mono-); πᾶν, all (pan-); πολλά, much, many (poly-); πρῶτος, first (proto-).

CLASS IV. Of prefixes which cannot be included in any of the preceding classes, the most important is the Arabic definite article al, very common in Spanish, and appearing in English in nine words beginning with al; also in a-pricot, ar-tichoke, as-sagay, al-izir, l-ute.

MUTUAL RELATION OF PREFIXES.

The prefixes in Classes i, ii, and iii above are not all independent of each other, many of those in one class being cognate with those in another. Thus the A. S. æt is the same word with the Latin ad. To shew this more clearly, the conjectural Aryan forms are subjoined, each primitive form being numbered. The numbers in the following list supply an index to the Indo-European Aryan forms below.

CLASS I. ANGLO SAXON. Æfter, 7 β; at, 2; and (cf. Du. ent), 6; be, bi, 8; for, 13 α; fore, 13 α; forð, 13 β; from, 13 γ; in, 5 β; ne, n, 12 (and see 4); of, 10 α; ofer, 10 β; on, 5 α; to, 11; un- (before adjs.), 4 (and see 12); un- (verbal), 6; under, 3, 5 γ; up, 10 α; ut, 9.

CLASS II. LATIN. A, ab, 7 α; abs, 7 β; ad, 2; amb, 8; ante, 6; bis, 11; dis, 11; ex, e, extra, 1; in, 5 β; in- (negative), 4; ind, 5 β; inter, intra, 5 γ; ne, n, 12; ob, 7 γ; per, 13 α; peri, 13 β; pra, præter, 13 γ; pro, 13 γ; sub, sub-, subter, 10 α; super, supra, 10 β.

CLASS III. GREEK. ἄμφι, 8; ἀν-, ἀ- (negative), 4 (and see 12); ἀνά, 5 α; ἀντί, 6; ἀπό, 7 α; ἐκ, dis, di, 11; ἐν, ἐνδο-, 5 β; ἐπι, εἶς, 1; ἐξω, 7 γ; κατά, 13 α; περί, 13 β; πρό, 13 γ; πρὸς, 13 β; ὑπό, 10 α; ὑπέρ, 10 β.

[N.B. The alphabetical arrangement here follows that of the Sanskrit, not of the Roman alphabet.]

1. AK, AKS, out. Fick, i. 475. Gk. ἐκ, ἐξ; L. ex, ex, e; Lithuan. isz; Russ. iz, iza, out. Hence Gk. ἐξω, outside; L. extra (for extera), abl. fem. of the comparative form ex-ter-us.

2. AD? Fick, i. 484. Lat. ad; Goth. at; A. S. æt. (The Skt. adhi is not an equivalent form; but perhaps it can be referred to the same pronominal base.)

3. ADHAS! Cf. Skt. adhas, adv., underneath; Fick, iii. 38. ADHARA (comparative); Skt. adhara, lower; L. inferus; Goth. undar; A. S. under. [But Curtius, i. 384, connects A. S. under with Lat. inter. See no. 5.]

4. AN, negative prefix; Fick, i. 12. Skt. an- (before a vowel), a- (before a consonant); Gk. ἀν-, ἀ-; L. in-; A. S. un-, before adjectives and substantives. [N.B. Perhaps identical with NA, from an orig. form ANA; so Curtius. See no. 12 below.]

5. ANA. (Apparently a pronominal stem of the third person; cf. Skt. ana, this); Fick, i. 14.

(α) ANA; Zend ana, Gk. ἀνά, Goth. ana, A. S. on.

(β) ANI (locative); Gk. ἐπι, ἐν; Lat. in; Goth. in; A. S. in. Hence Gk. ὑπέρ; O. Lat. in-do.

(γ) ANTAR (comparative); Skt. antar; L. inter, whence intra (= intara), intro (= intero). [To which Curtius allies A. S. under; but see no. 3.]

6. ANTA, sb., an end; Skt. anta, A. S. enda. Fick, i. 15.

ANTI (locative); Vedic anti; Gk. ἀντί; Goth. and; A. S. and, Du. and G. ant; also A. S. un, as a verbal prefix. The Lat. ante (perhaps for anted), appears to be an ablative form.

7. ✓ API to obtain? Fick, i. 17. Hence was formed a sb., of which various cases remain in the form of prepositions.

(α) APA (instrumental); Skt. apa, away; Gk. ἀπό; Lat. ab, a; Goth. af.

(β) APAS (genitive); Gk. ἀπ; Lat. abs.

(γ) API (locative); Skt. api; Gk. ἐπι; Lat. ob.

(δ) APATARA (comparative); Zend apatara; Gk. ἀπάρτα; Goth. aftra; A. S. after.

8. ABHA, both; Fick, i. 18. Skt. ubha, both; Gk. ἀμφω, Lat. ambo, Goth. bai, A. S. bd. Hence ABHI, AMBHI, on both sides, around, on; Skt. abhi, towards; Gk. ἀμφί, Lat. ambi, A. S. be.

9. UD, up, out; Skt. ud, Goth. ut, A. S. ut. Hence UD-TARA (comparative); Gk. ὑπέρτα, A. S. utor, utor.

10. UPA, close to, (just) over, (just) under.

(α) Skt. upa, near, under; Gk. ὑπό, under; Lat. sub (for sup); with a comparative form sub-ter; also sub- (for sub-). Fick, i. 31; iii. 511. Allied to these are a double set of Tent. forms, viz. Goth. uþ, A. S. up (G. anf), in which the original p of the base is preserved; also Goth. uf, A. S. of, in which the regular sound-shifting has taken place, together with a differentiation in the sense, the orig. sense being, however, preserved in the comparative form below.

(β) UPARA (comparative); Vedic upara, Lat. superus. Hence UPARI (locative); Skt. upari, over; Gk. ὑπέρ; Lat. super, ablative fem. supra (for superā); Goth. ufar, A. S. ofer.

11. DWA, two; Skt. dva, Gk. δύο, Lat. duo, A. S. twé; Fick, i. 625. Hence Gk. διά, through; dis, di-, twice; Lat. bis (for duis), bi-, double; Lat. dis (for duis), in twain, asunder; A. S. tw, asunder.

12. NA, negative particle; Fick, i. 122. Skt. na, not; Gk. μη; Lat. ne, n; A. S. ne, n. See no. 4 (above).

13. ✓ PAR, to fare, go through; Skt. pari, to bring over; Gk. πέραν, a way through; Lat. ex-per-ior, A. S. faran. Fick, i. 662, iii. 175.

(α) PARA, onward, forward, from. Skt. parā, away; Gk. πέραν, from; Lat. par; Goth. fra, fair; A. S. for. Here belong also Goth. fara, A. S. fore.

(β) PARI, around; Skt. pari, Gk. περί.

(γ) PRA, before; Skt. pra, Gk. πρό, Lat. prō. Hence Lat. ablative prō; locative pra, with comparative pra-ter. Also Skt. param, beyond, Goth. fram, A. S. from. Here also belong Lat. pri-or, pri-ane, pri-ane, A. S. forma.

(δ) PRA-TI, towards; Skt. prati, towards; Gk. πρός; O. Lat. port- (whence Lat. par, pol, po); A. S. forð.

II. SUFFIXES.

The number of suffixes in modern English is so great, and the forms of several, especially in words derived through the French from Latin, are so variable that an attempt to exhibit them all would tend to confusion. The best account of their origin is to be found in Schleicher, Compendium der Vergleichenden Grammatik der Indogermanischen Sprachen. An account of Anglo-Saxon suffixes is given at p. 119 of March, Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Language. Lists of Anglo-Saxon words, arranged according to their suffixes, are given in Loth, Etymologische Angelsächsisch-englische Grammatik, Elberfeld, 1870. The best simple account of English suffixes in general is that given in Morris, Historical Outlines of English Accidence, pp. 212-221, 229-242; to which the reader is particularly referred. See also Koch, Historische Grammatik der Englischen Sprache, vol. iii. pt. 1, pp. 29-76. Schleicher has clearly established the fact that the Aryan languages abound in suffixes, each of which was originally intended slightly to modify the meaning of the root to which it was added, so as to express the radical idea in a new relation. The force of many of these must, even at an early period, have been slight, and in many instances it is difficult to trace it; but in some instances it is still clear, and the form of the suffix is then of great service. The difference between lov-ar, lov-ed, and lov-ing is well marked, and readily understood. One of the most remarkable points is that most Aryan languages delighted in adding suffix to suffix, so that words are not uncommon in which two or more suffixes occur, each repeating, it may be, the sense of that which preceded it. Double diminutives, such as parti-cle, i. e. a little little part, are sufficiently common. The Lat. superl. suffix -is-si-mus (Aryan -yans-ta-ma) is a simple example of the use of a treble suffix, which really expresses no more than is expressed by -mus alone in the word pri-mus. The principal Aryan suffixes, as given by Schleicher, are these: -a, -u, -ya, -wa, -ma, -ra (later form -ia), -an, -ana, -na, -ni, -nu, -ta, -tar or -tra, -ti, -tu, -dhi, -ant or -at, -as, -ha. But these can be readily compounded, so as to form new suffixes; so that from -ma-na was formed -man (as in E. no-min-al), and from -ma-na-ta or -man-ta was formed -manta (as in E. argu-ment). Besides these, we must notice the comparative suffix -yans, occurring in various degraded shapes; hence the Gk. μείζων, greater, put for μείζων, the z being dropped. This suffix usually occurs in combination, as in -yans-ta, Gk. κέρω, superl. suffix; -yans-ta-ma, Lat. ris-si-mus (for -is-si-mus *), already noted. The combinations -ta-ra,

* Schleicher writes -ja for -ya, -ps for -wa, in the usual German fashion.

-ta-ta occur in the Gk. κέρω, κέρω, the usual suffixes of the comparative and superlative degrees.

One common error with regard to suffixes should be guarded against, viz. that of mis-dividing a word so as to give the suffix a false shape. This is extremely common in such words as logi-c, civi-c, belli-c-ose, where the suffix is commonly spoken of as being -ic or -ice-oss. This error occurs, for instance, in the elaborate book on English Affixes by S. S. Haldemann, published at Philadelphia in 1865; a work which is of considerable use as containing a very full account, with numerous examples, of suffixes and prefixes. But the author does not seem really to have understood the matter, and indulges in some of the most extraordinary freaks, actually deriving must from 'Welsh mus (from mus, that is forward, and us, that is impulsive), that starts out, an effluvia;' p. 74. But the truth is that civi-c (Lat. civicus) is derived from Lat. civis, crude form of civis, a citizen, with the suffix -cus (Aryan -KA); and logi-c is from Gk. λογικός, from λογι-, put for λόγος, crude form of λόγος, a discourse, with the suffix -nos (Aryan -KA) as before. Compare Lat. civi-tas, Gk. λογο-μαχία. Belli-c-ose, Lat. bellicosus, is from Lat. bell-, put for bell-, crude form of bellum, war, with suffix -e-oss (Aryan -ka-want-a, altered to -ka-want-a; Schleicher, § 218). Of course, words in -ic are so numerous that -ic has come to be regarded as a suffix at the present day, so that we do not hesitate to form Volta-ic as an adjective of Volta; but this is English misuse, not Latin etymology. Moreover, since both -i- and -ta are Aryan suffixes, such a suffix as -i-cos, -i-cus, is possible both in Greek and Latin; but it does not occur in the particular words above cited, and we must be careful to distinguish between a suffixed vowel and an essential part of a stem, if we desire to understand the matter clearly.

One more word of warning may perhaps suffice. If we wish to understand a suffix, we must employ comparative philology, and not consider English as an absolutely isolated language, with laws different from those of other languages of the Aryan family. Thus the -th in tru-th is the -θ of A. S. trōth-θ, gen. case trōth-θe, fem. sb. This suffix answers to that seen in Goth. gabaur-ths, birth, gen. case gabaur-thais, fem. sb., belonging to the -i- stem declension of Gothic strong substantives. The true suffix is therefore to be expressed as Goth. -thi, cognate with Aryan -ti, so extremely common in Latin; cf. do-ti, dowry, men-ti, mind, mor-ti, death, mes-si (= met-ti), harvest, that which is mown. Hence, when Horne Tooke gave his famous etymology of truth as being 'that which a man troueth,' he did in reality suggest that the -ti in Lat. mor-ti is identical with the -i in mor-ti-ur or in ama-t; in other words, it was a mere whim.

III. LIST OF ARYAN ROOTS.

The following is a brief list of the principal Aryan roots occurring in English. A few, of which examples are either very scanty or very doubtful, are not noticed. Many of the roots here given are of considerable importance, and can be abundantly illustrated. I have added, at the end of the brief account of each root, several miscellaneous examples of derivatives; but these lists are by no means exhaustive, nor are they arranged in any very definite order beyond the separation into groups of the words of Greek, Latin, and Teutonic origin.

The references 'F.', 'C.', and 'V.' given under each root, are, respectively, to 'Fick, Vergleichendes Wörterbuch der Indogermanischen Sprachen, 3rd ed., Göttingen, 1874; to 'Curtius, Greek Etymology, English edition, translated by Wilkins and England;' and to 'Vanček, Griechisch-Lateinisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch, Leipzig, 1877.' These books have been chosen as giving the results of modern comparative philology in a convenient and accessible form. It is to be remembered that the honour of achieving such results is rather due, in many instances, to their predecessors, and especially, in the field of Teutonic philology, to Jacob Grimm.

When I cite these authorities, I do not mean that they all agree in giving the same result as that which I here present. In a great many cases they do so, and the result may then be considered as certain, or, at any rate, as universally admitted by all students who adopt the usual method of comparing the various languages of the Aryan or 'Indo-Germanic' family of languages. In other cases, one of the three differs from the views expressed by the other two; and I have then adopted the view which seemed to me most reasonable. Throughout, I have tried to compile a good practical list, though I am well aware that a few roots have been included of rather a speculative character, and of which the proofs are not so sure as might be wished.

The account of each root is, in every case, very brief, and mentions only a few characteristic words. Further information may be obtained in the authorities cited. The English examples are fully accounted for in the present work. Thus the reader who is curious to know how the word slaw is connected with $\sqrt{\text{KRU}}$, to bear, has only to look out that word, and he will find the solution given. Many such examples are very curious, and afford good exercise in philology.

Instead of giving Grimm's law in the usual form, I have adopted Fick's modification of it, as being much simpler. It saves a great deal of trouble to leave out of consideration the Old High-German forms, and to use the word 'Teutonic' as inclusive of everything but High-German (commonly called German), thus reducing the number of varying forms, as due to 'sound-shifting' of the consonants, from three to two. As far as English philology is concerned, the 'German' forms are of comparatively small consequence; and, by not attempting to account for them exactly, we are usually able, with sufficient accuracy, to bring the various spellings of a word under one 'Teutonic' form, whether the language be Gothic, Anglo-Saxon, Frisian, Old-Saxon, Low German (proper), Icelandic, Swedish, or Danish. This being premised, I proceed to give a short and easy method for the conversion of 'Aryan,' or, as they might be called, 'classical' roots into Teutonic roots; it being understood that the 'classical' forms, Greek, Latin, and Sanskrit, differ but slightly from the Aryan forms, though each language has ways of its own of representing certain original sounds. (Some of these modifications are noticed below.)

Let the student learn by heart (it is easy enough) the following scheme.

Gutturals: viz. g, k, kh, g.

Dentals: viz. d, t, th, d.

Labials: viz. b, p, ph, b.

This is absolutely all that need be remembered; it only remains to explain what the scheme means.

The repetition of g, d, b, is intentional, and essential to keeping everything in due order. The scheme is to be read with the following meaning. When guttural letters occur (especially at the beginning of a word, for in other positions the rule is more liable to exception), an Aryan g answers to Teutonic (English) k; an Aryan d answers to Teutonic t; and an Aryan b answers to Teutonic p.

When dental letters occur, Aryan d becomes Teutonic t; Aryan t becomes Teutonic th; Aryan th becomes Teutonic d.

When labial letters occur, Aryan b becomes Teutonic p [it is doubtful whether there is any real example of this particular change]; an Aryan p becomes Teutonic b; and an Aryan ph becomes Teutonic b. Recurring to the scheme, we see that each 'Aryan' letter passes into the one following it in the scheme, thereby becoming 'Teutonic.' Once more, learn by heart; g, k, kh, g; d, t, th, d; and b, p, ph, b. Begin each set, respectively, with g for guttural, d for dental, and b for labial [of which word b is the middle consonant]. This is a very easy method, and can be put into practice at an instant's notice, without even any thought as to what the powers of the letters are.

In practice, inevitable modifications take place, the principal ones being these. (I do not give them all.)

ARYAN. For k, Latin writes c (but the c is hard, like k).

For th (i. e. for th as used in the above scheme), Sanskrit has gh; Greek has χ; Latin has h initially (which h sometimes disappears altogether), or sometimes f.

For th (as in the scheme), Sanskrit has th; Greek has θ; Latin has f.

For ph (in the scheme), Sanskrit has bh; Greek has φ; Latin has f. Note particularly the threefold use of the troublesome Latin f; it may mean either th, or th, or ph.

TEUTONIC. For k, Anglo-Saxon writes c (but k is hard, like k). For th, Teutonic languages write A. For th, Anglo-Saxon has the symbol þ or ð, used convertibly in the MSS. For ph, Teutonic languages write f.

Now learn the following selected examples, which include nearly all that is practically wanted.

Gutturals (g, k, kh, g). Latin genus = E. kin, from $\sqrt{\text{GAN}}$;

Lat. cor (stem cord-) = Gk. καρδία = E. heart, from $\sqrt{\text{KARD}}$; Lat. fel = Gk. χολή = E. gall, from $\sqrt{\text{GHAR}}$, to be yellow.

Dentals. Lat. duo = E. two; Lat. tres = E. three; Lat. facere is allied to Gk. τίθημι, I place = E. do (to put), from $\sqrt{\text{DHA}}$.

Labials. Lat. pes (stem ped-) = Gk. πῶς (stem web-) = E. foot, from $\sqrt{\text{PAD}}$; Lat. ferre = Gk. φέρω = E. bear.

Conversely, to reduce Teutonic forms to Aryan, was the same scheme, working backwards from the end to the beginning; thus E. g = Aryan h; E. th (A) = Aryan t; and E. b = Aryan p.

When so much as this has been acquired, it is easy to proceed to find the Old High German forms, if wanted; these require a second shifting, and that is all. Thus Aryan g = E. h = G. h; or, to take an example, Lat. genua = E. kin = O. High G. chunni. But the changes into High German are found, in practice, to be much less regular, and the phenomena strongly support the theory that Old High German is merely a later development of the earliest forms of Low German. It is a great objection to the term 'Indo-Germanic' that the language specifically called 'German' is, philologically, the very worst representative of the Teutonic languages that could possibly have been chosen. The best representative is the Gothic, after which come Anglo-Saxon and Icelandic.

This brief sketch is all that can here be given; but in order fully to understand the examples below, the peculiarities of Sanskrit, Greek, Latin, Lithuanian, Russian, Gothic, &c., must be studied and allowed for. For example, when two aspirated letters appear in the same root, both aspirations disappear in Sanskrit, so that the $\sqrt{\text{DHIGH}}$ appears as dhik. Greek admits one aspirate, but not two; 'every school-boy knows' that the genitive of παῖς is πατρός, and that πατρός cannot stand. And even when all the consonants are understood, the vowels have to be mastered before the truth can be fully perceived. Thus the E. word home is A. S. hām. But in this word hām, the d really stands for ai, from original i; and (the m being a mere suffix) the form of the root is not KA, but KI. This is one of the things which no school-boy knows, nor will ever know during the present century.

The roots are arranged according to the alphabetical order of the Sanskrit alphabet, by help of which we obtain an Aryan alphabet, as follows: a, i, u, ai, au; k, g, gh; t, d, dh, n; p, b, bh, m; y, r, l, w; s. If this arrangement causes any trouble in finding a root, the reader has only to consult the index appended to the list, which is arranged in the usual English order. Forms in thick type, as AK, are Aryan; forms in parenthesis, as AH, are Teutonic.

1. $\sqrt{\text{AK}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{AH}}$), to pierce, to be sharp, to be quick. Skt. ap, to pervade, attain (a secondary sense); asva, a (swift) horse; Gk. ἀσπός, pointed, ἀσπός, whet-stone, ἀσπός, javelin, ἀσπός, edge, ἀσπός, a horse; Lat. as-us, needle, as-us, keen, sharp, as-us, to sharpen, as-us, edge, as-us, a horse; Goth. ah-ans, chaff (ear of corn), A. S. eg, edge. F. ii. 475; C. i. 161, li. 52; V. 4. Ex. asocia, asna, asocis, acrobot, hippopotamus; and, acule, agrus, aglet, aspinus, asper; edge, egg (s), ear (s), awl.

2. $\sqrt{\text{AK}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{AH}}$), to see. (Gk. or-, for as-) Skt. ak-ak, eye, ak-ak, to see; Gk. ἀσπός, I shall see, ak-ak, sight, ἀσπός, eye; Lat. as-us, eye; Rum. ak-ak, eye; Goth. aug-a, eye. F. i. 473; C. ii. 62; V. 8. Ex. optica, ophthalmist, antelope, canopy; ocular; eye.

3. $\sqrt{\text{AK}}$, to be dark. Gk. ἀσπός, darkness; Lith. ak-ak, blind; Lat. aspidus, dark-coloured. Ex. aspidus, angle.

4. $\sqrt{\text{AK}}$ or $\sqrt{\text{ANK}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{AH}}$ or $\sqrt{\text{ANG}}$), to bend. Skt. ak-ak, to bend, curve; Gk. ἀσπός, ak-ak, a bend; Lat. ans-us, curved, ang-us, an angle; A. S. ang-el, a hook. F. i. 473; C. i. 160; V. 2. Ex. anchor, angle (1); ankle, angle (2), ankward.

5. $\sqrt{\text{AG}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{AK}}$), to drive, urge, conduct. Skt. aj, to drive; Gk. ἀσπός; Lat. ag-ere; Icel. ak-a (pt. t. ak), to drive. F. i. 478; C. i. 208; V. 14. Ex. agony, anion; agist, amis, agile; acre, acorn, ache, acid.

6. $\sqrt{\text{AGH}}$, to say, speak. Skt. ak, to speak; Lat. ak-ak, I say, ak-ak-us, a saying. F. i. 481; V. 20. Ex. adage, negation.

7. $\sqrt{\text{AGH}}$, to be in want. Gk. ἀσπός, poor, needy; Lat. ag-ere, to be in want. F. i. 482; C. i. 224; V. 21. Ex. indigent.

8. $\sqrt{\text{AGH}}$ or $\sqrt{\text{ANGH}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{AG}}$ or $\sqrt{\text{ANG}}$), to choke, strangle, compress, afflict, frighten. Skt. ak-ak-us, pain, ak-ak, a snake, ak-ak-us, sin; Gk. ἀσπός, to strangle, ak-ak-us, I am vexed, ak-ak-us, anguish; Lat. ang-ere, to choke, ang-us, quinsy, ans-us, distressed, ang-illa, eel; Goth. ag-ak, fright, awe. F. i. 481; C. i. 224; V. 22. Ex. quinsy (= quinsy-ans-y); anger, anguish, anxious; ail, ans, ail, ugly.

9. $\sqrt{\text{AD}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{AT}}$), to eat. Skt. ad, to eat; Gk. ak-ak; Lat. ad-ere; Goth. ak-ak, A. S. ak-ak, to eat. F. i. 483; C. i. 206; V. 24. Ex. anodyne; edible; eat, fat, art; perhaps dental and tooth.

10. $\sqrt{\text{AD}}$, to smell. Gk. ak-ak (= ak-ak-us), to smell, pt. t. ak-ak-us; Lat. ad-ere, odour, ad-ere (for ad-ere), to smell. F. i. 484; C. i. 202; V. 26. Ex. osose; odour, olfactory, redolent.

11. \sqrt{AN} , to breathe. Skt. an, to breathe, Goth. an-anas, to breathe out or expire; Gk. ánēmos, wind; Lat. an-imus, spirit. F. i. 485; C. i. 380; V. 28. Ex. anemose; animal, animosity, &c. ¶ According to Fick, oral belongs here; but Curtius refers it to AS, to be; which see.

12. Base ANA, this, that; demonstrative pronoun. Skt. ana, this; Lat. ille, O. Lat. idius (put for omn-ius); Lat. ultra, beyond. ¶ Here belong Gk. ánē, ánē, Lat. in; see the list of Prefixes. Hence the comp. form Goth. an-thar, other, second, A. S. áther. Ex. ulterior, outrage, other.

¶ For \sqrt{ANK} and \sqrt{ANGH} , see nos. 4 and 8.

13. \sqrt{ANG} , to anoint, smear. Skt. anj, to anoint; Lat. unguere, to anoint. F. i. 479; C. ii. 306; V. 20. Ex. unguent, anoint, ointment.

14. \sqrt{AP} , to seize, attain, bind; to work. Skt. áp, to attain, áp-ta, fit, áp-as, work; Gk. áp-rav, to bind; Lat. áp-ere, to join together, áp-isci, to seize, get, áp-tus, fit; áp-us, work, áp-es, wealth, áp-tare, to wish (try to get), áp-timus, best. F. i. 480; V. 32. Ex. após; apt, adapt, adapt, adopt, operate, opinion, optative, opulent, copy, copious, optimist; (probably) if.

15. \sqrt{AM} , to take. Lat. em-ere, to take, buy; Lith. im-ti, to take; Russ. im-ite, to have. Ex. exempt, redem, example, premium, prompt, vantage.

16. \sqrt{AB} , sometimes \sqrt{AL} , to raise, move, go. Skt. ri, to go, move; Gk. áp-χoμα, I go, áp-θωρ, I went, áp-εμυ, I excite, stir up, áp-εμ, a bird; Lat. al-acer, quick, ar-iri, to arise, ad-ol-escere, to grow up, al-ere, to nourish, al-tus, raised, high, Goth. al-an, to nourish, ri-nas, to run, Icel. er-a, vigorous; &c. F. i. 493; C. i. 432; V. 41. Ex. ornithology, prosylta, metal; aliment, allegro, adult, origin, order, abortion, altar; arrest (1), elbow, run, old, &c.; also rash (1).

17. \sqrt{AB} , to drive, to row; probably the same as the root above. Skt. ri, to go, move, ar-itra, a rudder; Gk. áp-ίρα, to row, áp-εμ, an oar; Lith. ir-ti, to row; Lat. r-emus, an oar; A. S. ár, an oar; ró-wan, to row. F. i. 495; C. i. 437; V. 49. Ex. trirems; oar, row (2), rudder.

18. \sqrt{AB} , to plough. Gk. áp-είω, Lat. ar-ere, Goth. ar-jan, A. S. ar-ian, to plough. F. i. 496; C. i. 436; V. 49. Ex. arable; ear (3).

19. \sqrt{AB} , to gain, acquire, fit; the same as \sqrt{BA} , to fit, which see. Skt. ri, to gain, attain, ar-a, spoke of a wheel, Gk. áp-ερος, fitted, áp-θωρ, joint, limb, áp-θμός, reckoning, series, number, áp-θός, joint, shoulder, áp-ερός, excellence, Lat. ar-mus, ar-tus, a limb, ar-a, skill, Goth. ar-m, an arm, A. S. ar-m, arm. F. i. 493; C. i. 433; V. 46. Ex. aristocracy, harmony, arithmetic; arms, art; arm (1).

20. \sqrt{ARK} , to protect, keep safe. Gk. áp-εω, to keep off, suffice, áp-ε, defence; Lat. arceus, to keep, arca, a box. F. i. 22; V. 14. Ex. ark.

21. \sqrt{ARK} , to shine. Skt. arsh, to shine, arsh-a, sun-beam; Gk. áp-εω, amber, shining metal. F. i. 22; C. i. 168. Ex. arctic, electric.

22. \sqrt{ARG} , to shine. Cf. no. 21. Skt. arj-ama, white, arj, to shine; Gk. áp-υπος, silver; Lat. arg-urea, to make clear, arg-illa, white clay, arg-entum, silver. F. i. 23; C. i. 211; V. 57. Ex. argent, argillaceous, argus.

23. \sqrt{ARS} , to flow, glide swiftly. Extension of \sqrt{AR} , to move; no. 16. Skt. ris, to flow; Lat. err-or (for ers-or *), a wandering; A. S. rás, swift flow. F. i. 499; V. 63. Ex. error; race (1).

24. \sqrt{AL} , for original \sqrt{AB} , to burn. A. S. al-an, to burn, Icel. al-dr, fire; cf. Skt. ar-úna, tawny. F. i. 500. Ex. annual. (Perhaps area (?), arena, arid, ardent belong to \sqrt{AB} , to burn, parch; V. 53.)

¶ For another \sqrt{AL} , see no. 16.

25. \sqrt{AW} , to be pleased, be satisfied. Skt. av, to please, satisfy, Vedic av, to be pleased; Gk. αἰσάρομαι (= af-σάρομαι), I perceive; Lat. av-ere, to desire, av-arus, greedy, av-ia, a sheep (orig. pet animal, tame), av-ria, ear, av-dire, to hear, perceive; Goth. av-i, sheep, ewe, av-no, ear. F. i. 501; C. i. 482, 487; V. 67. Ex. asthete; audience, avarice, av-uncle; ear (1), ewe.

26. \sqrt{AW} , to blow; the same as \sqrt{WA} , to blow; see no. 330. Gk. áp-θω (for áp-θω), air, áp-θω, I blow, Lat. av-era, breeze, av-er, air, av-is, a bird. C. i. 483; V. 69. Ex. air, aviary, soar.

27. \sqrt{AS} , to breathe, live, exist, be. Skt. as-a, vital breath, as, to exist, be; Gk. áp-θω, I am; Lat. s-um, I am, as-ia, to be; ab-s-ens, being away, præ-s-ens, being present, s-ens, guilty; A. S. is, is, s-ō, being, i. e. true, s-yn, sin; &c. F. i. 504; C. i. 468; V. 75. ¶ Probably Lat. is, Skt. áya, the month, belongs here (Curtius).

Ex. intire; palaeontology, authentic, av- (prefix); absent, present, essence, entity; am, ar, is, are, sooth, is; perhaps oral, &c.

28. \sqrt{AS} , to throw, leave (or reject). Skt. as, to throw, leave; Gk. áp-είω, bone (rejected), áp-είω, shell, oyster; Lat. os, bone. F. i. 503; C. i. 258; V. 76. Ex. oyster, osteous, osprey.

29. Pron. base I, indicating the 3rd person; orig. demonstrative. Lat. i-a, he; Skt. i-dam, this. Hence AINA, one. O. Lat. oino, Lat. unus, Goth. ains, A. S. án, one; &c. F. i. 505; V. 77. Ex. unily, onion; one, only, otone.

30. \sqrt{I} , to go. Skt. i, to go; Gk. áp-μ, I go, áp-έω, flux of time, time, age; Lat. i-ri, to go, av-vum, time; Goth. i-dája, A. S. av-da, I went. F. i. 506; C. i. 500; V. 79. Ex. isthmus; ambient, circum, commence, count (1), avis, eyre, instial, issue, itinerant, obit, pellitory (1), perish, prætor, præterit, proem, sedition, sudden; &c.

31. \sqrt{IK} (= \sqrt{IG}), to possess, own. Skt. ig, Goth. oigan, to possess. F. i. 507. Ex. own, own (1), own (2).

32. \sqrt{ID} (= \sqrt{IT}), to swell. Gk. áp-είω, to swell; Lat. av-midus, swollen; Russ. iad-ro, a kernel, bullet; A. S. ái-a, oats. F. i. 507; V. 84. Ex. oats.

33. \sqrt{IDH} (= \sqrt{ID}), to kindle. Skt. idh, to kindle; Gk. áp-είω, to burn, áp-θω, upper air; Lat. ad-es, orig. a hearth, av-tus, summer; A. S. ád, funeral pile, ád-d, inflammation, disease. Ex. either; edify, estuary; oast-house.

34. \sqrt{IS} , to glide, move swiftly. Skt. is, to speed; Gk. is-ia, an arrow; Icel. is-a, to speed. F. i. 509; V. 87. Ex. ice; perhaps is.

35. \sqrt{IS} , to be vigorous. Skt. is-iras, vigorous; Gk. is-éps, vigorous, holy. F. i. 509; C. i. 499; V. 87. Ex. isurarchy.

36. \sqrt{IS} , to seek, wish for. Skt. is, to wish, is, to search; Gk. is-éps, wish; Lat. av-ismare, to value; Russ. is-kate, to seek; A. S. is-cian, to ask. F. i. 508; C. i. 500; V. 88. Ex. aim, astem; ask.

¶ \sqrt{UG} , (1) to be wet, (2) to be strong; see nos. 336, 337.

¶ \sqrt{UD} , to wet; see no. 339.

37. \sqrt{UL} , to howl. Skt. ul-úka, an owl; Gk. úl-áw, I howl; Lat. ul-ul-ere, to howl; A. S. úl-e, an owl. F. i. 511; C. i. 463; V. 93. Ex. howl; owl.

38. \sqrt{US} , to burn; see also no. 364. Skt. us, to burn; Gk. us-er, to singe, av-er, to kindle, av-er, sun; Lat. av-ere (pt. t. av-er), to burn, av-ora, east, av-um, gold. F. i. 512; C. i. 496; V. 945. Ex. aphelion, heliocal; curvata, austral, combustion; east, East.

39. Base KA (= HWA), interrogative pronoun. Skt. ka-s, ka-d, who, what; Gk. ús (= ús), how; Lat. qui, quæ, quod; A. S. hwá, who, who. Ex. quota, quotient; who, what, when, whence, whether, whither, where, why, how.

40. \sqrt{KA} , also \sqrt{KI} (= \sqrt{HI}), to sharpen. See no. 70. Skt. go, to sharpen, gá-na, a whetstone; Gk. ús-vo, a cone; Lat. av-nus, a wedge. F. i. 543; C. i. 195; V. 97. Ex. cone, conopy; coin, voign.

41. \sqrt{KAK} (= \sqrt{HAH}), to laugh, cackle, make a noise, quack (onomatopoeitic). Skt. kak, kak, to laugh; Gk. κᾶκ-έω, I laugh, κᾶκ-ιννα, to laugh; G. κᾶκ-er, κᾶκ-er, a jack-daw; E. cack-le, ha! ha! F. i. 515; V. 100. Ex. heron; cackle, quack, prov. E. beighaw (a wood-pecker).

42. \sqrt{KAK} (= \sqrt{HAG}), to surround, gird. Skt. kak, to bind, kak-úka, a girdle, κᾶκ, to bind; Lat. av-g-ere, to surround, gird; A. S. hag-a, an enclosure, hedge. F. i. 515; V. 137. Ex. cincture; hag, hedge; perhaps cuisse (from Lat. cox-a, hip-joint). Cf. hook.

43. \sqrt{KAK} , or \sqrt{KANK} (= \sqrt{HAH} or \sqrt{HANG}), to hang, to waver. Skt. gank, to hesitate, be in doubt; Lat. av-ctari, to hesitate; Goth. hah-an, Icel. hang-a, to hang. F. i. 544; C. ii. 375. Ex. hang, hank, hanker.

Ex. tumid, tumult, prothuberance, total; thigh, thrive, thumb, tungsten; Dutch, Tombon.

¶ $\sqrt{\text{TUD}}$, to strike; put for $\sqrt{\text{STUD}}$, to strike; see no. 431.

142. $\sqrt{\text{TWAK}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{THWAH}}$), to dip, to wash. Skt. twak, to sprinkle (Vedic); Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, to moisten; Lat. twagere, to dip; Goth. twak-an, to wash. F. i. 606; C. i. 270; V. 319. Ex. twing, twint, twist (3); towel.

143. $\sqrt{\text{DA}}$, to give. Skt. dā, to give; Zend. dā, to give; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, I give, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, a gift, a dose; Lat. da-vo, to give, do-nare, a gift, do-vo, dowry. F. i. 607; C. i. 293; V. 321. ¶ The pt. t. of Lat. dare is dedi; hence verbs like con-dere (pt. t. con-didi) are to be considered as compounds of dare, but they seem to have taken up the sense of $\sqrt{\text{DEHA}}$, to place, put, on which account they are frequently referred to that root. The form shows that they should rather be referred hither; the other root being rightly represented in Latin only by facere and its compounds. Ex. dose; dote, donation, donor, dowry; also add, edition, perdition, render, tradition, treason, tractor, vand, betray, abscond, swance (1), swance (2), &c.

144. $\sqrt{\text{DA}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{TA}}$), to distribute, appoint; weaker form DI. Skt. dā, to cut off (pp. di-ta), dāy, to allot (Vedic); Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, I distribute, dai-vo, to divide; Icel. to-dya, to spread manure; A. S. di-ma, (set) time, di-d, (set) hour. F. i. 609, iii. 104; C. i. 285; V. 323. Ex. demon; time, tide, tid.

145. $\sqrt{\text{DA}}$, to know; whence $\sqrt{\text{DAK}}$, to teach, of which a weaker form is $\sqrt{\text{DIK}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{TIH}}$), to shew. Zend. dā, to know; Skt. dā, to shew; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, taught, knowing, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, to learn, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$ (for $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$), to teach, dai-vo, I shew; di-vo, justice; Lat. doc-ere, to teach, di-di-i, I learnt, in-dic-ere, to point out, dic-ere, to tell, say; Goth. ga-tai-an, to teach, tell; A. S. dic-an, a token, dic-an, to teach (abnormal forms, as if from $\sqrt{\text{DIK}}$); id-an, to point to, accuse, id-na, accusation, injury, vexation. F. i. 610; C. i. 165, 284; V. 327. Ex. didactic, syndic; docile, indicate, dedicate, index, condition, dictation, &c.; toban, teach, teem.

146. $\sqrt{\text{DA}}$, to bind. Skt. dā, to bind; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, to bind, dai-vo, fillet. F. i. 610, ii. 121; C. i. 289; V. 331. Ex. diadem; perhaps abdomen, q.v.

147. $\sqrt{\text{DAK}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{TAH, TANG}}$), to take, hold. Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, Ionic dai-vo, I take to myself, hold, receive, dai-vo, a sustaining beam, dox-ē, a receptacle, dai-voles, the finger (grasper), also the toe; Lat. dig-itus, the finger, den-ter, the right hand; A. S. id, toe, tang-a, tongue. F. i. 611; C. i. 164, 243; V. 334. Ex. doch (3), synochoe, dactyl, dote (2); digit, dexterous; toe, tongue, lang (1), ling (3).

148. $\sqrt{\text{DAK}}$, to honour, think good or fit. Skt. dāp, to honour, worship; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, it seems good or fit, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, opinion; Lat. de-ct, it is fit, dig-nus, worthy. F. i. 611; C. i. 165; V. 333. Ex. paradox, dogma; decent, decorum, dignity, dainty, condign, indignant, deign.

149. $\sqrt{\text{DAK}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{TAH}}$), to bite, to pain. Skt. dāp, also dap, to bite; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, to bite, dai-vo, a (bitter) tear; O. Lat. dae-rima, Lat. lac-rima, a tear; Goth. tag-r (for tah-r), a tear. F. i. 612; C. i. 163; V. 336. Ex. lachrymose (properly lacrimose); tear (2).

¶ For another $\sqrt{\text{DAK}}$, see no. 145.

150. $\sqrt{\text{DAM}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{TAM}}$), to tame. Skt. dām, to tame, dom-ere, subduing; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, to tame; Lat. dom-ere, to tame, dom-inus, lord; Goth. ga-tam-jan, to tame; A. S. tam, tame. F. i. 613; C. i. 287; V. 340. Ex. adamant, diamond; don (2), domina, dominion, dumpson, domino, dome, damelet; tame, also teem (2), q.v.

151. $\sqrt{\text{DAM}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{TAM}}$), to build. Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, to build, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, building, room; Skt. dām-pati, master of a house; Lat. dom-us, a house; Goth. tim-yan, tim-bryan, to build; A. S. tim-bor, timber. F. i. 613; C. i. 289; V. 343 (who connects domus with domans; see the preceding root). Ex. dama, major-domo, domicella, domestic; timber.

152. $\sqrt{\text{DAR}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{TAR}}$), to tear, rend, rive. Skt. dri, to burst open, tear asunder; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, to flay, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, skin; Zend. dar, to cut; Lat. dar-ere, to cut, hew, dar-ere, pain, dar-ere, to destroy; Russ. dra-te, to tear, dar-a, a rent; Goth. ga-tair-an, to break, destroy, A. S. ter-an, to tear. F. i. 615; C. i. 290; V. 343. Ex. epidermis, pachydermatous; doleful, dolor, condole, doleo; tear (1), tear (1), tear (4); perhaps till (1) (but prob. not true).

153. $\sqrt{\text{DAR}}$, to sleep. Skt. dri, to sleep; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, to fall asleep; Lat. dar-mire, to sleep; Russ. dra-mate, to sleep. F. i. 618; V. 348. Ex. dormitory, dormant, dormer-window.

154. $\sqrt{\text{DAR}}$, to do. Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, to do, effect, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, a deed, act; Lith. dar-yti, to do. F. i. 619; C. i. 294; V. 349. Ex. drama, draconic.

155. $\sqrt{\text{DAR}}$, also DAL (= $\sqrt{\text{TAL}}$), to see, consider, regard, purpose; hence $\sqrt{\text{DAR-K}}$, to see. Skt. dri, to consider, d-dar-a, regard, concern, care; hence drip, to see; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, cunning, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, I see; Lat. dar-ere, cunning; Goth. ga-tiā, suitable, convenient, A. S. til, profitable; O. H. G. zid (G. zist), aim, purpose; A. S. tal-s (order), number, narrative, tale; A. S. til-sen, to strive after, to till. F. i. 617; C. i. 294; V. 350. Ex. dragon; talē, till (1), till (2), until, teal.

156. $\sqrt{\text{DARBH}}$, to knit or bind together. Skt. dribh, to bind, string, darbh-a, matted grass; A. S. tarf, turf. F. iii. 119. Ex. tarf.

¶ For $\sqrt{\text{DAL}}$, see no. 155.

157. $\sqrt{\text{DI}}$, to hasten. Skt. dī, to fly; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, I flee away, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, I hasten; whence dai-vo, to pursue, dai-vo, a servant (orig. a runner). F. i. 622; C. i. 309; V. 362. Ex. deacon. Here also belongs dira, q.v.

¶ For another $\sqrt{\text{DI}}$, see no. 144.

¶ $\sqrt{\text{DIK}}$, to shew; see no. 145.

158. $\sqrt{\text{DIW}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{TIW}}$), to shine. Skt. dī, to shine, dī, to shine, to be glad, to play, dī-vo, God, dī-vo, brilliant, divine, dī-vo, an inhabitant of heaven; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$ (stem $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$), Zeus, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, heavenly, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, clear sky, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, at midday; Lat. di-vo, god, di-vo, divine, dī-vo, day, di-vo (gen. di-vo), Jupiter, Jove; A. S. Diw, god of war. F. i. 622; C. i. 293; V. 353. Ex. Zeus; Jupiter, deity, divine, dial, diary, meridian, journal, jobs; Tuesday.

159. $\sqrt{\text{DU}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{TU}}$), to work, toil. Skt. dū-vo (Vedic), a work done; Zend. du, to do [see the note upon Tool]; Goth. tan-yan, to do, tan-i, work; A. S. tan-ian, to prepare, to scourge; O. H. G. tan-yan, tan-yan, to make, to prepare. F. iii. 115. Ex. tan, tan, tan (2), tool.

160. $\sqrt{\text{DU}}$, to go, to enter; whence $\sqrt{\text{DUK}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{TUH}}$), to lead, conduct. Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, to enter; Lat. duc-ere, to lead; Goth. trub-an, A. S. tedhan, tedn, to draw, pull. F. i. 624, iii. 122; V. 364. Ex. duke, q.v.; tow (1), tie, tug. Also the latter syllable in traglo-dyte.

161. $\sqrt{\text{DRA}}$, to run; whence $\sqrt{\text{DRAM}}$, to run, and $\sqrt{\text{DRAP}}$, to run, flow; also $\sqrt{\text{TRAP}}$, to tramp, $\sqrt{\text{TRAD}}$, to tread. Skt. dar-a-dra, strolling about, dri, dra, to run, dra-m, to run; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, to run, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, I ran, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, a running; $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, a fugitive; E. tramp, trap (1), trip; A. S. trud-an, to tread. F. i. 618; C. i. 294; V. 346. Ex. dromedary; tramp, trap (1), trip, tramp; perhaps even drip, drop.

162. $\sqrt{\text{DHA}}$ (= $\sqrt{\text{DA}}$), to place, set, put, do. Skt. dā, to place, put; Gk. $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, I place, set, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, a thing proposed, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, a placing, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, law, $\tau\rho\lambda\chi\omega\sigma$, treasure; Lat. fa-ere, to do, fa-ere, to become, fa-cilis, easily done, fa-mulus, a household servant (cf. Skt. dāman, a house); A. S. dā-d, a deed, dā-m, judgement, law, dā-man, to judge, deem. F. i. 628; C. i. 315; V. 376. IV. DISTRIBUTION OF WORDS.

The following is an attempt to distribute the words in the English language so as to shew the sources to which they originally belonged. The words selected for the purpose are chiefly those given in large type in the dictionary, to the exclusion of mere derivatives of secondary importance. The English list appears short in proportion, chiefly because it contains a large number of these secondary words, such as helpful, happiness, heartly, and the like.

I have no doubt that, in some cases, the sources have been wrongly assigned, through ignorance. Some indulgence is requested, on account of the difficulty of making the attempt on a scale so comprehensive. The account of some words has been altered, by way of correction. The chief are: abyss, academy, accent, accept, accident, ace, advocate, acry, affray, agnail, agog, alabaster, albatross, alembic, allodial, ambushade, ambush, anagram, anatomy, apocalypse, apocope, arabesque, archetype, askance, asperity, assay, assort, awe, baffle, bagatelle, balloon, ballot, balm, barouche, basil, bauble (2), beadle, beefeater, beryl, bestead, billion, blame, blaspheme, bouquet, bourn (1), bowline, braze (2), broil (1), broil (2), buffoon, bunion, burly, butler, cape (2), caricature, cassia, catamaran, chap (2), chevill, chicory, chuntz, choir, chyme, cinchona, clog, closet, clove (1), cock (1), cockatrice, comb (2), compose, condense, contrive, cotton (1), counterpane (2), crochet, czar, dauphin, delta, depose, diaper, diatribe, dignify, dismay, dispose, dolphin, dome, drag, draggle, dragoon, dribble, drip, engross, entail, excuse, exhilarate, expose, fardel, felon, feud (2), feudal, fief, flatter, flout, fray (2), furnace, furbish, furl, gallias, garment, gloze, grail (2), grapple, grimalkin, groats, hale (2), haul, hobby (1), homicide, hubbub, hypotenuse, impose, ink, iota, irreconcilable, jade (2), laity, martingale, milch, mite (1), morris, orgies, overhaul, parricide (1), pate, penal, petroleum, petrify, piazza, plantain, poll, popinjay, prehistoric, punt (2), racoon, singe, &c.

HYBRID WORDS. English abounds in hybrid words, i. e. in words made up from two different languages; and the two languages compounding the word are often brought into strange conjunction, as in the case of interloper, which is half Latin and half Dutch. The complexity thus caused is such as almost to defy classification, and, as the words are accounted for in the body of the work, each in its due place, I content myself with giving a list of them, in alphabetical order.

abroach, abut, across, affray, apog, akimbo, allodial, allot, amaze, amiss, apace, apiece, appal, architrave, around, arouse, array, as-a-fectida, attire, attune, awkward.

Of many other words the etymology is very obscure, the numerous solutions offered being mostly valueless.

V. SELECTED LIST OF EXAMPLES OF SOUND-SHIFTING, AS ILLUSTRATED BY ENGLISH.

On p. 730, I have given the ordinary rules for the sound-shifting of consonants, as exhibited by a comparison of Anglo-Saxon with Latin and Greek. I here give a select list of co-radicate words, i.e. of words ultimately from the same root, which actually illustrate Grimm's law within the compass of the language, owing to the numerous borrowings from Latin and Greek. Probably English is the only language in which such a comparison can be instituted, for which reason the following examples ought to have a peculiar interest. That the words here linked together are really co-radicate, is shown in the Dictionary, and most of the examples are the merest common-places to the comparative philologist. The number (such as 87, &c.) added after each example refers to the number of the Aryan root as given on pp. 730-746.

I. Gutturals. Latin g becomes English k, often written as c. This k, in the word choose, has become ch; but the A.S. form is ceosan. The old word ake is now written acke, by a popular etymology which wrongly imagines the word to be Greek.

In the following examples, the first column contains words of Latin or Greek origin, whilst the second column contains words that are pure English.

genus—kin, 87.	gelid—cold, 99.
(i)gnoble—know, 88.	gerund—cast, 100.
garrulous—care, 91.	gust (2)—choose, 105.
grain—corn, 94.	agent—ache, 5.

Latin k (written c) answers to English kk, written k. In the last five examples the initial k has been dropped in modern English.

cincture—hedge, 42.	caul (Celtic)—hull (1), 64.
canto—hen, 46.	cite—hie, 70.
capacious—have, 47.	cemetery—home, 72.
capital—head, 47.	custody—hide, 77.
current—horse, 52.	cup—hoop, 78.
culminate—hill, 53.	circus—(h)ring, 56.
kiln—hearth, 57.	cranny—(h)rend, 60.
calends—haul, 58.	in-cline—(h)lean (1), 80.
crate—hurdle, 61.	client—(h)load, 81.
cell—hall, 64.	crude—(h)raw, 82.

Greek χ (written ch in English) answers to English g, which (in modern English) often becomes y initially. The corresponding Latin letter is g, sometimes f; see the last five examples.

chaos—goose, 106.	christm—grind, 116.
cholera—gall, 111.	chyme—gush, 121.

chord—yarn, 114.	hesitate—gaze, 122.
chorus—yard (1), 113.	hiatus—yawn, 119.
eu-charist—yearn, 112.	fiarance—glow, 110.
host (2)—guest, 118.	fuse (1)—gush, 121.

2. Dentals. Latin and Greek d answers to E. t.

dual—two.	dome—timber, 151.
demon—time, 144.	dolour—tear (1), 152.
docile—teach, 145.	divine—Tuesday, 152.
diction—token, 145.	duke—tow (1), 160.
dactyl—toe, 147.	dromedary—tramp, 161.
diamond—tame, 150.	ed-ible—cat, 9.

Latin t answers to English th, as in tres, i.e. three. So also in the following.

tenuity—thin, 127.	torture—throw, 135.
trite—thrill, 132.	torrid—thirst, 139.
tolerate—thole (2), 134.	tumid—thumb, 141.

Greek th, written θ, answers to E. d; the corresponding Latin letter is f.

theme—doom, 162.	ficile—dough, 168.
thrasonical—dare, 167.	fume—dust, 169.
fact—do, 162.	fraud—dull, 173.
force—draw, 166.

3. Labials. Latin and Greek p answers to English f.

paternal—father, 186.	pullet—foal, 209.
pastor—food, 186.	putrid—foul, 211.
pen—feather, 191.	poor—few, 214.
petition—find, 191.	plait—flax, 215.
patent—fathom, 192.	tri-ple—three-fold, 215.
pedal—foot, 194.	prurient—frost, 219.
pore (1)—fare, 196.	plover—flow, 221.
polygon—full, 197.	plume—fly, 221.

The Greek ph, written φ, or Latin f, answers to English b.

pharynx—bore (1), 232.	flame—blink, 235.
dia-phragm—borough, 233.	ferrous—brad, 237.
phlox—bleak, 235.	fissure—bite, 240.
physic—be, 242.	future—be, 242.
phlebotomy—blood, 250.	fruit—brook (1), 243.
fate—ban, 224.	fugitive—bow (1), 244.
federal—band, 230.	fervent—brew, 246.
fertile—bear (1), 231.	fragile—break, 247.
farina—barley, 231.	flatulent—blow (1), 249.
per-forate—bore (1), 232.	flourish—bloom, 250.
farce—borough, 233.	fail—blow (3), 251.

VII. LIST OF DOUBLETS.

Doublets are words which, though apparently differing in form, are nevertheless, from an etymological point of view, one and the same, or only differ in some unimportant suffix. Thus aggrieve is from L. aggravare; whilst aggravate, though really from the pp. aggravatus, is nevertheless used as a verb, precisely as aggrieve is used, though the senses of the words have been differentiated. In the following list, each pair of doublets is entered only once, to save space, except in a few remarkable cases, such as cipher, zero. When a pair of doublets is mentioned a second time, it is enclosed within square brackets.

ERRATA AND ADDENDA.

THE following notes and additions contain corrections of printer's errors, corrections of errors of my own, fresh quotations illustrative of the history of certain words, and additional illustrations of etymologies. It will be found that, of a few words, I entirely withdraw the account already given, whilst in other cases I have found fresh evidence to confirm results that before were somewhat doubtful. I have also added a few words, not mentioned in the body of the work. These are marked by an asterisk preceding them.

The following list of after-thoughts is, I regret to say, still incomplete, partly from the nature of the case. Fresh evidence is constantly being adduced, and the best which I can do at present is to mention here such things as seem to be most essential. There must still be several corrections needed which, up to the present time, have escaped my notice.

KEY TO THE GENERAL PLAN, p. 1, l. 1. For 'is,' read 'are.'⁵
In l. 4, for 'supply,' read 'supplies.' (Corrected in some copies.)

A-, prefix, l. 20. For abridge, read abate. In abridge, the prefix = Lat. ad, though written ab.

AB-, prefix, ll. 3 and 4. Dele abbreviate and abridgs.

ABACK. I give the M. E. abakke as it stands in the edition. Abak is better, answering exactly to A. S. onbac.

ABDICATE, l. 4. For 'dicare is an intensive form of dicere,' read 'dicare is from the same root as dicere.'

ABIDE (2), ll. 11 and 17. For 'A. S. abicgan' and 'bicran,' read 'A. S. abyegan' and 'byegan,' such being the better spelling.

ABLUTION. Perhaps French; Cotgrave gives 'Ablution, a washing away.' However, he does not use the E. word.

ABOUT; p. 3, col. 1, l. 2. For 'Similiar,' read 'Similar.'

ABOVE. For 'A. S. ufan,' read 'ufan;' the u is short. In the word dufan, the u might be expected to be long, as resulting from the coalescence of i and u, but was doubtless shortened to agree with ufan, the i being simply elided.

ABS-, prefix. (L.) L. abs; cf. Gk. ἀπ. See OL.

ABSCOND, l. 4. The root is rather DA than DHA; see List of Roots, no. 143, and the note upon it.

ABUT. 'The southe hede therof abbutyth vpon the wey leadyng from,' &c.; Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 52; in a will dated 1479.

ABYSS. For (Gk.), read (L., = Gk.). The context shews why.

ACACIA. See Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiii. c. 9, which treats 'of the Egyptian thorne acacia.'

ACADEMY. Not (F., = Gk.), but (F., = L., = Gk.); as the context shews. The same correction applies to Alabaster, Almond, Amalgam, Anagram, Analogy, Anise, Antidote, Archetype, Assay, Baptize, Cataplasm, Celery, Centre, Chamber, Chimney, Chirurgieon, &c.; which are unfortunately not marked (within brackets) with sufficient accuracy.

ACCENT. Probably from the French; viz. F. accent, 'an accent;' Cot. = L. accentum, acc. of accentus, &c.

ACCEPT. Not (L.), but (F., = L.). From F. accepter, 'to accept;' Cot. = L. acceptare, &c.

ACCIDENT. Not (L.), but (F., = L.). From F. accident, 'an accident;' Cot. = L. accident-, &c.

ACCORD, l. 6. For 'cordem, acc. of cor,' read 'cord-, stem of cor.'

ACCOUTRE. I find O. F. acoutre in the 12th century, which is earlier than any quotation given by Littré. 'Les herceillous moult bien acoutre Desor son dos,' i. e. he (Renard) arranges the bundles very comfortably upon his back; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, 202, 23.

ACE. Not (F., = L.), but (F., = L., = Gk.). The context shews this. The reference to ONE at the end is wrong, as Gk. εἰς and E. one are not connected.

ACHE. The A. S. word is also written ace, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 6, l. 19. We may go further, and derive the sb. from the strong acas (pt. t. ac, pp. aceas), corresponding to the strong M. E. verb achen, already spoken of; we find aceap mine sagan = my eyes ache, Ælfric's Gram., ed. Zupitza, p. 216, l. 13 (various reading in footnote). Further, the orig. sense of acas was to drive, urge; it is cognate with Icel. aka, to drive, pt. t. ok, pp. akinn, and with Lat. agere, to drive. From \sqrt{AG} , to drive; see AGENT. From the same root are acere and acorn.

ACHIEVE, l. 3. Dele the mark = in the second instance.

ACID. We find also F. acide, 'sourer;' Cot. But it is more likely that the word was taken directly from Latin, considering its use by Bacon.

ACOLYTE. Not (F., = Gk.), but rather (F., = Low L., = Gk.). The same remark applies to Allegory, Almanac, Anchoret, Apostasy, Apostate, Barge, Bark (1), Calender, Calm, Carbine, Card (1), Carte, Catalogue, Cauterise, Celandine, Chronicle, Clergy, Climacter, Climax, Clinical, &c. But see remark on Bark (2) below.

ACORN. I forgot to add that the Goth. akran, fruit, as a neut. sb., occurs several times; see, e. g. Matt. vii. 17, 18, 20.

ACRE, l. 1, 'M. E. aker, akre;' dele akre.

AD-, prefix. This article is incomplete; add that Lat. ad further becomes ar- before r, an- before n, and at- before t. Examples, arrogate, assist, attest.

ADDLED. I have copied the etymology from former dictionaries without sufficient heedfulness. The etymology from A. S. adli is not right; this word would have passed into a mod. E. odle, with long o. Addle corresponds to M. E. adel, as in the expression adel eye, i. e. addle egg, Owl and Nightingale, 133. From A. S. adela, mud, Grein, l. 1 (with a reference to Grimm, Deutsches Wörterbuch, i. 177). Thus the orig. sense of addie, adj., was simply 'muddy,' a sense still retained in prov. E. addle-pool. Stratmann also cites the O. Low G. adale, mud, from the Mittelniederdeutsches Wörterbuch by Schiller and Lübber, Bremen, 1875. Cf. also Lowl. Scotch addie dub, a filthy pool (new ed. of Jamieson); O. Swed. adal, urine of cattle (Ihre); E. Friesic adel, dung, adelig, foul, adelpól, an addle pool (Koolman). Quite distinct from A. S. adli, though Koolman seems to confuse these words, as many others have done.

ADJUST. 'Littré makes two O. F. ajuster: 1 = adjutator*, 2 = adjutare* (both common in Med. Lat.). Mr. H. Nicol in private letter had pointed out that O. Fr. had only ajuster, ajuster = adjutator, and that Med. Lat. adjutare was a purely artificial word formed later on Fr. ajuster. Ajuster, later Ajouter, ajouter, gave a M. E. aiust, ajoust common in "ajoust feyth," Fr. ajouster foy. This was already observable to Paisgrave. Fr. ajouster became ajouter, ajouter, whence a 16th cent. Eng. ajute, to add, explained by Dr. Johnson as from Lat. adjutare. In 16th cent. a new Fr. ajuster, ajuster was formed probably from Med. Lat. adjutare, but perhaps from Ital. aggiustare (= adjutare), or even from Fr. à + juste. This English has adopted as adjust.' Note by Dr. Murray, Phil. Soc. Proceedings, Feb. 6, 1880. The result is that my explanation of M. E. aiusten is quite right; but the mod. E. adjust appears to be not the same word, the older word being displaced by a new formation from Lat. iustus.

ADMIRAL. *Also Amiral, ultimately from Arabic Amir, Emir, Amir, commander, imperator, cf. amara, to order. In opposition to recent suggestions, he maintained that the final -al was the Arabic article, present in all the Arabic and Turkish titles containing the word, as Amir-al-umrin, Ruler of rulers, Amir-al-bahr, commander of the sea. The first instance of such a title is Amir-al-mumminin, commander of the faithful, assumed by the Caliph Omar, and first mentioned by Eutychius of Alexandria among Christian writers. Christians ignorant of Arabic, hearing Amir-al- as the constant part of all these titles, naturally took it as one word; it would have been curious if they had done otherwise. But, of course, the countless perversions of the word, Amiralus, Amiraldus, Amiraldus, Amirand, Amirand, amirandus, amirante, almirante, admirabilis, Admiratus, etc., etc., were attempts of the "sparrow-grass" kind to make the foreign word more familiar or more intelligible. As well known, it was used in Prov., O. Fr., and Eng. for Saracen commander generally, a sense common in all the romances, and still in Caxton. The modern marine sense is due to the Amir-al-bahr, or Amir of the sea, created by the Arabs in Sicily, continued by the Christian kings as Admiratus maris, and adopted successively by the Genoese, French, and English under Edw. III. as "Amyrel of the Se" (Cappone), or "Admyrall of the navy" (Fabyan). But after 1500, when it became obsolete in the general sense, we find "the Admiral" used without "of the Sea" as now. The ad- is well known to be due to popular confusion with admirari; a common title of the Sultans was Admirabilis mundi; and vice versa in English admiral was often used as an adjective = admirable. Note by Dr. Murray, Phil. Soc. Proceedings, Feb. 6, 1880.

ADVENTURE, l. 7. The O. F. aventure is derived rather from Low L. adventura, an adventure, a sb. analogous to Lat. sba. in -tura. Latin abounds with such sba., ending (nearly always) in -tura or -tura; see a list of some in Roby's Latin Grammar, 3rd ed. pt. i. § 893. Roby describes them as 'Substantives; all feminine, with similar formation to that of the future participle. These words denote employment or result, and may be compared with the names of agents in -tor.' I regret that, in the case of a great many words ending in -tura, I have given the derivation as if from the future participle. This is, of course, incorrect, though it makes no real difference as to the form of the word. I must ask the reader to bear this in mind, and apply suitable corrections in the case of similar words, such as Featura, Garniture (s. v. Garnish), Gesture, Judicatura, Junctura. To the list of derived words add peradventure.

ADVOCATE. Perhaps not (L.), but (F., = L.). Cf. O. F. advocat, 'an advocate'; Cot. = L. advocatus, &c.

ABBY. Delp sections β, γ, and δ. The whole of this is beside the mark, and out of the question. I withdraw and regret it. The derivation of Low Latin abba remains obscure. The word may be described as simply '(F.)', as little more is known about it. Note that Drayton turns abby into a verb. 'And where the phenix abba' [builds her nest]; Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 3.

AFRAY. I print Mr. H. Nicol's excellent remarks in full. 'Affrey (and frey), obs. verb (whence afraid), to frighten; affrey (and frey), subst., a quarrel, fight. In this word it is the remoter derivation I have to correct, and the correction is not my own, being due to Prof. G. Paris (Romania, 1878, v. 7, p. 121); the reason of my bringing it forward is that it explains the Mod. Eng. meaning of the substantive. (Parenthetically let me remark that afraid, in spite of its spelling, has not become an adjective, as stated in Mahn's Webster, but remains a participle; it is not used attributively, and it forms its absolute superlative with much, not with very.) The derivation of F. affroyer, to frighten, affroi, fright, given by Dies, and generally accepted, is from a hypothetical Lat. exfrigidare, and this was corroborated by Provencal exfridar; the original meaning would therefore be "to freeze" or "chill." But, as M. Paris has pointed out, exfrigidare, though satisfactory as to meaning, is the reverse as to sounds. First, frigidus keeps its d in all its known French derivatives, the loss of the unaccented i, by bringing the g in contact with the d, having (as in raide from rigidum) protected the latter consonant from weakening and subsequent disappearance. This difficulty is met by M. Scheler's proposal of exfrigere instead of exfrigidare; but this involves the change, unparalleled in Old F., to the first conjugation of a Lat. verb of another conjugation, and fails to meet the equally serious second objection. This is, that the Old French verb at first has the diphthong ei only in the stem-accented forms, the others having simple e, and has simple d for Lat. d in accented inflexions; thus while the 1st sing. pres. ind. is exfrei, the infinitive is exfreir, with two simple vowels. This shows that the original stem-vowel was followed by simple d or t, not by g or k, with which it would have given the diphthong ei in the stem-syllable whether accented or unaccented, and the diphthong ei for Lat. d in accented terminations; thus O. Fr. frei (Mod. F. freier, E. frey, to rub) from Lat. frivus, has the two diphthongs ei and id. Similarly, the Prov. verb is not exfridar, but exfredar, with simple s; a fact equally excluding frei from frigidum, which, like F. froid, has the diphthong in compounds whether accented or unaccented. The only primitive, M. Paris points out, which satisfies these conditions, is the Late Lat. exfridare, from Teutonic fridu, peace; so that the original meaning of the O. F. word is "to put out of peace," "disturb," "disquiet." This etymology explains the frequent use of the O. F. participle exfrei with the meaning "disturbed in mind," "angry," and the still later use of exfrei de peur to express what exfrei now does alone. The primary meaning is better kept in the O. F. subst. exfrei, which often means "tumult," "noise;" but for its literal preservation we must look to the Mod. Eng. subst. affrey (frey), which means now, as it did when it was formed, "a breach of the peace." One little point deserves mention. Fridu, in the Old Teutonic technical sense, like "the king's peace" in considerably later days, was applied specially to highways and other public places; and to this day affrey, as a law term, is used only of private fighting in a public place, not of a disturbance inside a house.—H. Nicol.

AFRONT. It has been suggested to me that the O. F. afront is more likely to be from the very common Lat. phrase a fronte, in front, to one's face, than from ad frontem, which is comparatively rare.

AFTERMATH, a second crop of sown grain. (E.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvii. c. 6. Sommer gives an A. S. form ambð, but it is unauthorized. Allied to Mead (2), q. v. Cf. G. mahd, a mowing, mahdmaht, aftermath.

AGGREGATE. Delp from 'The Mid. E. has the form agreggen' to 'nothing to do.' Richardson is quite right; the M. E. agreggen has nothing to do with F. agregger or Lat. aggregare, but answers to O. F. agregger, really a derivative of Latin gravis, and therefore allied to aggravate. The O. F. agregis answers to a Low Lat. type agregare, not precisely to aggravare; see Burgay, s. v. grif.

AGNAIL. I now suspect that this article is incorrect, and that the F. agnaille has had little to do with the matter except in extending the meaning to a corn on the foot, &c. See Catholicon Anglicum, p. 4, note 4. It is better to consider the word, as commonly used, as E., since there is authority for A. S. agnail. In Gascoigne, ed. Haslitt, ii. 313, we are told that antibars will 'skinne a kybed (chilblained) heel, or fret an agnaille off,' where the word is a beardly misprinted as agnaille.—A. S. agnail, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 81, § 34. The form agnail corresponds with O. Fries. agnail, variant of agnail, a misshapen nail due to an injury. The prefix agn- is from A. S. agn, in the orig. sense of 'compressed,' whence the compounds agnis, sorrow, anguish, &c.; see Angar. The A. S. agnil = mod. E. snail. It remains true that agn-nail is either a corrupted form, or merely made up, at a later period, from agn and nail.

AGOG. This article is entirely wrong; I was misled by Vigfusson's translation of Icel. gagga as 'to be all agog.' We may first note an excellent example of an agog in Gascoigne's Poems, ed. Haslitt, ii. 288, viz. 'Or, at the least, yt sets the harte on gogg.' i. e. astir; The Griefe of Joye, thyrdy Songe, st. 21. As an additional example, take the following: 'Bring set agog to thinke all the world otmele;' Udall, tr. of Erasmus' Apophthegma, Phocion, § 11. The etymology is easy enough, the word agog being Celtic.—W. gog, activity; cf. W. gogi, to agitate. Thus o-gog = o-gog, in agitation, is a state of activity. We must quite set aside Icel. gagga and gagur, G. gaggen, and probably also the F. à gog.

AGRIMONY, a plant. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. agrimony, agrimony, Chancer, C. T. 16268. = O. F. agrimony, agrimony, 'agrimony, or egrimony'; Cot.—Low L. agrimonia, corruption of L. argemonia, a plant, Pliny, xxv. 9 (White). We also find L. argemonia, Pliny, xxvi. 9, answering to a Gk. ἀργεμύνη. So called, in all probability, from being supposed to cure white spots in the eye. = L. argema, a small ulcer in the eye, Pliny, xxv. 13, xxviii. 11 (White). = Gk. ἀργεμύνη, ἀργεμύνη, a small white speck or ulcer on the eye (Liddell and Scott). = Gk. ἀργεμύνη, white, shining. = ARG, to shine. See Argent.

AIB (2), an affected manner. (F.) In the phrase 'to give oneself aib,' &c. In Shak. Winter Tale, v. 1. 128. = F. aibe, aibe. The same as Ital. aiba, aibe. See Debonair; and see note on Malaxia (below).

AIBL. It appears, from the quotations made for the Phil. Soc. Dict., that the s in the E. aible was suggested by the s in aisle, and was introduced, curiously enough, independently of the s in the F. spelling aible. Both E. and F. spellings are various and complicated. See Phil. Soc. Proceedings, June 18, 1880.

AIT. Add: M. E. ait, spelt ait, Layamon, 13873; whence aitland, an island, Layamon, 1117.

AJAE. It is worth adding that the A. S. eyvre (better eyvre), dat. of eyvre, a turn, usually appears in adverbial phrases. Thus at armus eyvre, at some time, Luke xii. 32; at ebrum eyvre, at another time, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxv. § 3; at dæm eyvre, at the same time, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, cap. lxi., ed. Sweet, p. 455, last line.

KIMBO. To be marked as (E. and Scand.), the prefix a- being the common E. prefix marked A- (2). Mr. E. Magnusson has kindly given me the right solution of the word. Starting from the M. E. phrase in ambow, which may be considered to represent in ambow, he compares this with Icel. hug-bogum, crooked, bent into a crook, compounded of Icel. hugr, a crook, a staple, bend, bight, and bogum, pp. of the lost strong verb byga, to bow, just as A. S. bogum is the pp. of bogan; see Bow (1). The Icel. hugr is allied to Swed. huk, a twist in a rope, mod. E. hook; see Kink. Note the phrase byggir bogum, i. e. he bent the staple. Edda, ii. 203. Cf. Norweg. huk, a bend, hug, a staple, hukst, crooked, bowed. Thus kimbo (for huk-bogum, M. E. ambow) is, in fact, hook-bowed, bent into a staple-like form. Hence Dryden well uses it to express the curved handles of a cup, translating the Lat. ansa, Virgil, Ecl. in. 45. To place the arms alimbo is to place them with the back of the knuckles against the side, so that the elbows stick out like the handle of a jug. I may here add that Richardson actually uses limbo as a verb. 'Oons, madam, said he, and he limboed his arms, and strutted up to me. . . "Limboed arms! my lord, are you not sorry for such an air?"' Sir C. Grandison, ed. 1812, iv. 288, 290 (Davies).

ALABASTER. Not (L., = Gk.), but (F., = L., = Gk.). From O. F. alabastru, for which see Littré, s. v. albatre.

ALBATROSS. (Port., = Span., = Arab., = Gk.) F. albatros, formerly alcatros; but this F. form was prob. borrowed from English. = Port. alcatraz, a cormorant, albatross; Span. alcatraz, a pelican. = Port. alcatraz, Span. arcaduz, a bucket. = O. Span. alcaduz, a bucket (Minsheu). = Arab. al-qadda, lit. the bucket. = Arab. al, the; Gk. albos, a water-vessel. Similarly the Arab. sagga, a water-carrier, means a pelican, because it carries water in its pouch. See Devic, Supp. to Littré. Note also that Drayton uses the Port. form: 'Most like to that sharp-sighted alcatraz;' The Owl.

ALBUM. The mod. E. use of the word, in the sense of a white book, is of course a modification. The Lat. album, like Gk. leucomya, meant a tablet covered with gypsum for writing public notices on.

ALCOHOL. 'Applied to the black sulphid of antimony, which is used as a collyrium. Cf. Ezek. xxii. 40 in Heb. and LXX. The idea of fineness and tenuity probably caused this word to be applied also to the rectified spirit. "They put betwene the eye-lids and the eye a certaine blacke powder . . . made of a minerall brought from the kingdom of Fez, and called Alcohale;" Sandys' Travels, 1632, p. 67.' (T. L. O. Davies, Supplementary Glossary.)

ALDER. l. 12. For 'Rusa. olecha,' read 'olekha;' (th = x).

ALB. l. 4. For 'Fick, iii. 57,' read 'Fick, iii. 27.'

ALEMBIC. l. 1. Read (F., = Span., = Arab., = Gk.). The context shews why. In Rich. Dict. p. 175, is a note that Arab. ambik is pronounced ambik, which accounts for the m in Spanish, &c.

ALLAY. Instead of calling this (F., = L.), it is much better to mark it as (E.). The M. E. alain (also allegan) is precisely the A. S. alagan, to lay down, hence to put down. = A. S. al- (prefix); lagan, to lay; see Lay (1). Note particularly: 'Thy pryde we wolle alays;' i. e. put down, Arthur, ed. Furnivall (E.E.T.S.), p. 219. The confusion with the O. F. derivative of L. alleniare is duly noted by Matzner, who gives several examples.

ALLODIAL. Delete from beginning of § y to the end of the article. The derivation quoted from Vigfusson's Icel. Dict. cannot well be accepted. The abl. pl. alodis or alodiis occurs in the Lex Salica, ed. Hessels and Kern; on which Hessels remarks, 'on this word cf. Monumenta Germaniae historica, Legg. III. p. 104, 282, 312; Diet. Wörterbuch, s. v. alodio.'

ALLURE. Not (F., = G.), but (F., = L. and G.). A hybrid word, as explained.

ALMOND. Not (F., = Gk.), but (F., = L., = Gk.); as the context shews. Dr. Murray explains the spelling with al by supposing that, in the Span. almendra, the al was put for a by confusion with the Arabic article al. In this case, there must have been an O. F. form almande as well as amande, though it is not given in Littré, Burguy, or Roquefort.

ALONE. l. 11. Delete all following the symbol σ . The contrary is the fact, as shewn under Lone.

ALREADY. Probably (E.), not (Scand.).

ALSO. l. 3. For 'A. S. sal swa, salwa,' read 'A. S. sal sud, salwad.'

ALTAR. The word occurs, in the dat. case altare, in the A. S. Gospels, Matt. v. 24; but only in one MS., all the rest (including MS. B., which Kemble has not noted) have wefede, woofede, wigbed, &c. I therefore adhere to my opinion, that the M. E. altar was borrowed from O. French, and that the spelling altar (with a few exceptions) is comparatively late. Of course the opposite view, that the word was borrowed (like O. Sax. altari) directly from Latin, is perfectly tenable. Fortunately, it does not much matter.

ALTERCATION. The O. F. altercation is quite right; I now observe that Littré gives an example of it as occurring in the 13th century.

ALTOGETHER. M. E. altogedere, Ancren Riwe, p. 330, l. 25.

ALTRUISM. regard for others. (Ital., = L.; with Gk. suffix.) I have frequently been asked for the etymology of this queerly-coined word, the sense of which is obvious to the student of Italian, and (apparently) to no one else. It is coined (with the Greek suffix -ism) from Ital. altrui, another, others. = Ital. altro, nom. sing. masc.; altre, nom. sing. fem.; altri, nom. pl.; which, when preceded by any preposition, is changed into altrui for both genders and numbers (Meadows). = L. alterum, acc. of alter, another. See Alter.

AMAZON. The usual derivation of Gk. ἀμαζών, which I give, is probably fabulous, and the story an invention intended to satisfy a popular craving for an etymology.

AMBASSADOR. l. 10. The form ambactia is not the form in the MSS. of the Salic Law, but the forms ambactia, ambactia, ambactia, ambactia, all occur there, and the word there signifies a charge, office, or employment; see Lex Salica, ed. Hessels and Kern, 1880. *Ambactia is the theoretical form whence all the others proceed.

AMBER. Perhaps (F., = Span., = Arabic) instead of from the Arabic directly. We find M. E. ambers, Prompt. Parv. = F. ambre; Cot. = Span. ambar. = Arab. ambar, ambergris, a rich perfume and cordial; Rich. Dict. p. 1031. Delete the mark of quotation after perfume in l. 8.

AMBEY. Add: M. E. asemery, asembry, Prompt. Parv. p. 18; which assists the etymology.

AMITY. Spelt amite in Skelton, Why Come ye Nat to Courte, l. 371.

AMMONIA. Peyron gives the Coptic amoun, the name of a great tower in Egypt; the name of a mountain; also, glory, height, high. And see Smith's Classical Dictionary. 'In the writings of Synesius, bp. of Pentapolis, we have an account of the preparation of the sal ammoniacus by the priests of Jupiter Ammon, and its transmission [from the Libyan desert] to Egypt in baskets made of the leaves of palms;' I. Taylor, Words and Places.

AMMUNITION. Probably (F., = L.), not (L.) The Low L. ammunition, not in common use, appears to have nothing to do with it. The E. ammunition appears to be an E. spelling of the old popular F. amunition, given by Littré as an archaic form of F. munition, and possibly due to misunderstanding la munition as Famunition. See therefore Munition.

AMONG. Last line but one. Delete the mark =, and read: 'Cf. A. S. mengan,' &c. The A. S. mengan (= *mang-ian) is itself a derivative of the form mang, as explained under Mingle.

AMULET. l. 7. In the later edition of Richardson, the word occurs on p. 580.

ANA, ANNA. the sixteenth part of a rupee. (Hindustani.) Hind. ana (written and in Skt.), the sixteenth of a rupee, commonly, but incorrectly, written anna. Also used as a measure, to express a sixteenth part of a thing; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 24.

ANAGRAM. Not (F., = Gk.), but (F., = L., = Gk.). The context so explains it.

ANATOMY. Correct as in Anagram (above).

ANCHORITE. Not (F., = Gk.), but (F., = Low Lat., = Gk.). See the context.

ANDIRON. l. 5. For 'at p. 197, A. andyras, andena,' read 'at p. 176, we find a andyras as a gloss to Lat. andena, and again, at p. 197, we find Hec andena, Anglice andyras, the latter being a later form.' See also Catholicum Anglicum, p. 16, note 1.

ANGLE (2), l. 2. For 'G. angla,' read 'G. angl.'

ANISE. Not (F., = Gk.), but (F., = L., = Gk.). The context shews this.

ANKLE. l. 12. For dyneor, read dyneor.

ANT. 'Chameleon, amete;' Wright's Voc. ii. 15 (11th cent.). But it is spelt amette in the place to which I refer. The M. E. form amts occurs in Wyclif, Prov. vi. 6.

ANTARCTIC. l. 1. For (L., = G.) read (L., = Gk.). The context shews why.

ANTHROPOPHAGI. l. 2. For ἀνθρωποφάγος read ἀνθρωποφάγος.

ANTICHRIST. It occurs as M. E. Antecrist, Mandeville's Travels, ch. xxvi.; see Spec. of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 173, l. 83.

ANVIL. 'Incus, anfilte,' Wright's Voc. i. 34, col. 2 (this is the same as the ref. to Elf. Gloss. ed. Sommer, p. 65). Also 'Cudo, anfilte,' id. i. 286, col. 2. 'Incuda [sic], anfilte,' Wright's Voc. ii. 111 (8th cent.). Quite distinct from Du. anveeld; and the curious spelling anfilte, found so early as in the 8th century, seems to me entirely to preclude the possibility of considering it as a formation from A. S. fealdan, to fold, in order to make it answer to O. H. G. anveiz, an anvil (from O. H. G. vaizdan, to fold). We also find the curious and obscure gloss (also of the 8th century): 'Cudo, i. percutio, cedo, vel anfilte;' Wright's Voc. ii. 137, col. 1. The spelling anveild occurs as late as 1502, in Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 245.

APOCALYPSE, APOCOPE. Not (Gk.), but (L., = Gk.).

APPLE. l. 2. Cf. 'Prunelle, the ball, or apple, of the eie;' Cot. See Catholicum Anglicum, ed. Herrtage, p. 11, note 5. In l. 7, read 'Russ. jabloko, Lithuan. obolys.'

ARABESQUE. Not (F., = Ital.), but (F., = Ital., = Arabic).

ARBOUR. The common use of this word in provincial English, as applied to a harbour or rustic shelter clearly points to the derivation from Arbour, to which I adhere. Dr. Stratmann puts it as equivalent to M. E. Aerber, a garden of herbs, &c.; and there is no doubt that, in the passage which he cites, arber = M. E. Aerber. But this only proves a confusion between M. E. Aerber, of F. origin, and M. E. Aereborge, a harbour; a confusion which I have already pointed out. The passage cited by Stratmann is curious and worthy of notice. It runs thus: 'In the garden, as I wene, Was an arber fair and grene, And in the arber was a tre;' Squire of Low Degree, l. 38 (Ritson). As to the prov. E. arbour, a shelter, a sort of small hut without a door, a summer-house, I cannot be mistaken, having frequently heard it in Shropshire (where initial h does not exist), and, I believe, in Norfolk (where initial h is often misused).

ARCH (1). Add: Hence the Court of Arches, originally held in the arches of Bow Church—St. Mary de Arches—the crypt of which was used by Wren to support the present superstructure; I. Taylor, Words and Places. And see Todd's Johnson.

ARCH (2). Stratmann suggests that arch is nothing but the prefix arch- (as in arch-bishop, arch-foam, arch-fool), used alone. No doubt this explains the form of the word correctly, but I cannot understand how it acquired its peculiar sense, unless it were partly confused with M. E. argā, as I suggest, though this M. E. form would certainly have become arros, by rule. This is one of the points which the Philological Society's Dictionary will (I suppose) entirely clear up. See argā in Catholicon Anglicum, p. 12.

ARCHETYPE. Not (F., = Gk.), but (F., = L., = Gk.). See the context.

ARCHIMANDRITE. (L., = Gk.) 'Archimandrite, an abbot, prior, or chief of an hermitage;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Late L. archimandrita, a chief or principal of monks, an abbot; Sidonius Apollinaris, Ep. 8. 14 (White). = Late Gk. ἀρχιμανδριτης, the same. = Gk. ἀρχι-, chief (see Archi-); μανδρα, an enclosed space, fold, (in late Gk.) a monastery; see Madrigal.

ARCHITECT. Also in Shak., Titus Andronic. v. 3. 122.

ARE. As to art, it is best derived from A. S. æart, putting the O. Northumb. form aside. Both the -t, in A. S. æart, and the -s in O. North. ær-s, are survivals of su, the second personal pronoun. Cf. A. S. æart-est, I. e. shalt thou, in Grein, s. v. æulas.

ARECA, a genus of palms, of which one species produces the areca-nut or betel-nut (Canarese.) From the Karnāta (Canarese) adika, adika, betel or areca-nut; Wilson, Indian Terms, p. 7. The cerebral d is mistaken for r. 'Araca is corrupted from the Canarese adika. In Tamil, which has borrowed it, veil adaba is 'betel and areca,' the leaf and the nut of one and the same tree.' (F. Hall.)

ARENA, l. 4. Arena is also spelt ārena, O. Lat. āre-na, āre-na. The old (and usual) derivation from L. arrens is very doubtful, and will probably have to be abandoned. See Vanček, p. 630.

AHOINT TREE. Add, at the end: the Icel. rýms is from Icel. rám, room (by vowel-change of á to ý); see Room.

ABOUSE. For '(See Rouse),' read '(Scand.; with E. prefra).'

ABAFOTIDA. Spelt azafotida, Arnold's Chron. (ab. 1502), ed. 1811, p. 234.

ABE. The remark following the mark ¶ is partly wrong. The Icel. æbe is certainly cognate with E. ash, not with E. asb; the a is properly an æ. See Wish.

ASANCE, obliquely. (Ital., = L.) Only the first five lines of this article can stand. The rest is wholly wrong. There is no O. F. a sance. I unfortunately copied this, without verification, from Wedgwood's second edition (it is corrected in the third), not having access to Palgrave at the moment, and forgetting to revise the statement. Palgrave really has: 'A sance, de traucis, en loignant;' but a sance is here the English word, not the French. It is the earliest spelling of E. assance which I have as yet found. Here a is the usual E. a, prefix, in the sense of 'on' or 'in;' see A (2); and sance I take to be borrowed from Ital. sanso, verbal sb. of the verb sansare, explained by Florio to mean 'to cancel, to blur, or blot forth, to go a slope or a sance, or a skew, to go sidelin, to stagger or go reeling, to avoid or shun a blow.' B. The Ital. sansare is compounded of s, prefix (= L. ex, out, out of the way), and sansare, 'to go a slope, to give place,' Florio. This Ital. verb is probably derived from L. sansare, to turn or go round a place (hence, to bend aside); see White. Allied to Gk. σάσσω, to bend, W. cam, crooked.

ASPERITY. Not (L.), but (F., = L.). See the context.

ASSAGAI, ASSEGAI. (Port., = Moorish.) A word (like feisā) introduced into Africa by the Portuguese. = Port. azagaia, a dart, javelin. See Lanogay.

ASSAY. Not (F., = Gk.), but (F., = L., = Gk.).

ASSIZE (1), l. 13. Add: the Low L. assidere also means 'to impose a tax.'

ASSONANT. Probably (L.), rather than (F., = L.).

ASSORT. Not (F., = Ital., = L.), but (F., = L.). Bracet cannot be right about this; for Littré gives an example of F. assortir in the 15th century.

ASSUME, l. 8. For adsumere, read adsumere.

ASTONISH, l. 9. Delete 'which seems to be the earliest instance;' for earlier instances have been given just above. (A singular oversight.)

ATONE, l. 32. For 'written in 1553,' read 'written in 1513.'

ATTACH. See further under Tack.

ATTIRE. I entirely withdraw my etymology of this word, written under a false impression which I now can hardly believe myself to have entertained. Mr. Nicol's remarks upon my article are so excellent, that I here print them entire, with the exception of a few prefatory remarks. 'Even the assertions respecting the subst. atir in Mid. E. and O. F. require an important qualification; they should read, "in Mid. E. and O. F. texts, as far as they have been read and glossed, the Mid. E. subst. atir is found earlier than the verb, and an O. F. subst. atir has not been found." The inference that the Mid. E. subst. existed earlier than the verb, and that the O. F. subst. did not exist at all, are, at least in the present state of our lexicography, especially of O. F., entirely unwarranted. The non-connection, on the other hand, of O. F. atirer, to adorn, with atirer, to draw, though now well known to O. F. scholars, is not recognised in the dictionaries of Diez, Littré, and Scheler, so that in maintaining it Mr. Skeat has independently hit upon the truth. The O. F. words are, indeed, distinct in form as well as in meaning, "to adorn," or rather "to arrange," being really atirer with the diphthong it in the infinitive, while the Mod. F. attirer, to draw, is O. F. atirer with simple t. In his other propositions, Mr. Skeat has sometimes merely followed his predecessors, but in several cases he is solely responsible. As to all traces of O. F. atirer having utterly and long ago died out in France, not only was the word common in the 14th century, but it is nearly certain (only the i of the Ital. attiraglio raising a slight doubt) that the Mod. F. attirail, "apparatus," "implements," is one of its derivatives, and it is still more certain that in the heraldic term tire, a row (applied to the rows of the fur vair), and in the colloquial expression font d'une tire, "at one go," "at a stretch," there survives the O. F. substantive from which atirer is derived. For the O. F. verb atirer, to adorn, which Mr. Skeat supposes to be the missing primitive of atirer, is a fiction; the verb atirer, to arrange, is what is termed a parasynthetic compound, that is, formed direct from the prep. a and the subst. tire, row—just as aligner, embayquer, come direct from a ligne, en bayque, not from imaginary verbs, aligner, bayquer. But even if atirer, with its derivatives, had long been extinct in French, that is no argument against its having been both common and of early introduction; still less does it give reason to believe that it was a purely Anglo-Norman word posterior to the Conquest. As a matter of fact, it must have been a very old word in the Romanic languages; the verb (and doubtless the primitive subst.) existed in Eastern French, the subst. in Italian, and both of them in Provençal, in each case with their special forms, showing that they cannot have been borrowed from Norman French, but must have developed independently from a common primitive, and have gone through a whole series of phonetic changes. Ital. tire means "an assemblage," but an earlier meaning is preserved in the phrase corriere a tire, "to run in file;" while the Prov. tiers, besides being applied to the row in the senses of "get-up" (if I may use a colloquial expression), "demeanour," is the regular word for "row," "series," and exists at this day, with unchanged meaning, in the form twiers. The Old F. subst. tire (which, as already mentioned, survives in Mod. F.) means "file" (of persons), "series," the phrase a tire meaning "in order," "in succession;" the word no doubt, as stated in glossaries, also meant "dress" (as distinguished from mere "clothing") "ornaments," though no example is given. The possible dialectal O. F. forms tiers, twiers, found in Roquefort, also unfortunately want corroboration. The verb—Prov. attirer, East. F. attirer, Norm. and Paris. F. atirer—means "to arrange" (literally and figuratively), "adjust," "put in order," "prepare" (a meaning attire also had in English); when reflexive it means "to dress," "get one's self up." An excellent parallel to atirer, "to arrange," from tire, "row," is afforded by arranger itself, which derives from rank, "row," "ring;" while the change from "arranging" to "dressing" is equally well exemplified by dress, originally "to put straight," from Lat. dirigere. All this shows that the original meaning of the words was not "to adorn," and makes any connection with the Teutonic str, "splendor" or "glory," extremely doubtful; and the origin is definitely excluded by the forms of the words, which are incompatible with the t of tir, and (to a less extent) with its absence of final vowel. The most primitive form is exhibited by the Prov. tiers, whose triphthong ier is reduced in other Prov. dialects to ie or ii; from the same prehistoric F. triphthong ier are contracted the i of ordinary F. tire, atirer, the di of the stem-syllable of East. F. atirivir. This iri is the ordinary diphthong ir plus an i derived from a following guttural or palatal, the existence of which is further shown by its having converted in French the ordinary ir, East. F. ir, from Lat. accented ir of the verb-endings, into the diphthong ir, East. F. ir (seen in the -ir, East. F. -ir, of the infn.). An example of the first phenomenon is Prov. pitiz (pitiz), ordinary F. pit (now pit), East. F. pit (Mod. Burgundian pit) from pitus (ir from i, i from e-i); of the second, O. F. maist (now maist), East. F. maist, from maistatem (where the di formed a palatal consonant), whose ist contrasts with the ordinary ist of claris (claritatem), &c. These phonetic conditions are perfectly satisfied by an Early Teutonic feminine teurya, the predecessor of Middle Low Germ. tiere, O. H. G. ziari; the ir of Teut. tu is regularly diphthongised to ir, and its i lost before a consonant, while the following i supplies the final i of the triphthong iri in the stem-syllable, and the initial one of the F. ir in the final syllable of amirer. This Early Teut. teurya, O. H. G. ziari, has, however, nothing to do with the Early Teut. (Old E., Old Saxon, and Old Norse) tir; it has a different root-vowel, a different suffix, and a different gender, as well as a different meaning. The supposed change of meaning from "glory" to "ornament" must therefore be rejected, and with it must go the identification of the Early Mod. E. tire, "head-dress," with the O. E. tir, "glory," as abundantly shown by the Promptorium "atire or tyre of women, radimiculum" (chaplet, fillet), it is merely (as was to be expected) a contraction of atira—a substantive which may well have existed in O. F., though it may equally well be an Engl. formation from the verb, perhaps under the influence of the simple O. F. subst. tire. What has really occurred in German, and perhaps in Romanic (for the secondary meanings of the Rom. words may have developed independently) is the change of meaning from "row," "order," to "ornament," "demeanour;" the Romanic languages, indeed, preserve in Ital. tiara, Prov. tiara, F. tire, the oldest ascertainable meaning of the word, of which meaning we have, I believe, no example in O. H. German. In the Old Engl. tir, "row," of whose form and meaning (though Grein has but one example) there can be little doubt, and which is the real cognate of O. H. G. ziari, we find, however, the original meaning; whether this word, as is often said, survives in the Mod. E. tire, "row," is doubtful. [I hold that it does not.—W. W. S.] I will only remark that tir used also to be spelt tire, though, according to Walker, tire meaning "row," and tir, were both pronounced as tir (of the eye); and that the O. F. form tiere, often given as the origin of tire, could hardly have occurred (if at all) in any dialect from which English has borrowed.—H. Nicol.

AUGER. Add:—cf. Swed. avgare, an auger (Widegren). Here avgare is for avgare, from avg, a nave, and a word allied to Icel. garr, a spear; see garr in Riets; and see GARFISH.

AUK. A sea-bird. (Scand.) Swed. alka, an auk; Icel. alka, alka. Hence Lat. alka; merely a Latinised form.

AUTOCRACY. I. 4. For 'stem,' read 'crude form.'

AVALANCHE. Spelt valanche, Smollett, France and Italy, letter xxxviii (Davies).

AVAST. Dr. Stratmann suggests Ital. abbasta, or Span. abasta. The Ital. abbasta is out of the question; our sea-words are only Scandinavian, Spanish, or Dutch, when not English. The Span. abaster is obsolete; Minshew gives it only in the sense to be satisfied; at this rate, the imperative abasta would mean 'be satisfied,' or 'be content.' This is not at all the sense of avast; it is precisely equivalent to the common every-day English 'hold fast a bit,' or 'hold hard,' i.e. wait a bit. The word is clearly, to my mind, Dutch, because the Dutch use vast for fast, and say hou for hold. Thus Sewel gives vast houden, to hold fast, and the sb. houvast, a hold-fast, a cramp-iron, a pinch-penny. How easily the Du. hou vast would become avast with English sailors (who would probably not perceive that hold fast would do as well), needs not to be told.

AVERAGE. The following quotation is of importance. 'And over that to pai or doo pay (cause to be paid) all maner averages as well for Burtoux as for Thames;' i.e. (as I suppose) to pay all customs or dues [on certain wines] both at Bordeaux (where the wines were shipped) and at the quays on the Thames (where they were unshipped). This is from Arnold's Chron. (about 1502), ed. 1817, p. 112; and again, at p. 180, we have mention of the king's 'customs, or subsidies, or averages.'

AVOCATION, last line. For 'stem soci,' read 'stem soc.'

AVOW. The following note, by Dr. Murray, is from the Phil. Soc. Proceedings, Feb. 6, 1880. 'Diez takes F. avouer from advocare, Littré, Burguy, and Brachet from advotare. Without presuming to "pose as an O. F. scholar," he thought there were certainly two O. F. avouer: 1.—Lat. advocare, cf. lower, power:—locare, locare; 2.—Lat. advotare, cf. vouer, dévoier, Lat. votare, devotare; the first two quotations in Littré belonging to advotare, the rest to advocare. Both verbs were adopted in Eng.; No. 1 before 1200, and still in use; senses to appeal to, call upon (as lord), acknowledge (as lord, or in any relation), own, confess; hence Avowal, and the obs. Avowry, Avowd, avow, an acknowledged patron, mod. Advowee and Advowson (Advocacionem); No. 2 before 1300, in senses to bind with a vow, dedicate, take a vow, make a vow, now obs. From this the obs. n. avow, "An avow to God made be." The F. avow belongs to avouer 1. In later Eng. they may have been looked upon as senses of one word, and were occasionally confused, as when a man avowed (advocavit) his sins, and avowed (advotavit) a pilgrimage by way of penance.'

AWAY. Cf. Icel. afvega, astray, lit. off the way, out of the way. This may have influenced the sense of the E. word.

AWE. For (E.), read (Scand.). It cannot possibly be from A. S. æge, but only from Icel. agi, awe, terror. The A. S. forms became obsolete. The rest is right.

AWKWARD. The forms afgr, afgr, which have been questioned, are in Vigfusson's Dictionary; the O. Sax. word which I print as awā is given in the Glossary to the Heliand, where the letter which I print as w is denoted by a h with a line drawn through the upper part of the stem. Prof. Stephens calls attention to a passage too important to be passed over. In the Prologue to St. Matthew's Gospel, in the Northumbrian version, ed. Kemble, p. 2, l. 11, the Lat. word perverus is glossed by wiðerworda vel afwlic. Comparison with the Icel. and O. Sax. forms shows that afwlic here stands for afwlic (or afwlic), i.e. awt-lic, with the sense of perverse. This is clear evidence that the mod. E. awt in awt-ward was represented by afw in O. Northumbrian. Palgrave has: 'auke stroke, awers'; also: 'men ryngc aukwardc, on some on brusale.'

AWN. L. 3. For agun read agune; the form really given in the passage cited is the pl. agunes. We also find awone, awone, Prompt. Parv. p. 18. The cognate Gk. word is ἀγωνα, which comes nearer to it than ἀγρον.

AWORK. Stratmann says: 'not an awork, but only a work, occurs in Shakespeare.' This is hypercritical; as a fact, awork occurs in the first folio, in Troil. v. 10. 38, which I actually cite; in the other three passages which I cite, it occurs as awork. Thus the criticism fails in all four instances; I do not know what is meant by it.

AWHY. L. 15. For 'swa deð,' read 'swā deð.'

AZURE. Add: So called from the mines of Lajward; see Marco Polo's Travels, ed. Yule.

BABBLE. Otherwise, babble may be taken as the frequentative of bab; see under Bubble. Since bab, bab, are of imitative origin, it makes little difference.

BACON. Stratmann says the M. H. G. form is backe, not bache; Wackermagel gives both forms.

BADGER. subst. Mr. Nicol's note upon this word is as follows. 'This word, which originally meant "corn-dealer," is generally derived from the now obsolete F. bladiar, with the same sense. Matzner and E. Muller remark that this derivation offers serious phonetic difficulties; in fact, not only is there the loss of l, which is not unexampled, but there is the consonantification of the i of the O. F. diphthong id to ia, a change of which no instance is known, though O. F. words with id are very common in English. An even more serious difficulty, already pointed out in the Romania (1879, v. 8, p. 436)—I presume by Prof. G. Paris, not by Mr. Wedgwood—is that bladiar, like many other words in Cotgrave, is a Provençal form, and consequently could not have got into Mid. Engl.; the real French word is blair (Cotgr. Mayer), of which Mod. F. blairon, "badger" (the animal), is a diminutive. Now blair would have given Mid. E. blayer, Mod. E. blair, just as chairs gave chayers, chair; whether blayer, blair has anything to do with the Scotch name Blair, I do not know, but it clearly is not badger. Assuming the loss of l, badger can hardly be anything but a derivative of Old F. Maage, which means both "store of corn" and "tax on corn." I do not find an Old F. Maager recorded, but it probably existed, especially as there is, I think, no trace of the simple substantive (which would have been blage) in Engl.; the word, transliterated (or rather trans-sonated) into Latin, would be oblātāticārium. It is very possible that examples of an Old F. word blagier, and of a Mid. E. form blager, may yet be found; in any case the ordinary derivation from Prov. bladiar (= Lat. oblātāticārium) is historically and phonetically impossible.—H. Nicol. Mr. Wedgwood points out that there is actual evidence for a belief that the badger does lay up a store of corn. Herrick calls him the 'gray farmer,' alluding to his store of corn.

'Some thin
Chipping the mice flicht from the ban
Of the gray farmer.' King Oberon's Palace,

BAFFLE. May be simply described as (Scand.). Jamieson also gives bachtie, as a variant of bachtie, which is much to the purpose.

BAG. 'Bulga, baige oðve bylge'; Wright's Voc. ii. 12 (11th century).

BAGATELLE. Not (F., - Ital.), but (F., - Ital., - Teut.).

BAILS. But we also find Low L. badallum, a gag; which makes it probable that the etymology of baillon is from Low L. badare, to gape, open the mouth, because a gag keeps the mouth open (Schefer). See Abayanos.

BAIT. Add: So also Swed. baita, to bait, graze, feed, causal of bita, to bite; bete, pasture, grazing, also a bait; Dan. bød, a bait. The Icel. baita, to bait, is formed from bait, pt. t. of bita, to bite.

BAIZE. So also boys, i. e. baize, in Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 234 (about 1502).

BALE (3), last line. Dele Paill; I now think paill is unrelated.

BALK (1). Stratmann gives the Icel. form as balhi; I copy bálth from Vigfusson.

BALLOON. Not (Span.), but (F., - G.). The form balloon may be fairly deduced from F. ballon, like Shalloon from F. Chalons, and baloon from F. baton. Hence the etymology is from F. ballon, augmentative form of F. ballé; see BALL (2).

BALM. Not (F., - Gk.), but (F., - L., - Gk.).

BALSAM. Perhaps a Semitic word. Cf. Heb. balsam, balsam.

BAMBOO. The Canarese word is bambu; Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 57.

BAN, ll. 7 and 8. Read 'já . . ábanann út ealne þjóðscaipe;' inserting the accents.

BANDY-LEGGED. Not (F. and E.), but (F. and Scand.).

BANGLE, a kind of bracelet. (Hind.) 'The ankles and wrists ornamented with large rings or bangles;' Archaeologia, vol. viii. p. 256, an. 1787 (Davies). From Hindustani bangri, 'a bracelet, an ornament for the wrist; corruptly, a bangle;' Wilson, Glp. of Indian Terms, p. 59.

BANK. 'Sponda, hó-banca;' i. e. a couch; Wright's Voc. i. 290.

BANTER. 'Occasions given to all men to talk what they please, especially the banters of Oxford (a set of scholars so called, some M.A.), who make it their employment to talk at a venture, lye, and prate what nonsense they please;' A. Wood, Life, Sept. 6, 1678 (Davies). Explained by 'to jest or jeer' in Phillips, ed. 1706.

BANYAN. Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 123, says that the English so named the tree because the banyans (merchants) used to adorn it according to their fancy. This explains the reason for the name more fully, and confirms the etymology.

BARE, l. 2. For 'A. S. bær, bars,' read 'A. S. bær, bare; ' of course bars is not the A. S. form, but modern English.

BARGE. The Coptic bari, a boat, is given in Peyron's Coptic Lexicon.

BARK (1), not (F., - Gk.), but (F., - Low L., - Gk.); or perhaps (F., - Low L., - Gk., - Egyptian). There is certainly a Coptic word bari, a boat; for which see Peyron's Lexicon. The ultimate Egyptian origin of barge, barh (1), and barque, is, consequently, almost certain.

BARK (3). Cf. also Swed. bråds, Dan. bræge, Icel. brakja, to bleat (said of sheep).

BARNACLE (2). We also find Irish bairnach, barneack, a limpet. Possibly Celtic; see Duncange, who cites Giraldus Cambrensis, so that the word (in Celtic) is old.

BARNACLES. In Neckam's treatise De Utensilibus (12th cent.), pt. in Wright's Vocab., i. 100, the O. F. barneac occurs as a gloss upon Lat. camem. If this can be connected with E. branks, q. v., the word may prove to be Celtic, in the particular sense of 'instrument put on the nose of unruly horses.' But, in the sense of spectacles, we find the spelling barneacles, in Damon and Pithias, Dodsley's Old Plays, i. 279 (Davies). It is not improbable that barneacles, spectacles, from prov. F. barneques, is distinct from barneacles in the other sense; though confusion between them was easy.

BAROUCHE, l. 1. For (G., - Ital.), read (G., - Ital., - L.).

BARRICADE. Generally given as (F., - Ital.). Florio has baricata, barricada, 'a barricado.' Barricada looks like a borrowing from Spanish; and it is important to notice that there does not seem to be an Ital. sh. barrica, from which the verb could be made; whereas, in Spanish, barrica is a barrel.

BARTER. Littre also suggests a Celtic origin, but refers to a different set of words. Cf. Irish brath, treachery, bradack, roguish, brathaim, I betray, Gael. brath, advantage by unfair means, treason, bradag, thievish; W. brad, treason, brada, to plot.

BASALT, l. 2. For 'an African wood,' read 'an African word.'

BASIL. Not (F., - Gk.), but (F., - L., - Gk.).

BASILISK. For Βασίλισκος, read Βασίλισκος.

BASTILE, BASTION, BATTLEMENT. Dies refers

these words to Gk. βαρρίσκον, to support, not to G. basil, bast. Accordingly, he separates the O. F. basil, a pack-saddle, from G. basil. The matter is as yet hardly settled.

BATHE. For báthian, read batian.

BATTEN (1). Cf. also Swed. báttnad, profit, advantage; from báta, to profit. But these forms have a different vowel-sound, and are more closely allied to Icel. bata than to batna.

BAUBLE (2), l. 1. For (F., - Ital., - C.), read (F., - Ital.). See the context.

BAULK, the same as BALK, q. v.

BE. For 'Gael. bé, to exist,' read 'Gael. bé, was; ' and for 'W. bys, to live, exist,' read 'W. bod, to be.'

BEADLE. For (E.), read (F., - M. H. G.). Certainly not English; but a French form. The A. S. bydel [not býdel, as printed] would only have given a M. E. form budol or bidel. Both these forms, in fact, occur; budol in the Owl and Nightingale, 1167; bidel in the Ormulum, 633, 9189, 9533. Budel is a later form, borrowed from O. F. bedal (later bedoun, as in Cotgrave).—M. H. G. bütel (mod. G. büttel), a beadle; O. H. G. putil.—O. H. G. put-, stem of the pt. t. pl. of piutan, protan, to offer, shew, proclaim, cognate with A. S. beddan, to bid, proclaim; see BID (2). In precisely the same way the A. S. bydel is derived (by vowel-change of u to y) from bud-on, pt. t. pl. of beddan, to bid. The adoption of O. F. budal in place of the native word is remarkable. This O. F. budal was Latinised as bedellus, whence the term enquire bedell, as used in Cambridge University.

BEAGLE. M. E. begle, Squire of Low Degree, 771. It is printed as bogelle in Wright's Voc. i. 251, col. 1, which looks like a mistake for begalle.

BEAKER. So also Swed. bägare, Dan. bæger, a beaker; though these forms are of small value, being likewise borrowed from Low Latin.

BEAN, l. 2. For 'A. S. bean,' read 'A. S. bedan.'

BEAR (2), l. 2. Dele Lat. fera, which is cognate with E. dear.

BEARD, l. 1. Dele berde; the M. E. form is berd.

BECKON. See Lake i. 72, where we find the A. S. pres. part. blicniende, baicniende, bicniende.

BED, l. 1. For '291,' read '295, or in the six-text edition, 293,' where the form used is beddes, gen. case. The nom. is bed, Aycenbite of Inwyt, p. 31, l. 13.

BEDDILL; see remarks upon Beadle (above).

BEDRIDDEN, l. 6. The reference is to the first edition; in the second edition the suggestion is withdrawn.

BEECH, l. 1. For 'M. E. beech,' read 'M. E. beche,' which is the form given, in the passage referred to, in Tyrwhitt's edition; beech being a mere misprint. The A. S. bēce is not 'unauthenticated'; we find 'Fagus, bēce' in Wright's Vocab. i. 285, col. 1, as is pointed out in Stratmann's Dictionary. I also find 'Esculus, bēce,' id. ii. 29 (11th cent.).

BEEFEATER. It occurs in the Spectator, no. 625 (1714); and in the old play of Histriomastix, iii. 1. 99; see Simpson, School of Shakespeare, ii. 47. The word is wrongly marked (E.), as it is a hybrid. It is to be particularly observed that the word 'loaf-eater' to signify a servant occurs even in Anglo-Saxon! So little is it a new term. 'Gif man ceorlas hláf-étan ofslahð'—if any one slays a churl's loaf-eater; Laws of King Æthelberht, § 25; in Thorpe's Anc. Laws, i. 8. Mr. Thorpe notes: 'lit. the loaf-eater, and consequently a domestic or menial servant.'

BEER, ll. 9 and 11. In l. 9, for barley, read berm (1), yeast; and in l. 11, for Barloy, read Barim (1). The word beer may perhaps be referred to BHUR, by-form of BHAR, to be unquiet (hence, to ferment); see Fick, i. 695. But barley is allied to L. far, from BHAR, to bear. I did not intend to suggest a connection between the words beer and barley, as I believe them to be etymologically distinct, whatever other connection there may be between them. I wrote barley for berm, by mistake.

BEGUINE; p. 58, l. 18. By the expression '-alt' is an O. F. suffix that is interchangeable with '-ard,' I merely mean to compare '-alt' and '-ard' as to their use and force. Etymologically, they are of different origin, being allied, respectively, to G. wald, power, and Aart, hard.

BEHAVE, l. 5. For '1566,' read '1567.' Cf. also 'the whiche . . behaynd Ayn relygously,' Monk of Evesham, c. 47, p. 95; 'Wyth an enarrabelle gestur and behawing of gladnes'; id. c. 19, p. 47.

BELEAGUER, l. 8. For 'Swed. beläggra,' read 'Swed. belägra.'

BELFRY. A very early use of O. F. hierfrois as a tower for bells, occurs in the following. 'Definiendo, quod campana, seu campana, et campanile, quod hierfrois dicitur'; Constitutio, [dated] Nov. 7, 1226; in Pertz, Monumenta Germaniae, Legg. ii. 257 (J. H. Hessels).

BELLOW, l. 6. For 'Fick, ii. 442,' read 'Fick, ii. 422.'

BELLY, l. 5. For 'Dan. belg,' read 'Dan. belg.'

BELT. The A. S. belt appears in a Glossary pr. in Mone's Quellen und Forschungen, Aachen, 1830, p. 341, where we find: 'balthen, belt.' Also: 'Balteum, gyrdel, oðða belt'; Wright's Voc. ii. 11 (11th cent.).

BERYL. The original of Gk. βήρυλλος may be the Skt. vaidūrya. Vaidūrya has been recognised as the original of the Greek βήρυλλος, a very ingenious conjecture, either of Weber's or of Pott's, considering that lingual d has a sound akin to r, and ry may be changed to ly and ll (Weber, Omina, p. 326). The Pers. billaw or ballār, which Skeat gives as the etymon of βήρυλλος, is of Arabic origin, means crystal, and could hardly have found its way into Greek at so early a time'; Selected Essays, by Max Muller, 1881, ii. 352.

BESOM, l. 3. Stratmann objects to the A. S. besum; perhaps I should have said besum. It occurs in one of the passages referred to. In Matt. xii. 44, most MSS. have besum, dat. pl., but two MSS. have besumum.

BESTRAD. Add: So also Swed. stadd, circumstanced; vare stadd i fara, to be in danger; &c.

BEVEL. Mod. F. bevel (Littré).

BLAS. Add: if this be right, the etymology is from bi, double; and facies, a face.

BID (1). Add: So also Swed. bedja, to pray, pt. t. bad; Dan. bede, to pray, pt. t. bad.

BID (2). So also Icel. bjóða, to bid, pt. t. beð; Swed. bjuda, Dan. byde; &c.

BIESTINGS, ll. 3, 4. Read bjisting, bjist, bedat, with accents.

BIGGIN, BIGGEN, a night-cap. (F.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, iv. 5. 27. — O. F. beguin, 'a biggin for a child'; Cot. He also gives beguiner, to put on a biggin. Doubtless named from a resemblance to the caps worn by the nuns called Beguines, who, as Cotgrave remarks, 'commonly be all old, or well in years.' See Beguine. ¶ Biggin also occurs as a spelling of piggin.

BIGHT. M. E. byht, a bend; spelt byss, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1349. Stratmann also gives a reference to Reliq. Antiq. i. 190. The A. S. form is byht, but this only occurs in a vague and extended sense; see Grein. The modern sense is due to Scand. influence.

BIGOT. The view here advocated was combated by Mr. Wedgwood in a letter which appeared in the Academy, Aug. 9, 1879.

BILLION. To be marked as (F., = L.). See Million.

BIRD. Stratmann challenges the derivation of A. S. bridd or bridd from bridas; but I do not give that derivation. I merely suggest a connection; and I still hold that the Teut. base is BRU, whence also A. S. brōdan, to brew, brun, broth, brōð, broth, brodd, bread, brād, a brood, brādan, to breed, &c.; see Fick, iii. 217. If this be not the right form of the base, what is?

BISSON. Dr. Stratmann well suggests that the right form of the A. S. word is biseno, not a corruption of the pres. part. bisend, but a correct form; compounded of bi, prefix, and the A. S. seno, visible, manifest, clear, usually written gese or gese (the prefix ge-making little difference); see Grein, l. 462. Thus biseno would mean 'clear when near at hand,' hence short-sighted. The A. S. gese is allied to sedes, to see.

BIT, (1) and (2). Bit (1) is A. S. bite, masc., gen. bitan; but A. S. bite, gen. bites, is mod. E. bite (Stratmann). As to the former, cf. 'after þam bitan,' after the bit (mortel), John xiii. 27; 'Frustum, bite,' Wright's Voc. ii. 151.

BITCH. 'Canicala, bices,' Wright's Voc. ii. 23 (11th cent.).

BITTERN. Cf. Lat. biturs, babers, to cry as a bittern; babari, to yelp. Almost certainly of imitative origin.

BIZARRE. Spelt bazarr, Gentleman Instructed, p. 559, 10th ed. 1733 (Davies). Probably from Basque bazar, a beard; so that Span. bazorro may have meant bearded, and hence valiant; just as Span. bigote means a moustache, but hombres de bigotes means a man of spirit and vigour.

BLAIN, l. 6. For blawen, read blāwan. For A. S. blāgan, see A. S. Leechdoms, i. 280, l. 1; ii. 128, l. 21.

BLAME. Not (F., = Gk.), but (F., = L., = Gk.).

BLARE. Cf. O. Du. blaren, 'to lowe as a cowe'; Hexham.

BLASPHEME. Not (Gk.), but (L., = Gk.).

BLAST. So also Swed. bläst, wind, blowing weather; blåsa, to blow. Widegren also has the form blast, a blast or gust of wind.

BLAZE. In Mone's Quellen und Forschungen, we find in a glossary the entries: 'facula, blaw' (sic), p. 402; 'facula [abl.], blawen', p. 351; 'flamme, blawen' (pl.), p. 393; 'faculus, Matsum', p. 403. Note also: 'Lampas, blaw,' Wright's Voc. i. 26, col. 2.

BLEACH, ll. 1 and 2. For 'M. E. blakien ... Grein, l. 124,' read 'M. E. blechen, Ancren Riwe, p. 324, l. 1. = A. S. blācan, to bleach; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, ed. Smith, i. 1, l. 20. = A. S. blāc, pale; see Blak (1). It may be added that blācan and blācian are equivalent forms, the former resulting from the latter by the usual vowel-change of a to ā, when i follows.

BLEAK (1), l. 2. For bleike, read blēik; the form blēike is plural. In l. 4, the form blēg is not 'Du.' but 'Danish.'

BLEAR, and BLEAR-EYED. Under both these words, for 'Swed. blira,' read 'Swed. blira.'

BLESS. The etymology is entirely wrong. In Anglia, iii. 1. 156, Mr. Sweet has completely solved this word. The old spelling is blesian (with a d) in the Kentish Psalter, iii. 9, v. 12, ix. 4, xv. 7, &c. The fullest form is blesdian, occurring in the O. Northumb. glosses, Matt. xi. 9, xxiii. 39, xxv. 34, xxvi. 26. 'These forms point to an orig. blēdian', which cannot be anything else than a derivative of blēd, blood. The orig. meaning of bles was therefore to redder with blood, and in heathen time it was no doubt primarily used in the sense of consecrating the altar by sprinkling it with the blood of the sacrifice.' This solution is certain. The Durham Ritual, ed. Stevenson (Surtees Soc.), has gibloodunge, blessing, blōstung, blessing, gibloodendel, didat bless, all on p. 117; and the word is common in the Ritual.

BLISTER, l. 9. For 'Swed. blasa,' read 'Swed. blåsa.'

BLITHE. So also Du. blijde, blijd, blij, glad, cheerful; Dan. and Swed. blid, mild, gentle. The connection with blisk is doubtful. Dele section B of this article. The Teut. type is BLITHA, Fick, iii. 222. Root unknown.

BLOND, l. 6. Before 'hair of mingled colour,' insert 'having.'

BLOTCH. Add: Cockayne renders A. S. blanc (dat. case) by 'blotch'; see A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 8, l. 1. Blotch might answer to an A. S. verb blacian, formed from blanc, black. Indeed, Ettmüller gives blacian, a biggin for a child'; but he has been misled; in both places, the word is blācian, to grow bleak or pale; see Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 154, l. 7; p. 212, l. 7.

BLUSH, l. 3. It answers still better to A. S. blūscan, to glow, for which Stratmann refers us to Mone, Quellen und Forschungen (Aachen, 1830), p. 355, where we find: 'Rutilare, bliscan, bliscan.'

BLUSTER. Stratmann cites M. E. blusteren, Allit. Poems, ii. 886, P. Plowman, B. v. 521; but the sense of this verb is to wander aimlessly about, and it does not at all answer to bluster in the modern sense. It means nearly the same as blunder.

BOAR, l. 3. For 'Russ. borob,' read 'boros.'

BODE. It should have been explicitly stated that the A. S. boe, a message, is derived from the stem of boð-en, pp. of boðan, to bid. So also Icel. boð, a bid, offer, is derived from the stem of boð-und, pp. of boða, to bid. So also Swed. boð, an offer, boð, a messenger, message, are from boð-en, pp. of boða, to bid; and Dan. boð, a message, is from boð-et, pp. of bojde, to bid. Thus the precise relationship of bode to boð, is completely made out.

BOIL (2). The A. S. byle (or byle) occurs in a gloss. 'Francus, uerite [wart], byle,' Wright's Voc. ii. 151. Add Swed. boild, a boil, tumour (where the d is excrement); also Swed. bula, a bump, swelling. All the forms cited are from a base BUL, whence Goth. ufbuljan, to puff up. The Icel. boyla, a swelling, also belongs here; since the Icel. ey (by the usual vowel-change) is due to aw. The mod. E. word ought rather to be bile, as it is provincially; the diphthong oi is a substitution due to confusion with the verb boil, of F. origin. I now doubt the connection with bulge.

BOLE, l. 1. The M. E. bole cited is the dat. case. Stratmann gives the nom. as bol, but without a reference.

BOLT. 'Catapulta, aperu, boltas,' Wright's Voc. ii. 18 (11th cent.). The Low L. catapulta means a bolt as well as a catapult.

BONFIRE. The explanation is right; but the word is older than I thought. The entry 'Banefire, ignis ossium' occurs in the Catholicum Anglicum, a. d. 1483, ed. S. J. Hertridge (E. E. T. S.).

BORROW. It should have been explicitly stated that the A. S. borg, a pledge, is derived from the stem of borg-en, pp. of borgan, to protect. So also Du. borg is from the stem of ge-borg-en, pp. of Du. bergen, to save.

BOUDOIR. Perhaps allied to Pout, q. v.

BOUND (2). The Breton bōden, a cluster of trees, a thicket, is given in Legonidec, and is derived from Bret. bōd, a tuft of trees, a cluster, clearly the same word as Irish boi, a cluster, bunch. The suggested connection with Gael. boan and E. bottom must be given up.

BOUQUET. To be marked as (F., = Low L., = Teut.).

BOURN. To be marked as (F., = C.).

BOUT, BOUGHT. The Dan. bugt, sb., a bend, is not derived from bugen, to bend; but bugt, sb., and buger, intrans. verb, are both alike derived from the base bug-, occurring in Icel. bug-ast, pt. t. pl. (reflexive) of the lost strong verb byga?, cognate with

A. S. beigan, to bend. The same base occurs again in A. S. bug-on, pt. t. pl. of bedgan (as before). We also find bugt in Swedish, meaning 'bend, curve, bent, direction, gulf, bay;' and the Swed. weak verb buga, to bow, make a bow, bend down.

BOW (1). Add Swed. buga, to bow down, though this is only a weak verb; more important are the Icel. buginn and bugusk, occurring as the pp. and pt. t. pl. (reflexive) of a lost strong verb buga (cognate with the A. S. beigan), of which the pt. t. must have been bugg, and the Teut. base BUG, answering to Aryan $\sqrt{\text{BHUGH}}$, as already given. In the list of derived words, strike out bow (of a ship), bow-line, bow-sprit, bow-er, which belong to Bow (4). See Bowline (below).

BOWER, l. 3. For 'M. E. bowe,' read 'M. E. bour, spelt bour, Havelok, 3072.' In the passage cited from Chaucer, the form is bowre, gen. sing.

BOWLINE, l. 1. The definition 'a line to keep a sail in a bow' cannot be right, though it agrees with what is commonly given in Webster's Dictionary and elsewhere. The Icel. form of the word, bog-lína, distinctly links it with Icel. bógr, the bow of a ship; see Bow (4). It follows that it has no etymological connection with the verb bow, to bend, a fact which seems never to have been hitherto suspected by any writer of an English dictionary. As a fact, the bow-line keeps a sail straight, and prevents it from being bowed. Webster defines it as 'a rope fastened near the middle of the leech or perpendicular edge of the square sails by subordinate parts called bridles, and used to keep the weather edge of the sail tight forward, when the ship is close-hauled. The true sense is 'side-line,' and it takes its name from being attached to the side or shoulder of the sail. See the Icel. Dict., s. v. bógr, which is explained as 'the shoulder, shoulder-piece, bow of a ship; also used of the side of a person or thing; á hina bógrinn, on this side, á báða bóga, on both sides.' It follows that the words which take the form bow require special care. On the one hand, we have bow (1), bow (2), bow (3), all from the $\sqrt{\text{BHUGH}}$; on the other, we have bow (4) and bow-line, allied to bougá and to the Skt. báhu, an arm, from a different root.

BOX (4). In the phr. 'to bow the compass,' the word is probably Spanish. = Span. bozar, to sail round an island (Meadows). The Span. sb. bow means a box-tree, a piece of box-wood, and the act of doubling a cape. Diez points out that Span. brunala or brunjala, a sea-compass, has an intrusive r, and is derived from Lat. basus, box-tree. It is therefore probable that there is a real connection between bow (4) and box (1).

BRACE. The O. F. brace once actually meant 'the two arms;' see Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française. This explains E. brace in the sense of 'pair.'

BRACELET. An example of O. F. bracel, a defence for the arm, may be found in Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française.

BRACKET. The word actually occurs as early as in Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627, with the remarkable spelling bragget, and is explained to mean 'a corbell.' This completely alters the case, and suggests a totally different origin. It seems to be allied to O. F. bragnette, 'a codpiece,' Cot., and to Span. braguita, 'the opening of the forepart of a pair of breeches, in architecture, a kind of quarter or projecting mould,' Newman. If so, it must be allied to E. breeches. Phillips, ed. 1706, explains brackets as small knees, or pieces of wood used to support galleries in ships, like Span. bragada de una curva, the throat of a knee of timber (as a nautical term), derived from Span. braga, breeches.

BRAD, l. 1. We actually find M. E. brad, used to gloss L. oculus (= oculus) in Wright's Voc. i. 234, col. 2, l. 2. But this is a Northern form; the same Vocabulary has gat for 'goat,' and re for 'roe,' p. 219. This is one more proof of its Scand. origin.

BRAG, l. 10. For $\sqrt{\text{BHRAGH}}$, read $\sqrt{\text{BHRAG}}$.

BRAHMIN, l. 7. For Skt. brahman, &c., read Skt. bráhmāna, a brahman; allied to Skt. brahman, &c.

BRAID, l. 8. This is wrong; the Icel. brögða is not from brögð, sb., but conversely; for brögða is a strong verb, pt. t. bráð, pp. brögðinn. This does not much affect the argument in section C; the Teut. base is still BRAGD, as in Fick, iii. 215. Fick remarks that the combination gd does not occur in any other Teut. base; whence I conclude, as before, that BRAGD is probably an extension from a base BRAG or BRAH, answering to $\sqrt{\text{BHRAG}}$, to shine, closely allied to $\sqrt{\text{BHRAG}}$, Fick, i. 152.

BRAIL. On p. 74, for BRAIL, read BRAIL.

BRAKE. Cf. also Swed. linbråda, i. e. a flax-brake, from lin, flax. Tredgold, in his treatise on Railroads, London, 1825, gives a full account of the use of the brake-wheel as applied to locomotives; N. and Q. 4 S. xi. 428.

BRAVADO. Strike out the words between square brackets in l. 3. Minsheu's Span. Dict., 1623, gives Span. bravada, 'a bravado.'

The fact seems to have been that the English turned -oda into -ada in certain words, such as barriada, embuscado, &c.

BRAZE (2). To be marked as (E.). We actually find 'acro, ie brauze,' in Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 215, l. 17.

BREED. The A. S. Dictionary does not properly authorise this word. Yet it occurs (as Mr. Sweet points out) in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 10, in a passage which also has the rare sb. bræd. It is there said of bees, that 'of þám bunige hi brædð beora bræd,' i. e. with the honey they nourish their brood. This fixes the word beyond dispute; so that A. S. brædan is derived from bræd, a brood (by vowel-change from ð to d), precisely as fedan, to feed, is from foð, food.

BREESE. Stratmann's Dictionary greatly helps us here; the M. E. form is bræse, Wright's Voc. i. 255, col. 2 (where crætrum must surely be a misprint for ostrum). The A. S. forms bræsa, bræsa, are both authorised, occurring in glosses; see Leo's Glossar. Leo takes bræsa to result from bræmas by loss of m, and the words are obviously very closely related. Hence the greater part of my article may stand. Cf. also Swed. bröms, a horse-fly.

BREEZE, subat., cinders. The following note is by Mr. Nicol. 'Mr. Skeat, who explains bræsa as a name given in London to ashes and cinders used instead of coal in brick-making, identifies the word with the Devonshire bris, "dust," "rubbish," which he and his predecessors derive, no doubt correctly, from F. bru, "breakage," formerly also "fragments." The meanings, however, of bræsa and bris do not agree, for bræsa, far from being dust or rubbish, is the valuable ashes and cinders separated from dust and rubbish heaps; and though F. bru du charbon de terre is "coaldust" or "small coal," bris alone has not this meaning. The forms differ still more, both the vowels and the final consonants of bræsa and bris being irreconcilable. On the other hand, bræsa agrees phonetically exactly with O. F. bræsa, originally "live coals," afterwards also "cinders," whose æ corresponds regularly to the accented e of its Teutonic primitive brasa (which exists in the Swedish brasa, "fire," and in the verb brasa, found, with slightly varying meanings, in all the Scand. languages). The original vowel being kept when unaccented, appears in the F. verb braser, and in the derivative from which, as is well known, comes the Eng. brasier (brasier), "a pan to hold live coals." Having only recent examples of Engl. bræsa, I do not know whether the spelling with æ is Early Mod., and consequently shows that in Mid. Engl. the word had æ (close), the invariable representative of the identical O. F. sound; if it is, it makes the formal identity of E. bræsa and O. F. bræsa certain. The Mod. F. spelling brasin with ai is, like clair, pair, ais for O. F. cler, per, de, simply an orthographical recognition of the Late Old or Early Mod. F. change of æ to ai in these words; Palgrave, in translating "cinders of coles" by bræsa, keeps the O. F. vowel-letter. Any difficulty as to the meaning is, I think, removed by the fact that (as may be seen in Bellows's excellent little pocket dictionary, 1877, under bræsa), F. bræsa is still the correct technical translation of Engl. bræsa, cinders.—H. Nicol. Mr. Nicol subsequently sent me the following note. 'It turns out that in some O. F. dialects there really was a form brasin with the diphthong ai, corresponding to a primitive brasin (Ital. brasin).'

BREW, l. 3. For gabrown, read gabrown.

BROIL (1), to fry, roast over hot coals. (F., = Teut.) Dele section β of this article. The M. E. broylan, or broilun clearly answers, as Stratmann points out, to O. F. broiller, to broil, grill, roast, given in Roquefort with a quotation from the Image du Monde. And this O. F. verb can hardly be other than an extension of O. F. bruer (mod. F. brûir) used in the same sense, for which see Littré and Roquefort; the mod. F. brûir merely means 'to blight.' This O. F. bruer is of Teut. origin; from the verb represented by M. H. G. brüjan, brüagen, brüen, to unge, burn, G. brühen; to scald, Da. brüjese, to brew, hatch, grow very hot; which are clearly allied to E. brue. See Brew. ¶ That the F. word is difficult, appears from the dictionaries. Brachet gives it up; Roquefort tries to get brûir out of Lat. urere (?); Hamilton connects it with L. pruina. But see Littré, Scheler, and Burguy.

BROIL (2), a disturbance, tumult. (F.) Dele section β of this article. As to the etymology of F. broillier, to disorder, I am at a loss. We must connect it with Ital. broglio, 'a hurle burle, a confusion, a huddle, a cowl,' Florio; and with brogliare, 'to pill, spoil, marre, waste, confound, mangle, toss, disorder,' id. Diez connects broglio with Low L. brogilus, also broilus, broilum, a park, or enclosure where animals were kept for the chase, which agrees with O. Ital. broilo or broilo, explained by Florio as a kitchen-garden, mod. Ital. brovato, a garden. Cf. also Port. brocha, the knob out of which a bud rises, abrolhar, to bud, blossom, G. brühl, a marshy place overgrown with bushes. The notion seems to be that, from a substantive meaning a park or grove, also a thicket, or overgrowth of bushes, was formed a verb signifying to be confused or entangled. The reader must consult Diez, Scheler, and Littré. In Mahn's Webster a heap of supposed cognates are given, many of which I cannot find, and others do not seem to agree with the interpretation given. I cannot think that the word is, as yet, fully solved.

BROOD. See note on Breed (above).

BROOM. l. 1. For 'M. E. brōma,' read 'M. E. brōm.'

BROTHER. l. 4. For 'G. brüder,' read 'G. bruder, pl. brüder.'

BROW. Also A. S. brōw. We find acc. pl. brōwas, dat. pl. brōwum, in A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 38. Also A. S. brēw; 'Palpebræ, brēwæ,' Wright's Voc. i. 43, col. 2. The pl. brēwas also occurs in Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 28, ed. Sweet, p. 192.

BRUISE. l. 7. The remark is wrong. The A. S. brýsan is thoroughly authorised; not only does it occur in Be Domes Dæge, ed. Lumby, l. 49, but in Matt. xxi. 44, we have both tō-brýsed, i. e. utterly crushed, and tō-brýst, 3 p. s. pr. t. of the compound verb tō-brýsan. Yet there is no A. S. word from which brýsan can well be derived, and it is tempting to suppose it of Celtic origin, from Gael. and Irish bris, to break. Indeed, the F. bruier may be of Celtic origin also; see Littré. More light is desired.

BUFFALO. Perhaps the Gk. βούβαλος is a foreign word in Gk., its Gk. form being merely influenced by βοῦς. Βουβαλος was originally an antelope, not a wild ox. Perhaps N. African. See N. and Q. 3 S. ix. 1 (G. C. Lewes).

BUFFOON. Not (Span.), but (F.). From F. buffon. See remarks on Balloon (above).

BUILD. I now find that the A. S. byldan, to build, is authorised; but I do not think it is at all an early word. It makes little ultimate difference, but enables us to trace the word quite clearly. Thus mod. E. build = A. S. byldan, to build, formed (by vowel-change of e to y) from A. S. bold, a dwelling. This A. S. bold has been shewn to be of Scand. origin. The verb and sb. occur together in the very first line of the short poem entitled 'The Grave,' pr. in Thorpe's Anallecta Anglo-Saxonica, p. 153. 'De was bold geyld'—for thee was a dwelling built. Just below, the pp. is spelt ibylt, which is quite a late spelling.

BULB. Prof. Postgate takes L. bulbus to be merely borrowed from Gk. βούβος, and says that we may then assign to 'bulb' or 'onion' the sense of 'edible root,' from \surd GAR, to devour, eat, whence Gk. βούβος, glutinous, βούβος, meat; cf. γούβος, explained βούβος, by Hesychius, from the same \surd GAR. See VORACIOUS.

BULLACE. l. 4. For 'Irish bulas, a prune,' read 'Irish bulistair, a bullace, a sloe; the form bulas, quoted by O'Reilly, is taken from Shaw's Gaelic Dictionary, and is Gaelic, not Irish.'

BULLION. sect. B. I am asked to explain this. I find mod. F. billon explained in Hamilton as copper coin, base coin, also, the place where base coin is carried to be melted and coined again. This last sense precisely agrees with that of O. F. bullione, the mint. It is remarkable that, as shewn in Trench, Select Glossary, the E. bullion was once used as an equivalent for F. billon in the sense of debased coin. There is thus abundant confusion between E. bullion and F. billon, obviously due to the similarity in sound, and to the preservation of the O. F. word in E., while it was lost in French. We may also note that one sense of bullion in Blount's Nomolexicon is 'sometimes the King's Exchange or place, whether [whither] gold in the lump is brought to be tried or exchanged; 27 Edw. 3. Stat. 2. cap. 14; 4 Hen. 4. cap. 10.' Spelt bulion, Arnold's Chron., ed. 1811, p. 329.

BULBUSH; see under Rush (2).

BULWARK. Spelt bulwarke; Life of Lord Grey of Wilton (C. S.), p. 24; date, before 1562. Spelt bulwarke in Holinshed (see the same page). It also occurs in Skelton, Erle of Northumberlande, l. 48; ed. Dyce, i. 8; and the pl. bulwarhis is in Arnold's Chronicle, ed. 1811, p. 287.

BUMPKIN. This is right. We find Du. boom, '(1) a tree, (2) a barre', Hexham; also O. Du. boomhen, 'a little tree,' id.; proving that boomhen was in use as the dimin. of boom.

BUN. The word occurs rather early; see bonnes, pl. buns, in Myroure of Our Lady, p. xxxiii. l. 3. Bunne, a kind of white bread; Liber Albus (Rolls ed.) iii. 423, 468, Edw. iii. anno xlvto, i. e. A. D. 1371-2. (A. L. Mayhew.)

BUNGALOW. The Bengali word is bānglā, a thatched cottage, from Bānga, i. e. Bengal; Wilson, Indian Terms, p. 59.

BUNION. Not (Ital., = F., = Scand.), but (Ital., = Scand., or Teut.). In l. 4, read 'a boil or blain; the same as O. F. buene,' &c.

BUNTING (1), l. 10. For 'W. buntin, buntinog,' read 'W. bontin, bontinog.'

BURDEN (2). See bourdon in Littré. Perhaps we ought to separate bourdon, a droning sound, from dourdon in the sense of pilgrim's staff. If so, the view taken by Diez requires some correction.

BURLY. Not (E.), but (C. ?), with E. suffix.

BUSKIN. Sewel gives Du. brooskens, 'buskins.'

BUTLER. Not (F., = Gk.), but (F., = Low L., = Gk.).

CAD. That this is short for cadis, has been disputed. But any one who will read the article on cadis in the larger edition of Jameson's Dict., ought to be satisfied. We there find 'the cadis are a fraternity who run errands,' &c. 'I had then no knowledge of the comodys, a very useful black-guard, who.. go of errands; and though they are wretches, that in rags lye upon the streets at night, yet are they often considerably trusted,' &c.

CADET. M. Paul Meyer informs me that cadet is probably a Gascon form, and that it does not represent Low Lat. capitellum, but Low Lat. capitellum, by a habit of Gascon which puts final t for final ll.

CALLOW. The lost initial s appears in Swed. skallig, bald, allied to skala, to peel, from the \surd SKAR, to shear, as already stated. See further under Scall.

CALM. Cf. Port. calma, heat.

CALTHEROP, CALTRAP, a star-thistle, a ball with spikes for annoying cavalry. (L. and Teut.?) Calthrop is gen. used to denote a ball stuck with four spikes, so arranged that one of them points upwards while the other three rest on the ground. 'Caltrappe, chaussetrappe;' Palsgrave. 'Tribulus marinus, calketrappe, sea-bistel;' Reliq. Antiq. i. 37. M. E. kalketrappe, P. Plowman, C. xxi. 296. A. S. calcetrappe, star-thistle, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 376. The most likely solution of this difficult word is to derive it from Lat. calci-, crude form of calcis, the heel, and a Latinised form of the Teutonic word trap. Scheler explains F. chaussetrappe from a barbarous Lat. calcitrappa, that which entrap the heel, which will equally well explain the A. S. calcetrappe. Florio gives O. Ital. calcetrappa, star-thistle, where calca- is plainly supposed to be allied to calcere, to tread, the form of the Ital. word being slightly altered in order to suggest this sense. See further under Calc and Trap. The usual Ital. word for calthrop, viz. tribulus, is a totally different word, and plainly derived from tribulus, a calthrop, also a kind of thistle. We cannot possibly derive the F. -trappe in chaussetrappe from L. tribulus, which is what Mahu seems to suggest. See my note to P. Plowman, C. xxi. 296; also Catholicon Anglicum, p. 52, note 3.

CALVE. The A. S. caelfan really occurs. Mr. Sweet refers me to Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 300, last line, q. v. It is properly formed, from A. S. caelf, a calf.

CAMLETT. Of Arabic origin; not from camel, but from Arab. khāmlat, from khāml, pile, plush; Marco Polo, ed. Yule, i. 248. We find Arab. khāmlat, khāmalat, 'camelot, silk and camel's hair, also, all silk or velvet,' Rich. Dict. p. 628; khāml, 'the skirts or flaps of a garment, a carpet with a long pile, a cushion on a saddle, plumage of an ostrich;' ibid. Thus it appears that camel's hair was sometimes used for making it, so that confusion with camel was inevitable.

CAMPHOR. Spelt camfers in Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 235 (about 1502).

CANDY. But the Arab. word may be of Aryan origin. Cf. Skt. khānd, to cut or break in pieces, to bite, khānda, a piece; whence khāndava, sweet-meats.

CANNEL-COAL. Occurs in 1673; see N. and Q. 3 S. vii. 485 'The Cannel, or Candle, coal;' North, Life of Lord Guildford, i. 278, and ed. 1808 (Davies); Defoe, Tour through Gt. Britain, iii. 248, 4th ed. 1748 (id.).

CANTLE, a piece. (F., = Teut.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 100. M. E. cantel, Chaucer, C. T. 3010.—O. F. cantel (mod. F. chanteau), a piece, corner, bit; see Littré, s. v. chanteau. The same as Low L. cantellus, a piece; formed with dimin. suffix -ellus from G. kante, a corner; cf. Du. kant, a border, edge, corner. See Cant (2). And see Canton.

CAPE (2). To be marked as (F., = Ital., = L.).

CAPSIZI. The Span. capuzar, mentioned at the end of the article, comes nearest to the E. form.

CAPSTAN. 'Post in a shyppe called cabstayne, cabestain;' Palsgrave.

CARICATURE. Not (Ital., = L.), but (Ital., = C.).

CARK, solicitude, anxiety. (C.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 44. M. E. cark (spelt carke), Gamelyn, 76a. [Somner gives an A. S. carc, but it is a doubtful word; if it be right, the word seems nevertheless to be Celtic, and unallied to E. care.] = W. care, anxiety, solicitude; whence carcus, adj., solicitous. Perhaps the same word as Bret. harg, a load, lurchen, and allied to Charge.

CARNATION. To be marked as (F., = Ital., = L.). Littré gives carnation, but without any earlier authority than Fénelon. It was merely borrowed from Ital. carnagione.

CARRIAGE. I give the etymology under carry. I have been taken to task for not mentioning that the use of the modern E. carriage has been affected by confusion with F. carrosse, a carriage, frequently spelt esrocks in old authors. It seemed to me hardly worth while to mention a fact so obvious, as I had given the reference to Trench's Select Glossary, and I presuppose some knowledge of English literature on the part of readers and critics. All this has nothing to do with the etymology of carriage, which I have given quite correctly from the only possible source.

CASSIA. Not (L., = Heb.), but (L., = Gk., = Heb.).

CAST. The orig. word for 'heap' is still better preserved in the very common Swed. dial. has, a heap, cognate with Icel. his, a pile, heap. See Riets.

CATAMARAN. See Davies, Supplementary Glossary, where extracts are given. It seems to have sometimes meant a fire-ship, and hence a cantankerous old woman. For '(Hindustani),' read '(Hindustani=Tamil).' I have already said the word is of Tamil origin, and means 'tied logs.' I am informed that the Malayalam form of the word is kattamaran, where the derivation is easily traced; viz. from Malayalam hatta, a tie or bond, and Malayalam and Tamil maran, timber. These words are given in H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, pp. 273, 331.

CATABACT, last line. It is much better to separate hypnum from Lat. frango, and to refer the former to \checkmark WARK (no. 355, p. 742).

CATCH. Some have said that catch must be Teutonic, because the pt. t. catcht occurs in Layamon. Not so; for the pt. t. catcht was merely formed by analogy with laeste from M. E. lacchen, used with nearly the same sense as catchen. That the word was borrowed from Picard catcher (Littre, s. v. chauer) is clear from the fact that we also find O. Du. kaete, a chase at tennis, kaete-spel, tennis, kaets-bal = E. catch-ball; see Hexham. These are not true Dutch words, but borrowed from Picard.

CATENARY, belonging to a chain. (L.) Chiefly in the math. phr. a catenary curve, which is the curve in which a chain hangs when supported only at the ends. Formed from L. catena, a chain, with suffix -arius.

CATERAN, a Highland soldier or robber. (Gaelic.) In Waverley, c. xv, Sir W. Scott defines caterans as being 'robbers from the Highlands;' see also Jamieson. = Gael. ceatharnach, a soldier, fighting man; see remarks upon KERN (1) below.

CATES, provisions. (F., = L.) In Baret's Alveary, 1580, we find: 'A Cater, a steward, a maniple, a provider of cates, . . . qui emit opsonia.' Again: 'the Cater buyeth very dere cates;' Horman's Vulgaria. Thus the cates were the provisions bought by the cater, or, as we now say, the caterer, and were thence so called. This is better than deriving cates from O. F. acate immediately. See further under CATER. We may note that Ben Jonson uses the full form acates, Staple of News, Act i, sc. 1, l. 16.

CHAFFER, l. 6. Dele reference to cackchafer.

CHAIN; see Catenary (above).

CHAMPAK, a tree. (Skt.) 'The champak odours fall;' Shelley, Lines to an Indian Air, 11. = Skt. champakā, a tree, the Michelia champaka of Linnaeus (Benfey).

CHAB (2), l. 4. In calling chore a modern Americanism (which it is, see Miss Wetherell's novel called Queechy, ch. 25), I by no means meant to imply that it is not also an old word in English. An American reader has kindly sent me the following quotation: 'God knows how to make the devil do a good chore for a saunt;' A Prospect of Divine Providence, by T. C., M.A., London, 165-, p. 379. I dare say other instances may easily be found; in fact, I have already given chore from Beaumont and Fletcher.

CHATEAU, l. 2. For 'F. chateau,' read 'F. château.' A derivative is châteline, used instead of chaîne châteline, a chain to which keys, &c. are suspended, orig. a chain to which a warder or castellan fastened his keys. Here châteline is fem. of châtelain, adj.; from châtelain, sb., a keeper of a castle = Low Lat. castellanus, adj., from castellum, a castle.

CHEEK. The Swedish word is properly käk, with the sense of 'jaw' only.

CHEQUE. A modern spelling of check, from a connection (which is real) with the word enchiquer. For the etymology, see Check.

CHEST. The etymology given is made yet more probable by comparing Swed. dial. hest, a pebble, borrowed, like the E. word, from the Celtic. Riets assigns no etymology for it; and it is plainly not Teutonic.

CHEVRIL. Not (Gk.), but (L., = Gk.).

CHEVRON, an honourable ordinary in heraldry, in the shape of a reversed V. (F., = L.) Usually said to represent two rafters of the roof of a house; I think it must, in heraldry, rather have had reference to the (gable-like) peak of a saddle, as there is nothing highly honourable in a house-roof. = F. chevron, 'a kid, a chevron in building, a rafter, or sparre'; Cot. Augmentative form of chevre, 'a she-goat,' id. = L. capra, a she-goat; see Caper (1). In the same way the Lat. capreolus meant a prop or support of timber.

CHICKEN. The A. S. form being ciccn, not eycen, we cannot fairly explain eycen as being modified from A. S. cocce, which could only have given eycen. The right explanation is rather, that cock, chuck (a chicken) and chicken, are all from the same imitative ba KUK or KIK, intended to denote the chuckling sound made by domestic fowls. See Chuck (2), and note Shakespeare's use of chuck in the sense of chicken, Macb. iii. 2. 45, and in seven other passages.

CHICORY. Not (F., = Gk.), but (F., = L., = Gk.).

CHIDE. Cf. (perhaps) Dan. hæde, to tire, harass, weary, hied, tired; Swed. dial. heda, to make sorry. But the connection is not clear. Note that the A. S. pt. t. is not chide, as said in most dictionaries, but chidda, Mark, l. 25, viii. 33.

CHIGNON, an arrangement of hair at the back of the head. (F., = L.) F. chignon, properly the back of the neck, lit. a little chain, from the projections of the vertebrae (Littre); the same word as F. chaînon; see Chain.

CHILL. 'Chill, Du. hil, is quite different from M. E. chile, chile; as to the verb chill, M. E. chullen, cf. Grimm's Wörterb. v. 511; Stratmann. It is better then to put aside the M. E. chale, and to keep to chill. I have already given a reference to Trevisa, l. 51, l. 16, where we find 'for all þe chil and greet coldde.' But I now observe that the usual form is not the sb., but the verb chillen, for which Stratmann gives three references besides the one which I give to P. Plozman, C. xviii. 49. This corresponds to O. Du. hullen, hellen, hilden, or holden, 'to be chill and coldish,' Hexham. Here Mr. Sweet comes to our assistance. He observes: 'Chill is generally derived from O. E. [A. S.] ceala, which could only give cool'. But ceala = ceals does not exist. The oldest texts write cali, cale, pointing to hal?. Chill comes from the West Saxon ciela, cyle;' Philolog. Soc. Proceedings, June 3, 1881. Cf. 'Frigus, ciela;' Wright's Voc. ii. 36, col. 2. See note on Cool (below).

CHIMERA. Ben Jonson has the pl. chimæra; Discoveries, de progressu pictura.

CHINK, l. 8. Thorpe prints tsinken; it should be tsinken.

CHINTZ. Not (Hind.), but (Hind., = Skt.). The Hindustani chāit, a spot, is obviously derived from Skt. chaitra, spotted, variegated, orig. visible, clear; from chait, to perceive.

CHISEL. Mr. Nicol remarks that E. chisel is from North F. chisel, not from the form ciel. The etymology given (from Dies) is very forced. It seems much better (with Littre and Mr. Nicol) to take the standard form to be that seen in Ital. cesello, a chisel, answering to a Low Lat. casellum or casellus, from causa, pp. of cadere, to cut. Dies' sole objection seems to be that causa is a passive participle; but the Low Lat. causura meant the right of cutting trees, and the objection is of small weight. In section 7, there is a remarkable oversight; for though we certainly use the spelling scissors (proving a confusion with Lat. scindere), it is equally certain that E. scissors is a corruption of sizars, and is, in fact, nothing but a plural of chisel. See Scissors.

CHOCOLATE. For the Mexican chocolatl, see also Clavigero, Hist. of Mexico, tr. by Cullen, l. 433. Spelt chocolatl, Evelyn's Diary, Jan. 24, 1682. Introduced in England ab. 1650 (Haydn).

CHOIR. Not (F., = L.), but (F., = L., = Gk.).

CHOUGH. Occurs in Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 345.

CHOUSE, l. 2. For 'Johnson,' read 'Jonson.'

CHYME. Not (Gk.), but (L., = Gk.).

CIDER. As to the derivation of F. cidre from L. sicra, all the F. etymologists are agreed. The Lat. sicra became si'ra by rule, then si'ra, and (with excrement d after s) sindra; lastly ndre or cidre. See Brachet and Scheler.

CINCHONA. Not 'Peruvian,' but really 'Spanish.' Although quinine is of Peruvian origin, Cinchona is not so. The usual account is quite true. Linnaeus, in 1743, named the Peruvian bark Cinchona after the countess of Chinchon; he should rather have spelt it Chinchona, but probably thought the initial ch awkward in a Latinized word, especially as the Span. ch is like E. ch in chin. The countess was cured in 1638. See A Memoir of the Lady Ana de Osorio, Countess of Chinchon and Vice-queen of Peru; by C. R. Markham, 1874. Also a note on p. 33 of Peruvian Bark, by the same author, 1880, where he says that 'quinine signifies "bark" in Quichua, [Peruvian], and quinquina is a bark possessing some medical property. Quinine is derived from quina, [but] chinchona from chinchona. Spaniards corrupted the word quina into china, and in homoeopathy the word china is still retained. In 1735, when M. de la Condamine visited Peru, the native name of quina-quina was almost entirely replaced by the Spanish term cascailla, which also means bark.'

CIRCUMAMBULATE, l. 3. For Ambulance, read Ambulation.

CIVIL. We find M. E. civilian, Wiclif's Works, ed. Arnold, l. 32, l. 22.

CLAMP, l. 6. For blompe, read blampen.

CLAP. Not (Scand.), but (E.). There is no authority for A. S. clappen. We do, however, find the sb. clappung. 'Pulsus, clappung'; Wright's Voc. l. 45. Also the verb clappitan, to pulsate, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 68, l. 8. This is sufficient; we may assume a verb clappen.

CLAW. Dels section β. 'Claw is related neither to claw nor claw; the root is to be found in Icel. klá, to claw, strong verb, pt. t. klá, pp. kláinn;' Stratmann. However, Fick (iii. 52) refers both claw and claw to the common Teut. base KLU, which he compares with Lat. gluere, to draw together (whence gluten and E. glue).

CLEAN, ll. 3 and 4. For 'Keltic,' read 'Celtic.'

CLEAVE (a). There may also have been an A. S. strong verb clifan, pt. t. cláf, pp. clifan, but it is extremely hard to trace it. The clearest trace seems to be in the infinitive ðelclifan, Grein, ii. 305.

* CLERESTORY. (F., = L.) 'And all with *clere-story*lyghtys;' Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. li. 'Englaid glittering with many a clere story;' Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 479. It might as well be spelt clere story, since clere is merely the old spelling of clear. So called because it is a story furnished with windows, rather than because 'it rises clear above the adjoining parts of the building,' as Webster has it. 'The triforium, or series of arches between the nave and clerestory are called la biyrdatoris in the life of Bp. Cardmery;' Oxford Gloss. p. 57; quoted in Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, note on p. 253. See Clear and Story.

CLING. Cf. Swed. klänge, a tendril, a clasper; klänge, to climb. This suggests an ultimate connection with Climb and Climber, as well as with Clump, as already suggested. It is clear that cramp, clump, clap, climb, clamber, all belong ultimately to a Teut. base KRAP, sometimes weakened to KLIP or KLIB; and clung is little more than a variant from a base KLIP, allied to KLIP.

GLOD. Cf. Swed. dial. kladd, a lump of dough, klodd, a lump of snow or clay. The particular form clod, as a variant of clot, may have been of Scand. origin.

GLOT. Cf. 'massa, clyns (sic; for clyns?), clottum;' Mone, Quellen, p. 403.

GLOVE (1). Mr. Nicol points out that the supposed derivation from Spanish is untenable. It is not (Span., = L.), but (F., = L.). It must be a modification of F. clou. We find the pl. clouys, gloves, in the Paston Letters, Nov. 5, 1471 (letter 681); also cloues, Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 99; cloues, id. p. 234; cloues, sing., Catholicum Anglicum, p. 68. Here clou = F. clou; and it is not difficult to see that the pl. clouys may have become cloues. Possibly the form clou arose from a misreading of cloue, the form in which the F. clou was sometimes written in English.

GLOVE (2). Add: M. E. cloue, spelt 'cloue of gartek,' Prompt. Parv. p. 84. The A. S. form was prob. clufa; we only find the pl. clufa, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 336, l. 2. Perhaps the etymology is from A. S. clufan, pt. t. pl. of clafan, to cleave or split off. If so, the name has reference to cleavage, and the word cannot be connected with A. S. cloue or with L. globe.

GLUCK. The A. S. is glucian; cf. A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 220, l. 18.

COARSE. An earlier example occurs in the phrase 'coarse wadmoll,' i. e. coarse wadmoll, in Arnold's Chronicle (about 1502), ed. 1811, p. 236. See Wad, l. 11. Cf. also 'homely and coarse cloth;' Udall, tr. of Erasmus' Apophthegms, b. i. Aristippus, § 4.

COCK (1). Not (F., = L., = Gk.), but (E.). The A. S. sec or secc is not borrowed from F. cog, but occurs early; see Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, c. 63, ed. Sweet, p. 459; and see Matt. xvi. 74. The fact is, that the word is of imitative origin, and therefore appears in the same form in E., F., and Gk. Cf. the extract from Chaucer, already given; also the note on Chickens (above).

COCKLE (1). We find A. S. scocces, acc. pl., sea-cockles, in Ælfric's Colloquy (Piscator). The word is, however, borrowed from Celtic.

COCKNEY, l. 5. For B. x. 207, read B. vi. 187. The W. cognund, being accented on the second syllable, can hardly be compared with M. E. cockney. But M. E. cockney answers precisely to a F. cognud = Low L. cogninatus, and I suspect that Mr. Wedgwood has practically solved this word by suggesting to me that it is founded on L. cognus, a kitchen. We might imagine cogninatus to have meant, as a term of reproach, a vagabond who hang about a kitchen of a large mansion for the sake of what he could get to eat, or a child brought up in the kitchen among servants. We may particularly note F. cogninus, 'a scoundrell, base varlet,' Cot.; cogninar, 'to begge, to play the rogue'; cogninarius, 'beggery'; cognin, 'a beggar, poor sneak.' This suggests that the F. cognin is connected with L. cognus, as to which Lutré and Scheler seem agreed. I think we are now certainly on the right track, and may mark the word as (F., = L.). I would also suggest that the F. cognus, sb., was really due to the verb cognare, which answers to Low L. cognare, to cook, i. e. to serve in a kitchen. The transition in sense from 'serve in a kitchen,' to 'beg in a kitchen,' is very slight, and answers only too well to what we know of human nature, and the fishing habits of the lowest class of scullions, &c. Cogninatus might mean 'attached to a kitchen,' without any great violence being done to the word.

* COCKROACH, a kind of beetle. (Port., = L., = Gk.) 'Cochrocha, a kind of insect;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Without question, it is from the Portuguese carrocha, chafer, beetle, and was introduced into our language by sailors;' F. Hall, Modern English, 1873, p. 128. I suppose it to be allied to Span. caraba, a sort of crab, occasionally used in the sense of earth-beetle. If so, it is a derivative of L. carabos, a kind of sea-crab. = Gk. καράβος, a stag-beetle, a prickly kind of crab. Prob. allied to L. scarabæus, a beetle.

* COLLIE, COLLY, a kind of shepherd's dog. (C.) 'Coaly, Coley, a cur dog;' Brockett's Glossary of N. Eng. Words, 1823. Shepherd-dogs 'in the N. of England are called coolly dogs;' Recreations in Nat. History, London, 1815. = Gael. cuilean, cuilein, a whelp, puppy, cub; Irish cuileann, a whelp, a kitten. Perhaps from Irish and Gael. cu, a dog.

COLON (1), l. 5. For '1571,' read 'about 1471.'

COLONEL. 'Hec was... cornell of the footemen, thoughte that termes in those dayes unused;' Life of Lord Grey (Camden Soc.), p. 1; written A. D. 1575, and referring to 1544.

COMB (a), COOMB, a measure. (Low L., = Gk.) The A. S. combe is, I find, not a fictitious word, but occurs in the sense of 'cup' or 'vessel' in A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 28, l. 9; and again, in the sense of 'coomb' or vessel of certain capacity, in Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 40, l. 5. It is the same as De. hom, 'a hollow vessel or dish to put weate in;' Hexham; G. kumpf, a hollow vessel, a trough. Not a Teutonic word; but borrowed from Low L. combe, a tomb of stone (i. e. a stone trough, and doubtless also used in other senses), which is merely a Latinised form of Gk. κύπελλον, a drinking vessel, hollow cup, bowl, boat; cf. κύπελλον, a hollow vessel, cup, basin. This is nothing but a nasalised form of cup; see further under Cup and Cymbal. The article, in the Dictionary, is completely wrong in every way, which I regret.

COMPASSION, ll. 4 and 6. For compatiri and patiri, read compati and pati.

COMPATIBLE, ll. 6 and 8. For compatiri and patiri, read compati and pati.

COMPOSE. The derivation of F. passer is wrong, because passare and passere are unrelated. See Pose (1). I was misled by Brachet, who says that passus is 'a participle of passere,' which I now hold to be impossible. He does not say where he found passus. Similar corrections must be applied to depos, dispos, &c.

CONCEPTION, CONCENTRE. Not in alphabetical order.

CONCILIATE, l. 3. For 'conclitate,' read 'concliate.'

CONDENSE. (L., = F.) is a misprint for (F., = L.).

CONSECRATE. The word consecrat = consecrated, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. Group B, l. 3207 (Samson).

CONSTABLE, l. 6. For constabularis, read constabularius; the document quoted is the Chronicon Regimonis abbatii Prum, who died A. D. 915; at the year 807.' J. H. Heusels.

CONTRAST. The sb. seems to have been first introduced, and the orig. sense was 'a dispute,' answering to F. contraste, 'with-standing, strife, contention, difference, repugnance;' Cot. Daniel has 'contrast and trouble;' Hist. of Eng. p. 26 (1618). Howell (Letters, vol. i. sect. 6, let. 9) has contrast, from Ital. contrast, explained as 'strife' by Florio. See Davies, Supp. Glossary.

CONTRIVE. Not (F., = L.), but (F., = L. and Gk.). Dale l. 9. about the derivation of G. F. troser. The right derivation is given under Trover. The hint came to me from a note (doubtless by Mr. Nicol) in The Academy, Nov. 9, 1878, p. 457; 'we may note G. Paris's satisfactory etymology of troser = trofare (from tropus, a song), instead of F. turbare, which presents phonetic difficulties, and does not explain troubador.'

* CONUNDRUM. 'I must have my crotchets! And my conundrums!' Ben Jonson, The Fox, Act v. sc. 7. It here means a conceit, device. 'I begin To have strange conundrums in my head;' Massinger, Bondman, Act ii. sc. 3. Again, in Ben Jonson's Masque, called News from the New World, Fact says: 'And I have hope to erect a staple of news ere long, whither all shall be brought, and thence again vented under the name of Staple News, and not trusted to your printed conundrums of the Serpent in Sussex, &c. &c.'

witches bidding the devil to dinner at Derby; news that, when a man seeds them down to the shires where they are said to be done, were never there to be found.' Here comendrum means a box or a comend. The etymology seems hopeless; as a guess, I can imagine it to be a corruption of Lat. comendium, a thing to be attempted, a problem; somewhat as paritot is a corruption of quodlibet. It might thus be an old term of the schools. For the later sense, see Spectator, no. 61, May 10, 1711.

COOL. Note particularly the Icel. strong verb halta, to freeze, pt. t. hal, pp. halinn. The adj. cool is from the pt. tense. The A. S. cooli, cold, sb., is clearly from the same strong verb. See note to Chill (above).

COOLIE, COOLY. 'Tamil hāli, daily hire or wages, a day-labourer, a cooly; the word is originally Tamil, whence it has spread into the other languages [Malayālin, Telugu, Bengālī, Kārnāta]; in Upper India, it bears only its second and apparently subsidiary meaning; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 301.

CORDEUROY. Noticed under Cord. The following should be noted. 'Serges, Duroys, Druggets, Shalloons, &c.; Defoe, Tour through Great Britain, l. 94, 4th ed. 1748 (Davies). Here duroy certainly seems put for F. du roi.

COSTERMONGER. As to the etymology of costard, an apple, I find an excellent suggestion in R. Hogg's Fruit Manual, 4th ed. p. 38. He says: 'The costard is one of our oldest English apples. It is mentioned under the name of "Poma Costard" in the fruiterer's bills of Edw. I, in 1292, at which time it was sold for a shilling a hundred. . . Is it not . . . probable that it is derived from costatus (Anglicé costate, or ribbed), on account of the prominent ribs or angles on its sides?' This idea, as given by a man of practical experience, is worth having, and needs but slight modification. We may, accordingly, derive costard from O. F. coste, a rib (= Lat. costum), with the usual O. F. suffix -ard (= O. H. G. -ard), as in drunk-ard, &c.; and we may explain it as 'the ribbed apple.' The jocular use of costard (as in Shakespeare) in the sense of 'head,' is secondary, and not (as Johnson supposed) original; the name being applied to the head from its roundness, just as it is called a mob (i. e. head). Mr. Hogg also notes that costermonger = costard-monger; which no one doubts.

COSTIVE, adj. 'Maha and E. Müller suggest Ital. costipativo, or Span. costipativo (which, however, mean "constipating," "constriptive," not "constipated") as the immediate origin of this word; Prof. Skeat rightly thinks F. costipé more probable (or, rather, less improbable). His remark, a. v. cost, that F. coster is from L. costare, gives the key to the problem. It is, indeed, obvious that the only language in which Lat. costipatum would have given a form closely resembling E. costive is F., where it would become costé, the Mod. F. costipé being of course a learned word. The loss of the final -d of costé in E. has numerous parallels, as trone (in treasure trone) from trōd, propens (in malice propens) from propens, spurs from aquarri; and the syllable -ev is so like the common termination -iv (or rather Mid. E. -if), that its assimilation to this was almost unavoidable. I had, therefore, no hesitation in assuming the existence of a non-recorded O. F. costé as the source of E. coster; and I have since found a 14th century example of the O. F. word in Littré (under the verb costipare), in the plural form costéens. The E. example given by Mr. Skeat, and presumably about the earliest he had, is from Ben Jonson; but I suppose Richardson's quotation from Drant (whose exact date I do not know) is a little older. The word must have been Mid. E., though the earliest instance I know is in Palgrave (1530), who spells it with the Mid. E. f, and after clearly explaining "Costy/e, as a person is that is no[t] laxe or soluble," mistranslates it by F. costens-gens, which meant "costly." A phonetic feature which I cannot well account for, in the words cost and costive, is that they have ð, instead of s; as the O. F. vowel comes from Lat. s (costare, costipatum), and gives s (spelt se) in Mod. F. coster, we should have expected s, just as in coston, Mod. F. costons (costons is Italian) from costonem (Class. Lat. costonem).—H. Nicol.

COT. In l. 2, for 'A. S. cōta,' read 'A. S. cōt;' and, in l. 6, for 'A. S. cōta,' read 'A. S. cōt.' That is, the right A. S. forms are cōt and cōt. We also find Icel. byta, byra, Swed. dial. hita, a cot, cottage. The common orig. Teut. form is KOTA, a cot; Fick, iii. 47.

COTTON. Not (F. = Arab.), but (F. = Span. = Arab.).

COTTON (2), l. 2. For 'W. cōtton,' read 'W. cōtton.' We also find W. cōtton, of one accord, unanimous; cōtton, accordant, cōtton, to pull together, concur. Cf. W. cōt, together; cōtton, to pull. For examples of the word, see 'If this genre cōtton,' in Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, b. i., ed. Arber, p. 19, l. 8; also, 'John a Style and I cannot cōtton,' Play of Stucley (ab. 1598), l. 299, pr. in Sampson's School of Shakespeare, i. 169.

COULTER, not 'a plough-share,' but 'the fore iron of a plough, with a sharp edge to cut the earth or sod;' Webster.

COUNTERPANE (2). To be marked (F. = L.). In l. 6, for 'quite a distinct word from,' read 'the same word as.'

COURTEBAN. It is actually used in the old sense of 'belonging to a court.' We find: 'Maister Robert Sutton, a courteban of the Court of Rome;' Paston Letters (let. 7), l. 24.

COWL (1). 'I should think all the words cited must have been borrowed from L. ovillus, as certainly the Irish cothal (a cowl) was. Doubtless an ecclesiastical word. The Icel. huff looks as if it had come through the Irish cothal, the th becoming f, as in E. laugh.—A. L. Mayhew. A more probable solution is that Icel. huff is borrowed (like other ecclesiastical terms) from A. S. cufla, and that A. S. cufla was borrowed from the ancient British form of L. ovillus. In either case, cowl is not E., but L.

COOWY. In H. H. Wilson's Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 271, he gives the Hindl form as hoori, corruptly called coowry or coowas; Bengālī hoori, Gujarāthī hoori; explained as a small shell used as coin. Four hooris = 1 ganda, and 80 hooris = 1 pan.

COWSLIP. The M. E. form is actually cowslippe; Wright's Voc. l. 162, l. 9; cowslap, Prompt. Parv. Cf. Swed. cowslägga, a cowslip.

CRACK. Particularly note the gloss: 'crepante, cracandem, cracandem;' Mone, Quellen, p. 331. Also: 'sió corpe call cracande,' the earth all cracked; A. S. Palter, ed. Thorpe, Pa. xlv. 3.

GRAM. There was certainly an A. S. strong verb gramman, pt. t. gram, pp. gramman. The pp. occurs; for I find 'Farna, deramman;' Wright's Voc. l. 35, col. 2. Also 'Farure, deramman,' id. 37, col. 2; where deramman is probably merely a misspelling for deramman, as the gloss is only of the 11th century. Cf. gram.

GRAVAT, l. 13. For 'a. v. corvete,' read 'a. v. corvete.' My eye caught the wrong word.

GRAVEN, adj. 'Mr. Skeat, agreeing with Maha, derives this word from E. grave, but, unlike him, adds that it was a translation or accommodation of Mid. E. graven for gravenant, O. F. gravenant; Matzner and E. Müller simply identify it with gravenant. Mr. Skeat says that the Mid. E. word was really grawend, the Northern participle of grawe, and supports this by the forms grawent in the St. Katharine of about 1200, and grawende in the 15th century Morte Arthur. But neither -ant with i, nor -ende with au, is the ending of the Northern participle; on the contrary, they point clearly to O. F. ant with nasal a. The meaning, too, does not suit; graven originally did not mean "begging quarter," "suing for mercy," as Mr. Skeat says, but "conquered," "overcome"—at he conquesse him graven and overcraven is the phrase in St. Katharine. The sense of gravenant (for gravenant) agrees fairly with that of graven; the form, however, is very unsatisfactory. The hypothesis of assimilation to North E. grawend is inadmissible, as grawend and grawend (or grawend) are, as just shown, distinct in Mid. E. both in sense and form; and as the O. F. gravenant, corresponding to a Lat. form grawendens, never shows a for its second e, nor e between s and a, gravenant cannot come from it. There can, I think, be little doubt that graven is the O. F. participle grawent, or perhaps rather its compound grawend, with the frequent Mid. E. loss of final -d (mentioned before, in treating of costive). As this O. F. word corresponds to a Lat. grawentis, its primitive form, which is not uncommon, was clearly grawentis with e (as in Span. grawentis, and in F. graver from the simple grawere); but the form with a in the first syllable, though anomalous, is at least as common, and is the only one in the Roland (which, unlike most texts, has e in the second syllable—grawentis). The meaning of the O. F. word, originally "to break," agrees as exactly as its form with that of the Mid. E. word. We have in the Roland, "he strikes him who carries the dragon (flag), so that he overthrows both"—ambure grawente; and Philippe de Thaan (Bestiary, l. 248) uses diabie grawentent to express that Christ, after his crucifixion, overcame the devil.—H. Nicol.

CREAM. Dele section β. The vowel-sounds in Lat. cremar and A. S. crem do not agree.

CRIMATE. We actually find the form creme used as a pt. t. as early as 1482; see Warkworth's Chron. ed. Halliwell (Camd. Soc.), p. 1, l. 4.

CRIMP, l. 1. For 'made crisp,' read 'make crisp.'

CRIMSON, l. 5. The O. F. crumysins occurs in the 16th century (Littré).

* CRINGLE, an iron ring strapped to the bolt-rope of a nail. (Scand.) 'Cringle, a kind of wrethe or ring wrought into a rope for the convenience of fastening another rope to it;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1773. Prob. a Northern E. word, of considerable antiquity.—Icel. hringla, a circle, orb, disk (hence, simply a circle or ring); cf. hringlöttr, circular, hringar, pl. the pulleys of a drag-net (whence the E. senec). Allied to hring, adv., around, hringja, to encircle, surround; Swed. bring, prep., around about; Da. bring, a circle, circuit, orb. sphere. Allied to Crinkle, Crings, and Crank (1).

CRIPPLE. The true A. S. form should be crýpel, not crippel. The dat. crýpel actually occurs in the Northumbrian version of Luke v. 24, as a gloss to Lat. paralyticus. We also find A. S. crýpelers, a cripple, lit. 'a creeper'; this form occurs in St. Swithun, ed. Earle, p. 12, l. 17. In l. 9, for bydel, read hydel.

CROSS. Instead of (F., = L.), read (Prov., = L.). There are two M. E. forms of the word, cross and eross; the former is obviously derived from O. F. crois, a cross, from Lat. acc. crux. But this will not account for the form eross, and consequently, the derivation of the mod. E. cross has long been a puzzle. Stratmann compares E. eross with Icel. hras, but this is not to the purpose; for the word hras is merely a borrowed word in Icelandic, and I think it obvious that the Icel. hras was borrowed, like some other ecclesiastical terms, directly from English. Vigfússon remarks that the earliest poets use the Latin form, so that in the Edda we find Aulþynn crási; but later the word hras came in, clearly (in my opinion) as a borrowing from English and not as a mere modification of eross or eross. It remains to point out whence we borrowed this remarkable form. My solution is, that we took it directly from Provençal, at the only period when such a borrowing was possible, viz. during the reign of Richard I, who encouraged the study of that language, and himself composed songs in it which are still extant; and, what is even more to the purpose, himself undertook a crusade. Accordingly, the form eross occurs as early as in Layamon, l. 31386, and in the very early Legend of St. Katharine, l. 757; the earlier text of Layamon takes us back at once to within a few years of Richard's death. That this is the right solution appears to be fully confirmed by the fact that eross is also Provençal; see remarks on Crusade below. Accordingly, the etymology of eross is from Prov. eross or eross, a word in early use; see Bartsch, Chrestomathie Provençale. Lastly, the Prov. eross is from the Lat. crux, acc. of crux, or possibly from the nom. eross itself. I hope this solution may decide a point of some difficulty.

CRUTCHET. M. E. erucha, apparently as a musical term; Catholicon Anglicum, p. 83; Towneley Mysteries, 116.

CRUCIBLE. Not (Low L., = F., = Da.), but (Low L., = F., = C.). The F. crucible is from Celtic, viz. from the word which appears in E. as eruch; see Crook. What I have given is the derivation of F. crucible, which is from Du. hras, but is unrelated to erucha. See Scheler.

CRUFF. M. E. eruff, Catholicon Anglicum, p. 84, note 4; Paston Letters, l. 470 (A. D. 1459); Gesta Romanorum, p. 189.

CRUMPET. A kind of soft bread-cake. (W.) In Todd's Johnson. Prob. an E. corruption of W. crumpog, also crumponyck, a pancake or fritter. (D. Sulvan Evans.) This is much more likely than Todd's derivation from A. S. erumpet, wrinkled, which is merely an adj., and much the same as E. erumpled.

CRUSADE. Instead of (F., = Prov., = L.), I think we may read (Prov., = L.). Though the word crusade does not appear in literature, I think we may safely suppose that it dates, in popular speech, from the time of the erosses, and, in particular, from the time of Richard I. In the quotation given from Bacon, the spelling erossade is evidently a mere adaptation of F. erossade, which again is a word adapted to F. spelling from the Prov. erossade, by turning the o of the Prov. form eross into the ai of the F. eross. But the spelling of the E. word points directly to the Prov. erossade itself, and was (I believe) introduced directly from Provençal in company with the remarkable form eross; see remarks on Cross (above). Further, the Prov. erossade does not seem to have meant 'crusade' in the first instance, but merely 'the mark of the cross.' It is properly formed as if from the fem. of a pp. of a verb erossar, to mark with a cross, from the sb. eross, a cross.

CUB. l. 4. Dele 'cf. W. eross, a whelp, from ei, a dog;' the W. eross (not eross), properly means 'offspring,' and is more likely to be related to W. eross, generation, kindred.

CULDEE. l. 9. Dele the words 'E. gillis;' for gillis is not the same word.

CURTILAGE. a court-yard. (F., = L.) 'All the comedities (or) wythyn the seyd gardyns and erurtilages;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 46 (A. D. 1467). Formed, with suffix -age, from O. F. erurtill, 'a back-yard;' Cot. = Low L. erurtillum, an enclosure, small yard, occurring A. D. 1258 (Ducange); also erurtilla, the same. Dimin. of Low L. erurtis, a court-yard; see Court (1).

CUSTARD. For the loss of r, cf. braska, put for braska.

CEAR. The argument quoted from the Eng. Cyclopaedia, as to the distinction made by the Russians between czar and tsar, is not sound; two derivatives from the same source being often thus differentiated. What is more to the point is, that it is also wrong. The Russian word czar or tsar is nothing but an adaptation of the Latin Caesar, and the connection does admit of direct proof, as has been pointed out to me by Mr. Sweet. In Matt. xiii. 24, 'the kingdom of heaven,' is, in modern Russian, tsarstvo nebesnoe; but the corresponding passage, in the Old Bulgarian version printed at p. 275 of Schleicher's Indogermanische Chrestomathie, has czarsvo nebesnoe. Here is clear evidence that tsar is for Caesar. Consequently, czar is not Russian, but Latin.

DADO. the die, or square part in the middle of the pedestal of a column, between the base and the cornice, also, that part of an apartment between the plinth and the impost moulding. (Ital., = L.) So defined by Gwilt, in Webster; see also Gloss. of Architecture, Oxford, 1840. The word is old, and occurs in Phillips, ed. 1706. Like some other architectural terms, it is Italian. = Ital. dado, a die, cube, pedestal; spelt dada in Meadows' Dict., but the Eng.-Ital. part, s. v. das, gives dado. The pl. dadi, dice, is in Florio, from a sing. dado. The same word as Span. dado, O. F. dat; see further under DIE (2), which is a doublet.

DAFFODIL, DAFFADILL. 'An unexplained var. of Affodill, affodille, adaptation of Med. Bot. Latin Affodillus, prob. late Lat. afodillus, cl. Lat. Asphodelus, Asphodelus, from Greek. Another med. Lat. corr. was Aphradillus, whence F. afradille. Half-a-dozen guesses have been made at the origin of the initial D; as playful variation, like Ted for Edward, Dan (in the north) for Andrew; the northern article f'afodill, the southern article th'afodill, in Kent de afodill, or, (?) f'afodill (Cotgr. actually has th'afodill); the Dutch bulb-growers de afodil, the F. (presumed) leur d'afradills, &c. The F. was least likely, as there was no reason to suppose that the F. afradille and Eng. affodill ever came into contact. Some who saw allusion to Aphrodite in Aphradillus, also saw Daphne in Daffodill; already in 16th cent. Daffodowndilly was given to the shrub Deiane Mæonea, as still in the North. Affodil was properly Asphodelus; but owing to the epithet Lass tibi being loosely applied both to spec. of Asphodelus and Narcissus, these very different plants were confused in England, and Asphodelus being rare, and Narcissus common, it tended to cling to the latter. Turner, 1551, "I could never see thys ryght afodil in England but ones, for the berbe that the people calleth here Affodil or daffodill is a kynd of Narcissus." Botanists finding they could not overthrow the popular application of daffodill, made a distinction. In Lyte, Gerard, &c., all the Asphodeli are Affodils, and all the Narcissi Daffodils. But the most common Narcissus in Eng. was the "Yellow Daffodill" of our commons, to which as our wild species "Daffodil" has tended to be confined since Shakespeare; "White Daffodil" or "Poet's Lily" is no longer called a daffodil. Daffodilly, daffodowndilly, &c., are all early variants; they show playful variation, and suggest that this had to do with the first appearance of Daffodil itself. At least all early evidence shows it was of purely English rise." Note by Dr. Murray, in Phil. Soc. Proceedings, Feb. 6, 1880.

DAINTY. The etymology is confirmed by the use of M. E. deynous in the sense of O. F. deuaignous, disdainful, which see in Cotgrave; and of M. E. deyn in just the same sense; see Catholicon Anglicum, p. 95, note 4. Observe that the word dis-dain gives precisely the same formation of -dais from Lat. dignus.

DALL. l. 9. Read 'See Dall.' But dall is unrelated.

DALLY. The etymology here given is strongly supported by the occurrence of the prov. E. dualles or teyl dail, to talk incoherently. A man in his cups who talks in a rambling style, is said, in Devonshire, to dualles. 'Dest dualles, or teyl dail?' i. e. are you talking incoherently, or speaking nonsense? Exmoor Scolding, Bout the First, last line.

DAMP. The Swed. dialects actually have the strong verb dänka, to steam, emit vapour, pt. t. dänst, pl. dänks, supine dänkst; whence dampen, damp (Rets). The mod. Swed. dänna, mist, haze, was formerly dänka, as in Widegren.

DANGLE. Cf. also Swed. dänka, to saunter about, and the phrase idä dänst, to be idle.

DARN. For section β, substitute: Perhaps from ✓ DAR, to tear, so that darn would mean a fragment; cf. W. darnia, to tear.

DARNEL. 'The Swed. där-reta, cited from Wedgwood, is badly spelt; it ought to be därreta, liliem; vide Oribok öfver Svenska växtnamnen, by E. Fries, edited by the Swedish Academy.' (Dr. J. N. Grönland.) In fact, reta is the ordinary Swed. word for 'darnel,' and därreta is the same word, with the prefix där, i. e. stupefying.

DASTARD. See further in Rets, who gives Swed. dial. dasta, to lie idle, dänka, to be lary, dasig, idle.

DAUPHIN. Not (F., = L.), but (F., = L., = Gk.).

DECEMBER. the twelfth month. (L.) In Chaucer, ON the Astrolabe, pt. l. § 10, l. 10. = L. December, the tenth month of the Roman year, as at first reckoned. = L. decem, ten. See Tom ¶ Under November and October, note that the reckoning only applies to the Roman year, as at first reckoned.

DECOY. An etymology from Du. sande-koel, a duck-coy, or decoy for ducks, has been suggested; this Du. word is given in Sewel. I cannot think it is right, for several reasons. In the first place, we should not have dropped an accented syllable; dropped syllables are unaccented, as every one must have noticed. Next, sande-koel is, like the E. duck-coy (given in Todd's Johnson), a compound word of which the essential part koel appears to me to be nothing but a borrowing from French, or, not improbably, from English, so that we are taken back to the same original as before. The derivation of decoy in Spenser is obvious; and we must remember that the verb to soy, in English, is older than 1440. I merely quoted 'soy, blandior,' from the Prompt. Parv., because I thought it amply sufficient; but it is easy to add further evidence. We also find, at the same reference: 'Coyge, or styrynge to dooe a werke, Instigatio;' which is very much to the point. Again, Palgrave has 'I soy, I styl or apayne, Je soyoyes;' I can nat soy hym, je ne le puis pas soyoyer.' In the Rom. of the Rose, l. 3564, we find: 'Which alle his paines mighte soy, i. e. alleviate.' As when he soyde The closed nunne in towre,' said of Jupiter and Danae; Turberville, To a late Acquainted Friend. Hence the sb. soy or decoy, and the verb to decoy. See soy-duck in Davies, Supplementary Glossary. I adhere to the derivation given, which will, I think, be acquiesced in by such as are best acquainted with the use of the M. E. word. See striking examples of soy, verb, to court, to entice, in Todd's Johnson.

DELINQUENT, l. 6. For 'See Leave,' read 'See Idleness.'

DELTA. For (Gk.), read (Gk., = Heb.). See the context.

DISPOSE: see note on Composse (above).

DEBILITATION. For 'See Leave,' read 'See Idleness.'

DERRICK, a kind of crane for raising weights. (Du.) Applied to a sort of crane from its likeness to a gallows; and the term derrick crane had special reference to a once celebrated hangman of the name of Derrick, who was employed at Tyburn. He is mentioned in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and Mr. Tancock sends me the following clear example. 'The theefe that dyes at Tyburne . . . is not halfe so dangerous . . . as the Politick Bankrupt. I would there were a Derech to hang vp him too;' T. Dekker, Seven Deadly Sins of London (1606); ed. Arber, p. 17. The name is Dutch; Sewel's Du. Dict. (p. 523) gives Dederik, Dierry, and Dirk as varying forms of the same name. This name answers to the G. Dietrich, A. S. Þeodric, i. e. 'chief of the people.' The A. S. þeod is cognate with Goth. þiuda, people; see Dutch. The suffix -ric answers to Goth. -rīks, as in Friþharīks, Frederick; cp. Goth. rīks, adj., chief, mighty, hence rich; see Rich.

DESPIRE. In Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, several parts of the verb despire are given. The 3 p. pl. of the pres. tense is despissent. The E. verb was formed from the stem despir here seen, rather than from the pp. despiss (really = despiss).

DETONATE, l. 4. The root is prob. STAN; see Stun, Thunder.

DEXTER, l. 4. For 'Skt. dakshina,' read 'Skt. dakshina.'

DIATRIBE. Not (Gk.), but (L., = Gk.).

DICTION, l. 3. The derivation of L. diccio from the L. pp. dictus calls for a remark. Dict-io is, more strictly, from the stem of the supine dict-um. But the supine is so unfamiliar a form as compared with that of the pp., that I have, throughout the dictionary, given the pp. form instead. As the stem of the supine is the same as that of the pp., it makes no practical difference.

DIGNIFY. To be marked (F., = L.).

DIP, l. 4. Instead of 'dip is a weakened form of the Teut. root DUP,' read as follows. The A. S. dyppan stands for *dup-ian, regularly formed as if from a strong verb *dupan, pt. t. pl. *dupon, which does not, however, appear. The Teut. base is DUP, whence also Deep, q. v. See Etmüller's A. S. Dictionary, p. 566.

DIRK. The relationship of Irish deire to Du. dolk, suggested by Mahn, who takes Du. dolk, &c., to be of Celtic origin, is very doubtful. Some suppose Du. dolk, G. dolch, to be of Slavonic origin; cf. Polish tylich, a dagger (which, however, may be a non-Slavonic word).

DISMAL. The frequent occurrence of the phrase dismal day must be noted. 'Her dismals daies, and her fatal houres;' Lydgate, Story of Thebes, pt. iii (How the wife of Amphiox, &c.); in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1361, fol. 370, l. 3. 'One only dismal day;' Gauscoigne's Works, ed. Hazlitt, l. 404. 'Some dismold day;' Id. l. 89. 'A crosse or a dismold daie;' Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 24. Cf. also Span. rentas decimales, tithe-rents, dezmor, to tithe; decimad, tenth, dezmar, to decimate, to tithe. I believe I am right. If so, no one else is right as to this word.

DISPENSE, ll. 5 to 7. After (pp. dispenses), read as follows:

Dispensare means to weigh out, hence to weigh out or spend money; cf. Lat. dispensum, expense. = Lat. dis, apart; and pensare, to weigh. See Pendant. Doublet, spend, q. v.

DISPOSE. See note on Composse (above).

DIVE, l. 3. Read: 'A. S. dyfan, to dive, Grein, j. 214, a weak verb due to the strong verb dyfan, id. 213.' See Etmüller, p. 570.

DOCK (r). Cf. Swed. docha, a skein (of silk); perhaps a length cut off.

DOGGEDLY. Occurs in the Tale of Beryn, ed. Farnivall, l. 1801.

DOLLY. I now find that there is authority for attributing this word to a personal name. 'The famous Dolly is still fresh in every one's memory, who raised a fortune by finding out materials for such stuffs as might at once be cheap and genteel;' Spectator, no. 283, Jan. 24, 1712 (written by Budgell). This is hardly to be gainsaid; especially when taken in conjunction with the quotations given from Congreve (1700), and Dryden's Kind Keeper (1679), which last seems to be the earliest example. It becomes clear that, as applied to a stuff, the name is certainly from 'the famous Dolly,' whilst it is probable that the present use of the word, as applied to a small napkin, is (as already said) due to Du. dool, a towel, Norfolk dool, a napkin. Further information regarding Mr. Dolly is desired.

DOLL. Another suggestion is that doll is the same word as Doll for Dorothy; this abbreviation occurs in Shakespeare. 'Capitulum, vox blandientia, Terent. O capitulum lepidissimum, O plesant companion: o little pretie doll pall;' Cooper's Thesaurus, 1565. 'Drink, and dance, and pipe, and play, Kiss our dollies [mistresses] night and day;' Herrick, Hesperides, A Lyric to Mirth, ed. Hazlitt, p. 28 (Davies); or, ed. Walford, p. 53. Perhaps further quotations may settle the question. Cf. Bartholomew Fair, by H. Morley, c. xvii., where the suggestion here given is thrown out, but without any evidence.

DOLPHIN. Not (F., = L.), but (F., = L., = Gk.).

DOMB. This requires alteration; it should be described as (F., = Low L., = Gk.). The O. F. doms (Cotgrave) is not from Italian, but represents the Low L. doma, a house; cf. 'in angulo domatis,' Prov. xxi. 9 (Vulgate). = Gk. δομα, a house; allied to Gk. δομος, a building. = ✓ DAM, to raise, build. See Scheler and Littre.

DONKEY, l. 2. For 'vary,' read 'very.' 'Or, in the London phrase, thou Devonshire monkey, Thy Pegasus is nothing but a donkey;' Wolcot, P. Peter, ed. 1830, p. 116 (Davies). In use between 1774 and 1785; N. and Q. 3 S. vi. 432, 344.

DOOMSDAY-BOOK. The following quotation, sent me by Mr. Tancock, is worth notice. 'Hic liber ab indigenis Domsdei nuncupatur, id est, diei iudei, per metaphoram; sicut enim districti et terribilis examinis illius novissimi sententia nulla tergiversationis arte valet eludi: sic . . . cum ventum fuerit ad libram, sententia ejus infatuari non potest vel impune declinari;' Dialogus de Scaccario, l. cap. 16; Select Charters, ed. Stubbs, 1881, p. 208. That is, the book was called Doomsday because its decision was final.

DOT. This sb. may be referred to the strong verb seen in Icel. dotta, pt. t. doti, pp. dotinn, to drop, fall; Swed. dial. dotta, pt. t. doti, supine dotit, to drop, fall. This is shown by the Swed. dial. doti, sb., properly something that has fallen, also a dot, point (in writing), a small lump, doti, vb., to prick (Rietz). This makes clear the relationship to Du. dot, a little lump; orig. a spot made by something falling.

DOUCHE, l. 5. For 'derivation,' read 'derivative.'

DOUGH, l. 3. For 'A. S. dak,' read 'A. S. dak.' 'Mama, bloma, ofte dak;' Wright's Voc. i. 85, col. 1. 'Mama, dak, vel bloma;' Id. 2. 34, col. 2, where dak is clearly an error of the scribe for dak. The dat. dage occurs in A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 342, l. 18. Formed as if from *dak, pt. t. of a strong verb *digan, to knead; this verb has not been found in A. S., but appears in Gothic.

DOWAGER. The O. F. domagiere, a dowager, actually occurs in the 14th century; Littre, s. v. domagiere, cites an example from Ducange, s. v. doagere.

DRAG, DRAW. The accounts of these words are wrongly given. All that is said under Drag belongs to Draw. Strike out 'Draw is a later spelling of drag;' for the truth is, that drag is a secondary verb, due to draw, which is more original. The accounts should be rewritten, thus: 'DRAG, to pull forcibly. (Scand.) We find 'draggyn or drawyn,' Prompt. Parv. Drag is a secondary verb, derived from the sb. drag, and the word is not E., but Scand.; this accounts for the double form. = Swed. dragg, to search with the grapple; from dragg, sb., a grapple. The sb. also occurs as Dan. drag, a pull, tug, draught, haul; Icel. drag, the iron rim on the keel of a boat or sledge (answering to the E. drag of a coach-wheel). = Swed. drage, Icel. draga, Dan. drage, to draw. See Draw.' Next, as to draw itself, read: 'DRAW, to pull along. (E.)

The A. S. g passes into M. E. z, and afterwards into w, as usual. Hence dransen is a later spelling of dragan; see Layamon, 10530. = A. S. dragan, &c.; the rest of the article being as given under Drag, p. 178. Note esp. that draw is a primary, or strong verb; drag is a secondary, or weak verb; as is still the case.

DRAGON. Probably not (Spaa. = L. = Gk.), but (F. = L. = Gk.). See note on Balloon (above). From F. dragon, a dragon, a standard, a dragoon. Littré gives the date of the sense 'dragoon' as 1585, and the quotations which he gives make it quite clear that the name arose (as already suggested) from dragon in the sense of standard, which is much earlier, as shewn by my quotation from Rob. of Gloucester, and by a quotation given on p. 786 above, s. v. Craven.

DRAY. 'Trains, a sled, a drag, or dray without wheels;' Cotgrave.

DRIBBLE. Rather (Scand.) than (E.). See Drif (below).

DRIFT. Cf. Swed. madrifva, a snow-drift.

DRIP, DROP. The accounts of these words are confused. It is drop which is the older word, drif being formed from it by vowel-change; drop, in its turn, is derived from the strong verb drōpan, obsolete. Moreover, drif is probably Scand., not E., thus accounting for the double form, as in the case of drag and draw. The articles should be thus read: 'DRIF, to fall in drops. (Scand.) M. E. dryppes, Prompt. Parv., from the sb. dryppa, a drop, id. = Dan. dryppe, to drip, from dryp, a drop; cf. Icel. dröpa, to let drop, from dröpp, pt. t. of dröpa, strong verb. The Dan. drif answers to Icel. dröfi, a drop; the change of s to y under the influence of a following i being perfectly regular. Thus the verb to drif is from the sb. drif; see Drop.' Again, the second article should be read with some modification; in l. 5, strike out: 'cf. also dröfian, to drop, drip, Grein, l. 205, leaving the rest of the first eight lines. Then strike out section β, in place of which read: 'β. Thus the vb. drop is formed from the sb. drop; the latter (A. S. dropa) is formed from drōpan, pp. of the strong verb drōpan, to drop, pt. t. drōp, given by Etymüller with a reference to Proverb. 19, which I cannot verify (but this A. S. verb is precisely equivalent to Icel. dröpa). So also the Icel. dröfi, a drop, is from drōp-iz, pp. of the strong verb drōpa, pt. t. drōp; and the O. H. G. dropfo, a drop, is similarly from the O. H. G. strong verb trifan. γ. These strong verbs are from the Teut. base DRUP, to drop, Fick iii. 155.

DRIVEL. Cf. Swed. drävel, nonsense; fars ned drävel, to tell stories.

DRIZZLE. Note particularly Dan. dryse, to fall in drops, cited under Dross.

DROLL. Dr. Stratmann objects that the Icel. form is tröll; but Vigfusson expressly says that the form is tröll, of which 'the later but erroneous form is tröll.' (Similarly, to Dr. Stratmann's suggestion that the Icel. form dougr is 'drigr, masc.,' I reply that I copied 'drig' (neuter) from Vigfusson's Dictionary.)

DROP; see note on Drif (above).

DROSS. We find dar dross given as an Old Westphalian gloss of L. fas; Mone, Quellen, p. 298. Cf. 'Auriculum, dross,' Wright's Voc. ii. 8, col. 2 (11th cent.); where auriculum is prob. allied to Low Lat. auricula, put for L. auriculatum, brass.

DROUGHT. Dr. Stratmann objects that the A. S. word is not drugoth, but drugoth. I do not give the theoretical, but the actual form. I now find the reference. 'Siccitas, vel ariditas, drugoth'; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Voc. i. 53, col. 2.

DUDGEON (s). We also find andugine. 'Which she .. taking in great andugine;' Gritia Ludentes, 1638, p. 118 (in Nares, ed. Halliwell and Wright). The W. an- is an intensive prefix; thus anaya means very white, from gaya, white. This clinches the suggested Celtic origin of the word.

DULL. That A. S. doil, foolish, stands for duol (earlier duof), is proved by the occurrence of duolle, adj. in the same sense. 'Nān duolle sega,' no foolish story, Judges xv. 19.

DUMB. The M. E. form domb is plural; the sing. is domb.

DUMP. The root-verb is seen in Swed. dial. dumpa, to fall down plump; pt. t. damp, supine dumped (Riets).

DUN. Also M. E. doun, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 334.

DWELL, l. 5. For gudwelan, read gudwelan. Both gudwelan and gudwelan occur in Grein.

DYE. 'Bis tincto cocco, huf galdedagre doige,' i. e. with twice-dyed dye; Mone, Quellen, p. 352. 'Fucare, doagran,' id. p. 356.

EASE. Several correspondents refer me to A. S. æsse, easy, the well-known word which appears in Uneath, q. v. It has nothing whatever to do with ease, which is plainly from the French. It is the etymology of the F. aise which is obscure; and, as to deriving the O. F. aise from A. S. æsse, I take it to be wholly out of the question. See what Diez has written about the Ital. form agio.

EASEMENT. 'Easment of the kechene to make in her meate,' use of the kitchen to cook her meat in; Bury Wills (1463), ed. Tymms, p. 22. The pl. eammentis occurs in Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 138.

ECLAT, ll. 3, 4. Omit 'O. F. ae = Lat. ea, forth, and a form (schleiss?) of the.' The O. F. oclater may be derived directly from a form schleissan (Littré) of O. H. G. schleissan. The prefixed s is merely due (as in esprit from L. spiritus) to the difficulty experienced by the French in pronouncing words beginning with sp and st.

ECLIPSE, l. 5. For 'See Leave,' read 'See Lioanos.'

ELBOW, l. 11. For armbdga, read armbdga. The Swed. dialects also have albo, albugä (Riets).

* ELECAMPANE, a plant. (F. = L.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xix. c. 5. Shortened from F. caule-campans, 'the herbe called helicanpanie;' Cot. = L. imula campana; where imula is the Lat. name for elecampane in Pliny, as above. Campana, fem. of campans, is a Low Lat. form, and perhaps means merely growing in the fields; cf. Lat. campans, of or pertaining to the fields (White), though the proper L. word for this is campestris; see Campestral. Mahn, in Webster, explains campana as meaning a bell, and compares the G. glockenwurz. This is doubtful, for the resemblance to a bell is by no means striking, and the G. for elecampane is alemt, founded on the Gk. name ἀλλανθω. In any case, campana is derived from L. campus, a field.

ELF. The Swed. is elf, not af, also elfve (J. N. Grönland). Widgren's Dictionary only gives elfvor, pl. elves; afslans, a dance of elves. I took the form elf from the Tauchnitz Dict., though it is only given in the Eng.-Swed. part, as a translation of E. elf.

EMBERS. Dr. Stratmann kindly refers me to: 'Eynbre, hote aschyn, emery or synder, Prasse;' Prompt. Parv. p. 136. This is clearly a Scand. form, from Icel. emryr.

EMBEZZLE. I have now little doubt that the etymology proposed, and explained at greater length s. v. imbecilis, is quite right. Mr. Herrtage sends me a reference which strengthens the supposition. In a letter from Reginald Pole to Hen. VIII, dated 7 July, 1532, he speaks of a consultation, in which the adverse party used every means to 'embroyll' the whole determination, that it might not take effect. See Letters and Papers of the Reign of Henry VIII, ed. Brewer, vol. iv. pt. 3, p. 2927. Mr. R. Roberts sends me some very curious instances. 'I have proposed and determined with myself to leave these bestings of these knights, and return to my village;' Shelton, tr. of Don Quixote, 1652, fol. 158, back. 'They came where Sancho was, astonisht and embroid with what he heard and saw;' id. fol. 236. 'Don Quixote was embroid,' i. e. perplexed; id. fol. 262. 'Imbroil, to take away, occurs A. D. 1547; see N. and Q. s. xi. 250. 'A felow .. that had embroid and concied away a cup of golde;' Udall, tr. of Erasmus' Apophthegms; Diogenes, § 83.

EMBROACH. 'And more euer to imbroach redy was I bent;' Skelton, Death of Edward IV, l. 51; ed. Dyce, l. 3. 'Yf any persone make any embroaching;' Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 92.

ENGROSS. Not (F.), but (F. = L.).

ENIGMA, l. 3. For 'to speak,' read 'I speak,' &c.

ENOUGH, l. 7. For 'Swed. not,' read 'Swed. nog.'

ENTAIL. Not (F.), but (F. = L.).

ERRAND. For 'Swed. aranda, Dan. arande,' read 'Swed. ärände, Dan. arände.'

ESPALIER. Not (F. = Ital. = L.), but (F. = Ital. = L. = Gk.).

ESSAY. A remarkably early use of this word occurs in the Dialogus de Scaccario, l. 3, pr. in Stubbs, Select Charters, 4th ed. 1881, p. 174, where it refers to the assay of money: 'examen, quod vulgo assayum dicitur' (O. W. Tancock).

* ESTOP, to bar, impede, stop up. (F. = L.) See Stop.

EUTHANASIA, l. 2. Read Gk. euthanasia.

EXCREMENT. The use, in Shakespeare, of excrement in the sense of hair, &c., seems to be due to a false etymology from excreveris, as if excrement meant 'out-growth.'

EXCURSE. To be marked as (F. = L.).

EXECUTRIX. Occurs in 1537, in Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 131.

EXHILARATE. Not (L.), but (Hybrid of L. and Gk.).

EXPEND. Strike out 'Doublet, spend.' Spend is short for dispend; see Spend.

EXPOSE. See note on Compose (above).

EXTRA, l. 2. Omit an before antena parva.

EXTRAVAGANT, l. 4. For magari, read magari.

FADGE. We must dismiss the connection with M. E. fozga, A. S. figan. The form answers rather to M. E. figan, to flatter, coax, fawn upon; for which see Catholicus Anglicus, p. 120, note 3. I think fadge may certainly be derived from A. S. fagian, to fit or adorn, allied to fager, fair; see Fair. This leads to the same \checkmark PAK, to fit, as before. The A. S. fægias only occurs in the comp. áfægias, to depict; 'ánlicnesse drihtnes on brede áfægde,' i. e. the likeness of Christ depicted on a board; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, i. 25. The changes of sense from 'fit' to 'depict,' and from 'fit' to 'speak fair,' or 'flatter' can readily be imagined to be probable.

FAITH, 1. 1. Dele 'with E. suffix.' The word is wholly French; the M. E. form fey is due to O. F. fei, whilst the M. E. form feith represents the O. F. feid, which is the earliest O. F. form, the d being due to L. acc. fidem. On the final -th, see H. Nicol's article in The Academy, no. 435, Sept. 4, 1880, p. 173, where this view is maintained. The fact that -th is a common ending for abstract nouns (such as health, wealth) may account for the change from d to th. In l. 9, for 'Curtius, i. 235,' read 'Curtius, i. 325.'

FARDEL. Besides O. F. faridel, we actually find the curious form hardel, and the dimin. hardailon, for which see Bartsch. These forms go far to settle the etymology. They are clearly Spanish, and due to the common substitution of h for f in that language. Consequently, the word is probably Moorish, and the Arabic origin is almost certain.

FARBOW. Add: 'M. E. farow; the pp. inward occurs in the Ayenbite of Inwytt, p. 61, l. 29; spelt inward, p. 204, l. 12.'

FATHOM. M. E. fathom in Tyrwhitt's spelling; fathus would be better; the Six-text edition has the readings fadma, fadema, fadmes, fajoma. For the d sound, cf. M. E. fader, father.

FEATHER, 1. 3. For 'Swed. fjäder,' read 'Swed. fjäder.'

FELL (2). Cf. Swed. fäll, a fell, fur-skin; Icel. fjall, a fell, skin.

FELL (3). Cf. Dän. fæl, hideous, grim, horrid.

FELLY. The A. S. nom. is not felga, but felga. 'Cantua, felga;' Wright's Voc. i. 16, col. 1.

FELON, l. 9. In saying that 'the Irish feall is clearly cognate with L. fallere,' it is as well to add, 'because an initial f has been lost in both cases.' Otherwise, this would not be the case, since an initial Irish f = Lat. f, as in feal = L. ver. A reference to the article Fall (to which I duly refer), will show this. I think we may mark the word as (F., = Low Lat., = C.).

FELT. Add: Swed. and Dan. fält.

FERRULE. Still earlier, we have E. eyroll, to explain F. uvrolle, in Palgrave.

FERRY. Add: Dan. færge, to ferry; also a ferry. + Swed. farja, the same.

FETCH. This article is wholly wrong; the derivation given belongs to M. E. feten, pt. t. fette, pp. fet, to fetch, or bring (see Stratmann, p. 201), which has certainly been confused with feteh. Thus Shak. has fet in the sense of feteh, Hen. V. iii. i. 18. But it is remarkable that, notwithstanding the similarity in sense and form between feteh and fet, there is probably no etymological connection between these words. Fet has been explained; viz. from A. S. fetian and the \checkmark PAD. It remains to explain feteh, the article on which should stand thus:—FETCH, to bring. (E.) M. E. fetechen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 180, &c.; pt. t. fetite, spelt feght, Rob. of Brunne (Stratmann), fektite, Layamon, 6460. = A. S. fetcan, Gen. xviii. 4. Luke, xii. 20. Allied to A. S. fetian, to wish to get, Ælfred, Orosius, b. iii. c. 11; § 10; a verb derived from the sb. fæc (stem fæc-), a space of time (hence prob. opportunity), Grein, i. 267; orig. a distance or space of length, Luke, xxiv. 13. β. This A. S. fæc is cognate with G. fack, a compartment (space), department, province; from the Teut. base FAH = \checkmark PAK, to fit, suit; Fick, iii. 109. Allied to Fair. It would seem, from this, that the orig. sense of A. S. fæc was suitable space or time; hence fetian, to seize an opportunity, to try to get, and so to fetch.'

FEND (1). Add: Dan. fæde, a quarrel; fæide, to war upon. + Swed. fæda, to make war against; fæyd, a feud (Tauchnitz, Eng.-Swed. portion), formerly spelt fægd (Widegren). ¶ This fægd is quite distinct from Swed. fægd, fatality, which is allied to E. fey.

FEND (2). Dele all following Low Lat. fendum, a fief. I entirely give up this notion of making the adj. fendialis the older word. That the Low Lat. fendum is partly founded on O. H. G. fân, fâho, cattle, goods (cognate with E. fee), seems to be generally agreed upon. The difficulty is with the d, which possibly occurs again in allodial. I cannot pretend to solve it.

FEX. Add: Swed. fæg, cowardly, fægd, fatality, decree of fate; Dan. fæg, cowardly.

FIEB; see remarks on Fend (2) above.

FIEB (2), l. 3. For 'A. S. feol,' read 'A. S. feol.' There is good authority for it; see Grein, i. 294. 'Lima, feol;' Mone, Quellen, p. 367.

FILLIAL, ll. 3, 4. For 'a filia, daughter,' read 'filia, a daughter.'

FILL, l. 4. For 'Swed. fylla,' read 'Swed. fylla.'

FIN. The M. E. form is fiene; Stratmann gives 8 references, so that it is not so rare as I thought. 'Pyms of a fische, fiene;' Prompt. Parv.

FINE. M. E. fin (with long i); written fyne, K. Alisaunder, 2657; in the passage cited, from P. Plowman, B. ii. 9, the form is fiene, superlative.

FIR. The Swed. is far or fara; fara is only used in composition, and in oblique cases (J. N. Grönland). Fara is the only form given in Widegren (1788).

FLAKE. Cf. Swed. dial. flåg, a thin slice, also spelt flak (Riets); Dan. mesfåge, snow-flake; mesflåker, small flakes of snow.

FLAMINGO. See N. and Q. 6 S. ii. 326, 450, 478; iii. 35, 75, 110, 131; especially at the last reference. It is remarkable that, in Span. flamenco, the -enco is not a usual Span. suffix. The name seems to have arisen in Provence, where the bird was called flamant or flambant, i. e. flaming (from its colour). This Prov. flamant must have been confused with F. flamand, a Fleming, a name of Flanders, because the Span. flamenco and Port. flamengo properly mean a Fleming. In Bluteau's Port. Dict. (1713), we find flamengo, a native of Flanders, and flamengo or flamenco, a flamingo, which he wrongly imagines to have come from Flanders, whereas it is abundant chiefly in Sicily, Spain, and the S. of France. See the whole of Mr. Pictou's article. The word may be marked as (Span. or Port., = Prov., = L.). In Urquhart's Rabelais, II. i., the bird is called a flaman (Davies).

FLARE. Note also Swed. flara, to frolic, sport; answering to E. dial to flare up.

FLATTER. It may be better to consider this as a Low G. form. = O. Du. flatteren, flatteren, 'to flatter or to sooth up one;' Hexham. Allied to Icel. flætra, to fawn upon. The O. F. flator is, of course, closely allied, but may likewise be considered as of Low G. origin. I still think that the bases FLAK and FLAT are equivalent; and that the forms cited from Swedish are to the point.

FLFA, l. 3. For 'A. S. flæa, flæa,' read 'A. S. flæa, flæa.' The pt. flæa (= Shropshire E. flæa) occurs in A. S. Leechdoms, i. 264, l. 14, i. 266, l. 2.

FLEE. Dr. Stratmann remarks that flæa may be the M. E. flæa; and the pt. t. flæde requires an infinitive flæden, for which we actually find flæde, Myrc. Duties of a Parish Priest, l. 1374. But I suspect that this infinitive was coined from flæde, and that flæde was suggested by the Icel. fljó, pt. t. of fljja, to fly. In any case, flæa is but a variant of flj.

FLEECE. For 'A. S. fys,' read 'A. S. fys.' It is spelt fiesc (neut. accus.), with the various readings fys (= fys) and fiosc, in Laws of Ine, § 69, in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 146, note 23.

FLEER. Under flæa, Riets gives fiera as an equivalent form in Swed. dialects.

FLERT. Note also the A. S. glosses: 'frande, colludis, hearde, getwance;' Mone, Quellen, p. 362; 'delaramenta, gedofu, gefferd, id. p. 340; 'indruticus, luzarians, tegende, broddiende, tolcedende, heardiende;' id. p. 356. Also the cognate Swed. fård, 'deceit, artifice, vanity, frivolousness; fara med fård, to use deceitful dealing' (Tauchnitz Dict.). This is plain speaking as to what is firt means.

FLOAT. The pres. pt. flotigende of the rare A. S. verb flotan, to float (as a ship), occurs in the Parker MS. of the A. S. Chronicle, anno 1031. The verb flotan, to float, and the sb. flota, a ship, are both derived from flot-an, pp. of the strong verb flotan, already given.

FLOUT. Not (Du.), but (Du., = F., = L.).

FLUMBERY, l. 4. For Hymnus read Hymnus.

FLUSH (1). M. E. fosch, a flood, or flow of blood, Alexander, ed. Stevenson, 2049. We there read that, in a battle, there was so much bloodshed that 'foles [foals, horses] ferd in the fosches to the fetelaks.'

FLUSH (3). See the note to Flush (1) above.

FLY. In the sense of carriage for hire, it seems to have been first applied to 'a nouvelle kind of four-wheel vehicles drawn by a man and an assistant... they are denominated fys, a name first given by a gentleman at the Pavilion [at Brighton] upon their first introduction in 1816;' Wright's Brighton Ambulator, 1818, quoted in Davies, Supp. Glossary.

FOAM. The A. S. fōm answers better to M. H. G. foim, foam, given under the form wam in Wackernagel. Cf. also Russ. piena, foam. The A. S. fōm, Russ. piena, Skt. phana, seem to be due to a root \checkmark SPI; the L. spuma is explained by Fick, iii. 169, as standing for spōma. May not \checkmark SPI have been a by-form of \checkmark SPU?

FOE, l. 2. For 'A. S. fōgon,' read 'A. S. fōgon.'

FOLD. The word fold, used as a sb. in the sense of sheep-fold, is not in any way allied to the verb to fold. It occurs as A. S. fald, in John, x. 1, as already cited; but this is contracted from an older form falod; see Leo's Glossar. Perhaps falod meant 'protected by palings,' and is connected with Icel. fföl (gen. ffalar), a thin board, plank.

FORFEND. For (Hybrid; F. and E.), read (Hybrid; E. and F.).

FORGE. The old sense is curiously illustrated by the mention of Joseph, Mary's husband, as being 'a forger of trees, that is to see, a wright;' Wiclif, Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 19.

FORLORN. In the phr. forlorn hope, hope means a troop; see HOPE (2). The F. phrase enfants perdus is also represented by 'a xl. or 50 forlorn boys,' Life of Lord Grey (Camden Soc.), p. 19.

FORM. I. g. Strike out perform, which is not related.

FORMIDABLE. Prof. Postgate suggests the ✓GHAR, a simpler form of ✓GHARS, to bristle; for which see HORROR. This gives to ✓GHAR the sense 'to bristle,' as distinct from ✓GHAR, to grind. This is probable; and is well supported by the Lat. er, for her, a hedgehog, Gk. χρη. See UROHIN, which ought, accordingly, to be referred to ✓GHAR, to bristle, not to the longer form GHARS.

FORTY. For 'Swed. fratie,' read 'Swed. fyrtio.'

FOUNT (1). After this word, insert 'Fount (2); see Font (2).'

FRAMFOLD. Add that W. framfol is compounded of W. fram, testy, and fol, foolish; fol is not a mere suffix. (A. L. Mayhew.)

FRAY (2). For the correction of the etymology, see note on AFRAY (above).

FRICASSE. Can F. fricasse be derived from Ital. fricassare, to break in pieces? See FRACAS.

FRIEZE (1). 'Thycke mantels of fryse they weare;' Roy, Rede Me, ed. Arber, p. 82, l. 14 (A.D. 1518); spelt fress and fryse in Paston Letters, i. 83 (about A.D. 1449). See note on FRIS (below).

FRITILLARY, a genus of liliaceous plants. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Called Fritillaria in Bacon, Essay 46 (Of Gardens). So called because the corolla is shaped something like a dice-box. Englished from late Lat. fritillaria, coined from L. fritillus, a dice-box. Root uncertain.

FRIZ. See CATHOLICON ANGLICUM, ed. Herrtage, p. 58, note 1, p. 142, note 2. The quotations there given render the derivation of friz from frieze (1) absolutely certain.

FRY (2), spawna of fishes. Delete the remark in the last line. The F. frai is a verbal sb. from frayer = L. fricare; see SCHERER, &c. Thus, notwithstanding the remarkable coincidence in form and sense between E. fry and F. frai, there is absolutely no etymological connection. It adds one more to the number of such instructive instances.

FUMBLE. For 'Swed. famla,' read 'Swed. famla.' There is also Swed. famla, to fumble, answering exactly to the E. word.

FUN. In N. and Q. 3 S. viii. 77, a correspondent endeavours to show that fun was in use 'before 1724' by quoting two lines without any reference whatsoever! (The etymology there given from M. E. fonnen can hardly be right; as I have already said.) Its Celtic origin is further suggested by the expression 'sic fun ye never saw' in what professes to be the original version of 'The Battle of Harlaw,' formerly sung in Aberdeenshire. For this ballad, see N. and Q. 3 S. vii. 391, where it was first printed, in 1865.

FUNNEL. M. E. funelle, CATHOLICON ANGLICUM (about 1483).

FURBISH. To be marked as (F., = O. H. G.). The pp. furbis (better forbiskud) occurs as early as in Wyclif, Works, ed. Arnold, i. 224, l. 4.

FURL. Not (F.), but (F., = Arab.).

FURNACE. To be marked as (F., = L.).

FURROW. Add: Dan. feru, a furrow, also as verb, to furrow. +Swed. flara, the same.

FURZE. The comparison with Gael. frasa is probably wrong.

FUSS. Cf. Swed. dial. fus, eager, Swed. framfusig, pert, saucy. The Swed. verb fuska, to bungle, Dan. fuske, to bungle at, seems to belong here.

GALINGALE, the pungent root of a plant. (F., = Span., = Arab.) M. E. galingale, Chaucer, C. T. 383. = O. F. *galingal, not authorised, but it must have occurred, as the form garingal is common, and the usual later F. form is galingus, as in Cotgrave. = Span. galanga, the same. = Arab. thalangān, galingale; Rich. Dict. p. 625. Said to be of Pers. origin. See Devic, Supp. to Littré; Marco Polo, ed. Yule, ii. 181.

GALLANT, I. g. The form of the base of Goth. gailjan is rather GIL.

GALLIAS. Not (F.), but (F., = Ital.).

GALLON. See also GILL (1).

GALLOON. Prob. from F. galon, as in Cotgrave; the F. word being, apparently, borrowed from Spanish. To be marked as (F., = Span.).

GALORE, abundantly, in plenty. (C.) Also spelt galore, gilore in Jameson, and golore in Todd's Johnson. 'Gallour, plenty, North;' Grose (1790). = Irish galoor, sufficient; where go is a particle which, when prefixed to an adjective, renders it an adverb, and lor, adj., means sufficient; Gael. gu loor, or gu loor, which is precisely the same.

GALT, also GAULT, a series of beds of clay and marl. (Scand.) A modern geological term. Prov. E. galt, clay, brick-earth, Suffolk (Halliwell). [Of Scand. origin; the spelling gault is phonetic.] = Norweg. gald, hard ground, a place where the ground is trampled hard by frequent treading, also a place where snow is trodden hard; Icel. gald, hard snow, also spelt galdr, gaddr. ¶ In no way allied to Icel. gaddr (for *gaddr), a goad.

GANG (2), to go. (Scand.) In Barbour's Bruce, ii. 276, iv. 193, x. 421. = Icel. ganga, to go; see GO.

GARMENT. For '(F., = O. H. G.)' read '(F., = O. Low G.)' See GARNISH.

GAS. For this word, see Van Helmont, Ortus Medicinæ, Amsterdam, 1648, p. 73 (N. and Q. 3 S. vii. 111).

GATE. This article is not sufficiently explicit. There are really two words of this form, close related; one being E., the other of Scand. origin. They should be thus distinguished. A. Mod. E. gate, a door, opening, M. E. gate, gate, A. S. gat, cognate with Icel. gat, Da. gat; from the common Teut. type GATA, a neuter noun. B. Mod. E. gate, chiefly in the North, a way, path, street; Icel. gata, Swed. gata, Dan. gade, cognate with Goth. gataw, G. gasse, a way, street; from the common Teut. type GATWAN, a feminine noun. The distinction appears in the Low Scotch 'gang yer gate, and steek the yet ahint ye.' (Suggested by A. L. Mayhew; I had already made the distinction, but it is worth while to make it still clearer.)

HENET, I. 6. For '1859,' read '1849.'

GERM. Vanček refers it to ✓KAR, to make, which seems better. This allies it to L. crare, &c.

GERMANDER, a plant. (F., = Ital., = L., = Gk.) In Bacon, Essay 46 (Of Gardens). = F. germandrée, germander (Cotgrave). = Ital. calamandras, germander (by the common change from l to r). A corrupt form of L. chamadrus, wall germander. Pliny (White). = Gk. χαμαδρος, germander, lit. ground tree, or low-growing tree. = Gk. χαμαί, on the ground; δέν, tree. See CHAMELEON and TREE.

GHOST. Add: Swed. gast, evil spirit, ghost; gastor shola där spränga, 'satyrs shall dance there,' Isaiah xiii. 21 (Widegren).

GLAOUR. Add; another view is that the word is of Semitic origin. Thus Zenker, in his Dictionnaire Turc-Arabe-Persan, gives Turk. hâfir, an infidel, adding 'vulgarly janer.' It would thus appear that Glauour is a Turkish corruption of the Arab. hâfir, whence the Turk. hâfir is plainly borrowed. Rich. Arab. Dict. has hâfir, denying God, an infidel, pagan, impious wretch. Cf. Arab. kafr, denying God, which is (I suppose) the root; Rich. Dict. pp. 1163, 1195. See N. and Q. 6 S. ii. 252.

GIBBERISH. We may simply explain gibber as a frequentative of gibe, q. v. It makes but little difference.

GIBBET. It seems reasonable to connect this word with Swed. dial. gippe, to jerk; for which see JIB (2).

GIFT. Add: cf. Dan. gifte, to give away in marriage, giftes, to be married, ulgift, something given in addition; Swed. ulgift, pardon, bravgift, a dowry.

GILD, I. 2. The statement that A. S. gyldan is 'only found in the sense to pay,' is wrong; nor is gidan, to pay, the same word. We find gegyldum, gill, used to translate the Lat. donativo, Pa. xlv. 11, ed. Spelman. Gyldan is regularly formed (by vowel-change of a to y) from A. S. gold, gold; the vowel o standing for original a, as in Goth. gulth, gold. In l. 5, delete the reference to guild.

GILLIE, I. 5. Delete 'cf. Irish coile, &c.:' there is no relation between Irish gollia and Irish coile.

GINGER. The earliest forms are A. S. gingiber, gingifer, borrowed directly from Latin; see Gloss. to A. S. Leechdoms, vol. in.

GIRD (1). Add: Swed. girda, to gird.

GIRDLE, I. 3. For 'G. gürtel,' read 'G. gürtel.'

GIRTH. Add: Swed. gird, a girth.

GLEAM, I. 2. Delete 'or glam, accent uncertain.' It is certainly glam, both as coming from a base gli- and as answering to Mod. E. gleam with a long vowel.

GLEAN. Cf. the A. S. gloss: 'manipulos, gilman;' Mone, Quellen, p. 379. See also CATHOLICON ANGLICUM, p. 158, note 4.

GLITTER. Cf. A. S. glitum, 'Rutilare, glitum;' Mone, Quellen, p. 355.

GLOSS (2), I. 4. For 'P. Plowman, B.,' read 'P. Plowman, C.' GLOW. Though the A. S. glowa is rare, we find examples of it. The pres. part. glowende occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, l. 424, last line, and in A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 216, l. 1. It is not a weak verb, as is supposed; for I have found the pt. t. glōw in Ælfric's Lives of Saints, vii. 240. See my edition, p. 184.

GLOEM. Not (F., -L.), but (F., -L., -Gk.).

GLUT, l. 4. For 'Skt. grā,' read 'Skt. grā.'

GNARL. The A. S. verb is rather gnarian than gnarran; the pres. part. gnarnde occurs, to translate Lat. stridentem; A. S. Leechdoms, lii. 210, l. 12. But the word is not quite certain; Mr. Cockayne adds the note, 'I read grinde.'

GOAL, l. 10. It may be better to leave out the reference to prov. E. wallop, which appears to be, etymologically, much the same as gallop; see Gallop.

GOOD, last line. Dele good-bye; for it is allied to god, q. v.

GOSEPL. There is an earlier instance of the alteration of god-spell into gōsepel than the one given from the Ormulum. In a Vocabulary of the 11th century, we find: 'Euvangelium (sic), id est, bonum nuntium, god-spel,' the accent being unmarked; Wright's Voc. i. 75. Doubtless, this reasonable alteration is very old, but Grein's argument remains sound, viz. that we must account for the Icel. and O. H. G. forms.

GRACE, l. 7. Dele Doublet, charity.

GRAIL (2). Not (F., -L.), but (F., -L., -Gk.).

GRAPPLE. Not (F.), but (F., -M. H. G.).

GRAVY, ll. 3 and 4. For '167' read '166;' and for '63' read '62.'

GREENGAGE, a kind of plum. This stands for green Gage, where Gage is a personal name. It is the French plum called la grosse Reine Claude, and is written as Green Gage in P. Miller, Gardener's Dictionary, 7th ed. 1759, s. v. Prunus. There is also a blue Gage and a purple Gage. 'Plum; of the many sorts, the following are good: Green and blue gage, Fotheringham, &c.; C. Marshall, Introd. to Gardening, 1796, p. 350. In R. Hogg's Fruit Manual, 4th ed. 1875, it is said to have been introduced 'at the beginning of the last century, by Sir T. Gage, of Hengrave Hall, near Bury, who procured it from his brother, the Rev. John Gage, a Roman Catholic priest then resident in Paris.' The following account is more explicit, and gives the name as Sir William Gage. In Hortus Collinsonianus, p. 60, are some Memoranda by Mr. Collinson, written 1759-1765, where is the following entry. 'On Plums. Mom. I was on a visit to Sir William Gage, at Hengrave, near Bury; he was then near 70. He told me that he first brought over, from France, the Grosse Reine Claude, and introduced it into England; and in compliment to him the Plum was called the Green Gage; this was about the year 1725.' (J. A. H. Murray.) β. It must be added, that Mr. Hogg shows that there is reason for supposing that this plum was known in England at least a century earlier than the above date, but was then called the Verdoek, from the Ital. verdocchi, obviously derived from verde (L. viridis), green. But this does not affect the etymology of the present name.

GRIDDLE. The spelling gradyron, for gridiron, occurs in Bury Walls, ed. Tymms, p. 153 (A. D. 1559).

GRIMALKIN. Not (E.; partly from Heb.), but (E.; and O. H. G.). By a singular oversight I have given M. E. Malkin as being a dimin. of Mary, but it is certainly a dimin. of Maud, as explained in my note to Piers Plowman, C. ii. 181. 'Malkyn, or Maud, proppr name, Mald, Mauke, Matilda, Matilda;' Prompt. Parv. Thus the word is of O. H. G. origin; from O. H. G. malk-alt, used as a proper name. Here malk means 'might,' cognate with E. might; and alt means 'battle,' cognate with A. S. ald, battle.

GRISLY. There is a difficulty about the A. S. forms; there are forms which point to a base GRUS, viz. degrusna, grys, gryslite, whilst others point to a base GRIS, viz. grisanum. My supposition that grisan is put for grisan, is hardly tenable; for we find the pt. t. grise in Rob. of Gloec. p. 549, l. 13, and grise in Layamon. l. 11976; see Stratmann, s. v. grisanum. Other languages support the theory that there must have been two forms of the base. 1. From the base GRUS we have G. graus, horror; grausum, to cause to shudder, M. H. G. grās, horror, &c.; also, from a shorter base GRU, we have G. graus, M. H. G. grās, imper. verb. to shudder, graulich, graulich, hideous, Dan. gru, horror, terror; see GRASSOMA. 2. Again, from the base GRIS we may deduce O. Du. grislisch, horrible (Hexham), O. H. G. grislisch (Graff, iv. 301); and cf. Swed. gräslig, Dan. gräslig, hideous, horrible. Richthofen gives O. Fries. grislisk in his Dictionary, but grislisk in his text. There has evidently been considerable confusion of the forms.

GRIST, l. 5. For gristitan, read gristitian.

GOATS. For (Scand.), read (E.). Prof. Toller refers me to A. S. grātan, ecc. pl., goats; A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 292, l. 24. This is very satisfactory, since it accounts for the o in M. E. grotes and the oo in E. groats, these vowels being regularly derived from A. S. ā. But the whole of the article, except the first two lines, becomes valueless, and the connection with groats must be given up. The base of A. S. grātan is GHRI; see Grind.

GROUNDSEL, l. 1. For 'spelt grounsyle, grawal, grounsel in Levins,' read 'spelt grounsel in Levins.' The forms grounsyle, grawal are forms of groundstill, a three-fold, as shown by their Latin equivalents hypochaeris, hypothyron. The editor's interpretation is, for once, wrong.

GUILD, l. 9. Dele the reference to gold, which is not related. The A. S. gildan should have been described as being a strong verb, pt. t. guld, pp. goldan, as explained under Yield.

HAGGIE, a dish commonly made in a sheep's maw, of the minced lungs, heart, and liver of the same animal. (E.; with F. ragin.) M. E. haggs, hagys, hahy, Prompt. Parv. Also spelt haggen, hagges, hahys; see notes to Prompt. Parv., and to the Catholicon Anglicum, p. 169; also the account in Jamieson. It answers to the F. hache, 'a hache, a sliced gallinaufry, or minced meat;' Cot. And it appears to have been formed, in imitation of this F. sb., directly from the E. hack, to cut small, of which a common Lowland Sc. form is hag, appearing also in the E. frequentative haggle; see Haggle (1). And see Hash. Cf. also Du. hahsel, minced meat, and Low G. hahs or plahs, a kind of hash or mince. ¶ The Gael. taigie, a haggis, is merely borrowed from English, t being put for h (Jamieson).

HAIL (1), l. 2. For 'Later hæyl (by loss of y or w) read 'Later hæyl (by loss of e, as in A. S. hægl, for hægal, and vocalisation of y).' In l. 4, insert accents on the first syllables of the Gk. words.

HAIL (2), l. 5, first word. For hail, read hail.

HALE (2), HAUL. Not (E.), but (F., -Scand.). The vowel shows that it must have been borrowed from F. haler, to hale or haul. This F. word was borrowed, in its turn, from Scandinavian; cf. Swed. hala, Dan. hale, also O. H. G. halōn, as already given. It makes no difference in the ultimate result, or in the root, the A. S. halian being cognate with the Scand. and G. words. The F. haler occurs in the 12th cent. as a nautical word (Littré).

HALT. Dele 'halt', interj., orig. imp. of verb.' See below.

HALT (2), as sb., a sudden stop; as a verb, to stop quickly at the word of command. (Ital., -G.) 'And in their march soon made a halt;' Sir W. Davenant, The Dream, st. 19. A military term. Dr. Murray says it first came in as an Ital. term, without initial h; and Richardson quotes the form alt from Milton, P. L. vi. 532, where mod. editions have halt. - Ital. alto; as in fare alto, to make a halt, to stop. - G. halt, halt! lit. hold! from halten, to hold, check, cognate with E. Hold (1), q. v. The word has passed, from G., into several languages.

HAM. Add: Icel. hām, the ham or haunch of a horse. † Swed. dial. ham, hind part of the knee. † Du. ham, the ham.

HAMMER-CLOTH. Orig. spelt with only one m. 'Hammer-clothes, with our armes and badges of our colours and all other things appertenyng unto the said wagon;' Archaeologia, xvi. 91 (Document of the time of Q. Mary). See N. and Q. s. xi. 66.

HANDY (2), l. 6. For 'Luke, xii. 30,' read 'Luke, xxi. 30.'

HARROW. It does occur in A. S., the form being hærga. I find the gloss: 'Herculus, hærga;' Wright's Voc. ii. 43, col. 2. This is precisely the right A. S. form; I suppose the Low Lat. Arrotulus is a derivative of Low Lat. hærga, a harrow, due to Lat. irrus.

HATCH. The dat. hæss occurs in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Evi Saxonici, p. 395, l. 11. (T. N. Toller.)

HECTOR, l. 3. For 'Hærop,' read 'Hærop.'

HEDGE. The M. E. hæges properly answers to A. S. hæg, like edge = A. S. æg; but the form has not been found. The closely allied A. S. hæge does not account for the form hedge, but only for the M. E. hai or hai, spelt hay in the Rom. of the Rose, l. 54; see hay in Halliwell.

HELL, l. 2. For 'A. S. hel, helle, gen. helle,' read 'A. S. hel, hell, gen. helle.'

HEPTARCHY, l. 5. For heva, read hevd.

HERONSHAW. In the first sense, it may be marked as (F., -O. H. G.). In the second, as (Hybrid; F., -O. H. G.; and Scand.). I owe to Mr. Nicol two important corrections; (1) that O. F. heronshaw, though not found, is a perfectly correct and possible formation, like lionshaw, a young lion, from lion; (2) that the F. suffix -shaw might easily become M. E. -saw; cf. M. E. brusaw (still pronounced brus-ā) from F. brusad. Since I first wrote this note, I find that Mr. Herrtage has at last actually found the O. F. heronshaw (the true original of heronshaw) in the Liber Custumarum, p. 304. See Catholicon Anglicum, p. 184, note 8.

HERRING. If herring is so called with reference to the fish appearing in large shoals, cf. W. rygadan, herrings, from rod, a host or army. (D. Silvan Evans.)

HEYDAY (2). Smollett actually writes: 'In the high-day of youth and exultation;' Humphrey Clinker, 1771, ii. 50 (Davies).

HIDE (4), l. 8. For 'no 240,' read 'no. 243.'

HIERARCHY. Spelt jerarchy, Skelton, Deths of the Erie of Northumberlande, 212.

HIVE. But we actually find an A. S. Hyfe, prob. for Hyfe. 'Alvearia, Hyfa; alvearii, Hyfe;' Mone, Quellen, pp. 333-334.

HOBBY (2). Not (F.), but (F., = O. Low G.).

HOG. The Celtic origin of this word is, after all, very doubtful, though it is the one most usually given. I think it is better to adopt the suggestion of E. Muller, who connects it with the verb to hach. It seems to me to be derived from the Lowland Scotch hag, to cut (a weakened form of hach), whence also haggle and haggis. This is well borne out by M. E. hogge, 'maialis, est enim porcus carens testiculis;' Catholicon Anglicum, p. 187. Mr. Herbage cites from Baret: 'a barrowe hog, a gilt or gelded hog, maialis;' also hog-pigs, barrow-pigs, Whitty Glossary. Hence we may explain hog, a young sheep, hog-colt, a yearling colt, and the other similar prov. E. forms in Halliwell, such as hogget, a two-year old sheep, hoggaster, a boar in its third year, hogget, a sheep or colt after it has passed its first year, hoggerd, which Palagran explains by 'a young shepe, hoglin, a boar. So also prov. G. hachsh, a boar (Flügel); from hachsh, to cut. The suggested W. origin is plainly inadequate. At the same time, the derivation from hach is by no means proved as yet.

HOLE. I think section γ may be omitted; and I doubt whether Curtius can be right. The A. S. hol follows so easily from A. S. hol-an, pp. of helan, to hide, that it seems best to keep to the solution in section β.

HOLLAND. I am told that Dutch etymologists explain the word as holt-land, i. e. woodland; see Holt. The word occurs as early as 1502. 'A pece [of] holland or any other linnen cloth coetyneith in ellis;' Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 206.

HOLLYHOCKS. Spelt holyhocks, Ben Jonson, Pan's Anniversary, l. 29.

HOMICIDE. To be marked as (F., = L.). In l. 6, for Schismora, read Schlism.

HONEY. Höning is the Swed. form given in Widegren (1788); he also gives hönig. The Tschmits Dict. gives hönung in the Swed.-Eng. part, but Adning in the Eng.-Swed. part. Usually (I am told) hönig.

HONEYSUCKLE. Spelt honi-souhit; Wyclif, Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 5, l. 6.

HOOP (2), l. 5. Dele 'which is the true E. form.'

HOP (2). We find: 'volubilis major, hoppe;' where hoppe is an Old Westphalian (Old Saxon) form; Mone, Quellen, p. 292. The word appears as early as in Arnold's Chronicle, (ab. 1502), in the pl. form hoppis or hoppys, ed. 1811, pp. 236, 246; and they are frequently mentioned in the Northumberland Household Book, 1512. See Catholicon Anglicum, p. 28, note 8. In the first instance, it occurs in what seems to be a list of imports, doubtless from Holland.

HOUSINGS. The term houses, is of rather early occurrence. It occurs in the Catholicon Anglicum, spelt houses (A. D. 1483). Mr. Herbage refers to the Household and Wardrobe Expenses of Edw. II, ed. Furnivall, p. 43; but the MS. referred to is only a very late translation from the French, made in 1601.

HOVER. I understand that Prof. Rhys takes the W. hogy to be borrowed from E. Thus the derivation given is quite correct.

HOW (1). March makes A. S. hō and A. S. hōf precisely the same word. See Why.

HOWL. Add: Du. hulen. † Icel. hla. † Dan. hyle. † Swed. hla, to howl.

HUBBUB. Not (E.), but (F., = Tent.). In l. 4, for 'A. S. hōp, an outcry,' read 'F. houper, to hoop unto, or call afar off; Cot. See Whoop and Hoop (2).'

HUMILITY, l. 2. For humilitet, read humilitet.

HURDYGURDY. Compare 'harryng and garryng,' i. e. snarling and growling, used by Trevisa; see Spec. of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 241.

HURLYBURLY. It first occurs (probably) in Bale, Kynges Johan, ed. Collier, p. 63, l. 21.

HUSBAND. For 'see Bondman,' read 'see Bondage.'

HUSSAR. The Hungarian word huszár, twenty, will be found in Dankovsky, Magyar Lexicon, ed. 1833; see pp. 462, 469. He also gives Hung. huszár, meaning (1) a keeper of geese, and (2) a hussar horseman. It is worth noting that these appear to be quite distinct words; huszár, a hussar, is from husz, twenty, as already given; but in the sense of keeper of geese, the word is not Hungarian, but Slavonic, being plainly allied to Russ. gusa, a goose.

HUSSLE. Correctly spelt hussy in Richardson's Pamela (1741), ed. 1811, l. 162: 'I . . . dropt purposely my hussy.' (Davies.) The

M. E. term was adyllis-house, or adyll-house; Catholicon Anglicum, p. 250.

HYPOTENUSE. To be marked as (F., = L., = Gk.).

IGUANA. Called a guano in 1588; see Arber's English Garner, ii. 123, last line.

ILIAD, l. 3. For 'crude form,' read 'stem.'

IMBROGLIO. (Ital.) Modern; in Webster. = Ital. imbroglio, perplexity, trouble, intrigue. = Ital. imbrogliare, to entangle, perplex, confuse. = Ital. im- (for in), in; broglia, a broil, confusion; see Broil (2), remarked upon at p. 782 above.

IMPAIR, l. 1. For 'weaker,' read 'weaken.'

IMPOSE. See note on Compose (above).

IMPOSTUME. We also find apostume; see Davies, Sapp. Glossary. This is directly from the Lat. form.

INDENT. 'Certain indentures trypartyte indentyd;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 57 (A. D. 1480).

INDICTION, l. 5. For 'Mezentius,' read 'Maxentius.' The mistake is in Haydn, whom I quote correctly.

INFAMY. Cf. M. E. infamou, apparently in the sense of dark, non-illustrious; Wyclif, Works, l. 271, l. 16.

INGOT, l. 8. For ingita, read ingita.

INK. For '(F., = L.),' read '(F., = L., = Gk.).' See the context.

INKLE. 'Threde [thread] and inkyll;' Arnold's Chron. p. 237 (about 1502).

INSOLENT, l. 5. Dele See Bolemin.

INSTIL, l. 4. For Still (3), read Still (2).

INTOXICATE. The root is TAKSH, extension of TAK. See Technical.

IOTA. Not (Gk.), but (Gk., = Heb.).

IPECACUANHA. The Brazilian name is said to be i-p-e-c-a-u-guana, or 'smaller road-side sick-making plant;' Athenseum, Jan. 18, 1879, p. 88.

IRON-MOULD; see MOULD (3), p. 795.

IRRECONCILABLE. To be marked as (F., = L.).

JABBER, l. 1. For 'Former,' read 'Formerly.'

JACKAL, l. 4. The reference to Heb. sh'al would be better omitted. The suggestion is in Maho's Webster, but is valueless.

JADE (2), a hard dark-green stone. (Span., = L.) This word has been completely solved by Prof. Max Muller, in a letter to The Times, Jan. 15, 1880. He says: 'The jade brought from America was called by the Spaniards pietra de ijada [or ijada], because for a long time it was believed to cure pain in the side. For similar reasons it was afterwards called lapis nephritis, nephrite, &c. This ijada became jada by loss of initial i, and lastly jade, the present Span. form. Again, ijada is a derivative from Lat. illa, pl., the groin, flank.'

JAUNTY. The spelling jaunty is due to the verb jaunt, with which it was easily linked, but it seems better to suppose that the true origin of jaunty was French, and it may be marked as (F., = L.). In this case, it is not really related to jaunt at all, but was merely confused with it. It was formerly spelt jaunty, the earliest example being that given in Todd's Johnson, which perhaps points to a supposed French origin. 'Not every one that brings from beyond seas a new gin, or jaunty device, is therefore a philosopher;' Hobbes Considered (1662). So also: 'This jaunty Sleightness to the French we owe;' T. Shadwell, Timon, p. 71 (1688). In the Spectator, no. 303, 'a jaunty part of the town' means 'a genteel part.' Mr. Davies notes that it is often spelt jaunt or jauntie, as if it were a F. word, and 'still wore its foreign dress.' Thus Farquhar has: 'Turn your head about with a jaunt air;' The Inconstant, Act 1. β. The explanation that it 'wore its foreign dress' is really no explanation, since there is no such word in French, and it is not easy to say how it came about. The F. jaunt means a felly of a wheel, which has clearly nothing to do with the matter, but Cotgrave notes that this jaunt was also spelt gaut, shewing confusion between initial g- and ja-. The suffix -ie is mere pseudo-French, and the word is not a pp. from a verb gauter (there being no such verb).

γ. The original is the F. gant, masc., gante, fem., 'neat, spruce, fine, comely, well arranged, quaintly dressed, also genteel, pliant, soft, easie;' Cot. Or else we may suppose that jaunty is short for jaunty, an occasional F. spelling of gant.

δ. These two explanations are practically identical, since Littré shows that F. gant is merely an adaptation of F. gantil, rather than an independent formation from L. genuus. We are thus led to consider jaunty as being a mere doublet of gant or gantil, which are also identical. Cf. 'So jimpily lac'd her gant waist;' Burns, Bonnie Ann.

JENNETING. In Hogg's Fruit Manual, 4th ed. p. 77, it is proposed to connect this with F. Jan, John. He cites from J. B. Porta the following: 'Est genus alterum [pomorum] quod quis circa festum Divi Joannis maturascit (sic), vulgus Melo de San Giovanni dicatur.' And again, from Tragus, Hortorum, p. 522. 'Quæ apud nos prima maturantur, Sancti Johannis Oppell (sic), Latina, Præcocia mala dicuntur.' Cotgrave has: 'Pomme de S. Jean, or Hestives, a soon-ripe apple called the St. John's apple.' This leaves little doubt as to the ultimate origin being from S. Jean. There is also a pear called Amiré Jounnet, or Admiré Jounnet, also Jounnet, Jounette, Petit St. Jean, in German Johannisbirne, which 'ripens' in July, so called from being ready for use in some parts of France about St. John's day, the 24th of June; Hogg's Fruit Manual, p. 361. Similarly the jounneting must have received its name from being in some places ripe on St. John's day, though in England it is not ripe till July. As to the form of the word, it answers best to F. Jounneton; for, although this is a feminine form, we have just seen that the early pear is called both Jounnet and Jounette. It is much more likely that jounneting = Jounneton, than that the suffix -ing was afterwards added, for no intelligible reason.

JOUST, l. 6. Dele See ADJUST.

JUNGLE (Hind., = Skt.) 'Hind. Jungal, jungal (also in other dialects), a forest, a thicket, any tract overrun with bushes or trees; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 230. = Skt. jungala, adj., dry, desert (as already given).

JUNK (1). 'Even whole junks fall, being a kind of barks made like unto our barges; An Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, ii. 125. This occurs in the account of Cavendish's voyage in 1586, written in 1588. The said junks were seen near Java.

JUTE, a substance resembling hemp. (Bengal. = Skt.) 'The jute of commerce is the product of two plants of the order Tiliaceæ, viz. Corchorus capularis and Corchorus olitorius . . . the leaves . . . are employed in medicine . . . dried leaves prepared for this purpose being found in almost every Hindu house in some districts of Bengal . . . Its recognition as a distinct plant [from hemp] dates from the year 1796, when Dr. Roxburgh, Superintendent of the East India Company's Botanical Garden at Seebpoor, forwarded a bale prepared by himself, under its present name of jute; Overland Mail, July 30, 1875, p. 17 (which contains a long article on Jute). = Bengal. jû, jout, 'the fibres of the bark of the Corchorus olitorius, much used for making a coarse kind of canvas, and the common gunni bags; it is also sometimes loosely applied to the plant; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 243. = Skt. juta (with cerebral t), matted hair, as worn by the god Çiva and by ascetics, hence a braid; of which a less usual form is jûta. It appears, from the Dict. by Bohtlingk and Roth, that this Skt. word was sometimes applied to the fibrous roots of a tree, descending from the branches, as in the case of the banyan, &c. Hence the extension of meaning to fibrous substances, and to jute. Cf. Malayâlim jut, (1) the matted hair of Shiva or of Hindu ascetics, (2) the fibrous roots of a tree descending from the branches; Bailey, Malayâlim Dict., p. 304. See also a letter by J. S. Cotton in The Academy, Jan. 17, 1880.

KERN (1), an Irish soldier. Dele the last 4 words. The derivation is not from Irish cernn, a man, but from Irish ceatharnach, a soldier (the th and ch being hardly sounded). = Irish caith, a battle, whence also caithfeur, a soldier (from feur, a man). So also Gael. ceatharnach, a soldier, fighting man (E. cesteran), from caith, battle. And cf. W. cadarn, powerful. The Irish and Gael. caith, W. caid, battle, is cognate with A. S. caitha, battle; see Fick, i. 56.

KIBBE. The W. forms are sibi (fem. y gabi), and ribnat. In N. Wales it is generally called llwyg sira, snow-burning or inflammation. (D. Silvan Evans.)

KICK. The W. cic occurs in the Mabinogion in the sense of 'foot; kick, to kick, is colloquial. (D. Silvan Evans.)

KILT. Otherwise, it may be Celtic; see Cormac, Gloss. 47, a. v. coll. Celt, vestia, raiment. Cf. Irish ceall, clothes. (A. L. Mayhew.) I confess I doubt this; the vowel is not the same, and the explanation I have already given seems worth notice, as explaining both the Scottish kilt, to tack up, and the Dan. kilts. The kilt is not exactly 'clothes,' but only a particular part of the dress.

KNAP. Cf. also Swed. knäpp, a crack, filip, snap; knäppa, to snap the fingers, to filip, to crack.

KNOWEL. Compare A. S. knýslung, a kneeling. 'Accubatus, Angl. Ing.' Wright's Voc. i. 41, col. 2.

KNUCKLE. We may particularly remark the O. Du. knocke. Hexham gives: 'De knocke, knocke, ofte Waters een een knocke, the knob or knot of a tree.' So also G. Knocken, a knot, bunch.

LABURNUM. Perhaps Lat. laburnum is a variation of alburnum. Cf. 'F. ambour, the cypress, laburnum, from Lat. alburnum;' Brachet. And see Catholicon Anglicum, p. 6, note 3.

LAC (1). The sense of lahka, viz. 100,000, has reference to the number of lac-insects in a nest; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 308. See LAC (1). Wilson adds that the insect constructs its nest in numerous small cells of a resinous substance known as shell-lac.

LAITY. Not (L. = Gk.), but (F. = L. = Gk.).

LANDRAIL. For 'see RAIL (2),' read 'see RAIL (3).'

LANDSCAPE. 'I give also unto her La[dish]pp the landshipp inamiled vpon gold which is in the Dutch cabinet in my closett;' Bury Walls, ed. Tymms, p. 216 (A.D. 1648).

LANYARD. Spelt lanzer, Catholicon Anglicum, p. 208. M. E. lanzer, Trevisa, tr. of Higden's Polychronicon, v. 369.

LAP (1). The A. S. lapan occurs in Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zepitz, p. 177, l. 11: 'Lombo, ic liccige ofðe lapige,' i. e. I lick or lap. Cf. also Du. loppen, to sip; Swed. läppa, to lap.

LAST (1), l. 4. Dele 'loel. d lasti, at last, from latr, late.' Curiously enough, the particular phrase at last did not originate from the adj. last, but last is here a totally different word, and belongs to last (2). The phrase at last is due to A. S. on last, or on laste. See the phrase on last = at last, in Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. Sweet, p. 21, l. 10, and Mr. Sweet's note at p. 474, where he distinctly points out that at last has nothing to do with late. This suggests that loel. d last stands for d lasti, lasti being dative of lastir.

LATHER. 'Nitrum, latfor;' Wright's Voc. ii. 62, col. 1.

LAWN (2). Stow is wrong. Lawn is enumerated among the 'wares of Flanders' as early as 1502, in Arnold's Chron., ed. 1811, p. 205. This is a clear half century before Stow's mention of its use in 1562. Perhaps the corruption from F. lawn to E. lawn may have been helped on by some confusion with Du. lawn, cloth.

LAY (1), l. 8. For 'Swed. lägga,' read 'Swed. lägga.'

LAYER. I now suspect (and I find Dr. Stratzman is of the same opinion) that layer is nothing but another (and worse) spelling of lair, due to that confusion between lay and lie in popular speech which every one must have observed; the spelling layers for 'lair' has been already noted, a. v. Lair. Thus for 'distinct from lar,' we should read 'the same as lair,' and amend the article accordingly.

LEAGUE (1). 'Xvi. furlong make a French league;' Arnold's Chron., 1781, p. 173. The spelling leage verifies the etymology from L. leuga.

LEAK. Cf. 'wet leak ship' = the leaky ship; Ælfric's tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, p. 437, l. 15. The initial l is remarkable, and prob. original.

LEAN (1). By the Swed. läna, I mean Swed. läna sig, to lean, given in Wisdegren (1788), and copied in the Tauchnitz Dict. The usual Swed. läna means 'to lead.' Cf. however, lämatol, an easy chair, chair to lean back in.

LEASH, l. 8. For 'leass' read 'leash.'

LEES. 'Put thereto lyes of swete wyne;' Arnold's Chron., ed. 1811, p. 189. Thus the word was at first spelt lyes [= lys], in strict accordance with its derivation from F. lys, pl. of lie.

LEFT. I unfortunately omitted to state that the etymology here given was derived from Mr. Sweet. See Anglia, vol. iii. p. 155 (1880), where the same account is given by him. He notes that lyft is an i-stem = lyfti°, from the $\sqrt{\text{RUP}}$, to break; see Schmidt, Vocalismus, i. 159. From the same root we have lop and lih, as already pointed out.

LEGAL, l. 6. For 'swijum, to lie,' read 'swijum, I lie.'

LEMMING, l. 8. For '= Swed.,' read '≠ Swed.'

LEMNON. The pl. lemmonis occurs as early as in Arnold's Chronicle, p. 234 (ab. 1502). Limon-trous; Bacon, Essay 46.

LEPHER, l. 10. Dele cocama after 'skin.'

LET (1), l. 5. For 'pp. létton,' read 'pp. létton.'

LEVY. Both the sb. and vb. occur rather early. 'That the [they] make levy of my dettys;' Bury Walls, ed. Tymms, p. 43 (A.D. 1463). 'Aftyr the sayde money is levyed,' id. p. 49 (A.D. 1467).

LIBATION, l. 6. For Rivar, read Rivulet.

LID. The A. S. lid is directly derived from Mid-on, pp. of Midan, to shut, cover, as already given.

LIEF, last line. Dele deliberate.

LIEUTENANT. The pronunciation as lieftenant is nothing new. The pl. lieftennants occurs in Arnold's Chron., ab. 1502, ed. 1811, p. 120; and lieftennant in the Book of Noblesse, pr. in 1475, as quoted in the Catholicon Anglicum, p. 223, note 1.

LILAC. Bacon mentions 'the Lalack Tree;' Essay 46. 'The Persian lilac was cultivated in England about 1638, the common lilac about 1597;' Davies, Sopp. Glossary.

LIMON (1), l. 12. For Rivar, read Rivulet.

LIMP (2). I have found the A. S. word. It occurs in a gloss of the 8th century. 'Lardus, limp-halt;' Wright's Voc. ii. 112, col. 1. I suppose that lardus here represents Gk. λαρδός, stooping, bending forward, with reference to a decrepit gait. In any case, the word is thus proved to have been in very early use in English.

LINCH-PIN. 'Azredo, lynus; Azredones, lynemus;' Wright's Voc. ii. 7 (11th cent.).

LINNET. 'Carduelis, linnet-wige;' Wright's Voc. ii. 13 (11th cent.). This explains the form linnetwige as compounded of linet (from A. S. lin, L. linum, flax), and wige, a creature that moves quickly about, as if it were 'flax-hopper.' Perhaps our linnet is merely this word shortened. It makes little difference, since linnet is ultimately Latin.

LIQUID, l. 6. For River, read Rivulet.

LISTEN. Cf. also Swed. lyssna, to listen; prob. put for lytina°. On the other hand, we find Dan. lytte, to listen, prob. by assimilation from lyste°.

LITMUS. Spelt lyssmus in a receipt for 'The Crafte to make corke for diars;' in Arnold's Chron., ed. 1811, p. 187.

LIVELONG, l. 1. For 'long as it is,' read 'long as life is'

LO, interj. Mr. Sweet remarks: Lo cannot come from O. E. [A. S.] lā, because of the rime lo : eo in the Cursor Mundi (no reference). The form low in the oldest text of the Ancra Riwe [no reference, but lo occurs at p. 52, l. 21] points to an O. E. low° or lōg°, which latter may be a variation of lō, which occurs in the Chronicle, 'hi ferdon loc hu bi woldon,' an. 1009, Laud MS., ed. Earle, p. 142, where the other MSS. have loca, the imperative of lōcian, to look.—Phil Soc. Proceedings, June 3, 1881.

LOAD. It can hardly be quite the same word as lade. Perhaps load was formed from lādā, pt. t. of lādian, to load. Cf. we loden—we did lade, Ormulum, 19319. If so, it ought rather to have taken the form load, but was easily confused in sound with the old word lade, a course; see Lode. I cannot agree with Dr. Stratmann in entirely dissociating load from A. S. lādian, and regarding it merely as another form of lade; the difference in sense is too great; and the association of load with lade is felt by us to be very intimate. As to the confusion between A. S. lād and lō, see note on Lo (above).

LOATHSOME. Mr. Sweet remarks: the O. E. [A. S.] lōð has simply the meaning of hostility, and there does not appear to be any such word as lōðsum. Loathsome was probably formed from lōðsum, by substitution of the familiar lōð for lōðit.—Phil. Soc. Proceedings, June 3, 1881. This is probable enough; since M. E. lōðsum went out of use, though occurring in Chancer, C. T., Group B, 3814; whilst loathsome does not occur, according to Stratmann, earlier than in the Promptorium Parvulorum, A. D. 1440. At the same time, I have already remarked that the A. S. lōðlic = E. loathly; and I may add that Stratmann gives 13 references for M. E. lōðlic, which had as nearly as possible the same sense as our loathsome. Cf. Lothsum, idem quod loathly; Prompt. Parv. Hence the argument from the original sense of A. S. lōð is really of no force.

LOBSTER. The etymology given is strongly corroborated by the 8th century A. S. gloss: 'Locusta, lopan;' Wright's Voc. ii. 113, col. 1. Here lopan is manifestly a mere attempt at pronouncing Lat. locusta, and the later A. S. forms loppan, loppanre are mere extensions of lopan.

LOCKRAM. 'A new rayle [night-dress] and a locherum kercher;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 147 (A. D. 1556).

LOGIC, l. 4. For visny, read vixny.

LONG (1), l. 4. For 'Swed. lång;' read 'Swed. lång, adj. long.' The ä appears in the adv. långs, long, and the sb. långd, length.

LOT. There seem to have been two distinct forms, viz. A. S. lot and A. S. lōt or lōt; the Icel. lotr was orig. lōtr. The forms lōt and lōtr, together with G. lot and Goth. lotis, are from a diphthongal base HLAUT.

LUKEWARM. Cf. Swed. dial. ly, tepid; the ordinary Swed. word is lym. The Danish word is lunden, corresponding to Swed. dial. lymken (Riets).

LUMP, l. 14. For 'Lap (1),' read 'Lap (2).'

LURCH (1). Lurker = pilferer. 'Ye, but throwe falce lurchers;' Roy, Rede Me, ed. Arber, p. 98 (A. D. 1528).

LYE. 'Lixa, lād;' Wright's Voc. ii. 52, col. 1.

MAD. Note the following glosses. 'Ineptus, gmadad;' Wright's Voc. ii. 111, col. 2. 'Fatus, gmad;' id. 73, col. 2. 'Amens, gmad;' id. 5, col. 2. 'Vanus, gmadad;' Vecora, gmad;' id. 123, col. 1 (8th century).

MADRIGAL, last line. For 'the suffix -gals = L. -alis,' read 'the suffix -ig-ale = Lat. -ialis. Cf. E. vert-is-al.'

MAJORDOMO. Puttonham, in his Art of Poecie, 1589, b. iii. c. 4 (ed. Arber, p. 158) notes that Major-domo 'is borrowed of the Spaniard and Italian, and therefore new and not vsuall, but to them that are acquainted with the affaires of Court.' The Ital. is major-domo, but the E. word was more likely borrowed from Spanish, being in use at the court of Elizabeth, and perhaps of Mary.

MALARIA. The reference to Debonair requires a word of comment, since the Ital. aria is there used in a very different sense. Under aria, Florio refers to serv; and he explains serv to mean 'the element aere, a countenance, a look, a cheere, an aspect, a presence or app[er]ance of a man or woman; also, a tune, a sound, a note or an ayre of muscke or any ditty.' This great range of meanings is very remarkable.

MALL (2). Rightly marked as (F., = L.); but pull-mall is really (F., = Ital., = G. and L.).

MAMMA. 'The babe shall now begin to tattle and call hir Mamma;' Euphues and his Ephœbus, ed. Arber, p. 129 (A. D. 1579).

MAMMOTH, l. 17. The quotation is quite correctly made, but 'horns' should certainly be 'bones.' The Russian for a bone is bone.

MANCHINEEL, a W. Indian tree. (Span., = L.) 'Manchineel-tree, a tree that grows wild in the woods of Jamaica, the fruit of which is as round as a ball;' Phillips, ed. 1706. [Mahn gives an Ital. form mancinello, but I cannot find it; it must be quite modern, and borrowed from Spanish; the same, like many W. Indian words, is certainly Spanish, not Italian.] = Span. manzanillo, a little apple-tree; hence, the manchineel tree, from the apple-like fruit; dimin. of Span. manzana, an apple, also a pommel. Cf. Span. manzanal, an orchard of apple-trees. = Lat. Maticana, fem. of Maticanus, adj.; we find Maticana mala, and Maticana pome, applied to certain kinds of apples. The adj. Maticanus, Matican, is from Lat. Maticus, the name of a Roman gens (White).

MARCESCENT. Prof. Postgate remarks that the 'fundamental meaning of marcescere is not so much "to begin to die" or "to decay" as "to become soft, flabby, squabby, to begin to rot," which is the sign of decay.' This agrees still more closely with Gk. μαλαίνω, which (as we learn from Hesychius) was the orig. form of μαλακός, soft. The orig. sense of μαλακός was 'beaten soft,' from the base MARK, to beat, pound, as already given. The same base accounts for Lat. marvus, a hammer; see March (2).

MARGRAVE. As to the etymology of G. graf, see the long note in Max Müller, Lect. on Language, ii. 281. On p. 284, we read, 'whatever its etymology,' says Waitz, no mean authority, 'the name of graf is certainly German.' My suggestion amounts to this, that the supposed Teutonic origin of graf seems to depend, in some measure, on the assumption that the G. graf and the A. S. gvefa are related words, an assumption which renders the whole question much more obscure, and appears to me to be entirely unwarranted. In the A. S. gvefa, ge- is a mere prefix, whilst the German word appears to begin with gr. How to reconcile the A. S. f with the G. g is a difficulty which is most easily solved by not attempting it.

MARTINET. The word occurs in Wycherley, Plain Dealer, iii. 1 (Davies). This agrees with the account already given, since Wycherley's life (1640-1715) just coincides with the reign of Louis XIV (1643-1715).

MARTINGALE. To be marked as (F.).

MASH, l. 15. For 'Swed. mäsh;' read 'Swed. mäsha.'

MATE (1). We also find Low G. maat, a companion, O. Swed. mat, mät, a companion, comrade (Ihre).

MATRESSE. 'Lego eidem Roberto j. matras et j. per blankets;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 11 (A. D. 1441).

MAUND, a basket. (E.) This word, now nearly obsolete, occurs as early as the 8th century, in the gloss: 'Quibus, mand;' Wright's Voc. i. 116, col. 2. † Du. mand, a basket, hamper. † Prov. G. mand, mande, manno, a basket (Flügel); whence F. manne. Root obscure.

ME, l. 5. Before Lat. mibi, for =, read †.

MEMENTO. 'To have mynde [remembrance] on vs. . in his [the priest's] memento;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 18. 'Rememberye you in oure memento;' Roy, Rede Me, p. 65. It was thus an ecclesiastical term, having reference to the remembrance of benefactors in the priest's saying of mass.

MERE (1), last line. Omit this line; for mere and moor are prob. not related.

METHINKS, l. 6. For 'Icel. þykja (= þykja),' read 'Icel. þykja (= þykja).'

METROPOLIS, l. 3. The statement 'except in modern popular usage' is objected to; I am quite ready to give it up. I believe I adopted the idea from an article in the Saturday Review, written in a very decisive tone. The original meaning is well known. 'And therof is metropolis called the chief cite, where the Archbishop of any province hath his see, and hath all the other dioceses of that province subject to him, as Caunterbury and Yorke here in Englande;' Udall, tr. of Erasmus' Apophthegma, Diogenes, § 110.

MILCH. Not (E.), but (Scand.).

MILDEW. 'Nectar, swig, oßs mildew;' Wright's Voc. ii. 61, col. 2.

MINIM, l. 7. For 'Lat. minimum, minimus, acc. of minimus;' read 'Lat. minima, fem. nom., or minimus, fem. acc. of minimus;' &c.

MINX. Also applied to a lap-dog or pet dog, in accordance with the derivation given. 'A little myne [pet dog] ful of playe;' Udall, tr. of Erasmus' Apophthegms, 1542 (ed. 1877, p. 143).

MITE (1). To be marked as (E.).

MITE (2). In Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 304, it is expressly said that a mite is a Dutch coin, and that 'vij mytis makith an Eng: d.; i. e. a mite is half a farthing; cf. Mark, xii. 42.

MIX, last line. For 'from mixturus,' read 'formed similarly to mixturus.'

MIZZLE. 'To miselle, to myyelle, pluittare;' also 'a miselynge, nimbus;' Catholicon Anglicum, p. 241.

MOAT. The Romansch word muotta, a lower rounded hill, is interesting, as being still in very common use in the neighbourhood of Pontresina. It is the same word as F. motta.

* MOONSHEE, a secretary. (Arab.) 'A writer, a secretary; applied by Europeans usually to teachers or interpreters of Persian and Hindustani;' H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 356.—Arab. muṣṣā, a writer, secretary, tutor, language-master; Rich. Dict. p. 1508.

MOREIS. To be marked as (Span.,—L.,—Gk.).

MOTET. This actually occurs as early as in Wyclif, English Works, ed. Matthew (E. E. T. S.), p. 91, l. 4 from bottom.

MOULD (1), l. 9. The adj. mouldy is only related to mould, crumbling earth, when used with direct reference to such mould, which is very seldom the case. The word mouldy, as commonly used, is a different word altogether. See Mouldy (below).

MOULD (3), rust, spot. (E.) Perhaps only in the compound iron-mould. Here mould is a mere corruption of mole, a spot; the added d was prob. due to confusion with mole, i. e. spotted. 'One droppe of poyson infecteth the whole tunne of Wine; . . . one yron Mols defaceth the whole peece of Lawne;' Lyly, Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 39. See further under Mole (1).

* MOULDY, musty, fusty. (Scand.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 134; iii. 2. 119. This is an extremely difficult word. It has probably been confused with mould (1), supposed to mean dirt, though it properly means only friable earth. It has also probably been confused with mould (3), rust, spot of rust. But with neither of these words has it anything to do. It is formed from the sb. mould, fastness, which is quite an unoriginal word, as will appear. For an example of this sb., compare: 'we see that cloth and apparell, not aired, doe breed moathes and mould;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 343. This sb. is due to the M. E. verb moulen, to become mouldy, to putrify or rot, as in: 'Let us not moulen thus in idleness;' Chaucer, C. T. Group B. l. 32. The pp. mouled was used in the precise sense of the mod. E. mouldy, and it is easy to see that the sb. was really due to this pp., and in its turn produced the adj. mouldy. Stratmann cites 'bi mouled mete,' i. e. thy mouldy meat, Political Poems, &c., ed. Furnivall, p. 181; mouled bread, i. e. mouldy bread, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 85. So also mouled, mouide, mucidus; from mouide, mucidare, Catholicon Anglicum, q. v. Todd cites: 'Sour wine, and moulded bread;' Abp. Cranmer, Ans. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 299. With which compare: 'Very coarse, hoary, moulded bread,' Knollys, Hist. of the Turks (Todd). β. The oldest spelling of the M. E. verb is munolen. 'Ober leten jinges munolen ober rusten'—or let things grow mouldy or rusty; Ancræn Riwle, p. 344, l. 4. We also find 'muled jinges'—mouldy things, id. p. 104, note A.—Icel. mygla, to grow musty. Formed, by vowel-change of u to y, from Icel. mugga, mugginess. See Muggy. Thus mould is mugginess; the notions of muggy and mouldy are still not far apart. Cf. also Swed. mögla, to grow mouldy, mögal, mouldiness or mould; möglig, mouldy. Der. mouldi-ness; also mould, verb, put for moul, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 3. 41. See note on Mould (1) above.

MOUTH. To the cognate forms add G. mund.

MUMBLE. Add: Dan. munle, Swed. munla, to mumble.

MUSCLE (2). The A. S. muscle actually occurs. 'Conché, musclan, scilla;' Mone, Quellen, p. 340.

MUTTON. If we reject the Celtic origin, we may fall back upon the explanation given by Diez. The Celtic words may all have been borrowed from Low Latin, and they cannot be satisfactorily explained as Celtic. See Ducange, s. v. castrones, who has: 'oves, maltonas, castrones, vel agnellos;' (A. L. Mayhew.)

MYRIAD. From the swarming of ants; see Pismire.

NAG. Owing to the derivation from Du. negge, we actually find the spelling neg, in North's Life of Lord Guildford, ed. 1808, i. 272 (Davies).

NEAP. Cf. also Swed. knapp, scanty, scarce, narrow, sparing; knappa, to pinch, stint.

NEGRO. It is suggested that this is from Port. negro, black, not from Span. negro, black. It is surely very hard to decide, and cannot greatly matter.

NESH. The A. S. nom. is nesce rather than nesc. (T. N. Toller.)

NINEPINS. Ben Jonson speaks of 'nine-pins or keils;' Chlo-ridia, The Antimasque.

NIT. The A. S. nitian is also used in the sense to dash or strike, as in speaking of the collision of armed hosts; see Grein.

NOCTURN. The Lat. nocturnus may also be divided as noct-urnus; cf. di-urnus. Roby divides it as noct-urnus, from noctu, by night, but enters it under the suffix -ur-no-. My division as noct-urnus = Gk. νυκ-τερον, is that given by Vanček.

NOSEGAY. The use of gay in the sense of a gay or showy object occurs in a quotation from N. Breton, ed. Grosart, given by Davies in his Supp. Glossary. Breton says: 'And though perhaps most commonly each youth is given in deede to follow every gays;' Toys of an Idle Head, p. 28.

NOWISE, l. 4. For 'wise is dat. case of A. S. wisa,' read 'wis is for wisian, dat. case of A. S. wise.'

NOZZLE. Cf. 'Ansa, nosle,' Wright's Voc. ii. 6 (11th cent.). This looks like the same word.

NUZZLE. So also Swed. nosa, to smell to, to sniff; nasa pd all ting, to thrust one's nose into every corner (Widgren).

OAKUM. That the orig. sense of A. S. deamba was 'that which is combed away,' appears from the fact that it occurs as a gloss to L. putamen, i. e. that which is cut away; Mone, Quellen, p. 407.

OBSTACLE. For the suffix -culo, see Roby, 3rd ed. pt. 1, § 862, 2 (c) 2. So also in Oracle, Receptacle.

OGLE. The verb to ogle is used by Dryden (Todd; no reference); the sb. occurs in The Spectator, no. 46. 'The city neither like us nor our wit, They say their wives learn ogling in the pit;' T. Shadwell, Tegue o Dively, Epilogue, p. 80 (1691). A sidenote says: 'A foolish word among the canters for glancing.' It is thus one of the cant words introduced from Holland.

ONE. For the modern pronunciation, cf. 'Woss that is nether fesshe nor fisshe;' Roy, Rede Me, ed. Arber, p. 117 (A. D. 1528). Roy also has wother for other; id. p. 60, l. 17.

ORAL, l. 5. Instead of \sqrt{AN} , Vanček refers us to \sqrt{AS} , to breathe, to be, whence also E. is.

ORGLES. Not (F.,—L.), but (F.,—L.,—Gk.).

ORISON. I have received the following criticism. 'Treat -tio as -tor; there is no need of interposing the passive participle, which contributes nothing to the sense.' My reason for mentioning the passive participle is that it is better known than the supine, and for all practical purposes does just as well. I think there is certainly a need to mention the [form of the] passive participle, as it contributes something to the form. Thus Roby, in his Lat. Grammar, 3rd ed. pt. i. § 854, well explains the suffix -tion as helping to form 'abstract feminine substantives formed from cupius stans,' and instances accusat-io (from accus-at-um, supine). This is precisely what I intend, and I am convinced that it is right.

* ORLE, in heraldry, an ordinary like a fillet round the shield, within it, at some distance from the border; in architecture, a fillet. (F.,—L.) F. orle, fem. 'a hem, selvidge, or narrow border; in blazon, an orle, or open border about, and within, a coat of arms;' Cot. = Low Lat. orla, a border, edge; in use A. D. 1244 (Ducange). This answers to a Lat. form *orula, not found, dimin. of ora, border, edge, margin.

ORREERY. 'And makes a universe an orrey;' Young, Night Thoughts, Night 9. The barony of Orrey derives its name from the people called Orbraighs, descendants of Orb; see Cormac's Glossary, ed. Stokes, 1868, p. 128. (A. L. Mayhew.)

OVERHAUL. Not (E.), but (Hybrid; E. and F.,—G.).

OWN (3). Add: Swed. anna, to grant, allow, admit.

PACT, l. 3. For paciscere, read pacisci.

* PADDY, rice in the husk. (Malay.,—Skt.) Malay. padli, rice in the husk; the same as Karnāta (Canarese) bhakta, bhutta, 'rice in the husk; commonly called by Europeans in the S. of India batty, in the N. paddy, both derived apparently from this term, which again is derived from the Skt. bhakta, properly, not raw, but boiled rice;' H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, pp. 79 and 386.—Skt. bhakta, food, boiled rice; orig. pp. of bhāj, to divide, take, possess (Bensley).

PAGEANT. An important example of this word, without the added d, occurs in Wyclif. 'And þes pagyn playen þei'—and this pageant they play; Works, ed. Arnold, i. 129, l. 5.

PALTRY. Cf. G. spalten, to split.

PAMPHELET. A curious instance of Low Lat. panfletus occurs: 'Revera libros non libros maluimus, codicæque plusquam florenos, ac panfletos exiguos incrassatis prætulimus palfridis;' Rich. de Bury, Philobiblon, c. 8.

PAPA, last line. For 'infantive,' read 'infantine.'

* PARIAN, an outcast. (Tamil.) Spelt paria in the story called The Indian Cottage, where it occurs frequently. From 'Tamil paraiyas, commonly, but corruptly, pariah, Malayálm parayan, a man of a low caste, performing the lowest menial services; one of his duties is to beat the village drum (called parai in Tamil), whence, no doubt, the generic appellation of the caste; H. H. Wilson, Glossary of Indian Terms, p. 401.

PARRICIDE. Not (F., -L., -Gk.), miscopied from the preceding word, but (F., -L.).

PARTAKE. We find partetaker as late as in Roy, Rede Me, ed. Arber, p. 85 (A.D. 1528).

PASTOR. l. 9. See note on Mix (above).

PATE. Not (F., -G.), but (F., -G., -Gk.).

PATOIS. Occurs in Smollett, France and Italy, Letter xxi (Davies). Smollett gives a comic etymology from Lat. patovinitas (1), and accuses Livy of writing patois.

PAWNEE, drink; as in brandy-pawnee, Thackeray, Newcomes, ch. i. (Hind., -Skt.) Hind. páni, water (also in Bengáli, and other dialects); Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 397. - Skt. pánīya (Wilson), allied to pána, drinking, beverage (Benfey). - Skt. pá, to drink; cf. E. potation.

PEA-JACKET, last two lines. Still, the W. pais can hardly be a related word. Prof. Rhys derives W. pais, formerly paiz, from Lat. paena, i. e. paena vestis or paena tunica. The Lat. paenus, combed, having the nap on, is the pp. of pectere, to comb.

PEAL. 'Of the sweete paie and melodye of bellis;' Monk of Evesham, c. lvii; ed. Arber.

PEDIGREE. The spelling paist degree occurs in Stanyhurst, tr. of Æneid, ed. Arber, p. 14, l. 14; but this is probably a form of Stanyhurst's own, and proves nothing; for he also writes pedegrye, p. 30, l. 2. At three lines from the end, for 'predigree' read 'pedigree.'

PEEP (2). Cf. 'by the peeps of daye;' Life of Lord Grey, Camden Soc., p. 23. Clearly peep = pipe.

PENAL. To be marked as (F., -L.).

PERENNIAL. Or we might explain Lat. perennis as 'lasting through the year.'

PERIWIG. 'Galerus, an hatte, a pirwike;' Cooper's Thesaurus (1565).

PERUSE. I am confirmed in the etymology given by the use of this word in Fitzherbert's Book of Husbandry, first printed in 1523, so that he is a very early authority for it. He uses it just in the sense 'to use up,' or 'go through,' as if from per- and us. Thus a shepherd is instructed to examine all his sheep, 'and thus peruse them all tyll he have done;' § 40, l. 23. The farmer is to number his sheaves, setting aside a tenth for tithes, 'and so to peruse from lande to lande, tyll he have trefely tythed all his corne,' § 40, l. 7; &c. As a good instance of a similar word take perstand, to understand, of which Davies says that it occurs several times in Peele's Clyomon and Clamydes.

PETRIFY. Not (F., -L., -Gk.), but (F., -Gk. and L.).

PETROLEUM. Not (Hybrid); but (L., -Gk.).

PHANTOM. l. 9. Dele comma after 'cause.'

PHILHARMONIC. l. 3. For appovia, read appovia.

PIAZZA. Not (Ital., -L.), but (Ital., -L., -Gk.).

PICE, a small copper coin in the E. Indies. (Maráthi.) From Maráthi paissá, a copper coin, of varying value; the Company's paissá is fixed at the weight of 100 grains, and is rated at 4 to the ana, or 64 to the rupee; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 389.

PICNIC. That the latter syllable is connected, as I supposed, with knick-knack, appears from the fact that knickknack was another name for a picnic. 'Janus. I am afraid I can't come to cards, but shall be sure to attend the repast. A knickknack, I suppose? Cons. Yes, yes, we all contribute as usual; the substantial from Alderman Sarloin's; Lord Frispy's cook finds fricassees and ragouts;' &c. Foote, The Nabob, Act 1. See Davies, Supp. Glossary.

PICTURE. l. 4. Instead of calling picture orig. the fem. of picture, the fut. part. of pingere, it is better to describe picture as 'a feminine sb., with similar formation to that of the future participle,' as in Roby, Lat. Grammar, pt. i. § 893. It makes no difference as to the form of the word, but makes some difference in the principle of formation. So also under Punoture and Rapture.

PINCH. Dante has picchia, Purg. x. 130. (A. L. Mayhew.) Florio gives only picciare in the sense to pinch; but both picciare and picchiare in the sense 'to knock at a door.'

PINCHBECK. There are two villages, East and West Pinchbeck, near Spalding, in Lincolnshire. Mr. Pinchbeck may have taken his name from one of these. If so, we should expect beck to mean stream; see Beck (2). Pinch might then mean 'narrow;' and, as this word is of F. origin, we can hardly suppose this place-name to be much older than the fourteenth century.

PIPPIN. The probability that a pippin is an apple raised from a pipin or pip is borne out by the following. 'To plaste trees of greynes and pipins;' Arnold's Chron., ed. 1811, p. 167.

PIBIRE. I much regret that I misunderstood the article in Wedgwood; he did not intend to connect the Du. sb. mier with the Du. verb mijgen. He is therefore quite right, and only enumerates various names for the ant, one of which, viz. Low G. misgemke, he rightly derives from Low G. miegen.

PISS. l. 3. Dele, 'a nursery word,' as cited from Wedgwood. What Wedgwood really says is that 'the Lettish pischet is a nursery word.' The remark was not intended to apply to the E. word.

PLAINTAIN. To be marked as (F., -L.).

PLASTER. We find emplastr, sb., in The Monk of Evesham, ed. Arber, last page; and the pl. emplasters at p. 22.

PLATE. This even appears in A. S., borrowed from Low Latin. 'Obrizum, platum, smáete gold;' Mone, Quellen, p. 403.

PLAYHOUSE. The existence of this word even in A. S. is remarkable. 'Caletis theatri, ptes heofonlican plegháses;' Mone, Quellen, p. 366.

PLIGHT (1), ll. 9, 13. For plion, plio, read plíon, plíó. Cf. also Dan. and Swed. pligt, a duty.

PLY. l. 14. Dele com-ply.

POACH (1), 7th line from end. For 'yoke' read 'yolk.'

POLL. To be marked as (O. Low G., -C. ?).

POOB. I have already said that I understand the M. E. poore to stand for poore. We actually find 'The poore and nedy;' Roy, Rede Me, ed. Arber, p. 76.

POPINJAY. l. 1. For (Bavarian), read (F., -Bavarian).

PORRINGER. The statement that w was inserted can be proved. The spelling 'porrgers of pewter' occurs in Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 115 (A.D. 1522).

POSE (1), section 3. The true derivatives of Lat. ponere do not only appear in the sbs. such as position, but also in the verbs compound, espond, propound, and the adjectives ponent, component, &c.

POSE (3), a cold in the head. For (E. ?), read (C.). The word is certainly Celtic, from W. pas, a cough; cf. Corn. pas, Bret. paz, a cough, Irish casachdas, a cough, Skt. kás, to cough, Lithuan. kositi, to cough. - \surd KAS, to cough; see note upon A. S. hwatan at the end of the article on Whesse. (Suggested by A. L. Mayhew.)

POTASH. Mentioned as early as 1502. 'Xij. ll. pot-ashes;' Arnold's Chron., ed. 1811, p. 187.

PRESAGE. l. 5. For Sage (1), read Sagacious.

PRETTY. We can trace this word still further back. Spurrell explains W. prait by 'practice,' as well as 'act or deed;' and Prof. Rhys points out that W. -ith = Lat. -it, as in W. rhaith = Lat. rectum, &c.; see his Lectures on Welsh Philology, p. 64. Hence W. prait answers to, and was prob. borrowed from, Low Lat. practica, execution, accomplishment, performance. And this Lat. word is, of course, merely borrowed from Greek; see further under PRACTICE. It is clear that the same Low L. practica will also account for Icel. prettir, a trick, piece of roguery, which answers to it both in form and sense; for practica also meant 'trickery,' like the E. practica in Elizabethan writers. The suffix -y in pretty is, accordingly, English; but the rest of the word was borrowed from British, which in its turn was borrowed from Latin, and ultimately from Gk. Thus the word may (probably) be marked as (L., -Gk.; with E. suffix.). Suggested by A. L. Mayhew.

PRICK. l. 7. For 'Swed. prika,' read 'Swed. pricka.'

PRICKLE. 'Stimulus, pricellum;' Mone, Quellen, p. 417.

PRIM. In paragraph marked ¶, read: 'The sense of 'thin' may be due to the idea of new or first-grown, with reference to new buds, &c.'

PROCREATE. l. 3. For 'L. pro-, beforehand,' read 'L. pro-, forth.' The Lat. for beforehand is pro-.

PROGENITOR. l. 5. For 'before,' read 'forth.'

PRONE. l. 4. For Prónus read Prónus.

PROPENSITY. To be marked as (L.).

PROPER. l. 6. Read: also proper-ty, M. E. proprety, &c.

PRUNE (1), l. 18. For 'As do than hauke,' read 'As doth an hauke.'

PUDDLE. The Welsh is puddel, not in the dictionaries; whence puddelog, adj., full of puddles (D. Silvan Evans).

PUGNACIOUS. l. 6. For 'Lat. pugnus,' read 'Lat. pugna, a battle, allied to Lat. pugnus,' &c.

PUNT (2). Not (F., -Span., -Ital.), but (F., -Span., -L.). See context.

PURSLAIN. l. 5. After 'Prompt. Parv., p. 417,' insert: = F. porcelaine, pourcelaine, 'the herb purslane;' Cot.

QUARRY (2), a heap of slaughtered game. (F., -L.) The account of F. curés given in Littre shews decisively that the explanation given under this word is wrong. The point is one of difficulty, and turns on the fact that the O. F. curés and corés, given by Burguy as variants of the same word, are in fact, totally different words. I have correctly given the etymology of O. F. corae, formed from Lat. cor, the heart; unfortunately, this is not the E. word. β . The O. F. corae appears, in its oldest form, as cuirae, and this form is given by Roquefort, with a correct derivation. He explains cuirae as meaning 'in curde des chiens de chasse, de corium.' Now it is precisely this O. F. cuirae which explains our word; it was naturally written as querra (dissyllabic) in Middle English, as in the quotation already cited; and afterwards became quarry, precisely as we have clerk for clerk, dark for M. E. derk, &c., &c. Littré gives a long quotation from Modus, fol. 23 back (of the 14th century), shewing that the quarry, as given to the dogs, was prepared and given to them in the skin of the slain animal. Hence O. F. cuirae is formed (with suffix -ae = L. -ata) from cuir, skin, hide. = L. corium, hide, skin. See Cuirass. Scheler accepts this explanation as decisive; the old etymology, as given in Brachet, must be set aside.

QUICKSAND. 'Aurippus. civice-sand,' lit. quake-sand. Wright's Voc. ii. 8 (11th cent.). It has been shewn that quake and quick are closely related; and see Quagmire.

QUICKSILVER. 'Argentum vivum, civice-silver;' Wright's Voc. ii. 8 (11th cent.).

QUININE. In the neighbourhood of Loxa, S. of Quito, the tree is called quina quina, bark of barks. (Reference lost; but see the book on Peruvian Bark by C. R. Markham.)

QUINSY, l. 6. The prefixed s may be explained as due to O. F. es = Lat. ex, used as an intensive prefix.

QUIRK, l. 3. Dele And tal-k from tall.

QUOTA, l. 4. Lat. quotus means 'what in the order of numbering.'

QUOTE. See note above.

RABBI, l. 3. The Jewish word is rabbî (not rabî), which, strictly speaking, is not 'extended' from rab, but is rab together with i, the pronominal suffix; and this suffix requires the doubling of the consonant, dagesh forte. (A. L. Mayhew.)

RACCOON. The account given of this word is entirely wrong. It is a native N. American word. 'Arakhoan, a beast like a fox;' in a glossary of Indian words at the end of A. Historie of Travaile into Virginia, by Wm. Strachey; pub. by the Hackluyt Society in 1849. The date of this is about 1610-12. Spelt rackoon in Bailey's Dict., 1735. It follows that it is the F. name raton which is the corrupt form. (Communicated.)

RACK (1), l. 10. Insert l after br.

RAG, l. 8. Dele See Rug.

RAISE, l. 5. By 'the simple verb,' I mean the form answering to E. rise; i. e. there is no Swed. risa, nor Dan. rise.

RAJPOOT, a prince. (Hind. = Skt.) Hind. rajput, a prince, lit. the son of a rajah; Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 434. = Skt. rajâ, a king; putra, a son; so that the lit. sense is 'son of a king.'

RAP (2). Rap and read occurs in Roy, Rede Me, ed. Arber, p. 74.

RAPE (3). In the sense of 'division of a county,' it occurs in Arnold's Chron., (about 1502), ed. 1811, p. 181.

RAPT. 'Here y felte my-selle fyrst raptle in spyryte;' Monk of Evesham, ed. Arber, c. xiii., p. 33. 'He was raptus,' id. c. vi., p. 26.

REBATE, last line. Explain rabatras as to turn back, lessen, &c.

RECOUNT. This word is really a modification of F. raconter, compounded of re-, a-, and count; so that it really stands for re-account. So also rebate = re-abate.

RELY. In his book 'On English adjectives in -able,' Dr. F. Hall supposes rely to be connected with M. E. relve, to rally (already noticed by me under Bally) and M. E. relveus, to lift up again, from F. relouer, which seem to have been confused. The numerous instances of these verbs given in his notes, at pp. 158-160, should be consulted. It is certainly possible that these verbs, now both obsolete, had something to do with suggesting our modern verb. But it clearly took up a new sense, and is practically, as now used, a compound of re- and lie (1).

REREDOB. Spelt redons in 1463; Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 39.

RETRIEVE. See note on Contrive (above).

REVERY. The connection between revery and rave is well illustrated by the use of the word ravery in the sense of 'raving,' which occurs in Gauden, Tears of the Church, 1659, p. 366. See Davies, Supp. Glossary.

ROAN. We find 'a royned colte,' i. e. roan-coloured colt, as early as A. D. 1538; Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 132. Surely the derivation from Rouen is mere rubbish.

ROCK (1). There seems to have been an A. S. rocc, gen. pl. rocca; so that the E. word may have been borrowed directly from Celtic. This strengthens the evidence for a Celtic origin. 'Scopulorum, stânrocca,' i. e. of stone-rocks; Mone, Quellen, p. 367.

RUBBISH. Another extract, shewing that the word was orig.

a plural form, is: 'ony rubys, dang, or ryccashes' [rushes]; Arnold's Chron., ed. 1811, p. 91.

BAND-BLIND, semi-blind, half blind. (E.) In Shak., Merch. Ven. ii. 2. 37. A corruption of sam-blind, i. e. half-blind. M. E. sam-, as in sam-reds, half red, sam-ripe, half ripe, P. Plowman, C. ix. 311, and footnote. A. S. sām-, as in sām-cuc, half alive, Luke, x. 30. The A. S. sām- is cognate with L. sāmi-, Gk. ἥμι-; see Sami-, Homb-.

SCALE (1). For A. S. scale, cf. 'Glemula, scale, hule, egle,' Mone, Quellen, p. 366. 'Quisquilia, fyrinpa, beân-scale,' i. e. bean-shells; id. 343.

SCRAMBLE. Scrabble for scramble occurs in the Pilgrim's Progress. We also find scribble in the sense of a hasty walk. See extracts in Davies, Supp. Glossary.

SCREW (1). It has been shewn that E. screw is from O. F. escroue, a screw, orig. used of the hole in which the male screw works. Also that the O. F. escroue answers in form to the Lat. acc. scrobem, a ditch, groove. All that is now needed is to supply the train of thought which connects screw with Lat. scrobis. This I can now do. The explanation is that the Low Lat. scrobis was particularly used of the hole made by swine when rooting up the ground; so that scrobis was, originally, the boring action of these animals. 'Hic scrobs, Anglice, a swyn-wrotyng;' Wright's Voc. i. 271, col. 1, last line; and see Catholicon Anglicum, p. 99, note 11.

SCULLERY. The etymology is strongly confirmed by the actual use of scullery in the sense of off-scourings. 'The black pots among which these doves must lie, I mean the soot and scullery of vulgar insolency;' Gauden, Tears of the Church, 1659, p. 258.

SCUTTLE (3). Cf. 'How the misses did huddle, and scuddle, and run!' Anstey, New Bath Guide, letter 13 (Davies). Davies also gives scuttler, a hasty, noisy run; scuttling, a hasty pace.

SET. When we speak of 'a set of things,' this is a peculiar use of Sept, q. v. Not allied to the verb to set, in my opinion. A set = a suit; see Suit.

SHAM. In North's Examen, 1740, p. 256, he mentions 'a pure and pure sham-plot;' where pure represents Lat. putus. Again, at p. 231, he says: 'This term of art, sham-plot, should be decyphered. The word sham is true cant of the Newmarket breed. It is contracted of ashamed. The native signification is a lady of diversion in country maid's cloaths, who, to make good her disguise, pretends to be so sham'd. Thence it became proverbial, when a maimed lover was laid up, or looked meager, to say he had met with a sham. But what is this to plots? The noble Captain Dangerfield, being an artist in all kinds of land piracy, translated this word out of the language of his society to a new employment he had taken up of false plotting. And as with them, it ordinarily signifies any false or counterfeit thing, so, annexed to a plot, it means one that is fictitious and untrue; and being so applied in his various writings and sworn depositions . . . it is adopted into the English language.' β . We must here distinguish between fact and guess. North's explanation, that sham is short for asham'd, is a guess which I do not believe. On his own shewing the phrase ran, that a man had 'met with a sham,' i. e. with a shame or disgrace, hence, a trick, and, finally, 'any false or counterfeit thing,' to use North's words. This is at once a simpler and a more intelligible explanation and agrees with all the other evidence, as I have already shewn. (For the extracts, see Davies, Supp. Glossary.)

SHOG. The pp. schoggia, i. e. shaken about, occurs as early as in Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 24.

SHOVEL. Oldest spelling scob, in the 8th century. 'Vatilla, seru scob,' i. e. iron shovel, Wright's Voc. ii. 123, col. 1. Cf. 'Batilla, fyr-scob,' i. e. fire-shovel, id. ii. 11, col. 1.

SHY. The verb exactly answers to Swed. sky, to shun.

SIBYL. Prof. Postgate takes Σιβυλλα to be from a stem seb-ulo-, with a fem. suffix -ya. He remarks that the root would appear to be seb-; cf. perisibis in Festus, who has: 'callidus sive acutus, perisibis;' from the \surd SAP, to be wise, seen in Lat. sap-ere, Gk. σοφ-ειν. Thus Sibyl would mean 'the wise woman,' or perhaps 'the little wise woman;' so named because she knows the secrets of destiny. I may add that this etymology agrees with the fact that F. sage can only be derived from sabius, not from sapius; see Bage (1).

SIREN. See 'A Philological Examination of the Myth Sirens,' by J. P. Postgate, in the Journal of Philology (Cambridge), vol. ix. The conclusion is that siren meant orig. 'a bird,' and that the root is \surd SWAR, to sound. This confirms what I have already said.

SLOUGH (2). 'A slughe, squama; slughe of eddyrs [snakes], exemie;' Catholicon Anglicum, p. 345; and see the note.

SOCK. A better quotation for the A. S. word, shewing its adoption from Latin, is the following. 'Soccus, soc, slabo-sock,' i. e. sock, slip-shoe; Wright's Voc. ii. 120, col. 2 (8th century).
